Asarah Maamarot - Ten Discourses

Ten works on Kabbalah and homiletical interpretation

Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano

Rema of Fano (1548-1620)

With the commentaries collected for this edition

Reading version 1.0, with gaps and uncertain readings explicitly marked. Details appear in the brief list at the end of the book.

Date of the inherited Hebrew reading edition:

30 September 2026

English translation

Reading edition - 18 October 2026

Composition follows the Ukrainian reading edition. The English translation remains at the previously accepted accuracy. Translator notes are kept in the accompanying file with their original TN identifiers.

Main volume and historical appendix should be kept in the same folder for links between the two PDFs.

About the author and the book

Opening remarks by the editors of the edition; these are not part of Rema's words.

Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano (1548-1620), known as Rema of Fano, was an Italian sage, a halakhic decisor and a kabbalist. He composed halakhic responsa and assisted in the printing of books. He studied the teaching of Rabbi Moses Cordovero and the traditions of the Ari that reached Italy, among other channels through Rabbi Israel Sarug. [א]

Asarah Maamarot is a collection of works on Kabbalah and homiletical interpretation, dealing among other things with creation, judgment and providence, and the human soul. The title appears to allude to the wording of the Mishnah: “Through ten utterances the world was created” (Avot 5:1). The works differ in character and in their manner of exposition. [ב]

The Venice printing of 5357, described in research as the first printing of 1597, contained three discourses: Heqor Din, Em Kol Hai, and Ha-Middot. The composition of collections bearing this name is not uniform across printed editions and manuscripts. This working edition brings together the ten discourses below with the commentaries collected; gaps and uncertain readings are explicitly retained. [ג-ב]

The ten discourses in this edition

Heqor Din

Em Kol Hai

Ha-Middot

Olam Katan

Ha-Ittim

Tzevaot

Yonat Elem

Ha-Nefesh

Ha-Milluim

Shivrei Luhot

Sources for the opening remarks

א. Samuel Rosenblatt, entry on Menahem Azariah of Fano, Encyclopaedia Judaica.

ב. Mishnah, Avot 5:1; Eliezer Baumgarten, study of Rema's writings and their interpretation in Ashkenaz and Poland, 2025, pp. 28, 35-37.

ג. British Library catalogue, manuscript 27132 in the Additional Manuscripts series; WorldCat, record 611924872.

About the text and reading signs

Before you is a working reading text of the ten discourses and their commentaries. The author's text is printed in larger type, with the commentaries in smaller type beside it. Commentary labels distinguish the commentaries from one another and from editorial remarks added in this edition.

Words whose reading is uncertain are marked with a dotted underline. A question mark or alternatives separated by a slash have been retained as recorded; the marking does not select a particular reading. Where the text could not be read, the sign [gap] is retained. A partial passage is marked “fragment only.” A list of words identified within a gap is not a reconstruction of a complete sequence.

A few comparisons with parallel witnesses are given separately under the heading “Editorial remarks,” with the years of printing specified. An uncertain reading is not necessarily a textual variant; a parallel text does not silently fill a damaged passage or replace the main text.

Even unmarked text has not all been checked word for word against the printed editions. Source details, verification states, and detailed discussion are retained in the accompanying research.

Uncertain reading

[gap]

Free distribution

The editors of this edition permit it to be copied and distributed freely, insofar as they hold the rights. The edition is supplied as it stands, without a guarantee of the text's completeness or accuracy. Use is at the reader's discretion and responsibility.

On the division of the reading edition

This volume contains the author's text and all the commentaries in reading version 1.0, together with introductions by authors and commentators, substantive printed notes, and corrections. The wording of the records, gap signs, and uncertain readings has been preserved unchanged.

The historical indexes, approbations, title pages, dedicatory poem, and printed colophons have been moved to a companion volume. All the material is retained in full across the two volumes together; each volume has its own contents and pagination.

Links from the index to the book indicate the discourse, part, and chapter address recorded in the source. This does not establish that each topic in the index has been attached to a particular sentence. The return link at the end of the chapter opens the index record in the companion volume.

Keep both PDF files in the same folder. Opening a link between files depends on the PDF reader's support and its security policy. Filenames and link destinations have been checked in the structure of the files themselves.

The new division was prepared on 17 October 2026. It does not constitute a new linguistic verification or an increase in the text's degree of evidential support. The original introduction, details of version 1.0, and list of unresolved passages have been retained.

About this English edition

The author's text appears in the central column. Commentaries form one continuous sequence, flowing through the left and right side columns, then through two wider columns when needed. If no commentary remains, the author's text uses the full width. Proximity indicates a chapter association; it does not establish a match to a particular phrase.

The compact index below a chapter heading opens its commentaries. Commentary captions return to the chapter. The detailed contents and PDF bookmarks provide access to each chapter, preface, printed note and historical document. Historical index links retain their inherited chapter addresses; printed-note links marked as such refer only to a treatise.

This layout revision preserves every existing English translation unit and every stable TN identifier. Translator notes are separate in asara_maamarot_translation_notes_en.md, with page references updated for this edition. Hebrew quotations retain their reading direction within the English text.

Further recognition of the source texts was stopped at the user's instruction. All 6,119 units have an English text. Three main-volume units remain drafts and are not counted as source-checked translation: Yoel Moshe on Heqor Din V.8, and Yad Yehudah fragments 22 of Ha-Ittim 8 and 15 of Ha-Ittim 9. Draft captions remain visible on continuations.

Main-volume checked coverage remains 517,382 of 522,382 Hebrew source words (99.042846%). The historical appendix remains 12,018 of 12,018 (100%). These recorded review states do not imply independent scholarly certification. Source gaps, tentative readings and attribution limits remain explicit.

Inherited notices about the Hebrew edition retain their original wording and dates. They describe that source edition. This English composition has its own pagination; its current editorial status is stated here. Source identifiers and detailed provenance are available in the accompanying registers.

Contents

Map of the book

Clicking a title or page number opens the location in the book. The detailed listing below contains a separate link for every chapter and appendix passage.

Signs of uncertainty and gaps are explained in the legend at the beginning of the book. A commentary heading returns to its place in the main text or to the beginning of the chapter.

At the end of every chapter and its commentaries, and at the end of every appendix passage, a return link leads to the corresponding item here. Page numbers refer to this reading file.

Historical appendix - indexes, approbations and publishing documents

About the author and the book 2

About the text and reading signs 3

On the division of the reading edition 4

Heqor Din 14

Em Kol Hai 629

Ha-Middot 883

Olam Katan 926

Ha-Ittim 952

Tzevaot 1019

Yonat Elem 1068

Ha-Nefesh 1264

Ha-Milluim 1383

Shivrei Luhot 1393

About this English edition 5

Detailed chapter listing

Heqor Din

Part I

Chapter 1	14	Chapter 2	22	Chapter 3	28	Chapter 4	39
Chapter 5	42	Chapter 6	45	Chapter 7	48	Chapter 8	51
Chapter 9	54	Chapter 10	59	Chapter 11	65	Chapter 12	71
Chapter 13	85	Chapter 14	89	Chapter 15	96	Chapter 16	106
Chapter 17	110	Chapter 18	113	Chapter 19	118	Chapter 20	127
Chapter 21	132	Chapter 22	141	Chapter 23	148	Chapter 24	155
Chapter 25	163	Chapter 26	168

Part II

Chapter 1	174	Chapter 2	179	Chapter 3	183	Chapter 4	189
Chapter 5	191	Chapter 6	197	Chapter 7	201	Chapter 8	210
Chapter 9	221	Chapter 10	232	Chapter 11	236	Chapter 12	243
Chapter 13	248	Chapter 14	261	Chapter 15	266	Chapter 16	272
Chapter 17	276	Chapter 18	286	Chapter 19	289	Chapter 20	297
Chapter 21	301	Chapter 22	303	Chapter 23	309	Chapter 24	312
Chapter 25	316	Chapter 26	321	Chapter 27	323	Chapter 28	327
Chapter 29	335	Chapter 30	337	Chapter 31	341	Chapter 32	344

Part III

Chapter 1	348	Chapter 2	352	Chapter 3	358	Chapter 4	361
Chapter 5	375	Chapter 6	380	Chapter 7	390	Chapter 8	395
Chapter 9	398	Chapter 10	408	Chapter 11	412	Chapter 12	416
Chapter 13	420	Chapter 14	425	Chapter 15	431	Chapter 16	434
Chapter 17	437	Chapter 18	440	Chapter 19	446	Chapter 20	450
Chapter 21	453	Chapter 22	460

Part IV

Chapter 1	467	Chapter 2	472	Chapter 3	476	Chapter 4	481
Chapter 5	486	Chapter 6	492	Chapter 7	497	Chapter 8	500
Chapter 9	507	Chapter 10	512	Chapter 11	518	Chapter 12	523
Chapter 13	526	Chapter 14	532	Chapter 15	538	Chapter 16	542
Chapter 17	550	Chapter 18	556	Chapter 19	563	Chapter 20	567

Part V

Chapter 1	571	Chapter 2	579	Chapter 3	582	Chapter 4	587
Chapter 5	590	Chapter 6	597	Chapter 7	600	Chapter 8	602
Chapter 9	616	Chapter 10	620	Chapter 11	624	Chapter 12	627

Em Kol Hai

Part I

Chapter 1	629	Chapter 2	632	Chapter 3	635	Chapter 4	640
Chapter 5	642	Chapter 6	647	Chapter 7	651	Chapter 8	655
Chapter 9	657	Chapter 10	660	Chapter 11	663	Chapter 12	665
Chapter 13	669	Chapter 14	674	Chapter 15	679	Chapter 16	682
Chapter 17	686	Chapter 18	690	Chapter 19	691	Chapter 20	694
Chapter 21	700	Chapter 22	702	Chapter 23	704	Chapter 24	706
Chapter 25	708	Chapter 26	710	Chapter 27	712	Chapter 28	713
Chapter 29	717	Chapter 30	720	Chapter 31	722	Chapter 32	725
Chapter 33	727	Chapter 34	728	Chapter 35	730

Part II

Chapter 1	732	Chapter 2	741	Chapter 3	745	Chapter 4	747
Chapter 5	749	Chapter 6	752	Chapter 7	755	Chapter 8	758
Chapter 9	761	Chapter 10	763	Chapter 11	766	Chapter 12	767
Chapter 13	769	Chapter 14	771	Chapter 15	773	Chapter 16	776
Chapter 17	777	Chapter 18	780	Chapter 19	782	Chapter 20	784
Chapter 21	787	Chapter 22	789	Chapter 23	791	Chapter 24	792
Chapter 25	794	Chapter 26	796	Chapter 27	797	Chapter 28	798
Chapter 29	799	Chapter 30	800	Chapter 31	801	Chapter 32	803
Chapter 33	805	Chapter 34	807	Chapter 35	808	Chapter 36	809

Part III

Chapter 1	811	Chapter 2	813	Chapter 3	814	Chapter 4	818
Chapter 5	819	Chapter 6	822	Chapter 7	825	Chapter 8	826
Chapter 9	829	Chapter 10	831	Chapter 11	834	Chapter 12	840
Chapter 13	842	Chapter 14	844	Chapter 15	846	Chapter 16	848
Chapter 17	849	Chapter 18	850	Chapter 19	852	Chapter 20	854
Chapter 21	856	Chapter 22	858	Chapter 23	860	Chapter 24	861
Chapter 25	863	Chapter 26	864	Chapter 27	866	Chapter 28	869

Chapter 29 872 Chapter 30 873 Chapter 31 875 Chapter 32 877
Chapter 33 878 Chapter 34 879 Chapter 35 880

Ha-Middot

Chapter 1 883 Chapter 2 887 Chapter 3 889 Chapter 4 900
Chapter 5 904 Chapter 6 905 Chapter 7 908 Chapter 8 909
Chapter 9 915 Chapter 10 918 Chapter 11 919 Chapter 12 921
Chapter 13 925

Olam Katan

Chapter 1 926 Chapter 2 934 Chapter 3 941 Chapter 4 946
Chapter 5 950

Ha-Ittim

Chapter 1 952 Chapter 2 955 Chapter 3 958 Chapter 4 960
Chapter 5 964 Chapter 6 967 Chapter 7 968 Chapter 8 969
Chapter 9 974 Chapter 10 977 Chapter 11 982 Chapter 12 984
Chapter 13 986 Chapter 14 989 Chapter 15 992 Chapter 16 994
Chapter 17 996 Chapter 18 999 Chapter 19 1001 Chapter 20 1003
Chapter 21 1005 Chapter 22 1007 Chapter 23 1009 Chapter 24 1012
Chapter 25 1014 Chapter 26 1017

Tzevaot

Part I

Chapter 1 1019 Chapter 2 1019 Chapter 3 1020 Chapter 4 1021
Chapter 5 1022 Chapter 6 1023 Chapter 7 1023 Chapter 8 1024
Chapter 9 1025 Chapter 10 1025 Chapter 11 1026 Chapter 12 1027
Chapter 13 1028 Chapter 14 1030 Chapter 15 1030 Chapter 16 1031
Chapter 17 1032 Chapter 18 1032 Chapter 19 1033 Chapter 20 1034
Chapter 21 1035 Chapter 22 1036 Chapter 23 1037 Chapter 24 1038
Chapter 25 1039 Chapter 26 1040 Chapter 27 1041 Chapter 28 1041
Chapter 29 1043 Chapter 30 1043

Part II

Chapter 1 1044 Chapter 2 1045 Chapter 3 1046 Chapter 4 1046
Chapter 5 1047 Chapter 6 1048 Chapter 7 1049 Chapter 8 1050

Chapter 9 1051 Chapter 10 1052 Chapter 11 1053 Chapter 12 1054
Chapter 13 1054 Chapter 14 1055 Chapter 15 1056 Chapter 16 1058
Chapter 17 1058 Chapter 18 1059 Chapter 19 1060 Chapter 20 1061

Part III

Chapter 1 1062 Chapter 2 1062 Chapter 3 1063 Chapter 4 1064
Chapter 5 1064 Chapter 6 1064 Chapter 7 1065 Chapter 8 1065
Chapter 9 1066 Chapter 10 1067

Yonat Elem

Introduction 1068 Chapter 1 1070 Chapter 2 1073 Chapter 3 1074
Chapter 4 1076 Chapter 5 1079 Chapter 6 1080 Chapter 7 1082
Chapter 8 1084 Chapter 9 1086 Chapter 10 1088 Chapter 11 1090
Chapter 12 1092 Chapter 13 1093 Chapter 14 1095 Chapter 15 1098
Chapter 16 1101 Chapter 17 1102 Chapter 18 1104 Chapter 19 1105
Chapter 20 1107 Chapter 21 1109 Chapter 22 1111 Chapter 23 1114
Chapter 24 1116 Chapter 25 1117 Chapter 26 1119 Chapter 27 1120
Chapter 28 1123 Chapter 29 1125 Chapter 30 1127 Chapter 31 1129
Chapter 32 1131 Chapter 33 1133 Chapter 34 1135 Chapter 35 1137
Chapter 36 1139 Chapter 37 1140 Chapter 38 1142 Chapter 39 1143
Chapter 40 1145 Chapter 41 1146 Chapter 42 1149 Chapter 43 1152
Chapter 44 1154 Chapter 45 1155 Chapter 46 1157 Chapter 47 1159
Chapter 48 1160 Chapter 49 1162 Chapter 50 1163 Chapter 51 1165
Chapter 52 1167 Chapter 53 1169 Chapter 54 1170 Chapter 55 1172
Chapter 56 1174 Chapter 57 1176 Chapter 58 1178 Chapter 59 1180
Chapter 60 1182 Chapter 61 1183 Chapter 62 1185 Chapter 63 1188
Chapter 64 1190 Chapter 65 1193 Chapter 66 1196 Chapter 67 1199
Chapter 68 1201 Chapter 69 1203 Chapter 70 1204 Chapter 71 1205
Chapter 72 1207 Chapter 73 1208 Chapter 74 1210 Chapter 75 1211
Chapter 76 1214 Chapter 77 1216 Chapter 78 1218 Chapter 79 1219
Chapter 80 1220 Chapter 81 1222 Chapter 82 1224 Chapter 83 1226
Chapter 84 1227 Chapter 85 1228 Chapter 86 1229 Chapter 87 1231
Chapter 88 1234 Chapter 89 1235 Chapter 90 1236 Chapter 91 1238
Chapter 92 1240 Chapter 93 1243 Chapter 94 1247 Chapter 95 1249
Chapter 96 1252 Chapter 97 1254 Chapter 98 1257 Chapter 99 1259
Chapter 100 1262

Ha-Nefesh

Part I

Chapter 1	1264	Chapter 2	1265	Chapter 3	1266	Chapter 4	1268
Chapter 5	1269	Chapter 6	1270	Chapter 7	1271	Chapter 8	1272
Chapter 9	1274	Chapter 10	1274	Chapter 11	1275	Chapter 12	1276
Chapter 13	1277	Chapter 14	1279	Chapter 15	1280

Part II

Chapter 1	1282	Chapter 2	1283	Chapter 3	1285	Chapter 4	1286
Chapter 5	1288	Chapter 6	1290	Chapter 7	1291	Chapter 8	1291
Chapter 9	1293	Chapter 10	1294	Chapter 11	1295	Chapter 12	1296
Chapter 13	1297	Chapter 14	1298	Chapter 15	1299

Part III

Chapter 1	1301	Chapter 2	1302	Chapter 3	1303	Chapter 4	1305
Chapter 5	1306	Chapter 6	1307	Chapter 7	1308	Chapter 8	1309
Chapter 9	1310	Chapter 10	1312	Chapter 11	1313	Chapter 12	1314

Part IV

Chapter 1	1315	Chapter 2	1317	Chapter 3	1318	Chapter 4	1320
Chapter 5	1321	Chapter 6	1323	Chapter 7	1324	Chapter 8	1326
Chapter 9	1327	Chapter 10	1328	Chapter 11	1329	Chapter 12	1330
Chapter 13	1331	Chapter 14	1331	Chapter 15	1333	Chapter 16	1334
Chapter 17	1335	Chapter 18	1336

Part V

Chapter 1	1337	Chapter 2	1339	Chapter 3	1340	Chapter 4	1342
Chapter 5	1344	Chapter 6	1345	Chapter 7	1346	Chapter 8	1348
Chapter 9	1349	Chapter 10	1350	Chapter 11	1351	Chapter 12	1353

Part VI

Chapter 1	1354	Chapter 2	1355	Chapter 3	1356	Chapter 4	1358
Chapter 5	1359	Chapter 6	1360	Chapter 7	1362	Chapter 8	1363
Chapter 9	1364	Chapter 10	1366

Part VII

Chapter 1	1368	Chapter 2	1369	Chapter 3	1370	Chapter 4	1371

Chapter 5 1372 Chapter 6 1373 Chapter 7 1374 Chapter 8 1375
Chapter 9 1375 Chapter 10 1376 Chapter 11 1376 Chapter 12 1377
Chapter 13 1378 Chapter 14 1379 Chapter 15 1380 Chapter 16 1381
Chapter 17 1381 Chapter 18 1383

Ha-Milluim

Continuous text 1383

Shivrei Luhot

Continuous text 1393

Detailed listing of introductions and appendices

Passages are numbered within each section. The number on the left refers to a page in this book. Index headings and their addresses are retained as transcribed from the printed edition.

HaMilluim — Printed Note 1419

Printed notes to Shivrei Luhot

Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 1 1419
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 2 1419
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 3 1419
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 4 1420
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 5 1420
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 6 1420
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 7 1420
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 8 1421
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 9 1422
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 10 1423
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 11 1423
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 12 1424
Shivrei Luhot - Printed Notes - Fragment 13 1424

Appendix attributed to Alkabetz

Appendix Attributed to Alkabetz — Source Page 30 1425
Appendix Attributed to Alkabetz — Source Page 31 1426
Appendix Attributed to Alkabetz — Source Page 32 1428
Appendix Attributed to Alkabetz — Source Page 33 1429

Remarks by the appendix editor

Appendix Compiler — Afterword 1430
Appendix Compiler — Preface 1430
Yad Yehudah — Preface, 1858 Witness, Beginning 1430
Yad Yehudah — Preface, 1858 Witness, Continuation and End 1432
Yad Yehudah — Preface, 1698 Witness, Beginning 1433
Yad Yehudah — Preface, 1698 Witness, Continuation and End 1435
Unresolved passages and inherited editorial notices 1437

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 1 (א)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “The inquiry,” etc. That is, in this treatise he will inquire into the judgments of the LORD, etc.; hence its title, Heqor Din.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “In accordance with what is commonly known of its affairs”: all who come into the world pass before Him like benei maron on Rosh Hashanah. [TN010001]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Those associated with it”: the other seasons at which the world is judged, namely Passover, Shavuot, and the Festival, as explained in the Mishnah at the beginning of Rosh Hashanah.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “As will be explained”: below, in Part II.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “With respect to the judgment after death,” which is called the great day of judgment. On it the blessed LORD judges the soul, whether it shall enter the Garden of Eden or Gehinnom, and matters of this kind, as stated in several places in the Zohar; this will be explained in Part III.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “The final judgment,” called the great and awesome day of the LORD.

Rema of Fano

The inquiry in this treatise concerns the judgments of the LORD, which are true, in three worlds.

The first is this world, in accordance with what is commonly known of its affairs: the judgment of Rosh Hashanah and those associated with it, as will be explained. The second is the world of souls, with respect to the judgment after death. The third is the world of resurrection: the final judgment, which completes them all. Concerning the first two it is said, “He will give us life after two days” (Hosea 6:2). The prophet asked the Master of mercy to decree true life for us, from the beginning of our creation until our departure from this world is complete. His prayer is pure: that we should emerge acquitted from the two days of judgment we have mentioned, along the lines of what is written, “And the day of death, than the day of one's birth” (Ecclesiastes 7:1), as will be explained in Part II, chapter 6. This accords with what Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, said in his prayer, which was forgotten after his death and which King David, the devout man, the sweet singer of Israel, subsequently reestablished: “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us” (Psalm 90:15). He did not, God forbid, set a limit to the days of spiritual joy for which he was pleading; he had already said, “That we may sing for joy and be glad throughout all our

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

It is concerning this that the Gemara of Rosh Hashanah says, “Three groups on the day of judgment.” It will be explained in this part and in Part V.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “Concerning the first two”: concerning the judgment of this world and the judgment of the world of souls it is said, “He will give us life after two days; on the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live before Him” (Hosea 6). By “after two days” he means the two days of judgment of this world and the world of souls.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “He asked”: the prophet asked that the blessed LORD decree for us the true life of the world to come, from the beginning of creation and formation in the womb, from which the first judgment begins.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “Until our departure from this world is complete”: this is after the flesh has decomposed, for then the judgment of the souls is completed, as explained in the Gemara at the end of the chapter Nigmar ha-Din, and in the Zohar, Terumah, page 269, and elsewhere.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “His prayer”: the prophet's prayer is pure, and his intention is that we emerge acquitted from these two days of judgment, so that “on the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live before Him”—that we merit to stand at the resurrection of the dead. The author completes this in chapter 2, where he writes, “And concerning the final judgment,” etc. Meanwhile he explains incidentally some verses relevant here.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “Along the lines of what is written”: “A good name is better than good oil, and the day of death than the day of one's birth” (Ecclesiastes 7). That is, it is better for a person to emerge acquitted in the judgment of the day of death than in the judgment of the day of his birth.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “In Part II, chapter 6”: various interpretations of this verse will appear there, and this is one of them.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “This accords”: the prophet's saying, “He will give us life after two days,” accords with what Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, said in the psalm “A prayer of Moses”: “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us,” etc. His prayer likewise concerns these two days of judgment. See the days” (Psalm 90:14). Similarly, “Let Your lovingkindness, LORD, be upon us, as we have hoped for You” (Psalm 33:22) means: for as long as we hope for You, which is always; it does not mean in proportion to our hoping, for that has a limit, whereas the LORD's lovingkindness has no limit. But our Rabbis, of blessed memory, said, “One who prays his prayer must explain his words properly.” Therefore he explained that he was not asking only concerning the future. Nor, concerning the past, would what had been done in it according to His blessed will suffice, for it is obvious that He does not withhold any creature's reward. Rather, in addition to all this, “Make us glad” also “according to the days in which You afflicted us,” as though we had fulfilled the commandments at every time, since there is no joy apart from them. Although the course of life includes “days in which You afflicted us,” and we were not allowed to observe Your righteous judgments, this is constraint, and the Merciful One exempts the person under constraint. In this sense Joel said, “I will repay you for the years” (Joel 2:25); this is straightforward. “The years in which we saw adversity” is therefore to be joined to the verse that follows: “Let Your work be seen by Your servants” (Psalm 90:16). For His blessed hand was certainly not too short to renew, from then onward, the measure of His goodness each day throughout that entire time as well. It is only that we have not yet merited it: because of the adversity it was gathered in and concealed, and it is collected and placed in the treasury of the King of the world following chapter, where the author concludes the subject with “And how much more now,” etc.; see there.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “He did not set a limit”: the meaning is not, as a plain reading might suggest, that Moses prayed for joy lasting as long as the days of affliction we have endured. For how could he set a limit to the days of spiritual joy?

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “For which he was pleading”: spiritual joy, not bodily joy.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) Moreover, how could he set a limit to the joy, when he had already said, “That we may be glad throughout all our days,” which implies no limit?

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “Its meaning”: its interpretation is, for the time during which we have hoped for You, namely always.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “It does not mean in proportion”: not in proportion to the person who hopes, who has a limit.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) Rather, “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us” is intended to explain what he first said, “Satisfy us in the morning,” etc., in accordance with the Rabbis' statement, “One who prays,” etc. This is in the Zohar, Vayishlah, on the verse “Deliver me, please, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau.”

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) Therefore Moses went back and said, “Make us glad,” etc., to explain that his request in the preceding words, “That we may be glad throughout all our days,” does not concern the future alone.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) Nor would it suffice for the Holy One, blessed be He, to give reward for the commandments performed in the past. For it is obvious that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not withhold reward, and there is no need to pray for this.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Rather, in addition,” etc. That is: My actual request in saying, “That we may be glad throughout all our days,” is that You also give us reward for the days on which constraint caused us to neglect the commandments. Reckon it as though we had rejoiced in the joy of a commandment even on those days when troubles and afflictions overtook us and prevented us from occupying ourselves with the commandments and properly observing the Torah. This is “Make us glad”: give us reward as though we had been glad through fulfilling the commandments even on until the indignation passes. Therefore he said, “Let Your work be seen by Your servants,” as in “Show us Your lovingkindness, LORD” (Psalm 85:8). It is also written, “You have wrought for those who take refuge in You” (Psalm 31:20). For contemplation of His blessed attributes is the ultimate good; this is “Your splendor upon their children,” in the sense of ancestral merit becoming the mazal of the children. We shall explain this in chapters 28, 29, and 30 of Part II. It is assuredly splendor, vindicating the governance of the world in truth and uprightness.

Rema of Fano - continued

“Let the pleasantness of the LORD our God be upon us” (Psalm 90:17): this is our first mazal, which does not depend on merit at all, through which He has prepared abundant goodness and immense lovingkindness for the house of Israel, in keeping with the bounty of the supreme King, who does good to all. He said: May it be Your will that nothing of it be diminished for us; let it neither be stored away nor hoarded, but belong to those who dwell before the LORD. This is the opinion of Rabbi Akiva, which we shall mention there. “And the work of our hands” is the merit renewed day by day; “establish it upon us,” to add strength to our mazal in every generation. This is the Rabbis' opinion, as will be explained. Even if you say that the passage accords with Rabbi Akiva, whose view our discussion follows, as we shall mention there, “establish it upon us” will concern enjoying in this world the fruits of the good deeds of the present; and “the work of our hands—establish it” will have the corresponding the days in which You afflicted us, since the neglect resulted from constraint. This follows the Rabbis' statement: “One who sits down to perform a commandment but is prevented by constraint from doing it—Scripture accounts it to him as though he had done it.”

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “Since there is no joy apart from them”: therefore it is appropriate to call fulfillment of the commandments “joy,” for this is true joy.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “I will repay you for the years that the locust consumed,” etc. (Joel 2). The meaning is: I will repay you for the years in which you could not serve Me because of the fury of the oppressor, as though you had fulfilled the Torah and commandments in them.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “The years in which we saw,” etc. That is, according to our explanation that the verse “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us” merely explains the verse “That we may be glad throughout all our days,” it was quite unnecessary to add here “the years in which we saw.” Rather, it is joined to the following verse, “Let ... be seen,” etc. The meaning is as if he said: I know that, on the days when we were not allowed to observe Your good judgments—

Yad Yehudah - כה - continued

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “Your hand was not too short” to bestow the abundance of goodness, the fullness of joys, which You were accustomed to bring into the world through the fulfillment of the commandments. But those good things are still hidden with You, sealed in Your treasuries, and have not entered the world because of the days of adversity. This is “the years in which we saw adversity”: we have not yet merited to see the goodness of Your chosen meaning for the last generation. When the reader reaches the completion of this exposition in its proper place, which we have indicated, he will rejoice and be exceedingly glad at the confirmation of this understanding of the verse, together with the hope of beholding the pleasantness of the LORD and visiting His sanctuary. Someone who has brought the measure of his days to completion, as Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, did—and this is only part of his praise, for in his presence the One who delights in lovingkindness testified concerning him, “Behold, your days have drawn near” (Deuteronomy 31:14), as the Zohar explains (Zohar I, 221b), that they drew near before the King without shame—can offer such a prayer in order to bring merit to the many.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - כו - continued

ones. Yet for this very reason I requested, “Let Your work be seen by Your servants”; that is, let there now be an end and a termination to the years of adversity, and let Your servants see the good things in Your treasury.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “As in,” etc. That is, “Let Your work be seen” is like what is said there, “Show us Your lovingkindness, LORD”; “Your work” here means “Your lovingkindness.” The reason it is called this is that it is indeed—

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “Written”: “How abundant is Your goodness, which You have stored up for those who fear You, which You have wrought for those who take refuge in You.” Thus the language of working is applied to goodness. See Zohar, Emor, page 188.

Yad Yehudah - כח - continued

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “For contemplation,” etc. That is, the reason he said “Let ... be seen” rather than “Let ... be given,” or another such expression, is to include intellectual vision as well: contemplation of His blessed attributes, which is the principal good. To me it seems that “Let ... be seen” is appropriate here because it is the opposite of “which You have stored up” in the other passage, an expression of concealment from sight.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “This is Your splendor,” etc. That is, the end of the verse, “And Your splendor upon their children,” is explained according to what will be explained below in Part II: ancestral merit, which is the fruit of their commandments, is preserved for the children and is their mazal, while the principal remains for the ancestors themselves. The meaning here is that he asked the blessed LORD: Let Your servants see all the goodness belonging to them from the commandments they neglected under constraint, as though they had performed them. Not only this: let their children also see Your splendor—that is, the mazal belonging to the children through their fathers' merit. Do not withhold the goodness from them, even that deriving from the commandments their fathers neglected under constraint, as though those commandments had actually been fulfilled.

Yad Yehudah - ל - continued

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “It is splendor”: that is, the reason for calling the children's mazal “splendor” is that this is assuredly the majesty and splendor of the blessed LORD. Through it His blessed governance of human beings is vindicated, whereas without it this would be difficult to understand, as will be explained in the part and chapters mentioned. What he says next —

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “Let the pleasantness,” etc.—is likewise explained in this way. Just as Moses prayed concerning the children's mazal, so concerning the first mazal, which is Keter, called the upper mazal, as stated at the beginning of Part III of Em Kol Hai,

Yad Yehudah - לב - continued

he asked that nothing of it be diminished for us. This is “Let the pleasantness of the LORD our God be upon us”: it is the Supreme Crown, as the Zohar says, “The pleasantness of the LORD is in the Ancient One.”

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) “Which does not depend on merit”: concerning it the Sages said, “Children, life, and sustenance depend not on merit but on mazal,” as stated at the beginning of Part III of the treatise mentioned; see there.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) “This is the opinion of Rabbi Akiva”: in chapter 4 of Yevamot, concerning “I will fulfill the number of your days.” According to Rabbi Akiva, if a person merits it, his allotted days are completed; if he does not merit it, they are diminished. According to the Rabbis, if he merits it, days are added; if he does not merit it, they are diminished. Moses' request that nothing be diminished for us, etc., thus accords with Rabbi Akiva, since everyone agrees that if a person does not merit it his days are diminished, and Moses prayed against this. But the subsequent words, “And the work of our hands,” etc., adding strength to our mazal, can be established only according to the Rabbis, since according to Rabbi Akiva nothing is added even if a person merits it.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) “Even if you say”: even if you wish to explain “And the work of our hands,” etc., also according to Rabbi Akiva—

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) “Its meaning will be”: it concerns the fruits. This is “the work of our hands”: establish our good work upon us, so that we may enjoy its fruits in this world. What he subsequently says, “And the work of our hands—establish it,” refers to the principal: establish it for the last generation, that it may be preserved for the world to come. All this will be explained in Part II, in the chapters mentioned, and there, “When the reader reaches,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) “Someone who has brought ... to completion,” etc. That is, this prayer which Moses offered when he said, “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us,” as though we had fulfilled the commandments on the days of affliction, is fitting specifically for Moses, and not for anyone else. For he, of blessed memory, completed his days with commandments; he could therefore offer such a prayer for others who had not completed their days with them, and say, “The Merciful One exempts the person under constraint.”

Yad Yehudah - לו - continued

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) “And this is only,” etc. That is, even his completion of his days with commandments is only part of his praise. For the blessed LORD alluded to this in his presence when He said, “Behold, your days have drawn near,” and it is known that only part of a person's praise is spoken in his presence.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) “As the Zohar explains”: in Vayehi, page 467: “The days of Israel drew near to die.” It is not written “The day of Israel drew near,” but “the days.” Does a person die over several days? Surely he dies and departs from the world in one hour, in one instant. Rather, thus it was taught: When the Holy One, blessed be He, wishes to take a person's spirit back to Himself, all the days that the person has lived in this world are reviewed before Him and enter into the reckoning, etc. Happy is the portion of that person whose days draw near before the King without shame, and not one of whose days is thrust outside, etc. Therefore “drawing near” is written of the righteous, etc.; see there, and on page 472. These are the Zohar's words in Terumah, page שו”ח?: [TN010002] “I am one hundred and twenty years old today”—literally today, for on that very day his days were completed, to draw near to this place, as it is written, “Behold, your days have drawn near”: they have actually drawn near.

Yoel Moshe

“Which is the judgment of Rosh Hashanah and those associated with it, as will be explained”: this means the four seasons at which the world is judged —at Passover, at Shavuot, and “at the time ...” [ועת?, uncertain]—all of which are comprised in the judgment of Rosh Hashanah.[TN010003] See below, Part II of Heqor Din, chapter 1, where he says, “For examination, and the ... [ועיני?, uncertain] that are renewed,” etc.; see there concerning Rosh Hashanah.[TN010004] And especially in chapter 2, כח”ז גר”ל [unclear abbreviations], according to the Gemara's objection, “But a person is judged every day, as it is said, ‘You visit him every morning,’” etc.; it answers, “This is for examination,” etc. See there; it is explained in chapter 1.[TN010005]

Yoel Moshe - continued

“The second is the world of souls, with respect to the judgment after death,” etc.: this is what Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai calls, in Vayehi, page 477, “the great day of judgment.” See below, Part III of Heqor Din, chapter 1. “The third is the world of resurrection”: according to the verse “Awake and sing for joy, you who dwell in the dust,” etc. This is the final judgment, which completes them all, called “the great and awesome day of the LORD.” “He will give us life after two days”: that is, true life in completeness, “after two days,” in such a way that we emerge acquitted from the two aforementioned days of judgment. For all the judgments of this world are called “one day,” since they have one common character, as the author will explain in chapter 2.[TN010006]

“Until our departure from this world is complete”: that is, according to the Zohar, Terumah, page 229, the soul is judged for as long as the flesh remains, going to and returning to the body until the flesh decomposes; then it has rest. Thus, from the beginning of creation until the soul's final ascent above, two judgments take place: the judgment of this world at Rosh Hashanah, and the judgment of the soul. See also Zohar, Shelah Lekha, page 323, and Zohar, Vayeshev, 440. “And the day of death than the day of one's birth,” etc.: that is, from the day of birth one's life should be true life, and on the day of death as well one's soul should be bound in the bond of life, corresponding to these two days of judgment which we have mentioned.

“In his prayer, which was forgotten,” etc.: this is the psalm “A prayer of Moses,” etc. There are eleven psalms, without any mention of who uttered them, while the midrashim explicitly state that Moses uttered them. If you ask: How do we know they were forgotten? Perhaps Moses uttered them in his own time, and David did not include them in his book—as in the midrash's parable of a king before whom ten people came with songs, who said, “This one I desire, because his voice is pleasant,” etc. One may answer that, even apart from this, one must raise an objection to the Gemara's statement in chapter 1 of Megillah concerning the letters MNTsPKh: “They forgot them and subsequently reestablished them,” etc. Did not Moses, before his death, write twelve Torah scrolls and give them to the twelve tribes? They could have examined those Torah scrolls.

Yoel Moshe - continued

Rather, the matter is in accordance with what is explained in the Zohar on the Song of Songs, folio 3, concerning the letters MNTsPKh: “‘Let us rejoice and be glad in you’—these are the twenty-two letters; ‘uprightly they love you’—these are the extended letters”; see there. For the letters MNTsPKh have a great mystery and rectifying function. Through them they ascended to the land of Israel, for they knew the power of their radiance and the source of their holiness, until after they sinned; see there. The mystery of MNTsPKh is explained in Pardes: they comprise the gates of Binah, and each individual letter likewise corresponds to the fifty gates of Binah.

This is the mystery of “The children of Israel went up armed”: the fifty gates of Binah were opened. This is the Jubilee, when each person returns to his holding; and these are the fifty days of the counting. Concerning this the midrash says, “All the doubled letters were spoken with reference to redemption.” See the midrash Yalqut on Exodus and on Lekh Lekha, and understand.

This, then, explains the Gemara: they certainly knew the two forms of the letters. Although the primordial light had been concealed, as stated in the aforementioned Zohar, Adam nevertheless knew them—that is, their inward meaning, through which to draw the influence downward. When Adam sinned, they were concealed; even so, he knew them, but he forgot the substance of their rectifying function and their illumination. They did not know how to bring down the spark of their holiness from above. See there, in the gloss to the Zohar on the Song of Songs, where you will find it.

These eleven psalms correspond to the orders of the qelippot, which are eleven, in the mystery of “eleven days from Horeb.” The midrash discusses at length their correspondence to the eleven tribes whom Moses blessed before his death: to subdue the eleven qelippot known to the sages of truth, in the mystery of the eleven curtains, the eleven ingredients of incense, and the eleven verses beginning with nun and ending with nun, corresponding to the eleven qelippot, from whose side forgetfulness comes. This is in the mystery of הח"שך, whose letters are שכ"חם;[TN010007] because of this the aforementioned eleven psalms were also forgotten. They alluded to the matter thus: Moses, משה, in numerical value—Peor, פעור, has eleven more; these are the eleven qelippot. Therefore "in Moses' ..." [ובמי משה, uncertain] they were forgotten.[TN010008] The intention of the verse is, "When you heard the voice from the midst of the darkness"; they forgot how to subdue them through these psalms, until the sweet singer of Israel arose and cut the shoots with pruning hooks—these qelippot. David struck them again, and they returned to their proper arrangement as before,[TN010009] in the mystery of "Your statutes have been songs for me in the house of my sojourning"; understand.

Yoel Moshe - continued

"One who prays his prayer must explain his words properly": that is, so as not to give the accusers room to say, "Let his intention not [be fulfilled]," even though it is a favorable time. See Zohar, Vayishlah, page 326. "That he was not asking concerning the future": that is, in the words "That we may sing for joy," etc. "As though we had fulfilled the commandments": one may object, why does he call these "days in which You afflicted us"? Therefore he says, "Since there is no joy apart from them": only the joy of a commandment. Although human life includes days of affliction, suffering, and exile, when it is impossible to complete a commandment in deed, but only in thought, the Merciful One nevertheless exempts a person under constraint.

"To the verse that follows": that is, it is connected to "Let ... be seen by Your servants," etc. For he found a difficulty: according to his interpretation, "the years in which we saw adversity" is superfluous. He had already said "days in which You afflicted us," which are the days left unfulfilled; what difference does it make whether the constraint lasts days or years, since the Merciful One exempts a person under constraint? On the plain reading, that a limit is set and that reward is proportionate to suffering, this is understandable: some in Israel have undergone days of affliction, and others years of affliction. Concerning both he says, "Make us glad," etc. This is not so according to his interpretation, in which it does not concern affliction and suffering, but days left unfulfilled.

Yoel Moshe - continued

Therefore he explains and answers that it is joined to the following verse: during those years in which we saw adversity, the blessed LORD was able to show us, His servants, His work. "It is only that we have not yet merited," etc., "and they were concealed," etc. Here, in these words about the years, two sound premises are set out.[TN010010] The first is what is stated in Sha'arei Orah on the verse "The sinner's wealth is stored up for the righteous": there are seven palaces above, and one is called the Palace of Merit. It is on the north side, on the side of Gevurah. There an abundance of favor descends from above every day. When it arrives there, Israel is judged as to whether they are worthy to have that abundance poured out upon them. If not, God forbid, it is concealed there. So it is every day: above there is no withholding, God forbid, for the abundance flows every day in its accustomed manner and order; the deficiency is from the multitude of recipients.[TN010011] This is specifically "stored up" for a perfected righteous person, "the sinner's wealth," for it is there "in the known ..." [בידוע, uncertain]; if he merits it, he takes his own portion and his fellow's portion. This is intimated in the word "concealed."

In the word "gathered in," he alludes to a premise in Yonat Elem. When it arose in the blessed Creator's will to create His world, He made His light shine as though pouring it into a vessel. There came to be inward light, outward light, and encompassing light, the latter being the overflow above. But the LORD, blessed and exalted, saw that if Adam sinned, he would also impair, God forbid, the encompassing light, which is a great light; the impairment would therefore also be great. Consequently He divided it to the sides, and "He separated"—He set it apart for the righteous. See above: a person's soul likewise has three lights, inward, outward, and encompassing. A person can, God forbid, impair the encompassing light above, so that it is thrust away, ק"ו, toward the qelippot;[TN010012] He therefore separated it. This is the matter of Joshua, whom Moses made like a vessel full and overflowing; understand.

This explains "And their hope ... of the soul" [ותקות ... נפש תכ"ח]: the initial letters of "encompassing," "inward," and "outward"—מקיף, פנימי, חיצון.

Yoel Moshe - continued

[TN010013] He further explained concerning this, “And the wicked will be silent in darkness”: through ATBaSh, מקיף, “encompassing.”[TN010014] In the words of Yonat Elem, the encompassing light withdrew to its place. This is “concealed,” “gathered in”: it is held back in the northern palace, called the Palace of Merit. For from heaven they give, but they do not take away. It is only that the world is not a vessel fit for this; it is therefore held back until people improve their deeds. Hence it is called tsafon, “north,” in the sense of something stored away and hidden: “How abundant is Your goodness, which You have stored up.” This is “From the north the adversity will break forth”; “From the north comes gold”—specifically “north.” Therefore, “Let ... be seen by Your servants”: only seeing is lacking. See the related material in Sha'arei Orah and in Yonat Elem, chapter 6, and take care lest you find matters “in ...” [בשכ״ילוה?, unreadable].[TN010015] This explains “to renew, from then onward, the measure of His goodness”: from that aforementioned chamber the Holy One, blessed be He, will bestow influence and show it to us; understand.

“It is also written, ‘You have wrought for those who take refuge in You’”: for he finds a difficulty: what is the expression “You have wrought”? It could have said briefly, “How abundant is Your goodness for those who fear You, for those who take refuge in You.” The words “which You have stored up” in the verse are likewise exact, in the sense of “stored up for the righteous,” etc.; understand. “For contemplation of His attributes,” etc.: this is the expression “You have wrought,” for “I see Your heavens, the work of Your fingers”—which are ten fingers. This is “How abundant is Your goodness, which You have stored up for those who fear You,” and this is “From the north comes gold”—specifically “north.” The meaning of “You have wrought” is the abundance that is stored up. This is “Let Your works be seen by Your servants”: “be seen” and “Your works” are exact expressions. “Behold, His reward is with Him, and His work before Him.”

“And Your splendor upon their children,” etc.: that is, through “It is assuredly splendor, vindicating the governance of the world in truth and uprightness.” He explains it thus: there are thirteen attributes and thirteen configurations of the beard—“From my flesh I shall behold God.” The upper mazal is “preserving,” and the lower mazal is “and acquitting,” for those who repent. The fathers' mazal means ancestral merit: one who sanctifies himself during intercourse merits that the son born to him inherit his goodness. Among them are those whose father has no mazal but sanctifies himself, and his son will likewise be like him. But if the father is old, “the ends ... he inherits the father and begins after ...” [סופי׳ יורש את האב ומתחיל לאחרי׳?, uncertain].[TN010016] Therefore he says, “And Your splendor upon their children,” through the power of the mazal of the thirteen configurations of the beard, along the lines of “Honor the face of an elder.” It was likewise said of Rabbi Yohanan, who lacked the splendor of the face: he had no beard. And “splendor”—Naso, page 222.[TN010017]

Yoel Moshe - continued

“Let the pleasantness”: the upper mazal is called pleasantness, the pleasantness of the LORD in the Supreme Ancient One; see Zohar Hadash. “This is the opinion of Rabbi Akiva”: that is, he holds that if a person merits it, his days are completed; if he does not merit it, they are diminished. But nothing is added, even if he merits it. The Rabbis, however, hold that if he merits it, days are added. “Someone who has brought the measure of his days to completion, as Moses,” etc.: this refers back to his prayer, “Make us glad,” etc. That is, even on days when we cannot fulfill the commandments in deed but only in thought, may the Holy One, blessed be He, reckon it as though we had done them. Not everyone can offer such a prayer, only Moses, who brought the measure of his days to completion, all his days having been complete, as the Zohar says: “Behold, your days have drawn near”—without shame. Even this was only part of his praise, for only part of a person's praise is spoken in his presence, and all of it in his absence. “The One who delights in lovingkindness” is the Holy One, blessed be He. Someone else, by contrast, cannot offer the prayer mentioned above.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 1

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 2 (ב)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “He who establishes the word of His servant,” etc. This continues what was said in the preceding chapter concerning Moses' prayer: “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us” means that You should also reckon those commandments which we would have desired to perform had it not been for the enemy's wrath, and let Your servants see the good things which ought to come on this account, which You have brought into the treasury. The author says that the blessed LORD establishes the word and prayer of His servant Moses. This is the meaning of the play in which the blessed LORD engages with Leviathan each day, as is known: the blessed LORD gathers each day the good intentions of the righteous, who think of and desire to observe and perform commandments and good deeds but are unable to do so because of constraint. The blessed LORD brings those intentions into the treasury to preserve them for the future; by their merit the righteous will eat the banquet of Leviathan.

Rema of Fano

He who establishes the word of His servant—blessed be He—will fulfill the counsel of His prophet. For the play with Leviathan is nothing other than this: to gather into it each day a wellspring of His blessings, from the delights of the commandments which the righteous wholeheartedly desire always to perform themselves and cause others to perform. Their intention is joined to the deed, and they are now those who curse the day on which constraint causes their commandments to be neglected. At the time of the banquet they are destined to rouse Leviathan, to utter over it words of praise and great thanksgiving to the One who is awesome in praises, who works wonders, who is righteous, gracious, and giving. First He justifies the recompense for the intention; He graciously grants a free gift for the deed that was not completed; and He gives the reward of both, as we shall explain in chapter 22 of Part II, with the help of Heaven. It is written, “This Leviathan, which You formed to play with.” For His blessed mouth commanded that they take delight in those commandments and in their reward, although their work was not completed; His spirit gathered them for that banquet. On this account strength and gladness are before Him, because Israel will rejoice in its Maker. Now anticipation of joy is called

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

This is the play in which the blessed LORD engages, rejoicing in His gathering, for Leviathan's banquet, the blessings that ought to come each day from the commandments which the righteous desire to perform.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “To perform”: to perform the commandments themselves, and to cause others to perform them, compelling others to observe the commandments.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “They are now those who curse the day”: that is, this is also the meaning of the verse “Let those who curse the day curse it, those who are prepared to rouse Leviathan” (Job 3). “Those who curse the day” are the righteous, who curse a day on which constraint causes them to neglect commandments. When, at the time of Leviathan's banquet, they see that the blessed LORD had been gathering little by little the blessings appropriate to each day because of their thoughts and their desire for the commandments, and had brought them into the treasury, they will be ready and prepared to arouse and utter at that banquet words of praise and thanksgiving to the blessed God for this.

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Righteous, gracious, and giving” (Psalm 37): He is righteous in giving reward for a good intention as well, apart from the reward for the deed. If the deed is lacking because of constraint, He nevertheless shows grace to that person and gives its reward in addition to the reward of the intention.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “That they take delight”: that the righteous in the future take delight in those commandments although their work was not completed and they did not pass from potentiality into actuality.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Now anticipation of joy is called laughter”: therefore he said here “to play,” for by bringing the good intentions into His hidden treasury, the blessed LORD gives Israel hope that it will rejoice through this in its Maker in the future.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “When he fell,” etc. As it is written in Vayera, “He fell on his face and laughed”; its Aramaic translation is “and rejoiced.” Nevertheless, since Abraham's joy at the laughter, as is said of Abraham when he fell on his face at the announcement of offspring. But in the case of Leviathan it occurs as a transitive verb, because its Maker brings the laughter into being and stores it up within it each day, to do good to the good, as stated. When their joy itself is brought to fulfillment in the time to come, “The LORD will rejoice in His works.”

Rema of Fano - continued

In the chapter Lifnei Eideihen, the four quarters of the day were assigned to Him in their respective divisions. The first is for occupying Himself with Torah, to renew through it the work of creation in pure lovingkindness, for it is His craftsman's instrument. The second is for judging the world after crowns have been bound from the morning prayers of all Israel. Even so, no living being will be vindicated before Him; therefore He rises from the throne of judgment and sits on the throne of mercy. The third is for nourishing the entire world, to replenish what has been consumed. The fourth is for storing up the day's commandments. We have explained this in Em Kol Hai; in its third part we have made the mystery of the banquet sweet in all its details. Let it be consulted there. And now all the more, the prophet's statement, “He will give us life after two days,” is fully justified: the judgment of this world as a whole is reckoned as only one judgment, although its particulars are many, as is known from the awakening year after year on the first of Tishri. For what is decreed on it on each occasion preserves one form and relation to the events experienced in body and soul. It is also joined to the announcement of offspring consisted only in the anticipation and hope thereby created for the joy that would come when the announcement was actually fulfilled, it does not say “and he rejoiced,” but calls that joy laughter. [TN010021]

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “As a transitive verb”: it should have said lishhoq, with sheva under the shin and holam after the het; but lesaheq, with patah and tsere, is a verb transitive to others. The reason is that the blessed LORD makes others glad through it, namely the righteous; for their sake He brings the laughter into being and gathers it into His treasury.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “When their joy ... is brought to fulfillment,” etc. So it is stated in Midrash ha-Ne'elam, Toledot, page 304: “The Holy One, blessed be He, will rejoice at that time with the righteous,” as it is written, “The LORD will rejoice in His works.” See also there, page 325, concerning this banquet, its joy, and its laughter.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “In the chapter Lifnei Eideihen”: the four quarters of the day were assigned to the blessed LORD, and in the last quarter He plays with Leviathan. From this we said that He stores up the commandments in it day by day. These are the words there: Rabbi Yehudah said in the name of Rav: There are twelve hours in the day. During the first three, the Holy One, blessed be He, sits and occupies Himself with Torah. During the second three, He sits and judges the entire world. When He sees that the world has incurred destruction, He rises from the throne of judgment and sits on the throne of mercy. During the third three, He sits and nourishes the entire world, from the horns of wild oxen to the eggs of lice. During the fourth three, He sits and plays with Leviathan, as it is said, “This Leviathan, which You formed to play with.” The author incidentally explains this statement to some extent.

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “To renew,” etc. The reason the Holy One, blessed be He, occupies Himself with Torah is to renew through it the work of creation, which the blessed LORD renews each day, as explained in Zohar, Bereshit, and as will be explained below in Part II, chapter 14; likewise, the Sages arranged this in the wording of the blessing “Who forms light.”

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “For Torah is His craftsman's instrument”: the instrument of the Holy One, blessed be He, as is known from the beginning examinations and reviews renewed from within it every day and every hour. Therefore he includes the days of the world in a single judgment and a distinct judicial determination, and the prophet's manner of expression can bear his calling it “one day.” Concerning the final judgment, which is the ultimate completion of the judgments preceding it, he said, “On the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live before Him.” We shall begin with the subject at which we have just arrived, because it is dear to us, just as Hannah first said, “The LORD puts to death and gives life.” From it we shall take a pattern for the world of souls, since Scripture places them next to each other in saying, “He brings down to Sheol, and He rises.” This last expression is an intransitive verb, as will be explained below, along the lines of what Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, said: “The LORD your God will return with your captivity,” and as they expounded in Megillah 29: He too returns with them.[TN010020] Concerning the judgments of this world she said, “The LORD impoverishes and enriches,” continuing to the end of the prayer. Therefore she spoke of them at greater length, for her prophecy concerned the judgment of the king and Samuel her son, the man raised up over the kingdoms of Israel, “removing kings and establishing kings.” A king enters judgment first, as is known from the two reasons stated in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah, 16: first, before wrath increases; second, because it is not proper to leave a king standing outside. Furthermore, the whole world follows him, whether he is good or sinful, as of Bereshit Rabbah. Therefore, when in His goodness He renews the work of creation each day, He occupies Himself with it.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “After crowns have been bound from the prayers of all Israel”: even of one who is very late in prayer, as explained in Em Kol Hai, Part I, chapter 29. The Holy One, blessed be He, waits to judge the world until after prayer, in order to bring them merit through the prayer and the binding of crowns made for Him, blessed be He, from it.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “To replenish,” etc. From every living creature in the lower world, natural heat, radical moisture, and blood are continually consumed little by little. Therefore it needs food, through which what has been consumed is restored.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “To store up”: to bring the day's commandments into the treasury for Leviathan's banquet, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “And now all the more,” etc. This returns to what he said above in the preceding chapter: “This accords with what Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, said,” etc. That is, according to the interpretation mentioned above of “Make us glad according to the days in which You afflicted us,” etc., that Moses' prayer concerned the days of this world and the world to come, our interpretation of “He will give us life after two days” as the two days of judgment of this world and the world to come is also justified.

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “The judgment of this world,” etc. That is, the reason he calls the judgments of this world “one day,” although they are many—for each year, and likewise each day, is a day of judgment—is that they have one common they demonstrated in the first chapter of Hullin, 4b, from the verse “A ruler who listens.” Nevertheless, one does not derive conclusions from general rules. Go and learn from the generation of Jehoiakim and that of Zedekiah, in the chapter Heleq, folio 103; see there. But it is not our task to collect what is scattered or to gather in what has already been collected in the books of authors, both new and old, on these subjects which we are explaining. Our task is only to understand and teach, briefly and in clear language, wisdom to the wise, from what the One who grants grace to the poor has graciously given: to whom He will grant grace, to learn; and to whom He will show mercy, to observe and to act.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

relation. All concern one matter: what will be decreed for a person, whether good or bad.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “From the awakening”: the awakening of all Israel, who occupy themselves during the days of Tishri with Torah and good deeds because of the dread of judgment.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “For ... on each occasion”: each preserves one form and relation. That is, there is a single decree for everything that will befall a person among the events and occurrences affecting his body, and likewise his soul according to some commentators, as will be explained below in Part II, chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “It”: what is decreed on the first of Tishri is also joined to the examinations and reviews subsequently renewed each day and hour from that very decree made at the beginning of the year. This accords with Rabbi Yose in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah, who says that a person is judged every day, and Rabbi Natan, who says every hour. Both are called in the Gemara “mere review.” The author teaches us here incidentally that these reviews are renewed from the general decree made at the beginning of the year.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “Therefore he includes”: the prophet includes it under the name “one day,” because one judgment comprises them all.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Concerning the final judgment,” etc. This is the conclusion of the exposition begun in chapter 1.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “The subject at which we have just arrived”: the judgment of resurrection; with it we shall begin our exposition.

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “From it we shall take a pattern”: to expound immediately afterward the world of souls.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “Since Scripture places them next to each other”: immediately after “The LORD puts to death and gives life,” it says concerning the world of souls, “He brings down to Sheol, and He rises.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “This last expression,” etc. “And He rises” is a single, intransitive verb, not transitive to others; it should have said “and raises” in the intensive conjugation. Although we find similar forms elsewhere, such as “He offered burnt offerings upon the altar,” where the meaning is “he brought up,” we nevertheless do not find this in place of a participle, as here. Therefore it is fitting to explain incidentally that it refers to the Holy One, blessed be He: He Himself rises, along the lines of what will be explained in the coming chapters, that the Holy One, blessed be He, enters Gehinnom, rises, and raises the souls of the righteous with Him.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “As they expounded in Megillah”: since it does not say “and He will bring back.”

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “For her prophecy”: when she said, “The LORD impoverishes and enriches, brings low and also raises up,” her prophecy concerned the judgment of the kings Saul and David: that the LORD would remove the kingship from Saul and give it to David. In the subsequent words, “He raises the poor from the dust,” etc., she prophesied concerning Samuel her son. Despite her poverty in children, the LORD gave her a son who would sit with nobles and cause them to inherit a throne of glory. For through him Saul would receive the kingship, and through him it would be removed from Saul; he would also confer it upon David and his descendants. This is along the lines of Ralbag's interpretation; see there.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “A king enters judgment first”: therefore she first said, “The LORD impoverishes,” etc., and afterward, “He raises from the dust,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “Furthermore,” etc. The author incidentally teaches us another reason why the king enters judgment first.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “Whether good or sinful”: if the king is good, his generation also turns out well; in the opposite case, the opposite follows.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “In the first chapter of Hullin”: there they objected, “But perhaps Ahab's men were good?” This cannot be supposed, for it is written, “A ruler who listens to falsehood—all his servants are wicked.” “But perhaps Jehoshaphat's men were also not good?” This cannot be supposed, for from “A ruler who listens to falsehood—all his servants are wicked” it follows that if he listens to truth, his servants are righteous.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) “Nevertheless,” etc. This general rule rests only on what usually happens; sometimes we find the opposite.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) “From the generation of Jehoiakim”: he was not good, but his generation was good; Zedekiah was good, but his generation was not.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) “In the chapter Heleq”: likewise in Arakhin, chapter 3, they said: The Holy One, blessed be He, wished to return the entire world to chaos and void because of Jehoiakim; He looked at his generation, and His mind was appeased. The Holy One, blessed be He, wished to return the entire world to chaos and void because of Zedekiah's generation; He looked at Zedekiah, and His mind was appeased.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“For the play with Leviathan is nothing other than,” etc. That is, this is the play arising from those commandments which Israel fulfills in thought but cannot complete in deed because of troubles and exile, as stated in chapter 1. “They are now those who curse the day, those destined to rouse Leviathan,” in Job: the author explains that these are those who cannot fulfill the commandments in deed, and who curse and revile their day because of the troubles. At Leviathan's banquet they will rouse themselves and praise the Holy One, blessed be He, for repaying them as though they had performed the deeds.

“He graciously grants a free gift for the deed that was not completed”: this explains “The Holy One, blessed be He, joins a good intention to the deed”; understand. This is “I pleaded for grace before the LORD at that time”: although they have good deeds on which to rely, they ask only for a free gift, for there they have reward both for the intention and for the deed, even though it was not completed; understand. This is “at that time, saying”: my request was that He grant the reward at that time; understand. “And He gives the reward of both”: hence He is called “giving”; see there.

“Now anticipation of joy is called laughter”: therefore it comes as a transitive verb; “to cause laughter” is transitive. Hence Scripture says, “They all hope toward You”: that is, the aforementioned anticipation; yesabberun is an expression of hope. See there. I heard that concerning a person's days, which are the garments, it is said, “And the measure of my days, what is it?” That is, middat, “the measure,” is like middo vad, “his linen garment,” which is clothing: “Let me know what is lacking” from the garment, so that I may repair it. I also heard: “Teach us thus to number our days”—that is, may the days on which the deed was not done receive a rectification, “and we shall bring a heart of wisdom." I also heard in the name of ר"ל ב"ק: "And what Sarah said, 'God has made laughter for me'"—Isaac had already been born; but "everyone who hears," that is, the barren women who were visited together with her, "will laugh for me": they anticipate a joy which has not yet come to them. [TN010022]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"In the chapter Lifnei Eideihen," etc. "For it is His craftsman's instrument": that is, Torah is the Holy One's craftsman's instrument, in Midrash Rabbah, as stated at the beginning of Bereshit. I heard in the name of ר"ל ב"ק that this is the intention of the author of the Haggadah: four sons, one wise, one wicked, one simple, and one who does not know how to ask, correspond to these four quarters of the day.[TN010023] That is, the portion of wisdom, in praise of the Torah, through which the work of creation is renewed, is called a lad; it corresponds to Abraham, who is Hesed. It is written, "For ... wisdom he is" [כי מחדת חכמה הוא, uncertain].[TN010024] The second, from Israel's morning prayer, is when He rises from the throne of judgment and sits on the throne of mercy. This corresponds to the simple son, who is Jacob, called "a simple man, dwelling in tents"; he is the middle line, called mercy.

The third is to nourish the entire world, to replenish "what has been ..." [ביתך, uncertain]. "For he will hunger ... a person ... and it will be consumed, and the LORD will give," etc.?—to replenish "what has been ..." [ביתך?].[TN010025] This corresponds to the attribute of Isaac, from whom Esau emerged: he was called wicked and sold the birthright for food. The fourth corresponds to David, king of Israel, for he is the one who does not know how to ask. It is known that David's attribute is Malkhut, "like David" [כדוד], and it has no light of its own. It does not ask in this world; everything is for the future, when it will have light.[TN010026] This is also the intention of the verse: when they came to David and said, "Our lord the king, your people Israel need sustenance," he told them, "Go and sustain yourselves from one another." But he has no power to bestow sustenance upon them in this world. Therefore, in the future, at Leviathan's banquet, he says, "It is fitting for me to bless" over the cup of blessing. See below in this part, chapter 50, concerning grace after meals.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

He will then be exalted as one possessed of attributes and good deeds: this is the play with Leviathan, "the springs of the second day" [מעינות היום הב'], as stated above in chapter 1, alluded to in correspondence with David.[TN010027] He is called "one who does not know how to ask," as we said. See the writings of the Ari, of blessed memory, and consider the conclusion: "for ... a false servant ... God, and the day of the LORD," that is ... [כי עבד שקר אלוהי' ויום ה' ר"ל?, damaged].[TN010028] The verse "He will give us life after two days": all the judgments of this world are called one judgment and one day, although there are many through the year; they belong to the continuing judgments of this world. The judgment after death is one day and one "... " [ויזן א', uncertain]. This is "after two days."[TN010029]

"The subject at which we have just arrived," etc. After the author began to speak of "Make us glad," that is, the second judgment, after the resurrection of the dead, as Hannah said, "The LORD puts to death and gives life," we take from it a pattern for the world of souls, which is the intermediate judgment mentioned above in chapter 1.[TN010030] "This last" is the intermediate judgment, to which she alluded in "He brings down to Sheol, and He rises." The word "and He rises" is an intransitive verb: that is, it is of the same kind as "he went down," and is not transitive to others. For it does not say "and He brings up," as it says "and He puts to death," but "and He rises," which refers to the Holy One, blessed be He, along the lines of "I am with him in distress," etc.

"And establishing kings": I heard in the name of ר"ל ב"ק that הק"ס? is one of the seventy-two names, and it is the name efficacious for kingship. For "he enthroned"—"he will lead them," יוליכם, has the numerical value of הק"ם?, "as ..." [כבתוח], according to the explanation in the prayerbook; this is "and establishing kings."[TN010031] This is what Joseph said: "And thus my sheaf arose," וקמ"ה; therefore his brothers said, "Will you indeed reign over us?" See below, in the chapter, in Part IV of Heqor Din, chapter ס"ז וי"ו [uncertain reference].[TN010032] This is what Saul said to David: "I know that you will indeed reign, and the kingdom of Israel will be established," וקמ"ה, "in your hand," II Samuel, chapter 24.[TN010033] This was also Samuel's

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

attribute, for Aaron and Moses were lovingkindness and mercy: Aaron the priest is wisdom in lovingkindness, “and judgment sits,” on the side of his being a Levite [ויושב דין, uncertain].[TN010034] Samuel comprised both of them, along the lines of

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 2

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Moses and Aaron among His priests, and Samuel among those who call upon His name.”

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 3 (ג)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד · נה · נו · נז · נח · נט · ס · סא · סב · סג · סד · סה · סו · סז · סח · סט · ע · עא · עב · עג · עד · עה · עו · עז · עח · עט · פ · פא · פב · פג · פד · פה · פו · פז · פח · פט · צ · צא · צב · צג · צד · צה · צו · צז · צח · צט · ק · קא · קב · קג · קד · קה · קו · קז · קח · קט · ר · רא · רב · רג · רד · רה · רו · רז · רח · רט · ש · שא · שב · שג · שד · שה · שו · שז · שח · שט · ת · תא · תב · תג · תד · תה · תו · תז · תח · תט

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “It was taught,” etc. In the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah (16b). The author begins with this baraita, which concerns the world of resurrection, as he announced in the preceding chapter. In some versions of the Gemara the text reads, “There are three groups on the day of judgment,” with hen; in others hen is not written, as the Tosafot observed, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “As with custodians”: it teaches, “There are four custodians,” with hen.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “And new years”: we learn, “There are four new years.” There, at the beginning of Rosh Hashanah, the Tosafot also list “There are three notched objects” in Hullin, “There are three kinds of wine” in the chapter Ein Ma'amidin, and “There are three houses,” “There are three stones,” in the chapter Kol ha-Tzelamim.

Rema of Fano

It was taught: Beit Shammai say, “Three groups on the day of judgment,” etc. The Tosafot, at the beginning of Rosh Hashanah and at the beginning of Bava Qamma, observed precisely that in some places in the Mishnah we recite hen, “there are,” as with custodians and new years, whereas in other places we do not recite hen, as with primary categories of damage and those whose atonement is incomplete. What they answered there in Rosh Hashanah is not a sufficient reason: it applies to damages, where the text concerns what follows, “The character of this one is not like the character of that one”; it does not apply to those whose atonement is incomplete. Nevertheless, they rightly perceived that the tanna of the Mishnah is precise. He wishes to give being to matters of holiness, such as new years, upon which many commandments depend. Concerning custodians too it is written, “Upon your walls, Jerusalem, I have appointed custodians.” They are four, corresponding to the four letters of the Name; their rules are three, for the companions above never separate. Concerning them it is written, “All day

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “As with primary categories of damage”: we learn, “Four primary categories of damage: the ox,” etc., without hen. Likewise, concerning the four whose atonement is incomplete, it does not teach hen.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “What they answered,” etc. The Tosafot's view there in Rosh Hashanah is that hen is not taught for the four primary categories of damage because the tanna is not concerned with their number, so as to say, “There are four of them.” Rather, the tanna refers to “The character of this one is not like the character of that one,” taught afterward. His intention is only to say that, among these four primary categories of damage, the character of one is not like that of another. They say the same at the beginning of Bava Qamma. But this is not a sufficient reason: although one can say this concerning damages, it is no reason for those whose atonement is incomplete, where the tanna is concerned with the number yet does not say hen. The Tosafot themselves already hinted at this at the beginning of Bava Qamma and raised further objections to the stated reason; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) "Nevertheless": although the Tosafot did not give an adequate reason for the different wording of these mishnayot regarding hen, they nevertheless perceived the matter correctly. Our holy Rabbi did not write hen in some places and omit it in others by chance: the tanna is exact and meticulous. The adequate reason is—

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "He wishes to give being": being and existence to matters of holiness; therefore he wrote hen of them, an expression of being.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "Concerning custodians too": hen is taught for this reason, because they are matters of holiness, corresponding to the four letters of the Name, as is known: yod is Hokhmah, the first he is Binah, vav is Tiferet, and the final he is Malkhut. The author says that these are the four custodians: yod, the paid custodian; he, the renter; vav, the unpaid custodian; and all night, continually, they shall not be silent," in the sense of the maidens of song. Corresponding to them, the paid custodian is yod, for the Shekhinah among those below is a need above; and the renter is he, hiring workers and standing over them, as is known. "You who invoke the LORD, take no rest" is said of the unpaid custodian, who is vav, guarding his female counterpart from the blemish caused by those who cast off the yoke, who eat delicacies "freely," free of commandments. The borrower is he, poor and needy, like David, king of Israel, who asks a portion from his master to distribute to the whole multitude of Israel. Therefore it is said, "And give him no rest," for he depends upon the will of others; this is sufficient. [TN010040]

Rema of Fano - continued

The tanna rightly guarded himself against uttering "being" for damages. Their initial letters are ShBMaH: shor, bor, mav'eh, hav'er—ox, pit, mav'eh, and fire.[TN010041] This is a small city, last among the Canaanite cities across the Jordan, corresponding to which is the holy city: "And the name of the city from that day: 'The LORD is there,'" as stated. Those whose atonement is incomplete likewise have neither complete being nor complete purity. As for Rabbi Hiyya and Rabbi Oshaya, each of whom teaches respectively thirteen and twenty-four primary categories of damage, in some accurate books they do not recite hen. It is, however, possible that the tanna of an external teaching is not so precise. Here, one who does not recite hen is properly precise because of the wicked; one who does recite hen he, the borrower. Concerning them it is said, "Upon your walls ... continually they shall not be silent. You who invoke the LORD, take no rest, and give Him no rest until He establishes and makes Jerusalem a praise in the earth" (Isaiah 62), as he proceeds to explain.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "Their rules are three": at the end of Shevuot, Rabbi Meir and Rabbi Yehudah disagree as to how a renter pays: one says like an unpaid custodian, and one says like a paid custodian. The objection is raised: "Are these four? They are three!" Rav Nahman bar Yitzhak says: "There are four custodians, and their rules are three." We find the same among the four letters of the Name: Hokhmah and Binah, corresponding to the paid custodian and the renter, are reckoned as one. They are the companions above who never separate, as stated in Zohar, Vayiqra, page 1, on "Eat, companions; drink and become drunk, beloved ones." See there: "companions" is expounded as Hokhmah and Binah, whose union is constant; "beloved ones" as Tiferet and Malkhut, whose coupling is not constant.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) "Concerning them it is written," etc. As stated in

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Galante on the verse “The elders of the daughter of Zion sit on the ground in silence.” These are his words: You should know that at the Throne there are known alphabetic orders explained in the Zohar on the Song of Songs; beneath them are thousands and tens of thousands of seraphim called maidens of song, who continually sing and are never silent. They are under the orders, three by three on every side, the pillars of the Throne. You already know that the seraphim stand, as it is written, “Seraphim stood above Him.” My teacher, of blessed memory, gave a fine reason why these maidens of song continually sing, whereas the seven maidens, the seven palaces of Yetzirah, do not sing continually: only at the time of song do all the masters of song go forth in song until they finish. He said that everything depends on the roots: according to the union occurring in the roots, so it occurs in the branches. Just as yod and he are called companions and never separate, so too at the Throne, where the upper Mother nests, comprising the first three sefirot, all the seraphim singing there sing continually, for their offspring resemble them. In the seven palaces, however, they cease, since their roots, vav and he, are holds that, ultimately, the praise of the Holy One, blessed be He, rises from them all, as will be explained. Concerning the four forms of execution by the court, in all the versions we recite hen, for all those put to death confess and have a share in the world to come. Concerning houses, stones, and asherah trees in the chapter on idols, hen is taught in order to make their prohibition stringent. Below, in the first chapter of Part V, we shall explain the distinctions in judgment among these three groups, according to the conclusion of this teaching.

Rema of Fano - continued

In the Gemara, Rosh Hashanah 17, it is stated concerning it: The Master said, “Beit Hillel say: ‘Abundant in lovingkindness’—He inclines toward lovingkindness.” How does He do this? Rabbi Eleazar says: He presses down, as it is said, “He will again have mercy on us; He will subdue our iniquities.” Rabbi Yose bar Hanina says: He lifts up, as it is said, “Lifting iniquity and passing over transgression.” The school of Rabbi Ishmael taught: He passes over the first one, then the first one; such is the measure. Rava said: The iniquity itself is not erased, for if there is a majority of iniquities, it is reckoned together with them. Rashi explains: “He presses down”—He hides some of the iniquities beneath the Throne of Glory. “He lifts up”—He raises a scale-pan, and the merits tip it decisively downward. Thus far his words.

But hiding part of the iniquities necessarily means annulling the guilt of a portion of each; the place where they called beloved ones and their union is not constant. Likewise the song of their offspring, where they nest —as stated in the Tiqqunim, “The middle pillar nests in Metatron”— is not constant either. Lips should kiss such words. Thus far his words, etc.; see there. These are precisely the author's words.

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “Corresponding to them”: corresponding to the companions above are the paid custodian and the renter, whose rules are one.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “This is yod,” etc. The author now proceeds to explain that the four letters of the Name are the four custodians. He says that yod, Hokhmah, is therefore the paid custodian because it receives reward from below. This accords with the well-known wording of the Zohar in several places, “The Shekhinah among those below is a need above.” The meaning is that the righteous, through their good deeds below, cause coupling above, along the lines of Zohar, Lekh Lekha, on “I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me”: through an awakening below, an awakening is found above. The matter is that good deeds are the female waters ascending above, with which the Shekhinah is crowned. She comes before the King and says, “See: through this son I have been stirred before You,” as stated in Zohar, Vayiqra. Through this the coupling of the beloved ones above takes place; from them a further awakening ascends to the companions above. Although they never separate and their union is constant, the female waters nevertheless stir and give them additional power to act mightily. This is explicitly stated in the Zohar on the Song of Songs: Just as an awakening in joy must be stirred from this world upward, so an awakening in joy and gladness must be stirred from the world of the moon toward the upper world. Therefore the worlds exist according to one pattern, and awakening ascends only from below upward. Thus far. This is “The Shekhinah among those below is a need above”: the Shekhinah's receiving abundance from the emanation above her and bestowing it upon those below is also a need above, for the upper awakening. She raises the good deeds and is stirred toward the King; from Him the awakening comes to Binah and then to Hokhmah. Thus Hokhmah receives everyone's reward from below upward: this is the paid custodian.

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

are hidden proves this. For through repentance that reaches the Throne of Glory, deliberate sins become like inadvertent ones. Together with this, the other wording in Rashi's explanation in the chapter Ein ba-Arakhin [folio 8b] is also upheld: “He presses down”—He takes some of the iniquities and presses them down into the depths of the sea. Thus far his words. The intention is that their deliberate character is cast there from beneath the Throne of Glory, leaving only the inadvertent element, which is easy to atone for. This is the measure applying to all people, most of whom are intermediate; it is this that Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, requested, as they expounded at the end of Yoma on the verse “Lifting iniquity, transgression, and sin,” because the community is able to meet its requirements.

Its four pillars, included in “Turn away from evil,” were explained by Isaiah: “Wash”—abandoning the sin; “make yourselves clean”—remorse; “remove”—confession, through which the accuser withdraws from before one, and one who admits liability for a fine is exempt. Since the sinner destroys the world, which was created through the letters of the Torah, confession was instituted in alphabetical order. At first the letters entered before the King in reverse order. The name Tishri is a witness: in it the world was created, according to Rabbi Eliezer, for the intention arose that it should be created with the attribute of judgment. He saw that it could not endure and joined to it the attribute of mercy. The letters then entered again in (13) “Hiring workers”: Michael, Gabriel, and Nuriel, whose initials form MGN. They are the workers of lovingkindness, judgment, and mercy, in accordance with what is known: from Binah were emanated three lines, the line of lovingkindness, the line of judgment, and the line of mercy. These are the three fathers—Gedullah, Gevurah, and Tiferet—with the sons, Netzah, Hod, and Yesod. Michael is the prince of lovingkindness; Gabriel is appointed over judgment, and for this reason is called “worker of mighty deeds”; mercy is effected through Nuriel. Thus Binah hires these workers and stands over them, for from her the root of their actions is emanated, and from her they draw nourishment.

Yad Yehudah - יג

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “You who invoke the LORD,” etc. This refers to the seven maidens in the seven palaces, whose song is not constant because their roots are vav and he, whose union is not constant, as mentioned. After the prophet said of the maidens of song, “All day and all night they shall not be silent,” he prayed concerning the seven maidens that they too might sing continually, so that the coupling of the beloved ones would be constant. Corresponding to vav he said, “Take no rest”; corresponding to he he said, “And give him no rest.” See Zohar, Lekh Lekha, page 223.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Guarding his female counterpart,” etc. It is known that the Shekhinah clothes herself in the qelippot; concerning this it is said, “His kingdom rules over all,” as stated in the Tiqqunim. The qelippot and the external powers wish to seize hold of holiness, and vav guards he, his female counterpart, from them. This resembles the Zohar on the Song of Songs: “It is the way of the male always to place his female counterpart before him, to watch over her,” etc.; see there. This is the unpaid custodian, who guards he from those who are “free” of commandments, namely the external powers.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “The borrower”: this goes back to the word “is said,” for the verse “You who invoke the LORD,” etc., is likewise said of the their proper order, alef, bet. The Holy One, blessed be He, took from these and from those, joined to them the yod of His Name, and sealed the word bereshit. Therefore the devout have been accustomed to confess in the order ABGD and in the order TShRQ. [TN010042] In Ma'amar ha-Middot I have said something concerning the statement that the world was created in Nisan: one master said one thing and the other another, and they do not disagree. “Cease doing evil”: an occasion for transgression comes to a person, and he escapes it. Not only this: even if he has begun the transgression and is still engaged in it, if he voluntarily ceases it out of concern for his Creator's honor—for example, by digging his fingernails into the ground—he is restored and accepted. Therefore he said, “Cease doing evil,” without any of the prefixes attached to the infinitive, so as to include all these cases. There are higher degrees than this among the levels of repentance in “Do good,” as will be explained in chapter 11. One who attains them is immediately inscribed and sealed for life in the book of the righteous.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

borrower, who is he, poor and needy. It is known from many passages in the Zohar that the moon has nothing of its own: all the abundance Malkhut bestows below it receives from the attributes above it. Corresponding to this, David, whose attribute is Malkhut, likewise said, “I am poor and needy.”

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “For he depends,” etc. The reason it says “give him no rest,” rather than “take no rest” as previously, is that this borrower depends on the will of those who bestow abundance and those who receive it. Through the recipients' good deeds, abundance comes to him from those who bestow it. Therefore he said, “And give him no rest”—the borrower—so that he may continually borrow.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “The tanna guarded himself,” etc. This returns to the preceding point: he teaches hen specifically concerning matters of holiness, not concerning matters belonging to impurity. For this reason he did not teach hen concerning the four primary categories of damage.

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “Their initial letters,” etc. It is known that “God has made the one corresponding to the other.” Just as there are sefirot and holy crowns on the side of holiness, there are qelippot and impure crowns on the side of impurity. The sages of truth said concerning the verse “Ataroth, Dibon, Jazer, Nimrah, Heshbon, Elealeh, Sebam, Nebo, and Beon—the land which the LORD struck before the congregation of

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Israel,” in Mattot, that these are the names of the qelippot struck before Israel. They are mentioned again at the end of the portion among the other cities built by the descendants of Gad and Reuben; there Sibmah is mentioned last. Its initials are shor, bor, mav'eh, hav'er: it comprises these four primary categories of damage. They are those mentioned in Zohar, Ki Tissa, page 333, and Shelah Lekha, page 326. It corresponds to Malkhut in holiness, called Jerusalem, the holy city, comprising the four legs of the chariot. For “the name of the city from that day: ‘The LORD is there’”—the four letters of the Name, from which the chariot derives. The author says that because of the impurity of the four primary categories of damage, hen is not taught concerning them, so as not to give them being.

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “Those whose atonement is incomplete”: the reason hen is not taught concerning them is that their atonement is still incomplete; their purity and being are not complete, so that an expression of being should be assigned to them.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “Rabbi Hiyya and Rabbi Oshaya”: in the baraita concerning damages, Rabbi Hiyya teaches thirteen primary categories and Rabbi Oshaya twenty-four, without hen, as in the Mishnah.[TN010043]

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “It is, however, possible”: for those books which read hen, as the Tosafot say at the beginning of the tractate on damages, one may say that the tanna of the baraita is not as precise as the tanna of the Mishnah.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “Here”: in the baraita “Three groups on the day of judgment,” with which we began, we need not say that the tanna of the external teaching is imprecise. Both the reading “There are three groups on the day of judgment” and the reading that omits hen are properly precise. The one who does not teach hen does so because the three groups include a group of wicked people, who are not included in being.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “Rises”: on the day of judgment, from them all, even from the wicked, as will be explained below.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “Concerning the four forms of execution by the court,” etc. In addition to the Tosafot's examples, the author also mentions hen as taught concerning the four forms of execution by the court.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “Concerning houses,” etc., mentioned by the Tosafot: hen is taught to make their prohibition stringent, since hen indicates that they continually remain prohibited. This is also the reason for hen mentioned concerning the three kinds of wine listed by the Tosafot; the author omitted these in the flow of his writing.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Below,” etc. Having explained the variant readings concerning hen in this baraita about the three groups, the author now comes to explain the matter itself.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “In the Gemara”: these are the words of the baraita there: It was taught: Beit Shammai say, “There are three groups on the day of judgment: one of the wholly righteous, one of the wholly wicked, and one of the intermediate. The wholly righteous are immediately inscribed and sealed for everlasting life; the wholly wicked are immediately inscribed and sealed for Gehinnom, as it is said, ‘Many of those who sleep in the dust will awake,’ etc. The intermediate descend to Gehinnom, cry out, and ascend, as it is said,” etc. Beit Hillel say, “‘And abundant in lovingkindness’—He inclines toward lovingkindness,” etc. It is concerning this that it is stated there, “The Master said,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “Rashi explains: ‘He presses down’—He hides,” etc. This is not found in the Rashi text before us. Rather, his words in Rosh Hashanah are: “He presses down”—the scale-pan of merit, so that the merits outweigh the iniquities. “He lifts up”—He raises the scale-pan of iniquity. In chapter 2 of Arakhin they disagree about the plain meaning of “Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains; Your judgments are a great deep.” Rav Yehudah says: Were it not that “Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains,” who could withstand “Your judgments are a great deep”? Rabbah says: “Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains” because “Your judgments are a great deep.” We ask: What do they disagree about? They disagree over Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, for it was stated: Rabbi Eliezer says, “He presses down”; Rabbi Yose bar Hanina says, “He lifts up.” Rabbah follows Rabbi Eliezer, and Rav Yehudah follows Rabbi Yose bar Hanina. Rashi explains there: “He presses down”—the Holy One, blessed be He, presses down and hides iniquities beneath the hollow of the Throne of Glory, so that the merits will outweigh them. “He lifts up”—He lifts and raises the scale-pan of iniquities upward, so that the merits will outweigh them. Rabbah follows Rabbi Eliezer: it means, “Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains”—You vindicate us by pressing down and hiding “Your judgments,” namely the iniquities, “in a great deep.”

Yad Yehudah - כט - continued

Rav Yehudah follows Rabbi Yose bar Hanina: it means, were it not that "Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains"—that You act charitably toward us by raising the iniquities—who could withstand "Your judgments," which would tip the scales down to the great deep? Thus far. You see that a different version of Rashi's wording in Rosh Hashanah and Arakhin came to the author's hands. What the author quotes in his name in Rosh Hashanah, explaining "He presses down" as hiding some of the iniquities beneath the Throne of Glory, occurs in Arakhin in our version, with a slight difference in wording. In any event, one must emend it there to "some of the iniquities," as the author writes, for since the pans are equal, certainly only some of the iniquities need be hidden for the merits to outweigh them.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) "A portion of each iniquity": not that He hides one whole iniquity, for it is written, "He will subdue our iniquities," in the plural, as the author says below in chapter 6; see there. Rather, the explanation must be that He hides a portion of each and every iniquity, through repentance, because of which deliberate sins become like inadvertent ones. As the Sages say at the end of Yoma concerning "Return, Israel, to the LORD your God, for you have stumbled in your iniquity": "This iniquity is deliberate," etc. He hides only the deliberate element, until nothing remains but the inadvertent element.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) "The place where they are hidden": the Throne of Glory proves that He hides a portion of each iniquity, namely its deliberate element, which becomes inadvertent through—

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) "Repentance that reaches" there, as the Sages said: "Return, Israel, to the LORD your God"—great is repentance, which reaches the Throne of Glory. Thus, according to these two expositions, the verse means: "Return, Israel, to the LORD your God"—to the Throne of Glory, to hide the deliberate element there; "for you have stumbled in your iniquity"—deliberate sins become like inadvertent ones after the deliberate element is hidden there.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) "Together ... the other wording is upheld": that is, at first sight these two wordings of Rashi seem contradictory. In Rosh Hashanah he explains hiding as beneath the Throne of Glory, whereas in Arakhin he explains it as in the depths of the sea. This is especially so according to our version in Arakhin, where he begins with the Throne of Glory and concludes with hiding iniquities in the great deep. According to the explanation above, however, the two wordings are both correct: repentance causes the Holy One, blessed be He, to hide the portion that is the deliberate element beneath the Throne of Glory, while He presses down the remaining inadvertent element, which is easy to atone for, into the depths of the sea, through the measure of inclining toward lovingkindness.[TN010044]

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) "This measure": inclining toward lovingkindness is the measure for all people, whose deliberate sins become like inadvertent ones through repentance.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) "In Yoma, chapter 3": Moses said before the Holy One, blessed be He, "Master of the universe, when Israel sins before You and repents, make their deliberate sins like inadvertent ones."

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) "To meet its requirements": because the inadvertent element is easy to atone for.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) "Its four pillars": those on which this measure rests were explained by Isaiah in "Wash, make yourselves clean, remove the evil of your deeds from before My eyes, cease doing evil." They are abandonment of sin, remorse of the heart, oral confession, and repentance when the occasion recurs.[TN010045] These are included in the repentance of "Turn away from evil"; through it the blessed LORD makes inadvertent sins out of deliberate ones.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) "Make yourselves clean"—remorse, for the language of purity is applied to the heart, as in "I have made my heart clean" (Proverbs 20).

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) "Remove" indicates confession, for through confession the accuser withdraws, moves away, and departs. One who admits liability for a fine is exempt, and there is no longer any place for his accusation. This is the reason for confession, along the lines of Zohar, Pinehas, page 425: “One who specifies his sin—the courts withdraw from him, because a person is closely related to himself and is not judged on his own word. Moreover, he leaves the accuser no opportunity to allege guilt against him,” etc.; see there. This is “Remove the evil of your deeds”: that is, remove the accuser, who is the evil of your deeds, for it is known that the accuser is produced from the transgression itself. This removal takes place through confession.

Yad Yehudah - לט - continued

Yad Yehudah - מ

(40) “Since the sinner,” etc. Incidentally, the author gives a fine reason why confession was instituted in alphabetical order, and also in reverse alphabetic order.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(41) “They entered in reverse order,” etc. In the Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 28, these are the words: “‘The discerning will shine’—these are the letters, which had the understanding to enter before the King, each according to its arrangement. From the side of Gevurah they all entered in reverse order, because it is the left arm: Tishri. This is bereshit, ‘on the first of Tishri,’ because the world was created with the attribute of judgment, and therefore they entered in reverse order. But we have established that the world was created with the right, and through it the letters entered in their proper order. The mystery of the matter is, ‘I said: The world shall be built through lovingkindness.’ Therefore, when the letters entered in reverse order and some of them in their proper order, the Holy One, blessed be He, did not wish to create the world with them until He joined them in right and left and created the world with them. He took alef-bet from those in proper order, took TShRY from those in reverse order, joined to them the letter yod from His Name, and created the world with them so that it might endure,” etc.[TN010046] These are the author's words. See also Zohar, Bereshit, page 20.

Yad Yehudah - מב

(42) “The name Tishri”: the month in which the world was created, alluded to in the word bereshit, is a witness and proof that the letters then entered in reverse order.

Yad Yehudah - מג

(43) “According to Rabbi Eliezer”: who holds this view at the beginning of Rosh Hashanah.

Yad Yehudah - מד

(44) “With the attribute of judgment?” Therefore the letters likewise came in reverse order, which indicates judgment.[TN010047]

Yad Yehudah - מה

(45) “In their proper order”: which indicates mercy.

Yad Yehudah - מו

(46) “Therefore”: since the world was created through the two orders of the letters and the sinner destroys it, people were likewise accustomed to arrange confession in both orders in order to repair the sin.

Yad Yehudah - מז

(47) “In Ma'amar ha-Middot,” etc. That is, do not object: this works according to Rabbi Eliezer, but is it satisfactory according to Rabbi Yehoshua, who says there that the world was created in Nisan? For in Ma'amar ha-Middot, measure 3, I said that Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Yehoshua do not disagree. Rabbi Yehoshua too admits that the world was created in Tishri, but he holds that the seasonal reckoning starts from the Nisan preceding Tishri. See there, and you will find satisfaction.

Yad Yehudah - מח

(48) “Cease doing evil” is the fourth of the four pillars mentioned: an occasion comes to him, etc., as the Sages said, “Rabbi Yehudah indicated: with the same woman,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - מט

(49) “The prefixes attached to the infinitive”: the letters bet, kaf, lamed, and mem. For harea is the infinitive, and it should have said me-harea or mi-le-harea, “from doing evil.” But the prefix is absent so as to include the second case as well. This is “Cease doing evil”: a person should withdraw and cease even if he is still standing in evil and in the transgression. With a prefixed letter, by contrast, it would imply only the first case, that he should refrain from doing the transgression once again. “There are higher degrees,” etc.: the four pillars mentioned concern only the repentance of “Turn away from evil,” which is that of the intermediate. We are dealing with them in the measure of inclining toward lovingkindness. But there are those who surpass this measure, namely in the degree of repentance that also includes “Do good.”

Yad Yehudah - מט - continued

These are the wholly righteous, who are immediately inscribed and sealed for life.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“As with custodians”: that is, “There are four custodians”; “There are four new years.” “The Tosafot observed precisely, at the beginning of Rosh Hashanah and at the beginning of ... shofars, new years?” [ובריש שופרים ראשי שנים?, uncertain]. [TN010048] “The character of this one is not like ...”: that is, because they are not equal, hen is not taught. This answer does not suffice for those whose atonement is incomplete, since in this respect they are alike; it does not apply to those whose atonement is incomplete. “Nevertheless, they rightly perceived”: that is, the Tosafot rightly raised the difficulty that sometimes hen is taught and sometimes not, for the tanna of the Mishnah is precise—that is, exact, carefully choosing his wording “to give being,” etc.

“For the companions above never separate”: as is known to the sages of truth and those versed in esoteric wisdom, the matter is as follows. The point of yod is the Supreme Crown; yod itself is Hokhmah; the first he is Binah; vav is Tiferet with the six extremities; the second he is Malkhut. Father is Hokhmah, Mother is Binah, Tiferet is vav, and Malkhut the second he. Through our good deeds below an awakening occurs above, and there is coupling above. The companions above never separate. The Ari, of blessed memory, raised an objection in the Ari's Intentions: the Gemara says that the Holy One, blessed be He, swore He would not enter the Jerusalem above until Israel entered the Jerusalem below. This implies that in the time of destruction there is no coupling above. He answered that the matter is as follows: above, in Father and Mother, there are two couplings. One is to give life to the worlds and sustain their necessary existence. This coupling is constant and never ceases, for if it ceased for a single moment the worlds would cease. The second coupling is to give mohin to Ze'ir Anpin and Nuqva, and to engender souls, which are the inwardness of the worlds. These are Ze'ir Anpin and Nuqva, and they ascend only through our good deeds below, our prayers after the destruction, when the coupling is not constant. It is also known that Ze'ir Anpin and Nuqva are called beloved ones, and Father and Mother companions, as the Zohar says in Vayiqra on

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Eat, companions; drink and become drunk, beloved ones.”

This premise consequently resolves the Gemara: we say, “On three things the world endures,” etc., and elsewhere, “On three things the world stands.” The matter is that through the upper coupling, namely Father and Mother, it stands through the power of the Supreme Crown, for without couplings, God forbid, the worlds have no life. Through our good deeds below a coupling occurs, and through Tiferet the abundance comes to Netzah and Hod and to Malkhut, which bestows it upon the lower world. This is what is said, “A river goes out from Eden ... and becomes four heads,” as stated. Just as above there is a constant coupling which never ceases, so there are angels above who never cease; and just as below the coupling is not constant, so the angels do not constantly utter song. See Tiqqunim, folio 41: “Rabbi Eliezer said: Father, have we not heard,” etc.; and Galante on “How has He covered with a cloud,” and on “They sit on the ground in silence,” etc., through “they sing continually.” The preceding three ... [הקדמיי ג’, unclear], in the Zohar on the Song of Songs: Tiferet—“It is the male's way always to ... his female counterpart before him, to watch over her,” etc.[TN010049] This resembles Joseph guarding Rachel from Esau's evil eye; see Zohar, Vayishlah, page 397?, on “Unless the LORD guards,” etc.

The resulting principle is that the Holy One, blessed be He, vav in the Name, guards the Shekhinah, His female counterpart—that is, the final he, the attribute of Malkhut—from every blemish, lest, God forbid, the qelippot seize hold of her, “those who eat ...” [האוכלי למעבדי, uncertain], as stated in the Zohar, Mishpatim.[TN010050] Therefore vav is called the unpaid custodian. Thus the author said: concerning custodians too it is written, “Upon your walls, Jerusalem, I have appointed custodians,” who are four, corresponding to the four letters of the Name, “and their rules are three”—not four rules, “afterward?” [אח”כ?].[TN010051] For the companions above, who are Father and Mother, never separate. They are the first two letters, yod-he, of the Name, and are like one. Therefore he said, “For the companions above,” who are called companions; the prefixed dalet gives the reason, whereas Ze'ir Anpin and Nuqva are called beloved ones, as stated. Hence he says, “Concerning them it is written, 'All day and all night they shall not be silent,'" for the same reason: just as above they do not separate, so the angels are not silent. This is the sense of "maidens of song," an expression of hidden things.[TN010052] See also Avodat ha-Qodesh, in the section on the mysteries of Torah, concerning David, etc. Just as the two letters vav-he of the Name are not constant in union, so the angels are not constant in uttering song, for their roots are in vav-he of the Name.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Corresponding to them, the paid custodian is yod, for the Shekhinah among those below is a need above": that is, from Malkhut of Atzilut a thread of light descends and enters all the worlds of Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah. Through this thread, when Israel is meritorious and there is an awakening below, the worlds rise. Asiyah becomes a garment for Yetzirah, and Yetzirah for Beriah; all are then ready to receive abundance from Ein Sof, and the abundance increases. This is "a need above," even for the first letters, with respect to the engendering of "names" [משמות, uncertain].[TN010053] Likewise, as stated above, through coupling below a coupling also occurs above, in the first attributes.

"The renter is he, hiring workers and standing over them": that is, the upper Mother. For the six extremities were all within the womb of Binah, called Mother, and she continually stands over them to bestow abundance below, as is known to the sages of truth; this is sufficient. For the world is judged through בח"ד—lovingkindness, judgment, and mercy, which are right, left, and middle. [TN010054] The root of Hesed is in Hokhmah, the root of Gevurah in Binah, and the root of mercy in Keter. But the first three do not act, for there it is potential; through Binah it is brought from potentiality to actuality. She hires workers. Through her also issue Netzah and Hod, which draw nourishment from her, as stated in the Zohar. This is the form of he: three lines. The final he likewise consists of three lines drawing nourishment from Binah. This is what the Sages said: "On three things the world stands"—this is Binah; "On three things the world endures"—this is Malkhut, which endures upon Yesod. This is "from the world to the world": Binah and Malkhut. "And the manner ... that these ... asked" [ואופן שאלו כני שאלם, unclear] is in Tiqqunei Zohar Hadash.[TN010055]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Afterward comes, "You who invoke the LORD, take no rest," alluding to the unpaid custodian, who is vav. That is, afterward the "necessity" prays [הכרח', uncertain], "Take no rest."[TN010056] Just as the coupling below is not constant, so the worlds do not guard continually. One must therefore pray that it be constant and not cease bestowing abundance. Thus it says, "He guards his female counterpart from the blemish of those who cast off the yoke," etc., in the sense of being free from commandments. [TN010057] This is why he is called the custodian: Tiferet guards the crown when they "draw ...," performing a coupling [כשהן משמשכו, uncertain]. [TN010058] This is, apart from the stated matter [בזולת הנמר', uncertain], "The sun has never seen the moon's blemish." It alludes to what we have said, namely Tiferet and Malkhut.

"The borrower is he, poor and needy": that is, now in our exile she is called poor, as Galante says, "How does she sit alone"—"How does he sit alone"; see there. "Like David, king of Israel, who asks a portion from his master": David's attribute was from Malkhut, the fourth leg. "To distribute to the whole multitude of Israel": to bestow an abundance of blessing upon them. Therefore all Israel came to David and said, "Our lord the king, your people Israel need sustenance," hinting that he ought to give them through his attribute. He answered, "Go and sustain yourselves from one another": through your good deeds, abundance descends below. Therefore it is said, "And give yourselves no rest" [ואל תתני דמי לכם], because he depends on the will of others: through the power of good deeds there will be abundance. This is sufficient.[TN010059]

"The tanna carefully guarded himself against uttering being for damages," etc. That is, for this reason he did not say hen; hen expresses being. "Their initial letters are ShBMaH," etc. "This is a small city, last," etc.: ten cities, beginning with Ataroth and Dibon, together with "the land which [the LORD] struck," which is also counted as one city, correspond to the ten attributes in holiness. "God has made the one corresponding to the other": just as there are ten attributes in holiness, there are these ten cities on the Other Side. For the land of Sihon and Og, "and ... they are held back ... God forbid ..." [ומתעכבן כן ח"ו לה"ל?, damaged]—there they subdued the qelippah.[TN010060] Although it is written that Ataroth is reckoned as the sefirah Tiferet, it is also, from the aspect of ascent, the seventh. That is, when it ascends to couple with Ze'ir Anpin, who is Tiferet, its coupling to receive abundance likewise makes it seventh, for Tiferet is sixth and it is seventh. Dibon corresponds to them in impurity. Therefore “their names being changed” is said of them, when they conquered the Canaanites for holiness; understand.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

From this comes what the Gemara says: A person must complete his portions with the community, twice the Scripture and once the translation, even “Ataroth and Dibon,” etc. I find a difficulty: why say this particular example? Are there not many words and expressions that have no translation? According to this premise, however, it is resolved: the translation comes to bring the qelippot of nogah into holiness, as the Ari, of blessed memory, says, “in chapter ...” [בפי' פ"ג ס"ו, uncertain].[TN010061] He says that even these, which are in impurity, must also be brought into holiness through the Name; thus far the intended point. Just as in holiness there are four legs of the chariot, “their names ... for Uriel and Nuriel ... east ...” [שמי' את' מן כי אורי"אל ונורי"אל מזור"ח היא, damaged], so in impurity there are four legs, called ShBMaH, the initials of shor, bor, mav'eh, hav'er.[TN010062] Concerning this ר"ל ב"ק said: “Whoever makes a vow is as though he built a high place, and whoever fulfills it is as though he offered a sacrifice upon it.” That is, whoever makes a vow is as though he built, on the Other Side, three of its legs, namely BMH, the initials of the aforementioned ... [של"ה?, uncertain]. Whoever fulfills it is as though he also offered the ox, which had been missing; now he offers it, and it is called ShBMaH. Thus far his words.[TN010063] Just as in holiness Malkhut comprises all of them, so Sibmah is the last city, corresponding in holiness to holy Jerusalem: “And the name of the city from that day: ‘The LORD is there.’”

“Those whose atonement is incomplete have neither complete being nor complete purity”: therefore hen is not said concerning them. “Here,” concerning the three groups on the day of judgment, hen is not taught because a group of wicked people is among them; for that reason hen is not taught. “A portion of each iniquity”: that is, “it becomes ... again from that ... angry portion beneath the Throne of Glory” [שנעשה מורך שוב מאותו חלק כועס תחת כסא הכבוד, damaged], and the element of deliberate sin in it He casts through repentance into the depths of the sea.[TN010064] The matter is that the kabbalists say: when a dog bites a person, forms like little dogs are found in the person's “urine?” [בשתן?], while the dog takes a piece of human flesh from that person. Such is the matter in impurity: when a person commits a transgression, he gives a portion to impurity, and impurity receives that person's portion of holiness. If he repents, he takes back his portion of holiness from impurity, which took it when he sinned; the portion of impurity which he took descends to the great deep, “...” [לכ"א?, uncertain].[TN010065] The deliberate element he casts through repentance into the depths of the sea. This is the intention of the saying, “If he performs one commandment, he acquires one advocate.” Through this the Gemara is well resolved. This is why he says, “The place where they are hidden proves,” etc., “through repentance that reaches the Throne of Glory”: this is his own portion, for originally the soul was beneath the Throne of Glory. Consequently, when a person sins, impurity benefits and draws some nourishment from holiness. He therefore properly said, “It proves.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“They entered in reverse order”: see Zohar, Bereshit, where it is explained that the letters came before Him, blessed be He, in the order TShRQ. Therefore the name TShRY, in which the world was created, corresponds to TShRY as an expression of TShRQ. When the letters are reversed, they indicate judgment, as is likewise said in the verse, “Declare the letters backward, and we shall know that you are gods”: that is, as we have said, when the letters are reversed, they indicate judgment; Isaiah 41.[TN010066] For He wished to create with the attribute of judgment?, saw that it would not endure, and joined to it the attribute of mercy: the letters AB in their proper order?, together with yod from His Name. They became bereshit, in which are the letters BRA RShT [ברא רש"ת].[TN010067] In fact, one must say it in the opposite order: AB in their proper order and TShR not in their proper order, not as they are written in the word bereshit. Yet it is written, “It changes like sealing clay,” for in the form of a seal the letters are naturally reversed, while on the impression they are the reverse of that.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Betzalel knew this mystery: how to combine the letters. “And ...” [כוכ”ב, uncertain], the Holy One, blessed be He, showed Moses the pattern of the tabernacle reversed, as it is in a seal, so that he should make the pattern in reverse. Moses understood only that he should make it as He had shown him; Betzalel revealed this mystery to him, and Moses “...” [וכ”ל, unclear].[TN010068] This is also the disagreement between Beit Shammai and Beit Hillel: one says heaven was created first, and the other says earth was created first. See there in the Gemara, and understand. Just as Tishri indicates judgment through reversed letters, so Nisan indicates mercy, because it is called the month of aviv: AB in their proper order, which indicates mercy.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 3

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Without any of the prefixes attached to the infinitive”: the word harea is without an added verbal element; it should have said mi-le-harea, “from doing evil,” or something similar. “In ‘Do good’”: this excludes the matters mentioned above, which are only “Turn away from evil,” as stated. Through “Do good” a person's iniquities become like merits, and they are immediately inscribed for life.

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 4 (ד)

Yad Yehudah: כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “We return to our discussion”: to the disagreement between Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina mentioned in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “He raises it”: that is, Rashi's explanation of Rabbi Yose bar Hanina's words, “He lifts up”—He raises the scale-pan of iniquities—means “He bears.” The blessed LORD raises the iniquity and bears it, for the unqualified verb nasa in Scripture means to bear.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “As it is written, ‘I have made’” (Isaiah 46): the blessed LORD says of the iniquity, “I have made,” because I created the evil

Rema of Fano

We return to our discussion. “He raises” means that He bears, as it is written, “I have made, and I will bear”; likewise, “And that which I have caused to be evil,” and the other verses expounded together with it in the chapter He-Halil (Sukkah 52b).

In either of these two ways, these amoraim understand, each according to his own opinion, that there is no favoritism. For the measure of goodness exceeds the measure of punishment. How, then, will this be evident, since the scale-pans are balanced, except in one of these forms explained by the Rabbis? The tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael, however, still finds cause for concern in them. Therefore he says that He merely passes it over—that is, moves it away from before Him so that it will not accuse until the balance proves inclination; therefore “I will bear”—I will bear the iniquity as well.

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Likewise,” etc. As stated in the chapter He-Halil: Rabbi Yonatan expounded: Were it not for these three verses, the feet of Israel's enemies would have collapsed. One is “And that which I have caused to be evil”; another, “For behold, like clay in the potter's hand”; and the other, “I will remove the heart of stone from your flesh.” Rav Pappa says: From this verse, “I will put My spirit within you.” These verses indicate that He gave Israel the evil inclination.[TN010070]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “Either of these two ways”: lifting or pressing down.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “These amoraim”: Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “There is no favoritism”: in the blessed LORD's removing the iniquity altogether by pressing it down or bearing it, and thereby reducing the iniquities. Why is there no favoritism in this?

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) For it is a great principle that the measure of goodness exceeds the measure of punishment. How will this principle be evident in the cases where the scale-pans are balanced and the blessed LORD tips them toward merit through these ways? This is the measure of inclining toward lovingkindness. Rather, it is certainly included in the principle that the measure of goodness exceeds punishment that the scale should tip toward merit in such a way that the iniquity is annulled altogether through one of the two ways mentioned. [TN010071]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “The tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael”: who disagrees with Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, because he holds that even in the two ways decisive. Such is the proper measure, in which there is no favoritism. From this Rava learned that it is not erased. If we read, “And so the school of Rabbi Ishmael taught,” so that it comes to support Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, then “lifting” and “passing over” mean the same thing. But according to the first and principal reading, there are three differing opinions in the matter. Rashi explained that of the first iniquities coming to the scale-pan He passes over only the first. If without it the merits outweigh the iniquities, the person is righteous; but if the judgment is still balanced, then the iniquity, which has not been erased, tips the scale toward guilt. An explanation of his explanation: he carefully said, “of those coming to the scale-pan,” to exclude the first and second, which never enter the reckoning at all, as taught in the last chapter of Yoma (86b).

Rema of Fano - continued

Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah said: If a person commits a transgression a first and a second time, he is forgiven; the third time, he is not forgiven, as it is said, “Behold, all these God performs, twice, three times, with a man” (Job 33:29). This was taught of an individual, as stated there. These words apply specifically to Israel, after Torah was given and the rule was newly established; to different transgressions; and to transgressions containing no trace of foreign worship, for whoever acknowledges it is like one who denies the entire Torah. But of one who repeats his folly, as we shall explain below in chapter 14 of Part III, this cannot be said. This also removes a great perplexity mentioned there is still cause for concern, and it appears like favoritism.

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Until the balance proves decisive”: so that the pan tips toward the merits.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “Such is the measure”: that is, the school of Rabbi Ishmael's concluding words, “Such is the measure,” mean: this is the proper measure, in which there is no favoritism at all, because the measure of abundant lovingkindness causes only the temporary passing over of the iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “If we read,” etc. According to this reading, passing over and lifting are one and the same. Rabbi Yose bar Hanina too holds that the iniquity remains and is lifted only temporarily; he differs from Rabbi Eleazar on two points.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “But according to,” etc. The principal reading is the first one, according to which there are three differing opinions.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “Rashi explained,” etc. The author now proceeds to explain the words of the school of Rabbi Ishmael. These are Rashi's words there: “He passes over the first one, then the first one”—the first iniquity among those equal in weight which come to the pan, He passes over and drops away. If they were half and half, once one of the iniquities is subtracted the merits will tip the scale for him. “Such is the measure; the iniquity itself is not erased”: it is laid to concerning the judgment of our first father, who was held accountable for a first iniquity, according to what is commonly known of his case. In chapter 22 of Part II we shall mention him again, so that the judgment of Heaven may be vindicated and the glory of the LORD revealed.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

one side, so that if there is a majority of iniquities it is with them. This iniquity is counted with them, so as to number him among the wholly wicked. Thus far his words.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “To exclude the first and second”: see the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “As stated there”: It was taught, “The third time he is forgiven; the fourth time he is not forgiven.” One statement concerns an individual and the other the community. This is the reading in Rif and Rambam, as opposed to Ra'avad's reading and our reading, in which individual and community are reversed.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “These words apply,” etc. Incidentally, in mentioning Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah's statement from Yoma, the author explains it and says that there are three conditions in the matter.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “After the giving of Torah”: this rule was newly established then.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “To different transgressions”: the two transgressions committed were of two different kinds. This is not so when someone commits the same transgression twice, for the second is not forgiven, “although” [אע”פ] it has become to him like something permitted, as the Sages said.[TN010072]

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “Like one who denies the entire Torah”: his judgment is not that of someone who has committed a single transgression.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “And behold,” etc.: there is now no “sin” [חטא, uncertain] in the question why Adam the first man was held accountable for the first iniquity. It is because this was before the giving of Torah, and also—[TN010073]

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “According to what is commonly known”: what they said of him in chapter 4 of Sanhedrin, that he was a heretic or a denier of the fundamental principle, which likewise pertains to idolatry. See Part III, chapter 22.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“This is effective here to give power” [מהני הכא למיהב כח]: that is, because of some degree of favoritism. [TN010074] “Rashi explained that of the iniquities,” etc.: this is a separate matter. “To exclude the first and second”: these are not put into the scale-pan and do not enter the reckoning; only from the third iniquity does He begin putting them into the scale-pan. This excludes the earlier ones, which did not enter the scale-pan at all. “To different transgressions”: that is, he committed each one only once. “This removes a perplexity,” etc.: Adam the first man lived before the giving of Torah, so the first condition did not apply. His act also involved a trace of idolatry, so the second condition did not apply. He also committed a transgression and repeated his folly, so the third condition did not apply, as the author says below in chapter 22 of Part II, that he committed the sin twice. Therefore he is not called someone held accountable for one iniquity.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 4

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 5 (ה)

Yad Yehudah: טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “The Rabbi”: Alfasi, of blessed memory.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) Rif holds that the tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael in Rosh Hashanah, who says, “He passes over the first one, then the first one,” and Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah in Yoma, who says, “The first and second times he is forgiven,” say the same thing. The tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael explains Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah: “He is forgiven” does not mean that he is forgiven altogether. Rather, “he is forgiven” means that the sins are passed over without being erased, as Rava says, “The iniquity itself is not erased.” See below, chapter 7.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Concerning the community” [ולגבי צבור]: since Rif holds that the tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael refers to Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah, he also supports his statement with the same verse cited by Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah: “Behold, all these,” etc.[TN010080]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) What Rif says in the singular, “... in the teaching?” [כפל בתנא?], and likewise “... in the teaching” [האו בתנא], etc., does not intend specifically

Rema of Fano

The Rabbi, however, explained “He passes over the first one, then the first one” in another way. These are his words: If a person upright and blameless in his ways stumbles into a sin, and no sin has ever before come to his hand, the Holy One, blessed be He, does not write that sin against him, but passes it over. Such is the measure of the Holy One, blessed be He: not to hold him guilty at the outset, as it is written, “Behold, all these God performs, twice, three times, with a man.” Thus far his words. He holds that the teaching of the school of Rabbi Ishmael belongs with Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah's statement, teaching us that the “forgiveness” mentioned there means passing them over without erasing them. If there is a majority of iniquities apart from these, these too are counted together with them, so that he is punished for them. Therefore the Rabbi supported his statement with the verse “Behold, all these God performs.” His words “stumbles into a sin,” “that sin,” etc., do not mean specifically one sin, but teach us that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not hold him guilty at the outset. The same applies to the second time, for the verse comes to teach this. According to this, the repeated expression “the first one, then the first one” also precisely implies two.

The Rabbi further conveyed to us another explanation by a Gaon, who says: Rabbi Ishmael's teaching applies to a God-fearing person who is steadfast in one sin, since the second time too he is forgiven. [TN010081] Rather, the main intention is to teach us the measure: the Holy One, blessed be He, does not simply waive; He passes over and forgives. Rif did not mean to exclude “these” [מהני], but “not because of this” [שלא משום זה] he brought the verse “Behold, all these.”[TN010082]

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “Also precisely”: the repeated wording “the first one, then the first one” in the teaching of the school of Rabbi Ishmael implies two, adding the second occasion to the first.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Etc.” He concludes in these words: “He forgives it, and the person is in the category of the righteous. The iniquity itself is not erased, but remains suspended until the hour of his death. At that hour the reckoning is made: if his merits exceed those iniquities, his iniquities have been passed over one by one and are not reckoned against him; it is as though he had not done them. But if those iniquities prevail and he is found wicked, all are joined together and weighed one against the other. If most are commandments, each and every one is held accountable for an iniquity ...” [רובן מצות הרי כל אחד ואחד נתפס על עון, uncertain].[TN010083] “And the teaching passes over ... he took the Gaon's wording” [ומתניי מעברת שקיל לשון הגאון], in a place where he should have expounded at length to explain Rava's words.[TN010084]

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “Shortly”: chapter 7.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Who thought to explain,” etc. See his view in the commentary on Rif: this is the difference between Rif's interpretation and the Gaon's. According to Rif, one must necessarily explain “if there is a majority of iniquities,” etc., as apart from those earlier ones. It cannot mean together with those earlier ones, for then “what is there ... since those earlier ones ...” [מאי איכא כיון בהני דקמאי נתליך בתרלי דתמי״ע?, damaged].[TN010085] If there is a majority of merits with these, there is also ... but previously there was a majority of iniquities; you said that they are held accountable. There is no majority of iniquities except together with the earlier ones; even beforehand ... [the transmitted argument is broken here].[TN010086] This is not so according to the Gaon: “if there is a majority of iniquities” performing the LORD's commandments and observes the weighty ones, but at times sins in lesser matters. The Holy One's measure with him is to pass over the first one, then the first one, etc. Shortly we shall dispute with Ran, who thought to explain the Gaon's words as meaning that if there is a majority of iniquities even including the earlier ones, those too are counted. But the Gaon does not conceive it this way. There are fine points concerning the Gemara's discussion in Mizrahi's responsa according to Ran's approach; they do not bear on our intended argument, for there he did not delve deeply into the exposition, but followed only the questioner's view and observations. We have also seen, in Alashkar's responsa and in those of many others, discussions of the views of the Gaon, the Rabbi, and Ran that are insufficient and not fully well ordered. We have omitted them for the sake of brevity.

Rema of Fano - continued

In chapter 3 of the Laws of Repentance, Rambam straightforwardly adopted the Rabbi's approach at the beginning of the reckoning: to suspend the first and second iniquities until it becomes clear whether there is a majority apart from them. He then explained “He passes over the first one, then the first one” as forgiveness of the iniquities after the scales have been found equal, in some measure following the Gaon's approach, very far from Ran's. Rosh left his words undetermined. He first began according to Rashi's view, which explains passing over only one sin. He did not state this in Rashi's name, so as not to commit means together with the earlier ones, which the Holy One, blessed be He, passed over until the hour of death; “and these ...” [והא מתסרי?, uncertain]. See there.[TN010087]

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “But he,” the Gaon, “does not conceive it this way,” as will be explained below in chapter 8. According to the Gaon, in our discussion we have no concern at all with the first iniquities; it does not speak of them. They are completely forgiven and do not enter the scale-pan at all, as in Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah's teaching in Yoma, and as the author also inferred precisely from Rashi's words in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Rambam, in chapter 3 of the Laws of Repentance”: these are his words there: When a person's iniquities are weighed against his merits, the first iniquity he committed is not counted against him, nor the second, but only from the third onward. If his iniquities from the third onward are found to exceed his merits, those two iniquities are joined to them, and he is judged for them all. If his merits are found equal to his iniquities from the third onward, all his iniquities are passed over one by one. For the third is reckoned as the first, since the first two have already been forgiven; likewise the fourth is now the first, since the third has already been forgiven; and so on to the end. Thus far his himself to Rashi's view that it is specifically the first of those coming to the scale-pan, as we explained. He then copied the words of the Rabbi and the Gaon without deciding between them.

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

words. The beginning of his view is precisely Rif's statement. What he says at the end, “If his merits are found equal to his iniquities, all his iniquities are passed over,” follows the Gaon's explanation of “He passes over the first one, then the first one.” See further below, chapter 7.

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “After the scales have been found equal”: that is, after the scale-pans are found equal.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “My elder” [זקני, uncertain]: namely, in explaining it as forgiveness of the iniquities one by one, but not in every respect. For the Gaon, of blessed memory, applies it to a God-fearing person and to the beginning of the reckoning, not after the reckoning has been found balanced.[TN010088]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “Ran's”: for Ran explains the Gaon's words about a majority of iniquities as including the earlier ones, while Rambam explains it as apart from them.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “Rosh left his words undetermined”: these are his words there: The school of Rabbi Ishmael likewise comes to explain the measure of abundant lovingkindness, saying that He neither presses down nor lifts up. Rather, the first iniquity that a person commits, the Holy One, blessed be He, passes over and does not place in the pan of transgressions. If he is balanced, the merits tip the scale, “since for that iniquity they stand” [כיון שלאותו עון עומדים, uncertain].[TN010089] If the pan is balanced without that iniquity, the Holy One, blessed be He, restores it to the iniquities, and the iniquities tip the scale. This is what David said, “Add iniquity to their iniquity.” Rav Alfasi wrote, etc.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Only one sin”: according to Rif, one can say that He passes over the first two iniquities; according to the Gaon, that He passes over all the iniquities one by one.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “He did not state it ... Rashi,” etc. [ולא השמיע אל רש״י אמרה, damaged].[TN010090] He, of blessed memory, did not wish to commit himself to Rashi's view. For from Rashi's words “those coming to the scale-pan,” he holds that the first iniquities were completely forgiven and that the discussion does not concern them, as mentioned in the preceding chapter. Therefore Rosh did not write the statement in Rashi's name, so that he could explain “the first iniquity” as also applying to the earliest iniquities.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The Rabbi, however, explained ‘He passes over the first one, then the first one’ in another way”: this is Rabbi Alfasi. In his explanation of “He passes over the first one, then the first one,” he means that this person has never committed that sin in all his life. The Holy One, blessed be He, does not write that sin down, but passes it over. “The teaching of the school of Rabbi Ishmael belongs with Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah”: that is, Rabbi Ishmael, who says, “He passes over the first one, then the first one,” has the same meaning as Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah—“in Rabbi Yose” [בר׳ יוסי]—although the first sins are not written down.[TN010091] According to Rashi's explanation, however, Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah's statement does not belong here. For Rabbi Yose says, “The first and second times he is forgiven; the third time he is not forgiven,” whereas the school of Rabbi Ishmael teaches that even the third is forgiven: namely, the first that comes to the scale-pan, which is the third. The third itself is passed over, as stated above in chapter 4.

This differs from Alfasi's explanation of “He passes over the first,” which refers to Rabbi Ishmael: even the first iniquity he committed is passed over to one side, so that if there is a majority of iniquities apart from them, it is counted together with them. Rabbi Yose bar Yehudah taught above in chapter 4, “If a person commits a transgression,” etc., “he is forgiven”; Rabbi Ishmael explains this “he is forgiven,” etc., to mean that the first two sins are passed over to one side, as it is said, “Behold, all these He performs,” etc. Therefore he says “the first” twice.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“But he does not conceive it this way”: the Gaon does not hold what Ran explains as the Gaon's words. See there in Ramban's words concerning forgiveness of iniquities, etc., according to our explanation of the Gaon's words, “He passes over the first one, then the first one,” “in one way” [ע”ד

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 5

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

אחת], as above and below in chapters 25 and 28, etc. [TN010092] “Rosh explained only one sin”: unlike Rabbi Alfasi's explanation, according to which He passes the first two iniquities to one side, but like Rashi, who explains that He passes over only one. “He did not state it in his name”: that is, in the name of Rashi, of blessed memory; see there.

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 6 (ו)

Yad Yehudah: טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “We come to it”: to this teaching.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “For Rashi”: who explains “He passes over the first one, then the first one” as only one iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “From Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina”: who speak of all the iniquities coming to the scale-pan and of the whole pan altogether, which He lifts or presses down, as Rashi explained there.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “We can infer”: that the school of Rabbi Ishmael too says “He passes over the first one, then the first one” concerning all the iniquities, not one of them.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) We cannot accept explaining the statements of Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina too as

Rema of Fano

These, then, are the outlines of the authors' approaches to this teaching. After considering their foundations, we find an objection against them all except the Gaon's statement, against which there is no objection. We therefore come to clarify it properly and establish it in full. One difficulty for Rashi is that, from Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, we can infer concerning the school of Rabbi Ishmael that this measure applies to all the iniquities coming to the scale-pan, not to only one of them. We cannot accept an explanation of “lifting” as snatching away a single iniquity, as the author of the Arukh explains, nor “passing over” as passing over one transgression, for concerning pressing down it is explicitly written, “He will subdue our iniquities.” Rather, what is “lifting iniquity”? As in the expression, “Lift away all iniquity.” Likewise, “passing over transgression” means passing over the first one, then the first one, not only one.

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

concerning one iniquity, which He lifts or presses down until the merits tip the scale, as the Arukh explains under the entry kovesh. Although the plain wording of the verse seems to imply this, since “lifting iniquity” is written in the singular rather than “iniquities,” and likewise “passing over transgression” rather than “transgressions,” there is nevertheless a difficulty: concerning pressing down, the plural is explicitly written, “He will subdue our iniquities.” Rabbi Eleazar derives “pressing down” in the Gemara from this verse; one must explain “lifting” according to him as “lifting iniquity ... as one” [כנושא עון באחד, uncertain].[TN010095]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Rather, what”: one must say that “iniquity” here names a class,

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

comprising many iniquities, as in “Lift away all iniquity.” This does not mean one iniquity, but the whole of iniquity. Likewise, according to Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, “passing over transgression” comprises many transgressions. Consequently, the unqualified teaching of the school of Rabbi Ishmael too concerns all the iniquities.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “And the merits tip the scale”: concerning this Rabbi Eleazar says there, “To You, LORD, belongs lovingkindness,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Which accords with Rashi and the author of the Arukh”: that is, with the author of the Arukh, who explains Rabbi Yose bar Hanina as referring to one iniquity; consequently it accords with Rashi, who likewise explains one iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “We shall not ... our discussion” [לא נחין?לשמעתינו, uncertain]. That is, “...” [דלת”ה לא נחתי הוי, damaged], the beginning of our discussion in our Talmud is not according to the Jerusalem Talmud's approach, so that we should labor to explain what was intended in Rabbi Yose bar Hanina's words. Rather, each states a different matter independently.[TN010096]

Rema of Fano - continued

Although in the Jerusalem Talmud, Peah, chapter 1, Rabbi Yose bar Hanina says, “It is not written here ‘lifting iniquities,’ but ‘lifting iniquity’: the Holy One, blessed be He, snatches away one document of transgressions, and the merits tip the scale”—which accords with Rashi and the author of the Arukh —we shall not accept that our discussion follows that approach. For there the scholars of the West are not commenting on Beit Hillel's statement; rather, Rabbi Yose bar Hanina is stating his own reasoning. Know this, for Rabbi Eleazar too does not say there “He presses down,” as he says here. Instead, Rabbi Eleazar said: “‘To You, LORD, belongs lovingkindness, for You repay a person according to his deed’—and if he has none, You give him from Your own.” This is Rabbi Eleazar's opinion, for Rabbi Eleazar said: “‘Abundant in lovingkindness’—He inclines toward lovingkindness.” Thus far. This explicitly implies that Rabbi Eleazar alone addresses “abundant in lovingkindness,” according to his own view, rather than as an interpreter of Beit Hillel's words. Rabbi Yose bar Hanina makes a separate statement concerning the verse “lifting iniquity.”

Indeed, this verse can mean either one thing or the other: one iniquity, according to the approach of the Jerusalem Talmud, or every iniquity, according to his approach here. Since concerning pressing down it is explicitly written, “He will subdue our iniquities,” the clear interpretation of our Gemara is as we have said. All the more so if the

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “For there”: in the Jerusalem Talmud, Rabbi Eleazar and Rabbi Yose bar Hanina are not speaking according to Beit Hillel, who say, “‘Abundant in lovingkindness’—He inclines toward lovingkindness,” to explain how He does it, as in our Talmud.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “He is stating his own reasoning”: in explaining “lifting iniquity,” not according to Beit Hillel.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “Know this”: that he states his own reasoning. If it were according to Beit Hillel, a difficulty would arise concerning Rabbi Eleazar, who says there in response to Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, “To You, LORD, belongs lovingkindness,” etc. Why does he say a different thing “in our Talmud” [בתלמוד שלנו], rather than “He presses down,” as in our Gemara? [TN010097] Rather, infer from this that he is explaining his own view of the verse “abundant in lovingkindness.” Therefore nothing can be inferred from their statements there in the Gemara, which they make according to their own reasoning, to explain their statements in our Gemara according to Beit Hillel.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “Indeed, this verse”: “lifting iniquity” can bear either of the two interpretations: one iniquity, in its plain sense and according to the Jerusalem Talmud, or every iniquity as a class, according to our Gemara.

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “All the more so”: this is certainly its meaning if we say that the school of Rabbi Ishmael explains “lifting”—according to the reading “And so the school of Rabbi Ishmael taught,” as above in chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) For the plain sense of the verse too implies many.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“That this measure applies,” etc.: this measure is that of abundant lovingkindness, referring to Beit Hillel's preceding statement, “‘Abundant in lovingkindness’—He inclines toward lovingkindness.” Rabbi Eleazar, Rabbi Yose bar Hanina, and Rabbi Ishmael disagree about it above in chapter 3, under the words “In the Gemara it is stated concerning it.” “Not to only one,” as Rashi explains, mentioned above. “We cannot accept an explanation”: that is, “One cannot explain.” From Rabbi Yose bar Hanina one cannot by itself infer that he speaks of many iniquities, since he brings proof from “lifting iniquity,” one. Nor can one explain “passing over transgression” as one transgression. The expression “nor passing over,” etc., means “nor”—that is, it cannot be explained thus. For from Rabbi Eleazar we infer that Rabbi school of Rabbi Ishmael is explaining what “lifting” means—passing over—for “the first one, then the first one” implies many.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 6

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

There it must be explained this way, because Rabbi Eleazar brings proof from “He will subdue our iniquities,” which is plural,

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yose too speaks of iniquities. Rabbi Eleazar speaks in the plural, since he cites the verse “He will subdue our iniquities,” a plural expression. Therefore Rabbi Yose bar Hanina likewise speaks of many iniquities and transgressions. When he says “iniquity” in the singular, it means—as in? [ר״ל/מ״ל?] —“Lift away all iniquity,” which concerns many iniquities; “iniquity” is the source-term for every iniquity.[TN010098] Likewise, Rabbi Ishmael's words, “He passes over,” etc., concern many iniquities, as below.

“We shall not accept that our discussion”: that is, our Babylonian Talmud follows that approach of the Jerusalem Talmud. For there, in the Jerusalem Talmud, he is not addressing Beit Hillel's statement, “And abundant in lovingkindness,” etc., as above. Rather, Rabbi Yose bar Hanina gives his own reasoning, etc. For Rabbi Eleazar says here, according to Beit Hillel, “He presses down,” whereas there he says something different: if a person has none, the Holy One, blessed be He, gives him. “And all the more so, if the tanna is explaining,” etc.: as above in chapter 4, if we read, “And so the school of Rabbi Ishmael taught,” which comes in support of Rabbi Yose, etc.; see there.

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 7 (ז)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “According to the Master”: Alfasi and his interpretation, which explains the teaching of the school of R. Yishmael as concerning the first and second sins, in accordance with R. Yose son of Yehudah in Yoma.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “The Sages”: R. Elazar, R. Yose son of Ḥanina, and the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Yet they”: the House of Hillel, who spoke only of those in the middle category, as is explicit in the Gemara. Consequently, these Sages too are discussing those in the middle category.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “Of R. Yose son of Yehudah”: in Yoma.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “His wording demonstrates”: that is, a further difficulty is the attempt to establish the teaching here from that of R. Yose son of Yehudah, who holds that those sins are forgiven entirely. According to Rif, however, one may say that they are not forgiven but merely passed over temporarily.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “With Rashi”: that is, as is implied by Rashi's wording, “those that come

Rema of Fano

Even against the Master's position and his interpretation, an objection can be raised: the Sages here disagree only over the explanation of “abundant in kindness,” as invoked by the House of Hillel. Yet the latter spoke only of those in the middle category, whereas the statement of R. Yose son of Yehudah applies to every person. His wording demonstrates that, concerning the first and second sins, no attention whatsoever is paid to the scale: those sins are forgiven entirely. This too is clearly implied by the Gaon's position: he left unspecified, without explanation, what becomes of the first and second sins mentioned by R. Yose son of Yehudah. We must presumably say that on this point he agrees with Rashi—that they do not enter the reckoning—as the plain sense of that teaching indicates. For otherwise, what special treatment do they receive?

Nor can one say, as Ran supposed when explaining the Gaon's words, that he made no distinction between the first and second sins and all other sins, as though he held that this teaching of the school of R. Yishmael and the position of the House of Hillel disagree with R. Yose son of Yehudah. If that were so, the Gemara would not have been silent about it. Since nowhere in any of these passages does it explain the matter as a disagreement, infer that one master said one thing and the other said another, and they do not disagree. Furthermore, onto the scale,” cited above in chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “For otherwise”: if instead you wish to say that the Gaon too holds that those sins are passed over but not forgiven, the difficulty is: what special treatment do those initial sins receive? After all, He passes over all the sins.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “Nor can one say”: that this is indeed the case, that they receive no special treatment, but all are treated alike, and the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael disagrees with R. Yose son of Yehudah in Yoma. As Ran expressly wrote concerning the Gaon's interpretation, of blessed memory: “No leniency concerning the initial sins has been mentioned here at all.” See there, and above, chapter 5. For if that were so, the difficulty would be that the Gemara remained entirely silent, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “Furthermore, an objection applies to him”: to Ran—the objection we raised above against Rif. One would have to say that the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael refers to R. Yose son of Yehudah. Yet R. Yose son of Yehudah discusses every person, whereas the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael speaks only of those in the middle category.

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “Nor is the mind”: Rambam's position too presents a difficulty, for it awards the same deed to two parties. See above, chapter 5, where I transcribed his words.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “At first”: in his statement: “When a person's sins are weighed against his merits, the first sin he committed and the second are not counted against him, but only those from the third onward. If his sins from the third onward are found to exceed his merits, those two sins are added, and he is judged for all of them.” It is clear that he explained “passing over the first, then the first,” in the teaching of the school of R.

Rema of Fano - continued

the objection we raised against the Master applies to him too: our entire discussion concerns those in the middle category, whereas there the discussion concerns every person.

Nor is the mind satisfied by Rambam's position, which awards the same deed to two parties. At first he explains “passing over the first, then the first” in the Master's manner, and takes Rava's statement to refer to it. Afterward he inclines toward the Gaon's position and explains “passing over the first, then the first” as the forgiveness of all the sins, one by one, after the reckoning has been found satisfactory. Rava's statement then has no application to it at all. It is wholly impossible to explain a single expression in different ways that belong to different times: one before the reckoning and one after it. Moreover, when there is no preponderance of sins, what prevents the One abundant in kindness from removing them all from before Him at once?

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yishmael, in the manner in which Rif explained it.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “And takes [Rava's statement] to refer to it”: although we could say that his statement that the first and second sins are not counted derives solely from R. Yose son of Yehudah's statement and not from the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael, nevertheless he writes that if the sins are more numerous, those two sins are added. These are Rava's words: “The sin itself is not erased; if there is a preponderance of sins, it is counted with them.” Rava refers to the teaching of the school of R. Yishmael. It is therefore evident that he, of blessed memory, likewise explains that teaching as concerning the first and second sins.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “Afterward”: when he wrote, “If his merits are found to balance his sins from the third sin onward, all his sins are passed over, the first, then the first,” and so forth, he inclined entirely toward the Gaon's position. The Gaon discusses the situation before the reckoning of sins and merits is made, whereas he, of blessed memory, places it after the reckoning of sins and merits has been found exactly equal. Nevertheless, he inclined toward the Gaon's position in explaining “passing over the first, then the first” as referring to all the sins.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “Rava's statement then has no application”: one cannot say concerning this, “If there is a preponderance of sins, they are counted with them,” since what has already been done is done, and there is no further judgment or reckoning.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Thus, from Rava's statement we learn that one must [the transmitted wording is difficult] explain “passing over the first, then the first” in this second manner.[TN020001]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “It is wholly impossible”: nor can one force an explanation and say that the expression “passing over the first, then the first” embraces both interpretations mentioned above, that Rava makes his statement according to the first interpretation, and that [Rambam] concludes with the second interpretation. If so, the difficulty would be that one must explain a single statement in two ways at once, without anything compelling this. Under the first interpretation, “passing over the first, then the first” concerns the sins before they enter the reckoning with the merits; under the second, it means that He passes over the sins after they have been reckoned with the merits.

Yad Yehudah - טו - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “Moreover”: a further difficulty under the second interpretation is this: if the Holy One, blessed be He, wishes to forgive the sins when the scales balance, through the attribute “abundant in kindness,” and so forth, why prolong the matter by passing over them individually, one after another? What prevents Him, blessed be He, from passing over them at once through this attribute?

These objections to Rambam are certainly difficult, and Raavad did not notice them; his remarks concern another matter. See there, and below, chapter 9. See also what Kesef Mishneh wrote there on the words of Rambam, of blessed memory.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The Sages here disagree”: that is, R. Elazar, R. Yose son of Ḥanina, and R. Yishmael, who disagree over the words of the House of Hillel, as above in chapter 3.

“Applies to every person”: he said, “If one committed a transgression once,” and so forth, as above in chapter 4. This implies every person, not only those in the middle category. According to Rav Alfasi, R. Yishmael would explain R. Yose son of Yehudah's words “they forgive,” as above. Here, however, his wording demonstrates that the first two sins are forgiven entirely and never come onto the scale at all. These are R. Yose son of Yehudah's words, and this is the meaning of “No attention is paid to the scale,” and so forth. According to Alfasi, they are not forgiven at all, even the first two; they are merely moved to one side.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 7

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“This too is implied by the Gaon's words”: when he says, “And at times he sins in minor matters,” and so forth, he says nothing about the first two sins. This implies that he holds that they are forgiven entirely, in accordance with R. Yose son of Yehudah.

“Nor can one say”: that R. Yishmael disagrees with R. Yose son of Yehudah, who holds that the first two are forgiven entirely, whereas R. Yishmael holds that they are passed over but not forgiven. If so, the Gemara could hardly have failed, in at least one place, to say that they disagree, and so forth. [TN020002]

“Furthermore, an objection applies to him”: to Ran's words asserting that they disagree. R. Yishmael discusses those in the middle category, whereas R. Yose son of Yehudah discusses every person, as above.

“And Rava's words refer to it”: he says, “The sin itself is not erased,” and so forth. Rava's statement has no application to his words, for here [the wording is defective] it is erased entirely, and the first is annulled, as below in chapter 8.[TN020003]

“Moreover, what prevents”: this refers to Rambam, [TN020004] who says that after the scales have balanced, He passes over one at a time. What impediment would prevent Him from passing over them all at once, instead of one at a time?

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 8 (ח)

Yad Yehudah: כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “The difficulties we have mentioned”: in the interpretations of Rashi, Rif, and Rambam.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “The Master took his statement into account”: Rif took account of the Gaon's statement by including it in his own words.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “His approach”: explaining “passing over the first, then the first” as the forgiveness of all the sins.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “Yet there can be no doubt”: unlike what Ran supposed concerning the Gaon's position.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “He seeks a favorable formulation”: the Gaon's statement, “This teaching of R. Yishmael applies to a God-fearing person,” and so forth, concerns someone in the middle category, for those discussed here are in the middle category [the wording is uncertain]. [TN020005] He simply prefers to seek a favorable formulation and use the commendatory expression “God-fearing.”

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “He guards against the opposite case”: to indicate that he does not speak of

Rema of Fano

Therefore, in view of all the difficulties we have mentioned, we heed the Gaon, having seen that the Master took his statement into account, and that the truth also pressed Rambam and compelled him to enter his approach, with which he concluded his explanation. Yet there can be no doubt concerning the Gaon's position: in our discussion we have no dealings at all with the initial sins, as we explained regarding Rashi's position. After the two have been forgiven completely, the reckoning begins solely with the person's deeds from that point onward.

He seeks a favorable formulation when saying that we are discussing a God-fearing person who regularly performs commandments, guards against grave offenses, and sometimes sins in minor matters. Incidentally, he guards against the opposite case: if the person initially stumbled in grave offenses, he would be inscribed for death at the first Rosh Hashanah that he encountered. What business would he have here among those in the middle category? If you say that the distinction matters if he subsequently put matters right in the interval, “minor” still cannot be meant precisely. Otherwise, what shall we rule concerning grave offenses that do not belong to the category of bodily transgressors, when the person remains in the middle category? Furthermore, a transgression may seem minor in our eyes, yet the Lord, the God of knowledge, the wicked. He therefore also wrote, “guards against grave offenses,” excluding someone who stumbled in grave offenses: such a person has already been inscribed in the book of the wicked and has no place here.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “If you say”: how do you establish that “guards against grave offenses” comes to exclude the wicked?[TN020006] An explanation is needed: the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael may also discuss someone who stumbled in grave offenses. To the objection, “What business would he have among those in the middle category?” one can reply that the discussion concerns the course of repentance.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “Still”: this itself proves that the explanation is otherwise, and that it comes to exclude the wicked. For his statement, “and sometimes sins in minor matters,” must be imprecise. Nevertheless [the intervening wording is uncertain], offenses generally carrying excision or judicial death penalties, and perhaps grave inadvertent offenses, are called “minor” here. [TN020007] This excludes the grave offenses of our discussion: Israel's bodily transgressors, who are entirely wicked.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) "Otherwise": if "minor" is precise and excludes grave offenses in general, such as those carrying excision or judicial death penalties, which do not fall within the category of Israel's bodily transgressors, the difficulty is that the teaching gives us no information concerning the person who stumbled in them, since he is in the middle category. Infer, then, that "minor" is not precise, and that "guards against grave offenses" means the grave offenses of our discussion, coming to exclude the wicked.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) "Furthermore": an explanation is needed if one says that "minor" is precise: we are not expert in these matters, and he must therefore call them "minor" according to our judgment.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) "As Rambam mentioned": of blessed memory, in chapter 3 of the Laws of Repentance. His words are: "This weighing does not follow the number of merits and sins, but their magnitude. There is a merit that outweighs many sins, as it says, 'Because something good was found in him'; and there is a sin that may judge it as grave according to its place and time, and conversely. To Him alone deeds are weighed, as Rambam mentioned. Rather, he certainly made his statement concerning the usual case, and adopted a favorable expression to seek an acquittal, like the tanna in Sanhedrin at the end of the chapter "They Would Examine," as we have said. Moreover, this is the Sages' manner of speech: they call a minority of sins "minor transgressions," and likewise a minority of merits "minor commandments." This is demonstrated there in the Jerusalem Talmud.

Rema of Fano - continued

Alternatively, you may say: yes, he does mean precisely minor offenses. But this does not exclude the grave offenses discussed at the end of Yoma and in the first chapter of Shevuot; it excludes the grave offenses of our discussion, such as those who separate themselves from the community's ways and bodily transgressors. With the help of Heaven, we shall explain the nature of the gravity of their sin at the beginning of Part V.

The Holy One's practice, blessed be He, is to pass over all of them, the first, then the first: that is, without interruption, in the manner of "each successive item is annulled." They are all forgiven provisionally. The person to whom this applies is reckoned among the righteous, on account of the abundance of merits that preceded them in his judgment. The sin itself, however, is not erased; it remains in suspension. If, when judgment is concluded, the merits are found to exceed the sins that come onto outweighs many merits, as it says, 'One sinner destroys much good.' They are weighed only according to the knowledge of the God of knowledge, and He knows how merits are to be set against sins."

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) "He discusses": an ordinary person in the middle category, who sometimes sins even in grave offenses generally. His words "a God-fearing person" adopt a favorable expression.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) "At the end of the chapter 'They Would Examine'": in the Mishnah: "Thirty-six convict and thirty-six acquit; [TN020008] they deliberate, these against those, until one of those voting to convict accepts the words of those voting to acquit." Concerning this the Gemara says, in the chapter "Both Monetary Cases": "I seek grounds for acquittal; I do not seek grounds for conviction." Rashi explains: "I seek grounds for acquittal"—he prefers to seek a favorable expression; the same applies in the reverse case.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) "Moreover": he calls them "minor" because they are a minority, for such is the Sages' concise manner of expression. [TN020009]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “In the Jerusalem Talmud”: in Peah, cited above in chapter 6.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “If you say”: he means literally minor offenses. Nevertheless, this does not come to exclude grave offenses generally, but the the scale, or they are evenly balanced and the One abundant in kindness inclines toward kindness—for this is the matter under discussion—then the sins have been passed over, the first, then the first. They count for nothing in the tipping of the scales, as though they had not been committed.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

grave offenses of our discussion.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “The Holy One's practice”: he returns to the Gaon's words. His statement that “the Holy One's practice with him is to pass over the first, then the first” means continually, without interruption. The reason is as Rambam wrote: after one has been forgiven, the second becomes first, and so with all of them. According to the Gaon, our discussion does not concern the initial sins; why, then, should one on that account use the expression “the first, then the first”? The reason is that this is the language of the Sages, as in their similar expression, “each successive item is annulled.”

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “Provisionally”: this explains the expression “and forgives it” used by the Gaon. As for what the Gaon says next: [the explanation continues in the following comment].

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “He is [reckoned] among the righteous”: [TN020010] although we are discussing those in the middle category, this is on account of the abundance of merits that preceded them in his judgment, when his merits exceeded his sins. Nevertheless, the sin itself remains suspended until the conclusion of his judgment at the time of his death. Then all his merits and sins from all the years are reckoned. If there is a preponderance of sins, they are counted; but if his merits are greater, or the scales balance, his sins are forgiven entirely. As he wrote, the sin remains suspended, subject to whether the scales balance as in the first judgment.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “For this is the matter under discussion”: although the Gaon mentioned nothing concerning balanced scales, this follows of itself, since the entire give-and-take of our discussion concerns “abundant in kindness.” We thus learn that, under this interpretation, the Gaon, of blessed memory, places the teaching of the school of R. Yishmael and Rava together within two reckonings. This will be explained further in the following chapter.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The Master took his statement into account”: Rav Alfasi took account of the Gaon's statement when citing his words. Rambam too partly followed his approach at the end of his remarks.

“Yet there can be no doubt”: there is no doubt concerning the Gaon's position that the aforementioned tannaim, who disagree over the words of the House of Hillel, are not discussing the first two sins, which were forgiven entirely, as R. Yose son of Yehudah said above.

“He seeks a favorable formulation”: his wording concerning grave offenses is not necessarily about literally grave offenses—Israel's bodily transgressors. Rather, when the merits tip the balance, all the transgressions are called minor; conversely, when the transgressions tip the balance, all the commandments are called minor, as below in this chapter. He simply adopted a favorable expression. This is the meaning of “he seeks a favorable formulation.” Incidentally, he guards against the reverse case, when the person does not guard against grave offenses.[TN020011]

“If he stumbled”: “guards against grave offenses” is precise, excluding someone who does not guard against them. This is obvious and need not be expressly excluded: if he stumbled, he would be inscribed for death on Rosh Hashanah, the day of judgment, like the entirely wicked. What business would he have among those in the middle category at the judgment after resurrection? If you say that the wording is indeed precise, what difficulty is there? [You ask:] it is obvious and need not be excluded. Perhaps it excludes someone who put matters right in the interval concerning the grave offenses—those of Israel's bodily transgressors—and would then come within the middle category at the future judgment. Thus the wording comes to specify someone who guards completely against grave offenses. Still, “minor matters” in the Gaon's statement need not mean literally minor offenses. Even grave offenses, provided they do not belong to the category of Israel's bodily transgressors, are called minor. Otherwise, what would we rule concerning those grave offenses of people in the middle category? Nothing has been said of them, only of offenses that are literally grave or literally minor.[TN020012]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Furthermore”: we cannot properly call offenses minor from our standpoint, since a transgression may appear minor to our eyes, and so forth.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 8

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

There: “In the manner of ‘each successive item is annulled’”: the Holy One, blessed be He, reckons all the merits a person has performed first, and afterward reckons all the sins against the merits. If they are equal, or all the more if the merits outweigh them, the sins are forgiven entirely. This is “passing over the first, then the first.” If there are additional sins such that the sins tip the balance, he is inscribed for death. This is “if, when judgment is concluded”: at first He forgives one by one, until the merits increase; then it becomes operative again.[TN020013]

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 9 (ט)

Yad Yehudah: כז · כו · כה · כד · כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “Nevertheless”: one must not infer from what he wrote in the preceding chapter—that the sins are forgiven entirely when judgment concludes—that the Holy One, blessed be He, simply waives what is due. That would not be fitting, as the Sages said in Bava Kamma: “Whoever says that the Holy One, blessed be He, waives what is due—let his entrails be loosened.” Rather, He is slow to anger and collects what is His, as it says, “For all His ways are justice.” The reason for forgiveness, however, is that such is the rule of judgment, as he concludes shortly with “Here, in our discussion,” and so forth.

Rema of Fano

Nevertheless, it is not fitting to describe the Holy One's attributes, blessed be He, as those of one who simply waives what is due, for all His ways are justice. Thus it is written, “The Lord is righteous in all His ways,” even though He is “kind in all His deeds.” How can both be so? He is slow to anger and collects what is His. We caution, however, that “collects what is His” was not said concerning judgment for sins and their punishment. Far be it from God, for punishment is not fitting for the Righteous One of the world. Many collectors make their rounds and exact payment, as we learned in Avot; they do not stand before His eyes, for “in the light of the king's countenance is life,” and “strength and gladness are before Him.”

As for what is written, “He gathered

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “Thus it is written, ‘The Lord is righteous’”: He is righteous and kind at the same time.[TN020014] Even when He, blessed be He, acts kindly toward creatures and forgives their sins, He is righteous and performs righteousness and justice.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “We caution, however”: we caution concerning the expression “collects what is His,” not to explain it as punishment, as though, God forbid, it were the Holy One's attribute and portion to punish personally and in His glory. This is not so. The blessed Lord punishes only through emissaries, evil angels, as alluded to by “bands ... revealed from chambers," and so forth [the wording is uncertain]. [TN020015] Nor do they merit standing before Him, blessed be He, for there are before Him only life, strength, and gladness.

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) "As for what is written, 'Va-yitʿatzev to His heart'": this does not mean sorrow, as appears to be the position of Onkelos, who renders it, "He said by His word to break their strength according to His will." He explains va-yitʿatzev in the sense of sorrow of spirit, and "His heart" in the sense of will: He grieved over His having willed to make the human being. Yet the truth is as we have mentioned: there are before Him, blessed be He, only strength and gladness, and no sorrow. Rather, va-yitʿatzev is related to sinews and tendons, as Scripture says, "Your hands fashioned me [ʿitzevuni] and made me" (Job 10). Radak wrote concerning this in the Book of Roots, root עצב: "The sage R. Moshe ibn Ezra explained it as referring to the tendons that are called ʿatzabim; that is, He created my bones and my flesh." Accordingly, va-yitʿatzev to His heart means that He gathered the sinews and cords to His heart. Just as the verb ʿitzevuni denotes the spreading and interweaving of the tendons, one must apparently say that the inward to His heart" [va-yitʿatzev; ordinarily, "He grieved"], its meaning is that He gathered to His heart—for from it come the outgoings of life—all the sinews and cords of which it is written, "Your hands fashioned me [ʿitzevuni] and made me." They bind together the parts of the world, which, as is known, is a great human form. We explained this thoroughly in the Treatise on the Soul. He, blessed be He, drew them toward His heart, as stated, by gathering His spirit and soul unto Himself. This explains the reflexive verbal form. Then the structure of the world collapses of itself, for no evil descends from above.

Rema of Fano - continued

In the Masorah, "their teeth" occurs twice: "The meat was still"; "a spear and arrows." The allusion is: "From him his judgment and his exaltation proceed." It is likewise written, "Let the evil of the wicked come to an end": without any other cause, it alone does what is its own. In the attribute of goodness, however, You Yourself, in Your glory, "establish the righteous." Concerning providence extending through the lashes that exact payment, they expounded, "She has eaten, wiped her mouth, and said, 'I have done no wrong.'"

What, then, must we say is meant by His "collecting what is His"? Precisely what belongs to Him, what is truly His portion: the holy soul. "The Lord's portion is His people"; "'The Lord is my portion,' says my soul." For its sake He is slow to anger and restrains the collectors, the emissaries of judgment, so that they do not exact their due portion from the sinner through severe reflexive form va-yitʿatzev denotes gathering and collecting the sinews. [TN020016] The meaning of this will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) "All the sinews": these words depend on the verb "gathered."

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) "They": the sinews and cords bind together the parts of the world—the heavens, the earth, and all their hosts.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) "Which is a great human form": philosophers call the human being a small world; this is also found in the Zohar on Genesis, page 184. Correspondingly, the world is called a great human form. Scripture says, "The Lord regretted that He had made the human being upon the earth, and va-yitʿatzev to His heart." The author does not favor explaining this as an actual human being in the plain sense. Otherwise, there would be no reason to say va-yitʿatzev, that He gathered these sinews: why single out the sinews more than the other principal organs, blood, soul, and spirit? Furthermore, it would then say first "that He had made the human being" concerning the human species, and afterward va-yitʿatzev concerning an individual. He therefore prefers to explain the sinews as belonging to the great human form, which is the world.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

The matter is this: the blessed Lord created the world through the emanation of ten sefirot, which descend and penetrate all four worlds, as far as the abyss of the world of Asiyah. The lower world and all that fills it depend on them until the appointed end, the great Jubilee, of which the Zohar says, “to return the spirit to Him.” This means to return the emanated beings to Him, for “His spirit,” blessed be He, is a designation for the emanated beings. The blessed Lord will then return the emanated beings to Himself. The other three worlds, Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, will likewise cease: they are like the tendons, sinews, and cords that bind together and sustain the world. Thus the world's structure will perish and collapse of itself, as the prophet said concerning this, “For the heavens will dissolve like smoke, and the earth will wear out like a garment.” The author holds that Scripture speaks of this when it says, “The Lord regretted that He had made the human being upon the earth”: that is, the great human form, which is the world. “Va-yitʿatzev to His heart”: He resolved and reconsidered, to gather to His heart, punishments all at once. Instead, payment is exacted from him beginning with the lightest, then the next lightest, so that the person will be awakened to repentance and the portion of God will emerge cleansed of every blemish, so that no outcast shall be cast away from Him.

Rema of Fano - continued

This is a sound and true explanation, although the great sages did not take care to observe this caution, following instead the generally accepted account, which is not false: God's host is very great, and His kingdom rules over all. There is a pleasing subsidiary interpretation of “Where is Abel [EI HEVEL], your brother?” The initials yield: “If the serpent bites without a whisper [Im Yishokh Ha-naḥash Be-lo Laḥash].” For the Sages said that the serpent does not bite a person below unless a whisper concerning him is uttered above. This accords with “he takes permission and takes the soul.”

All agree that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not simply waive what is due; rather, He judges mercifully. Here, however, in our discussion of the three categories, we are dealing with the tipping of the scales. Under the general rule of judgment we follow the majority, and if the judgment is evenly balanced, the good attribute tips the balance as is fitting for it. We have now established the Gaon's approach, clearly explained and consistent in all its parts with the course of the Gemara, founded on sound reasoning, without objection or doubt.

It appears that Raavad held this view in

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

blessed be He, all the sinews and tendons that bind together and sustain the world, in order to destroy it and bring it to an end.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “This explains the reflexive form”: in va-yitʿatzev, which signifies gathering the sinews, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “Descends from above”: rather, when the flow of abundance is withdrawn, evil comes of itself, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “In the Masorah”: there is an allusion to this in “The meat was still between their teeth,” and so forth, “and the Lord struck the people,” and so forth; and “Their teeth are a spear and arrows.” This indicates that the meat between their teeth itself became a spear and arrows and the cause of their blows.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “The allusion”: a further allusion is what is said concerning the Chaldeans, “From him his judgment,” and so forth (Habakkuk 1).

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “It is likewise written”: “Let the evil of the wicked come to an end, and establish the righteous” (Psalms 7). It does not say “Bring it to an end,” addressing the Lord directly, as it subsequently says “establish.” Rather, yigmar is vocalized with a qamatz, implying that it happens of itself.

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “Concerning the extension”: the Sages in the Zohar, section Tazria, page 80, expounded the verse, “Such is the way of an adulterous woman: she has eaten, wiped her mouth,” and so forth (Proverbs 30), concerning the dragons, as though they were saying that they had not effected the punishment. This is because supreme providence extends into them, so that they collect and exact payment from the wicked according to their wickedness. The evil angels wish to attribute their action to divine providence. Scripture says this mockingly too, for in truth evils do not issue his critical glosses, when he said, “This teaching contains no mention of forgiveness of sin, but only of saving those in the middle category from Gehinnom.” Thus it implies that the unforgiven sins are those reckoned under this attribute; this is indeed the principal explanation. His words there concerning R. Yose son of Yehudah were conditional: for the first and second sins, which we said are forgiven entirely, a person needs neither Yom Kippur nor afflictions and death—even if they were among the grave offenses—provided that he repents of them. This is well said if he remembers them, so that he does not persist in his rebellion. Yet this good attribute will not fail to take effect for one who forgets, even without repentance. We have further qualifications concerning R. Yose son of Yehudah, mentioned in chapter 4; their explanation will be completed in the chapters indicated there, with the help of Heaven.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

from the mouth of the Most High; rather, evil consumes itself. The dragons that enticed the transgression certainly effected the wrongdoing and the punishment.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “Through the lashes that exact payment”: these are the dragons, called in [the Zohar on] Genesis “the evil lash.”

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “What, then”: this returns to the earlier statement: “collects what is His” was not said concerning judgment for sins and their punishment. Rather, it is fitting to explain it concerning the soul, which belongs to the Holy One, blessed be He, a portion of God above, as it is written, “For the Lord's portion is His people,” and similarly, “‘The Lord is my portion,’ says my soul.”

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “For its sake”: although He is slow to anger with the wicked person, He sometimes allows the destroyers to release a little wrath [the verb is uncertain], but only to exact payment from him beginning with the lightest, then the next lightest. [TN020017] As the Sages said, “The Master of mercy does not first strike at lives,” and so forth. This allows him to repent in the interval, so that the portion of God emerges cleansed and the collectors cannot touch it in exacting payment. This is “collects what is His.”

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “Did not take care to observe this caution”: concerning “collects what is His,” they did not refrain from explaining it as punishment for sins, as we caution. They followed the generally accepted account that the Omnipresent, blessed be He, has many emissaries and His kingdom rules over them, explaining the unqualified “collects” as collection through emissaries.[TN020018]

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “In the verse ‘Where is Abel, your brother?’”: these are the words of the Zohar, section Pequdei, page 414: “After Adam and the woman sinned, and the serpent came upon Eve and cast impurity into her, Eve bore Cain,” and so forth. “Therefore he was the first to cause death in the world, because his side brought it about. It is the serpent's way to lie in ambush to kill; the one who comes from it takes its way and follows it. Therefore it is written, ‘When they were in the field, Cain rose against his brother and killed him.’ We find in the books of the ancients that when Cain killed Abel, he bit him with bites like a serpent until he drew out his soul and killed him,” and so forth. This is what the author intended in saying that “EI HEVEL” forms an acronym for “Im

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yishokh Ha-naḥash”—“if the serpent bites,” the serpent being Cain—“Be-lo Laḥash,” “without a whisper” (Ecclesiastes 10).[TN020019]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “This accords with”: what the Sages said concerning the angel of death, that he takes permission from the heavenly court.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “Here, however”: this concludes the foregoing argument. The Holy One, blessed be He, does not waive what is due, as stated. Our discussion's statement that the blessed Lord forgives sins is because judgment so requires when the merits are more numerous, as it says, “Incline after the majority.” Even when they are half and half, the good attribute tips the balance. See above, chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “On reasoning”: on the legal reasoning we set out in explaining “passing over the first, then the first”: they are forgiven only provisionally.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “He held this view”: concerning the Gaon's position and the interpretation of R. Yishmael's “passing over.”

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “When he said”: there, in chapter 3 of the Laws of Repentance, he criticized Rambam concerning the initial sins in R. Yose son of Yehudah's statement in Yoma, and concerning R. Yishmael's “passing over” in our discussion. His words are: “He supposes that they are one matter, but they are very far apart. R. Yishmael's statement concerns the great day of judgment and saving those in the middle category from Gehinnom, according to the House of Hillel; there is no mention there of forgiveness of sin. R. Yose son of Yehudah's statement, however, concerns this world and the beginning of a person's deeds, from the age at which he becomes liable to punishment,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(כד) “Thus it implies”: from Raavad's words, “There is no mention there of forgiveness of sin,” concerning R. Yishmael. How could those in the middle category be saved from Gehinnom on the great day of judgment without forgiveness of sin? The plain meaning of his words is that the expression “passing over the first, then the first” contains no mention of forgiveness of sin. This applies not only to the initial sins, which are not being discussed here: the other sins too are only passed over provisionally, until judgment is concluded on the great day of judgment. Then the sins that have still not been forgiven [are treated] through the attribute “abundant in kindness”: if the scales balance, those in the middle category are saved from Gehinnom and the sins are forgiven. This is as stated concerning the Gaon's position.

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

Yad Yehudah - כה

(כה) “His words were conditional”: Raavad further wrote there concerning the initial sins that they require none of the four divisions of atonement in the final chapter of Yoma, except repentance alone —even if they were among the grave offenses requiring afflictions or death.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(כו) “This is well said”: his requirement of repentance applies if the person remembers them. [TN020020] He must then regret them and repent; otherwise, he persists in rebellion, and they are not atoned for against his will, as the Sages said concerning a similar matter at the beginning of Shevuot. If he forgot them, however, they are atoned for even without repentance.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(כז) “This good attribute”: concerning “God does all this twice,” and so forth, with the help of Heaven, as he wrote there. He likewise wrote, “In Israel,” and so forth; see there.[TN020021]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“We caution, however”: we caution and remind others not to explain “collects what is His” concerning judgment for sins and punishments, as though the Holy One, blessed be He, personally punishes. Far be it from God, for “from the mouth of the Most High do not issue evils and good.”

“Many collectors make their rounds”: the destroyers who perform their commission to punish a person do not stand before Him, blessed be He, for strength and gladness are before Him, blessed be He.

“As for what is written, ‘Va-yitʿatzev’”: this apparently implies, God forbid, sorrow before Him. The explanation is that va-yitʿatzev is like “gathered”: He gathered to His heart, and so forth. It is related to “Your hands fashioned me [ʿitzevuni],” meaning “gathered me together.” “They bind together”: the hands of the blessed Lord bind together the four elements in the great human form, which is the world, so called. Likewise, He binds together spirit, vital soul, and higher soul in the human being, who is called a small world. At the time of the Flood, the Holy One, blessed be He, drew [them] toward His heart.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“This explains the reflexive form”: va-yitʿatzev is explained by its reflexive form; then evil comes from itself [the supplied wording may instead read “from His counsel”], and the structure of the world collapses of itself.[TN020022]

“The meat was still between their teeth”: this seemingly implies that punishment comes from before Him—far be it! He therefore says that the teeth of the wicked are themselves a spear and arrows: “from him,” that is, from the wicked person himself, “his judgment and his exaltation proceed.”

“Therefore it is said, ‘Let the evil of the wicked come to an end’”: this is in the third person. It does not say “Bring it to an end,” in direct address; rather, it comes to an end of itself. Concerning the attribute of goodness, however, it says “establish the righteous,” addressing the blessed Lord.

“Concerning the extension”: the blessed Lord oversees the destroying angels who punish a person, as though the blessed Lord had sent them. In fact, they themselves say, “I have done no wrong”: had I not been told from Heaven to punish, I would not have punished the person.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 9

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Did not take care to observe this caution”: to explain it as we explained it, since they followed the generally accepted account, which is the straightforward explanation.

“EI HEVEL”: the reason this is hinted in the words EI HEVEL is as stated in the Zohar: Cain came from the serpent's side. The Zohar, section Pequdei, says that he did not know how to kill Abel until he bit him with his teeth. Hence the allusion to “Im Yishokh,” and so forth, is encoded in them; examine it closely. [TN020023]

“Raavad held this view”: as we explained concerning “abundant in kindness” in the House of Hillel's statement: it concerns sins other than the first two, which were forgiven entirely.

“His words were conditional”: Raavad's words. “Provided that he repents”: if he remembers the first two sins, he must repent of them; if he does not remember, they are nevertheless forgiven.

[The opening words are unclear:] also the qualifications of chapter 4: specifically after the giving of the Torah, where there is no trace of idolatry, and where he does not repeat his folly. See above, chapter 4.[TN020024]

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 10 (י)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “The early sages said”: this continues what was said at the end of the preceding chapter, that the initial sins do not require repentance from one who

Rema of Fano

The early sages said that when a person confesses and regrets the sins he remembers, but forgets to confess some that have escaped him, those hidden sins do not prevent atonement. They forgets. The “early sages” passage is in the Zohar, section Balaq, page 340 [the source marks the numeral uncertain], [TN020025] except for what the author wrote concerning a dark house, which is not in the Zohar's wording there. Its words are: “Do not say that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not receive him until he specifies his sins from the day he came into being, including those hidden from him which he cannot apprehend. Rather, he need specify only those he remembers. If he directs his will toward them, all the others are drawn after them. For we learned: in removing leaven, we do not inspect the recesses of the house high above, nor those low below. Once he has inspected according to the sight of his eyes, as far as he can apprehend, everything is drawn after this and annulled with it. Thus we teach: there are twenty-four extremities of limbs that do not become impure on account of a patch of living flesh, and the priest does not trouble himself after them. This is what is written, ‘According to all that the priest's eyes can see’: a place where the priest can see the affliction in a single look, without having to lower himself or raise his eyes here and there. Likewise, he need not specify his sins, seeking from the day he came into being, for these are the high upper recesses of the house. Come and see: ‘According to all that the priest's eyes can see,’ and all the others supported their statement by what we learned: “In a dark house, windows are not opened to inspect its affliction.” Likewise, the twenty-four extremities of the limbs do not become impure on account of a patch of living flesh, for it is written, “According to all that the priest's eyes can see”: he need not raise his eyes or lower them. They also brought an indication from the statement concerning the removal of leaven: “The upper and lower recesses of the house do not require inspection.”

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Although both kinds require repentance from one who remembers them, and its absence does not impede [atonement] for one who forgets, the initial sins nevertheless possess a greater advantage than all the others. If a person sinned only twice in his entire life, forgot them, and never confessed them, the lack of confession does not prevent their atonement: they are forgiven of themselves. For other sins, however, if he confessed some and forgot others, the confession benefits them all. We can testify that had he remembered them, he would likewise have confessed and regretted them; what difference is there? Indeed, the Sages expressly said, concerning someone suspected of taking a false oath, “There is no repentance by halves.” But if none of the conditions of repentance is present—neither confession nor regret—and he did not know, yet incurred guilt, by what will he be atoned for?

This is what Rava said in the first chapter of Ḥullin concerning the dark house mentioned above: “This applies

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

are drawn after them.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “Although both kinds”: according to this, the initial sins and all other sins would be equal. If a person remembers them, even the initial sins require repentance, as explained at the end of the preceding chapter. If he forgot them, the absence of repentance does not impede [atonement] even for the other sins, as stated. It is therefore apparently difficult to see what difference there is between them.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Nevertheless”: there is a difference in this respect: a greater advantage is found, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “This applies where no presumption has been established”: Rashi explains: “No presumption has been established”—as long as the priest has not seen the affliction in its visible appearances, because it was in a dark house and its appearance was not discernible. But if an affliction stands behind a door and he has already recognized it as an affliction, and a window is needed only to confirm its established status, one opens it. So too here: beyond the initial sins, once a presumption of transgressing is established, it stands established. Windows are opened, and he must recall them in order to confess and repent of them. If he forgot them all, they are not forgiven.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “Concerning the dispute”: the author holds that R. Yose son of Yehudah's statement in Yoma concerning the initial sins—two for an individual and three for a community—is connected to the dispute between Rabbi and Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel in several places in the Gemara concerning an established presumption. Rabbi holds that two occurrences establish it, while Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel requires three. R. Yose son of Yehudah thus follows Rabbi for an individual and Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel for a community. This is the law, as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “He expounds ‘twice’”: in the verse, “God does all these things twice and three times with a man,” “twice” refers to an individual and “three times” to a community. See above, chapter 4: this follows the reading of Rif and Rambam. See Rambam, Laws of Repentance, chapter 3, who brought proof concerning a community from “Thus says the Lord: for three transgressions of Israel, and for four I will not turn it back.”

Rema of Fano - continued

where no presumption has been established; but once it has been established, it stands established.” Concerning the dispute between Rabbi and Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel, whether two or three occurrences establish a presumption, it appears that this underlies R. Yose son of Yehudah's exposition: twice for an individual, three times for a community. This is also [the meaning of] the verse, “Bearing iniquity and passing over transgression,” under a different exposition, unlike that of the school of R. Yishmael. It is possible that he and R. Yose son of Yehudah differ in their exegetical interpretation: for the latter, these are the initial sins forgiven entirely to an individual. For a community, however, the first is always reckoned inadvertent, as it is written, “And to the house of Jacob their sin.” The second and third fall under “bearing iniquity and passing over transgression,” and these too are forgiven entirely, as we have said.

The law was determined in the chapter “One Who Has Intercourse with His Levirate Sister-in-Law”: marriages and lashes follow Rabbi. “Marriages” means a woman whose husbands have died, or who lived with each of them for ten years without bearing a child: she may not marry a third. We compare her case to the individual, establishing a presumption after two occurrences, since these are minority cases. Likewise, one who has been flogged and repeated the offense carrying the same liability of excision is liable to death and abandons himself to a grave transgression; he is confined in a narrow cell to hasten his

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “Under a different exposition”: iniquity and transgression are two, [TN020026] and the blessed Lord forgives them entirely, unlike the exposition of the school of R. Yishmael, which derives from it “passing over the first, then the first.”

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “It is possible that he differs”: even according to Rif, who holds that the teaching of the school of R. Yishmael and that of R. Yose son of Yehudah are one matter, as above in chapter 5, it is nevertheless possible to say that the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael disagrees with R. Yose son of Yehudah in the exegetical meaning of “passing over.”[TN020027] For the school of R. Yishmael it means passing over, not forgiveness; for R. Yose son of Yehudah it means complete forgiveness, since for him the verse concerns the initial sins, unlike R. Yishmael.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “For a community, however”: this depends on the earlier words, “This is the verse, ‘Bearing iniquity.’” The rule of three for a community follows of itself, because the first is always reckoned inadvertent, leaving two—the second and third—to be forgiven under this attribute of “bearing iniquity,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “The law was determined”: what we say concerning R. Yose son of Yehudah—that a presumption is established for an individual after two occurrences and for a community after three—is also the reason for the Gemara's ruling.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “In the chapter ‘One Who Has Intercourse with His Levirate Sister-in-Law’”: the Mishnah states: “If he married a woman and lived with her for ten years and she did not bear a child, and he divorced her, she is permitted to marry another.” The Gemara says: “A second, yes; a third, no. Whose is this Mishnah? Rabbi's.” Further there: “It was taught: if she married a first husband and he died, and a second and he died, she may not marry a third —Rabbi's words. Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel says: she may marry a third, but may not marry a fourth,” and so forth. “Rav Yosef son of Rava said to Rava: I asked Rav Yosef, ‘Is the law according to Rabbi?’ He said to me, ‘Yes.’ ‘Is the law according to Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel?’ He said to me, ‘Yes.’ Was he making fun of me? He replied: No; these are anonymous teachings, and he resolved them for you: marriages and lashes follow Rabbi; menstrual patterns and an ox established as dangerous follow Rabban Shimon son death. These too are minority cases.

Rema of Fano - continued

Menstrual patterns and an ox established as dangerous follow Rabban Shimon son of Gamliel. We certainly compare menstrual patterns to the many. The same holds for an animal, which has no mazal—that is, understanding to guard itself. All the words of the Sages are fitting.

The Gemara further says that three things cause a person's sins to be recalled: a leaning wall, scrutiny of prayer, and submitting a judgment against one's fellow [to Heaven]. Although, according to the manifest plain sense, each one is serious in its own right, we must nevertheless understand why they give a number. For people are examined on a bridge and in all similar situations, as stated in “With What May They Kindle?” What is the difference between that examination and recalling sins? Indeed, a leaning wall is no less than a bridge and occasions examination by itself; the others do likewise. But recalling sins implies even those that have been hidden and whose memory has been lost. For their prohibition to become operative again through one's conduct, all three things together are required.

The first is “a leaning wall” [qir natuy]. Yet the Gemara in “Before Their Festivals,” and the midrashim in many places, explain qir as meaning “lord,” one of the beauties of the Greek language. When He is, as it were, weakened—as they expounded the verse, “You weakened the Rock who of Gamliel. Marriages follow Rabbi, as we have said. Lashes: we learned that one who has been flogged and repeats the offense is confined by the court in a narrow cell and fed barley until his belly bursts. Menstrual patterns: we learned that a woman does not establish a menstrual pattern until she establishes it three times, and does not displace that pattern until she departs from it three times. An ox established as dangerous: we learned that an ox is not established as dangerous until testimony concerning it has been given three times.”

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

The author holds that the reason for this ruling too is the distinction between an individual and a community. These all concern individuals [the connecting wording is uncertain],[TN020028] but menstrual patterns are common and occur among all women; these are therefore like the many, and a presumption is established only after three occurrences. This differs from marriages and lashes, which are not common. The reason concerning an animal is that it lacks understanding to guard itself: we attribute the matter to its lack of understanding until the presumption has been established three times.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “They further said”: the author's exposition concerns sins that had long been hidden [wording uncertain]. Thus it is written [text missing] in the Gemara, chapter “One Who Sees”: “Three things,” and so forth. This is R. Yitzḥaq's statement there. [TN020029]

Rema of Fano - continued

begot you”—and the person scrutinizes his prayer, implying that he seeks only his own needs and nothing else, and lays the judgment for the inclination above upon others, as though he himself were free of sin, then, certainly, even if he repented of what he remembered, not only are his sins examined: those forgotten by the heart also accuse him from then onward. Yet He is merciful and will atone.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “Although”: this addresses the question why the number is needed. According to the plain meaning, one could indeed say that R. Yitzḥaq gave the number to indicate that specifically these three together recall sins. Yet each one alone is so serious as to recall a person's sins [the source wording is unstable].

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

[TN020030] Nevertheless, it must be explained as he explains it; otherwise, we would not know at all why the number is needed. One cannot say that the number indicates that there are these three and no others, since there is also a bridge and similar situations, as the Gemara says: “And where are men examined? Resh Laqish said: when crossing a bridge. A bridge and nothing else? Say: situations resembling a bridge.”

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “What is the difference”: if you say that the examination mentioned in the Gemara is one thing and “recalling” in the chapter “One Who Sees” another—as he concludes, that everything can be recalled, and there are no more than the three listed—we must understand the difference between them.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “Indeed”: if we interpret “recall” as examination, we must say that any one of these three suffices, since a leaning wall is no less than a bridge, which occasions examination alone. In truth, however, recalling is not examination. [TN020031] Examination concerns sins that are examined and have not been atoned for. Recalling sins means that he already repented of his sins, forgot some, and those were forgiven together with the ones he remembered; through these three things, they become operative again and are recalled. Thus all three together are required, and no single one suffices. That is why R. Yitzḥaq supplied the number.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “Yet”: under the plain meaning of “a leaning wall,” and so forth, it is not readily applicable that the prohibition of sins already hidden and forgiven should become operative again through these three things, even when combined [the syntax is uncertain].[TN020032] Rather, “a leaning wall” is not explained in its plain sense: qir is a Greek word meaning “lord,” as in sakh qiri plaster in the chapter “Before Their Festivals.” Thus too it was expounded in [the source reads, uncertainly, “Vayiqra Rabbah”], section Vayeḥi, concerning “he turned his face toward the wall” [the supplied quotation itself is defective].

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “One of the beauties”: as the Sages said in Megillah concerning “May God enlarge [yaft] Japheth [Yefet].”

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “Weakened”: in relation to those who sin against God. As the Sages expounded tashi as weakness: sins, as it were, weaken the power above. This is “a leaning qir”: the Lord, the blessed God, is, as it were, inclined and His power weakened from overseeing that person. Yet the person does not think so. He still scrutinizes his prayer: all his thought and consideration concerns only his prayer, in which he seeks merely his own needs, rather than repairing the damage he caused above. Moreover, he wishes to lay Heaven's judgment for the inclination and weakening of the power above upon others, whom he regards as wicked, saying that they have incurred their punishment [the wording is uncertain],[TN020033] as though he himself were wholly righteous—the reverse of the truth.

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “Then, certainly”: these three together specifically recall his forgotten sins, already forgiven through the repentance he performed for the other transgressions he remembered. They now become operative again.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “His sins are examined”: the sins that have not yet been forgiven. Certainly, sins of which he repented are never recalled, even through the three things mentioned. This is clear.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The early sages said”: this is the Zohar, section Balaq, page 320. See the whole passage there. [The following connective wording is unclear.] “A dark house: one does not open windows in it”: rather, everything remains as it presently is. The twenty-four limbs that do not become impure on account of a patch of living flesh have the same reason: where the priest cannot see the affliction, we do not say that he must examine it closely and view it in two looks because he cannot see it at once. We do not say this; rather, they do not become impure. It is written, “According to all that the priest's eyes can see,” implying what can be seen at once, without raising his eyes—that is, lifting them—or lowering them—that is, bringing them down, and so forth. [TN020034]

“An indication of the matter: the upper and lower recesses of the house”: this is a comparison to the human being, who is called a house. The sins [the supplied word is unclear] are the leaven, and the ferment is the evil inclination, which brings a person to sins. He says concerning sins committed from the day the person came into the world, which he does not remember, that they do not require repentance. This is [the preceding explanation; the intervening wording about earlier years or youth is unclear], but only those he remembers. [An unclear linking clause follows.] As it is written, specifically “according to all that the priest's eyes can see,” and not what is hidden from him and he cannot see. [TN020035]

“Although both kinds require repentance”: since we said that if a person remembers the sins, they require repentance, and the statement is unqualified, it implies all sins, with no distinction between the first two and the others. The difficulty is therefore: what distinction is there between them in this respect? He answers, “Nevertheless, a greater advantage,” meaning an additional merit.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This is what he says afterward, “This applies where no presumption has been established.” Just as there, if no presumption concerning the affliction was ever established, windows need not be opened for it, whereas when a presumption has been established it must be examined carefully, so too with repentance: if he committed transgressions only twice, no presumption was established, and they are forgiven. But if a presumption was established through more than two occurrences, it stands established, and repentance is required.

“This is the verse, ‘Bearing,’ under a different exposition”: according to the school of R. Yishmael, He passes it to one side, which is “bearing iniquity and passing over transgression,” as he wrote above in chapter 4. He explains it here as removing entirely. “It is possible that they differ in their exegetical interpretation”; “for him” means for the teacher of the school of R. Yishmael [so the commentary reads].[TN020036] “The initial sins”: we may object that, in any event, they say two—if he sinned only twice and they were not recalled, they are forgiven. Rather, they differ in their exegetical interpretation: “bearing iniquity” refers to the second and third for a community, not to the first. “Since these are minority cases”: they are comparable to an individual. “Menstrual patterns certainly [are compared] to the many”: since this occurs among all women, like Israel's many, we compare them to a community.

“The Gemara further says: three things”: this does not depend on what we said above; rather, it means that through these three, the initial sins of which he did not repent are recalled. “Although each one is serious”: the Gemara's wording appears to imply [an individual item or all three together; the connective wording is unclear] according to the manifest meaning. Under the hidden meaning, however, it rightly implies all three together, as he explains afterward. For a bridge alone occasions examination, and so does anything similar—a place of danger. Thus indeed one alone occasions examination. But to recall sins—that is, those he never knew of and which were forgiven him—these three together now recall them. See there. [TN020037]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

For qir means “lord,” mari qira, and is “one of the beauties of the Greek language”: Greek belongs to Japheth, as it is written, “May God enlarge Japheth.” “Its beauty” means the language of Japheth. Alternatively, none of the seventy languages has power or endurance except when it enters the holy tongue. As the Gemara repeatedly says, “For thus in Greek ... here you have ...” [the cited wording is incomplete]. One may ask of the Gemara: what difference does that make, and what is it to us? Rather, the intention is as stated: the expression said to be Greek is actually of the holy tongue, with Greek attached to that holy word. Thus here “the beauty of the Greek language” is a word of holiness, which is beautiful.[TN020038]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 10

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“You weakened the Rock who begot you”: when a person sins, he weakens, as it were, the power above. Therefore qir, the Lord above, is “inclined” through the sinner who weakens and inclines Him. Also, QIR NATUY has the numerical value of SHEKHINAH. “He scrutinizes his prayer”: specifically his own prayer, in which he requests his personal needs, everything he requires, and does not repent. Therefore, “he submits judgment”—that is, the inclination above—against his fellow, meaning against others. Then his initial sins are recalled. Thus the three things are explained within a single matter.

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 11 (יא)

Yad Yehudah: כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “The judgment”: concerning the three categories, which we began discussing in chapter 3 and explained through the attribute “abundant in kindness.” It is true in the manner set out in the preceding chapters; everything in these rulings stands properly in its intended place.[TN020040]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “Their law is the same”: although the baraita concerning the three categories speaks of the great day of judgment [the wording is uncertain], the law of these rulings is the same, as he concludes, in

Rema of Fano

The judgment is true, and everything is properly ordered in all these great rulings. Their law is the same for the ages of the world that we mentioned at the opening of our discussion: “at the concealment, for the day of our festival,” at the judgment of death, and at the judgment of resurrection. For the Lord's judgments are true; they are righteous together. The matter depends only on repentance and the fulfillment of its conditions.

In chapter 3 we already explained, from the words of the prophet Isaiah, its four refinements in “turning from evil.” We reserved for this place the explanation of its two good degrees in “doing good,”

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

the three worlds: the judgment of Rosh Hashanah, the judgment of death, and the judgment of resurrection. These are the ages of the world mentioned at the beginning of the book. [TN020041]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Together”: they are alike, with the same judgments applying to them [the supplied wording is uncertain]. [TN020042]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “The matter depends only”: this refers back to “the judgment” [the rest of the lemma is unclear].

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

[TN020043] As far as judgment is concerned, we have only what the Sages said in these rulings; but the matter depends on repentance, as the Sages said there concerning "abundant in kindness": "This applies where they have no repentance," and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) "From the prophet's words": "Wash; make yourselves clean," and so forth, concerning turning from evil. We said that there are two kinds of repentance: the first consists solely of turning from evil; the second also adds doing good. In the division of turning from evil, we stated there four refinements of repentance.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) "Its two distinct degrees": these are the contemplative division and the practical division, to be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) "He mentioned them": we find that he likewise joined them to the initial refinements of turning from evil. These follow: "Learn to do well; seek justice; set right the oppressed; judge the orphan; plead for the widow."[TN020044] He thereby alluded to four refinements in the contemplative division and four in the practical division.

Rema of Fano - continued

each of which has four refinements. The son of Amotz mentioned them and joined them to the first. By saying "Learn to do well [heitev]," he explained our obligation to perfect ourselves in contemplation, with all our strength, of His commandments, His statutes, and His teachings. Everything is included in heitev, whose numerical value equals that of the great and awesome four-letter Name that is not pronounced. Contemplating it and its truth completes every kindness [so the supplied main text reads].[TN020039] Combining the letters in single, double, triple, and quadruple cumulative counts, as is customary in reckoning the holy letters among the many great authors, yields the Torah's seventy faces. We were already commanded to write the Torah upon the stones beyond the Jordan, "explaining it well [baʾer heitev]," and our Sages said that the commandment required us to write it in seventy languages.

After this came four further conditions concerning worthy action: "Seek justice; set right the oppressed; judge the orphan; plead for the widow." It is reasonable to understand these as attached, in order, to the four letters in the written form of the great Name, just as the four conditions expressly stated for "turning from evil" are attached to the four letters of its spoken substitute. One accustomed to the language of truth knows this.

Here we must be careful: a person's labor in Torah and commandments, even in fulfilling positive

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) "To perfect ourselves": in the contemplative division, examining with all one's strength its four refinements. These are the three divisions of Torah: commandments that reason obliges; statutes that reason does not oblige, which are the King's decree; and Torah—that is, written and oral Torah and law transmitted to Moses at Sinai. These are three refinements. Add contemplation of the Name YHWH, and there are four, as he mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) "Whose numerical value": is 26, like the Name YHWH. This hints that although pronouncing the Name according to its letters is forbidden, it is nevertheless good to contemplate it and the truth of His existence, blessed be He. Such contemplation supplies every lack, in the manner known [the final wording is uncertain].[TN020045]

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) "Combining the letters": we find a further allusion to Torah in heitev, by combining its letters in single, double, triple, and quadruple counts: ה; הי; היט; היטב. This is the reckoning customarily used by the select few. The letters total 70, alluding to the Torah's seventy faces.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) "We were already commanded": the same applies to heitev in the

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Torah, as it says, “You shall write upon the stones all the words of this Torah, well [heitev].” This alludes to the Torah's seventy faces.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “You shall write them”: they said that from this they learned to write the Torah in seventy languages.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “After this came”: after the prophet alluded to the four contemplative refinements by saying “Learn to do well,” he further explained four refinements of the practical division, saying “Seek justice,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “They are attached to the four letters”: of the Name YHWH, according to the known teaching that the yod of the Name is Ḥokhmah. This is “Seek justice,” for justice is a designation for Ḥokhmah, as in the Tiqqunim; see Pardes, Gate of the Designations, entry “justice.” “Set right the oppressed” corresponds to the first he, Binah. They commandments, may be called “turning from evil”—for example, wrapping oneself in tzitzit in order to remember not to stray after the thoughts of the heart and eyes. In other cases, even avoiding prohibitions may be called “doing good”: binding in fetters and iron chains the one who leads astray through them, together with his army and his officers, under the rule of the Holy One, blessed be He. This is the finest intention in observing them.

Rema of Fano - continued

This gives a commendable reason for what R. Ibn Ezra wrote in the Book of Substances: the body has 365 still vessels, corresponding to the number of nights—for us, these represent the prohibitions with the intention of turning from evil—and 365 pulsating vessels, corresponding to the number of days. According to our approach, these represent observing the prohibitions with the intention of doing good. This fits beautifully with what will be said concerning the Sages' statement, “Once he transgressed and repeated it, it became permitted to him,” in Part III, chapter 14. The limbs are not doubled, because in them turning from evil occurs only incidentally and in a measured degree, as is generally known.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

similarly alluded to it in “Who [mi] is this coming from Edom, with reddened [ḥamutz] garments?” according to the known teaching that Binah is called Mi. “Judge the orphan” corresponds to the vav of the Name, Tiferet, which without YH —Father and Mother—is an orphan, as explained in several places. “Plead for the widow” corresponds to the final he, Malkhut, called a widow when Tiferet is not with her.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “Just as the four conditions”: “Wash; make yourselves clean; remove; cease” are attached to the four letters of the pronounced Name Adonai. This is indicated by the numerical value of raḥatzu, hizakku, hasiru, ḥidlu, which totals 671, like the fully spelled-out Name of lordship: אלף דלת נון יוד, also totaling 671. For it is the gates [tarʿin] and the lower gate. See the treatise M.K., Part V, chapter [the supplied chapter notation is uncertain].[TN020046]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “One accustomed to the language of truth”: knows that these expressions are designations for the letters of the Name.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “Not to stray”: as it is written concerning it, “You shall not stray,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “To bind in fetters and iron chains”: the evil inclination that incites and leads people astray

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

through prohibitions; to bind the deceiver's power and officers under the rule of the Holy One, blessed be He, and make them into a good inclination. This is stated in [the source abbreviation is unclear], section Mishpatim, page 250 [uncertain]. Thus good is brought about by avoiding prohibitions [the connecting words are defective].[TN020047]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “Corresponding to the number of nights”: our Sages said that the 365 negative commandments correspond to 365 days and to the 365 sinews of the human being, while the 248 positive commandments correspond to the human being's 248 limbs. R. Abraham ibn Ezra wrote in [the Book of] Substances that there are such sets of 365 vessels in human beings: 365 pulsating vessels, which draw blood from the heart to the body's other parts, and 365 quiet, resting, nonpulsating vessels, which return and carry blood to the heart, as is known to natural philosophers and physicians. He, of blessed memory, said that these two sets of 365 vessels [the source wording is uncertain] correspond to 365 days and 365 nights.[TN020048] The nights correspond to the still vessels, for at night the world is quiet and rests; the days correspond to the pulsating ones. Accordingly, the author proposes to count the 365 prohibitions twice as well, through the two intentions mentioned: first, simply turning from evil; second, the aspect of doing good within them. The still vessels correspond to the intention of turning from evil, since with this intention and aspect the person is still: it is a matter of remaining passive and not acting. The pulsating vessels correspond to the intention of doing good, which is an active performance.

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “For us”: according to our position stated above.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “The Sages' statement”: there, in Part III, chapter 14, he explained the Sages' statement, “Once he transgressed and repeated it, it became permitted to him,” also in the manner stated above. [TN020049] “It became permitted to him” means that if he sinned twice, [the connective is unclear] he no longer binds the evil inclination in fetters and iron chains; rather, its strap has been loosened for him.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “The limbs are not doubled”: according to what was said of the sinews, one might expect the number of limbs to be doubled too—two sets of 248—corresponding to the two intentions implicit in positive commandments: the intention of doing good and their intention of turning from evil. The reason the limbs are not doubled is that turning from evil is present in them only incidentally and in a measured degree. The intention of turning from evil within positive commandments is not necessary in the way that the intention of doing good is necessary in avoiding prohibitions. There, since the evil inclination incited him to a transgression and he refrained from it, he does good and binds the evil inclination in iron chains, of itself and necessarily. With observing positive commandments it is different: he may wrap himself [in tzitzit] and nevertheless follow his eyes and his heart's willfulness. The aspect of turning from evil is therefore not necessary in them, but merely incidental and according to the measure ordained by His wisdom, blessed be He: through the positive commandment of tzitzit he remembers not to stray after his heart. Nevertheless, he is not compelled to refrain from straying. Since the intention of turning from evil in positive commandments is not necessary, the limbs comprise only one set of 248, corresponding to the positive commandments, not to the intention of turning from evil within them.

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Four refinements in turning from evil”: in chapter 3: “Wash; make yourselves clean; remove; cease doing evil.” See there. Here there are two degrees in doing good: perfection of contemplation and perfection of action. Each has two refinements [so the supplied commentary reads],[TN020050] their mystery being in the Name YHWH, which has four letters, with the tip of the yod as the fifth degree. Explicitly, concerning the refinement of action, he stated only four refinements [the repetition in the wording is uncertain]: “Learn to do well; seek justice; set right the oppressed; judge the orphan; plead for the widow,” and so forth.

“Combining the letters”: heitev has the numerical value 26, like the unpronounced Name. At present we do not read the Name as written, but with Adonai; hence “unpronounced” refers to speech. See there. Combining the letters of heitev in a double count, and so forth, gives 70: הי; היטב ;ה, and so forth [the supplied list omits the intermediate היט]. This ends one gloss.[TN020051]

But afterward I found the following: “Other conditions,” and so forth, are dirshu, ashru, shiftu, rivu, corresponding to the four letters of YHWH in writing. We need an explanation: if perfection of contemplation repairs the unpronounced four-letter Name, and worthy action likewise repairs the four written letters, namely YHWH, what advantage has contemplation over action? Certainly contemplation should have an advantage over action, since Torah study equals them all. I say that worthy action repairs the Name YHWH as the partner of the Name Adonai, which is repaired through turning from evil. Perfection of contemplation concerns the Name YHWH in its position above the Name Ehyeh, as explained in Tiqqunim, folio 31, Tiqqun 18: "YHWH, Adonai: these are the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Shekhinah," and so forth. See there at length. You needed this introduction, which we collected in our explanations. The intention is that when unification occurs in the letters YH, they unite and illuminate the two interwoven Names YHWH and Ehyeh. In the unification of the letters VH, the two Names YHWH and Adonai shine. Thus perfection of contemplation causes the unification of YHWH and Ehyeh, the companions above who do not separate, as above in chapter 3. Turning from evil and worthy action cause the unification of YHWH and Adonai.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Here I shall reveal a wondrous mystery: why does the repair and combination of YHWH through perfection of contemplation appear through the combination of heitev, whose letters are YH TB? The letters YH appear as themselves, whereas the letters VH do not appear as themselves, but as TB, whose numerical value equals VH. Why not use the combination ḤG, or VH [the source questions this combination], or YA? All these are combinations of the number of VH. It is to indicate the repair of YHWH and Ehyeh together.[TN020052] There is already a great mystery from the sages of truth: Ehyeh in its supreme root is not as it appears, but is comprised in three letters with the numerical value of the great and holy Name, namely BYṬ [בי"ט], whose number equals Ehyeh.[TN020053] Its source is higher than the high. Consult the explanation of the introduction attributed to Ari, of blessed memory. From it proceeds the good oil: SHEMEN becomes BYṬ under atbash. Thus heitev contains the letters BYṬ, the Name Ehyeh united with it; adding he gives YHWH. Afterward [the connective is uncertain], heitev is prepared to unify every [the final words are unclear].[TN020054]

The sages of truth further explain YHWH by the count of preceding letters—that is, the letters preceding the letters of YHWH, namely alef, bet [text missing]—equaling "limdu heitev," "learn to do well."[TN020055]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Wash; make yourselves clean; remove; cease": these are the four refinements of turning from evil, attached to the four letters of the spoken substitute. Their number is 671 [the source marks this uncertain], like the spoken Name Adonai spelled out as אלף דלת נון יוד, whose value is 671. This means a gateway to all the ways of repentance: one who immerses while holding a creeping thing has not repented. In hasiru [הסירו], the letters HS allude to Adonai, whose numerical value is 65. What remains is: from אלף, לף; from למד, דלת [so the source reads]; from נון, ון; from יוד, וד; then נרו [uncertain]. As the author of M.G.L.ʿ. expounded at length concerning its mystery, and [an uncertain word] of dalet, namely the concealed portion: the words raḥatzu, hizakku, ḥidlu, together with the yod of hasiru, total the tav of the spelling dalet, 400. For hasiru is the principal refinement: "Remove the evil of your deeds from before My eyes." Thus far what I found afterward.[TN020056]

"They are attached to the four written letters": these are the Name YHWH. It appears to me [the following abbreviation is unclear] that yod is justice, as stated in the Zohar, section Shoftim: "'For God is judge'—this is yod." He is "set right the oppressed": the first he, Binah, Mi; "coming from Edom, with reddened garments"—Mi is Binah to those versed in the hidden wisdom, and it is "Mi created these [elleh]."[TN020057]

"Judge the orphan": this is vav, for Joseph is Ḥesed and vav, as we say: VV is Ḥesed; VYV is Jacob. Joseph —the body and the covenant are reckoned as one— and Jacob is called an orphan, and so forth, as Ari, of blessed memory, wrote [the following abbreviation is uncertain]. But of Joseph it is written, "Beautiful of form and beautiful of appearance"—yefeh toʾar ve-yefeh marʾeh—whose initials spell YTWM, "orphan." He is called Ḥesed, VYV.[TN020058]

"Plead for the widow": this is the final he, as Galanti wrote, "within ... a dry he," and so forth [the quotation is uncertain]. That is, Malkhut, the final he, in exile is [the following abbreviation sequence cannot be confidently expanded].[TN020059]

What we wrote concerning heitev: its numerical

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

value is seventy [in the cumulative reckoning]; [the following phrase about contemplation is unclear]. For YHWH bears the vowel points of Elohim, since every point is YHWH, and altogether they are six points, totaling 76 [so the supplied numeral reads; the following abbreviation is uncertain].[TN020060] The matter is that Israel's root is in the Name YHWH, as it says, “You are children”; you are called adam, but the nations of the world are not called adam. Adam has the numerical value 45, like the Name YHWH [in the reckoning invoked here], which is complete mercy. The nations of the world, however, have their root and source in the Name Elohim. As Ari, of blessed memory, wrote in his writings concerning “that I may place these signs of Mine within him”: Pharaoh said, “YHWH I do not know.” If it is Elohim, “Who [mi] is YHWH, that I should obey His voice?” Rather, my god is Mi. What did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He gave ELH to MY and made ELOHIM. See there: “Who and who [mi va-mi] are going?” Then [a defective phrase involving YM follows]. Their source is Elohim, which has the numerical value seventy [so the text states], namely all the seventy languages. Nevertheless, there must be a small element of YHWH, since without this they have no existence.[TN020061]

This too appears to me [the abbreviation is unclear]: since we said above that yod is “seek justice,” and find that yod is the body of the sword, the two hes are its two edges, and vav is the sword's sheath, this is “If I sharpen the lightning of My sword, and My hand takes hold of judgment.” According to the plain explanation, “takes hold of judgment” is yod. The allusion in “My hand” [yadi] is the letters of yod, for we find repeatedly in the writings [a defective sequence involving “your hands,” “these,” and a further unclear word]; see there.[TN020062]

“Attached to the four letters of the spoken substitute”: this is the Name of lordship, also

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 11

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

explained [an unclear abbreviation] by Galanti. Examine it closely.[TN020063]

“One accustomed to Sefat Emet knows this”: this means a book called Sefat Emet, “Language of Truth.”

“To bind in fetters and iron chains the one who leads astray through them”: he binds the evil inclination in chains, since it incites and misleads people. Thus, when he binds it through commandments—that is, through observing the prohibitions—he is called one who does good, for he subdues the evil inclination and its activity to the Holy One, blessed be He, and it becomes a good inclination.

“365 pulsating vessels, corresponding to the days, which according to our approach”: so it should read, lefi, without a vav. “Observing the prohibitions with the intention of doing good”: this corresponds to the days; see there.

“Once he transgressed and repeated it, it became permitted to him”: he transgressed and repeated the sin. Above we said that in observing prohibitions one binds the evil inclination in iron chains; but if he repeats the sin, its strap is loosened for him, and he does not bind it, and so forth.

“The limbs are not doubled”: we say that 365 negative commandments correspond to 365 sinews, and 248 positive commandments to 248 limbs. Here, however, we say that there are two sets of limbs, 365 [so the commentary reads].[TN020064] He answers that they have only one set of 365, and so forth. “Turning from evil occurs in them only incidentally and in a measured degree”: as the philosophers wrote, turning from evil is incidental with respect to them. Examine it closely.

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 12 (יב)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד · נה · נו · נז · נח · נט · ס · סא · סב · סג · סד · סה · סו · סז · סח · ע · עא · עב · עג · עד · עה · עו · עז · עח · עט · פ · פא · פב · פג · פד · פה · פו · פז · פח · פט

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “Come now, let us clarify our case”: after expounding “Seek justice,” and so forth, in the preceding chapter, the author continues in the next three chapters to expound the following verse, “Come now, let us clarify our case,” likewise concerning repentance, including the expositions relevant to it.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “We shall clear ourselves”: the author explains ve-nivvakeḥah as though it were an active form, although it is nifal. Were it active, the nun and vav would have to be pointed with a ḥolam. Nevertheless, he explains it actively: “Let us clarify”—we shall clear ourselves—as he concludes at the end of the verse, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Such is the use of nifal”: we find other expressions where the use of nifal turns into an active sense, as in “Amasa did not guard himself from Joab's sword.” The form nishmar indicates nifal, yet its explanation is active: he did not guard himself from Joab's sword. So too ve-nivvakeḥah here.

Rema of Fano

“Come now, let us clarify our case, says the Lord” (Isaiah 1:18): I and you shall clear ourselves. Such is the use of the nifal form, as in “Amasa did not guard himself” (II Samuel 20:10). It is known from the laws governing judges that if a poor person and a wealthy person come to judgment, the wealthy one is told, “Dress as he does, or dress him as you do.” At the beginning of this disputation in the future, He will fulfill the first alternative in His own person; shortly we shall speak of it in terms the ear can receive. At its end, He will clothe us in garments of salvation, a mantle of righteousness. The righteous are destined to be called by His Name, as is known.

This verse encompasses both divisions. Concerning the first—repentance from fear, or not for its own sake, for His kindness is great up to the heavens for those who attain it, and no further, namely up to the throne of glory, as we mentioned in chapter 3—the prophet said, “Come now, let us clarify our case.” This accords with what we learned: “He is the witness; He is the judge; He is the litigant” (Mishnah Avot 4:22). In relation to the sinner's offense against himself, He is witness. He already testified concerning us: “They have corrupted themselves—not Him; His children, their blemish” (Deuteronomy 32:5), which we translate, “They corrupted themselves,

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “It is known from the laws governing judges”: the author explains the latter part of the verse, “Though your sins be like scarlet, they shall become white as snow”: why the comparison to scarlet and snow?

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “He will fulfill”: the blessed Lord will Himself fulfill the first alternative addressed to the wealthy man, “Dress as he does.” Of Him it is said in Daniel, “The Ancient of Days sat; His garment was white as snow.” In the future He will, as it were, clothe Himself in the soiled garments of the exiles [the source word is uncertain] descending to Gehinnom, in order to whiten them, as stated in the Zohar, Shelaḥ Lekha, page 338. [TN020065] Of this it is said, “Who is this coming from Edom, with reddened garments?” This will occur when He, blessed be He, enters Gehinnom in the future to bring Israel out of it, as will be explained at the beginning of the next chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “We shall speak of it in terms the ear can receive”: to accommodate and soothe the ear, not as a literal account—God forbid

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

—for the Torah speaks in human language.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “At its end”: at the end of the disputation the Holy One, blessed be He, will clothe Himself in garments of salvation, a mantle of righteousness, to save Israel and bring them out of Gehinnom.[TN020066] This is how the verse “Who is this coming from Edom?” concludes: “speaking in righteousness, mighty to save.”

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “The righteous are destined”: this is what R. Yoḥanan said in the chapter “The Ship”: the righteous are destined to be called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He. Accordingly, everything follows what is said in Tiqqunim, folio 3: “As His Name, so His garment.” In the future the righteous will leave Gehinnom with Him, blessed be He, and then their soiled garments too will be clothed in snowy white. This is the second clothing alternative, “Dress him as you do,” as the verse here concludes, “Though your sins be like scarlet, they shall become white as snow.”

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “This verse”: “Come now, let us clarify our case” encompasses the two divisions of repentance: repentance from love and repentance from fear. As not Him.” Between a person and another, He is judge; between a person and the Omnipresent, He is litigant.

Rema of Fano - continued

Thus David says, “Against You alone have I sinned” (Psalms 51:6), for none but You sees, and You are witness, as stated. “What is evil in Your eyes I have done”: You are judge; therefore he said, “So that You may be righteous in Your speaking.” As litigant, “You may prevail in Your judgment.” These last two descriptions are fully joined, so that what is said of one applies to the other, strengthening our faith in Him and our acknowledgment of His judgment as just. Otherwise, it should have said, “You may be righteous in Your judgment,” and likewise, “You may prevail in Your speaking.”

Alternatively, the verse's parts refer across to one another and encompass judge and litigant alone: “Against You alone have I sinned, so that You may be righteous in Your speaking; what is evil in Your eyes I have done, so that You may prevail in Your judgment.” By saying afterward, “For I know my transgressions,” he accepted the witness's authority over him, although He alone testifies as a single witness. To construe “so that” precisely in its straightforward sense under this second approach: he says that You must “prevail in Your judgment”—that is, secure Your own vindication in what You judge—first by establishing that You alone are my opposing litigant. My sin bears no relation to anyone else whatsoever, as is known from Uriah's case: he rebelled against the kingship, had never the Gemara says in the final chapter of Yoma: “Resh Laqish said: great is repentance, for deliberate sins become as inadvertent ones, as it is said, ‘Return, Israel, unto the Lord your God, for you have stumbled in your iniquity.’ Iniquity is deliberate, yet it calls it stumbling. Is that so? Did Resh Laqish not say: great is repentance, for deliberate sins become merits, as it is said, ‘When the wicked person turns from his wickedness and performs justice and righteousness, through them he shall surely live’? There is no difficulty: here it is from love; there it is from fear.”

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “Concerning the first, which is from fear”: the author begins with this repentance because Hosea, who spoke of repentance in “Return, Israel,” preceded Ezekiel, who spoke of repentance from love in “When the wicked person turns,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “Or not for its own sake”: in the straightforward sense, as one raises the contradiction: it is written, “For Your kindness is great above the heavens,” and it is written, “For Your kindness is great up to the heavens.” The former concerns those who act for its own sake; the latter, those who act not for its own sake.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “Namely, up to the throne of glory”: there in Yoma, R. Levi says: “Great is repentance, for it reaches the throne of glory, as it is said, ‘Return, Israel, unto the Lord your God.’” It is known that heavens designate Tiferet, and the throne of glory likewise designates Tiferet. Thus the author holds that R. Levi discusses repentance from fear, which is why concerning action not for its own sake it says, “His kindness reaches up to the heavens.” His statement and Resh Laqish's “Great is repentance, for deliberate sins become inadvertent ones” are one matter. This follows what the author wrote above in chapter 3: their deliberate aspect is cast beneath the throne of glory, leaving only the part of inadvertence [the source here reads “cloud”]. [TN020067] See there.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “The prophet said”: concerning repentance from fear, the prophet said, “Come now, let us clarify our case,” because the inadvertent aspect still remains to be atoned for, as stated. The blessed Lord must dispute with the princes of the nations of the world, who argue, “These and those [worship] idols,” as the author concludes at the chapter's end. See chapter 14, where approached Bathsheba in all his days, and had written her a bill of divorce.

Rema of Fano - continued

Nothing remained of David's sin except that he strengthened the sword of the Ammonites against Israel's camp, lest they say, “Our hand is exalted.” Furthermore, his coming to Bathsheba was no less than someone taking meat from a butcher without paying immediately, and his colleagues were certainly ashamed of what was heard concerning him. There is here both inadvertence and deliberateness in desecrating the Name; both concern him and the Omnipresent alone. “So that You may be righteous,” as judge, “in Your speaking” through Nathan: “You shall not die.”

Or he says, “Against You alone have I sinned”—in thought, which no one but You recognizes; “what is evil in Your eyes I have done”—these are the courts above, as below. “So that You may be righteous in Your speaking,” since the deed deserves forgiveness, You must “prevail in Your judgment” by judging the thought favorably. The verb is intransitive: He, as it were, vindicates Himself when He acquits His children through judgment. Both explanations are well fitted and true in themselves: “so that You may be righteous” is the purpose of “You may prevail in Your judgment,” not a cause of the sin.

The Sages, however, interpreted these as playful words, to find favor through his songs and praises, so that it should not be said that the servant defeated his master, as in the Zohar and in the

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

he completes the second exposition with “He concludes concerning the second division,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “This accords”: the Holy One's saying “let us clarify our case” as a litigant accords with this, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “In relation to the sinner, between him and himself”: a person who sins against the Omnipresent, blessed be He, harms himself and his soul. This is sinning against himself, and the blessed Lord is witness to it.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “Between him and another”: when a person sins against his fellow.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “Against You alone”: the author explains the entire passage: “For I know my transgressions, and my sin is before me always. Against You alone have I sinned, and what is evil in Your eyes I have done, so that You may be righteous in Your speaking and prevail in Your judgment” (Psalms 51).

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “None but You sees”: he explains “against You alone” as “before You alone, and You are my witness; I sinned against myself.”

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “You are judge”: he explains, “What is evil in Your eyes, the judge's eyes, I have done to another.”

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “Therefore”: because He, blessed be He, is judge, David said, “So that You may be righteous in Your speaking”: that You may be righteous in the judgments You judged and pronounced concerning me. The expression “be righteous” applies to a judge who judges justly.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “As litigant”: “You may prevail in Your judgment” is said because the blessed Lord is the litigant. “Prevail” applies to a litigant who wins. Accordingly, “in Your judgment” means in the litigation and case You have with me.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “The last two descriptions”: judge and litigant.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “Fully joined”: he says, concerning the aspect of judge, “so that You may be righteous in Your speaking,” and concerning the aspect of litigant, “prevail in Your judgment.” The word “so that” joins and includes them together.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(כד) “So that what is said”: so that “be righteous” also refers to “in Your judgment,” and “prevail” also refers to “in Your chapter Ḥeleq. It is as though he said, “I sinned to confirm Your words, ‘For the inclination of the human heart is evil from youth’” (Genesis 8:21), so that it is fitting to say, “There is no righteous person on earth who does good and does not sin” (Ecclesiastes 7:20). Even in our performance of commandments there are many deficiencies, as we shall mention in Part II, chapter 16.

Rema of Fano - continued

Scripture gives good counsel: “It is good for a man that he bear a yoke in his youth” (Lamentations 3:27). It says that it is good for him, while still a man in his vigor and strength, to bear the yoke of Torah and commandments in the aspect where his inclination overpowers him. This is “in his youth,” as above. Otherwise, it is difficult that the verse begins with a grown man and ends with a youth. Moreover, it says “he shall bear,” in the future, which would certainly reverse the proposition. Rather, as we have said, the lamenting prophet spoke of the inclination that is evil from youth. It is good for the man who subdues it and restores it to the good. He is assured that the Holy One, blessed be He, helps him, for “He knows our inclination,” which was recorded in the Torah two thousand years before the world, when our existence was still in the nonbeing preceding coming-to-be. This is “that we are dust” (Psalms 103:14). The word ki functions as “when,” and everything came from dust, as is known. Zakhor is then passive in its ordinary sense, “remembered,” referring to the inclination. This is a sound plain interpretation.

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

speaking.” This further strengthens our faith: we believe in Him, blessed be He, as a true judge and in the justice of His cases with us—that is, as litigant. Therefore, through this combination each expression is doubled, strengthening the matter, as it is known that every repetition serves to strengthen.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(כה) “Otherwise”: otherwise, the expressions should have been reversed, placing “in Your judgment” beside “be righteous,” language more appropriate to the judge, meaning “in the judgment You decree.” Likewise, “in Your speaking” should have been placed beside “prevail,” language more appropriate to the litigant, meaning “in the arguments You have.” It is therefore certainly as we said: “so that” joins them, applying what is said of one to the other.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(כו) “And likewise, ‘You may prevail’”: likewise, it should have said, “You may prevail in Your speaking.”

Yad Yehudah - כז

(כז) “Its parts refer across to one another”: “so that You may be righteous in Your speaking” refers to “against You alone have I sinned,” and “prevail in Your judgment” refers to “what is evil in Your eyes I have done," as he proceeds to explain.

Yad Yehudah - כז - continued

Yad Yehudah - כח

(כח) "Judge and litigant alone": it does not include witness. He completes that in the preceding verse, "For I know my transgressions": I know that Your testimony concerning my transgressions is true.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(כט) "He says": "Against You alone have I sinned"—from the aspect of judgment, and therefore "You may be righteous." "What is evil in Your eyes I have done"—from the aspect of litigant, "so that You may prevail." It will shortly be explained that He alone testifies as a single witness; for this reason David had to accept His authority over him.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(ל) "Straightforwardly": excluding the interpretation that will also appear below, in which "so that" is a cause of the sin.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(לא) "In what You judge": favorably. "In Your judgment" means that You first judge that You alone are my opposing litigant, and that I did not sin against Uriah or Bathsheba. Uriah rebelled against the kingship by saying "my lord Joab," as the Sages said in Qiddushin. Regarding Bathsheba, she had a bill

Rema of Fano - continued

Or he says, "Against You alone have I sinned" in the matter of Bathsheba: he inadvertently desecrated the Name, thinking to conceal the matter. "The evil"—the deliberate offense concerning Uriah—"in Your eyes I have done." These are the seven eyes of the Lord, heads of the courts above, corresponding to the eyes of the congregation below. From the great dignity of Israel, authority is entrusted to them to put to death through the Sanhedrin or royal justice, not through the sword of the Ammonites, as stated.

Or he says, "Against You alone," in the highest world: the deeds of those below cause no blemish there, only a diminution of Your perfection. "I sinned" would then mean "I and my son Solomon shall be deficient [ḥattaʾim]." The actual blemish, however, reaches the world of ministering beings that we mentioned. Because Adam's sin decreed death upon him and upon David, as is known concerning "you shall surely die," and as will be explained, David stumbled in this matter in something resembling forbidden sexual relations and bloodshed. Likewise, he sought to worship idols when fleeing from Absalom (Sanhedrin 107a), as it is written, "David came to the summit" (II Samuel 15:32), in order to justify Heaven's judgment in the eyes of the multitude. They had not grasped the mystery of soul impregnation and would wonder at his many songs and praises, which had not sufficed to save him from the judgment of death and make him Messiah.

Yad Yehudah - לא - continued

of divorce from Uriah, as the Sages also said there. It is already stated in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 150, concerning "Against You alone have I sinned": "King David sinned against the Holy One, blessed be He, and not against human beings. If you say: did he not commit that sin concerning Bathsheba? We learned that one who comes upon a woman with her consent renders her forbidden to her husband, and sins against his fellow and against the Holy One, blessed be He. It is not so: that act was permitted; David took what was his, and she had a bill of divorce from her husband before he went to war," and so forth. See there. [TN020068]

Besides this, the Sages said in the Zohar on Genesis, page 38, that Dumah, the official of Gehinnom, accused David greatly when he performed that act. Finally, he said to the Holy One, blessed be He, that David should have waited three months and had not waited. The Holy One replied: "In what case was this rule established? Where we are concerned that she is pregnant. It is revealed before Me that Uriah never approached her." See there.

Thus nothing remained for David except his sin between himself and the

Yad Yehudah - לא - continued

Omnipresent, blessed be He, in killing Uriah through the sword of the Ammonites and thereby strengthening that sword against Israel. As the aforementioned Zohar, Mishpatim, concludes: "Thus David sinned only against the Holy One, blessed be He, and not against another, for he killed Uriah by the sword of the Ammonites," and so forth. Scripture says, "Nothing was found with him except in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." "Except" comes to exclude: "in the matter of Uriah," not "against Uriah." Likewise, Scripture says, "Him you killed by the sword of the Ammonites." On every Ammonite sword was engraved the image of a dragon, the crooked serpent, their idol. The Holy One, blessed be He, said: "You gave strength to that abomination, for when the Ammonites killed Uriah and many Israelites with him, the sword of the Ammonites prevailed at that time. How greatly did the crooked serpent and idolatry gain strength!" This is what the Sages said in expounding "Him you killed by the sword of the Ammonites": you should have judged him in the Sanhedrin.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(לב) "Furthermore": he also sinned against the Omnipresent in the matter

Rema of Fano - continued

In light of all this, we can examine precisely a verse that is beautiful and pleasant, calling, "Expound me": "I shall make my sin known to You, and my iniquity I did not cover; I said, 'I shall confess against myself my transgressions to the Lord,' and You bore the iniquity of my sin, selah." Many points require attention. First, what is this making known to Heaven? Why place it with "sin," while denying concealment of "iniquity"? Why is one in the future and the other in the past, while concerning transgressions he adopts both, "I said, I shall confess"? Why "I shall confess against myself my transgressions," when transgressions are rebellions, and here not even one is so grave? Why "You bore," in the past? Why attach the deliberate offense to the inadvertent one, saying "the iniquity of my sin"? Who forgives and remits the transgressions mentioned first? What place has "selah" here?

With what we have established, everything is in order. He says: my inadvertent offense concerning Bathsheba I shall make known to You, faithful Judge. This is like what we learned in the chapter "When Judgment Is Concluded": if he says, "I have something to argue in my own defense," they bring him back, provided there is substance to his words. My iniquity concerning Uriah I did not conceal from the outset, by laying my judgment upon Joab, though I was entitled to do so, since there is no agency for a transgression. To the multitude I said that I wished to confess my two offenses, which I magnified against myself, becoming of Bathsheba through desecrating the Name, because the matter became known: David's colleagues were ashamed of him concerning the inadvertent offense [the source word is questioned].[TN020069] As the Sages said in the final chapter of Yoma: "What constitutes desecration of the Name? Rav said: for someone like me to take meat from a butcher and not pay immediately. The school of R. Yannai said: anyone whose colleagues are ashamed because of what is reported about him."

Yad Yehudah - לב - continued

Yad Yehudah - לג

(לג) "There is here inadvertence and deliberateness in desecrating the Name": the author chose a favorable formulation [the wording is uncertain].[TN020070] He means inadvertence concerning Bathsheba, since David thought to conceal the matter, as shortly below; deliberateness concerning Uriah, through the sword of the Ammonites. In both there was the desecration of the Name mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(לד) "Both": the matter of Bathsheba and the matter of Uriah.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(לה) "So that You may be righteous": under this reading the verse runs: "Against You alone have I

Yad Yehudah - לה - continued

sinned”—You are judge; “what is evil in Your eyes”—You are litigant; “so that You may be righteous in Your speaking,” which You spoke and sent to me through Nathan the prophet: “The Lord too has passed over your sin; you shall not die.” The reason for this ruling is “so that You may prevail in Your judgment”: first vindicate the judgment by which You judged that You alone are my opposing litigant, and that I did evil in Your eyes, not against another. For in the matters of Uriah and Bathsheba I sinned only in what relates to You. In this respect [the source connective is uncertain] my sin was against You, and You are righteous in Your words.[TN020071]

Yad Yehudah - לו

(לו) “The courts above”: called the eyes of the Lord, as shortly below. “In Your eyes” is precise: I did evil exceedingly transgressive in their eyes in order to justify Your judgment before them. I would join to them all my earlier transgressions, even though Yom Kippur had passed over them. This is “my transgressions to the Lord”: he wished his words to be true both openly and inwardly.

Rema of Fano - continued

You joined my good intention to the deed, and from the moment of that declaration You bore the iniquity concerning Uriah and judged it subordinate to my inadvertent offense concerning Bathsheba. This occurred in the supreme court of the Holy Ancient One, whose mercies are many and eternal, without interruption. This is his “selah.”

We return to the prophet's admonition, “Come now, let us clarify our case.” It means: let us first clarify our judgment with the adversaries who argue, “These and those are transgressors.” Afterward, “In the Lord all the seed of Israel shall be justified and shall glory.”

Yad Yehudah - לו - continued

in action, which the courts above also recognize.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(לז) “So that You may be righteous”: the end of the verse means: so that You may be righteous in Your statement that You would forgive the deed, You must prevail in Your judgment, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(לח) “The verb ‘prevail’ is intransitive”: according to the explanation just given, the tav should have been pointed with a segol and the zayin with a pataḥ [the source questions this vocalization], making it transitive—that is, to judge the thought favorably. [TN020072] It is intransitive instead because He, blessed be He, as it were vindicates Himself, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(לט) “The purpose”: the purpose of “prevail in Your judgment” is “so that You may be righteous in Your speaking.”

Yad Yehudah - לט - continued

Yad Yehudah - מ

(מ) “Not a cause of the sin”: as one might explain according to the plain wording, with “so that You may be righteous” referring to “against You alone have I sinned”: I sinned for this reason, so that You may be righteous. This makes no sense. It was therefore necessary to soften the expression through one of the preceding approaches. If “so that You may be righteous” is a purpose, however, it is more readily understood.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(מא) “The Sages, however, interpreted”: they interpreted the verse as it sounds, making “so that You may be righteous” the cause of the sin: so that it should not be said that the servant defeated his master. This is in the chapter Ḥeleq: “Rava expounded: what is the meaning of ‘Against You alone have I sinned, and what is evil in Your eyes I have done, so that You may be righteous in Your speaking,’ and so forth? David said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the world, it is revealed and known before You that had I wished to subdue my inclination, I would have subdued it. But I said: let it not be said that the servant defeated his master.”

Yad Yehudah - מא - continued

Nevertheless, one need not be astonished at this reason, for David said it only playfully. As stated in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 158 [uncertain]: “David was the King's jester. Although he was distressed, once he was before the King he returned to jesting, to gladden [text missing] Master of the world, I can [the wording is uncertain]: ‘Examine me, Lord, and test me.’ You [said] that I would not be able to withstand it, for I sinned, ‘so that You may be righteous in Your speaking,’ and Your words be true,” and so forth. See there.[TN020073] This form of excuse, “so that You may be righteous,” was not stated by David as the truth; otherwise it would make transgression of the law permissible for this reason. Rather, it is a playful plea to find favor in His eyes, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - מא - continued

Yad Yehudah - מב

(מב) “Even in performing commandments”: [text missing] the words “does good” are redundant, since it could have said briefly, “There is no righteous person on earth who does not sin.” Therefore he says that the intention is “who does good and does not sin” even in that good deed. [TN020074]

Yad Yehudah - מג

(מג) “While still a man”: as the Sages said. See Part IV, chapter 17.

Yad Yehudah - מד

(מד) “This is ‘in his youth,’ as above”: his inclination is evil from youth. The meaning is that he should subdue his evil inclination in the very matter where it overpowers him.

Yad Yehudah - מה

(מה) “Otherwise”: if you wish to explain the verse as it sounds, the difficulty is, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - מו

(מו) “It would reverse the proposition”: it indicates that the grown man shall bear a yoke in his youth, when his youthful days have already passed away. It should have said in the past tense, “that he bore a yoke in his youth.”

Yad Yehudah - מז

(מז) “Rather, as we said”: Jeremiah, the lamenting writer, does not speak here of youthful days [the source questions the connective], but of the evil inclination that is evil from youth.[TN020075] He teaches us that it is good for a man to bear the yoke of the evil inclination and subdue it while standing in his strength as a man.

Yad Yehudah - מח

(מח) “The Holy One helps him”: as the Sages said, “If the Holy One, blessed be He, did not help him, he could not overcome it,” as it is said, “The Lord will not leave him in its hand.”

Yad Yehudah - מט

(מט) “Recorded in the Torah”: incidentally, the author explains the verse, “For He knows our inclination; remembered, when we are dust” (Psalms 103). He says that “remembered” refers to “our inclination”: He, blessed be He, knew our inclination, recorded in the Torah when we were still dust, before the world's creation. It is known that the Torah preceded the world by two thousand years, and it already recorded, “For the inclination of the human heart is evil from youth.” He explains “when we are dust” as before the world's coming-to-be, for the existence between the nonbeing preceding the world and the world itself is called dust. Concerning this, the author expounded “Everything came from dust,” and so forth, in [the treatise named in the supplied source as] Me-Ḥavvayot ʿOlam, chapter 3. See there.[TN020076]

Yad Yehudah - נ

(נ) “The word ‘remembered’”: in this verse is passive and refers to “our inclination,” as though it said “our inclination that is mentioned.” There is no need for the commentators' forced interpretations of this word; see there.

Yad Yehudah - נא

(נא) “Inadvertent in desecrating the Name”: as above. He therefore said “I sinned,” using the term for inadvertence.

Yad Yehudah - נב

(נב) “Deliberate concerning Uriah”: as above, in killing him through the sword of the Ammonites. He was also deliberate in desecrating the Name.

Yad Yehudah - נג

(נג) “These are the seven eyes of the Lord”: mentioned in “These seven are the eyes of the Lord, ranging through all the earth.” In the Zohar, Raʿaya Meheimna, Pineḥas, page 424, concerning “The eyes of the Lord your God are upon it,” they said, “From those above the seventy of the Sanhedrin draw nourishment,” and so forth. The leaders of tens among them are the seven heads of the courts.

Yad Yehudah - נד

(נד) “Corresponding to them”: the eyes of the congregation above correspond to the Sanhedrin

Yad Yehudah - נד - continued

below. Their granted authority to judge and put to death comes from above.

Yad Yehudah - נה

(נה) “As expounded in the Zohar”: concerning “and who is the sword of your majesty.” This is in Balaq, page 305, on “He shone from Seir upon them”: “The Holy One, blessed be He, called Samael, who came before Him. He said to him: Do you want My Torah? He asked: What is written in it? He replied: You shall not murder,” and so forth. “He said: Far be it! This Torah is Yours, and let it remain Yours; I do not want the Torah. He returned and pleaded before Him: Master of the world, if You give it to me, all my dominion passes away, for my dominion concerns killing. There will be no wars, and my dominion is over the planet Mars. If so, everything is abolished from the world. Master of the world, take Your Torah; let me have no portion or inheritance in it. But if it pleases You, here is the people, the children of Jacob: it befits them.” He thought he was thereby informing against them, and so forth. “Samael said: Certainly, if the children of Jacob accept this, they will pass from the world and never rule,” and so forth.

“He said to him: Since that is so, give Me counsel as to how I shall make the children of Jacob whom you mentioned accept it. He replied: Master of the world, they must be bribed. Take light from the radiance of the heavenly hosts and place it upon them; through this they will accept it. Mine shall be first. He stripped from himself the radiance that covered him and gave it to Him to give to Israel. This is ‘He shone from Seir upon them’—literally from Seir, namely Samael, as it is written, ‘The goat [saʿir] shall bear upon itself’; ‘upon them’ means upon Israel,” and so forth. “Through the radiance stripped from Samael, [Israel] took the sword and killing, to kill through judgment and to kill as is fitting. This is ‘and who is the sword of your majesty’: although it was not yours, he took it through that blessing stripped from him,” and so forth. See there.

One may perhaps infer from the author's position that royal law sentencing a rebel against the kingship to death belongs to the law of the four judicial death penalties, and that this too was a gift to Israel at the giving of the Torah, from Esau's prince. He wrote similarly below in chapter 18:

Yad Yehudah - נה - continued

“Therefore the law of kingship is law.”[TN020077] This is also implied by the Zohar's words: after “to kill through judgment,” it adds “and to kill as is fitting.” All this implies that David should have judged Uriah in the Sanhedrin or through royal justice. He failed to do so and thereby blemished the courts above, the eyes of the Lord, which granted the judgment of death below only through these two ways. This is “what is evil in Your eyes I have done.” See the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 150, concerning this exposition.

Yad Yehudah - נו

(נו) “In the highest world”: in the world of Atzilut, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - נז

(נז) “There is no blemish there”: from the deeds of those below, and there is no separation there—God forbid. Of it is said, “I am the Lord; that is My Name, and My glory I will not give to another,” as explained in the Zohar, Ki Tetze, page 536.

Yad Yehudah - נח

(נח) “Only a diminution of Your perfection”: a lack in the fulfillment of Your will, which is not accomplished below.

Yad Yehudah - נט

(נט) “Then the meaning”: of “I sinned” is deficiency, as in “I and my son Solomon shall be ḥattaʾim,” meaning deprived of the kingship. Likewise, the meaning in the present matter is a great deficiency with respect to You.

Yad Yehudah - ס

(ס) “To the world of ministering beings”: the worlds of Yetzirah and Beriah, for the youths are the angels, and likewise [the connecting abbreviation is uncertain] the seraphim. They too serve the Lord and are called ministering angels.[TN020078]

Yad Yehudah - סא

(סא) “That we mentioned”: shortly above concerning “in Your eyes.” That is, “what is evil in Your eyes”—the blemish in the world of ministering beings—“I have done.”

Yad Yehudah - סב

(סב) “You shall surely die”: the Sages expounded it in several places: death for him and death for his descendants. This therefore applied to David, who was his descendant and Adam's reincarnation. As is known, ADAM is an acronym for Adam, David,

Yad Yehudah - סב - continued

Messiah.

Yad Yehudah - סג

(סג) “As will be explained”: below, chapter 22; see there.

Yad Yehudah - סד

(סד) “In this”: concerning Bathsheba and Uriah.

Yad Yehudah - סה

(סה) “Resembling forbidden sexual relations and bloodshed”: although these were not actual forbidden sexual relations and bloodshed, since Bathsheba had a bill of divorce and Uriah rebelled against the kingship, they nevertheless resembled forbidden sexual relations and bloodshed.

Yad Yehudah - סו

(סו) “As it is written, ‘David came’”: the Sages expounded this in the chapter Ḥeleq: David sought to worship idols, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - סז

(סז) “To justify Heaven's judgment”: for this reason he stumbled in these grave offenses. This is his saying, “so that You may be righteous.”

Yad Yehudah - סח

(סח) “The mystery of soul impregnation”: they did not know this mystery and did not understand [the source questions the verb] that David died through the sin of Adam the first human, because he was his reincarnation.[TN020079]

Yad Yehudah - סט

(סט) “For here”: there are several difficulties to raise [the middle word is unclear].[TN020080]

Yad Yehudah - ע

(ע) “What is this making known to Heaven”: he said, “I shall make my sin known to You,” as though, without that disclosure, it would—God forbid—have been hidden from Him, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - עא

(עא) “Why place”: this disclosure beside “sin,” saying affirmatively, “I shall make my sin known to You,” while concerning “iniquity” he uses a negative expression, “I did not cover”?

Yad Yehudah - עב

(עב) “Why”: concerning sin he uses the future, “I shall make known to You”; concerning iniquity he says “I did not cover,” in the past. Concerning transgressions, he includes both: “I said, I shall confess against myself my transgressions.” These are two: “I said” in the past; “I shall confess” in the future.

Yad Yehudah - עב - continued

Yad Yehudah - עג

(עג) “Why”: transgressions are rebellions, as stated in chapter 3 of Yoma [so the supplied reference reads]. Not one of David's offenses was as grave as rebellion against Him, blessed be He.[TN020081]

Yad Yehudah - עד

(עד) “Why”: does he say “You bore,” in the past?

Yad Yehudah - עה

(עה) “Why”: does he say “the iniquity of my sin” in a construct phrase, attaching iniquity, which is deliberate, to sin, which is inadvertent?

Yad Yehudah - עו

(עו) “The transgressions”: which he first mentioned in “my transgressions to the Lord” [the connective is uncertain].[TN020082] He says, “I shall confess against myself my transgressions,” but concludes, “You bore the iniquity of my sin.” Who forgives the transgressions mentioned at the beginning? And what is the expression “selah” that he uses?

Yad Yehudah - עז

(עז) “I shall make known to You”: to argue in my own defense that there was only inadvertent desecration of the Name here, as above. This resolves the first difficulty, for his intention is only to disclose his sin by way of a defense.

Yad Yehudah - עח

(עח) “My iniquity concerning Uriah”: whom I killed by the sword of the Ammonites. From the outset, at the time of the deed, I did not cover it; rather, I laid my judgment upon Joab [so this commentary reads], who killed him on my commission, and the iniquity rests upon him. For whose words should one obey: the Master's or the disciple's? I was entitled to do this and send Joab, since there is no agency for a transgression, as the Sages explained all this in the Gemara, Qiddushin. Even if Uriah had not been liable to death, the guilt would not rest on me; all the more when killing him involved only deliberate desecration of the Name, as stated. This resolves the second and third difficulties.[TN020083]

Yad Yehudah - עט

(עט) “To the multitude”: all this I say before You in my defense concerning Bathsheba and Uriah. Nevertheless, I did not disclose these defenses to the multitude, who do not know the mystery of soul impregnation, so that they would not wonder after my death. On the contrary, I told them, “I shall confess against myself my transgressions”: I would confess these offenses, magnifying them in their eyes to the level of transgressions in order to justify Heaven's judgment, as stated. This resolves the third, fourth, and fifth difficulties.

Yad Yehudah - עט - continued

Yad Yehudah - פ

(פ) “Even though”: as stated [the introductory reference is uncertain] in chapter 8 of Yoma: it was taught that one who confesses transgressions over which Yom Kippur has already passed is all the more praiseworthy, as it is said, “For I know my transgressions, and my sin is before me always.”[TN020084] This is “my transgressions to the Lord”: transgressions that already belong to the Lord, over which Yom Kippur has passed. There is no need to connect “to the Lord” with “I shall confess,” for that would be superfluous: it is obvious that when one confesses, the confession is to the Lord.

Yad Yehudah - פא

(פא) “He wished his words to be true openly”: as stated [text missing], a reason to confess the deeds concerning Uriah and Bathsheba. This is said here [the phrase is uncertain], even though he had a defense—nevertheless [the supplied comment ends here].[TN020085]

Yad Yehudah - פב

(פב) “And inwardly”: concerning the transgressions over which Yom Kippur had passed.

Yad Yehudah - פג

(פג) “My good intention”: when I said that I would confess.

Yad Yehudah - פד

(פד) “You judged that iniquity subordinate to my inadvertent offense”: to forgive it too. This is “the iniquity of my sin,” resolving the sixth and eighth difficulties.

Yad Yehudah - פה

(פה) “This occurred”: it is mentioned in the Zohar, Vayiqra, page 33: “‘You bore the iniquity of my sin, selah’—this is high above, the place where the Holy Ancient One abides.” The author's reference [the connective is uncertain] means the supreme court. See Pardes, Gate of the Designations.[TN020086]

Yad Yehudah - פו

(פו) “This is his ‘selah’”: an expression of eternity.

Yad Yehudah - פז

(פז) “Let us clarify our judgment”: as the author wrote at the beginning of the section; see there.

Yad Yehudah - פח

(פח) “With the adversaries”: those who accuse Israel and argue, “These and those [worship] idols,” as will be explained in the next chapter.

Yad Yehudah - פט

(פט) “Afterward, in the Lord they shall be justified”: the Holy One, blessed be He, justifies them, as will also shortly be explained. This is his saying, “Though your sins be like scarlet,” and so forth.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Come now, let us clarify our case, says the Lord”; “such is the use of nifal, as in ‘Amasa did not guard himself’”: nifal has two senses. For example, “this house was built” is a past passive verb; the other is “Amasa did not guard himself,” meaning that he did not protect himself. We thus also understand ve-nivvakeḥah here as nifal in the second sense. He therefore explains, “we shall clear ourselves,” just as Amasa did not guard himself; here too, “we shall clarify ourselves.”

“It is known”; “the Holy One will Himself fulfill the first alternative”: the wealthy person is told, “Dress as he does.” So, as it were, the Holy One, blessed be He, will dress Himself like Israel, as Scripture says, “Behold, this one comes from Edom, with reddened garments,” and so forth. See the Zohar, section Vayishlaḥ: “Come and see how many garments are prepared in this world,” and so forth. What emerges from its general meaning is that those descending to Gehinnom are clothed in garments particular to them, filthy garments. When “the Lord shall enter judgment through fire” is fulfilled, He will certainly, as it were, clothe Himself in clothing appropriate to that place, and sackcloth will rise upon its entrance [the phrase is uncertain], and so forth.[TN020087] These are garments of solitude, in the mystery of “How she sits alone [badad],” as explained at the beginning of Galanti. Thus it is clear that He fulfills in Himself “Dress as he does.” At the end He will clothe Israel in garments of salvation [the following word is questioned], as it is said, “garments of salvation,” and “He shall wrap him in a mantle of righteousness.” Hence “in terms the ear can receive": to accommodate the ear.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"They will be called by His Name": wealthy like Him. This is His garment, as in Tiqqun, folio 2, where it says, "As His Name, so His garment." Now, reader, know that this descent into Gehinnom is no deficiency—God forbid. On the contrary, the descent is a comprehensive repair for every creature in the world. The whole of Gehinnom will become an additional extension of the Garden of Eden, and there will be the circle-dance of the righteous. Holiness will spread into Gehinnom, and Gehinnom will be abolished, as it is written, "For Topheth has long been prepared; it too has been made ready for the king," so that the boundaries of the Garden of Eden will be there. Establish this premise in your heart, and the matter will be well explained to you in the following chapters, with the help of Heaven.

"The verse encompasses both divisions": repentance from fear and not for its own sake, or from love and for its own sake. Of fear and not for its own sake, it says, "For [His kindness] is great up to the heavens," no further—namely, up to the throne of glory, as we shall explain below in chapter 14; see there.

"This accords with what we learned: He is witness, He is judge, He is litigant": concerning this Scripture says, "Come," and so forth. When one sins against oneself, one harms oneself, not another: He is witness. The blessed Lord will then be witness. Between a person and another—that is, between one person and a fellow—He will be judge, namely the blessed Lord. Between a person and the Omnipresent, the blessed Lord will be litigant and argue with him, and so forth.

"Therefore he said, 'So that You may be righteous in Your speaking'": like a judge stating the ruling. As litigant he says, "You may prevail in Your judgment": that You emerge vindicated against the opposing litigant in the case. He raised the difficulty himself: for a judge, righteousness pertains to judgment, and for a litigant, prevailing pertains to words, as we find several times in the Torah. He therefore says that the two descriptions—judge and litigant—come in combination, so that what is said of one applies to the other: what belongs here belongs there too. This strengthens our faith in the justice of the blessed Lord's judgment, that He judges justly, and so forth.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Or the verse's parts refer across to one another": above, we said that the verse divides into two sections, with its opening, "against You alone," speaking of Him as witness. Here he says that the entire verse refers across from one part to another, speaking of judge and litigant. "Against You alone," and so forth, "so that You may be righteous," concerns the judge; "so that You may prevail" concerns the litigant. Concerning testimony [the source word is questioned], where the Holy One is witness, he says afterward, "For I know my transgressions": He is witness, and so forth. [TN020088]

"To construe 'so that' precisely": it should have said "and You may prevail," or "and so that," and so forth. The second approach, in which the parts refer across to one another, resolves it as follows. David the king, peace be upon him, prayed that the Holy One, blessed be He, should emerge vindicated in judgment when He is his opposing litigant; then David too would emerge vindicated. The Holy One cannot forgive the iniquity he committed unless He first emerges vindicated, as stated, for then He can forgive that iniquity. He says, "You must prevail in Your judgment": emerge vindicated when You are my opposing litigant. It means: vindicate what You first judge. If You say that I also sinned against another human being, he says afterward: there is nothing in my iniquity relating to anyone but You —"against You alone." Uriah rebelled against the kingship and was liable to death. As for Bathsheba, he had never approached her in all his days. Only when Uriah returned from war, on that night she was to spend time with him [the wording is uncertain], but he had written her a bill of divorce, and she was not his wife at that time.[TN020089] Thus nothing remained except the sin of the Ammonites' sword, lest they say, "Our hand is exalted," for he should have judged him in the Sanhedrin.

This appears to me, Moshe [the source abbreviates the signature], following what the Zohar, Mishpatim, in the Sava, wrote: a dragon was upon that sword. David had two swords. One bore the explicit Name, and the commentators wrote that he had that sword from his father, as the commentators wrote concerning the sword of Amasa son of Abigail; see Keli Yaqar on the Prophets. Hence it says, “Bring me the sword”—the known one from his father. There too I offered many new observations on this matter. Here, however, he took the sword of the Ammonites, which bore a dragon, and it killed even someone not deserving death. Though he had another sword, he did not give that sword, but killed with this one. The sin here therefore concerned the sword of the Ammonites. Thus far the words of Moshe Levi [as signed in the source].[TN020090]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The sin concerning Bathsheba too was like someone taking meat from a butcher and not paying, which is desecration of the Name. Thus there were deliberateness and inadvertence in desecrating the Name: inadvertence concerning Bathsheba [the supplied word is defective], and deliberateness concerning Uriah.[TN020091]

“And he did not say, ‘So that You may be righteous in Your speaking,’” and so forth [the linking wording is unclear]. Alternatively, we can say that it concerns thought, which only the blessed Lord recognizes. “What is evil in Your eyes I have done”: these are the Sanhedrin, called the eyes of the congregation; he should have proceeded according to their ruling, through them.[TN020092]

“The verb is intransitive”: it is present, that is, intermediate and intransitive [so the supplied grammatical explanation reads], as it were, and so forth.[TN020093] “So that You may be righteous is the purpose, not a cause of the sin”: not that he was compelled to sin in order to confirm the blessed Lord's words, as he proceeds to explain. It was not so; rather, the sin was incidental, for even in our performance of commandments there are many deficiencies. Thus “I sinned” means deficiency, as in “I and my son Solomon shall be deficient.”

“Scripture gives good counsel, as it is written, ‘It is good for a man’”: the difficulty is that the verse should have said the reverse, “It is good for a youth.” The matter is this: the evil inclination comes to a person immediately upon emerging from the mother's womb, while still young. A person must stand against it, subdue it, and occupy himself with Torah. Thus “It is good for a man”: while he is a man, in his vigor and strength, subduing through Torah and commandments the evil inclination that came to him in his youth. He subdues and prevails over it. “He shall bear” is in the future, referring to what is to come.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“It would reverse the proposition”: gezerah is the explanation or formation of a word, as in grammar, “There are twelve formations.” Thus he says that the word is reversed, unless it is as we explained.

Concerning what we wrote above, that he never approached Bathsheba, see the Zohar on Genesis, page 73; the Zohar, Balaq; and Mishpatim, page 151. “Not a cause of the sin” means that “so that You may be righteous” does not depend on “against You alone have I sinned,” but is a statement in its own right.

“For He knows our inclination; remembered”: the difficulty [the source connective is uncertain] is that “He knew” is past, while “remember” is an infinitive. The matter is this: we know that the Torah existed two thousand years before the world's creation. The Sages expounded “I was beside Him as a nursling, and I was a delight day by day”: two of the Holy One's days are two thousand years. Zakhor is passive, as below. He therefore says “recorded in the Torah.” The human being was created two thousand years afterward, and at that earlier time was dust. Thus “in that nonbeing preceding coming-to-be” means coming-to-be in the world. Therefore, “when we are dust”: at that time we were still dust, as is known.[TN020094]

“Everything came from dust”: see Yonat Elem, chapter 3: “There is no doubt that ... the first ...” [the cited fragment is defective], and so forth.[TN020095] Universal nonbeing is absolute negation, with no existence at all. But nonbeing preceding coming-to-be is called in Yonat Elem “particular nonbeing preceding coming-to-be.” This has some existence, though exceedingly hidden and ungraspable, and is called dust.

“He thought to conceal the matter”: since he thought to conceal it from the world, it would not be known to the world, but only to the Holy One Himself. Hence “against You alone have I sinned”; “I sinned” denotes inadvertence.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“There is no blemish there,” namely from the deeds of those below: when people sin, no blemish applies above—God forbid—meaning in the world of Beriah, called the world of the throne.[TN020096] There too is included within unification, as it says, “and from there it separates”; [the following quoted fragment is incomplete]. There is no blemish there, only a deficiency of perfection. The blemish reaches the world of ministering beings, namely Yetzirah, the world of angels, where the seven heads of courts are. For in Yetzirah there are judges, and in Asiyah there are officers, in the mystery of “The heavens shall reveal his iniquity, and the earth rises against him,” in the Zohar. “Heavens” is vav, whose principal governance is in Yetzirah; “earth” is he, whose principal governance is in Asiyah, through her. For Zeʿir dwells in Metatron, who is in Yetzirah, and the Shekhinah dwells in the ofan, who is in Asiyah—in Asiyah [repeated in the source].

“And upon David, as is known concerning ‘you shall surely die’”: because David was Adam's reincarnation, through ADAM: Adam, David, Messiah. David's sin involved forbidden sexual relations, bloodshed, and idolatry, as Adam the first human sinned; for Adam was a heretic, or one who denied the fundamental principle, according to the midrash.

“To justify Heaven's judgment”: this is “so that You may be righteous in Your speaking,” and so forth.

“The mystery of soul impregnation”: the mystery of reincarnation, for the common people do not know of this reincarnation and would wonder at David's punishment. All his songs did not suffice to save him, and so forth. [The supplied negative makes the next link uncertain:] Adam too caused his death, as it is written, “you shall surely die.” He therefore performed these transgressions so that they would acknowledge Heaven's judgment against him, for the Holy One, blessed be He, does not judge without justice.[TN020097]

“First, one should ask: what is this making known?” The difficulty is: why must he inform the blessed Lord, before whom everything is revealed and known? “Why place”: why mention disclosure with sin, “I shall make my sin known to You,” while with iniquity using the negative “I did not cover”? He should likewise have said [not] making known [the source clause is compressed].[TN020098] Furthermore, “I shall make known to You” is future, and “I covered” is past. Concerning transgressions he states both past and future: “I said” is past, “I shall confess” future.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Here not even one”: David had no such rebellion, as stated above in this chapter; only that he strengthened the sword of the Ammonites, and so forth.

“He said, ‘I shall make my sin known to You’”: my inadvertent offense concerning Bathsheba I shall make known to You—that I acted inadvertently and have something to argue in my own defense.

“To lay my judgment upon Joab”: to place upon him my sin concerning Uriah, for whose words should one obey, the Master's or the disciple's? There is no agency for a transgression.

“Before the common people I magnified my sins”: as though they were transgressions and rebellions. Concerning this he said before them, “I shall confess against myself my transgressions,” to justify Heaven's judgment [the source wording is defective]. They do not know the mystery of soul impregnation and would say that the Holy One, blessed be He, judges without justice, and so forth. [TN020099] “I join to them all my earlier transgressions”: those from Adam the first human, even though Yom Kippur had passed over them since then and they had been atoned for. This is “my transgressions to the Lord,” and so forth.

“Openly and inwardly”: openly, before human beings, concerning the sins I committed inadvertently now [the source questions the verb]; inwardly, what I did inadvertently in Adam the first human through the mystery of reincarnation. The Holy One, blessed be He, joined his intention to the deed. Before he confessed them—for he said “I shall confess against myself my transgressions” in the future—“You bore the iniquity of my sin”: You made the iniquity inadvertent and judged it subordinate to my inadvertent offense. This occurred in the supreme court, where “selah” applies, since it endures forever.[TN020100]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This follows what is in the Zohar, Vayiqra, folio 9a, on “You bore”; see there. Its words [as transmitted here] are: “[An unclear abbreviated opening: זכ״י ס״ג סל״ה ס״ל ע״ך.] These are six upper degrees, [an unclear abbreviation] of the ten sefirot: [the word ספר], Gevurah, Tiferet; each comprising ten, these are SL. H includes Hod, Yesod, each comprising ten, making L. [An uncertain string of letters follows:] the powers of judgment in Malkhut, making SELAH. The entire root of the word is in the Ancient One, who is Keter.”[TN020101]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 12

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 13 (יג)

Yad Yehudah: יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “What our Rabbis expounded” on “For all the peoples will walk, each in the name of its god, but we shall walk in the name of the LORD our God for ever and ever” (Micah 4), “is known in its place.” This is what is “demonstrated?” [מוכח?] in Yalqut there, in these words:[TN010110] Rabbi Eleazar of Modi'in says: In the future all the princes of the nations of the world will come before the Holy One, blessed be He, and accuse Israel, saying before Him: Master of the universe, these worship idols and those worship idols; these uncover forbidden relations and those uncover forbidden relations; these shed blood and those shed blood. These descend to Gehinnom and those do not descend. The Holy One, blessed be He, says to them: Since that is so, let each nation descend with its god. This is what is

Rema of Fano

What our Rabbis expounded on the verse “For all the peoples will walk, each in the name of its god,” is known in its place; likewise concerning “For by fire the LORD enters into judgment,” and King David's statement, peace be upon him, “Even when I walk in the valley of death's shadow, I will fear no evil, for You are with me.” Through this, what we are explaining is confirmed: we have been promised that we shall depart acquitted when we walk in the name of the One who dwells with us amid our impurity, and He will become for us a purifying immersion-pool. Even in the service of the Day of Atonement it is written, “He shall make atonement for the sanctuary.” Scripture speaks of Aaron: he is to purify the upper Holy from the impurity of the children of Israel. The One who dwells with them amid their impurity “shall do likewise for the Tent of Meeting,” for a prisoner cannot release himself.

So that the righteous Judge may be vindicated and acquitted at the end of this disputation, He made seven things written, “For all the peoples will walk, each in the name of its god,” etc. Rabbi Yehoshua said in the name of Rabbi Hanina: “There is only ... groups of dung? ...” [לית אלא מחרא כתות של זבל? ליהוא, damaged].[TN010111] For “we ... in the name of the LORD”: it is not written “in the name of God,” but “in the name of the LORD.” David said, “Even when I walk in the valley of death's shadow, I will fear no evil, for You are with me.”

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “Through this” exposition, the “beginning?” [התחלת?] of what we mentioned at the end of the preceding chapter concerning “Come, please, and let us reason together”—let us clarify the judgment, etc. [TN010112]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “We have been promised”: through this, to overcome them with an acquittal, against the disputants who argue that these and those commit transgressions.

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Amid our impurity”: “in Gehinnom?” [בגיהנם?], etc.[TN010113]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “He,” blessed be He, “will become for us a purifying immersion-pool”: as the Sages said at the end of Yoma on “The LORD is the hope of Israel”: just as an immersion-pool purifies the impure, so the Holy One, blessed be He, purifies Israel. The author explains that this is through His leading us out of Gehinnom.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Even in the service of the Day of Atonement” we find this. It is written in Aharei: “He shall make atonement for the sanctuary from the impurities of the children of Israel, and from their transgressions, for all their sins; and so shall he do for the Tent of Meeting, which dwells with them amid their impurities.” “Scripture speaks of Aaron”: on the plain reading this can be explained in two ways. First, the verb “he shall make atonement” refers forward to “the One who dwells with them,” meaning that the blessed LORD, who dwells with them, will make precede the world, all of them for Israel and its good, even Gehinnom, as we shall explain below. Its terror suffices even for the transgressors among us, who all their days were anxious over the commandments and whose bodies were afflicted. Moreover, continually, all day long, they trembled and were distressed by the prophets' admonitions, and our name became reviled through their rebuke. Not so those who cast off the yoke: among all their sages and their princes above, none protests, although they have the power to do so. For it is on this account that Abimelech's prince praises himself, because he did so, according to the Zohar's interpretation of “I too withheld you from sinning against me.” Therefore the LORD will visit them on high, to judge them in the upper Gehinnom, through which the River of Fire passes and in which it blazes; and upon the earth, in the lower Gehinnom, it will descend upon the heads of the wicked. But we shall invoke the name of the LORD our God. “For the ways of the LORD are upright, and the righteous will walk in them”: this is the ultimate good. “But transgressors will stumble in them”: this too is an evil resembling the good, for the stumbling will occur within the bounds of the LORD's ways. As soon as they entertain repentance in their hearts, the matter is very near to them. On this understanding, the prophet concluded only with words of consolation.

Rema of Fano - continued

This is what our Rabbis intended in the parable of the two people who ate their Passover offerings, for the commandments were not given for atonement for the sanctuary and do likewise for the Tent of Meeting. Second, “he shall make atonement” refers to Aaron, mentioned beforehand. According to this explanation it would at first seem that the final phrase “which dwells with them” refers to the Tent of Meeting and does not speak of the blessed LORD. Therefore the author says that “he shall make atonement” certainly speaks of Aaron, but the final “the One who dwells with them” is nevertheless not connected to the Tent of Meeting; it speaks of the blessed LORD. At the beginning the verse means that Aaron will atone for and purify the upper Holy from the impurity caused by the impurities of the children of Israel [טומאות?, source-marked], for it is known that through a blemish below a blemish is caused above.[TN010114] The Zohar too explains this verse in a similar way. It then says: the blessed LORD, who dwells with them amid their impurities, will likewise do for the Tent of Meeting, making atonement for the sanctuary below. So the Sages expound, “Who dwells with them,” etc.: even in the time of their impurity the Shekhinah is among them.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “For a prisoner cannot release himself”: therefore Aaron was needed to make atonement for the upper Holy.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

enjoyment. We have already explained in chapter 3 that this lesson applies to prohibitions as well, in the verse “Cease doing evil.”

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “At the end of this disputation”: in the future He disputes with the princes of the nations, who argue that these and those practice idolatry, and He sends them down to Gehinnom. Could one suppose that this is a crooked judgment? Therefore, “before I created them?” [טרם בראתי?], He made seven things precede the world, in order ultimately to bring Israel merit.[TN010115] They are Torah, repentance, the Garden of Eden, Gehinnom, the Throne of Glory, the Temple, and the name of the Messiah, as the Sages said in the chapter Maqom she-Nahagu.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “All of them for Israel”: for the whole world was created for them and their good. Torah, repentance, Gehinnom, and כ”ה?—to make atonement for them, and thereby grant them the Messiah, the Garden of Eden, and the Throne of Glory.[TN010116]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Even Gehinnom” is for their good, because its terror and dread suffice. It does not, however, rule even over the transgressors of Israel so as to consume them completely, God forbid, as will be explained below, ח”ו בט”ו? [uncertain reference]. [TN010117]

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “For it is on this account that he praises himself,” etc. As stated in Zohar, Vayiqra, page 6, and Qedoshim, page 106, on “God came to Abimelech in a dream of the night” and “God said to him in the dream, ‘I too knew,’” etc. These are the words: Thus we learned: every occurrence of Elohim here is that great power appointed over them. Similarly, “God came to Balaam by night” is the power appointed over him. If you say, “God said to him in the dream”—it is certainly so. “I too knew”: why “too” here? It comes to include: although it is known above me, I too knew. “I too withheld”—“too” comes to include—“you from sinning against me.” “From sinning” is written without alef. What does it say? For the sin does not attach to him. Rather, thus we learned: through the sins of the people below, a blemish is caused above; through the sins of the people below, their prince above is removed from his dominion. This is what is written, “I too withheld”: although the matter depends on what is above me, “I too” includes himself, etc.; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “Therefore” [gap in the source]. And He will even visit their princes above, on high, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “For the ways of the LORD are upright, and the righteous will walk in them, but transgressors will stumble in them” (end of Hosea). The word “in them” with “will stumble” is at first puzzling: how can they stumble in the LORD's ways? To explain this, the author introduces it incidentally into the present exposition. He says that the meaning is that we shall all walk in the name of the LORD, and there is no favoritism in response to the princes of the nations, who argue that these and those practice idolatry. For the LORD's ways are indeed upright, and the righteous walk in them, so there is no complaint against them. Even the transgressors, however, stumble within the LORD's ways, for all their days they were anxious over the commandments and trembled and were distressed by the prophets' admonitions, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “On this understanding” the apparent difficulty is resolved: why did the prophet Hosea conclude his book with an evil matter? According to our explanation, the prophet concluded only with words of consolation for transgressors: the matter of repenting is near to them because their stumbling is within the LORD's ways. Maharsha follows a similar course in his discussion of the Tosafot in the chapter Ein Omedin, folio 31; see there.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “This is what our Rabbis intended”: in Nazir, chapter 4, and Horayot, chapter 3, Rabbah bar bar Hanah said in the name of Rabbi Yohanan: What is “For the ways of the LORD are upright,” etc.? A parable of two people who ate their Passover offerings: one ate his for the sake of the commandment, the other for the sake of gluttonous eating. Of the one who ate for the commandment it is said, “The righteous will walk in them”; of the one who ate for gluttonous eating, “Transgressors will stumble in them.” Resh Laqish said to him: “Do you call this person wicked? Granted, he does not perform the commandment in the best way, but he does at least perform the Passover offering,” etc. Rather, it is a parable of Lot and his two daughters: they intended a commandment—“The righteous will walk in them”; he intended a transgression —“Transgressors will stumble in them,” etc.; see there. The author says that Rabbi Yohanan too intended to explain “in them” in this way: transgressors stumble in the LORD's ways and in the very observance of the commandments, by performing them without intending the commandment. In any event, since they are engaged in commandments, the way of repentance is near to them. Although Resh Laqish objected, “Do you call this person wicked?” etc., it is nevertheless “satisfactory? to Rabbi Yohanan, only an exposition of their greater excellence?” [ניחא? לר״י רק דרשי יתר מעלתם?, damaged].[TN010118] Resh Laqish explains the verse of Lot, of whom it would not be appropriate to say that his stumbling was within the LORD's ways, for Lot was engaged in forbidden sexual relations; nevertheless, the LORD's ways apply to his daughters.

Yad Yehudah - טו - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “For the commandments were not given for enjoyment”: that is, also concerning one's own benefit, “to reject?” [למידחי?] the objection “Do you call this person wicked?” in the case of gluttonous eating. One may say that although he performs the Passover offering, he is nevertheless a transgressor in this matter: the commandments were not given for enjoyment, but he did otherwise and reversed the intention.[TN010119]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “We have already explained,” etc. Our explanation of “they will stumble in them” in the matter of ש״ע? [uncertain abbreviation] is like what we already explained above in chapter 3 concerning negative commandments, in the verse “Cease doing evil”: we said that the ceasing should occur in the very midst of the evil; see there. [TN010120]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Amid our impurity,” etc. That is, an aspect of the Shekhinah “among them?” [בינות?], one “radiance?” [האר?] from her, clothes itself in Malkhut of Beriah, Malkhut of Yetzirah, and Malkhut of Asiyah. [TN010121] There the blemish reaches, as it were, Malkhut of Asiyah—“the wicked walk round about.” Sometimes it reaches Malkhut of Yetzirah and Beriah, but not Atzilut, God forbid, as stated in the Zohar, Ki Tetze, page 536, and in the Idra Zuta of Ha'azinu, page 522. “It is the glory of God to conceal a matter.” “To purify the upper Holy,” etc.: through this one can understand “His people will make atonement for His land”—His people below will atone for His land above; afterward His land will be atoned for and become a purifying immersion-pool for His people. All these verses are expounded from beginning to end and then from end to beginning; it is wondrous to those who understand knowledge. “To purify the upper Holy”: that is, as it were, the blessed LORD, who has received some impurity from the iniquities of the children of Israel. Then “the One who dwells with them,” etc., for a prisoner cannot release himself: before He has purification, as it were, He cannot make atonement for others.

“At the end of the disputation”: as stated above, “Come, please, and let us reason together.” “Restraining through terror” [רסני בעיתותא]: the dread of Gehinnom.[TN010122] “Not so those who cast off the yoke”: for Israel He gave Gehinnom for their good, to refine and purify them. This is not so with the nations of the world, whose princes above, on the contrary, cause them to sin. Abimelech's prince praised himself for preventing him from sin, as it is written, “I withheld you from sinning against me.” “From sinning” is written defectively; it was like a needle in living flesh for him to change his nature and prevent the sin, according to the Zohar's explanation, etc. This is in Vayiqra: what is “God came to Abimelech,” etc.? See also Zohar, Qedoshim, there.

“Transgressors will stumble in them” likewise refers to the LORD's ways; therefore it is an evil resembling the good. “On this understanding”: since “transgressors will stumble in them” is likewise something resembling the good, the prophet concluded with “transgressors,” etc., in a good matter. It is not as one understands from the plain sense, that he concluded, God forbid, with something evil, but with consolation. “We have already explained,” etc.: the stumbling is within the LORD's ways, as with one who ate his Passover offering for gluttonous eating: he nevertheless performs a commandment. Likewise, even within an evil deed there is a rectification, as explained in “Cease doing evil” at the end of chapter 3.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 13

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 14 (יד)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Which we mentioned”: in chapter 10. There the author, of blessed memory, wrote: The compass of the verse includes both divisions of repentance. Concerning repentance from fear, even when not for its own sake, “For His lovingkindness is great as far as the heavens,” the prophet said, “Come, please, and let us reason together.” See there: repentance from fear, that is, not for its own sake, reaches the Throne of Glory; concerning it is said, “For His lovingkindness is great as far as the heavens.” The intention is Tiferet, for the heavens and the Throne of Glory are names for Tiferet. This repentance effects the transformation of deliberate sins into inadvertent ones. Since the inadvertent element nevertheless remains to be atoned for, the prophet said, “Come, please, and let us reason together,” for He must dispute over this with the princes of the

Rema of Fano

The second division we mentioned, however, is from love and for its own sake, for His blessed lovingkindness is great above the heavens toward those who walk in it. It is examined in two aspects: the first is upon the heavens; the second is much higher, above the heavens. Concerning these the prophet assures us that when our repentance reaches the garment of the Ancient of Days, white as snow, then, if our sins—including the inadvertent element left from deliberate sins through the repentance of the multitude, which reaches only the Throne of Glory—are like scarlet, the cloth dyed by the worm, they will assuredly whiten like snow everything that comes from them. It will be reckoned a great merit that no trace of them remains in the world, as it is written, “You will forget the shame of your youth.” Concerning this it is said, “I will heal their backsliding.” When repentance reaches the hair of His head, like pure wool, then, “if they redden like the worm”—even if they are among those of which it was said, “An inadvertent error in study amounts to deliberate sin,” for the worm dyes other nations, who argue that these and those worship idols. This is not so with repentance from love, that is, for its own sake: concerning it is said, “For His lovingkindness is great above the heavens.” Its exalted advantage is that deliberate sins become merits. After the author interrupted the discussion with all the preceding chapters' expositions relating to the first division, he now returns to explain the second division under consideration.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “The first is upon the heavens,” etc. In Zohar, Vayiqra, page 25, and Qedoshim, page 124: Rabbi Yehudah said, “When is it called repentance? When Mother? is covered and mercy descends,” etc. [כד מתכסיין? אמא, uncertain]. [TN010132] “Then it is called complete repentance, repentance without qualification, to include everything.” Rabbi Yitzhak said: When the whole world becomes fit together, it is written, “For Your lovingkindness is great above the heavens”—above the heavens, ascending above the place called heavens. Rabbi Yehudah said: Precisely so, for it is written “above the heavens.” Had it been written “upon the heavens,” it would mean the place situated upon the heavens. Since it says “above the heavens,” it means the place situated far, far above. What is it? It is Mother; this is what is called repentance, etc.; see there. Repentance above the heavens is the upper Mother, Binah, and there repentance is “exalted, from love?” [מעולי׳ מאהבה?], as also explained in the supplement to Qedoshim there, that Mother is Binah.[TN010133] The “comparison?” [דמיון?] intended in the verse “For Your lovingkindness is great above the heavens” is repentance for its own sake, as we quoted above in chapter 12; the cited Zohar passages intend the same matter.[TN010134] In any event, repentance reaching upon the heavens, the intermediate “return?” [השבה?], is also reckoned as repentance from love, for repentance from fear reaches no higher than as far as the heavens. Therefore the author wrote that repentance from love is examined in two aspects. Concerning “upon the things—“they will be like wool,” which is whitened for fine cloth.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

The meaning of “they will be” is like “The LORD has departed from you, and your adversary has come into being” (I Samuel 28:16). Far be it from God to be an enemy of someone wholly righteous like Saul, whose merits undoubtedly constituted the majority. Rather, since the LORD has departed from you, your adversary has received a renewed existence, as we explained in Ma'amar ha-Nefesh. So too here, “they will be like wool”: they will receive a renewed, purified existence, deliberate sins becoming like merits. This mystery is intimated in “The LORD God called to the human being,” in accordance with the wording translated in the Order of Sanctification. Either repentance calls to Father, Shelomoh, above her, in the sense of the twofold rectification which we shall explain in chapter 22;[TN010130] or “to the human being” is literal, for everything is in Heaven's hands except the fear of Heaven. Repentance calls to the human being and waits for him to bring it from potentiality into actuality through fitting choice and will.

Through this let us pursue knowledge of how precious His blessed lovingkindness is, in His abundant forgiveness of sins. Forgiving the sinner is great lovingkindness; forgiving the sin itself, however, is abundant lovingkindness if the deliberate sin is reckoned as inadvertent, and exceedingly immense if it is transformed into a merit and an interceding angel, so that the accuser becomes an advocate. Concerning this it heavens” in the cited Zohar, Pardes, Gate of Epithets, states that repentance is in Gedullah and Gevurah, which are above Tiferet, called heavens; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Concerning these,” etc. Corresponding to these two aspects the prophet said, “If your sins are like scarlet, they will whiten like snow; if they redden like the worm, they will be like wool.” Corresponding to repentance reaching upon the heavens, to Gedullah and Gevurah, the “garments?” [הבגדים?] mentioned above, its power is so great that it also atones for the inadvertent element left after repentance from fear. [TN010135] This is “If your sins”—the inadvertent sins included in repentance from fear—“are like scarlet, they will whiten like snow.” They whiten through repentance from love reaching the garment of the Ancient of Days, white as snow, as stated in Daniel; likewise Pardes there says that white snow is an epithet for Gedullah.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “If our sins,” etc. “Your sins” refers to inadvertent sins, as is known, and therefore includes the inadvertent element remaining after the repentance of the multitude, who repent only from fear. Concerning all of them he says, “If your sins are like scarlet," namely cloth dyed by the worm. The intention is the inadvertent sins remaining from deliberate ones. Then this repentance assuredly effects their becoming like snow, etc., so that through it the stated sins are whitened, together with every accuser arising from them and because of them. This is "they will whiten." The commentators explain it as intransitive, but according to this interpretation it is also transitive: the sins will whiten everything they caused to come into being.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) "It will be reckoned a great merit": although what the Sages say of repentance from love, that deliberate sins become like merits, does not apply literally to this division that reaches upon the heavens, one may nevertheless rightly say in a negative sense that here too the deliberate sins are forgiven and become such that this is like merits. For it is a great merit that sins like scarlet should whiten like snow and that no trace of them should remain in the world, not even the trace originally remaining after the repentance of "those who return?" [?החוזרי].[TN010136]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) Concerning this division Scripture says, "I will heal their backsliding": their

Rema of Fano - continued

is said, "I will love them freely." He gives the reason: "For My anger has returned from him." Our Sages already noticed this and said that, because of a single person who performs repentance of this kind, the entire community is forgiven. That is, their share in the covenant of the curse, by which they are guarantors for one another, is forgiven through his merit; this is sound.

The plain meaning of the verse, however, is understood through "My hand takes hold of judgment." The Holy One, blessed be He, shoots His arrows, yet His hand holds them so that He may bring them back at will. This measure applies to Anger more than to any of the other chief destroyers. For of all the others a simple, future rectification is written: "He will forgive iniquity," "He will not destroy," "He will not stir up." But of Anger it is written, "He has greatly turned back": this is a past and repeated rectification. From the time of its existence in the thought of creation, at that very hour it was decreed concerning it, as a great commandment, that it be turned back in an instant. This is the sense of the past returning, awakening, and turning into the future, through His blessed mercy and His abundant lovingkindness. But this repentance is so exalted that Anger, the Omnipresent's emissary, returns of its own accord and says before Him: Master of the universe, I cannot carry out my mission, for they have already repelled me through the power of their repentance. He laughs and says, "My children have defeated Me."

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

backsliding still needs healing because of its inadvertent element, which He heals so that no trace of it remains.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "When repentance reaches," etc. Concerning repentance from love —"from them?" [?מהם]— the second division, which reaches above the heavens to the attribute of Binah, also called "the hair of His head, like pure wool," as likewise explained in Pardes there, the verse concludes, "If they redden like the worm, they will be like wool."[TN010137] That is, not only deliberate sins that have become inadvertent, but even inadvertent sins that have become deliberate—such as the Sages' statement, "An inadvertent error in study amounts to deliberate sin"—will be like wool. This is "if they redden like the worm": if they become reddened? through those sins which dye, until they become like deliberate sins, just as the worm dyes something else, they will become like wool whitened for garments of fine wool, through repentance that likewise reaches wool and pure fleece, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "The meaning of 'they will be'": the word "they will be" means the same as "and ... came into being" in Samuel's words to Saul, "The LORD has departed from you, and your adversary has come into being" (I Samuel 28). One cannot connect "and became" to the LORD and explain that the LORD became your enemy. Far be it from the blessed God to be an enemy of someone wholly righteous like Saul. The commentators already "considered?" [שחשו?] this, and the Targum, which connects "and became" with the LORD, did not intend that meaning. [TN010138] "And ..." [ותמ"ע?, unclear], their interpretation that it means "on your side," and that the LORD is among your helpers, "in their help?" [בעזרתם?], is entirely forced. [TN010139] Therefore the author explains that "and came into being" does not refer to the LORD. Its meaning is: the LORD has departed from you, and thereby your adversary came into being; your enemy received a renewed existence because the LORD's providence departed from you. Likewise here, the sins "will be like wool": a renewed existence, purified like wool, will be renewed for them, and deliberate sins will become like merits.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "This mystery": what we said concerning repentance from love reaching Binah is intimated in "The LORD God called to the human Moreover, the accuser testifies about itself that the Shekhinah has brought no burning anger into the world apart from its own existence, as it is written, "Esther brought no one but me to the king"—reading af as "Anger."[TN010131] If so, its annulment is the world's rectification, as it is written, "Tomorrow too I am invited by her to the king": specifically tomorrow, and no further, for "on that day, known to the LORD," "He will swallow up death for ever." Know that Anger first reproves a person to his face concerning his blemish; then Fury chastises, and Indignation humiliates at the end, causing a person to rebel against sufferings, as it is written, "Much vexation, sickness, and indignation" (Ecclesiastes 5:16). Therefore David initially prayed, "Do not reprove me in Your anger, and do not chastise me in Your fury." Disgrace and indignation will thereby cease of themselves.

Rema of Fano - continued

It is known, however, that sufferings afterward came upon him: he was afflicted with tzara'at for six months according to the Babylonian Talmud, and the verses precisely support this; or for six years according to the Jerusalem Talmud. Both may be true: he sat in the house of separation for only six months because of the impurity of tzara'at, and the Sanhedrin withdrew from him. He then sought mercy, as it is written, "Let those who fear You return to me." He became pure from his impurity, but was not healed until six years had passed. Mere sickness does not remove a ruler from his office, as stated in the last chapter of Horayot. When sufferings came upon him, he said: Master of the being." For LORD God is the attribute of Binah; adam, human being, is an epithet for Hokhmah —"Hokhmah?" [חכמ"ה?]— as is known, for adam is MH.[TN010140] "Called" is explained like "One called to the other" in the Order of Sanctification, translated as "They receive from one another": the calling concerns "bestowing?" [מהשפיע?]. This is "The LORD called"—"this ..." [זה ע"ז?, unclear].[TN010141] The meaning is that LORD God, the attribute of Binah, called to adam, Hokhmah above her, to receive from it too an abundance of forgiveness for penitents occupied with her. Since their attainment reaches Binah, Binah wishes it to reach Hokhmah as well, which is also included in "the hair of His head, like pure wool," so that the rectification of Tiferet may come from both together: that is, twofold. Or we may say that "to the human being" is literal, an actual person: LORD God, the attribute of Binah, calls to the person and awaits the time when he will arouse himself to repent through his choice and bring it from potentiality into actuality. For everything is in Heaven's hands except fear of Heaven, concerning which "when the person?" [כאשר האדם?] acts by choice; therefore she waits for him.[TN010142]

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Through this”: through what we said about deliberate sins becoming inadvertent or becoming merits, we know the blessed LORD's lovingkindness not only toward sinners, but toward the sins themselves. This is “abundant forgiveness of sins.”

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “If it is transformed”: the deliberate sin becomes a merit and an upright intercessor.

Rema of Fano - continued

universe, “Do not reprove me in Your indignation,” since “You chastise me in Your fury.” He sought mercy to be patient, so that he would not be ashamed or humiliated before those who hate his life after bearing the yoke of sufferings. Examine the verses carefully in the two psalms, and you will find that one was said before he suffered and the other afterward. “Do not reprove me in Your indignation” does not draw its negative along with it into the next clause, as the commentators say. Rather, in both places the verses are expressed with the utmost precision; this is what we seek everywhere.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “So that the accuser”: the accuser created from the iniquity becomes an advocate when the iniquity is transformed into merits.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “Concerning this”: concerning the deliberate sin becoming like a merit, it is said, “I will love them freely, for My anger has returned from him”—the accuser has returned and become an advocate.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “Our Sages already noticed,” etc. Incidentally, having cited this verse, he explains everything belonging to it. He says that the Sages already noticed “from him.” In Yoma, chapter 8, Mar Zutra bar Toviyah said in the name of Rav: Great is repentance, for even if one individual performs it, he and the whole world are forgiven, as it is said, “I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely, for My anger has returned from him.” It does not say “from them,” but “from him.” Rashi explains: “I will heal their backsliding, for My anger has returned from the individual.”

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “That is, their share,” etc. The author explains that the community's forgiveness through the individual's repentance concerns that individual's very sin. The community is forgiven its surety, since all Israel are guarantors for one another, as the Sages expound “They will stumble, one through his brother”—through his brother's iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “The plain meaning of the verse, however, is understood”: “For My anger has returned from him” follows what is said in Mekhilta, Beshalah, on “If I whet My flashing sword, and My hand takes hold of judgment,” quoted by Rashi. A human being, when he “shoots?” [זורה?] an arrow and it leaves his hand, cannot return it to himself. But the Holy One, blessed be He, is not so: when Israel does not perform the Omnipresent's will, a decree, as it were, goes forth before Him, as it is said, “If I whet My flashing sword.” If they repent, He immediately brings it back, as it is said, “My hand takes hold of judgment.”[TN010143] So too here, “For My anger has returned”: the destroyer that had already gone forth before Him, blessed be He, [gap in the source], to return through repentance, and it returned from Him, blessed be His name, before Him.[TN010144]

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “This measure,” etc. Nevertheless, it is “more evident?” [ניכר?] in Anger than in the other chief destroyers mentioned in this verse. Iniquity, Destroyer, Anger, and Fury are chief destroyers, as stated in Zohar, Noah, and Bereshit, page 28. “And in one particular?” [ובפרט אחד?], we have already found this wording concerning Fury too: “The LORD ... to turn back His fury from destroying” (Psalm 106), “to turn Your fury back from them” (Isaiah 10?).[TN010145] The reason is that this measure applies to Anger more than to the others, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) Concerning all these chief destroyers, a simple, future rectification is written here: “He will forgive,” “He will not destroy,” and “He will not stir up” are simple future expressions. But concerning Anger He says, “He has greatly,” a past expression and repeated rectification, for He has done so many times. The reason is that already long ago, when Anger existed in the thought of creation, this was decreed concerning it.

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “This is the sense of the past,” etc. “He has greatly” is a past expression which here becomes future, to indicate that whenever Israel sins and Anger goes forth to destroy, the blessed LORD in His mercy turns it back—a repeated rectification. “Thus they intended ... the Rabbi? ... in the verses the expression ‘He turned back My anger,’ Anger precisely; examine and you will find” [וכן כיונו על הרב?, damaged]. ... אף דוק ותמצא.[TN010146] This is because that measure applies to it more than to the others. “And such ...” [וכאלה זהו כו’?, uncertain], Pardes, Gate 9, chapter 7: Rabbi Berekhiah said in the name of Rabbi Levi: The angel appointed over Anger is far away, as it is said, “Long in anger”—an expression of distance. The Holy One, blessed be He, said: If I become angry with My children, by the time I send Anger to destroy them they come and repent, and I receive them and forgive—as it were, forgiving, long in anger. See further in ע״ש [unexpanded reference] on “Do not reprove me in Your anger”: Rabbi Hanina said, a parable of a king angry with his son, with his sword in his hand; meanwhile the king arose and put the sword into its sheath, etc.; see there.[TN010147]

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “But this repentance,” etc. The author explains the expressions “has returned” and “from him” in the verse. It should have said, “For I have turned back My anger,” as a transitive verb. But “has returned,” an intransitive verb, refers to Anger: Anger itself returns when they repent with repentance so exalted that it reaches above the heavens, until deliberate sins become like merits. This is “from him”: from Anger itself, of its own accord.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “He laughs,” etc. This is “I will love them freely.”

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Moreover”: the power of this repentance is so great that it “obliges?” [שתחייב?] even Anger, “apart from which?” [שזולתו?] no burning anger came into the world, as it testifies concerning itself.[TN010148]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “As it is written, ‘Esther brought no one,’” etc. He expounds the verse by allusion: Esther, the attribute of Malkhut, is the Shekhinah. She brought no burning anger to the King, to the world, except me—that is, my existence.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “And no further”: for Anger will be annulled on that day.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “Know,” etc. The author also explains for us David's verses: “Do not reprove me in Your anger, and do not chastise me in Your fury,” Psalm 6; and in Psalm 38, “Do not reprove me in Your indignation, and in Your fury You chastise me.” He changed the wording, saying “in Your indignation” instead of “in Your anger,” and omitted “and do not” before “in Your fury.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “He was afflicted with tzara'at for six months”: as stated in Sanhedrin, in the chapter Heleq. Rav Yehudah said in the name of Rav: For six months David was afflicted with tzara'at, the Shekhinah withdrew from him, and the Sanhedrin withdrew from him. For it is written, “Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be pure; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.” The Shekhinah withdrew from him, as it is written, “Restore to me the joy of Your salvation, and sustain me with a willing spirit.” The Sanhedrin withdrew from him, as it is written, “Let those who fear You return to me,” etc. How do we know it was six months? It is written, “The days that David reigned over Israel were forty years: in Hebron he reigned seven years, and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty-three years.” Elsewhere it is written, “In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months.” These six months are not counted; infer from this that he was afflicted with tzara'at.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Mere sickness does not remove him”: therefore the six years enter the reckoning. Concerning the six months which are not counted, they already differ in the Jerusalem Talmud, saying: What are these additional amounts here? Rabbi Yitzhak bar Qatzarta? in the name of Rabbi Yonah: They were months, but Scripture accorded honor to Jerusalem and counted them as whole years. Rabbi Yudan said: The larger reckoning absorbs the smaller. Since the six months are written, “he sat together” [ישב גם יחד], those six months when David fled from Absalom his son were not included in the reckoning, except among the years, as they are numbered for him separately.[TN010149]

Yad Yehudah - כז - continued

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “In the last chapter of Horayot”: “When a ruler sins”—excluding one who is sick. Does his being sick remove him from his office? Rav Avdimi bar Hama said: It excludes a ruler afflicted with tzara'at, as it is said concerning Uzziah, king of Judah: “The LORD struck the king, and he was afflicted with tzara'at until the day of his death, and he sat in the house of separation,” etc. Rashi explains: “In the house of separation”—he became free of kingship, being like an ordinary person.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “To be patient”: not to rebel, through shame, against the sufferings he had already accepted, “as Asaph,” etc.? [כדרך שאסף גו׳?]. This is “Do not ... in Your indignation.”[TN010150]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “You will find”: Psalm 6 was said before David was chastised, as the wording of that psalm indicates. Psalm 38 was said by David after the sufferings mentioned in that psalm had come upon him.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “It does not,” etc. The word “do not” does not govern the following clause with it, as though it were written, “Do not reprove me in Your indignation, and do not chastise me in Your fury,” as the commentators wished.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “This is what we seek”: to explain verses everywhere as they stand.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The second division, however,” is above the heavens, when our repentance reaches the garments of the Ancient of Days. For heavens is Tiferet, vav in the Name; upon the heavens is Father and Mother; above the heavens is the point of yod. In Daniel it says, “The Ancient of Days sat; His garment was white as snow, and the hair of His head like pure wool.” We say in Limmudei Atzilut that the thirteen configurations of the beard of the Ancient One are called “garments white as snow,” because they are a garment covering Father and Mother, “in chapter 103, 29” [בפ׳ ק״ג כ״ט, uncertain

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

reference].[TN010151]

Snow is Ze'ir Anpin, and wool is the female counterpart of Ze'ir Anpin. The intention is as stated in כ׳ ס״ה [unexpanded reference]: snow, sheleg, has the numerical value of three alefs of the divine Name when it is spelled out with alefs, the Name MH. When the three alefs are removed, the numerical value of wool, tzemer, remains: three times LP.[TN010152] Ze'ir Anpin comprises branches and roots, while his female counterpart comprises branches, namely three times LP. These are snow and wool. The hair of His head is called above the heavens, and it is like pure wool: wool corresponds to Ze'ir Anpin's female counterpart, which shines “in the last four?” [בד׳ האחרו׳?]. [TN010153] “His garment was white as snow” is called upon the heavens, for it covers Father and Mother, and its radiance spreads into Ze'ir Anpin, called snow; hence it is white as snow.

This resolves the difficulty: snow is more distinguished than wool, yet the hair of His head is more distinguished than His garment white as snow. It is wondrous in the Sages' words. Because the radiance from the pure wool upon the head shines more upon Ze'ir Anpin's female counterpart, it truly is more distinguished. Yet snow precedes wool within the divine Name: from the Name MH, spelled out with alefs, comes snow as well; in the female counterpart, three times LP is wool. The thirteen configurations of the beard are called a garment because each of the thirteen attributes is a divine Name; thirteen times the divine Name equals levush, garment.

“In accordance with the wording translated in the Order of Sanctification”: the Targum explains “One called to the other” as “They receive from one another.” It is known what is written in כ״י? [unexpanded reference] on “See, the LORD has called Betzalel by name”: at the time of calling, when they called him by these five letters, the light of His blessed essence was bestowed within him, and he was able to combine the letters through which heaven and earth were created.[TN010154] This is the matter: through the calling by which they call to one another, they receive from one another. “To this returns the wording ... it seems to me, some of the Sabbath wording ... they blaze ... and make use of ... figures ... united" [ועי"ז חוזר לי' השי"ז נ"ל קצת לי' שבת ה' מתלהטין כו' ומשתמשין דיוק חווין? מתאחד, damaged]: they bestow upon one another in their song, being in the likeness of females and males. [TN010155]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"The LORD God called" means the attribute of Binah, called repentance, calling to Father, Hokhmah above her. This is the mystery of MH, the numerical value of adam, human being, in the mystery of female waters. "Called" expresses arousal and bestowal. Or "to the human being" is the rectification in the sense of "Everything is in Heaven's hands." "For His anger has returned from me" [ממני]: the Sages have already considered this in their exposition.[TN010156] The meaning would be, "I will heal the community's backsliding" when His anger has returned "from him," from the individual. But the author explained it differently, along the lines of "My hand takes hold of judgment": the judgments of suffering are held in My hand. This measure applies to Anger more than to the other destroyers, "written ... in themselves?" [הכתי' בהוא בעצמם?], "He will not stir up"; but here, "He has greatly"—"what is it to reveal a word?" [מהו לגלות מלה?]—"to turn back His anger."[TN010157] Thus it is a great matter, requiring repeated action. Yet this repentance is so exalted that even Anger returns of its own accord.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 14

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 15 (טו)

Yad Yehudah: יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) "One who knows how to reckon," etc. The wording of the penitential prayer is known: "God, King, seated on a throne of mercy, conducting Himself with lovingkindness, forgiving the iniquities of His people, passing over the first one, then the first one, abundant in forgiveness of sins and pardon of transgressors, doing righteous acts with all flesh and spirit," etc. The author says that these are the ten descriptions of forgiveness. One who knows how to reckon them will understand that the eighth description is "abundant in forgiveness of sins," corresponding to accusation, as will be

Rema of Fano

One who knows how to reckon the ten descriptions of forgiveness belonging to the One long in anger and abundant in lovingkindness, in the wording familiar on every Israelite's lips, "God, King, seated on a throne of mercy," will understand in his heart that "abundant in forgiveness" comes together with the annulment of accusation from the corresponding chamber below. It is found there, and under no circumstances above it; consult Zohar, Bereshit, folio 40. Therefore only Phinehas, David, and Aaron as Moses' emissary were required to stop a plague, for it entered their domain, whereas they did not enter its domain. Such, however, was Aaron's strength when he stood between the dead and the living: there the Angel of Death was prevailing explained. The first description is El, God, which belongs to forgiveness because it expresses strength and power, as the Sages said, "It belongs? to the great God to forgive great guilt" [יהא?, uncertain]. [TN010170] Second, King: the whole world is His, and He can forgive. Third, seated on a throne of mercy. Fourth, conducting Himself with lovingkindness. Fifth, forgiving the iniquities of His people. Sixth, passing over the first one. Seventh, the first one. Eighth, abundant in forgiveness of sins. Ninth, and pardon of transgressors. Tenth, doing righteous acts with all flesh and spirit. After these descriptions the arranger? says in prayer, “Do not repay them according to their evil,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Let us reckon these ten descriptions against the ten sefirot, blessed be He. The first description, El, corresponds to Keter, which is sometimes called this, as explained in Pardes, Gate of Epithets. King corresponds to Hokhmah, which is called this “with an accompanying name?” [בשם לוי?], King Solomon or great King, as also explained, “in the expression ...” [בלשון נכלן?, unclear].[TN010171] Seated on a throne of mercy is Binah, as likewise explained there, and so interpreted in the Zohar. Conducting Himself with lovingkindness corresponds to Hesed. Forgiving the iniquities of His people is in Gevurah, for even in judgment He forgives. How? “Passing over the first one”: taking one of the iniquities “coming?” [מהנמי?] to the scale-pan, as explained above in chapter 7 according to Rashi, or according to Rambam's interpretation mentioned in chapter 5. He tips the scale toward merit, corresponding to Tiferet, in the mystery of inclining to the right.[TN010172] against his opposite, until Moses urged Aaron, saying, “Take it quickly.” It is written, “He ran into the midst of the assembly.” He adopted that angel's measure, for the angel runs at the time of plague; through the ATBaSh substitution for the word maggefah, plague—[yarutz, he will run]—you will know it. The eight steps it ordinarily takes are with the permission of the eight letters of the reading and writing of the great Name. At the time of plague it runs, gathering them into one, as the Sages say in Berakhot. Aaron had already bound it, fulfilling what is said, “A righteous one rules in the fear of God.”

Rema of Fano - continued

Incidentally, we must make something known: Michael comes in one flight because he serves the yod of the Name, and the body follows the head. Gabriel comes in two, for he serves he and must first obtain permission from yod. Once he has afterward obtained permission from he, all the remaining letters obey her. Since it is written in the account of creation, “And let a flying creature fly,” both are intimated in the Torah; they are the kings of the angels, as stated in Midrash Shoher Tov. From this verse, and from reasoning as well, one can infer that there is one who comes in three flights: who is it? Uriel, who serves vav. “Upon the earth” alludes to Elijah in four, and Raphael is like him. For all these holy servants, the letters of the appellation travel with the letters of the Name, and there is no need to obtain permission from the court.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Again, “passing over the first one,” according to the Gaon's explanation above in chapter 5 and as explained in chapter 8: the blessed LORD passes over a person's iniquities without reckoning them, one by one, until the day of his death. Then, if his merits are greater, the earlier iniquities count as nothing, as though he had not committed them. Even if they are balanced, abundant lovingkindness acts toward lovingkindness. This corresponds to Netzah, which indicates both these matters, for Netzah expresses victory, as explained in Pardes: “My children have defeated Me,” if the merits are greater; for the intermediate, lovingkindness tips the balance through abundant lovingkindness, although they are balanced.[TN010173] “Abundant in forgiveness” is in Hod, corresponding to which accusation is found, requiring abundant forgiveness, as will be explained before us. “And pardon of transgressors” is in Yesod, for Israel's bodily transgressors are the head that does not put on tefillin, upon which the commandment of the covenant rests, and those who transgress in forbidden sexual relations, as will be explained below,

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Part V, chapter 23. A blemish of the covenant reaches the Righteous One, foundation of the world, so abundant pardon is also needed. “Doing righteous acts with all flesh and spirit” is Malkhut, according to whose word all flesh and spirit is sustained. Concerning her it is said, “She gives food to her household and a portion to her maidens,” as explained in many places in the Zohar. Thus the description “abundant in forgiveness of sins” belongs to the eighth sefirah, Hod.

Concerning the chambers, Zohar, Bereshit, page 100, says: “Seven firmaments—seven chambers are above, one above another,” etc. See there, where it counts them from below upward. Concerning the third chamber it says: “The third chamber: this is a place of sparks and smoke, and from it flows and issues a great, furious River of Fire, which is the burning-place of the wicked. And whoever descends there, upon the heads? of the wicked, and those destructive angels who dwell in it. There accusers are sometimes found against Israel, to lead them astray, except ...” [בר כדינקא? דפנין אתוותא לקחיה?, damaged], etc. “And wicked Samael is found there”; see there.[TN010174] If we align the seven chambers with the seven [gap in the source] palaces and the ten sefirot, then the [gap in the source] chamber necessarily corresponds to Hod, the eighth sefirah. Since there [gap in the source] accusation is found, abundant forgiveness is needed opposite it, in the eighth sefirah, to repel and annul it. This is what the author wrote: one who knows how to reckon the ten descriptions of forgiveness will understand in his heart that “abundant in forgiveness” comes in the eighth sefirah, to annul accusation from the corresponding third chamber below. See “for the dwelling?” [למשכן] in the seventh gate of the palaces, and there concerning the chamber into which the qelippah enters by the northern opening, [gap in the source], “that great ... at the opening,” [gap in the source]; see there. [TN010175]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “And not above it”: the angel has no permission to enter chambers above its level, which is the left thigh, in Hod: “He touched the socket of Jacob's thigh”—the left thigh. Even the chamber corresponding to Hod is not its fixed abode; it is found there when it ascends from the hollow of the great deep to accuse Israel, as stated in the Zohar

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

there.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Therefore”: because accusation and “wicked Samael?” [ובסמ”אל חייב?] are found only in the third chamber.[TN010176]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Aaron as Moses' emissary”: as it is written, “Moses said to Aaron: Take the fire-pan,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “For it”—the plague—“entered their domain.” In the incident of Phinehas, the people began? to commit harlotry with the daughters of Moab. Phinehas is Yesod, the holy covenant, his attribute, as explained in the Zohar on “Behold, I give him My covenant of peace.”[TN010177] Since the punishment came because of Yesod, which is Phinehas's domain, not the Angel of Death's—its place is in the third chamber corresponding to Hod —Phinehas was required to make atonement and repel the Angel of Death from his domain. Likewise, David's plague came because he numbered Israel, as explained in Scripture. The blemish was in Malkhut, for all reckonings depend upon that sefirah, as explained in Zohar, Bereshit, page 124, and Pinehas, page 65. Therefore the plague had to be removed through David, whose attribute is Malkhut, as is known. For “the blemish?” [הפגם?] is the owner of the beam: he had to enter into the thickness of the beam and repel the Angel of Death from a domain that was not its own.[TN010178]

In Korah's dispute against Moses and Aaron, the blemish was in Netzah and Hod, for Moses' attribute is Netzah and Aaron's Hod, as explained in Zohar, Bereshit, page 29. Therefore Moses had to expel the Angel of Death from his domain and sent Aaron to do so as his emissary. Moses did not do it himself for two reasons. First, Aaron the priest was better suited for it, as stated in Zohar, Korah, page טל”ז: “When Moses saw that wrath was impending, immediately ‘Moses said to Aaron,’ because he is the Matron's attendant, and incense ascends only through his hands, for he increases peace in the world and binds the bond of faith,” etc.[TN010179] Second, Aaron was in any event needed to stop the severity of the plague, in order to expel it from his own domain as well.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Such, however, was Aaron's strength”: he could expel the Angel of Death from his domain as well, although “in our case one may say?” [לגבי דידן למימר?] that the Angel of Death entered its own domain, since Aaron's domain is Hod, and the corresponding chamber is also the Angel of Death's domain.[TN010180] Therefore the Angel of Death prevailed against Aaron, its opposite, within its own territory. Nevertheless Aaron's strength exceeded its own, enabling him to stand between the dead and the living. Moses urged him to carry the incense “quickly ... to subdue?” [והרה להכבדה?], to expel it completely from his domain.[TN010181]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “For it runs at the time of plague”: as the Sages said in the first chapter of Berakhot: It was taught, Michael in one, Gabriel in two, Elijah in four, and the Angel of Death in eight; at the time of plague, in one. Here Aaron too adopted its measure, as Moses commanded him, to overcome it through its own measure. This follows what Galante? wrote on “Judah has gone into exile”: in the palace of Nogah there is a place called “four hundred palaces of ...?” [ת' היכלי סע'?], where “those who go?” [הולכים?] are gathered, the “upper runners?” [הרצי' הפליוני'?], “casting ... shields?” [ומוטלי' מרס מגיני'?].[TN010182] These are the powers of the hashmal, appointed over swords, spears?, and implements to protect Israel from its fury; see there. They wage war against them and gain strength over them, “and immediately an implement from strength” [ומיד כלי מתוקף, uncertain].[TN010183] There are other runners on the Other Side. One must know how to contend with and subdue those opposite, so as to rule over them. Sometimes the holy runners precede the external ones and annul their power: this is the mystery of “The runners went out, hastened by the king's word, and the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad.” Sometimes the others precede them: then “The runners went out, hastened,” and “the city of Shushan was perplexed.” All are in the mystery of Shushan and the palaces, these in holiness and those on the Other Side. When a person pursues the commandments with his feet and legs, he effects a rectification, and these holy runners are engendered, to hasten their running and overcome the external runners, etc.; see there. Such was this matter with Moses and Aaron, whose attributes are Netzah and Hod, the two thighs, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “You will know it”: that this angel's measure is to run at the time of plague, because the letters of maggefah are the letters of yarutz in the “alphabet?” [באל”ף חי”ת?] of ATBaSh. Therefore “Aaron ran,” etc. [TN010184]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “With the permission of eight letters”: the author explains that it ordinarily takes eight steps, but runs at the time of plague, corresponding to the eight letters of the Name Havayah and Adonai, which are the court, as we explained concerning “And the LORD”—He and His court. It must obtain permission from them, as will be stated at the end of the chapter.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Incidentally,” etc. The author incidentally explains the matter of Michael in one, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “He serves the yod of the Name”: this matter is explained in many places in the Zohar, especially in Zohar Hadash, Yitro, where the four holy living creatures are arranged: lion is Michael; ox, Gabriel; eagle, Uriel; human being, Raphael. These are four configurations: sight, hearing, smell, and speech. Upon these four configurations rests? YHWH. [TN010185] There it is explained that Michael serves yod of the Name, Gabriel he, Uriel vav, and Raphael the final he. Accordingly the author says that this is why Michael's measure is one flight, etc. He begins with yod, his own letter, and obtains permission from it alone; the other three letters following it are drawn along with it, like the body after the head. Gabriel, however, comes in two, because he must obtain permission twice: first from yod, which is not his letter, and secondly from he, his own letter. The final two letters follow after them.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “Since it is written,” etc. Although the Gemara does not state the measure of Uriel's and Raphael's flights, it can nevertheless be learned from “And let a flying creature fly,” etc. As stated in the Zohar there, page 124: “‘And let a flying creature fly’—it should have said ‘a flying creature’; what is ‘fly’?” Rabbi Shimon said: “It is a mystery. ‘A flying creature’ is Michael, as it is written, ‘One of the seraphim flew to me.’ ‘Fly’ is Gabriel, of whom it is written, ‘The man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at first, being caused to fly in flight’; this is

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

'fly.' 'Upon the earth' is Elijah, of blessed memory, who is continually found on earth. He is not found from the side of Father and Mother, for he is in four directions, as it is written, 'The spirit of the LORD will carry you to where I do not know': 'the spirit of the LORD,' one; 'will carry you,' two; 'to where,' three; 'I do not know,' four. 'Over the face' is the Angel of Death, which darkens the world's face; concerning it is written, 'Darkness over the face of the deep.' 'Over the face of the firmament of heaven': it ascends and accuses, descends and kills." Rabbi Abba said: "But the Angel of Death has already been mentioned! Rather, 'upon the earth' is Raphael, appointed over the healing of the earth: through him the earth is healed, the human being stands upon it, and he heals every sickness. 'Over the face of the firmament of heaven' is Uriel; all is in the verse," etc.

You see that the Sages expound "a flying creature" and "fly" concerning Michael and Gabriel: Michael in one and Gabriel in two, as they learned from this in the Gemara, together with "the greater ... in Michael than in Gabriel?" [עם גדולי מה שנחי?], for of Michael it is written, "He flew to me," etc., while of Gabriel, "being caused to fly in flight," etc. [TN010186] He expounds "upon the earth" concerning Elijah and Raphael. Although Rabbi Abba says, "Rather, 'upon the earth' is Raphael," he does not disagree with Rabbi Shimon concerning Elijah. His intention is only to disagree concerning the Angel of Death and remove it from "over the face of the firmament of heaven," because of the objection that the Angel of Death has already been mentioned. Rabbi Abba prefers to apply the entire verse to the four angels of the chariot; nevertheless he agrees with Rabbi Shimon that "upon the earth" also refers to Elijah. His movement through the world's four directions is his journey in four flights. He likewise agrees with Rabbi Abba's interpretation of "upon the earth" as Raphael, who also comes in four. From their statements we infer that Uriel comes in three, for the reason given: as the servant of vav of the Name, Uriel must obtain permission from the two letters before it and from vav, his own letter—three flights. Likewise Raphael, serving the final he, must obtain permission from the three letters before it and from he itself—four flights.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) "For," etc. The reason the Angel of Death comes in eight is that it must obtain permission from the court: the four letters of Havayah and the four of the appellation. This is not so with these holy servants, the four angels of the chariot, together with Elijah, of blessed memory. They do not need permission from the court, for they belong to the four letters of Havayah alone, while the letters of Adonai, the appellation and the spoken reading, are drawn? after them to go and travel with them as well.[TN010187]

Yoel Moshe - 1

"One who knows how to reckon the ten descriptions of forgiveness," etc. Know that "long" [אר"ך] is a description of Keter; King, of Hokhmah; seated, of Binah; conducting Himself with lovingkindness?, of Hesed; forgiving the iniquities of His people, of Gevurah; passing over the first one, of Tiferet; abundant in forgiveness of sins, of Netzah; and pardon of transgressors, of Hod; doing righteous acts, etc., of Yesod; do not repay them according to their evil, of Malkhut.[TN010188] These matters will be clarified through premises from the Ari's writings, of blessed memory.

The first concerns the seven palaces explained in the Zohar, Bereshit and Pequdei. These palaces are in the world of Beriah and are built in the six sefirot of Beriah. Sometimes they ascend and sometimes they "are ..." [מתנמלים, uncertain].[TN010189] The palaces are built in this way: from Malkhut within Hesed of Beriah is built the palace of the Holy of Holies. For it is known that each sefirah comprises ten sefirot, so that all ten are found in each: Keter, Hokhmah, Binah, Gedullah, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzah, Hod, Yesod, and Malkhut. In Malkhut within Hesed is built the palace of the Holy of Holies, and likewise in Malkhut within Gevurah, and so on. From the first three within Malkhut, one palace is built, called the palace of the God of Israel. Thus you have six palaces of Beriah.[TN010190] Afterward, in the six remaining sefirot within Malkhut in its own place—namely Gedullah, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzah, Hod, and "Yesod?" [נהי"ס] within it—six other palaces are built. These are called the six lower palaces in the aforementioned book: from Hesed through Malkhut within it, six palaces, called by the first names mentioned, except for the seventh palace in Malkhut within Malkhut, called the palace of Livnat ha-Sappir.[TN010191] The upper palaces are called male and the lower female.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

One may object: how is the palace of Nogah always "in Hod" [ניהוד], both in the upper palaces and in the lower, and the palace of Etzem ha-Shamayim in Yesod, when we reckon Nogah always in Netzah and Etzem ha-Shamayim in Hod, as Maharil writes in Sefer ha-Kavvanot concerning the ofan of "Who forms light"?[TN010192] The answer is that outside a time of favor, Nogah is in Hod and Etzem ha-Shamayim in Yesod. At a time of ascending favor, however, the palaces rise from below upward by one further degree, as written below in the third premise from Sefer ha-Beriah. Thus Nogah sometimes comes to Netzah, and Etzem ha-Shamayim to Hod.

The second premise is from Sefer ha-Beriah, in these words: Know that in each of the aforementioned palaces of Malkhut of Beriah there is a special room called a chamber. There are thus seven chambers in seven palaces, mentioned in Zohar, Bereshit. In these chambers stand the nefashot of the righteous; they are called the lower Garden of Eden. These chambers fall and descend from the aforementioned palaces and remain standing at the head of the world of Yetzirah. So it is with the seven lower palaces, and likewise in the upper palaces there are seven chambers in the manner described. Thus there are seven palaces and seven chambers below, and seven palaces and seven chambers above, as stated. In the "six?" lower chambers [שבו' מדוריי] stand the nefashot of the righteous; in the lower palaces stand the ruhot; in the upper palaces stand the neshamot of the righteous.[TN010193] Between the palaces and the chambers is a single pillar called the foundation of Mount Zion, the middle bar, which receives them one by one. You will find this matter in Zohar, Vayehi, page 466.

The third premise: one must say that at a time of favor, when the first three—Keter, Hokhmah, and Binah within Beriah—"are ..." [מתנמלים], in the mystery of its mohin, "therefore he will raise his head." This is the mystery of what He said, "Ishmael," etc.; see the Ari's writings, of blessed memory.[TN010194] Then the palace of the Holy of Holies, which is in Malkhut within Hesed, one of the seven upper palaces of Beriah, now rises and becomes a palace for Hokhmah, Binah, and Da'at, namely Keter. This is "Holy," one, "Holies," two: three altogether.[TN010195] The palace of Favor, initially in Gevurah, namely in Malkhut within Gevurah, as above in the first premise, rises to Malkhut within Hesed. The palace of Merit, initially in Netzah, rises to Tiferet; so with all of them in order. Likewise in the lower palaces within Malkhut, namely within "the seven ..." [בז' נ"ת נה"ים], they too ascend.[TN010196] The lower palace of the Holy of Holies, in Hesed within Malkhut, rises to the first three within Malkhut; the palace of Favor in Gevurah within Malkhut rises to Gedullah, and so with all of them in the stated order.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The fourth premise is from Galante, on "Remember, LORD ...?" [source ellipsis and question mark], in these words: From the Zohar's words, "The third chamber is for sparks and smoke?" [לשכינין וקיטורין?], etc.; "There accusation against Israel is sometimes found," etc.; "and wicked Samael is found there." Thus far.[TN010197] My teacher, of blessed memory, explained that this is not its fixed abode; rather, it is found there when it ascends from the hollow of the great deep into this chamber to accuse Israel. From there it and its retinue cry out every accusation, saying, "Shall the Judge of all the earth not do justice?" etc. This matter is also explained on "The ways of Zion mourn"; see there. This chamber, where accusation is found, is sometimes in Hod and sometimes in Netzah, as stated above, because there is a distinction between a time of favor and a time without favor.

Why "the third chamber"? The Zohar counts from below upward. Nogah is in Hod, which is third from below upward, and accusation is found there, as stated. This is the mystery of "He saw that he could not prevail against him, and touched the socket of his thigh": the left thigh, Hod, where Nogah is, as is known. Counted from above, however, Nogah is fifth.

The fifth premise is from Zohar, Bereshit, page 29? [עכ"ט?], in these words: "'Let the waters swarm' corresponds to the degree of Netzah, the right support of Torah. Corresponding to it below, Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, supports the world through Torah. 'Let the earth bring forth' corresponds to the degree of Hod, which is Aaron."

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Thus far.[TN010198] The resulting principle is that Moses is a chariot for Netzah, the right thigh, and Aaron for Hod, the left thigh. You already know that because Phinehas was zealous for the covenant he merited to become the chariot of Yesod, concerning which it is said, “Behold, I give him My covenant of peace”: the broken vav, the small yod, namely Yesod. See Zohar, Aharei Mot, page 120, and Pinehas, ע”ת”ר ת”ל”ו? [uncertain references]. [TN010199] You also know that David is a chariot for Malkhut; see the end of Pelah ha-Rimmon.

This is what the author intended when he said that the description “abundant in forgiveness” comes with the annulment of accusation. Through the description “abundant in forgiveness,” which Israel utters below, the power of accusation in the chamber of Netzah at a time of favor, when it ascends above, is annulled. For when Israel says “long, King, seated,” three descriptions of Keter, Hokhmah, and Binah, the first three within Beriah are thereby revealed, and the palace of the Holy of Holies ascends to receive great light. Forgiveness for Israel comes first from the first three, for it has become their palace, in the mystery of “Holy,” one, “Holies,” two, as stated. When the fourth attribute is said, “conducting Himself with lovingkindness,” a description of Hesed, light descends and is drawn to the palace of Favor, situated there at a time of favor. When “forgiving the iniquities of His people” is said, a description of Gevurah, light descends and is drawn to the palace of Love within Gevurah at a time of favor. So with all of them, until “abundant in forgiveness of sins,” a description of Netzah, is said. Then light is drawn into the palace within Netzah, where the third chamber from below upward is, when the palaces ascend from below upward, as stated. There accusation, the comprehensive accuser, is found. This light consequently annuls the accuser and accusation there. This is what the author says: “It is found there, and under no circumstances above it,” as explained in the fourth premise: “Samael is found there.”

The resulting principle is that “abundant in forgiveness of sins” annuls the accusation concerning sins. From the sin itself an accuser arises. Accusation always lies in the three lower chambers—Livnat ha-Sappir, Etzem ha-Shamayim, and Nogah—each of which has its corresponding chamber, and under no circumstances above them. Consequently, at a time of favor, when Nogah ascends to Moses' degree, Netzah, the description “abundant in forgiveness” annuls the accusation in the chamber of Nogah, then situated in Netzah. Thus the accusation of the destroyer, Samael, is in the chamber corresponding to Nogah: Aaron's degree in Hod, and sometimes Moses' degree in Netzah, the right thigh and the left thigh. At a time of favor it is in Netzah, Moses' degree; outside a time of favor, in Hod, Aaron's degree. All the more so below it, in the chamber within Yesod and that within Malkhut, the degrees of Phinehas in Yesod and David in Malkhut, as stated. There accusation is annulled through “doing righteous acts,” etc., a description of Yesod, and through “do not ... according to their evil,” etc., a description of Malkhut, the house of David.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This is the mystery of the Gemara's discussion of “He touched the socket of his thigh”: one holds the right thigh, the other the left. “One master said ... and the other ...” [כי מ’ אגדי ומ’ א’ סלה’, damaged], and they do not disagree. For Samael touched Jacob—[Aramaic sequence blurred in the scan]—Bereshit ק”ד”ל, above, at his thigh.[TN010200] That is, the world's ... the accusation of Samael reaches the thigh, which is Nogah, and no higher. At a time of favor it is in Netzah, the right thigh; outside a time of favor, in Hod, the left thigh. They do not disagree; understand this.

This explains the author's words, “Therefore ... were required,” etc. Since we have said that the accusation, Samael, is always found only in the first chamber from below upward, deriving from the palace of the God of Israel—sometimes identified with Malkhut outside a time of favor, and sometimes with Yesod at a time of favor, namely Phinehas and David—and in the second chamber, deriving from Etzem ha-Shamayim, sometimes identified with Yesod outside a time of favor and sometimes with Hod at a time of favor, namely Phinehas and Aaron; and in the third chamber, deriving from Nogah, sometimes identified with Hod, Aaron, outside a time of favor, and sometimes with Netzah at a time of favor, Moses' degree: therefore Phinehas, David, and Aaron as Moses' emissary were required to stop the plague. Even if the accusation is outside a time of favor, in the chamber deriving from Nogah in Hod, specific to Aaron, nevertheless, since it is sometimes found in Netzah, specific to Moses, Aaron was needed as Moses' emissary, for a person's emissary is like himself.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

David repelled it in his days, when the accusation concerning the plague was in his own chamber, identified with David, for David "..." in numbering [מסאד במינין, damaged], and all numbering depends upon Malkhut, as stated in Zohar, Pinehas, on "Your eyes are pools in Heshbon": "Every reckoning ... depends?" [source ellipsis and question mark], that is, upon Malkhut.[TN010201] Malkhut is called Bride; thus, when he caused a blemish through numbering, he blemished Malkhut within Beriah. David repelled it and its accusation, and the plague was stopped in his days. Likewise in Zimri's deed, the sin was harlotry, blemishing the holy covenant, Yesod, Phinehas's attribute. The accusation rose in the second chamber, and therefore through Phinehas the plague was stopped. In Korah's dispute with Moses and Aaron, the blemish and accusation were in Netzah and Hod. The accusation was in Aaron's domain, the chamber deriving from Nogah, and Aaron had to repel it. Since Nogah is sometimes in Netzah, specific to Moses, Aaron was needed as Moses' emissary, and a person's emissary is like himself, as stated. "For it entered their domain," etc.: the accusation entered each one's domain, according to his place and time.

"Through the ATBaSh substitution you will know it," etc. A known premise must be stated, from Tiqqunim, folio 36, quoted in Galante on "Judah has gone into exile," etc., in these words: When names were assigned to all ten degrees of the Other Side, its two legs were called Te'omiel and Tomiel. They are in the qelippah—separated by a thousand distinctions—like Netzah and Hod in holiness, for "God has made the one corresponding to the other." They are the runners of the Other Side. The matter is that in Nogah there is a place called "the runners' chamber," ת"א הרצים, so named because angels, the upper runners, enter there and take shields and a sword in their hands. These are the mystery of the hashmallim, who are shields, swords, and lances, and run to protect Israel from the idolatrous nations. They wage war against them and immediately exact vengeance from them. Therefore they run to rescue those who are delivered in the camp, and afterward return to "the runners' chamber?" [ת"א? הרצים], corresponding to the runners' chamber below.[TN010202]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

There are other runners on the Other Side, running to harm Israel and subdue its mazal. Sometimes the holy runners precede these external ones and annul them: this is the mystery of "The runners went out hastened, and the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad." Sometimes those on the Other Side precede them, and then "The runners went out hastened, and the city of Shushan was perplexed." All are in the mystery of legs and thighs, "these and those on the Other Side" [אלו ואלו בס"א].[TN010203] When a person runs to a commandment with his feet and legs, he gives power and strength to the holy runners to overcome the external ones. This is "Through God we shall act mightily, and He will tread down our adversaries": "through God," these angels, who are called angels of God, we shall gain strength and power to run; "and He," the Holy One, blessed be He, "will tread down our adversaries," tzareinu, whose letters are be-ratzeinu, "in our runners," namely the lower runners on the Other Side. Thus far his words.[TN010204]

Through this you will understand the author's words. His difficulty is: why did Aaron specifically run at the time of the plague in his days, while Phinehas and David did not in theirs? He answers that there the Angel of Death was prevailing against its opposite: it then ran to Aaron's degree. For Aaron's and Moses' attributes are the two thighs, Netzah and Hod, as is known, in holiness; opposite them is the runners' chamber on the evil side. Therefore Moses urged Aaron, saying, "Take it quickly to the congregation"—specifically quickly: [gap in the source] the holy runners in Nogah, Aaron's attribute. It is written, "He ran into the midst of the assembly": he adopted the angel's measure [gap in the source], opposite Aaron's attribute in holiness. Therefore the word "he ran," va-yaratz, through ATBaSh is maggefah, plague.[TN010205] Aaron specifically ran to arouse the upper runners, because at this time the blemish was in the thigh of holiness, Nogah. Consequently the Angel of Death was running together with all its runners in the qelippah. In the days of Phinehas and David, however, the Angel of Death alone accused in the first and second palaces, not in Nogah. The runners in the qelippah, their thighs, had not yet gained strength. Only Netzah and Hod are called thighs, not Yesod and Malkhut, the attributes of Phinehas and David. Therefore Phinehas and David did not need to run in their days.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

In Aaron's days, however, the accusation was in the two thighs, in the mystery of "the Rabbis' knees which grow weary because of them." Therefore Aaron as Moses' emissary had to give power and strength by his running to the runners in holiness, so that they could overcome their opposites. This is the mystery of "Take it quickly." Why quickly? "For indignation has gone forth," etc. Qetzef, indignation, through ATBaSh is Hod: since the blemish reached there, the external powers would consequently gain strength, God forbid. This is the mystery of "My splendor was turned upon me into destruction": Hod changes into the letters qetzef through ATBaSh, which is a destroyer.

"The eight steps," etc. In the Gemara, Berakhot: the Angel of Death in eight, and at the time of plague in one. Outside a time of plague it must obtain permission from the union of the eight letters Adonai and Havayah, YAHDWNHY; this is not so at a time of plague. "Michael in one," etc. To understand this, a premise must be stated from Tiqqunim Hadashim, folio 15: the four letters YHWH shine in three lines. Yod, Hokhmah, shines in the right line—Hokhmah, Hesed, and Netzah, which are on the right. The first he shines in the left line—Binah, Gevurah, and Hod, which are on the left. Vav of the Name shines upon the middle ones—Keter, Tiferet, and Yesod, which reconcile. The final he shines in Malkhut, receiving abundance from all of them. Thus "Michael on the right praises," because he serves yod, shining on the right, as stated; "Gabriel on the left speaks," because he serves the first he, shining on the left, and must also obtain permission from yod—therefore he flies in two. "Before me, Uriel," serving vav, must also obtain permission from yod-he, making YHW altogether; therefore he flies in three. "Behind me, Raphael," serving the final he, must obtain permission from all the letters YHWH; therefore he flies in four.

Its mystery is that YHWH is expounded in single, double, triple, and quadruple forms: Y, YH, YHW, YHWH. This shows that the emanator, namely yod, is always present in the emanated. Yod emanated he, then to vav, from emanator to emanated, from them all. Therefore it is expounded as Y and then again YH, and so with all of them, for the emanator is always in the emanated; this is known. Therefore Gabriel serves he but must obtain permission from yod, the emanator; likewise all must obtain permission from the preceding, emanating letters.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Another premise: yod of the Name is called a coal, and the other letters a flame. All the letters are interwoven with yod? and bound to it, like a flame to its coal, yod. Also in Shelah, "3?" [ג?], these are the words there: ... [letter details blurred, approximately eight words] ... vav in the middle, numerical value twenty-six.[TN010206] In the Name Ehyeh? the two he's are six vavs, like this: he, numerical value thirty-six. There is also yod: "twenty-six, twenty-two" [כ"ו כ"ב]. Its sign is "The One who forms their heart together, who understands all their deeds," for Ehyeh is in Binah. This is specifically TBN [תב"ן].[TN010207] Those alluding to Hokhmah and Binah are the two yods in alef, while the vav in the middle of alef is in the mystery of Da'at within Keter. The first he in Ehyeh, containing three vavs as stated, alludes to the three נ"ת, which are three vavs?; see Sefer ha-Kavvanot, in the mystery of "The heavens were completed."[TN010208] The yod in the middle of Ehyeh alludes to Malkhut.

Thus, in this manner, the three yods in Ehyeh—two in alef and one in the middle—allude to the first three, Keter, Hokhmah, and Binah. The "alef" [וא"] in alef, and the six vavs in the two he's, allude to the seven attributes, Gedullah, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzah, Hod, Yesod, and Malkhut. Together they are the measure of the stature of the Name Ehyeh. [TN010209] Likewise the Name Havayah: yod in YHWH alludes to the three mohin, Hokhmah, Binah, and Da'at, for yod has three heads and points, one above, one below, and one in the middle, like this; hence it alludes to Hokhmah, Binah, and Da'at. YHWH also contains seven vavs: six in the two he's and one simple vav, alluding to the seven days of construction, Gedullah, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzah, Hod, Yesod, and Malkhut. The resulting principle is that the first yod is called the head, comprising the three mohin, while the remaining letters, HWH, are called the measure of the body's stature. Through this understand the author's statement, "The head follows the body" [בתר גופא רישא אזיל].[TN010210] Since each must obtain permission from the preceding letters, the later letters consequently follow them, and there is no need to obtain permission from the letters after it, as stated.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"And let a flying creature fly," etc. These are the words of Zohar, Bereshit, page 125: "'And let a flying creature fly'—it should have said ya'uf; what is ye'ofef?" Rabbi Shimon said: "It is a mystery. 'A flying creature' is Michael, as it is written, 'One of the seraphim flew to me.' 'Fly' is Gabriel, of whom it is written, 'The man Gabriel,' etc., 'being caused to fly in flight'; this is 'fly.' 'Upon the earth' is Elijah, who is continually found on earth. 'Over the face' is the Angel of Death, which darkens? the face of the world, as it is written concerning it, 'Darkness over the face of the deep.' And ... death ... therefore let there be the firmament of heaven [ואינו המות ע"כ יהי רקיע שמים, damaged], as we say, 'It ascends and accuses, descends and kills.'"[TN010211] Rabbi Abba said: "But the Angel of Death ... heaven ... requires" [והא מלאך המות בשמי בעיא, damaged]. "Rather, 'upon the earth' is Raphael, appointed over the healing of the earth," etc.; "'over the face of the firmament of heaven' is Uriel," etc.; see there. [TN010212]

From this understand the author's statement that "a flying creature" and "fly" intimate both of them, Michael and Gabriel, exactly as the Zohar says; likewise his statement that Elijah and Raphael are alike, for both are intimated in "upon the earth," Elijah and Raphael according to the two statements

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 15

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

in the Zohar. Ve-of, "and a flying creature," has the numerical value of Benjamin: it is Michael, Benjamin's master. Ye'ofef has the numerical value of "Gabriel and his riders," ורוכבי, which is הבכ"י at the creation of the world, for they are the kings of kings, as the Sages say in Shoher Tov.[TN010213] Thus one can infer one in three, because "a flying creature" and "fly," "both of them?" [תרווייהו?]. [TN010214]

"For all these servants," etc., gives a sufficient reason why the Angel of Death must obtain permission from the eight letters YAHDWNHY, whereas the other angels mentioned obtain it from the four letters of Havayah alone. From the side of the holy ministering angels, who cause union above through their awakening upward in the mystery of female waters, at the time of union the female, the Name Adonai, is included in the male, the Name YHWH. They are thus like one name of four letters, and need not obtain permission from the court, the Name Adonai, whose letters are dina, the judgment of Malkhut. From the Angel of Death's side, however, union does not ascend and the female is not included in the male. They are like two names of eight letters; therefore it must obtain permission from YHWH and His court, Adonai, the judgment of Malkhut. See Zohar, Ra'aya Meheimna, at the beginning of Mishpatim. Since it obtains permission from YHWH, whose numerical value in this form is seventy-two—Y, YH, YHW, YHWH—and from the union YAHDWNHY, whose numerical value is ninety-one, this is the mystery of "It is the finger of God," etzba.[TN010215]

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 16 (טז)

Yad Yehudah: טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Four divisions of atonement,” etc. In the last chapter of Yoma, Rabbi Matya ben Harash asked Rabbi Eliezer? ben Azariah in Rome: Have you heard the four divisions of atonement that Rabbi Ishmael used to expound? He said to him: There are three, and repentance accompanies each one. If someone transgresses a positive commandment and repents, he does not move from there until he is forgiven, as it is said, “Return, backsliding children.” If he transgresses a negative commandment and repents, repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones, as it is said, “For on this day He will atone,” etc. If he transgresses offences punishable by excision or execution by the court and repents, repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend, while sufferings cleanse, as it is said, “I will visit their transgression with a rod, and their iniquity with afflictions.” But one who has profaned the Name has no power in repentance to suspend, nor in the Day of Atonement to atone, nor in sufferings to cleanse; rather, all suspend, and death cleanses, as it is said, “It was revealed in my ears by

Rema of Fano

Rabbi Ishmael used to expound four divisions of atonement. Rabbi Eleazar ben Azariah explained: there are three, and repentance accompanies them all. For neglect of a positive commandment, repentance alone atones immediately. Some teach concerning it, “He does not move from there until he is forgiven”; so it is taught in the first chapter of Shevuot. The intention is to distinguish mere neglect of a positive commandment from the lighter prohibitions. Although the latter are judged like a positive commandment and are not punishable by lashes, they still require closer consideration. If someone transgresses a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment and, out of repentance, fulfills its positive requirement, he is completely atoned for at once. If not, he holds two transgressions; through repentance he is partly atoned for and his punishment is lightened, but he has no complete forgiveness until the Day of Atonement arrives. For forty lashes are still upon his shoulders, as Rabbi Yohanan taught in the chapter Ha-Loqin: Every negative commandment containing a positive act —if he fulfills its positive requirement, he is exempt; if he does not fulfill it, he is liable. This is the reading of the Rabbi and Rambam, and we shall not depart from it.

Nevertheless, since fulfilling the positive requirement would exempt him from lashes, one can learn from the Tosafot in the LORD of hosts: Surely this iniquity will not be atoned for until you die.” Some read “four,” and “If he transgressed a positive commandment and repented, repentance atones,” like the wording of the Mishnah there; this is the author's reading. [TN010220]

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “Some teach,” etc. This is the reading just mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “The intention,” etc. There in the Mishnah: “Repentance atones for a positive and a negative commandment.” In the Gemara: If it atones for a negative commandment, need one mention a positive commandment? Rav Yehudah said: This is what it means—“for a positive commandment and for a negative commandment remedied by a positive one.” The author says that “He does not move,” etc., distinguishes a positive commandment from a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment regarding complete forgiveness. If someone neglects a positive commandment and repents, he does not move from there before being completely forgiven. This is not so with a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment: although he repents, he is not completely forgiven unless he fulfills its positive requirement. The same applies to the other lighter prohibitions, for which there are no lashes and which are judged like a positive commandment; these will be explained below in chapter 18.

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “They still require closer consideration”: before they are completely forgiven.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “He is completely atoned for”: even for the prohibition.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “If not”: if he has not fulfilled the positive commandment, he holds a transgression of the prohibition and a transgression of the positive commandment. Through repentance he is atoned for one of them, namely neglecting the positive requirement; therefore his punishment is lightened. This is the variant of Rabbi Yehudah's statement that teaches that repentance atones for a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment: it atones for its positive-commandment element. But from the aspect of its

Rema of Fano - continued

the first chapter of Shevuot that he is more readily atoned for than others liable to lashes, even though he has not fulfilled the positive requirement and has become liable. For with others liable to lashes, repentance suspends, protecting them from punishment until the Day of Atonement comes and atones. The practical difference is that, if it was previously decreed that he should die before the Day of Atonement, he cannot escape before his death the full punishment appropriate to that iniquity. In this case, however, repentance not only suspends and protects, but also diminishes the punishment: if his days do not extend to the Day of Atonement, a small punishment will suffice to complete his atonement. If you ask: For others liable to lashes who died before the Day of Atonement, what did repentance accomplish? One can say that it benefits them in the judgment of the soul and for the world to come, for it is reckoned as an additional commandment in tipping the scales.

We prefer to say that it greatly benefits them even concerning the punishments of this world, as we learn: “Repentance and good deeds are like a shield before calamity.” Calamity comes upon a person with mighty force, merely to assail him, but through excellent repentance he wears a coat of mail and does not feel it. Since the rule of judgment is that his sorrow suffices, he will therefore only fear and will not be shattered.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

prohibition, forty lashes are still upon his shoulders, and he remains liable to lashes until the Day of Atonement comes, like any other full prohibition, concerning which Rabbi Ishmael said: repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “As Rabbi ... taught”: according to Rif's reading and Rambam in chapters 16 and 18 of the Laws of the Sanhedrin. In the Gemara there, according to our reading?, Rabbi Yohanan teaches: Every negative commandment containing a positive act—if he nullifies its positive requirement, he is liable; if he does not nullify it, he is exempt. Resh Laqish says: “Fulfilled it or did not fulfill it.” That is, according to Rabbi Yohanan, if he nullifies it, subsequently fulfilling the positive commandment does not remedy it; as soon as he nullifies the positive requirement he is liable for its prohibition. According to “Rabbi Shimon?” [לר”ש?], who teaches that if he fulfills its positive requirement he is exempt, and if not he is liable, there is a remedy: even though he initially nullified the positive commandment, if he afterward fulfills it he is exempt.[TN010221] Rif reads the reverse: Rabbi Yohanan says “fulfilled or did not fulfill,” and Resh Laqish “nullified or did not nullify.” It is known that the halakhah follows Rabbi Yohanan against Resh Laqish. Accordingly Rambam ruled like Rabbi Yohanan as stated: fulfilled—exempt; did not fulfill —liable, as below.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Nevertheless,” etc. These are the Tosafot's words there on the baraita “If he transgressed a positive commandment and repented, he does not move,” etc.: Although the Mishnah in the last chapter of Yoma teaches, “Repentance atones for a positive and a negative commandment,” and in Hagigah we likewise say, “Anyone who does something and regrets it is forgiven,” for other transgressions this is not complete forgiveness; rather, his judgment is lightened. For a positive commandment, however, he is completely forgiven. Thus far their words. The Tosafot objected from the Mishnah in Yoma, which we interpret as a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment, and from the teaching in Hagigah, which concerns a full prohibition. Their answer explains that repentance serves only to lighten the judgment. In the first chapter of Hagigah they likewise wrote this in another wording: Furthermore, one can distinguish different kinds of repentance. There is someone who repents and is immediately forgiven; and someone who repents and is forgiven, but not completely: a punishment still remains, and that punishment is suspended, etc. We shall quote their words again at the beginning of the next chapter.

The author says that the Tosafot intend to distinguish a full prohibition from one remedied by a positive commandment. In the latter, the punishment is initially lightened and he is partly atoned for even from the prohibition's aspect—this is what we learned? concerning it, “repentance atones”—while the remaining punishment is suspended until the Day of Atonement.[TN010222] This is what the Tosafot discuss in the first chapter of Hagigah. For a full prohibition, however, nothing is initially lightened. Therefore in Shevuot the Tosafot changed their wording, writing “his judgment is lightened,” rather than “his punishment is lightened.” There they speak generally of all other transgressions, both full prohibitions and prohibitions remedied by positive commandments.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

One cannot say of both that his punishment is lightened, so they wrote that his judgment is lightened, each according to its case: for a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment, he is lightened through some atonement and forgiveness; for a full prohibition, protection suspends the entire punishment, in accordance with Rabbi Ishmael's unqualified wording, “repentance suspends.”

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “Protecting from punishment”: as the Sages said in chapter 4 of Keritot concerning a suspensive guilt-offering, this is why he brings it, to protect him. Rashi explains: to protect him from sufferings.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “He cannot escape,” etc. The punishment must come upon him through burning anger, to punish him appropriately before his day of visitation arrives. Otherwise, what difference is there between a full prohibition and one remedied by a positive commandment?

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “In this case”: a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “Who died before the Day of Atonement”: and received the full punishment appropriate to that iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “It benefits them”: repentance benefits them in the judgment of the soul after death, in the world of souls. Through the repentance he performed, he merits entry into the Garden of Eden, although it did not benefit him in this world. It may also benefit them for the world to come, in the judgment of resurrection, for merits and iniquities are weighed again there. Repentance is then reckoned as an additional commandment, so that the merits will tip the scale.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “We prefer to say”: even those who die before the Day of Atonement have already escaped, through repentance, the punishment appropriate to them in this world before their time of atonement. This is what we learn: “Repentance and good deeds,” etc. Although calamities must come upon those “liable to a time of atonement?” [למחוייבי זמן כפרה?], repentance is nevertheless a shield and protection for them. See what? Rabbi Abravanel wrote concerning this in Nahalat Avot.[TN010223]

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Since,” etc. All the more so because repentance proves that he is deeply distressed over his iniquities, and his sorrow suffices for this, as above in chapter 13; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

In Yoma, folio 86: Rabbi Matya ben Harash asked, etc. He said to him: There are three, and repentance accompanies them all—that is, each one. If he transgressed a positive commandment and repented, he does not move from there until he is forgiven. “The intention is to distinguish mere neglect of a positive commandment from the lighter prohibitions”: repentance atones for these too, so the difficulty is, what difference is there between a positive commandment and the lighter prohibitions? What he writes is the Tosafot's answer in Shevuot, folio 13: for other transgressions his punishment is lightened, but for a positive commandment he is completely forgiven. This is “He does not move from there,” etc. He writes “a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment” because this is how it is interpreted in Yoma, folio 81, in Rav Yehudah's name, in the passage “If it atones for a negative commandment, need one mention a positive commandment?” Thus far.

“From the disgrace of a positive commandment” [מתבזיון עשה, damaged] returns to the Tosafot's answer.[TN010224] He holds that for the lighter prohibitions his punishment is lightened until the Day of Atonement. But even for the weightier ones —that is, prohibitions not remedied by a positive commandment—punishment is suspended until the Day of Atonement. Concerning this he says that for other offences punishable by lashes, if he dies, ק”ו [unexpanded], before the Day of Atonement, the punishment will be complete; but in this case, if he dies before the Day of Atonement, he has a small punishment.[TN010225] He now objects: if so, what did repentance accomplish for those who died? He answers that it benefits the judgment of the soul and the world to come, whereas this concerns the judgment of this world, which is Rosh Hashanah.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“We prefer to say,” etc. As taught in the first chapter, folio 5, Rabbi Hanina said: One who does something and regrets it is forgiven at once, as it is said in Malachi 3, “I shall be a swift witness,” etc., through “and they do not fear Me.” This implies that if they fear Me, they are forgiven. But the Tosafot in Hagigah say that Rabbi Hanina disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael, under the words “If they fear Me,” etc. It is written concerning withholding a hired worker's wages, a negative commandment; he disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael, who says, “Repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones.” The author explains Rabbi Hanina's words as disagreeing with Rav Yehudah's interpretation. For Rav Yehudah says that the Mishnah properly speaks of a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment, but not a full prohibition. “And he explains ... the Day of Atonement” [ומפרי הוא די”הכ, unclear], that repentance atones even for a full prohibition, unlike Rabbi Ishmael, according to whom repentance atones together with the Day of Atonement.[TN010226] In Shevuot, however, under “He does not move from there,” they cite together the Mishnah concerning a positive and negative commandment and Rabbi Hanina's statement. This implies that they hold them to be alike, yet they did not openly conclude how they could avoid disagreeing.

He, however, gave a further answer: the Tosafot explain that it concerns a hired worker's wages, a prohibition subject to monetary repayment. Everything is thus resolved: he is forgiven at once, all being included more readily than the lighter prohibitions, since it is not subject to lashes. The difficulty raised by Kesef Mishneh is removed: in monetary matters one passage implies that a person is flogged and does not pay, while another implies the reverse. This resolves it: for prohibitions subject to repayment he pays and is not flogged; for a fine he is flogged and does not pay. Although a voluntary burnt offering is also their atonement in Shevuot, this entire “ruling/passage” [הפסק] is explained. See Shevuot.[TN010227]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 16

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 17 (יז)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “He is forgiven at once”: it concludes, “As it is said, ‘And they do not fear Me’—if they do fear Me, they are forgiven at once.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “As is evident from the Tosafot there”: they hold that even for that very iniquity he has no complete forgiveness, as mentioned in the preceding chapter and as will be demonstrated shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “However, they said,” etc. These are their words: “If he does ...”: the “he is forgiven” taught here is written concerning withholding a hired worker's wages, “of ...” [דר״ל ב״פ?, uncertain], and disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael in the last chapter of Yoma, who says that repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones.[TN010230] There is another baraita saying that repentance atones for a positive and a negative commandment. Furthermore, one may distinguish kinds of repentance: someone repents and is forgiven immediately; someone else repents and is forgiven, but not completely—

Rema of Fano

In the first chapter of Hagigah (5a), Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa said: “Anyone who does something and regrets it is forgiven at once.” We do not read “for all his iniquities,” as is evident from the Tosafot there and in the first chapter of Shevuot (12b). However, in Hagigah they said that Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael. This can only mean that he also disagrees with Rav Yehudah's interpretation of the Mishnah at the end of Yoma (85b). We express surprise at it: if repentance atones for a negative commandment, need one mention a positive commandment? Rav Yehudah explained it as a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment. Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa says that it teaches “not only this, but even that”; he would establish the anonymous Mishnah as not following Rabbi Ishmael. In Shevuot, however, the Tosafot established Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa's statement according to Rabbi Ishmael. They did not explicitly conclude that it likewise follows Rav Yehudah's interpretation of the Mishnah in Yoma.

From their words in Hagigah it is evident that Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa speaks of lighter offences and of a prohibition subject to monetary repayment. It is known that a person is not both flogged and made to pay. The law is thus: in a monetary liability, such punishment still remains, and that punishment is suspended. What we say in Shevuot, “One who transgresses a positive commandment and regrets it does not move from there until he is forgiven,” means complete forgiveness. If he repents with all his heart, his iniquities will be atoned for through sufferings. Thus far their words. In the first answer, “all this ... the answer comes thus?” [כ״ז תי׳ בא כך?], they posit a disagreement with Rabbi Ishmael's four divisions of atonement.[TN010231]

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) One cannot say that Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael unless one also says that he disagrees with Rav Yehudah, who explains the Mishnah in Yoma, “Repentance atones for a positive and a negative commandment,” as a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment. For a full prohibition, however, repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones. As for the Gemara's objection, “If it atones for a negative commandment, need one mention a positive commandment?", according to Rabbi Hanina one must say that the Mishnah teaches "not only this, but even that": not only a positive commandment, but even a negative one.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) "The Tosafot established," etc. They explained there that Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa's statement and the Mishnah in Yoma mean that his judgment is lightened, not that he receives complete forgiveness. This is the Tosafot's second answer in Hagigah. There is then no need to say that Rabbi Hanina disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael and Rav Yehudah; all intend one thing: for every negative commandment his judgment is lightened because of repentance, suspending it until the Day of Atonement.

Rema of Fano - continued

as withholding a hired worker's wages, he pays and is not flogged; with repentance he is forgiven at once. In a penal fine, such as one who rapes or seduces a woman of mamzer status, or a comparable case, if he was warned, he is flogged and does not pay. This removes the difficulty raised by Kesef Mishneh on chapter 18 of the Laws of the Sanhedrin. Since our discussion in Hagigah involves repayment and no lashes, and necessarily speaks of forgiveness after he has appeased the other person, it is rightly considered like a positive commandment and the lighter prohibitions. Their disagreement has thus disappeared.

We further examine precisely the wording there in Hagigah: "does something and regrets it." It means one thing, excluding two things of one kind —for example, taking the mother bird together with the young and not sending her away. This is like transgressing and repeating the offence, and he is flogged according to Rabbi Yohanan, as we have said.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) "And according to Rav Yehudah's interpretation of the Mishnah in Yoma": if Rabbi Hanina did not hold this, there would be no place for their objection there, as mentioned in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "They did not explicitly conclude" their words thus. Nevertheless, one can infer? this from their combined wording. [TN010232]

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "From their words in Hagigah," etc. One may state a third, deciding view of these teachings, so that neither of the Tosafot's two answers is needed: neither that Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa speaks only of lightening the judgment, nor that he disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael. Rather, Rabbi Hanina never disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael, and nevertheless "he is forgiven" means complete forgiveness, as with a positive commandment. The reason is that he speaks of the lighter prohibitions, as the Tosafot themselves say in Hagigah: Rabbi Hanina speaks of those who withhold a hired worker's wages. This is a prohibition subject to repayment, and a person is not both flogged and made to pay. So we say in the last chapter of Makkot concerning "You shall not rob." Since he is not flogged, repentance effects complete forgiveness, as with a positive commandment, above in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "The law is thus," etc. "Its subject?" [ענינה?]: the author explains the difference between monetary liability and a fine, to resolve Kesef Mishneh's

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

objection, as mentioned shortly.[TN010233]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) "A woman of mamzer status": intercourse with her is among the offences subject to prohibitions.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) "Or a comparable case": among offences subject to prohibitions or excision.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) "If he was warned": without prior warning he is not liable to lashes.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) "He is flogged and does not pay": although he is liable to a fine, as Rambam writes concerning all this in chapter 1 of the Laws of a Maiden and a Virgin; see there. This is the Mishnah in Ketubbot, “These maidens have a fine”: rape or seduction of a woman of mamzer status. There it is established as a case where he was not warned.

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “This removes Kesef Mishneh's difficulty,” etc. Concerning Rambam's statement, “Every prohibition subject to repayment, such as ‘You shall not rob’ and ‘You shall not steal,’ is not punishable by lashes,” Kesef Mishneh wrote: I find a difficulty, for in the chapter Ellu Na'arot, Rabbi Yohanan says that everyone agrees that where there is both monetary liability and lashes, he is flogged and does not pay. This requires investigation. Thus far his words. The author's view is that according to the distinction here between ordinary monetary liability and a fine, there is no difficulty. In Ellu Na'arot, Rabbi Yohanan concerns one who rapes or seduces a woman of mamzer status after being warned; his liability is a fine, and he is flogged. “And when we say?” [וכי׳ אמרי׳?] that he is not flogged, it concerns ordinary monetary liability, not a fine.[TN010234] The reason for the distinction is that with monetary liability that is not a fine, he must in any event appease the other person and restore the stolen property he took. Since he pays, he is not flogged. With a fine, however, he has not deprived the other person of anything; therefore, where lashes apply, he is exempt, “as Rava?” [כדרבא?]—there Rabbi Yohanan derives from “according to his wickedness”: one punishment for wickedness, not two.[TN010235]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Since our discussion does not involve,” etc. This concludes the argument. Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa does not speak of a prohibition carrying lashes, but of one subject to repayment. We must also be speaking of someone who has already paid and appeased the other person; otherwise what benefit is there in his regret? There is an explicit Mishnah at the end of Yoma: offences between a person and another are not atoned for by the Day of Atonement until he appeases the other person. Therefore “he is forgiven” rightly bears its plain meaning, complete forgiveness. The disagreement has disappeared, and we need not say that Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa disagrees with Rabbi Ishmael and Rav Yehudah, or distinguish complete forgiveness from incomplete forgiveness, as the Tosafot thought in the two answers mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - טו - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) Furthermore, one can infer precisely from Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa's words, “Anyone who does something,” etc.: one thing, excluding, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “For example, taking the mother bird,” etc. Although it is among the lighter prohibitions, since it is remedied by a positive commandment, nevertheless, because he did not fulfill the positive requirement, he is also flogged, as mentioned in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “Like transgressing and repeating”: the author likens a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment whose positive requirement was not fulfilled to someone who commits a transgression and repeats it, who is not given the opportunity to repent, as will be explained below in chapter 15, according to strict judgment.[TN010236] The reason is that, since he has two transgressions of one kind —the prohibition he violated and the positive commandment he neglected—it becomes to him like something permitted, and he certainly does not regret it properly. See chapter 14.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “According to Rabbi Yohanan”: see above in the preceding chapter. Although “according to ... Resh Laqish ...” [דלר״ם לק״ש דהלה?, damaged], he mentioned nullifying or not nullifying, as Kesef Mishneh writes there, the author nevertheless specifies Rabbi Yohanan because of the comparison with transgressing and repeating.[TN010237] According to Resh Laqish, once he has nullified it there is no remedy, even if he afterward fulfills the positive commandment. This is worse than transgressing and repeating, so it would not be appropriate to compare the two.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“This can only mean,” etc., appears puzzling. Even according to Rav Yehudah's interpretation, it is contrary to Rabbi Ishmael's words. For Rabbi Ishmael holds that even with the lighter prohibitions his punishment is lightened, but in any event the Day of Atonement is also needed. Rav Yehudah explains the Mishnah as saying that for a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment, among the lighter prohibitions, repentance alone atones; see the preceding chapter. All the more does Rabbi Hanina bar Pappa disagree with Rabbi Ishmael, since he holds that even for weighty

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 17

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

prohibitions repentance atones immediately. This requires investigation.

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 18 (יח)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “The conclusion”: that emerging from the discussion in chapters 16 and 17.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “For a positive commandment and comparable cases”: as stated according to Rabbi Ishmael's approach.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Although a voluntary burnt offering also atones”: for a positive commandment and prohibitions not punishable by lashes. We learn this from Torat Kohanim, Vayiqra, quoted by Rashi in his Torah commentary. There, in “When a person among you brings an offering,” concerning a voluntary burnt offering, it is written, “It will be accepted for him, to atone for him.” The Sages said: For what does the Omnipresent accept it from him? For a positive commandment and a negative commandment containing a positive act.

Rema of Fano

The conclusion is that repentance alone immediately atones for a positive commandment and for comparable prohibitions that are not punishable by lashes. Although a voluntary burnt offering also atones for them, here we are dealing with atonement that comes of itself. What are the lighter prohibitions? A comprehensive prohibition; one derived from a positive commandment; one involving no act, except for taking an oath, making a substitution for a consecrated animal, cursing, and conspiring witnesses; or one remedied by a positive commandment whose positive requirement was fulfilled. Included in this is a prohibition subject to repayment, when payment has been made. This last case is severe: if he has not paid, even death does not completely atone, as it is written, “It takes the soul of its owners,” unless the robbed person has already forgiven him. It is a great benefit to the robbed person, while he is still alive, to forgive him, whether during the robber's life or after his death. The wording “its owners” is also precise, as stated in the chapter Ha-

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Atonement that comes of itself”: through his regret? he has already been forgiven, not through something else, his burnt offering, for that is not what we discuss here. [TN010240]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “A comprehensive prohibition,” etc. None of these is punishable by lashes, as stated in the Gemara.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Except for taking an oath, making a substitution, cursing, and conspiring witnesses”: although they involve no act, the Talmud in Makkot and Shevuot says that they are punishable by lashes.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “Or a prohibition remedied by a positive commandment,” whose positive requirement he fulfilled: it is not punishable by lashes, as mentioned in the preceding chapters.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Included in this”: in the lighter prohibitions.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “When payment has been made”: as above in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “This last case”: a prohibition subject to repayment is severe and “hard? ... pays” [וקשה? משלם] if he has not paid. [TN010241]

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “Even death does not completely atone”: the soul also receives its punishment after death. As Recanati writes in Yitro: Some of the later sages of Kabbalah say that they have a received tradition that anyone who steals or robs from another must in the future repair his wrong and the property he robbed, “from a brother?” [מאח, unclear]. They bring proof from the Sages' statement, “Anyone who robs another is as though he takes his soul,” as it is said, “It takes the soul of its owners.” Thus far his words.[TN010242]

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “As it is written”: “Such are the ways of everyone who pursues wrongful gain; it takes the soul of its owners” (Proverbs 1)—specifically the soul.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “It is a great benefit,” etc. One who is robbed by another and does not forgive him also causes

Rema of Fano - continued

Gozel Batra. Through this the good promise made to Jeremiah will be fulfilled in him: “They will return to you, but you will not return to them.”

Prohibitions that are not punishable by lashes because their punishment is more severe, however—for example, those given as warnings for an offence punishable by execution by the court—are not included here. Repentance atones for offences carrying lashes alone in conjunction with the Day of Atonement. But concerning offences punishable by excision, such as intercourse with a menstruating woman and defiling the sanctuary and its consecrated things, and likewise offences punishable by death at Heaven's hands, such as a non-priest serving in the sanctuary—both of which discharge their punishment through lashes; likewise the positive commandments of Passover and circumcision, whose neglect carries excision, and one who suppresses his prophecy and those like him, who incur death, although both these groups involve no act and are not punishable by lashes; offences punishable by execution by the court which do not incur excision and do not require a sin-offering for inadvertent violation, namely cursing one's father or mother, an enticer, one who leads astray, a sorcerer, and a stubborn and rebellious son among those stoned, a murderer among those executed by the sword, and all those strangled except one who has intercourse with his neighbor's wife, for all forbidden sexual relations incur excision when deliberate and a sin-harm to his own soul, for he too will have to return to this world through reincarnation for the robber's rectification.

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “The wording ‘its owners’”: it is plural, including both the robber, the present owner, and the soul of the robbed person, the original owner.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “As stated in Ha-Gozel Batra”: on the verse “For what is the hope of the godless when God draws out his soul?” Rav Huna and Rav Hisda disagree: one says the robber's soul, the other the robbed person's soul. The one who says the robber's soul cites, “Such are the ways of everyone who pursues wrongful gain; it takes the soul of its owners.” The one who says the robbed person's soul cites, “Do not rob the poor because he is poor, and do not crush the afflicted at the gate, for the LORD will plead their cause and despoil of life those who despoil them.” But does not the other also have “It takes the soul of its owners”? “Its owners” means the present owner. But does not the other also have “and despoil of life those who despoil them”? It states the reason: Why will He despoil those who despoil them? Because they despoil the soul. This demonstrates that both statements are true, in the sense that the wording can signify both.

Yad Yehudah - טו - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) This reason applies when the robbed person forgives the robber.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “Made to Jeremiah”: “If you bring forth the precious from the worthless, you will be as My mouth; they will return,” etc. (there, chapter 15). Along the lines of the explanation we have given, “as mentioned?” [כנז׳?], according to its plain sense, the author explains the verse: “If you bring forth the precious from the worthless,” to rectify the wicked, “you will be as My mouth.” “They will return to you” in the world to come, “to raise for you?” [להעלות לכם?] through your merit, along the lines of the Zohar's statement, “They also bring merit to a man's soul?” [מזכאי׳ נמי נשמת גבר?]. [TN010243] The verse's end, “but you will not return to them,” means, even if one must explain ... that is, do not err “through their merits?” [שבזכותי׳?], saying that there will be a “lack?” [חסר?], [gap in the source], to return in this world in order to repair the wrong. Although you too will need to return in this world, for [gap in the source], “with her, this” [עמה זאת], and the robbed person will forgive them for what they have done to you, so that you will not return to them. “They ...

Rema of Fano - continued

offering when inadvertent; likewise anyone whose deliberate offence incurs excision and, with warning, execution by the court, such as one who profanes the Sabbath and all other offences carrying excision in the Torah; also those of whom the received law says, “Zealots strike them,” and a priest who serves while impure, whose fellow priests split his skull with wooden clubs; and one who forfeits his life to the king, whose execution is by the sword in every case, as it is written, “And who is the sword of your majesty”—for all these, since they incur death of whatever kind, repentance atones together with sufferings. These are faithful to the One who sends them, in measure, weight, and capacity.

The teaching's mention of excision and execution by the court lists some cases and omits all these others we have mentioned, for which the category of lashes does not suffice, while they have not reached the category of profaning the Name. One may further say that in all the others sufferings cleanse even without repentance, except specifically for the Torah's penalties of excision and execution by the court, for which repentance and sufferings are both required; we shall discuss them in the next chapter. Therefore this tanna of the divisions of atonement, since we have concluded that there are three and repentance accompanies them all, does not speak of those others. But for profaning the Name, repentance atones only with death. Our statement that all these suspend until atonement is complete does not entail that the graver

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

like ...?” [והם המה כעכו׳?] will draw nourishment from [gap in the source], but will return to you in the world to come, so that you may be in complete rectification.[TN010244]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “Prohibitions, however,” etc. This refers back to “What are the lighter prohibitions?” All the prohibitions not punishable by lashes for which we said repentance atones are those exempt from lashes because of their lesser gravity. Prohibitions exempt from lashes because of their greater gravity are not included; for these, even repentance and the Day of Atonement do not atone, as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “Repentance atones,” etc. This returns to the conclusion stated at the beginning of the chapter.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “In conjunction with the Day of Atonement”: as stated in Rabbi Ishmael's second case, for a full prohibition repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “But,” etc. Then repentance atones together with sufferings. This is Rabbi Ishmael's third case: if he transgressed offences carrying excision or execution by the court, repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend, and sufferings cleanse.

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Likewise offences punishable by death at

Rema of Fano - continued

division cannot be atoned for unless the lighter one precedes it, except for repentance, which is necessary with all of them to complete every sinner's atonement, as we explained at the beginning of chapter 10.

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Heaven's hands”: do not say that the teaching specifically means execution by the court. It includes other offences carrying death, such as a non-priest serving in the sanctuary and similar offences carrying death at Heaven's hands, which are prohibitions involving an act and are punishable by lashes, as Rambam lists them in chapter 19 of the Laws of the Sanhedrin.

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “Both groups”: those liable to excision and those liable to death also discharge their punishment through lashes. As Makkot says, “All those liable to excision who have been flogged are released from their excision,” derived from “Your brother is degraded before your eyes”: once he has been flogged, he is like your brother. The author teaches us that the same applies to those liable to death at Heaven's hands. Nevertheless, if they have not been flogged, repentance and the Day of Atonement do not atone as with other offences carrying lashes, but only together with sufferings.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “Likewise Passover and circumcision,” etc. He adopts the Mishnah's wording in the first chapter? of Keritot. Although these are positive commandments, repentance alone does not atone as with other positive commandments, because they incur excision.[TN010245]

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “And those like him”: a prophet who violates his own words, one who violates a prophet's words, and one who serves without sanctifying his hands and feet; these incur death at Heaven's hands.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “Although both groups”: Passover and circumcision, and suppressing prophecy and comparable cases, involve no act. See Rambam, chapter 19 of the Laws of the Sanhedrin.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Which do not incur excision,” etc., through “likewise anyone whose deliberate offence incurs excision,” etc. Those liable to execution by the court are of two kinds: those whose deliberate offences without warning do not incur excision and whose inadvertent offences do not require a sin-offering, and those whose deliberate offences incur excision and whose inadvertent offences require a sin-offering. For all of them, their death itself is not their atonement, and sufferings are needed.

Yad Yehudah - כז - continued

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “Except one who has intercourse with his neighbor's wife”: although he is subject to strangulation, he does not belong to the former category of those strangled, but to offences punishable by the court whose deliberate commission incurs excision and whose inadvertent commission requires an offering, like all forbidden sexual relations.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “Also those of whom we said,” etc. These are one who steals a service vessel, one who curses by a qosem, and one who has intercourse with an Aramean woman, as explained in the Mishnah in the chapter Ha-Nisrafin. Likewise a priest who serves while impure, as stated in the Talmud. [TN010246]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “Whose execution is by the sword in every case”: as Rambam says in chapter 3 of the Laws of Kings: “The king has permission to execute only by the sword.”

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “As it is written, ‘And who is the sword of your majesty.’” The Zohar, Balaq, page זכ”ל?, expounds concerning “that appearance, crowned ... from his Master?” [ההוא חיזו דאתעט' מאי' מריה?], at the time of death: He gives it to Israel and gives them a sword, and they kill it—a judicial killing and a fitting killing.[TN010247] See above, chapter 12, where we quoted that passage at length. “And also the sentence of death to the Sanhedrin and the king, to judge him fittingly” [difficult syntax]. The author

Yad Yehudah - לא - continued

brings proof here from this verse that the king's judgment is by the sword, and "the law?" [ודדינא?] of kingship, to kill fittingly, is Torah law. Therefore "not as killing?" [לא כהרג?] one who forfeits his life to the king—this person's judgment is like that of others liable to death.[TN010248]

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) "They are faithful": as it is said, "Evil and faithful illnesses." The Sages expounded in chapter 4 of Avodah Zarah: evil in their mission, faithful to their oath.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) "The teaching's mention," etc. If you object: if this applies to all offences carrying death, why does it teach execution by the court? It is because the tanna lists some and omits all these others.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) "For which lashes do not suffice": one cannot say, as with lashes, that repentance suspends and the Day of Atonement atones. They have not reached profanation of the Name either, so as to require death for atonement. Therefore they are judged like offences carrying execution by the court.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) "One may further say": excision and execution by the court are taught specifically, because for the other offences carrying death, sufferings alone cleanse without repentance. This is not so with execution by the court, which requires repentance and sufferings.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) "But for profaning the Name," etc. This is a separate matter, Rabbi Ishmael's final case.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) "Our statement that all," etc. Saying that all three divisions of atonement suspend until atonement is complete does not require that the graver division need the lighter one—for example, that sufferings also require the Day of Atonement. Although we said of offences carrying execution by the court that repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend while sufferings cleanse, sufferings nevertheless do not need the Day of Atonement; they cleanse alone. Likewise for profaning the Name, death cleanses alone, without the Day of Atonement and sufferings. Repentance is the exception: it is needed with each, because it is necessary for every sinner.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) "As we explained at the beginning of chapter 10": all iniquities require repentance for their atonement, except for someone who sinned only twice and returned to his former state; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"A voluntary burnt offering," etc. This is the Gemara in Shevuot. "It takes the soul of its owners": the blemish reaches the soul, and the punishment is in the soul, not in the body. Rather, the soul is oppressed, in the mystery of "the tears of the oppressed," explained in the Sava, Mishpatim. "The wording is also precise," etc.: the soul of the robbed person, who is called the owner of the robbed thing. Therefore it is a great benefit to the robbed person to forgive the robber, so that he too will not be blemished.

"The good promise," etc. The Holy One, blessed be He, promised Jeremiah that the rectification of his enemies' souls would depend upon him: they would return to him so that he might rectify them. This resembles the soul of the stranger, explained in the Sava, Mishpatim, on "You know the soul of the stranger." "But you will not return to them": your soul will not be subordinate to them and in need of them; rather, they will be subordinate, becoming a garment for your soul. So in this matter, if the robbed person forgives the robber, the robber's soul becomes a garment for the robbed person's soul and is rectified through him.

"And who is the sword of your majesty," etc. Consult Zohar, Shofetim, for the distinction between the sword and other forms of death. The king too is the image of vav in the Name, and there is the rectification of execution, namely by the sword, from the side of Isaac's attribute of judgment. "The number of HRG, the degree ... fifty ..." [ומנין הר"ג מדרג ני יכול"ין, damaged], for "end" [סו"ף] equals "disgrace" [חר"פה]—thus nun.[TN010249] They follow the order of the four letters YHWH. See Sefer ha-Kavvanot, and also the Tiqqunim, where the order of confession explains in these words: "If I have sinned before You so as to blemish the letter vav of Your great Name, and have become liable before You and before the Throne of Your Glory to execution by the sword," etc. Thus it is clear that the sword rectifies vav of the Name. "And there their root ... the Holy One, blessed be He, vav ... over lawgivers, three, Moses?" [וי"שם שרשם הק"בה ו' על

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

מחקקין ג׳ משה?, damaged]; see there in the Zohar. [TN010250]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 18

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 19 (יט)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז

Yoel Moshe - 1

“One who says, ‘I will sin and repent, I will sin and repent,’” twice; “‘I will sin and the Day of Atonement will atone’—the Day of Atonement does not atone.” This is the Mishnah's reading in Yoma, folio 86. The Gemara says: “‘I will sin and repent’ twice”—according to Rav Huna: once a person transgresses and repeats it, it is permitted to him. Rashi explains: since he has sinned twice, he is not given the opportunity to repent. Therefore it is likewise plainly true that if he says, “I will sin and not repent,” even once, he is not given the opportunity. [TN010273] The same applies if he sins twice: even without saying “I will sin and repent,” he is not forgiven.

“But if he repents”: that is, he regrets having said “I will sin and repent,” thereby sinning in reliance upon atonement, and repents of this. The Holy One, blessed be He, forgives him. This resolves the Tosafot's difficulty in

Rema of Fano

“One who says, ‘I will sin and repent, I will sin and repent,’ is not given the opportunity to repent. ‘I will sin and the Day of Atonement will atone’—the Day of Atonement does not atone.” This is a Mishnah at the end of Yoma. The first clause certainly teaches us two things: one who says “I will sin and repent,” even once, is not given the opportunity; and if he transgresses and repeats the offence, even without making the transgression conditional upon his assurance that he will repent, he too is included in “not given the opportunity,” as will be explained in Part III, chapter 9. From this we also learn that if someone says, “I will sin and sufferings will cleanse,” sufferings do not cleanse. So it is said, “Let Him hasten, let Him speed His work” (Isaiah 5:19). “I will sin and death will atone”—death does not atone. So it is said, “Eat and drink, for tomorrow we die” (Isaiah 22:13). What is written afterward? “Surely it will not be atoned for until you die” (Isaiah 22:14). Jonathan translated “a second death,” indicating what we have said.

But if he repents of his sin and of his words or thought, having been a misguided and foolish person who sins

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

the first chapter of Shevuot, folio 13, under “persisting in his rebellion”: sometimes death atones without repentance, and sometimes it appears that it must be specifically with repentance. There is a distinction: certainly death alone atones, but for one who says “I will sin and death [will atone],” truly relying upon his atonement, repentance is also needed.

Through this distinction he proceeds to resolve the difficulty concerning death by excision versus death at Heaven's hands. As he wrote, death at Heaven's hands atones even without repentance, whereas concerning excision they said that repentance must accompany it. He adds what Rabbenu Hananel and Rashi said, that the distinction concerns whether he has children or has no children. The teaching in Ve-Ellu Megallehin does not explain a distinction between excision and death at Heaven's hands, as someone supposes that fifty years means excision and sixty years death at Heaven's hands. For Rava's explicit teaching says that up to sixty is excision, and thereafter ordinary human death. Certainly, then, it does not explain a distinction between excision and death at Heaven's hands.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Likewise all those taught at the end of Ha-Nisrafin,” and “From this you can learn”: this matter requires investigation. I found one Mishnah there concerning those put to death outside the court: they have a share in the world to come. Therefore it is placed next to the preceding subject, showing that those put to death at Heaven's hands have atonement. One must write Ha-Nehenaqin in place of Ha-Nisrafin. [TN010274] “Scripture, however, changes its expression” for those liable to excision on the Day of Atonement: one who transgresses and repeats regards it as permitted, and is not given the opportunity to repent. On the Day of Atonement, although he is not repeating precisely the same prohibition—eating and labor are two distinct categories—nevertheless, for eating and the prohibition of labor, he is not given the opportunity to repent.

Rema of Fano - continued

in reliance on his atonement—as we say, “Reliance is different”—then repentance assuredly suffices with every division of atonement, none excluded. Here it is appropriate to say that death atones specifically together with repentance. If he did not sin in reliance on his atonement, however, death atones even without repentance: for example, those liable to a suspensive guilt-offering, or even those liable to sin-offerings and definite guilt-offerings, if he forgot and did not confess, not persisting in rebellion, according to Rava in the chapter Nigmar ha-Din. He says there that if a person is killed in the midst of his wickedness, he is atoned for, for he has sufferings and death. The exception is someone who knows his Master and intends to rebel against Him. Rava stated his teaching only concerning those who transgress with their bodies, whom we shall discuss in Part V, with the help of Heaven.

What we have said is much clearer than the Tosafot's answer to Rabbi Shelomoh of Daryosh's question in the first chapter of Shevuot: sometimes it appears that repentance is needed with all the divisions of atonement, and sometimes that it is not indispensable.[TN010260] Our explanation is sound and clear. Along our way we have learned a similarly true and firm distinction between those liable to death at Heaven's hands and those liable to excision, both groups having failed to receive atonement through sufferings before dying. This is in addition to what Rabbenu Hananel and Rashi explained: death applies to the person but not his

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

An explanation of “From this you can learn,” etc.: above he concludes with those put to death at Heaven's hands, then says, “All Israel have a share in the world to come,” etc., and afterward again speaks of those put to death at Heaven's hands. Why interrupt the sections on those executed? This is “even though it interrupted the sections on those executed,” etc. Certainly, above he concludes with those killed at Heaven's hands; “All Israel have a share in the world to come” refers to them, even without repentance, through their death itself. One must read Ha-Nehenaqin. “They read the beginning of that chapter in the land of Israel”: the chapter “All Israel,” etc., as it appears in the Mishnah. “They began Avot”: from “Moses received” onward, on the following Sabbath. “All Israel” was said only on the first Sabbath; they never read them together.

In the name of ר״ל of Lviv: Why, with all four spellings of Havayah in full, do we name the larger numerical component first—AB, SG, MH—whereas the Name BN is named with the smaller component first, BN?[TN010275] The reason is that tet is a holy letter, for the number nine never changes: “nine, nine, is nine,” and in reduced numerical value it is nine. [TN010276] See the introduction to Shefa Tal. This is the intention of “Truth will spring from the earth”: emet, truth, has the numerical value nine in reduced reckoning. Consequently AB is nine, SG is also nine, and MH is also nine in reduced reckoning. If we called the remaining name NB, it would be seven in reduced reckoning. But when we call it BN, with the extended final nun, which is seven hundred in the MNTsPKh letters, it is consequently nine in reduced reckoning: seven hundred gives seven, and bet gives two, making nine altogether. Thus the numbers of all the names undergo no change, but are nine. Thus far what I heard from the Gaon mentioned. This is a separate matter.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “The first clause certainly,” etc. There in the Gemara: Why does it say “to sin and repent, to sin and repent” twice? According to Rav Huna in the name of Rav, for Rav Huna said in Rav's name: Once a person transgresses and repeats it, it is permitted to him. Can you suppose it is permitted? Rather, say: it becomes to him like something permitted. Rashi explains: According to Rav Huna, since he has sinned twice, he is no longer given the opportunity to repent, offspring; excision applies to him and his offspring. So we demonstrate in the chapter Ha-Ba al Yevimto from “They will die childless” (Leviticus 20:20) and “They will be childless” (Leviticus 20:21): if he has children, he buries them; if he has no children, he departs without children. All penalties of excision are learned from one another.

Rema of Fano - continued

The teaching in the chapter Ve-Ellu Megallehin concerning days and years addresses only the distinction between ordinary death and punitive death. It does not follow someone who supposes that excision extends up to fifty years and death up to sixty, for Rava's explicit teaching there accords with what we have said. We add another distinction according to the purpose of this chapter: for those liable to death at Heaven's hands, their death is their atonement even without repentance. Likewise all those taught at the end of Ha-Nisrafin, whose death is outside the court through zealots and the like. For the statement that those put to death confess was made specifically concerning the four forms of execution. From this you can learn why the chapter Heleq was placed immediately after the preceding subject, even though it interrupted the sections on those executed; examine carefully and you will find it.

It seems reasonable to us that in the early generations they read the beginning of that chapter in the land of Israel on Isru Hag of Passover when it fell on the Sabbath, through the end of Rabbi Eliezer's and Rabbi Akiva's disagreement concerning the ten tribes.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

because the transgression seems permitted to him. Thus far. The Gemara's plain meaning must be that it asks: Why say “to sin and repent” twice? Once suffices for this, just as saying once “to sin and the Day of Atonement will atone” means that the Day of Atonement does not atone. It answers, making a distinction according to Rav Huna, etc.: certainly one who says “to sin and repent” once is not given the opportunity to repent. It teaches twice because one who transgresses and repeats it, even without initially saying “to sin and repent,” is likewise not given the opportunity, since it has become to him like something permitted. The reason it does not avail one who says “to sin and repent” or “to sin and the Day of Atonement will atone” is as the Gemara says there: “‘To sin and the Day of Atonement will atone’—the Day of Atonement does not atone. Shall we say that our Mishnah does not follow Rabbi? For it was taught: Rabbi says that for all transgressions in the Torah, whether he repented or not, the Day of Atonement atones. You may even say it follows Rabbi: reliance is different.” Rashi explains: “Reliance is different”—since he relies upon it, it does not atone. Thus far.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “Even without making it conditional,” etc.: he did not say “to sin and repent.”

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) From it one can also learn concerning the other divisions of atonement, sufferings and death: if at the outset, when sinning, he relies upon them, they accomplish nothing. This is obvious: how do they differ from repentance and the Day of Atonement?

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) So it is said, “Woe to those who draw iniquity with cords of falsehood, and sin as with cart-ropes, who say, ‘Let Him hasten, let Him speed His work,’” etc. (Isaiah 5). On the plain reading, they say mockingly and derisively: let the blessed LORD hasten His work to bring calamity. The author explains that they say this sincerely when sinning, for they sin on condition that calamity will come upon them to consume the flesh and bring their sin to an end. “And to great learning to do good” [ולגדול תלמוד להטיב, damaged], they also say that they make their sin depend upon the blessed LORD's hastening calamity.[TN010261] The prophet says of them: Woe to those who draw iniquity with this false cord, sinning on condition that sufferings will cleanse. The reverse is true: for this reason sufferings do not cleanse.

Rema of Fano - continued

All these were collected from baraitot, like the chapter Qinyan Torah. It resembles reading the haftarah on the resurrection of the dead during the intermediate days of Passover, for we hold that in Nisan they are destined to live again. They began Avot on the following Sabbath. They never read “All Israel” and “Moses received” together, although later authorities were not precise about this.

We return to our discussion. Concerning excision prescribed by the Torah—as distinct from the excision in the prophetic writings, explained in Malachi's prophecy—it was taught: “‘He shall surely be cut off’ (Numbers 15:31): ‘cut off’ in this world, ‘shall be cut off’ in the world to come. Might this apply even if he repented? Scripture says, ‘His iniquity is upon him.’ I said this only when his iniquity is upon him.” Thus far. We learn that they require repentance, like those liable to execution by the court. But for those liable to death at Heaven's hands and comparable cases, including that excision which was a received tradition among them until Malachi came and supported it with a verse—so that from that drop of seed he may never hope for a sign of blessing, “one who awakens and answers, and one who presents an offering”—repentance is not indispensable, as we have explained. In Ma'amar ha-Nefesh we shall add instruction concerning another substantial distinction between death and excision. One who guards his soul should keep far from them.

Scripture, however, changes its

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) So it is said, “Behold, joy and gladness, killing oxen and slaughtering sheep, eating and drinking: ‘For tomorrow we die.’ It was revealed in my ears by the LORD of hosts: ‘Surely this iniquity will not be atoned for until you die,’” etc. (there, chapter 22). The author likewise explains that they say: It is good for us to sin through the pleasures of this world, without regard to whether they are forbidden, wicked, and sinful before the LORD, for tomorrow we shall die, and death atones. We need not explain that they say this in mockery and jest, as the commentators hold.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “What is written afterward?” Death does not atone, and the iniquity is not atoned for until they die a second time, after they are reincarnated to return to the world again, as—

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) Jonathan translated: “This guilt will not be forgiven you until you die a second death.” In this translation the author finds what we said: death does not atone for this “I will sin,” since it was originally the cause of the sin, which they committed on that condition.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “But if he repents,” etc. Do not think that one who says “to sin and repent,” and similar things, has no remedy at all for his sin because repentance does not atone. A misguided and foolish person sins on condition of repenting, and this falls from his lips, or his heart and thought become filled with "to sin and repent," "to sin and the Day of Atonement will atone." If he afterward regrets it and repents of both—the sin itself and the matter of having sinned in reliance, by saying or thinking to sin on condition of atonement—and regrets each separately and repents of it, then certainly nothing stands before repentance. His wrong has a remedy through this repentance for having sinned in reliance, together with repentance for the transgression itself according to the four stated divisions of atonement. This is the author's view, opening a door of repentance for one who sinned in reliance.

Yad Yehudah - ת - continued

This has opened my eyes to see and understand the Gemara's answer to the objection, "Why say 'to sin and repent' twice?"—according to Rav Huna in Rav's name, etc., that once expression concerning the excision for deliberately performing labor on the Day of Atonement: it writes, "I will destroy." This intensifies the penalty through a new point, namely this: one who transgresses and repeats the offence comes to regard it as permitted, as we shall explain below. We also said in chapter 4 that even first iniquities are not forgiven in such a case, in addition to what we mentioned in this chapter. Now one who sins deliberately on the Day of Atonement will presumably first sin by deliberate eating, for his inclination presses him especially strongly in this, and then by deliberate labor. Scripture orders them in this way too, speaking of the usual case. Therefore it intensifies his penalty, making him resemble one who transgresses and repeats, although these are two distinct categories: we learn that if he ate and performed labor, he is liable to two sin-offerings. This is also precise in "from the midst of her people": although the soul is still among her people, and in strict law the offence has not become permitted to him, nevertheless it is written of him, "I will destroy." We also learn that excision is the loss of the soul, as the Sages say; only, punishment is exacted more quickly from this person, as stated. May the Merciful One deliver us.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - ת - continued

a person transgresses and repeats it, it becomes to him like something permitted. According to what was explained just above, that the repetition refers to the transgression itself, twice would be specifically required. Yet the unqualified wording "to sin" implies that the whole reason he is not given the opportunity to repent is his reliance: it speaks of saying twice "to sin and repent," not of the transgression itself. A further difficulty is that this would require the Mishnah to concern one sin committed twice: he says, "I will commit such-and-such a sin and repent," does so, sins and repents; afterward he returns to the same transgression, to sin and repent. He is not given the opportunity to repent because he repeated the transgression. This too runs against the Mishnah's plain wording, which implies that it concerns even different transgressions.

Therefore it seems to me, according to the author's words, that this applies also to the sin of reliance.

Yad Yehudah - ת - continued

The Gemara answers, "According to Rav Huna," etc.: certainly if he said "to sin and repent" only once, repentance does not avail him, just as in the final clause the Day of Atonement does not avail, because reliance is different. Nevertheless repentance will avail if he also performs it for the sin of having initially sinned in reliance, by saying he would sin on condition of repenting. Then, together with the twofold repentance he performs for the transgression itself, it atones for everything. This is not so when he says "I will sin and repent" twice: first he says of some transgression that he will commit it and repent, and does so, sinning and repenting; then he again says, whether concerning the same transgression or another, "to sin and repent." Then he is certainly not given the opportunity to repent, because of Rav Huna's principle. Repentance does not avail for the actual transgressions, even if different, unless he also repents of the sin of relying, in saying "to sin and repent." But he cannot repent of that sin, since he has already committed "to sin and repent" twice, and it has become to him like something permitted, according to Rav Huna. This interpretation is sound, a knop and a flower.

Yad Yehudah - ת - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "Here": when he sinned in reliance, and his heart trembles at this too and he repents of it, it is appropriate to say that death atones with repentance, as the Mishnah there states: "Death and the Day of Atonement atone with repentance." In the Gemara: with repentance, yes; alone, no. This concerns someone who sinned in a matter atoned for only by death, such as profaning the Name, and also sinned in reliance, saying at the outset, "I will sin and death will atone"; repentance for the reliance is needed. If he did not sin in reliance, repentance is not indispensable, and for one who forgets, death alone atones, as above in chapter 16: if he repented of the other transgressions he holds but forgot some, the hidden matters do not prevent atonement; see there. Accordingly it seems to me that the four divisions of atonement, requiring repentance with each, concern someone who remembers the sin, not someone who forgets, when there was no reliance.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) "For example, those liable to a suspensive guilt-offering": the Day of Atonement and repentance atone even if they did not bring the offering, as the Gemara says there. Or even those liable to sin-offerings and definite guilt-offerings, for whom the Day of Atonement does not atone: if they did not bring their offerings, repentance suspends and sufferings cleanse when they remember them. If he forgot and did not repent, we may therefore say that sufferings do not cleanse, as the author said above in the preceding chapter; nevertheless death alone atones.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) "Not persisting in rebellion": rather, he has turned back. This excludes someone persisting in rebellion, for whom death does not atone, as will be stated shortly.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) "According to Rava," etc. In saying that death alone atones, we do not mean ordinary death, but specifically death through killing. This is according to Rava at the end of Nigmar ha-Din, concerning an apostate city, from which one sought to prove that someone who dies in his wickedness has no atonement. Rava said: Do you compare one killed in his wickedness with one who dies in his wickedness? One who dies in his wickedness, since he dies in the ordinary way, has no atonement. One killed in his wickedness, since he does not die in the ordinary way, has atonement. The reason is the distinction between ordinary death and sufferings: when he dies ordinarily, the sufferings are not reckoned separately but included in death, for that is the way of death. In an extraordinary death, however, the sufferings are not included in death but reckoned separately. Since the transgressions there carry execution by the court, they require repentance and sufferings for atonement, as mentioned in the preceding chapter. If someone killed in his wickedness without repentance nevertheless has death effect atonement even without repentance, infer that death through killing stands in place of repentance according to Rava. "And for the tanna of our Mishnah, who teaches death unqualified, and from Rav to Rabbi Eliezer ... Rav Moses ..." [ולתנא ... ומדרב לרב אליעזר דרב משה, damaged], for our Mishnah speaks of persisting in rebellion, to teach you that even according to Rava his being killed does not atone, as will be explained. [TN010262]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) "Except someone who knows his Master," etc. This qualifies Rava's statement: although death alone atones when he has forgotten repentance, this is not so when he does not repent because he persists in rebellion, knows his Master, and intends to rebel. Death does not atone. Even Rava, who says that someone killed in his wickedness has atonement, spoke only of those who transgress with their bodies, "not out of appetite" [שלא לתאבון], not someone intending to rebel and transgressing to provoke.[TN010263] Such a person has no remedy except through complete repentance and regret for the rebellion itself, as explained below in Part V, chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) What we have said, distinguishing one who sinned in reliance, for whom death does not atone without repentance, from one who sinned without reliance, for whom death alone atones, is sounder and clearer than the Tosafot's distinction in the first chapter of Shevuot. In the name of Rabbi Shelomoh of Daryosh they objected against the Rabbis there, who say that death atones without repentance, from the Mishnah in Yoma, which requires it specifically with repentance. They answered that without repentance sufferings and judgments after death are still needed; this is what the Rabbis there discuss. With repentance, however, death cleanses completely, so that he is not judged further through sufferings after death; see there. This distinction seems somewhat forced to the author.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Along our way we have learned”: this very distinction between those liable to death at Heaven's hands and those liable to excision. For death at Heaven's hands, death atones without repentance; not so with the Torah's excision, as will be explained.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “Both groups,” etc. Concerning sufferings there is no difference: neither receives atonement through sufferings without repentance. This follows what the author said in the preceding chapter, that Rabbi Ishmael's mention of excision and execution by the court lists cases here, not the further alternative the author proposed there, לח”ב [unexpanded]; see there.[TN010264]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “In addition to what they explained,” etc. This distinction is additional to the distinction made by Rabbenu Hananel and Rashi, of blessed memory, which too is true and necessary. Rashi's view is in his Torah commentary, Aharei, on “The souls shall be cut off,” etc.; he explains the verse as including the offspring along with the person, “the souls shall be cut off,” meaning that the children are cut off with him. These are his words: “His offspring is cut off, and his days are cut off.” In the Gemara, in Ba-Meh Madliqin, folio 25, he writes concerning death at Heaven's hands: “His days are shortened, but his offspring does not depart childless.” In the Tosafot there, Riva says that his offspring is cut off only in those cases where “childless” is written. “So in Rabbenu Hananel” [וה”ק בר”ח], for concerning one who has intercourse with his brother's wife it says childless: his offspring is cut off only in those cases where childless is written, and he establishes such a case; see there.[TN010265] The author reads Rabbenu Hananel in place of Rabbenu Tam.

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “In the chapter Ha-Ba al ha-Yevamah”: concerning the verse where the Merciful One writes, “They will be childless,” we derive according to Rava, who raised a contradiction: it is written “They will be childless,” and it is written “They will die childless.” How can both be? If he has children, he buries them; if he has no children, he departs childless, etc.; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “All penalties of excision are learned from one another”: they are compared with one another in “For whoever does any of these abominations ... shall be cut off,” as the Sages said. Infer that all penalties of excision likewise apply to offspring, even when childless is not stated. We therefore need not resort to the strange agreements by which some seek to prove this from the rulings.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “The teaching,” etc. One cannot distinguish death at Heaven's hands from excision according to the statement in Ve-Ellu Megallehin concerning death in days and years: dying at fifty is death by excision; at fifty-two, the death of Samuel of Ramah; at sixty, ordinary human death, etc. One cannot say that death at Heaven's hands is death at sixty, as someone supposes below, “for Rava ... blessing ... death” [דבעי׳ רבא לברכת למיתת, damaged].[TN010266] For according to that view, “at sixty, ordinary human death” must mean all those people whose death is because of sin, death at Heaven's hands. Rather, they do not enter there into explaining punitive deaths so as to distinguish one penalty from another, but only distinguish natural death, ordinary human death, from punitive death.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “For there is an explicit teaching there,” etc. Rava explicitly says there that from fifty to sixty is death by excision; the reason it is not counted is out of honor for Samuel, as will be explained below.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “We add,” etc. This refers back to “Along our way we have learned,” etc. In addition to Rabbenu

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Hananel's and Rashi's distinction, we add according to our preceding approach another: for those liable to death at Heaven's hands and others liable to death outside the court, death atones without repentance. Those liable to excision, however, need repentance. He will shortly bring proof.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “Through zealots”: who strike them.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “And the like”: mentioned above in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “That those put to death confess,” etc. In Nigmar ha-Din we learn: When he is ten cubits from the place of stoning, they say to him, “Confess,” for such is the practice: all those put to death confess, since everyone who confesses has a share in the world to come, etc. The author explains that what we learn from this—that all those put to death also need confession and repentance for their atonement—concerns specifically those put to death by the court, not others.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) From what we said—that for those taught at the end of Ha-Nisrafin, whose death is outside the court, their death is their atonement without repentance—you learn why the chapter Heleq was placed next to Ha-Nehenaqin. Thus the tanna interrupted the sections on those executed by inserting Heleq between Ha-Nisrafin and Ha-Nehenaqin. This is puzzling: he should have placed all those executed together and taught Heleq after Ha-Nehenaqin. The author says that the reason is to indicate that even those taught at the end of Ha-Nisrafin, whose death is outside the court and who “do not die by stoning ...” [ולאו מיתי בסקילה סיהדי״ן, damaged], nevertheless have a share in the world to come, since their death is their atonement, as stated. [TN010267]

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Examine carefully and you will find”: this is indeed the order, Heleq between Ha-Nisrafin and Ha-Nehenaqin. You can see from Rambam's commentary on Makkot that Ha-Nehenaqin is Sanhedrin's final chapter; likewise, in his commentary on Avot he calls Heleq the tenth chapter. This is also the order in the Jerusalem Talmud. The printers, however, arranged Heleq after Ha-Nehenaqin in the Babylonian Talmud.

Yad Yehudah - כז - continued

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “It seems reasonable to us,” etc. Since the author speaks of Heleq, he mentions this custom relevant to our subject. The widespread custom at present is to recite one chapter of Avot on each of the six Sabbaths between Passover and Shavuot, and before the chapter to recite the beginning of the Mishnah of Heleq, “All Israel have a share in the world to come,” etc. The author says it seems reasonable that in the early generations the custom was not so. Rather, if Passover fell on the Sabbath, so that for the inhabitants of the land of Israel there were seven Sabbaths between Passover and Shavuot, they recited Heleq in the land of Israel on “the first second” [בשני הראשון], which for them was Isru Hag and for us the eighth day of Passover. [TN010268] On the following Sabbath they began Avot in order. They did not recite the Mishnah “All Israel” before the chapter; only afterward did the custom spread from this to reciting “All Israel” before the chapter.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “Through the end of the disagreement,” etc. They studied from “All Israel” through the Mishnah “The people of an apostate city,” etc., which is the end of Rabbi Eliezer's and Rabbi Akiva's disagreement concerning the ten tribes. All these are mishnayot, excluding supplements and baraitot, as with Avot, chapter 6 of “the commandments” [דמצות], called Qinyan Torah. See the Mishnah there, “Torah is acquired through forty-eight things,” etc.; these too are mishnayot collected from baraitot. [TN010269]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “It resembles reading the haftarah,” etc. That is, support for “not reciting” [שאין לומרי] the mishnayot of Heleq after the festival of Passover: just as during the intermediate days of Passover the haftarah concerns Ezekiel's resurrection of the dead, “The hand of the LORD was upon me,” etc., as stated in Benei ha-Ir.[TN010270] Tur, Orah Hayyim, section 490, writes in the name of Rav Hai Gaon that this is because the dead are destined to live again at Passover; therefore the haftarah concerns resurrection. Likewise here, when the custom is to recite them in order between Passover and Shavuot and there is one Sabbath more than the number of Avot chapters, as mentioned, this subject is recited, for Heleq concerns the world to come and resurrection of the dead.

Yad Yehudah - ל - continued

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “They never”: whether Passover fell on the Sabbath or on another weekday, they did not read “the tractate,” etc., and the Mishnah “Moses received” from Avot together.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “Were not precise about this”: their custom is to say “the Mishnah,” etc., before every chapter of Avot. This is a custom that spread mistakenly from the earlier practice of reciting the mishnayot of Heleq alone.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) “We return to our discussion”: those liable to death at Heaven's hands and to excision. We said that for those liable to death at Heaven's hands, their death is their atonement without repentance. Not so those liable to execution by the court, for whom repentance is required, as above; those liable to excision prescribed by the Torah are like them, for it is written, “He shall surely be cut off.” It was taught in Heleq and in the first chapter of Shevuot: “‘He shall surely be cut off,’” etc.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) “As distinct from excision in the prophetic writings”: this belongs to offences punishable by death at Heaven's hands, not to the Torah's penalties of excision, as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) “Explained in Malachi's prophecy”: as it is written, “Judah has acted treacherously, and an abomination has been committed in Israel and Jerusalem, for Judah has profaned the LORD's holiness which He loved and has married the daughter of a foreign god. May the LORD cut off, for the man who does this, one who awakens and answers from the tents of Jacob, and one who presents an offering to the LORD of hosts” (there, chapter 2).

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) “But those liable to death at Heaven's hands”: the author returns to explain the extension of this category, so as to include excision in the prophetic writings.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) But the excision for one who has intercourse with an Aramean woman was a received tradition among them, as the Sages said, “The received law is that zealots strike him.” In Ha-Nisrafin: If zealots did not strike him, what then? Rav came to his received learning; they read to Rav Kahana in his dream, “Judah has acted treacherously,” etc., “which He loved, and has married the daughter of a foreign god,” etc. Presumably, just as they had the received law that zealots strike him, so they also had the judgment before Malachi concerning a case where zealots did not strike him.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) “He may not hope”: for any sign of blessing ever from the seed of that intercourse. As the Sages said in Ha-Nisrafin: if he is a Torah scholar, he will have none who awakens among the sages or answers among the disciples; if he is a priest, he will have no son who presents an offering to the LORD of hosts. The author understands this as said by the Torah only of that seed which he emitted in vain.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) “Scripture, however”: concerning the Day of Atonement it is written, “Every soul that does not afflict itself on this very day shall be cut off from its peoples; and every soul that performs any labor on this very day, I will destroy that soul from the midst of her people.” Scripture changes the wording for labor to “I will destroy,” rather than “I will cut off,” as with the other penalties of excision, to intensify the penalty and hasten its exaction. The reason in the case of labor on the Day of Atonement is that he has already transgressed by eating too, and resembles someone who transgresses and repeats. This is a new point: that it should be as though he transgressed and repeated, even though the two transgressions are of distinct categories, as the author concludes.

Yad Yehudah - מ

(40) “As we shall explain below”: in Part III, chapter 14, various interpretations of “one who transgresses and repeats, it is permitted to him,” all of them stringent; see there.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(41) “Even first iniquities”: a person's first and second iniquities are forgiven; nevertheless in a case like this, where they are repetitions of one transgression, they are not forgiven. See there.

Yad Yehudah - מב

(42) “In addition to what we mentioned in this chapter”: that if someone transgresses and repeats, he is not given the opportunity to repent. [Gap in the source.]

Yad Yehudah - מג

(43) “Scripture orders them in this way too”: it first speaks of deliberate eating, in the order of the usual case, for a deliberate sinner and transgressor is more likely to sin by eating first, and afterward by deliberate labor.

Yad Yehudah - מד

(44) “Therefore it intensifies his penalty”: Scripture specifies “I will destroy” concerning his deliberate labor because of the severity of the punishment. He resembles “...” [לע”מ, unclear], although in truth he did not transgress and repeat in this matter, since the two offences are distinct categories, deliberate eating and deliberate labor. Nevertheless he resembles such a person because both occur on the Day of Atonement.[TN010271]

Yad Yehudah - מה

(45) “He is liable to two sin-offerings”: because they are two distinct categories.

Yad Yehudah - מו

(46) “This is also precise”: in truth he did not transgress and repeat, for concerning “I will destroy” it says, “that soul from the midst of her people.” Although this person performed labor and had already failed to afflict himself on the Day of Atonement, he is still, in his soul, called part of her people. In strict law the offence has not become permitted to him as with someone who transgresses and repeats, because there are two different iniquities. Nevertheless we apply “I will destroy” to him, since he does in any event resemble one who transgresses and repeats.

Yad Yehudah - מו - continued

Yad Yehudah - מז

(47) “We also learn,” etc. Since the reason for deliberate labor is its resemblance to transgressing and repeating, infer that deliberate eating and all other penalties of excision, where the person sins and the soul is cut off, also involve the loss of the soul. Only in deliberate labor does Scripture explicitly say “I will destroy,” meaning that punishment is exacted more quickly because its severity resembles transgressing and repeating. For “if ‘shall be cut off’ written concerning the other penalties of excision meant the loss of the soul” [דאי ... היינו אבדן הנפש], there would be no further place to say “I will destroy” concerning deliberate labor, since in any event he has not actually transgressed and repeated, as mentioned. [TN010272]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 19

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 19

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 20 (כ)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe - 1

“To interpret concerning a member of the covenant”: if “he is not afforded the opportunity to repent” meant that repentance were impossible, it would be exceedingly perplexing that repentance should not suffice.

Rema of Fano

The teaching, “He is not afforded the opportunity to repent,” cannot, concerning a member of the covenant, be interpreted like the hardening of Pharaoh's and Sihon's hearts, to destroy them forever. They and all like them are not included in the provision for penitents, and the Merciful One left

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Rather, to withhold”: this explains that he is not assisted toward repentance as another person is.

“One who plans to sin on the strength of pretexts”: one who says, “I shall sin and repent,” and so forth, is a transgressor, far from the Holy One's deliverance, blessed be He.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Yet everything is in Heaven's hands”: even without assistance, the person [the source abbreviation is unclear] can return, since everything is in Heaven's hands except fear of Heaven.[TN020103]

“Opposite it, cold and heat and their associated dangers”: what pertains to them [the opening word is questioned in the source]. [TN020104]

“But the One seated upon the throne”: this means the Ancient of Days, seated on the throne, which is the world of Beriah. The matter derives from Ari's teachings, of blessed memory: five configurations are expounded within the world of Atzilut, the world of repair. The first is the Ancient of Days, explained as the configuration of Arikh Anpin, namely Binah within Keter, extending to the end of the world of Atzilut. Although the Ancient of Days is expounded concerning the mystery of the thirteen refinements [an uncertain letter sequence follows] in the head of Ayin, which is like Ḥokhmah within Keter, nevertheless, since they are all clothed within the configuration of Arikh Anpin, they are called by them subject to their judgment, as we shall mention further in Part II, chapter 11, and Part IV, chapter 13. Rather, it means withholding assistance from above at the beginning of his repentance —the assistance of which they said: when a person sanctifies himself a little, below and in this world, he is sanctified greatly, above and in the world to come. For one who plans to sin on the strength of a pretext is a transgressor, far from deliverance.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yet everything is in Heaven's hands except fear of Heaven. Concerning it, Scripture says to the wholly righteous person, “What does the Lord your God ask of you?” For him it is a small matter, as will be explained in chapter 25. His asking this, blessed be He, is a great assurance that the matter is entrusted to our hands. Concerning penitents it is written, “Who can bring a pure one from an impure one? Not the One.” The Unique One of the world does not undertake their purification unless they have opened for themselves an opening of repentance with a broken and crushed heart. As my teacher, R. Yishmael Ḥanina, of blessed righteous memory, explained: the pious king, the man who established the yoke of repentance, stipulated that it be utterly broken, like fragments of an earthenware vessel, fit for nothing, no longer serving any semblance of their original function; their breaking is their purification.

Fear is indeed nothing—vanity, without benefit—unless it proceeds through choice and willingness. Opposite it stand the name of the configuration of Arikh, extending to the end of Atzilut.[TN020105] The two configurations Father and Mother clothe Arikh from his throat, as it were, to the middle of his navel; they are the mystery of YH. The two configurations Zeʿir and his female counterpart clothe Arikh to the end of the world and are expounded in the mystery of VH of Atzilut. Thus the Ancient of Days, extending throughout the whole world of Atzilut, sits upon the throne, a designation for the world of Beriah.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “It cannot be interpreted”: concerning the hardening of Pharaoh's heart and his punishment, Rambam discussed at length in the eighth of the chapters he prefaced to Avot the difficulty that the Holy One Himself hardened Pharaoh's heart, prevented him from sending Israel away, and afterward punished him when he did not wish to send them. The same applies to Sihon: Scripture says, “Sihon king of Heshbon would not let us pass through him, for the Lord your God hardened his spirit and strengthened his heart, to deliver him into your hand, as on this day.” His position, of blessed memory, is that the Holy One did not punish Pharaoh for failing to send Israel away [text missing]; He punished him for harming Israel and for his violence through enslavement and decrees, as Scripture explains. [TN020106] Had Pharaoh sent Israel away according to the Lord's word, that would have constituted repentance for the injustice and violence he had done to them. The blessed Lord therefore withheld repentance from him and hardened his heart against sending them, in order to bring upon him the great punishments he deserved and return upon his head the suffering he had inflicted on Israel. Sihon's punishment likewise concerned his earlier deeds and sins; for this reason the blessed Lord closed the path of repentance before him and turned his heart against allowing Israel to pass through his territory, in order to deliver him into their hand. See there, where he treats the matter at length, and likewise chapter 6 of the Laws of Repentance.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Here the author says that the Sages' "he is not afforded the opportunity to repent" does not mean what occurred with Pharaoh and Sihon. Certainly they and their like are not within the provision for penitents; the Lord therefore left them subject to the judgment cold and heat [tsinnim paḥim] and their associated dangers, such as the belly of the wicked or a man whom women killed [so the supplied wording reads]. [TN020102] Whatever falls under "one who guards his life will keep far from them" may be called tsinnim paḥim. Scripture says, "in the way of the crooked": Heaven brings these only upon one whose fear of Heaven is incomplete, each according to the person he is, for He is awesome over all those around Him, as below.

Rema of Fano - continued

Of one who strengthens himself in complete repentance and sanctifies himself with all his strength, it is said, "'Return to Me,' declares the Lord." Specifically "to Me," according to R. Yoḥanan in the final chapter of Yoma. There he explained the prophet's "Return, Israel, unto the Lord your God" as "unto, but not including," in accordance with R. Levi, who says "up to the throne of glory"—that is, including the throne of glory alone. But the One seated upon the throne said, "Return to Me," as we have said. We explained this in chapter 14; attend to it.

It is written, "You have prostituted yourself with many companions," corresponding to "Your gods were as numerous as your cities." Nevertheless, we do not apply to her "She went and became another man's," nor "after she had become defiled." Scripture testifies that alien worship is incidental to her. Therefore it says, "Return to Me," for His love for her is wondrous.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

and punishment they deserved and did not allow them to repent. Israel, however, are within the provision for penitents: the Lord withholds no good from those who walk uprightly. This distinction apparently [so the supplied connective reads] emerges from Rambam, Laws of Repentance, chapter 6. [TN020107]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) "Rather": "they do not afford him the opportunity" means that initially, when they wish to repent, the assistance from above is withheld. As the Sages said in chapter 3 of Yoma [the supplied reference], on "Sanctify yourselves and be holy": a person sanctifies himself a little, and they sanctify him greatly; below, and they sanctify him above; in this world, and they sanctify him for the world to come.[TN020108]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) "One who plans": assistance from above is withheld because, by planning at the outset to sin on condition that he repent, he transgresses against his own soul, knowingly distancing himself from His assistance, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) "Yet": the gates of repentance are not closed before him forever, as they were before Pharaoh and Sihon. Although he has no assistance from above, if he strengthens himself and repents on his own, without assistance, he is not prevented. For everything is in Heaven's hands except fear of Heaven, as R. Ḥanina said in chapter 5 of Berakhot, from "Now, what does the Lord your God ask of you, except to fear," and so forth. They objected: "Is fear a small matter? Did R. Ḥanina not say in the name of R. Shimon son of Yoḥai: the Holy One, blessed be He, has in His treasure-house only a store of fear of Heaven, as it is said, 'Fear of the Lord is His treasure'? Yes: for Moses it is a small matter," and so forth. This appears to apply to every wholly righteous person, as will be explained below in chapter 25.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) "His asking": although for one who is not wholly righteous it is no small matter, nevertheless, since He, blessed be He, asks it of him, the matter must be entrusted to our hands.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) "Concerning penitents it is written": this is also the intention of "Who can bring a pure one from an impure one? Not the One" (Job 13, as cited in the source).[TN020109] That is, who can bring a penitent from impurity, when the Unique One of the world does not undertake to purify him? This is "not the One." The midrash likewise interprets it concerning the Unique One of the world.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) "With a broken and crushed heart": as it is written, "A broken and crushed heart, God, You will not despise."

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) "He stipulated": King David, peace be upon him, by saying "crushed," stipulated that the heart be utterly broken.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) "Like fragments of earthenware": breaking purifies them of their impurity, provided they no longer serve anything like their original function, as explained in tractate Kelim. Likewise, if penitents' hearts are utterly broken and crushed, no longer performing anything like their original activity, then certainly "God, You will not despise." This is also explained in the Zohar, Pineḥas, page 232.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) "For indeed": this returns to "His asking," and so forth. The reason is that fear itself confers merit only because it is accomplished through our choice and willingness.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) "Opposite fear": stand cold and heat, as stated in chapter 3 of Ketubbot: "Everything is in Heaven's hands except cold and heat, as it is said, 'Cold and heat are in the way of the crooked; one who guards his life will keep far from them.'" Tosafot there say: "Our statement, 'Everything is in Heaven's hands except fear of Heaven,' does not concern this. There it concerns the fetus in its mother's womb, for whom it is decreed whether it will be poor or rich, strong or weak, foolish or wise, but not righteous or wicked. Here it concerns events that befall a person."

The author prefers to say that the statement concerning cold and heat and the statement concerning fear of Heaven are one matter. Whoever does not take care concerning fear of Heaven is as though he took care concerning cold and heat [so the supplied wording reads], for Heaven brings these only upon one who lacks fear of Heaven.[TN020110] Thus "everything is in Heaven's hands": all a person's circumstances and events are decreed for him from Heaven, except cold and heat, which are not decreed upon him, just like fear of Heaven. Both depend on his choice, and whoever chooses one erases its opposite.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) "Such as the wicked": one who eats and drinks excessively, and a man whom his adversaries killed more than his fellows [the supplied wording is unstable].[TN020111]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) "Heaven brings them only": upon one who follows a crooked way. [The following clause about fear of Heaven and the straight way is defective.] Heaven measures to him measure for measure, bringing him cold and heat and similar things, which he desired.[TN020112]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) "Of him it is said": "If a man sends away his wife, and she goes from him and becomes another man's, may he return to her again? Would that land not be thoroughly polluted? Yet you have prostituted yourself with many companions; return to Me, declares the Lord” (Jeremiah 3).

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “According to R. Yoḥanan in the final chapter of Yoma”: there R. Levi says, “Great is repentance, for it reaches the throne of glory, as it is said, ‘Return, Israel.’” R. Yoḥanan says, “Unto, but not including.” “Did R. Yoḥanan say this? Did he not say: great is repentance, for it overrides a prohibition in the Torah, as it is said, ‘If a man sends away his wife, and she goes from him,’ and so forth, ‘You have prostituted yourself with many companions; return to Me, declares the Lord’? There is no difficulty: here it concerns an individual; there, a community.” This is the reading in some books. Rashi explains the prohibition as “Her first husband may not,” and so forth.

Some books do not contain “R. Yoḥanan says, ‘Unto, but not including,’” nor the objection “Did R. Yoḥanan say this?” nor the answer distinguishing an individual and a community. R. Yoḥanan's “Great is repentance” is then a separate statement. The author apparently had a third reading: he read “R. Yoḥanan says, ‘Unto, but not including,’” while R. Yoḥanan's “Great is repentance” was an independent statement, without the objection and answer.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “According to R. Levi”: the author holds that R. Yoḥanan and R. Levi do not disagree. R. Levi said “up to the throne of glory,” including the throne. R. Yoḥanan explains his words, deriving this from “the Lord your God”: unto the Lord, but not including Him. Only the throne of glory is included, not above it, unto the Lord seated on the throne, who is not included.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “He said, ‘Return to Me’”: because repentance does not reach Him, blessed be He, as stated, the blessed Lord must say, “Return to Me.” This is R. Yoḥanan's statement, “Great is repentance,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “It is written, ‘You have prostituted yourself’”: [text missing] what pertains to his words here. [TN020113]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “Corresponding to ‘as numerous as your cities’”: they prostituted themselves after many idols.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “Nevertheless”: the blessed Lord said, “Return to Me,” and we do not apply to her “she went,” and so forth. Scripture says, “If a man takes a wife,” and so forth, “and sends her from his house, and she goes out, goes away, and becomes another man's,” and so forth, “her first husband who sent her away may not take her again as his wife after she has become defiled.”

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “Nor ‘after’”: we also do not apply to her “after she has become defiled,” which the Sages said includes a suspected adulteress who secluded herself [with another man].

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “Scripture testifies”: the reason we do not apply to her “she became another man's” is that idolatry was not [text missing] in the manner of marriage, but incidentally and as prostitution. This is what Scripture attests by saying, “You have prostituted yourself.” Nor does “after she became defiled” apply, since Scripture likens her to a divorced woman.[TN020114]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “For His love for her is wondrous”: the blessed Lord teaches [text missing] all upright ways, so that she may return to Him, blessed be He.[TN020115]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 20

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 21 (כא)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג

Yoel Moshe - 1

“For a person's actions, the utterances of his lips”: we find only two formations. This is va-yitzer: two inclinations, with two paths, one on the side of purity and one on the side of impurity. Corresponding to them, the Torah gives positive commandments to strengthen the powers of holiness and negative commandments to diminish the powers of impurity. Even optional activities are reckoned commandments. “The reverse in the opposite case”: doing them idly is reckoned transgression. If one does not fulfill “Know Him in all your ways” [the source abbreviates the phrase], it is reckoned as though one serves [an unresolved abbreviated term].[TN020133]

“This is the meaning of blessings over enjoyment”: I discussed this at length in the expositions on Vayiqra. What is needed here is the premise of the kabbalists, of blessed memory: doubled enjoyment concerns the mystery that, through his sin, Adam the first human cast sparks of holiness into the mineral, vegetable, animal, and speaking orders [the source questions the verb].[TN020134] Thus even during bodily eating one's

Rema of Fano

For a person's actions, the utterances of the lips, and every inclination of the heart's thoughts, we have heard of only two formations, with two paths: one impure and one pure. Corresponding to them, the Torah said “Do” and “Do not do.” Even optional activities are reckoned as minor commandments for one who fulfills “Know Him in all your ways.” Such a commandment, in comparison with an obligation, is called optional; the reverse holds in the opposite case. This is the meaning of blessings over enjoyment, of which the Sage said to the Khazar that they are a preparation for enjoyment and double the enjoyment. This doubling is in the two worlds, in heaven above and on earth below [the supplied main-text abbreviation is uncertain].[TN020116] Of this it is said, “How beautiful and how pleasant you are, love, in delights!” For in such a case the enjoyment itself is reckoned a commandment, and it too awakens love between Israel and their Father in Heaven.

There is a great mystery here in the commandment of Sabbath delight: it gives pleasure to the additional soul so that the soul itself may perform a great commandment in honor of the Shekhinah below—namely, reciting the blessing after meals, a commandment not practiced among the beings above at all. Through its merit, the entire world is blessed throughout the six working days. This is the reason the priests ate the proper intention should be that spiritual nourishment from those holy sparks goes to the soul and bodily strength to the body. This is the mystery of Solomon the king's knowing how to sweeten mustard: these holy sparks were from the world of Asiyah, called he, corresponding to the final he, which is poor, as below in chapter 24. This is the mystery that every animal came of itself to be slaughtered for Solomon's meal.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

During the six working days, the additional soul has no repair through his animal, since the repair reaches only the world of Asiyah, while his soul is above in Beriah. The weekday soul enjoys the holy spark in the food, but through this one cannot repair the Sabbath soul. On the Sabbath, however, a soul descends from Atzilut, namely from Malkhut of Atzilut, and enjoys Sabbath delight. It thereby gains additional light and enjoys the animal, for it too enjoys the holy spark and raises them to Atzilut. See the Zohar, Vayaqhel. Thus on the Sabbath the additional soul too has its delight, as the author says. These sparks rise through the blessing after meals and blessings over enjoyment.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This is the mystery of the source's abbreviated attribution R.Sh.Y., “He ate from its interior”: from the pure portion and the inward part, with the power to raise many holy sparks.[TN020135] In this way one may explain what the Sages said concerning Shammai [abbreviated B.Sh. in the source]: when he found a fine animal, he said, “This is for the Sabbath.” His attribute was on the side of Gevurah, following “Prepare the beautiful form for our meal,” and he feared to raise it during the weekdays, waiting until the Sabbath. Hillel, however, had “another attribute within him”—precisely “within him”—since he was from the side of Ḥesed, and “the kindness of God is all the day.”

“The whole world is blessed through its merit throughout the six working days”: as in the Zohar, “Jethro heard,” on “Remember the Sabbath day to sanctify it”: “Therefore manna is not written concerning the Sabbath, because through it all six days of the week are blessed.” They receive as follows: the Sabbath evening meal and prayer bless the first and second days; the morning meal and prayer bless the third and fourth; the afternoon showbread on the Sabbath. It includes its following night, according to the law governing the eating of consecrated food. Therefore a person should set his table after the Sabbath, even if he needs no more than an olive's bulk.

Rema of Fano - continued

Concerning this mystery, Abraham said to the three men at the terebinths of Mamre, “Let me take a piece of bread, and sustain your hearts; afterward you may pass on,” in the manner we explained in Em Kol Hai, Part III, chapter 6; see there. “For this very reason you have passed by your servant”: he said that precisely for this purpose they too intended to dine with him. There is no need for the forced explanations offered by the commentators. The purpose of the meal was to make the invitation to bless as a group of three, together with the blessing after meals, a great commandment newly available to them. This is a sound and clear plain interpretation.

Not for nothing did the divine Creator bring forth the formation of evil wherever it exists, so that through it one might enjoy material things for the sake of a commandment. We thus learn that it was created only to accompany the good, as a lover and companion in attaining what it needs. Concerning it we learned in Avot, “Do not despise any person.” To dismiss it entirely is impossible, since it is a human portion from God in formation. He therefore warned: do not despise it. For wherever the likeness of a human being [adam] applies, one may expound, “I shall resemble [adammeh] the Most High.” Happy is one who waits meal and prayer bless the fifth and sixth. Likewise, Ari's writings state that on the Sabbath a person must concentrate on the Name HYH and the whole forty-two-letter Name: at night, Sh.Q.; in the morning, V.Y.N.; in the afternoon, B.Y.T. [The subsequent letter divisions are unstable:] corresponding to Sh.Q., the first two of the forty-two-letter Name; to V.Y.N., the middle two; to B.Y.T., the last two. On the first and second days the first two names rule, and so forth. This is their order of reception. See the holy Tiqqunim: this is “above what they shall gather day by day,” in the future; “day by day,” two days in each meal, and what the Sages said, “He blessed it through manna.” Examine it closely.[TN020136]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The mystery of the showbread is explained in several places: twelve loaves on Sabbath evening, eight in the morning, three in the afternoon, and three after the Sabbath, totaling twenty-three [so the supplied text reads].[TN020137] They allude to “the table which is before the Lord,” according to the numerical value of His Name. See the Zohar, Pineḥas, page 453.

“In honor of the Shekhinah below”: to understand the author, one needs the Zohar's premise in Vayaqhel: “The lower point, when joined to the fathers," and so forth, "is called Sabbath." See the whole lengthy matter relevant here. Another premise from the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 350: "R. Yose opened: 'Boaz ate and drank, and his heart was gladdened'—he blessed over his food," and so forth, as explained.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The resulting principle is that the Shekhinah is called "before the Holy One," specifically "before." As in the Zohar, Terumah, page 301: why is it said that sustenance is difficult "before" the Holy One, rather than "from before"? "Before" means that and attains resemblance to Him through love, until it desires. Although they said concerning it, "Let the left hand repel," there is no person who has no hour in which to bring satisfaction to the Creator through the right hand drawing near.

Rema of Fano - continued

Since a person's place does not honor him, but he honors his place, he said that the person's perfection is at a time of favor. "Do not dismiss any thing": do not separate it in your thought from the purpose for which it was created, as though the Unique One of the world had no need of it. Go and learn from what the elders answered their questioners in the Mishnah, chapter "R. Yishmael": there is no thing that has no place in fulfilling His will, blessed be He.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

degree. The intention is that sustenance is difficult for the Shekhinah below, who is before the Holy One, since she has nothing of her own. The Zohar explains that throughout the weekdays the Shekhinah enjoys the words rising from satiety, which awaken supreme abundance for the glory of the Shekhinah below. On the Sabbath, however, she enjoys the food itself. The spirit extending from her, namely the additional soul, delights and feeds upon the food's spirituality. When that spirit is included in its root, the Shekhinah, she too consequently enjoys the food itself. This is "love in delights": varieties of delight from eating for the Shekhinah, as it were—one upper delight and one lower delight from the food's spirituality.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This is "it is found enjoying both, above and below." The Sabbath blessing after meals awakens still higher abundance from the open eye. Through the blessing after meals, the additional soul in a person has power in its blessings to awaken abundance from the Holy Ancient One of all ancients and draw that abundance upon the Shekhinah. Thus understand "to give pleasure to the additional soul": the spiritual food itself provides Sabbath delight to the Shekhinah through the spirit. In the additional soul's blessing after meals, that soul awakens supreme abundance from the head, from the Holy Ancient One. This differs from weekdays, when the body enjoys material food [the following connective concerning spirituality is compressed]. Through the blessing after meals the Shekhinah is blessed by supreme abundance from the Holy Ancient One, and also enjoys the spiritual food itself, since the additional soul is included in her, as stated. [TN020138]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"A commandment not practiced": one needs to know that the principal intention of the blessing after meals is to repair Asiyah, the world of the ofanim. Concerning it the Zohar says that the Shekhinah, Malkhut of Atzilut, dwells in the ofan, Sandalfon of Asiyah. The principal governance of Asiyah is through Netzah, Hod, and Yesod, the last aspects of Malkhut of Atzilut, clothed in Asiyah and called poor [dal]. Thus the higher angels cannot perform this commandment to repair Asiyah, since they are above it. The angels in Yetzirah have bodies from Yetzirah and souls from Beriah; likewise the ofanim in Asiyah have bodies from Asiyah and souls from Yetzirah. So it was explained to us in Ari's teachings. They therefore lack power to perform this commandment: anyone who awakens something must be below that which he wishes to awaken. The additional soul, however, coming from a supreme root on the Sabbath, clothes itself in Asiyah within human beings, who are below them all. It thus has power to awaken great abundance to repair the aspect of Malkhut clothed in Asiyah, called dal.

These are the words of the work abbreviated H.K.Y., Part IV, section 48: "Abraham fed them three tongues in mustard because the tongue is the best of the priestly gifts. Michael is the high priest above and gave Raphael and Gabriel a share in his portion. Abraham hinted that the principal purpose of the meal is praising the Omnipresent, as in 'My tongue shall speak Your righteousness,' in the mystery of the blessing after meals: to repair through mustard [ḥardal], 'choose the poor [beḥar dal],' the poor youth, the world of Asiyah. This is ḤR DL, which requires sweetening from the bitterness of the 280 judgments of Sandalfon, whose numerical value is 280. They sweeten it through the tongue, which is the Shekhinah, with the numerical value of lashon [tongue]. She is fourth to every three, whether kindness, judgment, and mercy, in the mystery of Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael, or Daʿat, Tiferet, and Yesod, which are certainly three tongues."[TN020139]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The explanation is that Asiyah is called the mystery of DL, because the twice-expanded spelling of Elohim contains 34 letters, as follows: אלף למד פא למד מם דלת הי יוד יוד ויו דלת מם מם [the source questions the sequence]. These are 34 letters. Likewise, the twice-expanded spelling of Adonai is אלף למד פא דלת למד תיו נון ויו נון יוד דלת [questioned in the source], likewise 34 letters.[TN020140] For Adonai dwells in Asiyah, and Elohim is likewise called Elohim, the aspect of judgment. Furthermore, Adonai's substitution BWKW has the numerical value 34. Malkhut receives from BWKW in the mystery of the two tears descending into the great sea when the Holy One weeps, as is known; Malkhut dwells in Asiyah. Thus there are three kinds of DL, from Elohim, Adonai, and [the third is represented by DL in the supplied wording]. These required three tongues in mustard.

The mystery of ḤR is Isaac's attribute of judgment, numerically ḤR, joined to DL. ḤR DL is Adonai with its preceding letters, A G M Ṭ, and its succeeding letters, B H S K. The numerical value of Adonai, AG MṬ, and BHSK [the source marks the sequence uncertain] is ḤARDAL.[TN020141] The Targumic expression is ṬWR MSKN [as supplied], whose numerical value is Shekhinah. This is a great mystery: the three tongues repair Asiyah, where the mystery is ḤR DL, ṬWR MSKN, numerically Shekhinah, which dwells in Asiyah and is called poor because she has nothing of her own. These are the author's words, "a commandment not practiced," and so forth. You already know the mystery of "the good eye," referring to the Holy Ancient One: it arranges [the supply] for the spark of the Shekhinah extending among the beings below in Asiyah.[TN020142]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"For this very reason you have passed by your servant": see the Zohar, Vayera: "Therefore 'they ate,' like 'They beheld God and ate and drank.' They truly ate, being nourished from the Shekhinah. Therefore they ate, shining so as to be nourished from her through Abraham's side. They left none of what he gave them. Likewise, they sought to drink from the cup of blessing to merit that blessing above. They too ate what Abraham prepared." All the author's words concern the mystery explained there.

"The formation of evil": all worlds have right and left. From the holy left, actual evil extends below into Yetzirah and Asiyah. Without Adam's sin, the word raʿ, now pointed with a pataḥ, would have been pointed with a tzere as reaʿ, "companion." This concerns what the Sages said in Sanhedrin about two good serpents. Know that the vowel points of reaʿ have the numerical value of YHWH: two yods and a vav. The pointing of raʿ represents the removal of two yods from the vav within the alef, corresponding to the departure of direct and returning light.

"Do not despise"; "it is a portion": in va-yitzer, with two yods, are the good and evil inclinations. He says "Do not dismiss any"—one belongs to kindness and one to judgment. He therefore warned not to despise it.

"The likeness of a human being": the Zohar, Genesis, page 136, says, "'The Lord God formed,' with two yods, 'the human being': here they were perfected," and so forth. See the whole passage through "and she was placed between right and left." Its substance is that above there are five holy powers of judgment in utter holiness, and likewise throughout the holiness of Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah. In Yetzirah and Asiyah, however, the dross of gold, the excess, emerged. Even this excess was close to good; it did not become actual evil through impurity until Adam came and, through his sin, made it actual evil. Before Adam sinned, judgments were actual and evil potential: the shells were not actual and were subdued to holiness. Afterward, through his sin, the shells emerged into actuality and accused holiness. All this is in the teachings of Atzilut.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Thus understand “wherever the likeness of a human being applies”: the five holy powers of judgment were within the human form; since this too proceeds from the holy powers of judgment, “I shall resemble the Most High” applies to it. Adam derives from adammeh, so that it too may return to the good. “Although they said concerning it”: concerning the inclination, a child, and a woman, let the left hand repel—that is, their evil portion, the impurity. Yet there is no person who has no hour to bring satisfaction to the Creator; the right hand draws near through the good portion within the evil inclination, the child, and the woman. Through the good portion, the shells and accusers are annulled; they will then be sweetened, like the sweetened shell of Nogah, and become holy and pure like us. This is “You brought the day You proclaimed; let them be like me.”

This is the mystery of the pig, destined to return and become pure. Likewise, it is written, “He will swallow up death forever,” not the angel of death: that angel will remain as a holy angel. Similarly, in Samael the letters SM will be swallowed up, leaving EL. This is the mystery that the Holy One will bring the evil inclination and slaughter it: He will remove its redness and the filth of its impurity, and it and its host will be sweetened. “They will neither harm nor destroy”; “You shall see the recompense [shillumah] of the wicked” means the perfection [sheleimut] within them, since evil is annulled from them and all good remains. Their existence returns, hidden and included in its holy root.

This is the mystery of “I shall remove the heart of stone.” A stone's nature is that when part becomes hot, all of it becomes hot. The evil inclination was created from the holy power of judgment. It awakens permitted love between a man and his wife, to increase the likeness, and not desire for a forbidden act [the source wording is irregular]. But because it is partly heated toward what is permitted, it also becomes hot in longing for what is forbidden. Therefore the left hand should repel the forbidden side, so that one does not desire through the impurity within the evil inclination; the right hand should draw near to desire what is permitted. “I shall give you a heart of flesh”: the side over the fire roasts, while the other remains cold. This is a heart of flesh.[TN020143]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Thus understand the author's “Do not despise”: it concerns the evil inclination itself. There is no person who has no hour, no repair in holiness. “Do not dismiss any thing,” separating it: do not say that since it becomes partly hot toward the permitted, it will also become hot toward the forbidden, and therefore wish to castrate the dog entirely [the source's image], distancing yourself even from what is permitted. Rather, let the left hand repel the forbidden side and the right hand draw near the permitted side. Concerning “Do not dismiss,” see the Zohar, Aḥarei Mot.

“What they answered”: when the elders were asked in Rome, “If the Holy One does not desire idolatry, why does He not remove it from the world?” they replied, “Should He destroy the world because of fools?” Here too, if you dismiss it altogether, the world will be destroyed. This is like the incident in which they sought a newly laid egg and found none.

“Dismissing it is impossible”: this answers why he uses one expression concerning a person and “dismiss” concerning a thing. Since dismissing it is impossible, no conditions are needed concerning dismissal; rather, beware even of the concealed [the source questions this word]: do not despise it by saying, “An arrow in Satan's eyes.”[TN020144]

“Since a person's place”: this explains why he says “hour” concerning a person and “place” concerning a thing. Place does not apply to a person here, since a person's place does not honor him. Rather, his perfection is at a time of favor; therefore “who has no hour.” In Emor, [the supplied reference gives] 76: “R. Shimon was walking on the road,” and so forth, through “and behold, very good.” These are the words of the work abbreviated K.Y., chapter 20: “‘Do not despise’: this means every upright creature included under adam, which includes the ordered generations [the intervening wording is uncertain], apart from one who has attained the image and likeness of God. Nevertheless, the warning applies to all living beings: do not despise any lowly or inferior creature in the world. For ‘there is no person,’ and so forth: it may rise to a soul more esteemed than yours. Likewise, every inanimate thing is destined to settle in its place; therefore do not dismiss it.”[TN020145]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “For a person's actions”: after explaining repentance and the four divisions of atonement in the preceding chapters, it is fitting for the author also to explain atonement arising from occupation with Torah and prayer. To reach that purpose in the following chapters, he first speaks here of optional activities. He teaches that all human actions, and likewise speech and thought [the supplied connective wording is defective], have only two formations or inclinations. As the Sages said on “The Lord God formed [va-yitzer] the human being,” written with two yods: two inclinations, the good inclination and the evil inclination. Likewise, “With all your heart”—with both your inclinations, the good and the evil. But beyond these two formations [the source states that a passage was not deciphered], neither good nor evil, we find no separate inclination assigned to the human being. [TN020117]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “Therefore”: these two formations are the two paths, one impure and one pure. The good inclination comes from the side of good and is already ordered; the evil inclination comes from the side of evil. [A defective connective follows.] These two paths, arising from the two formations, were called good and evil even before the Torah was given; through them the blessed Lord made known to us what is good and evil in His eyes.[TN020118]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Corresponding to them”: concerning these two paths, the Torah teaches the positive and negative commandments: through commandments to strengthen holiness, and through prohibitions to rescue from the forbidden and diminish its forces [the intermediate wording is defective]. As in ... the Tiqqunim, on “Make me delicacies,” and so forth. [TN020119]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “Even optional activities”: activities that are neither commandment nor transgression are nevertheless reckoned minor commandments if a person intends them for the sake of a commandment, following “Know Him in all your ways”—even in a matter of transgression, as they said. Rambam wrote in chapter 3 of the Laws of Character Traits: “One who conducts himself according to medicine, if he intends only that his whole body and limbs be sound, and that he have sons who perform his work and labor for his needs, this is not a good way. Rather, he should intend that his body be sound and strong so that his soul may be upright to know the Lord, since he cannot understand and contemplate wisdom while ill or while one of his limbs is painful. He should intend to have a son who may become wise and great in Israel. Thus one who follows this way all his days serves the Lord continually, even while conducting business,” and so forth. “Concerning this the Sages commanded, ‘Let all your actions be for the sake of Heaven.’ This is Solomon's ‘Know Him in all your ways, and He will make your paths straight.’” See there.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “We call it optional”: because it is not obligatory, although it is nevertheless a commandment. The source then reads, “Therefore these too are not the good inclination, but a separate inclination,” a statement whose wording conflicts with the surrounding argument.[TN020120]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “The reverse”: conversely, optional activities are reckoned minor transgressions for one who engages in them without the intention of a commandment, conducting his bodily needs willfully and solely for pleasure, and transgressing “Know Him in all your ways.” Compared with a full transgression, this transgression is optional.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “This is the meaning of blessings over enjoyment”: in the Kuzari, discourse III, section 17: “The Sage said: preparation for enjoyment, awareness of it, and thinking of its previous absence double enjoyment. This is one benefit of blessings for one accustomed to saying them with intention and understanding: they depict in the soul the kind of enjoyment and the praise due for it to the One who bestowed it. He had previously been prepared for its absence, and then his joy in it increases," and so forth. See there at length.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

The Sage's straightforward intention is that one who takes care to remain mindful of worldly circumstances, natural hardship, and the differing conditions [the supplied phrase is defective], and of the good he receives and the lack of that enjoyment before it arrived, doubles the enjoyment through that reflection and rejoices in it more.[TN020121] This is one benefit of blessings over enjoyment: through the blessing he takes to heart and pictures to his soul that enjoyment, its previous absence, and the propriety of blessing the blessed Lord for it; thereby his joy increases. The author develops this in his own manner: because enjoyment must be for the sake of a commandment, the blessing doubles it, since enjoyment occurs above through those words of blessing, as explained in the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 307, which we shall quote shortly. Although that passage concerns the blessing after meals, after one has eaten one's fill [the connecting abbreviation is defective], the same applies to all blessings over enjoyment. Thus the enjoyment encompasses below and above.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) "In two worlds": see the Zohar, Terumah, which we shall quote below in Part III, chapter 3.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) "Of this it is said": the same appears in Midrash Shemuel's explanation of "The reward of a commandment is a commandment."

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) "In such a case": when one engages in delights for the sake of a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) "Awakens love": this is "love in delights."

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) "In the commandment of Sabbath delight": it too follows this pattern: the delight is a commandment, and the blessing doubles it.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) "To give pleasure to the additional soul": as explained in the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 365: "This lower point rises, appears, and adorns herself. Then all joy is found above and below, and all the worlds rejoice. On this night this point spreads out in light and extends her wings over the world; all other dominions pass away, and protection is found. Then on the Sabbath a spirit is added to Israel, to each and every one," and so forth. "This spirit is the extension of this point: it issues from her and spreads through the world. On this day the spirit enjoys Israel's enjoyments and delights. One gives it delight in food and drink three times, in the three meals of the three degrees of faith, as explained. It seeks joy and delight in those meals of Israel," and so forth. See the entire matter there at length. The point means Malkhut, the Shekhinah, from whom the additional soul extends and who enjoys Israel's delight.

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) "That the soul itself may perform": in the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 307: "R. Yose opened: 'Boaz ate and drank, and his heart was gladdened'—he blessed over his food, as explained. Furthermore, this is the mystery: one who blesses over food gladdens his heart. What is it? As it is written, 'My heart says of You,' and 'the Rock of my heart,' and so forth. For the blessing after meals is beloved before the Holy One, blessed be He. Whoever blesses upon being sated brings goodness and joy to another place. At Sabbath meals, that other place enjoys the meal of satiety itself. Why? Because food is before the Holy One, blessed be He, in that place. When a person eats and drinks and then blesses, that blessing rises, and it enjoys those words of satiety. It is found enjoying nourishment from below and above. This is the mystery of the one who blesses: the weekday spirit enjoys only the words rising from satiety; all are crowned and sated, seeking a crown, and that place enjoys them. On the Sabbath, another mystery rejoices in the food itself, in that joy of Sabbath food, as explained," and so forth. See there. [TN020122]

This likewise refers to Malkhut, concerning whom it is written, "My heart says of You." She distributes nourishment to all, as explained in several places in the Zohar, particularly Terumah, page 9, on "A psalm of David: the Lord is my shepherd": "See the difference between 'A psalm of David' and 'Of David, a psalm.' Here the Shekhinah came first and rested upon him initially. 'The Lord is my shepherd': why did the Shekhinah come first here? David ought to have begun first, since he sought nourishment from the Holy One, blessed be He. Rather, certainly the Shekhinah came first, for this is required concerning nourishment. She desires that all people seek nourishment, since when the Holy One wishes nourishment to descend to the world, she comes first, and upon her nourishment descends for all worlds. Therefore she came first concerning nourishment and rested upon David," and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Further there, at the location given by the source's unstable page notation, concerning "A person's sustenance is difficult before the Holy One, blessed be He": "It does not say difficult for the Holy One, but for the one who stands before Him. There it is difficult, since it does not stand within his authority; although he acts, he acts under another authority," and so forth.[TN020123] This means that sustenance is difficult for the Shekhinah, who must request it from the Holy One [the following connective phrase is defective]. These are the Zohar's words here: since the Shekhinah oversees nourishment, she enjoys the blessing after meals, which gives her strength to receive the flow of the Lord's blessing from Him and give food and sustenance to all flesh. On the Sabbath, however, she enjoys the food itself as well as the blessing after meals.

This is the author's intention: through its Sabbath delight, the additional soul too performs the commandment of the blessing after meals and increases the Shekhinah's wealth twofold. She is blessed through enjoyment of food and the blessing after meals, thereby pouring supreme abundance and nourishment into all the world throughout the six working days. Thus Sabbath delight is a commandment that gives pleasure to the additional soul; the blessing after meals doubles that commandment in honor of the Shekhinah below. Since the additional soul is an extension of this point, it is fitting that it too give her honor and splendor.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) "A commandment not practiced above": there is no bodily materiality there to occasion the fulfillment of this commandment [the supplied wording is compressed].[TN020124]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) "Blessed through its merit": through the additional soul's merit, as the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 365, quoted above, concludes: "Happy is the portion of one who merits it and gives it delight on this day. This spirit blesses all six days [the following phrase concerning the Ancient One, source of all blessings, is compressed]," and so forth.[TN020125] See also the Zohar, Yitro, page 147. As we said, the delight of the additional soul and the blessing after meals each constitute a commandment drawing another commandment; the merit of both benefits the world in nourishment.

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) "This is the reason": our explanation that the six working days are blessed through the additional soul's Sabbath delight is itself the reason the priests ate the showbread on the Sabbath. This follows the Zohar, Terumah, at the page given in the supplied source: "'Make a table of acacia wood,' and so forth. This table stood within the tabernacle. Why? Because nourishment issued from it to all the world. This table must not stand empty even for a moment, but must have food upon it, for blessing is not found in an empty place. Therefore bread must always be upon it, so that supreme blessing is always found in it. From that table blessings and nourishment issue to all other tables in the world, which are blessed through it," and so forth.[TN020126]

The author considers that this is why the priests ate the showbread immediately upon its removal: so that the entire world would benefit from it after its removal as it did while it stood upon the table, whence blessings and nourishment issued to the world. The priests therefore ate it on the Sabbath, and the additional soul delighted in it; from this the entire world benefited in nourishment throughout the six working days, as stated. The priests' eating it on the Sabbath is explicit in the chapter "The Two Loaves," in the Mishnah: "Once the incense bowls had been offered, the loaves began to be distributed to the priests."

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) "It includes its night": the Sabbath includes its following night concerning the time for eating the showbread. Thus, when Yom Kippur fell on the Sabbath, they ate it in the evening, as explained in the Mishnah there.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) "According to the law of eating consecrated food": which may also be eaten at night.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “Therefore”: the Sages said that a person should always set his table after the Sabbath, and so forth. The additional soul's Sabbath delight and the eating of showbread on the Sabbath are one matter. The statement that the entire world is blessed on the other weekdays through the additional soul's delight teaches the reason for the priests' eating the showbread on the Sabbath. Conversely, the matter of the additional soul is learned from the eating of the showbread: since showbread was also eaten after the Sabbath, one may infer that the additional soul too delights in food and drink after the Sabbath. Thus the Sages rightly said to set the table after the Sabbath as well.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “Concerning this honor”: the honor we described in the blessing after meals, Abraham said, “For this very reason you have passed by your servant”—to dine with him and recite the blessing after meals. [The clause introducing their actual eating is defective.] As stated in the Zohar, Vayera, page 266: “[An unclear introduction naming Elazar:] ‘They ate’—certainly, because these are found eating ...” [the quotation's ending is defective].[TN020127] This is also the position of Tanna de-Vei Eliyahu.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “In the manner we explained”: in the treatise abbreviated Ḥ.K.H., Part III, chapter 6, that he recognized them as ministering angels.[TN020128]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “The commentators”: who interpreted “for this reason” as “since,” which they found necessary.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(כד) “Not for nothing”: this returns to the statement that even optional activities are reckoned commandments, for this was His intention, blessed be He, in creating evil: to enjoy through it for the sake of a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(כה) “A lover and companion”: thus, concerning the evil inclination, do not read raʿ, “evil,” but reaʿ, “companion,” as the author wrote below in [the supplied part abbreviation is unclear], section 28, and in the treatise abbreviated Ḥ.K.H., Part II, section 14.[TN020129]

Yad Yehudah - כו

(כו) “Concerning it we learned”: the author explains this Mishnah in Avot, chapter 4: “Do not despise any person, and do not dismiss any thing, for there is no person who has no hour, and no thing that has no place.” He explains it concerning the evil inclination. “Do not despise” anything called adam, a human being: even the evil inclination is part of that human form in the world of Yetzirah, which includes good and evil; it too is therefore called adam. Do not say—God forbid—[a defective clause concerning rejecting its existence follows]. Nevertheless, [the concluding clause concerning its future abolition and a reference to “Rejoice and be glad” is defective].[TN020130]

Yad Yehudah - כז

(כז) “To dismiss it—God forbid”: the reason he did not say “Do not dismiss any person,” as at the beginning, is that no warning about this is needed. Dismissing or abolishing it is impossible—God forbid—since it is part of the human form in Yetzirah. Therefore he says, “Do not despise any person”: do not despise it by saying, “An arrow in Satan's eyes.” This is “any person,” because it too is called adam.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(כח) “May be expounded”: adam denotes resemblance, as in “I shall resemble the Most High,” blessed be He. This applies also to the evil inclination when it is broken through love of the blessed Lord and its submission becomes good, as explained at length in the source's uncertain reference “Gilgulati,” on the verse mentioned and on “You brought the day You proclaimed” [the supplied quotation is defective].[TN020131]

Yad Yehudah - כט

(כט) “To resemble Him”: the Most High, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(ל) “Although”: this explains “there is no person who has no hour.” Do not despise it: even though one must repel it with the left hand [the supplied negative is uncertain], the right hand nevertheless draws it near. This is “there is no person”: the evil inclination too, called adam, has an hour [the following verb is defective] through the right hand drawing near.[TN020132]

Yad Yehudah - לא

(לא) “Since”: he did not say “there is no person who has no place,” as in the conclusion, because a person's place does not honor him; it would not be fitting to make human perfection depend on it. Therefore he said “who has no hour,” attaching human perfection to an hour, a time of favor, when one takes hold of His strength and perfection, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(לב) “Do not”: the conclusion, “Do not dismiss,” also concerns the evil inclination. The tanna warns against saying: even if I cannot dismiss and abolish the evil inclination itself, I can nevertheless dismiss and separate it from myself and my thought in everything. To this he says: do not dismiss it in every matter, for some things serve the world's purpose, such as procreation, for which the evil inclination was created. As in Yoma: when they imprisoned the evil inclination, they sought a newly laid egg throughout the Land of Israel and found none. You must not abolish it. This is “there is no thing that has no place”: even if a matter is not one you wish to bring to mind, such as sexual desire, it nevertheless has a place in fulfilling the Lord's commandments and His will, blessed be He, who desires the world's continued existence in the manner permitted to us.

Yad Yehudah - לב - continued

Yad Yehudah - לג

(לג) “Their questioners”: if the Holy One, blessed be He, does not desire idolatry, why does He not abolish it? They answered: should He destroy His world because of fools? The same applies to the inclination toward transgression.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 21

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 22 (כב)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Had he avoided it, it would have been reckoned a great commandment”: we say that when a transgression presents itself and a person does not commit it, Scripture accounts it as though he performed a commandment. The author's “great commandment” follows the Mishnah's “the reward of a commandment is a commandment”: one who performs a commandment properly possesses two commandments—first, the commandment he performed, and second, that during that time he

Rema of Fano

It is well known that one who violates any of the Torah's prohibitions errs doubly: first, in the act of transgression; second, because avoiding it would have been reckoned a great commandment. This is besides neglecting another commandment that could have been fulfilled at that time, since, as we explained, even optional activities contain exacting aspects of commandments. Repentance was therefore required together with the other divisions of atonement, as mentioned. This is not only because regret is necessary as one of its first and essential conditions, but because repentance is itself a great and committed no transgression. The reverse applies to a transgression, whose reward is a transgression. This differs from some commentators who explain that when one acquires a commandment through money, he possesses two commandments: the commandment itself and giving the money. Likewise with a transgression, such as a prostitute's hire: first the illicit sexual act, and second the money paid as her fee. Thus even optional activities contain exacting aspects of commandments, since during that time he did not transgress.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Repentance was therefore required”; “but because it is a positive commandment”: repentance is a positive commandment like the other Torah commandments, exceedingly beloved and equal to the entire Torah. It properly atones for neglecting positive commandments, whether combined with another transgression or through sitting idle. At that time he could have performed a commandment and did not; repentance is a positive commandment in its place. See there.

“Desecrating the Name has a particular severity: he is punished openly”: its mark is recognizable upon his face to those who know the wisdom of the lines. “Let no one think to escape punishment by pleading inadvertence”: inadvertence in desecrating the Name also applies, as deliberateness does in other punishments, following “an error in learning counts as deliberate.” One who acts inadvertently is likewise liable to punishment. The author raised the difficulty: if the inadvertent person's punishment is like the deliberate person's, there is no difference between them. Far be injustice! Rather, both come within exceedingly beloved positive commandment, preceding the world and equal to the whole Torah. It properly atones for neglecting positive commandments, whether combined with another transgression or through sitting idle.

Rema of Fano - continued

Desecrating the Name, however, has a particular severity: one who desecrates it secretly is punished openly, since its mark is recognizable to those of clear sight and those skilled in reading the lines, and the like. Let no one think to escape punishment by pleading inadvertence, for inadvertence too occurs in desecrating the Name, as in “an error in learning counts as deliberate.” The tanna therefore said, “Whether inadvertent or deliberate, in desecrating the Name.” He did not mean to make the measures equal—far be injustice!—but that both come within the gravity of desecration, and “according to the camel is the load.”

Therefore, for one who profanes consecrated things, despises the festivals, and their fellows, unless they devote themselves extraordinarily to Torah study, repentance and good deeds do not suffice to complete their atonement. They and all like them who bear desecration of the Name need great strengthening, pleading for mercy to merit repairing doubly. Thus Daniel explicitly says, “We did not entreat the face of the Lord our God, to turn from our iniquities and gain understanding in Your truth.” From Eli's sons we learned that their iniquity is not atoned for through sacrifice and offering; yet these desecrating the Name, and “according to the camel is the load”: the burden differs between inadvertence and deliberateness.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Unless they devote themselves extraordinarily to Torah study”: mifligin means setting themselves apart for Torah study, since Torah study must accompany repentance. “To merit repairing doubly”: the transgression, and the fact that at that time he did not perform a commandment. Therefore it is written, “We did not entreat the Lord our God, to turn from our iniquities”—through repentance—“and gain understanding in Your truth”—Torah.

“These come only”: sacrifice and offering necessarily come with repentance. “Without it”: bringing a sacrifice without repentance is called “the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination.” Nevertheless, they are not atoned for through sacrifice and offering even together with repentance, but specifically through Torah words.

“Death is only concealment”: just as death is only concealment of the understanding soul, separated from the body, Torah study requires stripping away materiality, with the soul almost separating from the body. We find this among the early prophets, who cast off their garments, as Alshekh wrote in many places. Likewise, Rabbah son of Naḥmani's soul departed in purity. Through abundant engagement in Torah wisdom, materiality is stripped away, as we said.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“To give understanding and benefit others”: he should learn with others; through this the Torah proclaims him openly. He must, however, direct his heart to Heaven, without a motive of teaching so that it will proclaim him and publicize his distinction.

“Your will turns”: following the analogy brought in the Zohar, one must serve the Holy One from love through fear. A person has a beloved, and when passing before her he adorns himself especially to find favor in her eyes, fearing that otherwise she will not esteem him. So one must fear Him through love, to find favor in the Holy One's eyes, and the servant will please his Master.

“Then His will”: the Shekhinah is called will. YH times YH equals 225; VH times VH equals 121; the total is 346, the numerical value of ratzon, “will.” In the seventy-two-fold Name there is one Name whose initials are come only with repentance, and without it they are sacrifices of the wicked. Nevertheless, it is atoned for through words of Torah, as it is written, “This is the Torah: when a person dies in a tent.” Hence the tent of Torah atones like death.

Rema of Fano - continued

Death is only the concealment of the understanding soul, which withdraws from dark ways. One must therefore increase Torah study in concealment, as “in a tent” implies, until the Torah itself proclaims him openly, to give understanding and benefit others when the many need him. He must direct his heart to Heaven without any other motive. Then “the Lord alone will guide him, and no alien god is with him.”

This is what Rabban Gamliel, Rabbi's son, expressed so wonderfully in Avot, chapter 2: “Make His will like your will.” Your will turns toward its Maker to know how a servant may please his master. Then His will will glory in its King, turn upward, and say before Him, “With this son I come before You.” Your intention in this should be “so that He may make your will like His will”: that you too benefit others as He does. This is a commandment for its own sake, not to receive reward; rather, the reward of a commandment is a commandment.

This is what Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, sought in saying, “If indeed I have found favor in Your eyes”: if through my effort Your will has become like my will, according to the meaning of finding favor that we shall explain in chapter 24, “make Your ways known to

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“He and His Name are one”; shemo [“His Name”], numerically ratzon [the source questions part of this sequence].[TN020153] Thus the Shekhinah too will glory before the Holy One in your good deeds and say, “With this son I come before You.” The Holy One will bestow great luminous abundance from above, entrusting you with orders of wisdom, so that you too may benefit others, learn with them, and impart to another as the blessed Lord imparts to you. More than the calf wishes to suckle, the cow wishes to nurse; more than you wish to receive abundance from above, the blessed Lord wishes to bestow upon you. Thus He makes your will like His: as He desires to bestow upon you, He makes your will like His, enabling you to benefit others too.

The resulting intention is: make His will—the Shekhinah—like your will. As your will is to find favor before Him, so act that the blessed Lord's will, the Shekhinah, finds favor before Him and says, “With this son,” and so forth. Then He will make your will to bestow like His will, which also bestows. Let this be your intention, with no other motive.

“Through my effort”: “I found” implies finding favor through effort. “Bearing favor” is different, arising of itself without effort. Thus Moses said, “If indeed I have found favor”: this occurred through my effort, making Your will, the Shekhinah, like my will, to say, “With this son I come before You.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Make Your ways known to me”; “the Sages explained how Thought”: Ḥokhmah is Thought extending through the attributes. “Through this I shall truly know You”: the substance of wisdom within the holy upper attributes. The purpose too is “so that I may find favor”: let my will be like Yours. As Your will is to bestow, make my will able to bestow and benefit others. My intention is not to glorify myself—God forbid—but see for whom I labor: “this nation is Your people,” so that I may teach and benefit them. Thus the whole verse, “If indeed I have found favor in Your eyes, make Your ways known to me, that I may know You, so that I may find favor in Your eyes; see that this nation is Your people,” is properly understood through this premise, despite its many repetitions. Examine it closely.

“The Book Bahir explains: more than three hours”: a known premise in the kabbalistic books is that the inner hands awaken complete mercy. The hand me.” The Sages explained that he asked to know how Thought extends through them, for through this I shall truly know You, and in no other way. The purpose is “so that I may find favor in Your eyes”: through Your goodness, my will should be like Your will. See for whom I labor and whom I seek to benefit: “this nation is Your people.”

Rema of Fano - continued

He further said, “Set aside your will,” in the sense of “when he lowered his hand.” The Book Bahir explains that one may not remain with uplifted hands for more than three hours. The intention is not to trouble Heaven beyond the three blessings, “May He bless you,” “May He shine,” “May He lift”: one blessing and one hour for Abraham, a second for Isaac, a third for Jacob. Why all this? “Before His will”: so that He has leisure to bestow abundance and does not turn toward His Maker at that moment, for while occupied in emitting, one does not absorb. This is the meaning of “Turn your eyes away from Me.”

“So that He may set aside the will of others”: those seeking at that moment to prevail against the Lord and His anointed, as in “Amalek prevailed,” “when the wicked flourish like grass.” Their annulment follows “before your will,” whose intention is toward Heaven, “to destroy them forever.” Then the Name will be complete and the throne complete. This is the true intention of both parts of this Mishnah, not granting free rein to ordinary personal desire and canceling its opposite. We learn from it that a person is granted permission to resemble the Most High, if he sets his too has a small portion of judgment within mercy, but the surplus nails extending beyond the flesh contain shells. They objected: did they not say, “From the middle upward, Hormiz”—that is, the human being from the middle upward is entirely mercy? How can the shells grasp the hands, which are in the upper half of the body? They answered that since one sometimes lowers the hands, the shells have some grasp in them. The sign is “through lowered hands the house leaks.” Therefore our holy Rabbi was careful not to put his hands below his navel, as explained in the Gemara, and raised his ten fingers upward before his death; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This is “Set aside your will before His will”: set aside your desire to increase abundance above through raising your ten fingers. During the lifting of hands, abundance increases in the upper world and is prepared to descend below. At that moment it does not descend, for while occupied in absorbing, it does not emit. Therefore set aside your will: do not raise your hands for more than three hours, so that He has leisure to bestow below. Preparing and sending down cannot occur simultaneously, for while occupied in emitting below, He does not absorb above. Hence manna did not descend on the Sabbath: then the Holy One prepared nourishment for all His heart toward Him.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

creatures for all the weekdays, each meal corresponding to two days, as explained above in chapter 21; see there. This is “before His will,” for His will is to send abundance below.

“So that He may set aside the will of others seeking to prevail”: at that time, through your good intention, the blessed Lord annuls their power—the power of the shells seeking to prevail over Israel. This is “their annulment follows,” to destroy them forever. “This is the intention”: this is the true explanation of “Make His will,” and likewise “Set aside your will.” “Not granting free rein to ordinary personal desire”: not the apparent meaning concerning ordinary desire; “canceling its opposite” likewise concerns ordinary desire [as this commentary phrases it].[TN020154] “Permission to resemble the Most High”: to desire to bestow upon others as the Holy One bestows upon others.

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “It is well known”: the author returns to explain repentance on the basis of the preceding chapter's premise that even optional activities are reckoned commandments.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “A great commandment”: as the Sages said in the first chapter of Qiddushin, one who refrains and does not transgress receives reward like one who performs a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Since we explained”: even if no commandment presented itself at that time, he could nevertheless fulfill a commandment through some optional activity.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “Repentance was therefore required”: the other divisions of atonement alone do not suffice. As in the final chapter of Yoma, concerning the four divisions of atonement expounded by R. Yishmael: repentance accompanies each one. We quoted this above in chapter 15.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “One of the conditions”: of the ways of repentance.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “But because”: repentance itself is a positive commandment. It is therefore required for every transgression a person commits, to atone for neglecting the commandment he would have performed by refraining from it.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “Great”: in years, since it preceded the world; and beloved to the point of equaling the entire Torah. Its importance makes it fittingly atone. Otherwise, there would be no reason for it to atone for neglecting some commandment merely because it too is a positive commandment: what makes this positive commandment stronger than that one?

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “Whether combined with another transgression”: when he neglected the positive commandment through the transgressive act, or simply neglected a positive commandment.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “However”: he returns to the fourth of the four divisions of atonement, desecration of the Name. The baraita's statement that for one bearing desecration of the Name repentance lacks power even to suspend punishment, and so forth, reflects the severity likewise found in Avot, chapter 4: “R. Yoḥanan son of Beroqah says: whoever desecrates Heaven's Name secretly is punished openly, whether inadvertent or deliberate, in desecrating the Name.” The reason is that its mark is recognizable, as in the Zohar, Aḥarei, page 126: “[An uncertain introduction:] one who transgresses the Torah's words—it rises and descends and makes marks on the person's face, so those above and below may look at him.”[TN020146] Desecrating the Name is especially severe: for other transgressions repentance removes the mark, as in the accounts of that person and the disciple there; see there. With desecration of the Name, however, the mark is not erased. Thus his hidden condition is as though open [the following phrase is defective], until punishment is likewise exacted openly, and death completes the cleansing, as in Yoma.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “Not to make the measures equal”: not that the punishment for inadvertent and deliberate offenses is identical—God forbid.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “Therefore”: this is why there in chapter 3 R. Elazar of Modi'in says, “One who profanes consecrated things,” and so forth, “even though they possess Torah and good deeds, has no share in the world to come.” These offenses contain an element of desecrating the Name.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “Unless they devote themselves extraordinarily”: “even though they possess Torah” refers to ordinary Torah study. Extraordinary devotion to Torah, however—putting oneself to death over it—atones, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “Great strengthening”: and extraordinary devotion.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “Doubly”: for the transgression itself and for neglecting a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “Gain understanding in Your truth”: this is Torah, but it must be through extraordinary devotion. Attend to this: that is why he says “gain understanding.”

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “From Eli's sons we learned”: the same follows from what the Sages said concerning “The iniquity of Eli's house shall not be atoned for through sacrifice and offering”: through sacrifice and offering it is not atoned for, but through words of Torah it is atoned for. “Sacrifice and offering” must mean together with repentance; otherwise, as stated in the first chapter of Shevuot, “If he did not repent, the sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination,” and so forth. Even with repentance they were not atoned for, because they bore desecration of the Name, as Scripture explains. The statement that they nevertheless are atoned for through Torah [the source questions the connective] applies in the manner we described.[TN020147]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “As it is written”: this verse supplies proof and a reason that extraordinary Torah study avails. The Sages expounded “when a person dies” as one who puts himself to death over words of Torah—that is, one who engages in it with exceptional devotion. Since it calls this death [the supplied transition is defective], what is atoned for only through death is also atoned for through extraordinary Torah study.[TN020148]

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “Death is only”: it is counted as death because, just as actual death is only the soul's concealment as it returns to its Father's house and withdraws from this world, through Torah words the soul withdraws from dark ways.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “It proclaims him openly”: all the more so than a transgression, whose rule is likewise to become manifest, as the Sages said in the first chapter of Sotah. This manifestation certainly atones for desecrating the Name, and his reward is to give understanding, benefit others, and learn with them.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “This is what”: what we said concerning a person's great goodness, as it were, in benefiting others, is Rabban Gamliel's “Make His will like your will, so that He may make your will like His,” as he proceeds to explain.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “Then His will”: a designation for the Shekhinah, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “Will glory in its King”: as in the Zohar, Vayiqra, page 4, concerning one who merits rising at midnight to occupy himself with Torah: “That [text missing] adorns herself with that person, stands before the King, and says, ‘See: with this son I come before You; with this son I awaken before You,’” and so forth.[TN020149] This is “Make the Shekhinah's will”: enable her to glory in your deed and awaken the feminine waters before the King, just as your will is likewise to find favor before Him, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “Your intention”: it will follow that He makes your will like His. Just as the Shekhinah's will is to bestow abundance and benefit all, so your will will be to benefit another.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(כד) “This is a commandment for its own sake”: “so that He may make your will,” and so forth, does not mean receiving reward. It means that through this you merit performing a commandment for its own sake. This itself is the reward, for the reward of a commandment is a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(כה) “In saying”: “If indeed I have found favor in Your eyes, make Your ways known to me, that I may know You, so that I may find favor in Your eyes; see that this nation is Your people.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

(כו) “Through my effort”: in commandments, so that Your will, in awakening feminine waters, may glory and say, “See: with this son I come before You,” just as this is also my will.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(כז) “The meaning of finding favor”: this expression applies to something sought with intention and effort, as he writes below in chapter 24.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(כח) “The Sages explained”: in the Book Bahir: “Moses said: I know the ways of the powers, but I do not know how Thought extends through them. I know that Thought is one, but I do not know the divisions”—that is, I do not know the manner in which it extends through the attributes.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(כט) “The purpose”: the verse's sense is this: if I have found favor in Your eyes, causing Your will to become like my will, make known to me the ways of Your Thought and its extension through the attributes. Through this I shall truly know You. My request is not for myself, but “so that I may find favor in Your eyes”: that You also make my will like Yours, to teach this to others. “See that this nation is Your people”: all the labor I undertake is only for them; I seek to benefit them, teach them Your goodness, and make Your ways known to them. This is the request I made [the ending is questioned in the source].[TN020150]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(ל) “He further said”: the tanna's conclusion, “Set aside your will before His will, so that He may set aside the will of others before your will,” likewise concerns the bestowal of abundance. The tanna cautions concerning its measure, following the Book Bahir on “When he lowered his hand, Amalek prevailed”: “Did Moses cause Amalek to prevail, since it says ‘when he lowered’? Rather, a person may not remain for three hours with his hands spread toward heaven.”[TN020151]

Yad Yehudah - ל - continued

The reason is that Malkhut bestows the abundance of favor, the Lord's blessing, upon the one raising his hands. While bestowing, she does not receive abundance from the sefirot above her, since she does not perform both at once: while occupied in emitting, she does not absorb. A person who remains with hands raised beyond the fitting measure troubles Heaven excessively, causing one of two things: either Malkhut remains without receiving abundance from above, or she stops bestowing. Therefore raising the hands beyond the measure was prohibited. This is “Set aside your will”: though you desire to remain with hands raised and receive abundance for a long time, set aside your will before the Shekhinah's will, whose whole desire is to bestow throughout the raising of the hands. Do not trouble her excessively, leaving her no leisure to bestow, for she will be compelled to stop bestowing in order to receive abundance from above.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(לא) “Only for the three blessings”: he interprets three hours as the three blessings of the priestly blessing, corresponding to the three patriarchs.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(לב) “So that He has leisure to bestow”: and does not interrupt to turn toward His Maker, uniting above to receive abundance, because while occupied, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(לג) “This is the meaning of ‘Turn’”: the Holy One, blessed be He, tells the Shekhinah, “Turn your eyes away from Me,” so that she may bestow abundance below. As long as her eyes and heart are there with Him in the supreme union, blessed be He, she does not bestow. See the Zohar, Qedoshim, page 152. In this manner I propose that this too is the intention of “When you spread your hands, I shall hide My eyes from you; even when you multiply prayer, I do not hear.” Malkhut, to whom all turn in prayers [the source word is questioned] and raised hands, says to Israel, “When you spread your hands, I shall hide My eyes from you.”[TN020152]

Yad Yehudah - לג - continued

They might think this would not harm them, since by hiding her eyes from them she could instead turn upward, receive abundance, and return to bestow it upon them. She therefore concludes, “Even when you multiply prayer”: I do not hide My eyes for your benefit. Even if you consequently multiply prayer and stand with hands raised for a long time to receive much abundance—something permitted to you now that I have hidden My eyes in a way that allowed Me to receive abundance from above—nevertheless I do not hear. Your iniquities have separated Me from My Beloved, so that I neither receive abundance nor bestow upon you any longer.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(לד) “So that He may set aside”: the tanna's “so that He may set aside the will of others before your will” means that although all other sides are subdued while your hands are spread, as in the Zohar, Yitro, page 119, when you lower your hand and the wicked external forces thereby flourish like grass, as happened with Amalek, do not fear them or their multitude. On the contrary, this will cause their downfall, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(לה) “The will of others”: the other sides.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(לו) “Their annulment follows”: “before your will” means that the annulment of the will of others seeking to prevail follows from your will and intention for Heaven when you withdraw your hand, so that the Shekhinah may receive abundance from above. Even if this gives the external forces satisfaction for a brief moment, its end will nevertheless be bitter: to destroy them forever. Then the Name will be complete and the throne complete, unlike the war with Amalek, concerning which it is written, “For a hand,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(לז) “This is the intention”: this is the tanna's true intention in both the opening and conclusion of the Mishnah.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(לח) “Not”: unlike the apparent plain sense, in which “so that He may make your will” at the opening refers to ordinary personal desire.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(לט) “Canceling its opposite”: likewise, not as some interpret the conclusion, “so that He may set aside the will of others,” as canceling Heaven's will—as though it said “so that He may set aside His will,” substituting “others” out of respect. Rather, the truth is as we explained.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 22

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 22

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 23 (כג)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד

Yoel Moshe - 1

“In the West they taught”: above, chapter 22, he brought the teaching that repentance does not suffice for desecrating the Name unless joined to Torah study. Here he brings service—that is, prayer—joined to repentance, which also atones. Afterward he

Rema of Fano

In the West they taught concerning the iniquity of Eli's house: it is not atoned for through sacrifice and offering, but it is atoned for through prayer, which comes from the depths of the heart. Its final refinement is falling upon one's face, acknowledging death as justly due to oneself. Thus we find concerning our father Jacob, who in his final exile was brings acts of kindness joined to repentance, which likewise atone, following “The world stands on three things: Torah, service, and acts of kindness.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“To acknowledge death as just”: falling upon the face in prayer means

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

surrendering oneself to death, as Ari's intention [the following word is uncertain]. Therefore it is written that it is good to say after falling upon the face, “A psalm of David: to You, Lord, I lift my soul.”[TN020166]

“Thus we find concerning our father Jacob in his final exile”: the Egyptian exile, which was his final exile [the source questions several words].

“They said that he was reciting the Shema when he encountered Joseph”: concerning this [an unclear abbreviated attribution follows], “six of their names,” and so forth. All twelve tribes were engraved and stood upon the breastplate, each upon its own stone and in its appropriate color, as is known. Joseph's stone was shoham. On the ephod's shoulder-pieces were two shoham stones: six of their names on the right shoham and six on the left. Therefore the midrash says that when his father's image appeared to Joseph in the episode of Potiphar's wife, he said: shall this man, destined to stand upon the ephod, do such a deed? Immediately he withdrew from her; see there. The difficulty is: why say upon the ephod, when he also stood upon the breastplate like the other tribes? This is what we explained: the ephod had wounded by the transgressions of earlier generations: they said that he was reciting the Shema when he encountered Joseph. There is no doubt that he also joined redemption directly to prayer. Immediately upon completing his prayer, he opened his mouth in wisdom and said, “Let me die this time,” in the sense of falling upon one's face, a mystery revealed in Scripture.

Rema of Fano - continued

His saying, “After seeing your face, for you are still alive,” supports what later authorities wrote: a place containing a Torah scroll is required. However this is understood, consult Sefer ha-Roqeaḥ by R. Eliezer of Worms, of blessed memory. The intention is to awaken us to the fact that acknowledging death as justly due to ourselves is our house of life, in the sense of “Let us fall”: actual falling, not a deposit; “let us fall into the hand of the Lord,” specifically. For yad, “hand,” means a place; “the Lord” means a Torah scroll, certainly. This condition may be fulfilled in actuality or symbolically, for “he was a son of old age to him,” which we translate “a wise son.”

Besides this, it is explained in the language of truth that Joseph's attribute is the book of remembrance for our father Jacob's Torah. It is also redemption, which must be joined directly to prayer. We learn that for one who knows how to direct every necessary intention in this, his thought establishes for him the place of a Torah scroll. Not everyone who wishes to assume the distinction may do so. All this suffices as an indication.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

no other stone but shoham, Joseph's stone, encompassing all the others—six names on this stone and six on the other. Joseph encompassed them all. On the breastplate, by contrast, each stood upon its own appropriate stone, not shoham. This is the allusion in the Shema [the linking wording is uncertain].[TN020167]

“After seeing your face”: Joseph was the mystery of the Torah scroll, for Jacob is Torah and Joseph the Torah scroll; this is the extension of vav. Examine it closely. The Targum says, “He was a wise son to him.” Therefore Jacob fell upon his face according to the rule requiring a Torah scroll specifically. “It is also redemption”: Joseph's attribute is Yesod, redemption; prayer is Malkhut. They are adjacent among the attributes, and must be joined directly to bestow from Yesod's mediation to Malkhut. Examine it closely.[TN020168]

“However this is understood”: however we understand “the place of a Torah scroll,” consult Sefer Roqeaḥ. “Actual falling”: actual surrender of the soul, not a deposit as at night. Therefore “he falls into the hand of the Lord,” specifically—not like “Into Your hand I deposit my spirit,” but actual surrender of the soul.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Concerning this mystery a kabbalist said, “Sarah died in Qiryat Arba.” Prayer, the eighteen blessings, reaches the world of Atzilut; examine Ari's prayer intentions carefully. This is a lofty roof, igra ramah, in the upper world. In falling upon the face, one surrenders oneself to lowest Sheol. This is hinted in ARBA, initials of igra ramah, bira ʿamiqta—“a lofty roof, a deep pit”—and there she died.

“One who knows how to direct intention, his thought establishes the place”: as though a Torah scroll were there. Yet “not everyone who wishes to assume the distinction”: not every person knows how to direct this thought.

“The governor of this cycle”: they said, seven times the world exists six thousand years and one thousand lies desolate, making forty-nine thousand. The sabbatical cycle in which we are is Isaac's. Therefore it is said, “Abraham does not know us,” and so forth, “for You are our father”: this is Isaac. Thus it is explained why he prayed for Israel, rather than Abraham and Jacob, as the Gemara relates. For this reason we are now in exile under his son Esau. Through Isaac's merit we shall therefore escape the Messiah's birth pangs.

Rema of Fano - continued

Other commandments too equal the entire Torah and, together with complete repentance, avail against desecrating the Name: for example, acts of kindness with great and constant diligence, and likewise observing the Sabbath and fulfilling the three meals for the sake of Heaven, as it is written, “Then you shall delight above the Lord.” In Ari's name, of blessed memory, they said that the Sabbath evening meal awakens the merit of Isaac, who governs this sabbatical cycle, as we shall explain in Em Kol Hai; it avails to save one from the birth pangs of our Messiah. The morning meal awakens the merit of Abraham, the pious elder, to save one from the judgment of Gehinnom. He stands at its entrance to save his descendants who keep the covenant. Circumcision and Sabbath are two halves of the body, as is known. The afternoon meal awakens the merit of Jacob, father of the seventy souls, to save one from the war of Gog and Magog, whose numerical value is seventy.

We already mentioned in chapter 21 the commandment to set one's table after the Sabbath, awakening the merit of King David, the fourth leg, to save one from the beating of the grave. Let Sabbath delight therefore not be slight in our eyes, for it is among the commandments equal to the entire Torah, as stated.

Above all is rejecting every kind of alien worship, like Manasseh son of Hezekiah, who dug passages through the firmament. The opening of repentance, hinted in the form of the letter he, as in

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“David the king's merit, from the beating of the grave”: it is known that he is the fourth leg. Therefore “the Good One who does good” was instituted as the fourth blessing, corresponding to David, concerning the slain of Betar who were granted burial. It also appears to me that for this reason, in the future at resurrection, David will recite the blessing after meals at the Leviathan banquet. Examine it closely.

The matter of the beating of the grave is this: there are four worlds, marked by ABYA, corresponding to the four letters of the Name. Yod is Atzilut, where death and any evil have no place—God forbid—but by nature goodness benefits. In the other worlds, Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, some materiality applies; these correspond to H V H. Asiyah corresponds to the final he, and death and burial apply in Asiyah. David's attribute is from the final he, which has nothing of its own. David too had no life of his own, only what Adam the first human gave him. He therefore saves from the beating of the grave.

Thus the blessing after meals contains four blessings. “Who feeds” corresponds to Abraham: it says “with favor and kindness," Abraham's attribute. The second concerns providing food and corresponds to Isaac, as stated above in chapter 2 concerning the source's unclear phrase "the substitution of ..."; it corresponds to Esau's attribute; see there. [TN020169] The third corresponds to Jacob, shepherd of Israel, and also "not into dependence on gifts of flesh and blood," everything Jacob requested. "The Good One who does good" corresponds to David, the fourth leg, instituted concerning Betar's slain who were granted burial. As we said, this concerns Asiyah, where death and burial apply. Thus the meal of David saves from the beating of the grave. The Gemara's statement concerning the future Leviathan banquet, "It is fitting for me to bless," is likewise resolved through this intention: the attribute of the beating of the grave does not pertain to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the same way, as is known to us concerning all this.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Terror for workers of iniquity": ḥet indicates this. When one merits, he tunnels through its roof: he has a suspended leg [the intervening wording is uncertain], so that one who returns may enter through it. See there.

Rema of Fano - continued

Menaḥot, had become closed before his eye. It stood before him in the form of ḥet, "terror [meḥittah] for workers of iniquity." He tunneled through it, broke through its roof, turned upward to the Unique One of the world, and was accepted.

Likewise we find concerning Jonathan son of Gershon, son of Manasseh: this is a true designation, because God caused the righteous man to be forgotten [nashshahu], so that his name would not be mentioned in connection with wrongdoing. David came, brought him back in repentance, and appointed him over the treasuries. Solomon came, changed his father's council, and he returned to his former ways, becoming a prophet of Baal in Bethel. At the end of his days he too was drawn near through hospitality, like the maternal grandfather of his father Gershom, who through hospitality merited entering beneath the Shekhinah's wings.

When Jonathan of his own accord contemplated complete repentance, the holy spirit rested upon him. He became a true prophet of the Lord, rebuking his fellow who transgressed his own prophecy. He likewise prophesied what his fellow had prophesied concerning the altar in Bethel; Jonathan's prophecy additionally encompassed all the high-place shrines in the cities of Samaria. When he published his prophecy and concealed nothing, there could be no greater rejection of alien worship or sanctification of Heaven's Name. See the end of Part III.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

[TN020170]

"Because He caused the righteous man to be forgotten": although he descended from Moses, he is called Manasseh, causing the righteous Moses, peace be upon him, to be forgotten, so that his name is not mentioned in connection with the wicked person, like Jacob's "Let my soul not enter their council."

"Through hospitality": through food. Gershom's maternal grandfather is Jethro; see there.

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) "In the West": in the preceding chapter the author explained that desecration of the Name is atoned for through putting oneself to death over Torah words. This is our Gemara's teaching concerning Eli's house: sacrifice and offering do not atone, but Torah words do. He now explains that prayer too atones, as in the Jerusalem Talmud: "Rav Kahana was standing in prayer, and R. Ḥiyya son of Abba was praying before him. When R. Ḥiyya finished, he wished to pass before Rav Kahana. R. Ḥiyya son of Abba said to him: Is this how they behave in Babylonia, distressing their teachers? He replied: Does the master not know that I am from Eli's family, of whom it is written, ‘The iniquity of Eli's house shall not be atoned for through sacrifice and offering’? Sacrifice and offering do not atone, but prayer does.” He prayed for him, and he lived so long that his nails became red like this wafer [as the supplied comparison reads].[TN020155]

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “Its final refinement”: prayer atones for desecrating the Name like death because the final refinement of prayer is the worshipper's accepting death upon himself in falling upon his face. This acceptance atones like death. Thus in the Zohar, Bemidbar, page 238: “When night enters and the lower side containing death rules, it spreads its covering and covers everything. Therefore they are bound, and all people taste the taste of death. The person anticipates this, gives the deposit of his soul, and entrusts it into its hand as a deposit. Because it took it as a deposit, it returns the deposit to its owner when morning comes. When morning comes and his deposit returns to him, he must bless the Holy One, blessed be He, who is the supreme faithful One.

“After rising, he enters the synagogue, adorns himself with his wrapping, covers himself with the covering of tzitzit, and first enters and purifies himself. Then he accepts upon himself the yoke of kingship through David's praises,” and so forth. “Then comes the order of prayer, to sanctify the Holy One, blessed be He,” and so forth. “Come and see: once a person has prayed,” and so forth, “after completing the standing prayer, he must show himself as though he had departed from the world. He has separated from the tree of life and gathered his feet toward that tree of death which returned his deposit, as it is said, ‘He gathered his feet into the bed.’ He has confessed his sins and prayed over them. Now he must gather himself toward this tree of death, fall, and say to it, ‘To You, Lord, I lift my soul.’ At first I gave it to You as a deposit; now that I have offered unification, performed deed and speech fittingly, and confessed my sins, I truly surrender my soul to You.

“He should place himself as though departed from the world, surrendering his soul to this place of death. Therefore he is not afraid, for [the supplied connective is defective] the tree of life is this, and the tree of death is this.[TN020156] This teaches us that there are sins not atoned for until one departs from the world, as it is written, ‘Whether this iniquity shall be atoned for you.’ This person truly gives himself to death and surrenders his soul to this place, not as a deposit as at night, but as one who has truly departed from the world. This refinement requires intention of the heart. Then the Holy One, blessed be He, has mercy upon him and atones for his sins.”

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “In his exile” [the supplied lemma is unstable]: “that is, his exile is not cities” [the explanation is defective and cannot be confidently construed].[TN020157]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “Immediately upon completing his prayer”: he fell upon his face to surrender his soul to death, and merited life this time [as the supplied conclusion reads].[TN020158]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “There is support”: falling upon one's face requires a place containing a Torah scroll. Therefore he said, “seeing your face,” which is like a Torah scroll, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “In Sefer ha-Roqeaḥ”: section 324.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “Is our house of life”: like a Torah scroll.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “In the sense of ‘Let us fall into the hand of the Lord’” (II Samuel 24): this alludes to falling upon one's face in a place containing a Torah scroll. This is “in the hand of the Lord,” for yad means place, as in “he set up a yad for himself.”

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “Not a deposit”: as explained in the Zohar cited above.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “To fulfill”: in Torah sages, what applies to a Torah scroll, as an actual deed in the death one brings upon oneself through falling upon one's face [the supplied syntax is defective].[TN020159]

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “For he was”: [the opening reference to what preceded is defective]. From “after seeing your face,” and so forth, there is also this allusion to a

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Torah scroll: Joseph is “a wise son,” and Torah is the light of his face.[TN020160]

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “Besides”: through this reason too Joseph is regarded as a Torah scroll, because his attribute, Yesod, is the book of remembrance, while the Torah scroll is Jacob's attribute and Torah, as explained in the Zohar, Vayaqhel, at the source's uncertain page notation.[TN020161]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “It is also”: for this reason we said there is no doubt that Jacob joined redemption directly to prayer. Yesod redeems and brings redemption to Malkhut through bestowing abundance, as in the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 183b, and Raʿaya Meheimna, Mishpatim, page 220. This must be joined directly to prayer, which is Malkhut, to connect and unite the bestowal without any interruption.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “We learn”: just as Joseph is regarded as a Torah scroll, so every good person who knows how to direct every required intention in falling upon the face may regard himself as a Torah scroll and fall upon his face. The author also wrote this in Yonat Elem, chapter 9. Concerning the intention, he wrote there in chapter 26: “One must intend this when saying, ‘To You, Lord, I lift my soul,’ and falling upon the face: one surrenders the soul to death, and in raising the soul raises with it light and sparks of purity within the shell.”

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “Not everyone who wishes”: the author's words there, chapter 9, are: “It comes to teach us,” and so forth, “and what an admonition for everyone who comes to surrender his soul in prayer—whether in the Shema, falling upon the face, or any similar intention of the heart—not to do so under any circumstances until he knows within himself that at that moment his heart is whole, even the evil within it. As Scripture testifies concerning our father Abraham, peace be upon him: ‘You found his heart faithful before You.’ Otherwise [the supplied quoted wording is defective], he offers a blemished sacrifice.”[TN020162]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “Other commandments”: the author returns to his course concerning atonement for desecrating the Name.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “For example, acts of kindness”: as the Sages expounded concerning Eli's house: sacrifice and offering do not atone, but acts of kindness do.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “Likewise, observing the Sabbath”: the Sages said that even one who worships idols like Enosh is forgiven.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “Fulfilling the three meals”: the Sages said that one is saved from three calamities, from the judgment of Gehinnom, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “As it is written, ‘Then you shall delight above the Lord’”: the delight reaches atonement for the sin committed against Him in desecrating the Name.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “In Ari's name”: incidentally, the author explains why fulfilling the three meals saves from three calamities.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) [The supplied opening is defective.] It concerns Isaac's attribute; therefore at its appointed measure [the connective wording about the Lord, Isaac, and prayer is damaged] it awakens his merit to show us favor when we receive [the final expression is unclear].[TN020163]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “Two halves of the body”: both are signs of the covenant. Therefore Sabbath too awakens the merit of circumcision.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(כד) “Above all”: rejecting idolatry is like acknowledging the entire Torah, and atones for desecrating the Name.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(כה) “Like Manasseh son of Hezekiah”: who repented. The Sages said of him in the chapter Ḥeleq: “‘He heard him and tunneled for him [va-yaḥtor].’ Should it not say ‘He was entreated by him [va-yeʿater]’? This teaches that the Holy One made him something like a tunnel in the firmament to receive him in repentance, hiding him from the attribute of judgment.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

(כו) “For it became closed”: the author explains this through the Sages' words in chapter 3 of Menaḥot:

Yad Yehudah - כו - continued

“Why was the world created with he? Because it resembles a portico: whoever wishes to leave may leave. Why is its leg suspended? So that if one returns in repentance, they admit him. Let him enter through the other opening! It would not succeed, according to Resh Laqish, who said: what is ‘If to scoffers, He scoffs; but to the humble He gives favor’? One who comes to become impure is given an opening; one who comes to become pure is assisted.”

Through his many sins, Manasseh caused judgment to withhold assistance; even when he cried and pleaded, his prayer was shut out. Understand that thereby he became entirely closed before him, like ḥet, expounded as “terror for workers of iniquity.” Yet he persisted greatly until the blessed Lord dug a tunnel; it became he again, and He accepted his repentance, hiding him from the attribute of judgment.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(כז) “He turned upward”: tunneling through the roof of ḥet alludes to the height of the world, as stated there.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(כח) “Likewise we find concerning Jonathan”: that he rejected idolatry and was accepted in repentance.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(כט) “A true designation”: in the Jerusalem Talmud, Berakhot: “‘Jonathan son of Gershom, son of Manasseh.’ R. Shemuel son of Naḥmani said: the nun is suspended. If he merits, he is the son of Moses; otherwise, the son of Manasseh.” The author says that “otherwise, the son of Manasseh” does not establish a relationship with Manasseh son of Hezekiah, of which we know nothing. Rather, it is a designation concealing Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, so that he is not named in connection with it [the supplied connective wording is damaged].[TN020164]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(ל) “David came”: as in the chapter “There Are Those Who Inherit”: “They said to him: Do you not descend from Moses, yet become a priest of idolatry? He replied: this is what I received from my grandfather's house: a person should always hire himself for alien service and not depend on others.

Yad Yehudah - ל - continued

He thought it meant actual idolatry; it did not, but work alien to him,” and so forth. “When David saw that money was especially dear to him, he appointed him over the treasuries, as it is written, ‘Shevuel son of Gershom, son of Moses, officer over the treasuries.’ Was his name Shevuel? Was it not Jonathan? R. Yoḥanan said: this teaches that he returned to God with all his heart.”

Yad Yehudah - לא

(לא) “Solomon came”: in the Jerusalem Talmud there: “They objected to R. Shemuel son of Naḥmani: You say that Shevuel means he returned to God, yet it is written, ‘until the day of the land's exile.’ He replied: when David died, Solomon arose, replaced his father's entire council, and removed him. He returned to his former corruption. This is ‘An old prophet was living in Bethel.’ They say that it was he who held fast to idolatry. On that day he repented, and the holy spirit rested upon him. This is ‘The word of the Lord came to the prophet who had brought him back.’”

Yad Yehudah - לב

(לב) “Through hospitality”: in the chapter Ḥeleq: “Great is sharing food, for it distances those near and draws near those distant,” and so forth, “and causes His Shekhinah to rest upon prophets of Baal,” and so forth. “Drawing near those distant” is learned from Jethro: R. Ḥanan said that through the merit of “Call him, and let him eat bread,” his descendants merited sitting in the Chamber of Hewn Stone. “Causing His Shekhinah to rest upon prophets of Baal” is learned from the fellow of the prophet Iddo, as it is said, “He said to him, ‘I too am a prophet like you,’” and so forth, and “As they sat at the table, the word of the Lord came to the prophet,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(לג) “Like Gershom's maternal grandfather”: this is Jethro. His family was accustomed to being drawn near through hospitality.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(לד) “To rebuke”; “his prophecy additionally encompassed”: as explained in Scripture (I Kings 13) [the supplied intermediate word is defective]. [TN020165]

Return to chapter in contents

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 24 (כד)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב

Yoel Moshe - 1

“To escape calamities”: fearing punishment. “Or love of benefit”: because of the reward the blessed Lord will give. “Or the pleasure attained”: wisdom is pleasant to him, and the matter of wisdom is good in his eyes. “Love of goodness”: fearing the Lord through love. This attribute is proper and beautiful, as below.

“Of which he said ‘your folly’”: related to fool and wicked person. He therefore says that he has no share in true fear, only shrinking and worrying, as Job himself testified.

“Jacob feared Esau”: he was compelled to fear him with the fear described above. This is “he was distressed”: Jacob distressed himself over this. See there.

“An evil lash beneath the holy God”: below holiness, the other side has a hold, and the shells begin there. Thus literally beneath God there are evil calamities. Jacob and Joseph testified concerning themselves, “Am I beneath God?”—we are not beneath God, but with God, and so forth. See there.

Rema of Fano

In Torah, commandments, and every work of Heaven, some intend to escape calamities, others love the benefit or pleasure attained through wisdom and worthy action, and others love goodness absolutely. The latter fear the Lord and contemplate His Name. Eliphaz already rebuked Job: “Is not your fear your folly, your hope, and the integrity of your ways?” (Job 4:6). He criticized his fear of punishments, of which he said “your folly”: he had no share in fear beyond shrinking back and worrying that the fool's fate might befall him too, as he himself testified, “What I dreaded comes upon me” (Job 3:25).

Jacob too was distressed at being compelled to fear Esau: “Jacob was greatly afraid,” and because of this “he was distressed” (Genesis 32:8). He immediately sought deliverance and assistance through prayer. Fear of calamities is indeed an evil lash beneath the holy God, which Jacob and Joseph distanced from themselves. The Torah testifies in each one's name, “Am I beneath God?” (Genesis 30:2; 50:19). They meant: let our fear be only of God, His glory and greatness. Of it is written, “Your rod and Your staff comfort me” (Psalms 23:4), for the rod itself is the support, as in “I disciplined and strengthened their arms” (Hosea 7:15).

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Of it is written, ‘Your rod and Your staff’”: although there is some judgment above, it comes in mercy. Therefore the rod itself is the support, in mercy. “My tears were my bread”: the author asks, tears naturally harm the eyes; how could the prophet call them bread? He answers himself: “When they say to me all day, AYEH your God”—the source of mercy. AYEH comprises the first three attributes: alef, the wondrous one, is Keter; yod is Ḥokhmah; he is Binah, Mother. This is AYEH. Thus my tears became bread sustaining the human heart when they told me “AYEH is your God”: the afflictions come from Elohim, gentle judgment, your Judge.

“This is why Scripture joins them”: literally fearing God, inward fear, and turning from evil, external fear that brings evil upon oneself by provoking rebellion. It is therefore called evil.

“Both apply truly”: above he explained “your fear, your folly” as fear of punishment, lest the fool's fate befall him. Here he says Job feared God with inward fear and turned from evil. Therefore both are true: initially he turned from evil through inward fear alone; finally he was caught in his net through his own admission, “What I dreaded,” and rebelled against afflictions. “Confining his sitting in ashes”: sitting in ashes like sand bounding the sea. “Obliged to strip off the garments of its desires”: through his sin he had made himself a garment from the side of the shells.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“His fear also”: Job's fear also anticipated reward. “Love of benefit”: the love of utility mentioned at the chapter's beginning. “It is pleasure”: the sweetness mentioned above—that peoples serve him and accord him honor.

“The plain sense is settled”: commentators treat “Is not your fear your folly” as rearranged, as though it read, “Is not your fear your hope, and the integrity of your ways your confidence?” Under the author's interpretation it is not rearranged: your fear means fear of punishment, lest the fool's fate befall you; your hope means expectation of reward; integrity of ways means pleasure in self-glorification, as above.

“It corresponds precisely”: a gentile does not bless “who did not make me a

Rema of Fano - continued

It is written, “My tears have been my bread day and night” (Psalms 42:4). Tears, by their nature exhaustion of the eyes and anguish of soul, became bread to me, sustaining the human heart, when they said to me all day: know that AYEH, “where,” the source of mercy, as known in the language of truth, is “your God,” your Judge. This is why Scripture joins “fearing God and turning from evil” (Job 1:1): turning from the external fear that brings evil upon oneself. Both accounts apply truly to Job, together with the doubt about providence that entered his heart. At first he turned from evil; when he began worrying about perverted judgment, however, he was caught in this net through his own admission. Finally he rebelled against afflictions and mocked them: “Am I the sea, or a sea monster, that You set a guard over me?” (Job 7:12).

It is known that from the waist downward he rolled in ashes to dry the moist eruption, like sand as the sea's boundary; from the waist upward he scraped the dry eruption with a potsherd, like the sea monster—the serpent condemned to shed its skin once every seven years. He said that he had not sinned bodily so as to require confinement in ashes, nor in his soul so as to be obliged to strip off the garments of its desires. There is no greater folly than fearing and trembling before afflictions and then rebelling against them.

He said “your hope” because his fear also arose from expectation of a limited reward, anticipated within human gentile,” for a gentile serves from fear of punishment. “Who did not make me a slave” concerns receiving reward; “who did not make me a woman” concerns pleasure, self-glorification, and other motives.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Similarly, ‘Whoever eats’”: this too is not rearranged, contrary to the interpretation “Whoever eats leaven from the first day to the seventh shall be cut off.” According to the author, excision belongs from the first day to the seventh, the seven days of construction: Gedullah, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzah, Hod, Yesod, and Malkhut. The first three, Keter, Ḥokhmah, and Binah, are complete mercy, without judgment. They are called AYIN, BAYIT, ASHER. Keter is called AYIN, “nothing,” as in the Holy One's creating something from nothing, according to this mystery; within Keter there is also the head of Ayin. Ḥokhmah is called house, following “The wisdom of women builds her house.” Binah is called ASHER, since she is head and source of the seven days of construction, as known to those versed in hidden wisdom. Another reason: of the first two one cannot say asher, referring directly; only from Binah onward, as the Zohar states in several places. In the first three “there is no dead one there”: no death or judgment—God forbid—only in the last seven.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Lying means training”: “lying” denotes death, and prophecy requires stripping away bodily materiality, resembling death, as he prepared himself for prophecy. “The tree of death” [the source interrupts the explanation here]. “True fear”: inward fear is reckoned only when its purpose is perfecting oneself in the Omnipresent's ways, doing His will with no other motive, only that the servant please his Master. Specifically “My Torah,” and likewise specifically “My voice.” “The tree of death” means the final he, where death applies, as in “her feet descend to death”; see above. [TN020177]

“Walking with God”: as in “Noah walked,” and similarly Abraham, from height to height. “Fulfilling in wealth”: the final he is called poor because she has no abundance except what she receives from the first letters, just as the moon has light only from the sun. The Sages said she has nothing of her own. The first letters, by contrast, are called wealth, and inward fear reaches there. External fear is from Malkhut downward, where the shells have a hold, as in “her feet descend to death.” From her proceed four worlds, understanding. This is love of benefit, not hope for fear itself, as we shall mention. “The integrity of your ways” is the pleasure a person obtains from the perfection of human character: peoples serve him and nations bow to him. Thus the verse's plain sense is settled without rearrangement, contrary to the commentators' view. Its order corresponds precisely to the morning blessings concerning a gentile, a slave, and a woman; this will be explained in the Treatise on the Soul.

Rema of Fano - continued

Similarly, “Whoever eats leaven shall be cut off, from the first day until the seventh day” (Exodus 12:15) requires no rearrangement. It teaches that excision occurs only in the court of the primordial days. Concerning the first three attributes, however, what is written? “AYIN, BAYIT, ASHER”—“no house in which” (Exodus 12:30)—essential divine designations known in the language of truth: “there is no dead one there.”

Likewise, “The lamp of God had not yet gone out, and Samuel was lying in the temple of the Lord” (I Samuel 3:3) requires no rearrangement. Before Eli's lamp had set, Samuel was “lying”—training himself to strip away sensory perception—in the Lord's temple known as the nonluminous mirror, the tree of death, preparing himself for prophecy. The commentators have been perplexed by many similar verses. Expound and receive reward.

Yet the perfected person is not reckoned to have attained true fear, the gate of

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

and below her is Asiyah, where death applies. Therefore no one is wealthy but one who rejoices in his portion, what is his portion. Israel has joy only in its Maker, for the Lord's portion is His people: when Israel merit, abundance comes to them from above, their portion of wealth coming from the first three letters. Examine it closely.

“The fourth is the aspect of unification” [the supplied lemma differs]: all the first three letters of the Name are [a defective clause concerning their source and a name follows]; she has no [the source questions the final word]. [TN020178] “When they move, she moves”: when the first three letters move, the final he follows them. “When Esther's turn came”: she is Malkhut; she requested nothing except from the first three. “Even when Esther clothed herself in royalty”: when she married Ahasuerus, Scripture testified that she bore favor of herself, without effort to find favor. Although Esther also says “If I have found favor,” implying effort, she said it only concerning the King of the world.

“If Torah”: this refers back to chapter 22, that Torah together with repentance atones for desecrating the Name only when practiced for its own sake, as explained in this section; all the more the other commandments.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“One who fulfills Torah in poverty, after that pattern, without another motive, ultimately fulfills it in wealth”: Torah is in Zeʿir Anpin, Tiferet. Fulfilling it in poverty means so that abundance may come to the poor one, Malkhut, from above, since she has nothing of her own except what she receives from Tiferet. One fulfills Torah for this purpose alone. Ultimately one fulfills it in wealth: abundance comes from the first three letters, called wealth, as above. Thus if one's intention is to bestow abundance in the worlds above, one merits abundance coming below through oneself, fulfilling it in wealth. Therefore the righteous are called by the four letters: through fulfilling Torah, they join all four letters together, and are thus called by them.

“Son of Yoḥai expounds ‘what is crooked’”: one who withdraws from Torah, who can repair whenever he wishes. Son of Menasya expounds “cannot be repaired,” and therefore applies it to fathering a mamzer, interpreted as MWM ZR, “alien blemish.” Blemish is feminine, and alien is [the source reads an uncertain form apparently referring to the male]. Through

Rema of Fano - continued

Torah and wisdom, unless its attainment and purpose are to perfect himself in the Omnipresent's ways solely because this is His will. This is the Torah's beginning in Thought. One who withdraws from it withdraws from life. As the prophet asks, “Why has the land perished?” (Jeremiah 9:11), and the Lord replies, “Because they abandoned My Torah” (9:12). This is what is called “the Torah of the Lord, perfect.” It is likewise the intrinsic intention running through its commandments and prohibitions, as will be explained; therefore He said, “They did not heed My voice.” It is the highest possible hope: the reward of a commandment is a commandment. They “did not walk in it,” for it is walking with God from height to height, fulfilling in wealth what one fulfilled in poverty.

There is no wealthy person but one who rejoices in his portion, and Israel has joy only in its Maker, for “the Lord's portion is His people.” Among the manifest features of the Name's letters, the fourth is poor in vowel pointing. It watches the course of the whole Name through its first letters: when they move, it moves; when they stand, it stands. The allusion is “When Esther's turn came, she requested nothing” (Esther 2:15). She then bore favor of herself, without effort. Even when she clothed herself in royalty, Scripture testified that she “bore favor,” without having aimed at it. “Finding favor,” however, denotes something deliberately sought. Esther said, “If I have found favor in the king's eyes” (Esther 5:8), only toward the King of the world. We shall discuss this in Em Kol Hai, Part I; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

coming upon one who is not [the following relationship term is defective], he makes a blemish in the feminine [the ensuing clause concerning the upper letters is damaged]. Thus it resembles what was said above; see there and examine it closely. [TN020179]

“What Solomon stated severely in Ecclesiastes”: “What is crooked cannot be repaired” is explained in Proverbs, “My son, attend to my wisdom”; wisdom is Torah. “The statement belongs to its place and time”: in that generation there was not such repair, but now they may be repaired. “He will be appalled and acknowledge”: he will be astonished and acknowledge the judgment against him as just, why it happened thus, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - א

(א) “Torah and commandments”: after explaining that Torah and those commandments that atone for desecrating the Name must be practiced for their own sake, the author now explains “for their own sake” and “not for their own sake.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

(ב) “To escape calamities”: the Zohar, Genesis, page 37, says: “R. Shimon opened concerning the Torah's commandments:

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

the commandments the Holy One gave Israel are all written comprehensively in the Torah. ‘In the beginning God created’ is the first commandment of all. This commandment is called fear, fear of the Lord, and is called beginning, as it is written, ‘The beginning of wisdom is fear of the Lord,’ ‘the beginning of knowledge,’ because it is the beginning of all commandments. This is the gate for entering faith; every commandment is upheld through it.

“Fear divides into three aspects. Two have no proper root, and one is the root of fear. One person fears the Holy One so that his children may live and not die, or fears punishment of his body or possessions, and therefore continually fears Him. He makes that fear his root. Another fears the Holy One because he fears punishment in that world and punishment in Gehinnom. These two are not the root of fear. Fear that is the root means fearing one's Master because He is great and ruling, the root and source of all worlds; everything before Him is as nothing, as it is said, ‘All earth's inhabitants are reckoned as nothing’; and directing one's will toward that place called fear.

“R. Shimon wept and said:

Rema of Fano - continued

One who fulfills the Torah in poverty, after that pattern, with no other motive than walking in the Omnipresent's ways, will ultimately fulfill it in wealth. For the righteous are destined to be called by the four letters. If Torah, the model for all commandments equal to it, does not atone for desecration of the Name even with repentance unless genuinely practiced for its own sake in the manner explained, all the more does this apply to the other commandments mentioned in the preceding chapter. This is clear.

The chapter “Those Who Suffer Damage” (Gittin 59a) demonstrates that Torah and greatness were never united in one place except in Moses, Rabbi, and Rav Ashi, from whom a complete Torah issued to all Israel. Throughout their periods of authority, none was known to surpass them in wisdom. All three were humble, the sign and proof of those who engage in Torah for its own sake.

Concerning one who withdraws from Torah, R. Shimon son of Yoḥai applied this verse in the Mishnah, Ḥagigah 1:7: “What is crooked cannot be repaired” (Ecclesiastes 1:15). R. Shimon son of Menasya applies it there to one who fathers a mamzer. It appears that they do not disagree: son of Yoḥai expounds “what is crooked,” and son of Menasya “cannot be repaired”; from both, the matter is completed. What Solomon stated so severely in Ecclesiastes, he explained in Proverbs, in the passage “My son, attend to my wisdom” (Proverbs 5:1). There he explained the ways of repair through every possible

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Woe if I speak; woe if I do not speak! If I speak, the wicked will know how to serve their Master. In the place where holy fear abides, below is an evil fear that strikes, beats, and accuses. It is a lash to strike the wicked. Upon one who fears because of punishment, blows, and accusation, as stated, that fear of the Lord called ‘fear of the Lord unto life’ does not rest. What rests upon him? That evil fear. Thus that lash, evil fear, rests upon him, not fear of the Lord. Therefore the place called fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom,” and so forth. See there.

From this [text missing] the author's words in this chapter and their excellence. Fear of calamities also has two forms: fear of punishments in this world and in the world to come.[TN020171]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(ג) “Or love of benefit”: the useful reward of living peacefully in this world and enjoying the world to come.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(ד) “Or pleasure”: wealth and honor in this world and exaltation in the world to come are pleasing to him, as the author explains in the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(ה) “Or enjoyment of goodness”: for its own sake.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(ו) “Because of this”: he was distressed by the fear itself that he was compelled to feel toward Esau.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(ז) “An evil lash”: explained in the Zohar passage cited above. It is beneath and below the holy God, the place called fear of the Lord.

Rema of Fano - continued

avenue, for Ecclesiastes' statement belongs to its place and time. Whoever knows what is related concerning Korah's punishment, after opposing his teacher and withdrawing from Torah, will be appalled and acknowledge the judgment against him as just.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

(ח) “Jacob and Joseph”: who said, “Am I beneath God?” This does not mean “Am I in God's place?” as the plain sense suggests. If that were all, it would be unnecessary: who is so foolish as to think they stand in God's place? Their intention was to admonish concerning fear of the Lord. Rachel said to Jacob, “Give me children” through your prayer, “or I am dead,” since she would be considered dead, as the Sages said. She feared that death. Jacob therefore replied, “Am I beneath God?”—am I an evil lash, that you fear me with an evil fear, bitterer than death? Know that this is not excellent fear; fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Joseph likewise answered his brothers when they feared him.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

(ט) “For the rod”: the Holy One's rod of discipline is itself the support. Anger from Him Himself, blessed be He, is only in mercy, unlike what comes through the other side, the evil lash. See the Zohar, Pequdei, page 426.

Yad Yehudah - י

(י) “As in ‘I disciplined’”: the Sages expounded in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah: I said that I would discipline them through afflictions in this world so that their arms would be strengthened for the world to come.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(יא) “It is written”: “My tears have been my bread day and night, when they say to me all day, ‘Where is your God?’” The author expounds that my tears became bread and support for my heart when they told me that the Name AYEH, a designation for the first three attributes, is your God, the One disciplining you.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(יב) “As known in the language of truth”: alef is Keter; YH is Ḥokhmah and Binah, as explained in Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 7.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(יג) “This is why Scripture joins them”: concerning Job.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(יד) “It means”: “turning from evil” explains “fearing God”: he feared the fear of God and turned from evil fear, the evil lash.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(טו) “Both apply truly”: although we said that Eliphaz criticized Job with “Is not your fear your folly,” rebuking his external fear [the supplied adjective is defective], this does not contradict our explanation of “turning from evil.” Both applied: initially he turned from evil, but afterward, when he doubted providence, another spirit was with him.[TN020172]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(טז) “It is known”: incidentally, the author explains this verse as it comes before him.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(יז) “He said he had not sinned”: this is “Am I the sea?” Does judgment require that I be [the supplied phrase concerning waters is unclear] and that my sitting be bounded by ashes like sand bounding the sea? I have not sinned bodily. “Or am I a sea monster?” Have I defiled my soul so as to merit such evil and bitter punishment, consuming the layers of my skin and stripping it like a serpent, instead of its being honorable garments for my soul?[TN020173]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(יח) “There is no greater folly”: the author further explains “your fear, your folly.”

Yad Yehudah - יט

(יט) “Not hope for it”: for fear itself.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(כ) “As we shall mention”: in the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(כא) “The verse's plain sense”: your fear is your folly, your hope, and the integrity of your ways. There is no need for the commentators' forced rearrangement, as though it said, “Is not your fear your hope?”

Yad Yehudah - כב

(כב) “Rather”: under our interpretation the verse's sequence—your folly, your hope, and the integrity of your ways—corresponds precisely to the morning blessings that He did not make me an idolater, slave, or woman. Beyond their plain meaning, these blessings also allude to the impropriety of serving the Lord as an idolater does, through fear of punishment; as a slave does, for reward; or for the pleasure associated with a woman. This is exactly the verse's order.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(כג) “Similarly, ‘Whoever eats’”: the commentators call it rearranged, meaning, “Whoever eats leaven from the first day to the seventh shall be cut off.” Although this is its plain sense, along the author's path the words stand as they are, teaching that excision and judgment belong to the seven holy sefirot, the seven days of construction, of which it is said, “Ask now concerning the primordial days.” Correspondingly it says, “shall be cut off, from the first day to the seventh.” In the first three attributes, Keter, Ḥokhmah, and Binah, there is no excision. Scripture alludes to this in “There was no house in which there was no dead one”: the three words AYIN, BAYIT, ASHER allude to these three sefirot. AYIN points to Keter, called Nothing because of its great concealment; BAYIT points to Ḥokhmah, as in “the house of paths of wisdom” [the supplied phrase]; ASHER to Binah, as explained in the Zohar, Aḥarei, pages 177 and 157. See the work abbreviated Ḥ.Tz.Ḥ., Part III, section 3. In these three there is no dead one and no judgment at all. [TN020174]

Yad Yehudah - כד

(כד) “Essential divine designations”: for the three sefirot mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(כה) “Likewise, ‘The lamp of God’”: “The lamp of God had not yet gone out, and Samuel was lying in the temple of the Lord, where the ark of God was; the Lord called to Samuel.” In its plain sense it appears rearranged: “Samuel was lying in the temple of the Lord, where the ark of God was; the lamp of God had not yet gone out; the Lord called to Samuel.” The intention is that prophecy came to Samuel before God's lamp went out, not simply that Samuel was lying before it went out—what does that tell us? Nevertheless, in truth the whole sequence stands properly without rearrangement, as the Sages expounded: before Eli's sun set, the sun of Samuel of Ramah rose. This is “the lamp of God,” meaning Eli's prophecy, “had not yet gone out, and Samuel was lying.”

Yad Yehudah - כה - continued

Yad Yehudah - כו

(כו) “Training himself”: this exposition of the Sages is derived not from the latter clause, “The Lord called to Samuel,” as might appear, but from “Samuel was lying” itself, which would otherwise precede “the lamp of God.” “Lying” means training in stripping away sensory perception, for bodily sensations cease in prophets when they prophesy, as Rambam explains in chapter 7 of the Laws of the Foundations of the Torah and other books. The prophetic disciples prepare themselves for prophecy by stripping away perception. Thus “Samuel was lying” without sensory perception, preparing himself for prophecy. Scripture says that prophecy came to him then: “The Lord called to Samuel.”

Yad Yehudah - כז

(כז) “In the Lord's temple”: in this interpretation, it refers to Malkhut, called the Lord's temple, as is known, and prophecy through the nonluminous mirror, as explained in Tiqqunim. It is the lower tree, also called the tree of death in several places in the Zohar. Thus “lying,” with sensory perception suspended, applies to this attribute.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(כח) “Similar verses”: there are many such verses whose commentators were compelled to describe as rearranged, with no fixed earlier and later order. Though their account is correct in the plain sense, expound them in a proper sequence and receive reward.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(כט) “Yet it is not reckoned”: the author returns to fear. After criticizing fear of punishments, he says that even a person possessing true fear, fear of the Omnipresent, blessed be He—the entrance and gate to Torah and wisdom, as in “The beginning of wisdom is fear of the Lord," and in the Zohar passage cited above and Tiqqunim—is not reckoned to have attained it unless his intention is to resemble Him through His ways. Above too, in every aspect of the supernal human form in Asiyah, Yetzirah, Beriah, and Atzilut, in every sefirah, there is this fear: each effect fears its cause, up to Ein Sof, blessed be He. This is explained in Reshit Ḥokhmah, Gate of Fear, chapter 8, concerning "Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole human being"; see there.

Yad Yehudah - כט - continued

Yad Yehudah - ל

(ל) "Because this is His will": to perfect oneself in His ways, as commanded, "You shall walk in His ways."

Yad Yehudah - לא

(לא) "For this fear": is the Torah's beginning, as explained in the Zohar passage cited above.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(לב) "In Thought": the Torah ought to have begun with "This month shall be for you," its first commandment, as the Sages said. Yet it preceded the world in His Thought, blessed be He: He desired, for His righteousness, to justify His creatures by their walking in His ways through true fear. He therefore magnified and glorified Torah, beginning with "In the beginning."

Yad Yehudah - לג

(לג) "This is what": He said "My Torah" because, with this intention, it is His Torah in Thought. Thus it is called the Torah of the Lord, and for the same reason perfect, beginning with Genesis and including everything written from Genesis to the beginning of the commandments.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(לד) "This": this fear.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(לה) "Therefore": the verse concludes, "They did not heed My voice and did not walk in it," seemingly redundant, since this is included in abandoning My Torah. Rather, it says that they abandoned My Torah, true fear, and consequently did not heed My voice in the commandments and prohibitions proceeding from it.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(לו) "It is the hope": "They did not walk in it" means that had they held the gate of Torah through true fear, they would certainly have gone from strength to strength, from degree to ever higher degree. This would be their reward, for the reward of a commandment is a commandment. But they did not do so.

Yad Yehudah - לו - continued

Yad Yehudah - לז

(לז) "For it is": concerning this fear the Torah says, "He walked with God," since through it one walks from degree to degree.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(לח) "To fulfill in wealth": for this reason the tanna said, "Whoever fulfills Torah in poverty will ultimately fulfill it in wealth." The intention is fulfilling Torah through true fear, walking in the Omnipresent's ways, like Malkhut, the final he of the Name, which is poor, as is known. Ultimately one ascends until fulfilling it in wealth, in all four letters of the Name, as will be explained.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(לט) "There is no wealthy person": fulfilling it in wealth means rejoicing in one's portion, in being the Lord's portion. Thus Scripture says, "Let Israel rejoice in its Maker," who made Israel His portion. The tanna's intention follows the Sages' statement that the righteous are destined to be called by the Holy One's Name, since His Name befits them as His portion. This is ultimately fulfilling Torah in wealth, in all four letters of the Name, the name by which one is called as His portion, as the author shortly explains.

Yad Yehudah - מ

(מ) "Among the manifest features": "in poverty" refers to Malkhut, called poor because she has nothing of her own, as in many Zohar passages. Therefore the fourth letter of the Name, the final he, is poor and has no vowel point, but in reading follows the first three pointed letters.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(מא) "Esther's turn": an allusion to Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - מב

(מב) "Of herself": this is what "bearing favor" indicates, corresponding to Malkhut above.

Yad Yehudah - מג

(מג) "Scripture testified": she did not aim at favor; therefore it says she "bore favor."

Yad Yehudah - מד

(מד) “One who fulfills”: this explains “Whoever fulfills Torah in poverty,” as already explained.

Yad Yehudah - מה

(מה) “For the righteous are destined”: this too was explained above.

Yad Yehudah - מו

(מו) “If Torah”: this concludes the exposition begun in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - מז

(מז) “Concerning one who withdraws”: incidentally, the author explains the disagreement between R. Shimon son of Yoḥai and R. Shimon son of Menasya concerning “What is crooked cannot be repaired,” showing that they do not disagree.

Yad Yehudah - מח

(מח) “He expounds ‘what is crooked’”: as stated there, “R. Shimon B.M. [so the supplied abbreviation reads] says: only one initially sound who became crooked is called crooked. Who is this? A Torah scholar who withdraws from Torah.”[TN020175]

Yad Yehudah - מט

(מט) “Son of Menasya expounds ‘cannot be repaired’”: [the opening connective is defective] one

Yad Yehudah - מט - continued

who steals or robs can return it and repair the wrong.[TN020176]

Yad Yehudah - נ

(נ) “From both, the matter is completed”: a Torah scholar who withdraws from Torah is also like one who fathers a mamzer, as Solomon explained in “My son, attend to my wisdom” (Proverbs 5). There he compares Torah to the wife of one's youth, “a loving doe,” and its opposite to an alien, foreign woman.

Yad Yehudah - נא

(נא) “Ways of repair”: in “Now, children, listen to me,” and so forth, “Distance your way from her,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - נב

(נב) “According to its place and time”: then he had been driven from his kingship and went from door to door, saying, “I, Qohelet, was king,” and so forth. This was because he transgressed three prohibitions, as the author wrote in Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 9. He therefore included himself in the general statement and explained no repair.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 24

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 25 (כה)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: כח · כז · כו · כה · כד · כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Fear of afflictions,” etc.: that is, the two kinds of fear mentioned in the preceding chapter each divide into two. Now every wise-hearted person will escape all the aforementioned kinds of fear, but will cleave to inward fear. Of this Moses said precisely “His fear”; as for other fears, “Do not fear.”

“The holy keys,” etc.: that is, these external ones.

Rema of Fano

Now it is well to understand and consider that fear of afflictions divides into two: punishments in this world and in the world to come. So too does expectation of reward, namely the benefit of dwelling in peace in this world and enjoying oneself in the world to come. Pleasure likewise comes from wealth and honor in this world, and from exaltation in the world to come—as with Jeroboam's arrogance, mentioned in the chapter Ḥeleq, which drove him out of the world. Henceforth every wise

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Among the letters of YHWH, in the last he are the external keys; the vav is the outer chamber, and the first he is the inner chamber. Consequently, the external keys—the last he—“will be led with gladness and rejoicing” toward the lower governance, which is in Malkhut and the world of Asiyah. For one world corresponds to each letter: corresponding to YHWH are ABYA, Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah. Thus through repentance and external fear one will reach the last he, which is "in poverty"; and this is the service within the Garden, etc.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"They will enter the King's palace," etc.: toward the upper governance, which is in the first three, and its maintenance "in wealth," as stated above, for they are called wealth. "This is the guarding in Eden": vav, with "knowledge" corresponding to vav, "understanding" to he, and "insight" to yod. This is "in wealth": the linking of the last he with the first three letters. For there are three numerical orders within the mystery of AIQ BKR: units, tens, hundreds. Afterward there is the order of thousands, corresponding to the four worlds ABYA. In the world of Atzilut there is complete unity, as He said, "I am the Lord; that is My name, and My glory I shall not give to another." In the world of Beriah below it, it is appropriate to speak of ten; in the world of Yetzirah, of a hundred; in the world of Asiyah, of thousands. Through occupation with Scripture one repairs the world of Asiyah; through Mishnah, the world of Yetzirah; through Gemara, the world of Beriah; and through instruction [horaʾah], the world of Atzilut.

"Behold, the singular one"

Rema of Fano - continued

person will escape all the kinds of fear we have mentioned, of which it is written, "Moses said to the people: Do not fear." But with these two he will make an alliance, as the verse there concludes: "So that His fear may be upon your faces" (Exodus 20:16). Precisely "His fear": the holy keys, which may appropriately be called external in relation to what lies within them. For these external ones will be led with gladness and rejoicing toward the lower governance, to which the tanna alluded in speaking of maintaining the Torah in poverty. This is the service within the Garden: just as He is gracious, so you must be gracious, and everything of that kind. From there, one in a thousand will merit to be like his Master with the internal keys: they will enter the King's palace, toward the governance of the Most High and the maintenance of the Torah in wealth. This is the guarding within Eden, with knowledge, understanding, and insight.

With this, the verse "The Lord God took the human" will be understood: He took the Shekhinah with him, "and placed him in the Garden of Eden, to serve her and to guard her" (Genesis 2:15). Thus the use of the feminine works well in its plain sense. We will speak further of this in Part II, chapter 17. Concerning these, certainly, they said that the merit of the many is preferable. For of a thousand who enter Scripture, a hundred of them enter Mishnah, and ten of them enter Gemara; behold, the singular one from among them and within them alone will attain instruction [horaʾah], for he will say, "Behold, this is our God." Such is his office in the court above, and the of the ten "will attain instruction": according to the Gemara, this refers to the supernal mysteries, not literally to issuing rulings. For if you do not say this, but understand literal rulings, a difficulty arises: why did it not say, "From ten one emerges to issue rulings"?[TN020180] For one who has attained the discussions of Abaye and Rava, and of Rav and Shmuel, etc.—why should we not say that he has attained qualification to rule? Rather, it is certainly as we said: the statement concerns the supernal mysteries, not ordinary instruction.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"They begin at the he": this is explained by what I wrote above in chapter 22. Fear without qualification is the Oral Torah, hence intermediate for every person but small for Moses, since Moses is the Written Torah. Therefore he says, "To enter with them the outer courtyard," namely the vav, the Written Torah, the attribute of Jacob, the Glory [Tiferet] of Israel. "As far as the upper he": this is the first he in the Name, the complete, internal fear we mentioned. "From there, humility is bound with fear": the initial letters of ʿanavah qetira bi-deḥilu form ʿQB, in accordance with "At the heel [ʿeqev] of humility is fear of the Lord." That fear is no small matter for Moses, but intermediate.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Now it is well,” etc.: the author returns to the exposition of fear.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “With these two” aspects of fear “he will make an alliance” and strive to make his path exact: external fear, whose essence and root are in Malkhut, and internal fear, which is Binah, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “The holy keys,” etc.: in the chapter Bammeh madliqin, Rabbah bar Rav Huna said: Any person who possesses Torah but does not possess fear of Heaven resembles a treasurer who has been given the internal keys but has not been given the external keys: by what means will he enter? Rabbi Yannai proclaimed: Alas for one who has no house but makes a gate for a courtyard! The author explains the matter according to what was established in the Zohar and Tiqqunim: external fear corresponds to the last he in the Name, which is fear of the Lord, that is, Malkhut, the lower he, as stated in the Zohar passage we transcribed in the preceding chapter. In the Tiqqunim, Tiqqun B”G [as supplied], they joined this to it, in these words: “Because she is the fear that comes forth from within Torah, which is the middle pillar,” namely YQW [יק”ו, as supplied], righteous man will hold to his path in the court below. For if you do not say this, what have those ten whom you said enter Gemara lacked in their apprenticeship, such that they are not qualified to issue rulings? They called the repeaters of teachings “destroyers of the world” only when they issue rulings from Mishnah or from undifferentiated Gemara (Sotah 22a), that is, from recited learning, whether the Mishnah taught by Rabbi or the baraitot arranged by his disciples after him. When a practical ruling emerges by the method of these repeaters, without further examination and appraisal, we do not listen to them. All these are included among those who enter Mishnah: they have not served scholars sufficiently and have not set mishnayot against one another to establish the matters thoroughly through dialectical inquiry. Such a person we call one who has learned but does not reason.

Rema of Fano - continued

But one who has attained the discussions of Rav and Shmuel and the other masters of Gemara, such as Abaye, Rava, and their colleagues, and has served Torah scholars extensively—why should we not say that he has attained qualification to rule? He has learned, like “the wise man,” and reasons, like one who “knows the interpretation of a matter.” Certainly, even if others explain a matter to him and he understands it, he is included among those who have read Scripture, studied Mishnah, and served scholars. Why should he not judge or issue rulings? Rabbi Eliezer the Great never said anything in his life that he had not heard from his masters; could anyone imagine that he had not

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

that is, Tiferet, the vav in the Name YHWH. It also hints at the righteous one, K”T [כ”ת, unclear], who is humility. These are its words: “Humility is bound with fear, as it is written, ‘At the heel of humility is fear of the Lord.’ For this humility, which is the upper Shekhinah, has fear of the Lord as its heel. This is the degree of Moses, of whom it is said, ‘The man Moses was very humble.’ For this reason, that fear should be here is a small thing in relation to Moses.” Thus far the quotation. [TN020181]

Concerning Ḥokhmah, the yod in the Name, the Zohar, Qedoshim, says: “Yod—fear of the Lord, which is holiness, is,” etc. [The following words, “צריכות” and the clause about “windows,” are damaged or unclear.] The author called external fear, from Malkhut to Tiferet, “the external keys.” Heaven forbid [that they should be understood as the evil fear mentioned in the preceding chapter]. Rather, it is fitting for these holy keys to be called external in relation to the yod and upper he, which are internal, as he goes on to explain at the end of the section.[TN020182]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Toward the lower governance”: Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “To which the tanna alluded” when he said,

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

"Whoever maintains the Torah in poverty," as he explained in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) "This is the service within the Garden": that is, concerning this Scripture said of Adam, "He placed him in the Garden of Eden, to serve her and to guard her." It speaks of the two aspects separately: "to serve her" corresponds to the Garden, and "to guard her" to Eden. The Garden hints at Malkhut, as is known. [The next words, "ובכיה חייך," are unclear.] "To serve her" means that he too should become like her, in the manner of "Just as He is gracious," etc. See above, chapter 23. [TN020183]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "And everything of that kind": just as He is merciful and holy, and similar expressions.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "From there, one in a thousand," etc.: in Vayiqra Rabbah and Qohelet Rabbah they said of the verse "One man in a thousand I found": In the ordinary course of the attained qualification to rule? Heaven forbid. Rather, it is certainly as we have said. Let the wise hear and increase learning from what we have been helped to establish correctly in this exposition, in many places in this treatise.

Rema of Fano - continued

The discerning will shine in reconciling Rabbi Yannai's words and Rashi's explanation in the chapter Ba lo (Yoma 72b) with the words of Rabbah bar Rav Huna in the chapter Bammeh madliqin (Shabbat 31b). For the external keys begin at the lower he: fear without qualification, neither inaccessible nor far away, but intermediate for every person and a small thing for Moses. With these one enters the vav, the outer courtyard, Torah without qualification. Within it the internal keys are kept, as far as the upper he, which is complete fear; from there, humility is bound with fear. This is certainly no small matter even for Moses, but a great matter for the people as a whole; for him it was intermediate and attainable. Yet these are still keys with which to enter the inner courtyard: the yod in the Name, truly called primordial Wisdom, to appear before the Ancient of Days, hinted at in the upper tip of the yod. There is the great fear, above which there is none.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

world, a thousand enter Scripture; a hundred emerge from them. A hundred enter Mishnah; ten emerge from them. Ten enter Talmud; one emerges from them to issue rulings. This is what is written, "One man in a thousand I found." Yet it is astonishing how to apply this literally to the many—that one of the thousand brings his learning to the point of being fit to rule. What was lacking in the training of those who entered Gemara with him, such that a man should not issue rulings when he comes [to that stage], as he says shortly? Therefore he explains that the statement is "from there": it concerns the supernal mysteries, in which one of the thousand merits through his Torah the internal keys, as he concludes.[TN020184]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "Toward the governance of the Most High": the first three attributes, concerning which they said, "In the end he will maintain it in wealth," as explained in the preceding section.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) "This is the guarding within Eden": concerning it "to guard her" was said. Eden is a designation for the first three, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) "He took the Shekhinah with him": the word et comes to include this.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) "Thus the use of the feminine," in the he of le-ʿovdah and le-shomrah, "works well." At first sight it has no suitable place, for it should have said le-ʿovdo and le-shomro, since gan, "garden," is masculine. But according to his approach it works well, referring to the Shekhinah hinted at by the word "Garden." They must serve her—accomplish her service within the Garden—and guard her within Eden, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “Concerning these”: the upper keys. That is, the merit of the many—those thousand who enter Scripture and merit the upper keys—[the wording “דרבים כינאו” is unclear], for only one of them will merit the internal keys.[TN020185]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “Will attain instruction”: the author adopts the wording of the commentators, who explained “Ten enter Talmud; one of them emerges” as concerning rulings in the revealed teachings. The author says, according to his own approach as well, that the one will attain instruction: to show “These are your gods” and “Behold, this is our God” in the academy above, and also to instruct in the internal keys in the academy below. The author also wrote thus in responsum 116, which we will transcribe shortly.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “For if you do not say this,” but propose to interpret “Talmud,” etc., literally, a difficulty arises: why should not all those ten who entered Gemara be qualified to issue rulings? Once they have [advanced beyond] Mishnah and mastered the full course of the Gemara's questions and dialectical discussions, they can certainly rule from their learning. Our sages in Sotah called the repeaters “destroyers of the world” only regarding those who never entered into the Gemara's dialectical reasoning. But those who did enter Gemara certainly count as having learned, reasoned, and served sufficiently, and are fit to rule—even if one is not as accomplished in dialectic or as sharp as his fellow. So wrote the commentary Yefeh To’ar, Vayaqhel. It likewise explained the sages' description of Rav Yosef as “Sinai” and Rabbah as “an uprooter of mountains”: each possessed both Mishnah and Talmud, but Rav Yosef had greater breadth of knowledge and Rabbah greater sharpness. See there.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “He has learned, like ‘the wise man,’” etc.: the wording of Qohelet Rabbah is: Another interpretation: “Who is like the wise man?”—this is a Torah scholar. “And who knows the interpretation of a matter?”—one who knows how to explain his Mishnah.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “Rather, it is certainly as we have said”: the words concern instruction in the supernal

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

mysteries through the internal keys. These are the author's words in the responsum there: “We have already explained [the words ‘דבקדושי כי עני תורה’ are corrupt or unclear]. Through it a person can issue rulings, yet he is still included among the aforementioned instructors, but [the purpose is] to magnify Torah and make it glorious, in the service of this master,” etc. “Of the thousand who all enter Scripture, the one of whom it will be said that he has attained instruction is he who has merited to see and to show in the supernal mysteries. [The continuation is severely corrupted: it appears to speak of those who have heard and of a deficiency, then ‘Behold over us, our king … among their mighty ones,’ followed by ‘and rely … on Your unifications’; the syntax and intended quotations cannot be recovered from this supplied text.] And the like is disclosed in the enduring apprehension.” Thus far the quotation.[TN020186]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “The discerning will shine,” etc.: in Yoma, the chapter Ba lo, Rabbi Elazar said, adjacent to Rabbi Yoḥanan's statement: What is meant by “Why is there a price in the hand of a fool,” etc.? Woe to Torah scholars who occupy themselves with Torah but have no fear of Heaven! Rabbi Yannai proclaimed: Alas for one who has no courtyard but makes a gate for his courtyard! Rashi explained: Darta means courtyard; “but makes a gate for his courtyard” means that Torah is only a gate through which to enter fear of Heaven, and therefore fear of Heaven must precede it. This requires reconciliation: why does Rabbi Yannai say here, “Alas for one who has no courtyard,” whereas in the chapter Bammeh madliqin he says, “One who has no house”? Also, why does Rashi explain here the reverse of his explanation in Bammeh madliqin, where he wrote that fear of Heaven resembles the external keys? The author says that according to his approach everything is properly reconciled, with an interweaving of reason and knowledge. The discerning will know that Rabbi Yannai in Bammeh madliqin speaks of fear of punishment, from Malkhut to Tiferet, and therefore says, “Alas for one who has no house”: he has not even a house, since he lacks even external fear. Therefore Rashi wrote that fear of Heaven resembles the external keys: this is what is lacking here. “But makes a gate for his dwelling” means that he occupies himself with Torah, which is a gate to the house. But in Ba lo he speaks of internal fear, and therefore says, “Alas for one who has no courtyard.”[TN020187]

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “For the keys,” etc.: now the author explains from below upward.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “At the lower he”: Malkhut, and from it as far as Tiferet.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “And a small thing for Moses”: of this fear our sages said, “Is fear then a small matter? Yes: in relation to Moses it is a small matter,” as explained in the aforementioned Tiqqunim.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “With them one enters the vav” in the Name: Tiferet. There is Torah—the Torah written in this Name. Of this Rabbi Yannai said, “And a gate for his courtyard.”

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “As far as the upper he”: Binah, the complete, upper fear.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) In the aforementioned Tiqqunim they said, “Humility is bound with fear,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “For him it was intermediate”: fear has degrees, as stated there. Fear of the Lord without qualification, which is below it, is a small thing in relation to him.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “The yod in the Name”: as explained in the aforementioned Zohar, Qedoshim.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “To appear,” etc.: that is, the word yir’ah here has the sense of seeing, “to appear before the Ancient of Days,” which is the supreme Keter, the upper tip of the yod, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “And there”: in Keter. There is great fear even for Moses.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 25

Heqor Din - Part I (א) - Chapter 26 (כו)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג

Yoel Moshe - 1

“And called Adam, numerically equivalent to the full Name,” etc.: that is, the Name of forty-five in its expansion with alefs. It is also “full YH, the letters Elohim” [the wording is unclear].[TN020189] “The plain sense of the word”: that is, Adam, from the expression “I shall resemble the Most High.” “The commandments of the Garden were withdrawn from him”: as stated above in chapter 25, “to serve her and to guard her.” External fear is the service within the Garden, in poverty; “to guard her” is internal fear, in Eden, called “in wealth.” See above.

Rema of Fano

Have we not known, if we have not heard, that our first father was formed with the full Name and called Adam, numerically equivalent to the full Name? The plain sense of the word is “I shall resemble the Most High” (Isaiah 14:14). He neglected the Torah in wealth, and by being expelled from the Garden of Eden he was permitted to neglect it in poverty, for the commandments of the Garden and the intellectual apprehensions of Eden were withdrawn from him. Of David too it says, “They have driven me out from sharing in the Lord's

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Of David too it says,” etc.: because he was a reincarnation of Adam the first. Therefore David said, “Had Your Torah not been my delight, I would then have perished in my poverty.” That is, through Adam's sin he consequently neglected it in poverty; then I would have perished. Examine this carefully.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“So too we find Solomon,” etc., as far as “Jeremiah came,” etc.: the Zohar at the beginning of Tetzavveh explains that he is the letters YRMYH, from whom the letters YHW were lacking, and he maintained it only in poverty, namely the last he. He was a reincarnation of Solomon, and Hillel too was Solomon's reincarnation. Scripture hints at this in “For the Lord your God will exact [yashsheh]”: YSH? [יש”ה?, as supplied] forms the initials of Jeremiah, Solomon, Hillel. Although Hillel was a reincarnation of Moses—as hinted in “Moses … before the eyes of all Israel,” whose final letters form HLL, and also in the verse “He shall be a mouth for you,” whose initials form HYLL, and “He shall be for you as a servant” [the supplied abbreviated wording is “הי”ה ל”ך ל”עב”], whose initials form HLL, as stated in Megalleh ʿAmuqot—Solomon too was a spark of Moses.[TN020190] Solomon took a thousand wives, and of Moses it is written, “One in a thousand I found”: this is Moses. Likewise, what we say of Rabbi Tarfon, that he betrothed a thousand women, concerns this same mystery. Jeremiah too is a spark of Moses, as it is written, “A prophet from among you like me inheritance, saying: Go, serve other gods” (1 Samuel 26:19). Since a covenant is established with the lips, it is written, “David came to the summit [ha-rosh]” (2 Samuel 15:32); as they expounded (Sanhedrin 107a), he sought to worship but did not worship. Afterward he maintained it in poverty, as it is written, “In my poverty I have prepared for the house of God” (1 Chronicles 22:14; Jerusalem Talmud, Peah, fol. 21a). Likewise, King Messiah is initially crushed because of our iniquities, but is destined to maintain it in wealth, as it is written, “The spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him” (Isaiah 11:2).

Rema of Fano - continued

So too we find Solomon sitting upon the throne of the Lord; afterward he neglected it in wealth, until he was driven from his kingdom and neglected it in poverty. Jeremiah came and neglected it in poverty, as it is written, “I am the man who has seen poverty” (Lamentations 3:1). In his days the warning given to Solomon in his tranquility was fulfilled: “If you indeed turn away from following Me” (1 Kings 9:6), “This house shall be elevated” (1 Kings 9:8), which we will explain shortly. He too maintained it in poverty, never ceasing throughout his life to protest and rebuke. Hillel the Babylonian likewise maintained it in poverty; afterward he became nasi of Israel in the Second Temple period and maintained it in wealth.

The commentators needlessly strained the verse we mentioned, “This house shall be elevated” (1 Kings 9:8), and took it out of its plain sense. For they said in the chapter Ḥeleq (Sanhedrin 96b), “The Sanctuary rose; they trod upon it from

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

He will raise up for you,” etc., hinting at Jeremiah: Moses saw them in their tranquility and Jeremiah in their recklessness. Likewise, one of the seventy-two Names, MHSh [מה”ש], has the letters of Moses [MShH]; with the inclusive unit, [its value is that of] the letters HLL.

“From David's words to the woman of Tekoa,” etc.: David took her; he said this to the woman, and Absalom, who was suspended by his hair, was born from him [so the supplied text reads]. [TN020191] “You have gone up, all of you, to the rooftops”: the priests took the Temple keys in their hands, as below.

“Evil consumes itself,” etc.: that is, “and it consumed their foundations” refers to the foundations of the fire. Once the fire had completed its work by kindling fire in Zion, it was immediately annulled and consumed. But the foundations of the city of Zion were never burned, as it is written, “Lay it bare, lay it bare, down to the foundation in it”—down to, but not including it. How much more the walls of the Temple, which departed to a place where the enemy's hand has no dominion: God took them to Himself. This is “When the Lord returns the return of Zion”: He will restore it to us. Hence “the Sanctuary rose” upward. What it says, “They trod

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

upon it from Heaven," seems to mean they trod on it and it [came] down; but it does not refer to the Temple, only to "treading" incidentally. For the Omnipresent has many agents: they brought stones and built something in the shape and pattern of the Temple. The enemies imagined they had burned the Temple, but in truth they burned only the likeness.[TN020192]

"For this is the name by which the foreigners will call it": the foreigner cannot direct his intention toward the upper Sanctuary, but only toward the sanctuary of King Solomon, which he made with his intention, whatever that intention may have been.

"He too will be told of kinds of happiness": that is, "Happy is the person," etc., is said of him because he directs his intention toward the paths in the hearts of the dwellers of Your house—the righteous, who are themselves the palace of the Lord—even though they themselves [the persons relying upon them] cannot direct their intention toward these intentions in themselves. This is like "God of Meir, answer us": that gentile did not know how to direct his intention toward the holy Names Rabbi Meir possessed for deliverance from the dogs. The gentile simply said, "God of Meir"—with all of Rabbi

Rema of Fano - continued

Heaven." Prophetic words always come with the utmost precision to establish the truth of the revealed account. Go and learn from David's words to the woman of Tekoa: "As the Lord lives, not a hair of your son's head shall fall to the ground" (2 Samuel 14:11). The words reach Absalom, who was suspended by his hair, as is known. There are many such instances, as we shall mention in Part II, chapter 13.

Here the understanding of the statement is completed by what is explained in the Zohar, Pequdei (Zohar II, 240b), concerning the foundations of Zion and Jerusalem: they were concealed, and the enemies had no dominion over them. We have a hint of this in Scripture: "What is the matter with you now, that you have gone up, all of you, to the rooftops?" (Isaiah 22:1). As for what is written, "He kindled a fire in Zion, and it consumed her foundations" (Lamentations 4:11), the meaning concerns the foundations of that external fire: evil consumes itself, and the completion of its mission is its annulment, as will be explained. If this is so for the city's wall, how much more for the Sanctuary itself! For the holy stones departed miraculously, to be raised aloft in a place beyond the reach of any hand. "The house was elevated" in its literal sense, for "the Sanctuary rose." The sages explicitly said that even the Temple keys were taken from the priests' hands by a palm of a hand that descended.

What the rabbis said, "They trod upon it from Heaven," refers to the verse, which testifies that what "the Lord trod" was merely a "winepress," for the crown-

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Meir's intention, whatever its particulars—"answer us."

"Moreover, it is written bnti [בנתי]": an expression of understanding: I understood how to direct my intention in the Sanctuary toward the upper Sanctuary. This is "I understood for my fellow from afar": toward the Temple far away in heaven, with "fellow" in the sense of brothers and companions.

"Israel should direct their intention toward this," etc.: that is, even though they cannot direct their intention toward all the intentions and mysteries of the sublime, supernal secrets in prayer, as established by the Men of the Great Assembly, they should nevertheless direct their intention generally toward the intentions of those who established it, facing the upper Sanctuary.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) "Have we not known," etc.: the author returns to expounding "Whoever maintains the Torah in poverty," etc., which he mentioned in the preceding chapters.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) "With the full Name": as it is written, "The Lord God formed the human." The name Adam itself also indicates this: its numerical value is forty-five, like the Name YHWH expanded with alefs: יו"ד

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

ה"א וא"ו ה"א. Since he was created with the full Name, we know [that he belonged] to governance in the attribute of wealth—the first three, internal fear, as explained in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) "The plain sense of the word Adam" is the expression "I shall resemble the Most High": just as He is gracious, etc. This is the attribute of poverty, fear, Malkhut, as stated. Both of these things were in him, the two kinds of fear shining upon him. Afterward, when he neglected the Torah in wealth, his punishment was to neglect it in poverty too. [The connective "וכשנצל זה" is unclear.] He was expelled from the Garden of Eden, which hint at these two fears, as stated in the preceding chapter.[TN020193]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) "Of David too," who was a reincarnation of Adam, "it says: They have driven me out," etc. Like him he was expelled, through Absalom, and neglected the Torah in poverty. Afterward, to repair what he and his incarnation had made crooked, he maintained it in poverty, which is his attribute, as in "For I am poor and needy": he has nothing of his own, as is known from the Zohar.

Rema of Fano - continued

stones were raised aloft over His land. The Omnipresent has many agents, male and female demons, and they brought heaps of stones, lime-burnings, to satisfy that wicked man's eye. This is borne out by the precise wording addressed to him: "You burned a house already burned" (Sanhedrin 96b). There is a further inference from "six covered wagons" (Numbers 7:3), which endure forever, together with the Tabernacle's planks and fittings. This was the good news given to Solomon after his prayer: enemies would not have dominion over the work of his hands, by virtue of his intention and thought, while the house was being built, being directed toward the upper Sanctuary.

Consider his first words: "The heavens and the heaven of heavens cannot contain You; how much less this house that I have built" (1 Kings 8:27). He attached the limitation to himself: because it is a structure built by flesh and blood, it is too small to contain the glory of the Shekhinah. Concerning the foreigner too, when he sought mercy that God should hear and answer him by virtue of the consecrated house, he said, "To know that Your name is called upon this house that I have built" (1 Kings 8:43). For the foreigner will call it by this name: "The sanctuary of King Solomon."

This is like the meaning of "Happy are the dwellers of Your house" (Psalm 84:5), and "Happy is the person whose strength is in You," etc. (Psalm 84:6). It does not say "dwellers in Your house," but "of Your house," for they themselves are the palace and throne of the Lord. As it is written, "This is my God, and I will make Him a dwelling [ve-anvehu]"

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) "Likewise, King Messiah," who is also a reincarnation of Adam, as is known from our sages, first repairs the sin of his incarnations by maintaining the Torah in poverty, as it is said of him, "Poor, and riding upon a donkey." In the future he will repair further by maintaining it in wealth.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) "As it is written" of him, "the spirit of the Lord": the Name YHWH, which includes the attribute of wealth.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "So too we find Solomon": what happened to him and his incarnation was like what happened to Adam the first and his incarnations. Initially he was of the attribute of wealth; therefore it is written of him, "He sat upon the throne of the Lord," and our sages said that he ruled in the upper and lower realms. Afterward he neglected the Torah in wealth, and finally neglected it in poverty. Jeremiah came and repaired this.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "And he too maintained it in poverty," since he was his reincarnation, as stated in the writings of the Ari, of blessed memory. See also the commentary on Avot there, [the supplied reference reads "כל"קצ"ל" and is unclear], section 24. [TN020194]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “Hillel the Babylonian,” who was also a reincarnation of Solomon, peace be upon him, repaired further and maintained it both in poverty and in wealth.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “The commentators,” etc.: in passing, the author explains the verse “This house shall be elevated” (Kings 9).

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “And took it out of its plain sense”: some explain the word yihyeh, “shall be,” as hayah, “was”; others explain ʿelyon, “elevated,” as an expression of cutting down, like “through the lowering of hands.” See Rashi and Radak. All this is strained.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “For they said,” etc.: that is, ʿelyon is literal. Scripture hints that at the time of the destruction the house will be elevated: it will rise upward to the firmament. As stated in the chapter Ḥeleq concerning Nebuzaradan: He kept killing until he reached the Sanctuary. He set fire to it. The Sanctuary rose; they trod upon it from Heaven, as it is said, “The Lord trod a winepress,” etc. His mind became arrogant. A heavenly voice came forth and said to him, “You have killed a people already killed; you have burned a Sanctuary already burned,” etc.

Rema of Fano - continued

(Exodus 15:2): I shall be a dwelling for Him, to complete the likeness for the glory of the Shekhinah. What is written of it? “Glory shall sing to You and not be silent” (Psalm 30:13). They too, in their righteousness, “will yet praise You, Selah.” “Happy is the person whose strength is in You”: he too will be told of kinds of happiness when his trust is in the Lord, even if he does not merit to be himself a chariot. Rather, the paths of his strength and trust are in the hearts of the dwellers of Your house. For otherwise it should say “in his heart”; rather, it is as we have said. This is in the manner of “God of Meir, answer me” (Avodah Zarah 18a), spoken by someone who did not know how to direct his intention beyond that measure.

But when Solomon prayed for Israel going out to war, he did not mention “this house,” but “the house that I have built for Your name.” Moreover, it is written bnti [בנתי]: authority belongs to the transmitted consonantal text. The meaning is that he understood his thought from afar [ben le-reʿi me-raḥoq]: this is the Temple above, which he saw and in whose pattern he acted. Therefore he added “for Your name”: the lower building and the contemplation of the upper one were both for the sake of Heaven, not out of pride or arrogance, Heaven forbid. Israel, a wise and understanding people, should direct their intention toward this so that their prayer may be accepted. When he sought mercy for the exiles of Israel, he said, “They shall pray to You toward their land,” etc., “and the house that You have built [read: I have built] for Your name” (1 Kings 8:48). Here too authority

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “The words reach Absalom”: the words of the woman of Tekoa to the king brought him to mind, and the saying fell into his mouth that none of his hair would fall to the ground. So it was, for he was suspended by his hair.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “Here,” in the verse “This house shall be elevated”: although in the Gemara they spoke only of the Sanctuary itself, their statement is nevertheless supported by what is in the Zohar, Pequdei, page 232: “But the foundations of Zion and Jerusalem were concealed.” See there. [TN020195]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “We have a hint”: as Scripture says, “to the rooftops”; the intention is the firmament.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “As for what is written, ‘and it consumed,’” etc., this does not contradict it. For one can explain that “her foundations” refers to the fire, not to Zion. The meaning is that the fire consumed and exhausted itself upon completing its mission.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) As will be mentioned in the following parts.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “What the rabbis said,” etc., does not mean that they brought it down, nor [does the following wording about ‘above’

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

read clearly]. On the contrary, it explains the statement “the Sanctuary rose”: although it rose upward, below it nevertheless appeared to the enemies as if they had burned it. For they trod belongs to the transmitted consonantal text: bnyt [בנית] is written. For Israel is redeemed only by the merit of the Sanctuary of the Lord established by His hands. “The Lord shall reign forever and ever.”[TN020188]

Rema of Fano - continued

End of Part I.

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

only a winepress from Heaven, and [agents] brought lime-burnings from wall-bricks to satisfy their eyes. The expression “they trod upon it” there refers to Scripture's “The Lord trod a winepress.”[TN020196]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “Which endure forever”: as stated in the Pesiqta.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “This was the good news,” etc.: the expression “shall be elevated” is good news that the enemies will not have dominion over the work of his hands. Even when the house below is destroyed, it will remain built there in its holiness and completeness.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “He attached the limitation to himself”: the words “that I have built” are superfluous, but his purpose in them is to limit the a fortiori argument, attaching the limitation to the builder as flesh and blood. It was not necessary [in itself], since, being built facing the upper Sanctuary, it cannot be confined by this a fortiori argument. This is his meaning: “How much less this house that I have built” below, which I, flesh and blood, have built. For that reason he did not say “that I have built for Your name,” as he said at the end.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “The sanctuary of King Solomon”: named after his building of it.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “This is like the meaning of ‘Happy,’” etc.: Solomon's intention here is to say: Please hear, Lord, the foreigner's prayer, and let the good intention by which he directs himself toward my house benefit him too. He knows that I am its builder, even though he does not know how to direct his prayer toward the upper Sanctuary. This matter is like what Scripture says, “Happy are the dwellers,” etc. (Psalm 84), as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) Ve-anvehu is an expression of naveh, “dwelling.” The commentators explain: I shall make

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

Him a dwelling. According to our approach, the meaning is: I shall be a dwelling for Him.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “To complete the likeness” above: the Shekhinah is called the palace of the Lord, as is known. The righteous complete this likeness, for an awakening below brings an awakening above; therefore [he continues as follows].

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) As it is said of the Shekhinah, “So that glory may sing to You”: the intention is that the Shekhinah, called Glory, will sing to His exalted name and not be silent. Here too he concludes concerning the righteous, “They will yet praise You, Selah.”

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Happy is the person whose strength is in You; paths are in their hearts”: he said this (there) intentionally. Likewise, happy is even the person who is not so completely righteous as to be wholly a chariot and throne of the Lord, provided he is fit to be [attached] to the completely righteous. This is “paths are in their hearts”: he began in the singular, “Happy is the person,” and concludes in the plural, whereas he should have said “in his heart.”

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) Rather, “in their hearts” certainly refers to the preceding verse, to the rank of the dwellers of Your house. The meaning is: happy is the person who is only paths toward what is in the hearts of the dwellers of Your house. These are the completely righteous, who themselves are the house of the Lord, and they know beforehand [or: first] with correct intention. This righteous person, who does not know so well how to serve the Lord as they do, will nevertheless also be blessed. This is like the two buildings Solomon built.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “This is in the manner of” what is in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah: Rabbi Meir said to that guard, “Say, ‘God of Meir, answer me,’ and you will be delivered.” That guard did not know how to direct himself toward the divine intention; he simply said, “God of Meir, answer me,” with the same intention Rabbi Meir intended [the closing words “היו שכינתא” are unclear].[TN020197]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “But,” etc.: this completes the earlier discussion.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “When he prayed,” etc.: as it is written, “When Your people go out to war,” etc., “and pray to the Lord toward the city You have chosen and the house that I have built for Your name.” He omitted the word “this” and added “for Your name” to indicate his contemplation of the upper Sanctuary, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - לא - continued

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “Moreover”: why is it also written bnti [בנתי], lacking a yod? To hint at this matter: it derives from ben, and means that he built it above.[TN020198]

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) “Bnyt [בנית] is written,” lacking a yod: to indicate that the intention is the building above, which You, Lord, have established, by whose merit Israel will be redeemed. As it is written, “The Sanctuary, Lord, that Your hands established; the Lord shall reign forever and ever.” Now may the Lord's power be magnified, as You have spoken, saying—speedily in our days, amen.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - I - Chapter 26

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 1 (א)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Printed annotation: 1 · 2

Yad Yehudah

“In the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah.” There, in the Mishnah: “At four periods the world is judged: at Passover concerning grain; at Shavuot concerning the fruits of the tree; at Rosh Hashanah all who enter the world pass before Him like bene maron, as it is said, ‘He who fashions their hearts together, who understands all their deeds’; and at the Festival they are judged concerning water.”

In the Gemara: “Whose view is our Mishnah? Neither Rabbi Meir's, nor

Rema of Fano

The course of the discussion in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah is that a person is judged every hour for examination and mere scrutiny, in accordance with Rabbi Nathan; and every day he is judged for visitation, which is a scrutiny encompassing many examinations, in accordance with Rabbi Yose. Each of them states one aspect, and the Sages do not disagree with them. These two measures apply to the perfected, and of them Job said: “What is man, that You should magnify him, and that You should set Your heart upon him?” (Job 7:17); “You visit him every morning; You examine him every moment” (Job 7:18). A king and a

Yad Yehudah - continued

Rabbi Judah's, nor Rabbi Yose's, nor Rabbi Nathan's. For it was taught: ‘All are judged on Rosh Hashanah, and their sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur’ - the words of Rabbi Meir. Rabbi Judah says: ‘All are judged on Rosh Hashanah, and their sentence is sealed, each at its own time: at Passover concerning grain; at Shavuot concerning the fruits of the tree; at the Festival they are judged concerning water; and a person is judged on Rosh Hashanah, and his sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur.’ Rabbi Yose says: ‘A person is judged every day, as it is said, “You visit him every morning.”’ Rabbi Nathan says: ‘A person is judged every hour, as it is said, “Every morning You examine him.”’ [TN030002]

Yad Yehudah - continued

“And if you say that it is indeed Rabbi Judah, and what the Mishnah teaches concerns the sentence - if so, the human being poses a difficulty. Rava said: ‘It is the tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael.’ For the school of Rabbi Ishmael taught: ‘At four periods the world is judged: at Passover concerning grain; at Shavuot concerning the fruits of the tree; at the Festival they are judged concerning water; and a person is judged on Rosh Hashanah, and his sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur.’ What our Mishnah teaches concerns the beginning of judgment.

“Rav Hisda said: ‘What is Rabbi Yose's reason?’ He stated his reason: ‘You visit him every morning.’ What we mean is this: why did he not say as Rabbi Nathan did? Examination is mere scrutiny. Visitation too is mere scrutiny! Rather, Rav Hisda said: Rabbi Yose's reason comes from here: ‘To execute the judgment of His servant and the judgment of His people Israel, the matter of each day on its day.’ Rav Hisda also said: ‘A king and a community: the king enters judgment first, as it community are likewise, as Solomon explicitly said: “To execute the judgment of His servant and the judgment of His people Israel, the matter of each day on its day” (1 Kings 8:59). That is, each and every matter within a single day, consisting of many examinations, is gathered that day into a visitation.

Rema of Fano - continued

Of this comprehensive judgment they said: “No person spends the night in Jerusalem with a sin in his hand” (Numbers Rabbah 21). Concerning this it is said: “On his day you shall give him his wages” (Deuteronomy 24:15), which they interpreted of the reward for a commandment each day, lest his day pass with his offering annulled. They also said: “Every day give Him something corresponding to its blessings” (Berakhot 40a).

We come now to the Sages, all of whom hold that every person is judged on Rosh Hashanah and his sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur, as Rabbi Meir and Rabbi Judah teach their views, and so too the tanna of the school of Rabbi Ishmael. No one disagreed on this point. Concerning what did they disagree? Concerning the judgment of the world in general, as we learned: “At four periods the world is judged: at Passover concerning grain; at Shavuot concerning the fruits of the tree; at Rosh Hashanah all who enter the world pass before Him like bene maron; and at the Festival they are judged concerning water” (Rosh Hashanah 16a). [TN030001]

We concluded that the anonymous Mishnah follows the tanna of the school is said, “To execute the judgment of His servant and the judgment of His people Israel.”’ Why? If you wish, say: it is not proper to seat the king outside. If you wish, say: before wrath increases.

Yad Yehudah - continued

“Rav Joseph said: ‘According to whom do we pray nowadays for the sick and infirm? According to whom? According to Rabbi Yose.’ Alternatively, say: indeed according to the Sages, and in accordance with Rabbi Isaac, for Rabbi Isaac said: ‘Crying out is beneficial for a person, both before the sentence and after the sentence.’”

Rashi explained: “‘And what our Mishnah teaches’ - the four periods - ‘concerns the sentence.’ ‘If so, the human being poses a difficulty,’ for the Mishnah teaches Rosh Hashanah, whereas Rabbi Judah says Yom Kippur. ‘What our Mishnah teaches’ - the four periods - ‘concerns the beginning of judgment’; the person's sentence, however, is on Yom Kippur. ‘What we mean is this’: this is our difficulty. He did not give Rabbi Nathan's reason because he holds that examination is not judgment but an inspection of one's deeds. Accordingly, concerning his own view too you should ask: visitation is mere scrutiny. ‘According to Rabbi Yose,’ who says that a person is judged every day, and one should pray that they judge him favorably and not impose death upon him. For if it were according to the Sages, who say he is judged only on Rosh Hashanah, death has already been imposed upon him." Thus far his words.

Yad Yehudah - continued

The master understands that from Rabbi Nathan we may learn concerning Rabbi Yose. Since Rabbi Nathan necessarily speaks of mere scrutiny, not a sentence, Rabbi Yose too speaks of visitation and mere scrutiny. Rav Hisda's statement that Rabbi Yose derives it from "To execute the judgment of His servant," etc., likewise does not refer to a decisive judgment or a sentence, but merely to visitation. This is indeed the truth, since Job says, "You visit him every morning." The Sages too do not disagree with him, just as they do not disagree with Rabbi Nathan.

Initially, however, Rav Joseph held that the Sages and Rabbi Yose necessarily disagree, and that Rabbi Yose too speaks of a sentence; for if you do not say so, our present prayer for the sick and infirm would accord with no one. But according to what is subsequently said in the Gemara, "Alternatively, say: indeed according to the Sages," etc., the truth is of Rabbi Ishmael, and what it teaches concerns the beginning of judgment. Therefore our Mishnah does not mention that a person's sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur, as the baraita explicitly teaches. On this they disagree: Rabbi Meir does not accept four periods. Rabbi Judah teaches them concerning the sentence, each being sealed at its time: at Passover concerning grain, and likewise all the others. Rabbi Judah holds that the beginning of their judgment depends on Rosh Hashanah, whereas the tanna of the Mishnah removes all of them from the judgment of Rosh Hashanah except the human being.

Rema of Fano - continued

Since we say that what it teaches concerns the beginning of judgment, we must know when the sentence for those three is given. In truth, these matters do not require different times to be assigned to them, one for the beginning of judgment and one for the sentence; rather, everything concerning them is decreed at once. A beginning and an end were stated only for the human being, so that if he repents in between, he is forgiven. To establish the Mishnah as contrary to Rabbi Judah, they said that what it teaches concerns the beginning of judgment, thereby excluding Rosh Hashanah as the beginning of the judgment of grain, fruit, and water.

Thus, of the four periods, three are both beginning and end, while the human being's period is specifically for the beginning of judgment, since his sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur according to everyone. On that day that they do not disagree, and Rabbi Yose speaks merely of visitation. He and Rabbi Nathan likewise do not disagree, for visitation too is a scrutiny consisting of examinations. Rabbi Nathan merely takes the verse in Job, whereas Rabbi Yose takes the verse "To execute the judgment of His servant," etc.

Yad Yehudah - continued

"These two measures," examination and visitation, apply to the perfected and righteous, with whom the Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting to a hair's breadth; He also scrutinizes their affairs at every moment.

"Likewise" - [gap] - these are the two measures.

"As explicitly stated," etc. For this reason too, "May these words of mine be near to the LORD his God" is placed adjacent to it.

"That is," etc. All the more, it is not Rabbi Yose's ... [gap] ... that he speaks of examinations. [TN030003]

"Of this comprehensive judgment": this is the daily visitation concerning the community. They said in Midrash Rabbah, portion Pinhas, as follows: "Rabbi Judah bar Simon said: Never was a person in Jerusalem with a sin in his hand. How so? The morning continual offering atones for the transgressions of the day, and that of the afternoon atones for the transgressions committed at night," etc., as it is said, "Righteousness lodges in her." The master mentioned that this was

Yad Yehudah - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Abraham was circumcised in the morning, according to some; on it Isaac was bound at the time of the afternoon offering; and on it the second tablets were given, which have endured in our hands, to keep us alive as on this day.

Yad Yehudah - continued

said concerning the visitation of each day's matter on its day. [TN030004]

"Concerning this it is said," etc. That is, so too on the favorable side, concerning the reward of the commandments that a person performs every day, they expounded in Shoher Tov on the verse "Of David, a psalm: To You, LORD, I lift up my soul," and what is written, "On his day you shall give him his wages": "The Holy One, blessed be He, said to David, 'David, why do you lift up your soul to Me?' He said to Him, 'Because I am like a hired worker in Your world, as it is said, "Like a servant who longs for shade, and like a hired worker who waits for his pay." It is written in Your Torah, "On his day you shall give him his wages," and it is written, "To it he lifts up his soul"; therefore, "To You, LORD, I lift up my soul." In the usual way of the world, a worker does work with a householder and requests his wages from him; the Holy One, blessed be He, tells him, "The sun shall not set upon him." Why? "To it he lifts up his soul." We, whose soul depends upon Him - all the more so!'"

Yad Yehudah - continued

The master explains that the purpose is that, through the reward for a commandment the righteous man performs every day, a sin should be atoned for day by day, and he should not need the general atonement dependent upon an offering, lest the day pass and his offering be annulled. See what they expounded in the Zohar, portion Ki Tetze, page 536.

"They also said: Every day," etc. That is, concerning this our Rabbis of blessed memory also said in Berakhot, chapter 6, on the verse "Blessed is the LORD day by day": "Do they bless Him by day, and not bless Him at night? Rather, it tells you: every day give Him something corresponding to its blessings." This is as we have said: to reckon the reward of the blessings day by day in His visitation.

"We come now to the Sages," etc. The master sets out a preface to his answer; he proceeds to explain what stands in the Gemara: "What our Mishnah teaches concerns the beginning of judgment."

Yad Yehudah - continued

"No one disagreed on this point": examination [gap].

"Concerning the judgment of the world in general": since we learned, at four periods, fruit and water.

"On this they disagree": Rabbi Meir does not hold like the Mishnah and the tanna of Rabbi Ishmael, that there are four periods; therefore he teaches, "All are judged on Rosh Hashanah." Rabbi Judah disagrees with Rabbi Meir and accepts four periods, applying the periods to the completion of judgment and Rosh Hashanah to its beginning. He disagrees with the Mishnah and the tanna of Rabbi Ishmael, who hold that the four periods concern the beginning of judgment.

"Concerning the sentence": that is, concerning the completion of judgment.

"He removes all of them from the judgment of Rosh Hashanah": they are not judged on Rosh Hashanah at all, neither at the beginning nor at the completion of judgment, except the human being, whose judgment begins on Rosh Hashanah.

"Since we say," etc. That is, given that we establish the Mishnah's four periods as the beginning of judgment, we must investigate when the completion of judgment occurs for those three, grain, fruit, and water, since our Mishnah does not speak of the completion of judgment. For the human being, it is well: we know from the baraita that all these Sages hold it to be on Yom Kippur. It is not so concerning those three.

"In truth," etc. That is, in truth these three have only one time in judgment, their beginning and end occurring at once.

Yad Yehudah - continued

"To establish," etc. That is, from the statement "What it teaches concerns the beginning of judgment" one cannot infer that all four periods also have a separate time for completion of judgment. Rather, since we hear Rabbi Judah hold that the judgment of these three begins on Rosh Hashanah, they said that what it teaches about the four periods concerns the beginning of judgment, contrary to Rabbi Judah. In truth, however, the Mishnah also agrees with Rabbi Judah's statement that the completion of judgment for these three occurs for each at its own time, because for them the beginning and end of judgment are one, with no different times. It is simply that the Mishnah does not speak of completion of judgment, whether concerning those three, for whom completion is included in the beginning, or concerning the human being, who has a separate time for the sentence. This is likewise evident if we examine the wording of the tanna of Rabbi Ishmael: those three have no separate time for the sentence.

"Thus, the four periods": those mentioned by the Mishnah are not equal, for three of them - grain, fruit, and water - have a beginning of judgment that is also its completion. The Mishnah, which speaks of the beginning, thereby includes their completion as well. This is not so concerning the human being, for whom the Mishnah speaks specifically of the beginning of his judgment, but not of its completion, which according to everyone is on Yom Kippur.

"On that day Abraham was circumcised," etc. Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, wished to confer merit upon Israel by judging them on a day when our ancestors performed good deeds, to recall their merit and thereby vindicate us in judgment. For this reason this day was established for atonement and for atoning, as is known.

"According to some": as found in Pirkei de-Rabbi Eliezer. It derives this from what is written there, "You shall do no work on this very day," and what is written here, "On this very day he was circumcised," etc. It concludes that every year the Holy One, blessed be He, sees the blood of our father Abraham's covenant of circumcision and atones for Israel's sins, etc. This excludes what is said in Genesis Rabbah on "Knead and make cakes": "This tells you it was Passover"; that was on the third day after Abraham's circumcision.

Yad Yehudah - continued

"On that day Isaac was bound": as is known from the saying of our Rabbis of blessed memory.

"On it the second tablets were given": this too is known from the words of our Rabbis of blessed memory, that the last forty days ended on Yom Kippur. Moses then received the second tablets, and it was said to him, "I have forgiven according to your word."

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Every hour for examination," etc., through "he is judged for visitation," etc. That is, from the wording of Scripture: "You visit him every morning; You examine him every moment."

"Concerning the judgment of the world in general," etc. That is, concerning grain, water, and the fruits of the tree.

"The tanna of the Mishnah removes them," etc. That is, the tanna of the Mishnah, who teaches that the world is judged at four periods, excludes them all - grain, water, fruit - entirely from the judgment of Rosh Hashanah. Rather, each is judged at its own time, and only the human being on Rosh Hashanah. All this concerns the beginning of judgment. If so, we must know when their judgment is completed. For the human being, it is well: the baraita says that their sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur. This is not so for grain, water, and fruit, which are mentioned only in the Mishnah, and it speaks of the beginning of judgment. He answers that the truth is that everything concerning them occurs at once, the beginning and completion all together.

"Contrary to Rabbi Judah, they said, R.," etc. That is, Rabbi Judah holds that even grain, fruit, and water begin their judgment on Rosh Hashanah, and R. comes to say that the human being alone begins judgment on Rosh Hashanah. [TN030005]

"The second tablets" correspond to Jacob, for there are 172 words in the Ten Commandments, and the Ten Commandments are Jacob. Therefore Eliezer gave Rebekah two bracelets, ten of gold, a beka in weight; and three there [?] - this alluded to the Ten Commandments and the two tablets, while beka alluded to Jacob together with ten of gold. Therefore the Written Torah alludes to vav, Jacob's attribute. This also explains the verse “His hand grasped Esau's heel”: do not read “his hand” (ve-yado), but “and yod” (ve-yod); thus he is called Jacob. It appears so to me, Moses; examine it carefully. [TN030006]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Historical summary from the index of the 1698 printing; this is not the beginning of the author's words.

Explanation of the discussion in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah, that a person is judged every day and every hour, and that concerning this it is said, “On his day you shall give him his wages.” They also said, “Every day give Him something corresponding to its blessings.” It explains the tannaim's views concerning a person's judgment on Rosh Hashanah and his sentence on Yom Kippur, and when the sentence concerning grain, fruit, and water is given.

Historical summary from the index of the 1698 printing; this is not the beginning of the author's words. - continued

Historical summary from the index to the Yoel Moshe commentary in the 1649 printing; this is not the beginning of the author's words.

When the judgment of fruit, water, and grain is completed. The second tablets correspond to Jacob. The allusion in what Eliezer gave Rebekah.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 1

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 2 (ב)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Since,” etc. The master raises the question that Ran asks there concerning “At four periods the world is judged,” etc. His words are: “It is difficult for me: since a person is judged on Rosh Hashanah, surely they judge him concerning all that happens to him - his grain, fruit, and other affairs. Since that is so, everything is judged on Rosh Hashanah. It was answered for me that three things are judged for the whole world at the three times taught in our Mishnah. Hence this is how we read: the Torah told the community to bring, at these times, things that procure favor concerning them, each at its time. But on Rosh Hashanah all who enter the world pass before Him

Rema of Fano

Since grain, fruit, and water exist only for the human being, we too may ask: perhaps everything is decreed on Rosh Hashanah and sealed on Yom Kippur, as we said concerning the judgment of the human being, and as Rabbi Meir holds in all matters. For what practical purpose, then, does this anonymous teaching state Passover, Shavuot, and the Festival? Ran answered that these things are judged at those times for the entire world, while on Rosh Hashanah they are apportioned among individuals. This is correct.

It is also possible that everything said concerning a person's judgment concerns himself in general, in respect of children, life, and sustenance, all of which depend upon mazal. On Rosh Hashanah, however, it is decreed concerning them whether the person one by one, and his share in these things is decreed for him.” Thus far his words.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It is also possible” to answer the question differently. Namely, on Rosh Hashanah a decree is made concerning the person in this world, in respect of children, life, and sustenance, only in general, not in detail as to whether his bread, water, and fruit in the field will be blessed. For it is possible that it be decreed concerning the person that he should be judged favorably, while the decree ... concerning grain with blight, fruit with rot, and water with drought, each at its time. Then the hand of the LORD will not be too short to fulfill the decree of sustenance concerning the person through miracles, as will be explained below. [TN030009]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"All of which depend upon mazal." That is, although these three do not depend upon merit - so that we could say that the decree of Rosh Hashanah, which follows a person's deeds and merits, causes them - but rather depend upon mazal, as they said in the Gemara, nevertheless the judgment of Rosh Hashanah affects them: whether they reduce for the person what is due to him according to mazal, or complete it for him. This will be explained below, at the end of chapter 28, where the master says: "Thus mazal performs its function, and the judgment of Rosh Hashanah is joined to it, to reduce what was decreed for one who emerges wicked in his judgment, and to complete for the righteous what mazal indicates," etc.; see there.

"One who merits both tables": favorable mazal and a favorable judgment on Rosh Hashanah, whereby it is decreed to complete for him what his mazal indicates, is called inscribed for life.

"Even in the last year," in which he will die: if he has filled his days and years in that year according to the

Rema of Fano - continued

deserves to have his allotment completed or reduced, as below in chapter 28. One who merits both tables, and whose allotment is completed abundantly, is called "inscribed for life" year after year, even in the last year, as will be explained, since he has filled his days and years. [TN030007]

Yet "man does not live by bread alone." For if, throughout the forty years when our ancestors were in the wilderness, blight had been decreed for grain, rot for fruit, and drought for water, there is nevertheless no doubt that on every Rosh Hashanah of those years it was written and sealed concerning Israel that they should eat heavenly grain to satiety and drink from Miriam's well. Conversely, it is related of the days of Rabbi Johanan that once four seahs cost a sela, yet many were swollen from hunger for lack of an issar.

Knowledge of the opposites that have already occurred before us thus requires us to say that the judgment of the human being is one thing and the judgment of grain another. Water and fruit are likewise. Go and learn from the carob tree and spring of water provided in the cave for Rabbi Simeon and his son Rabbi Eleazar, in the chapter Bammeh Madliqin. In such a case we certainly do learn from miraculous events, which are among the special workings of the supreme providence over all human ways, proceeding from Him who is great in counsel and abundant in action.

There is no respect in which grain differs from water and fruit except that indication of his mazal, he is called decreed for life in that year, since it was decreed that the indication of mazal be completed for him.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Yet," etc., explains the matter. It means that the decree concerning a person in the judgment of Rosh Hashanah, even if for life, nevertheless does not necessitate the LORD's blessing upon grain, fruit, and water. The wilderness generation proves it: they ate manna for all forty years, without food for themselves in the arid land. What difference would it make if grain had been judged favorably or unfavorably on all those New Years? Either way, the inscription in the book of blessing and sustenance which Israel received on those New Years was fulfilled through heavenly bread, miraculously. This is what is written, etc.: "He fed you manna," etc., "to make known to you that man does not live by bread alone, but by everything issuing from the mouth of the LORD man lives." Its meaning is as we have said. The same applies to fruit and water. Thus Rosh Hashanah does not make the judgment of the person identical with that of grain and other things.

"Conversely," etc. That is, just as it is possible for a favorable judgment concerning the person to be decided on Rosh Hashanah while grain is judged unfavorably, so the reverse is possible: the decree concerning the person's sustenance may be unfavorable and that concerning grain favorable, as related in "25 of Bava Batra," from the days of Rabbi Johanan, etc. [TN030010]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Knowledge of the opposites": when we know the opposites that occurred before us, when grain was cheap yet many were swollen from hunger, and similar cases, this knowledge requires us to say that the judgment of the person is separate, etc.

"In the chapter Bammeh Madliqin": it is stated there, "They went and hid in a cave. A miracle occurred: a carob tree and a spring of water were created for them."

"There is no respect," etc. That is, with regard to what has been stated, fruit

Rema of Fano - continued

it undergoes two judgments. At the Passover before sowing, it is judged concerning sowing and growth; at the Passover before harvest, it is judged concerning ripening and being gathered safely into the house. Its principal judgment, however, concerns the grain in the fields while it stands in its stalks: whether it will be blessed for eating and for sowing. In this it resembles all the others. Nevertheless, in the end it is consequently judged twice.

The reason may be that grain differs because it is the principal means of life. This also accords with the view that the fruit through which the first Adam sinned was wheat. It was called a tree because of the strength of its planting, which yields its fruit in its season, as will shortly be explained. Then it was said to him: "Cursed is the ground because of you" - as in "They ate of the produce of the land" (Joshua 5:11). He judged the food hidden in the earth. It was also said to him: "By the sweat of your face you shall eat bread" (Genesis 3:19). He judged it after its growth too, subjecting it to many labors. [TN030008] and water are equal to grain. There appears, at first sight, to be a difference because grain is judged twice, as said there in the Gemara on the Mishnah, "At Passover concerning grain": "Which grain? If you say the grain now standing, when was it judged concerning all the adventures that have befallen it? Rather, it is the grain that will be sown. Does this mean it undergoes one judgment? But was it not taught: Grain that suffered an incident or accident before Passover was judged in the past; after Passover it is judged for the future," etc. Rava said: "Infer from this that it undergoes two judgments." Even here, however, there is no difference between grain and fruit or water.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Its principal judgment, however," etc. That is, although they said it undergoes two judgments - on Passover the standing grain is judged, as is the grain to be sown afterward in Marheshvan; and on the following Passover the standing grain sown the previous Marheshvan is judged, so that it is judged twice - nevertheless the principal judgment is only one judgment: that concerning the standing grain. When it is judged concerning ripening, that is, whether it will be fit for eating, it is also judged as to whether it will be fit for sowing as wheat, since they are rolled together from the sowing ... in this way [?], so that even the judgment concerning sowing is included in the judgment concerning ripening, and all is one judgment. [TN030011]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"It resembles all the others," fruit and water. Yet

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

since they are necessarily distinct judgments, it appears that it is judged twice, and for this reason they said it undergoes two judgments. In truth, however, the principal judgment is one judgment, as mentioned.

"This also accords," etc. That is, we find this in the judgment of the first Rosh Hashanah, when the first Adam was judged: grain too was judged twice in it, as he concludes.

"With the view": in Sanhedrin, chapter Ben Sorer, and in Genesis Rabbah, portion Bereshit, that it was wheat, and it was judged in that judgment.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It was called a tree”: although wheat is only an ear of grain, it was nevertheless called a tree because of the strength of its planting. The tree required a strong planting because of the fruit it would yield in its season, for that wheat was very large and already prepared, as it will be in the future. This comes from Genesis Rabbah there: “Rabbi Samuel bar Rav Isaac asked Rabbi Zeira: ‘Is it possible that it was wheat? But it is written “tree”!’ He answered him: ‘It towered like the cedars of Lebanon.’” This resembles what our Rabbis of blessed memory expounded in the last chapter of Ketubbot on the verse “May there be abundance of grain in the land”: “In the future wheat will tower like a palm.”

Further there, in Genesis Rabbah: “Rabbi Nehemiah and the Sages differed. Rabbi Nehemiah said: He said ‘Who brings forth bread from the earth’ because He has already brought forth bread from the earth. The Sages say: ‘Who brings forth bread’ concerns what He will in the future bring forth as bread from the earth, as it is said, ‘May there be abundance of grain in the land.’” That is, as they also expounded in the last chapter of Ketubbot on this verse: “In the future the land of Israel will produce ready-made loaves.” Rabbi Nehemiah holds that this was also so before the sin. The words of both are true, and this too will be explained in the next chapter.

“As in ‘They ate of the produce of the land’”: its meaning is “of the grain of the land.” This is “because of you” with the yield, namely grain: the grain that is sown and still ... in the soil [?], that it should be cursed ... every growth of blessing [?], and not be decreed ... on the day of eating [?], as he explains in the next chapter. Here is one judgment. [TN030012]

“He judged it”: the food, after its growth too. This is the decree concerning what stands and needs preparation, as it is written, through many labors: prepared loaves, which now require many labors for threshing, grinding, and baking. [TN030013]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Only for the human being,” etc. That is, they were created for the human being's need. If so, we may ask whether everything is judged on Rosh

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Hashanah, in accordance with Rabbi Meir, who does not accept four periods, as above in chapter 1. Ran answered that on Rosh Hashanah it is apportioned among individuals, to each what is fitting for him.

“It is also possible”: that is, another answer. Even though a decree is made concerning the person himself generally at Passover, Shavuot, and the Festival, nevertheless on Rosh Hashanah they judge the person as to whether he is worthy to have completed for him what was decreed concerning him. [TN030014]

“Even in the last,” etc. ... in the last lip [?], before his death, it too is called “days,” since he has filled his years. [TN030015]

“Yet man does not live by bread alone,” etc. That is, sometimes much grain is decreed, yet many are swollen from hunger; and sometimes drought, blight, and mildew, yet they are full and well, satiated with every good thing, as with Israel in the wilderness through heavenly grain. This is called knowledge of the opposites, the opposite that hinders, for the judgment of the person is separate and the judgment of grain is separate; likewise fruit and water are separate.

“We learn from miraculous events”: that is, although in the case of Rabbi Simeon ben Yohai it was a miracle, nevertheless in a case such as this we learn from it. [TN030016]

“There is no difference” between grain and other things except that grain undergoes two judgments, k-sh.

“It was called a tree”: that is, when they said it was wheat, why was it called a tree, which implies a tree? Rather, it was called a tree because of the strength of its planting.

“Because of you”: that is, concerning the grain still within the ground, namely before growth; “by the sweat of your face,” after its growth - two judgments.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 2

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 3 (ג)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"This too," etc. That is, just as grain was impaired in the first Adam's judgment, discussed in the preceding chapter, so, correspondingly, it will be blessed in the future, in the days of the Messiah, and return to its first blessing, which it had in abundance before the first Adam's sin. In passing, the master explains their statement that the land of Israel will in the future produce ready-made loaves.

"For it is from the precious yield," etc. That is, that the land of Israel will in the future produce loaves is something reason requires. Since the sun ripens the luminous grain, as it is said, "From the precious yield of the sun," and we already know that the luminaries were diminished from what they were at the beginning of creation, surely when they return to their first magnitude the power of ripening grain will also increase, to the point of loaves baked and properly prepared, as before the sin. This will be explained below. [TN030019]

"According to Jonathan

Rema of Fano

This too, corresponding to that, has been promised to us for the days of the Messiah: "May there be abundance of grain in the land" (Psalms 72:16). They expounded it (Ketubbot 111 b): "In the future the land of Israel will produce ready-made loaves and garments of fine fabric." For it is "from the precious yield of the sun" (Deuteronomy 33:14). The luminaries were already diminished through the first sin, and the sun came to stand at one of 343 parts of what it had been, according to Jonathan ben Uzziel; we shall recall him again.

The great luminary lacks the strength to ripen the grain, which remains only in the condition of initial formation. This is the reason for the name hittah, lacking a nun, with the dagesh indicating it. When the luminaries return to their former state, the wheat's outer covering, from which bran comes, will ripen thoroughly, while the flour within will have its parts joined together rather than separate. All together it will be, as at the beginning, a beautiful loaf as long as the heads of the ear. The measure of each loaf will be one tenth of an ephah, for it is written, "at the head of mountains" (Psalms 72:16), as in "From the first of your dough you shall raise a hallah offering" (Numbers 15:20). [TN030017]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

ben Uzziel": in three places which I shall recall again, in Em Kol Hai, Part I, chapters 25 and 78, and in Ha-Ittim, chapter 13. [TN030020]

"It lacks strength": apart from the sun after the diminution, to ripen the grain thoroughly as is fitting.

"In its work": then it was in that state of initial formation which preceded the diminution, and this is now its completed ripening. [TN030021]

"This is the reason for the name hittah": from hantah, except that nun is missing. In its place comes the dagesh in tet to complete the missing nun, for such is the indication of dagesh everywhere. Because in the chapter of the first Adam's sin the wheat from which he ate remained at the stage of initial formation, it is therefore called hittah.

"When the luminaries return," in the future, "to their former state," to the magnitude they had before the sin, as Scripture says, "The light of the sun shall be sevenfold," and as

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Jonathan ben Uzziel says there, there will then be nothing new under the sun when grain returns to its nature before the sin: producing properly prepared loaves through thorough ripening. Even the outer covering will ripen well, and the flour will not have separate particles as ... in the Garden of Eden [?], but will be joined together; all will be a beautiful loaf, as at the beginning before the sin. This also explains the view that it will tower like a palm, since it was so before the sin, as mentioned in the preceding chapter. [TN030022]

"One tenth of an ephah": the amount of dough liable for hallah.

"For it is written": "May there be abundance of grain in the land, at the head of mountains."

"As in 'From the first of your dough you shall raise a hallah offering.'" From here our Rabbis of blessed memory learned that hallah is called "first," and is called a heave offering. Here too the stalk is so called, in "at the head of mountains." The meaning accordingly will be: "May there be abundance of grain in the land," that it should produce loaves; "at the head of mountains," suitable for "first" and for a heave offering. This is

Rema of Fano - continued

It is called an omer after the gathering into sheaves, which alone will complete the work, leaving it ready to eat, just as bread is called pat among us after baking and the division preceding it, from a large kneading into pieces, thick loaves, so as to separate from them a whole hallah. The omer is one tenth of an ephah, and the ephah one tenth of a kor. Thus the first and the last nature, acting as the Omnipresent's emissary for the sake of His great name, shaped a form according to the Torah for the heave offering and the tithes: it itself is a hallah, a complete loaf, as we have said. This is what our Rabbis intended when they expounded "In the beginning": for the sake of hallah, for the sake of tithes, first fruits.

This is what we learned: "One who counts is praiseworthy," for this was the original intent: to separate from the loaves one in a hundred, ten as a tithe, all of them whole, not fragments. "One who measures is more praiseworthy than he," so as to offer from the best; "one who weighs is more praiseworthy than all three," so that the priests' portion may tip the pan of the balance.

The tenth-measure, however, is forty-three eggs and one fifth of an egg. These are 216 fifths, in the mystery of "my cup overflows" - revayah, that is, 216 and he. Remove nine fifths, the hallah measure, which is one in twenty-four: or, "light," remains, after "The commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes." [TN030018]

The Holy One, blessed be He, will

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

the measure liable for hallah, one tenth of an ephah, as explained in the Gemara in Eruvin: the verse "From the first of your dough" speaks of the wilderness dough.

"It is called an omer," as it is written, "The omer is one tenth of an ephah," after the work of gathering, binding and collecting the ears of grain. At that time gathering alone will be the completion of work, and no other labor will be needed. As they also said there in the Gemara: "Perhaps you will say, I have the trouble of harvesting it? Scripture says, 'Its fruit shall shake like Lebanon,'" etc.; see there. It was thus before the sin.

"Just as bread": it is named after baking and after the division preceding baking. A large kneading and mass of dough must be divided into large pieces called geritzin in the language of the Mishnah. After this division and the baking it is called pat; the same applies to omer.

"So as to separate from them," etc., refers to what he said above, that the measure of each loaf is one tenth of an ephah. That is, to separate hallah from a whole mass of dough just as it is, for every loaf is liable for hallah. It is not so now: dough that stands ...

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

in the hallah [?] must afterward be broken and divided into pieces. [TN030023]

“The omer,” etc. That is, every loaf also has a measure suitable for the heave offering and tithes, for an omer is one tenth of an ephah and an ephah one tenth of a kor. As our Rabbis of blessed memory say in several places, an ephah is three seahs and a kor thirty seahs. Thus the omer is one hundredth of a kor, and one can separate by means of whole loaves the measure of heave offering and tithes required for a kor, without breaking them apart.

“Thus the first nature”: before the diminution of the luminaries; and the last nature, in the future, when they return to their former state.

“Shaped a form”: the

Rema of Fano - continued

likewise increase the strength of the silkworm, whose wondrous exemplary life-events our Rabbis mentioned. The one visible to everyone is the allusion to the resurrection of the dead, the rays of glory, and the wings that will be renewed for them like eagles'. Then it will make itself a large house entirely of pure silk, which will open of itself when its work is complete, as the worm emerges into the air of the world. “Its head-opening shall be within it,” as it is written, “at the head of mountains.” It resembles the making of the robe: “He prepares, and the righteous will wear it.”

According to everyone, in any case, a person is judged on Rosh Hashanah, on which he was created, and his sentence is sealed on Yom Kippur. It comes at the culmination of the ten days, which are a judging congregation for the intermediate who have not merited, and are also a rescuing congregation for those who have merited through them, as mentioned. We shall now begin with what was said concerning this.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

particular hallah measure, namely a loaf of an omer's size.

“Whole”: needing no subsequent division into pieces.

“They expounded,” in Genesis Rabbah: “‘In the beginning’: for the sake of three things the world was created - for the sake of hallah, for the sake of tithes, and for the sake of first fruits. What is the reason? ‘In the beginning God created’; ‘first’ means none other than hallah,” etc. The master says that the reason for this exposition - that the world was created for these three things more than for others - is that the world's nature before the sin was to bring forth the hallah measure for the heave offering and tithes. This is a very wondrous matter. Therefore they said that the world was created for these three things, for nature itself indicated this by producing a measure suited to them.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“This is what we learned,” in Terumot, chapter 4: “One who counts is praiseworthy; one who measures is more praiseworthy than he; and one who weighs is more praiseworthy than all three.” The master explains, on the basis of what was said, that counting is praiseworthy because this was the intention at the beginning of creation: the earth produced prepared, whole loaves so that a whole measure suitable for the heave offering and tithe could be separated by number. That is, one in a hundred, the measure of the heave offering from the tithe, and ten in a hundred for the first tithe.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“One in a hundred”: so it should read, not “two in a hundred,” for that is the measure of the great heave offering by rabbinic ordinance. This Mishnah is taught concerning the heave offering from the tithe and the first tithe. For concerning the great heave offering we learned in chapter 1: “One does not separate it by measure, weight, or number.”

“One who measures is more praiseworthy than he”: having explained the beginning of the Mishnah, the master also explains its end.

“The tenth-measure, however,” etc. Since he is discussing hallah, the master gives a reason for the measure of the dough and the measure of hallah. He says that the omer, one tenth of an ephah, is forty-three eggs and one fifth of an egg, as explained in the halakhic authorities. When we put this into uniform units, namely fifths, it is 216 fifths.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In the mystery of ‘my cup overflows.’” That is, kosi, my eating, as in “one who chews wheat” in Berakhot. Revayah means 216 fifths, alluded to by the letter he.

“Remove nine”: from these 216 fifths, nine fifths, which is one in twenty-four, for nine times twenty-four equals 216, and one in twenty-four is the hallah measure, as explained in the Mishnah, Hallah, chapter 3. There remain 207 fifths, the numerical value of or, “light,” corresponding to 207 worlds, the number of or, explained in the Zohar, portion Terumah, page 294, on the verse “For a commandment is a lamp and Torah is light.”

Its words are: “‘And Torah is light’: it illuminates that lamp and kindles it from the side of the primordial light, which is the right,” etc. “Beneath the concealed upper throne dwell those worlds, from the side of that right. They are 310:207 on the right side and 103 on the left side. Those are 310, and these the Holy One, blessed be He, continually prepares. From these spread many, many treasuries of delight, all hidden away for the righteous to take delight in them in the world to come. Of these it is written, ‘To cause those who love Me to inherit yesh, and I shall fill their treasuries’; and of these it is written, ‘No eye has seen, God, besides You,’ etc. Yesh: these are 310 worlds hidden beneath the world to come. Those 207 on the right side are called primordial light, for the left light too is called light; but the primordial light is ... and nourishes [?], to produce offspring for the world to come. If you say, for the world to come and no more: rather, it is for Him every day as well, for were it not for this light, the world could not endure,” etc. “This seed, however, never ceases. Similarly, ‘Torah is light’: Torah is thus continually sown in the world and produces offspring, and they ... and it never ceases. From its fruit the world is nourished.” See there. [TN030024]

Concerning these 216 worlds which produce fruit in the future through Torah and commandments, of which it is written, “No eye has seen,” etc., the master expounded “The commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes.” That is, the LORD's commandments are what increase the power of 216 worlds, the numerical value of barah, “pure,” and enlighten the eyes in the world to come concerning the reward of which it is said, “No eye has seen,” etc. See further in the Zohar, portion Bereshit, page 175. [TN030025]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The Holy One, blessed be He, will likewise,” etc. After explaining the loaves in the aforementioned saying, the master now also explains the garments of fine fabric that our Rabbis of blessed memory said the land of Israel will produce. He says the intention is that the Holy One, blessed be He, will increase the silkworm's strength, so that instead of the small house it now builds, it will in the future make a large, spacious house, suitable for a human being to wear. This is their statement that the land of Israel will produce garments of fine fabric: the silkworm will then make a garment for a human being to wear.

The reason for this designation and great comparison is that the house it builds now alludes to the latter house it will build in the future. Thus all the affairs of this worm serve as an example concerning the world to come, as our Rabbis mentioned of its wondrous example. This is in the Zohar, portion Vayishlah, page 213, whose words are: “‘Do not fear, worm Jacob.’ What is a worm? No creature in the world is like this silkworm, from whose side ... [?] all royal garments of splendor come forth. Afterward it sows its seed and dies; afterward, from the seed remaining from it, it endures as formerly, and thus it continues in existence. So Israel are like this worm: although they die, they will return and endure in the world as formerly.” [TN030026]

“The one visible to everyone,” etc. That is, the aforementioned example is visible to everyone: certainly the allusion to the resurrection of the dead, as in the cited Zohar. It also alludes to the rays of glory which the Holy One, blessed be He, will restore to Israel, as our Rabbis said in Lamentations Midrash on the verse “In fierce anger He cut off every horn of Israel”: “There are ten horns,” etc., “and all were placed upon Israel's heads. When they sinned, they were taken from them,” etc. “When will He restore them to their place? When the Holy One, blessed be He, exalts the horn of His anointed, as it is written, ‘He will give strength to His king and exalt the horn of His anointed.’”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

It likewise alludes to the wings that will be renewed for them, as our Rabbis said in chapter Heleq: “During those thousand years in which the Holy One, blessed be He, will renew His world, what do the righteous do? The Holy One, blessed be He, makes them wings like eagles', and they float upon the face of the waters,” etc.

The nature of this worm indicates an example of all these things. It is indeed one of the wonders of Him who is perfect in knowledge, blessed be He. Thus the natural philosophers have related to us in their books concerning the worm something to which the senses testify and whose nature is visibly seen: [gap] the silkworm, living and crawling, feeds on the leaves of the tree livneh, called tut. It is nourished by them, growing until it reaches its proper full measure of growth. Then, because its belly is exceedingly full with abundance, its appearance gleams and shines, for the skin of its face radiates. After growing as it should, it makes around itself a house of silk the size of an olive. There it is enclosed and hidden until the day of its death. After its death wings are renewed for it, it lives anew, is fruitful and multiplies, and gives life to its ... and seed [?], for the preservation of the species. Thus the sages who write of the natures of living creatures; see there. [TN030027]

Since the LORD has wrought wonders in this worm's nature beyond those of other living creatures, thereby showing the example of resurrection, rays of glory, and wings that He will renew for them, as mentioned, it is no wonder that we should say of the house the worm regularly makes throughout this world that it will then become very large for the righteous. Especially since all the wonders indicated by the worm will then be fully realized, there is nothing new in this worm, as mentioned, except that it will then make a large house like clothing for the righteous, in place of the small house it made in this world.

“Then it will make”: the worm.

“Its head-opening shall be”: that of the house.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“As it is written, ‘at the head of mountains.’” The sense of the verse is: “May there be abundance of grain in the land,” that it should produce fine-fabric garments, silk clothing, “at the head of mountains,” whose head-opening will be within it.

“It resembles the making of the robe,” concerning which it is written, “Its head-opening shall be within it.”

“According to everyone,” etc. Having completed these expositions, the master returns to the first matter, above in chapter 1, that all the Sages hold that a person is judged on Rosh Hashanah, as mentioned there. The reason is that the first Adam was created on it, as is known.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“At one of 343 parts.” For Scripture says, “The light of the moon shall be sevenfold, like the light of the sun.” “Sevenfold” means seven times seven, which is 49; seven times 49 is 343, as in the translation of Jonathan ben Uzziel; see there. [TN030028]

“The great luminary lacks strength”: it is the sun, as it is said, “From the precious yield of the sun.” Now that the sun has been diminished, the grain remains only in the state of initial formation. In hittah the nun is missing; the indication of the dagesh indicates [?] the missing nun. And afterward, that is, this whole matter is as follows: hittah has numerical value 22, and hantah has value 72. For the Zohar writes of the mystery: the lamp strikes and brings forth fifty lights, paths. These are the fifty gates of Understanding. Afterward it strikes and brings forth twenty-two paths, lights. This alludes to twenty-two witnesses; K.G. [כ”ג, possibly “High Priest”]; breastplate, twelve; ephod: a total of 72. [TN070001] Its light comes from this, which is the Name of 72. The twenty-two paths are the Name of 22, the name T.D.H.D., the face of the name YHWH. [TN030029]

This is the mystery of our saying on Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, “And so” (u-ve-khen): its numerical value is 72, corresponding to the Name of 72. And Y.T.V., twenty [?] - why does it allude to the Name of 72 in this manner? For first the lights come, twenty, corresponding to the three occurrences of u-ve-khen; afterward the twenty-two paths correspond to the b-b of u-ve-khen, all three occurrences of u-

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

ve-khen. This is the mystery, and this is 52 in the mystery of hittah; hantah amounts to 72 and 22. [TN030030]

“For it is written, ‘at the head of the mountains,’” etc. That is, harim has the sense of a heave offering, and consequently “at the head” too has the sense of “the first of your dough.” It is called an omer, as Scripture says, “The omer is one tenth of an ephah,” after gathering into sheaves, just as bread is called among us after division: it is three, a piece [?], and not whole. But the omer is whole, and a loaf is one tenth of an ephah, so that the tithe and heave offering will be whole. Therefore he says: “Thus the first nature,” before the sin of the first Adam [?], and the future one in the world to come. [TN030031]

“As the Omnipresent's emissary,” etc., so that it should be whole; therefore the Torah ... see there. [TN030032]

“The tenth-measure, however,” is forty-three eggs and a fifth; it is the measure 135 [?], the numerical value of hallah. These are 216 fifths, in the mystery of R.Y.H., that is, Y.R., Y.V., he; that is, he is a fifth. [TN030033]

“One who counts is praiseworthy,” etc. See K.A., M.A., chapter 24: “one who understands” is Gevurah, weight is Hesed, measure is Tiferet. [TN030034]

“Remove sixty fifths,” the hallah measure: or, “light,” remains, which is 206, after “The commandment of the LORD is pure,” which is 206, “enlightening the eyes.” In the name, that is, K.K., on the verse “enlightening the eyes,” numerical value ... Thus he wrote in S.G., chapter 50, as follows: “In the portion ‘And it shall be, if you listen’ there are three occurrences of YHWH; as far as ‘You shall place’ there are 72 words, and the Name is of 72, corresponding to it. Conceive each name YHWH in your mind as circles: three for yod, three for he, and sixty for each of twenty k-h-v [?]; thus 24 circles

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 3

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

for each, and all together 72. These circles are twenty-eight [?], in the likeness of a human eye. Upon each circle are three crowns, thus three eyes of an eye [?], thus 72 crowns. Every YHWH, the combination of all three, yields 216: thus 72 and 216—crowns, combinations [the relation between the figures is unclear]. And Sh.B.R., ‘He said,’ ‘They shall dwell,’ twenty-nine words,” etc.; see there in chapter 4, M.B., as far as “and for each of them a YHWH of eyes.” [TN030035]

As above, except that the last he has only three circles, a small gimmel within it [?]. The number of all the crowns in these three occurrences of YHWH is or, “Light is sown for the righteous”; see there at length. Consequently here too it is so: the fifths amount to 216, the number of the crowns. Remove sixty fifths, that is, the three circles removed from three occurrences of YHWH: these are 450, and your mnemonic is or barah, as mentioned. Just as “light, enlightening the eyes” precisely, for the crowns are like a human eye, as he wrote there; therefore he brought this verse. For this reason too the hallah measure is one in twenty-four. Examine it carefully. [TN030036]

“In the silkworm, whose wondrous example our Rabbis mentioned”: this is in the Zohar, portion Vayishlah, whose words are, “Like this silkworm, from whose side come forth all garments of splendor,” etc., “and it sows seeds,” etc.; see there. This alludes to resurrection, for it dies and afterward lives of itself, and there are elders [?] and wings, etc. All are signs concerning the future. [TN030037]

“‘Its head-opening shall be within it,’ as it is written,” etc. That is, an opening is made naturally and of itself for the righteous man's head to enter. Therefore he says, “He prepares” - the worm - “and the righteous will wear it”: of itself, without any preparation, like the making of the robe.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 4 (ד)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Rabbi Kruspedai said”: there in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah.

“Since he says they are opened on Rosh Hashanah”: he does not say “they are written on Rosh Hashanah,” or simply “there are three books.”

“According to this division”: into three groups.

“Only opening”: which takes place on Rosh Hashanah.

“Do not suppose,” etc. That is, if he had simply said, “There are three books on Rosh Hashanah,” I might have said that there are two kinds of books above. One is made according to the people, to record all their deeds day by day, whether good or evil, as our Rabbis said, “An eye watches,” etc., “sees, and all your deeds are written in a book.” This implies one book embracing all people together, as the master says below in section 12, or one book for each individual. In any event, it is not made according to divisions among deeds, for then one book would not suffice even for a single person.

The second kind is made

Rema of Fano

Rabbi Kruspedai said in the name of Rabbi Johanan: “Three books are opened on Rosh Hashanah: one of the wholly righteous, one of the wholly wicked, and one of the intermediate. Those of the wholly righteous are inscribed and sealed immediately for life; those of the wholly wicked are inscribed and sealed immediately for death; and those of the intermediate remain suspended from Rosh Hashanah until Yom Kippur. If they merit, they are inscribed for life; if they do not merit, they are inscribed for death.” [TN030038]

Rabbi Abbahu said: “What verse is the source? ‘Let them be blotted out of the book of life, and let them not be written with the righteous.’ ‘Let them be blotted out of the book’ - this is the book of the wholly wicked. ‘Life’ - this is the book of the wholly righteous. ‘And let them not be written with the righteous’ - this is the book of the intermediate.”

Rav Nahman bar Isaac said: “From here: ‘Blot me out, please, from Your book which You have written.’ ‘Blot me out, please’ - this is the book of the wholly wicked. ‘From Your book’ - this is the book of the wholly righteous. ‘Which You have written’ - this is the book of the intermediate.” Thus far.

Since he says they are opened on Rosh Hashanah, infer that they are already written according to this division and lack only opening. Do not suppose that according to people's merit and deeds, as appears here from “Three books,” etc.: the righteous people's deeds separately, the wicked people's deeds separately, and likewise those of the intermediate. I might have said that each individual's book is written at the time of the deed, while the books of the three groups are written on Rosh Hashanah when their deeds are weighed. That is, all the righteous people's deeds are then copied from the aforementioned private, individual book and written in one book, and likewise the deeds of the wicked and the intermediate.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Therefore, by saying “are opened,” he teaches us that it is not so. Rather, the books opened on Rosh Hashanah are those very individual books of each person; on Rosh Hashanah, however, they divide into three books according to the remembrance of those deeds, which follows the three divisions of the three groups.

“Below it will be explained”: section 12.

“The words according to their meaning”: contrary to one who holds that the matter of the three books serves only to make the idea accessible to the ear; see there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It has already been noticed,” etc. That is, someone before me already noticed the great difficulty arising from the word “of” in “of the righteous,” etc.

“In these holy sayings”: those of Rabbi Kruspedai.

“Three times twice”: he says the word “of” three times at the beginning, in “Three books are opened: of the righteous, of the wicked, and of the intermediate”; and three more times at the end, in “Those of the righteous are inscribed,” etc. This is certainly puzzling. At the beginning, concerning “are opened,” it works well for all three groups to say “of,” since he speaks of the books that are opened and explains through “of” which book he means. At the end, however, when he says “are inscribed,” referring to the righteous, wicked, and intermediate themselves rather than to the books, there is no reason to say “of.”

“For one who has no palate”: to taste the meaning of the resolution of this difficulty. For us, however, the word “of” is sweet even at the end, as will be explained below, chapters 6-11.

Rema of Fano - continued

two kinds of books stand before Him, blessed be He: one corresponding to what we learned, “All your deeds are written in a book,” as though each person had a separate book written at the time of the deed, whether good or evil; while here it appears that all the righteous are written in one book, the wicked in one book, and likewise the intermediate. That would mean that when a person's deeds are weighed, they are copied from book to book. He teaches us that it is not so. Rather, on Rosh Hashanah the books already written are opened, and the remembrance of all the deeds comes before Him, blessed be He, to judge them for life or death.

Below it will be explained what these books are - the words according to their meaning - and the manner of their initial inscription in one book, and how and when they divide into three books.

The immense difficulty in the word “of,” repeated three times twice in these holy sayings, has already been noticed before us. It works well in all cases with “are opened,” but with “are inscribed and sealed” it has no flavor for one who has no palate. To us, however, it is sweeter than honey and the honeycomb. From it we have learned many meanings of Torah, all true, righteous together. For those who sit before the LORD, its gain shall be holy, a praise offering: to understand and comprehend, in different ways, the truth of this teaching, with the help of Heaven. Let lying lips be silenced, and those who seek the LORD will understand everything.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In different ways”: namely, the eight ways he mentions there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

Since he says “are opened on Rosh Hashanah,” rather than “are written in a book,” infer that they are already written in the book and lack only opening.

“Do not suppose that there are before Him,” etc. That is, b-k-y-h-v-t [?]. It is not a question but a proof that they are already written and are only now opened, as though each person had a separate book. Here, however, it implies that all the righteous are in one book, and likewise the wicked and the intermediate. One would therefore have to force the explanation that “are written” means “are copied,” and this is not in accordance with the established interpretation. He teaches us that it is not so: rather, what was already opened is opened, as will be explained below. [TN030039]

“It has already been noticed before us”: people also ask what is meant by saying “of” three times - “of the righteous,” “of the wicked,” “of the intermediate.”

“It works well in all cases with ‘are opened.’” That is, after saying “three books,” one must say what those three books are; he therefore had to say “of.” But with “are inscribed and sealed” he should have said, “The righteous are immediately inscribed for life,”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 4

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

and the wicked the opposite, without “of.” See there.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 5 (ה)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“The end from the beginning”: to expound something concerning the first Rosh Hashanah.

“On the sixth day of the work of creation”: the world was created on 25 Elul, and Rosh Hashanah fell on the sixth day. Adam was created on it and judged that day.

“In the sense that all are surveyed,” etc. There in the Mishnah: “On Rosh Hashanah all who enter the world pass before Him like bene maron, as it is said, ‘He who fashions their hearts together and understands all their deeds.’” In the Gemara: “They are all surveyed in one survey.” Here too the intention is that “God saw,” in a single survey, “all that He had made” that day, for the first judgment.

“We learned,” etc. That is, the proof that these books were opened on that day of judgment comes from what the Gemara says concerning bene maron: “Here they translated it as

Rema of Fano

The opening of our words in this awe-inspiring exposition will illuminate for us the end from the beginning. For these books were first opened on Rosh Hashanah, on the sixth day of the work of creation, of which it is written, “God saw all that He had made,” in the sense that all are surveyed in one survey. We learned: “On Rosh Hashanah all who enter the world pass before Him like bene maron.” Here they translated it as “like lambs.” They explained it as one bringing sheep into the pen to be tithed.

These words correspond to the prophet's saying (Isaiah 40:11): “Like a shepherd He will tend His flock” - this is in general. The particulars are explicit: “With His arm He will gather lambs” - this is the measure of judgment for the wicked, whose bodily limbs are strong. “In His bosom He will carry” - this is lovingkindness for the righteous, the broken vessels of the Holy One, blessed be He. “He will lead the nursing ewes” - with mercy, for the intermediate. It is written, “He who fashions their hearts together” (Psalms 33:15): in the first Adam's full form, already then He “understood all their deeds,” except that He judges them only each year, ‘like lambs.’” This expression certainly indicates the opening of the three books. For they explained “like lambs” as sheep counted into the pen to be tithed. It is in the manner of Isaiah's saying, chapter 40: “Like a shepherd He will tend His flock; with His arm He will gather lambs, and in His bosom He will carry; He will lead the nursing ewes.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

By saying “Like a shepherd He will tend His flock,” he likens the Holy One, blessed be He, to a faithful shepherd, and Israel generally to His sheep. Afterward he specifies the three groups. “With His arm He will gather lambs” alludes to the measure of judgment for the wicked, for, as is known, the left arm is a designation for the measure of judgment. With it He gathers the strong lambs that can walk on their feet: the wicked, strong in their limbs. “In His bosom He will carry” the weak lambs unable to walk, namely the righteous, weak in strength, sick and infirm, the broken ... of the Holy One, blessed be He. The faithful Shepherd, blessed be He, will carry them in His bosom, drawing over them a thread of lovingkindness. [TN030043]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“He will lead the nursing ewes”: the intermediate [gap], for the word “lead” indicates mercy. See concerning this the portion Ki Tissa. Thus “like lambs” in general alludes to a matter through which the particulars are included. The verse “He who fashions together,” etc., which he brings, must likewise be interpreted of the days of the first Adam, as he concludes. Infer that the books existed then too, as in our Mishnah.

“‘He who fashions,’ etc., on the day ... [?]”: to interpret the verse concerning the first Adam. This is the first Adam in whose full form all souls destined to exist were suspended, one in his head, another in his neck, as our Rabbis expounded in Exodus Rabbah, portion Ki Tissa, on the verse “Where were you when I founded the earth?” Then He understood, etc. [TN030044]

“Alternatively”: that is, the meaning is: “He who fashions their hearts together” from then, all ... the first [?], when He,

Rema of Fano - continued

according to the person's place and time. [TN030040]

Alternatively: “He who fashions their hearts together,” from then; behold, now He “gives understanding” to others, as a transitive verb. The intransitive is “You understood my thought” (Psalms 139:2). It means that He proclaims and makes known concerning all their deeds, through inscription and sealing.

Or their expression “like bene imrana” may be an embellishment from Greek, in which they call a day imra. It would mean that all pass before Him as though created today, in the sense of “Today is the world's conception.” [TN030041]

The three books, however, are what our first father was commanded, warned against, and threatened with, from His mouth, blessed be He.

For His saying, “From every tree of the garden you shall surely eat,” is a positive commandment, the book of the righteous and the granting of their reward. This is the meaning of the doubling: the reward of a commandment is a commandment. All the eating spoken of in this verse concerns Torah and commandments, for had we merited, that eating would have been reckoned for us like eating sacred offerings and putting on tefillin. David, who is alive in the Garden of Eden, now fulfills this commandment day by day; he continually goes forth and returns, to fulfill in himself, “He bore our illnesses and carried our pains” (Isaiah 53:4).

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

blessed be He, saw the deeds of all generations. Now, each year, He prepares and makes known their deeds to those responsible for inscription and sealing, whether for death or for life, for through this their deeds become known.

“As a transitive verb”: that is, mevin is not an intransitive verb but a transitive one, meaning that He gives understanding to others, as in “giving understanding to the simple.” The solitary, intransitive form follows the pattern “You understood my thought from afar”; it should have said l-h-v, and likewise “concerning all their deeds.” [TN030045]

“It means that He proclaims,” etc.: through this He gives understanding to others, by proclaiming and making known, etc.

“Or it may be,” etc. That is, one may also say that in this manner bene imrana indicates the opening of three books on the first Rosh Hashanah: imrana is Greek and means “day,” since in Greek a day is called ... one [?]. The intention accordingly is that on Rosh Hashanah all who enter the world pass before Him, blessed be He, like children of one day, as though created today. It is for them as on the day they were created; here too, now, there is one judgment for them, as he concludes. [TN030046]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"In the sense of 'Today is the world's conception'": meaning, as though the world were created today.

"The three books, however," etc. The master now explains the three books opened on the first day of judgment. He says these are what the first Adam was commanded as a positive commandment, warned against as a negative commandment, and threatened with by a death warning from His mouth, blessed be He, in saying, "From every tree of the garden you shall surely eat; but from the tree of knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat, for God knows that on the day you eat from it you shall surely die," etc., as he proceeds to explain. [TN030047]

The positive commandment is the book of the righteous, who engage in commandments requiring action, and it is fitting that they be credited, for they do not need so much the reward of guarding against a negative commandment. The book of the intermediate is the negative commandment: the intermediate must be especially careful about

Rema of Fano - continued

"But from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat" is a negative commandment, the book of the intermediate, who must be especially careful. It is the granting of their reward, as it is written, "They also have done no wrong; they have walked in His ways." It was for them that it was necessary to say, "One who sits and does not commit a transgression is given reward as though performing a commandment," as will be explained.

"For on the day you eat from it, you shall surely die" is the punishment of transgressions, the book of the wicked.

The plain meaning of the doubling is that through eating from the tree of knowledge his stature was diminished that very day. Dissipation began immediately, and afterward he was given food corresponding to the replacement of what dissipated. His food at first had served to add strength within him and to perfect what was eaten, so that it would become like him. Moreover, through the excellence of his deeds he always had the capacity, without interruption, to add strength to the might above, without limit: as one accustomed to sanctifying the day merits and fills jars of wine. The saying does not depart from its plain meaning, and its hidden meaning concerns the wine preserved in its grapes. The same applies to a fine cloak for one accustomed to tzitzit.

This is "the refined utterance of God," concerning which in a time of wrath it is said, "He cut His utterance," translated negative commandments, and guarding against prohibitions suffices for them in place of their laxness in fulfilling positive commandments. The death warning is the book of the wicked, who transgress even the prohibitions.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"This is a positive commandment": in saying "You shall surely eat," rather than "when your soul desires," as in "You shall spend the money on whatever your soul desires." This alludes to Torah and commandments, as in Midrash ha-Ne'elam; see there. It is like what is written, "Have you found honey? Eat what suffices for you."

"For had we merited," etc. That is, His saying, blessed be He, "You shall surely eat" is not permission but a commandment He commanded concerning eating from the garden's trees. Had we merited that the first Adam eat from the other trees of the garden and not from the tree of knowledge, that eating would have been reckoned for us as a positive commandment, like eating sacred offerings, which is a positive commandment. See below, chapter 17.

"David likewise," etc. That is, furthermore [gap] is the matter with David our anointed, Adam's reincarnation, as is known, who still fulfills this commandment in the Garden of Eden and eats from the garden's trees; the eating is reckoned as a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Who is alive in the Garden of Eden": as said in the Zohar, portion Lekh Lekha, page 232: "Therefore King David lives forever, and even in the days of King Messiah he is king," etc. Our Rabbis said something similar in chapter Heleq.

"He continually goes forth": always from the Garden of Eden, and sits at the entrance to Rome among the poor who suffer illnesses, as said in chapter Heleq, to fulfill in himself, "He bore our illnesses," etc. See concerning this the Zohar, portion Vayaqhel, page 379.

Rema of Fano - continued

as "He tore His purple robe." In a time of favor, the likeness of the righteous is engraved upon it, as we shall explain in Part V. One accustomed to mezuzah merits a fine dwelling, for mezuzah has the numerical value of the four letters of the spoken Name, the palace of the great Name that is not pronounced. [TN030042]

Our first father was destined, through that eating, to go from strength to strength and arrive, in body and soul, at Eden, where there is neither eating nor drinking, only enjoyment of the radiance of the Divine Presence. After the sin, however, dissipation continued every day, and food was no sufficient replacement - all the more when he labored for it - but only supported him for temporary life, until he reached expiration at the end of his days: to restrain transgression, bring sin to an end, and bring everlasting righteousness.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Who must be especially careful": more than the righteous. Guarding against prohibitions is the granting of their reward: they are given reward as though performing a commandment.

"As it is written, 'They also have done no wrong,'" etc. The sage Ibn Ezra explained: "Even those who have not done wrong will be reckoned as having walked in the ways of the Name."

"For them": the intermediate. Since they are not righteous through positive action, it was necessary to say, "One who sits and does not commit a transgression," etc., as our Rabbis said in the first chapter of Qiddushin. The righteous do not need this.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The meaning of the doubling" of mot tamut, "you shall surely die," according to its plain meaning, is that through the eating his stature was diminished, as our Rabbis said in Genesis Rabbah concerning the three things taken from him; see there. Just as his stature was diminished, his natural heat began to diminish through dissipation.

The matter follows what the natural philosophers wrote: natural heat is stronger in a person's childhood, and after growth in stature it weakens. Every day the natural heat decreases and some of it dissipates, as it is consumed at each time and moment, little by little, a little here and a little there, through the pores of discharge. To complete and replenish this deficiency and dissipation, a person and every living creature require food, so that the fine and choice blood formed from it may again sustain and support, as far as possible, the weakened natural heat and diminished blood.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Since no food in the world has the power to produce blood as fine and good as the part that diminishes and dissipates, even after that part is replenished and completed, some distortion that cannot be corrected, and deficiency that cannot be numbered, still remain. It is too small a matter to be perceived. Indeed, the better the food's constitution, the better its replenishment of what dissipated. Nevertheless, even the purest and finest food in the world has only a correspondence and good resemblance to what dissipated, not equality in all its parts. Such equality is impossible, since some difference will always be found between natural things and artificial things made to resemble natural ones.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

They further said that this is the cause of natural death. Even a person or living creature most strong and healthy, robust in its limbs: as the powers of natural heat decrease from youth, little by little, day by day, when those deficiencies become numerous in old age the person increasingly feels the loss, until strength fails, he weakens, expires, and dies. All this is explained at length in their books; see there.

Since this is so, from the moment a person bursts from the womb into the world's air, his life and death are found together: he is born for toil, and to replenish the natural heat that dissipates daily. Since it is impossible to fill the deficiency thoroughly and with complete equivalence, he is necessarily prepared for death immediately, which at the end of his days he will encounter in actuality. This is why the sage Seneca said in his sayings, “We die every day, and when I die I shall cease dying,” indicating this matter. The master says that this explains the doubling mot tamut: one part alludes to the preparation for death, namely the dissipation of natural heat, which prepares death, and the other to death itself. [TN030048]

“Corresponding”: resembling what dissipated, but not equal to it in every respect, so that food is no sufficient replacement, as he shortly concludes.

“His food at first”: before the sin, did not concern replacement of what dissipated, for there was not yet dissipation. His food was from the garden's trees, concerning which he was commanded, adding strength to his perfection through this commandment. It also perfected what was eaten, namely the garden's trees, to become like him in serving Him, blessed be He, as will be explained below in chapter 17; see there.

“Moreover”: he did not need to add strength to his body, but to his perfection, so as to add strength above. As is known, through an awakening below an awakening above is brought about. Thus he always had the capacity to add strength to the might above through the excellence of his deeds.

“As”: our Rabbis said in chapter Bammeh Madliqin, “One careful about mezuzah merits a fine dwelling; one careful about tzitzit merits a fine cloak; one careful about sanctifying the day merits and fills jars of wine.” In passing, the master explains that the intention is also that one careful about these things correspondingly adds strength above. “He merits and fills jars of wine”: although the saying does not depart from its plain meaning, nevertheless in its hidden sense it concerns the wine preserved in its grapes from the six days of creation, mentioned by our Rabbis in tractate Heleq. It alludes to the attribute of Binah, Understanding, as is known. That is, the awakening he effects through careful sanctification of the day brings about an awakening above in the attribute of Binah.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“This is”: the fine cloak of which they spoke is the “utterance of God,” the purple robe of the Holy One, blessed be He, upon which the likenesses of the righteous are engraved, as explained in the Zohar in several places. Of it is said, “He cut His utterance.” The intention here is that one accustomed to tzitzit adds strength to the purple robe above for the LORD's day of vengeance, as will be explained below in Part V, section 8; see there.

Likewise, the saying of our Rabbis, “He merits a fine dwelling,” intends an awakening of the Divine Presence. The name of Adnut amounts to 65, the numerical value of hekhal, “palace,” since it is a palace for the name YHWH. It is therefore called “the palace of the LORD.” This is the fine dwelling, measure for measure, for being accustomed to and careful about mezuzah, since the Divine Presence is called mezuzah, whose numerical value too is 65, as is known.

“The four letters”: of the spoken Name.

“Our first father,” etc., concludes the preceding matter. That is, before the sin the first Adam's food added to his perfection. He was prepared and destined, through that eating, to go from the garden in which he was into Eden.

“Food is no sufficient replacement” for the dissipation, but only supports him for temporary life; all the more when he must labor for food, as he was told, “By the sweat of your face,” etc.

“Until he reached expiration”: this is mot tamut, one part concerning dissipation and one concerning death, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“On the sixth day of the work of creation.” That is, on 25 Elul heaven and earth were created; T.M., the first Rosh Hashanah was on the sixth day of the work of creation, etc. [TN030049]

“‘All that He had made’: all are surveyed in one survey,” etc. He uses this expression because asah, “made,” alludes to sha'ah, “regarded,” “like conception” [ke-herayon, as supplied], and has the numerical value of seqirah, “survey.” This is the mystery concerning Abel: “He regarded Abel,” and concerning Cain, “He did not regard.” [TN030050]

“‘With His arm He will gather lambs’: this is the measure of judgment for the wicked.” That is, their limbs are strong and they must be gathered with an arm, meaning Isaac's left arm, which is judgment. Therefore he says “the measure of judgment,” whereas he could have said simply “this is judgment for the wicked”; rather, he alludes to this matter.

“‘In His bosom He will carry’: lovingkindness for the righteous, the broken vessels of the Holy One, blessed be He,” etc. In this world the righteous are broken and must be carried in the bosom, which is Abraham's lovingkindness.

“‘He will lead the nursing ewes’: with mercy, for the intermediate,” which is Jacob's attribute. This also resolves why he speaks once of lovingkindness and once of mercy: to indicate the three attributes we have mentioned. Therefore Jacob said, “The sheep and cattle nursing their young are upon me.” Rashi explains: to lead them slowly, etc., that is, with mercy.

“Behold, now He gives understanding to others.” The verse means: “He who fashions their hearts together,” from then, namely in the first Adam's full form, in whom all souls were suspended before the sin. “From then” alludes to that moment. “Behold, now He gives understanding” means to others: mevin is transitive, meaning that He causes understanding in others; that is, He proclaims and makes known concerning all their deeds through this inscription.

“The intransitive: ‘I established [?] my thought from

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

afar.’” That is, it is a present-state form and not transitive. [TN030051]

“They call a day imira”: an explanation of bene maron, as though we were created, in the sense of, etc.

“The three books are what he was commanded, warned against, and threatened with.” These three expressions allude ... in these three expressions [?]: it is a positive commandment, the book of the righteous; “warned against,” a negative commandment, is the book of the intermediate, as he says below and as they say in the Gemara, “A prohibition given as a warning,” etc.; “threatened with” is death, a warning of death, the book of the wicked. [TN030052]

“This is the meaning of the doubling: the reward of a commandment is a commandment.” The doubling of akhol tokhel, “you shall surely eat,” indicates that whoever fulfills one positive commandment is as though he had fulfilled two commandments: he performed a commandment and did not commit a transgression. See below, M.A., chapter 22. It is thus evident that the book of the righteous is alluded to in this warning. All the eating in this verse alludes to Torah and commandments, etc.; see there.

“And David is alive in the Garden of Eden and now fulfills,” etc. For David is the first Adam's reincarnation. “He continually goes forth and returns”: see the Zohar, Vayaqhel: he calls all Israel's pains and illnesses to come. See also Zohar Hadash, the portion on “He sent forth the raven,” which was always calling with them in help [?], alluding to Messiah son of David, a small servant through our sins, until “drying up” - this is Tishbi. See “The LORD sent you.” He used these expressions to allude to the verse in which it is written, “the waters dried up,” yevoshet, alluding to Tishbi, who is Elijah the Tishbite; and Messiah is David's reincarnation. [TN030053]

“To fulfill in himself, ‘He bore our illnesses,’” etc. That is, he suffers from our illnesses and pains, etc.

“As it is written, ‘They also have done no wrong; they have walked in His ways.’” That is, “They have done no wrong,” etc.: he did not perform a commandment and did not commit a transgression, but merely sits idle. Scripture accounts it as though "they walked in His ways," that is, as though he performed one commandment.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"The meaning of the doubling": of mot tamut. Through his sin, dissipation began immediately, in ... when his strength was given [?]. Afterward he was given food in replacement of what dissipated, to strengthen his power. At first, by contrast, eating had added strength within him to the strength he already had. It also perfected what was eaten: that is, b-k-s, h-z ... another thing that he ate [?], to raise sparks of holiness through his good intention, for "man does not live by bread alone," as explained above, Part I, chapter 21. Before the sin he always had the capacity to add strength to the might above. [TN030054]

"The saying does not depart from its plain meaning, and its hidden meaning": although it does not depart from its plain meaning, its hidden sense concerns the wine preserved in its grapes, the attribute of Binah. "Preserved" means that it has been entirely removed from the lees, pure and clean, without lees.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"The same applies to a fine cloak": in the hidden sense, it is "the refined utterance of God," related to "He cut His utterance." For Eloah alludes to the Name of 42, which is a garment, as the Zohar says in several places. This is the mystery of the scholars' robes: the Name of 42 is a garment. This is the expression haluq, robe; yehaleq has the numerical value q-d-s. This is what Job says, "Who would grant me months of q-d-s, like the days when Eloah guarded me": q-d-s is the scholars' robe; this is the robe, "like the days of Eloah," which is 42. [TN030055]

"The same applies to mezuzah": in the hidden sense it corresponds to y-b-l, the four letters of the spoken Name, h-z-k; it is a palace for the great Name that is not enjoyed [?]. [TN030056]

"After the sin, dissipation continued." That is, his strength continually diminished and food did not suffice, especially since he had to labor for it, as it is said, "By the sweat of your face you shall eat," etc. It served only temporary life, until he should reach expiration and death at the end, to restrain transgression and bring sin to an end.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 5

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 5

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 6 (ו)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"A good name," etc. To give another commendable explanation for the doubling of mot tamut, which the master discussed in the preceding chapter, he brings and explains this verse.

"Deserves," etc. That is, the blessed Name created the human being to be, of

Rema of Fano

"A good name is better than good oil, and the day of death than the day of one's birth." He said that the name in itself deserves to be considered unconditionally good: the human being's existence in the perfection in which he was first created, even without added merit, but simply with the capacity to become like the Most High. This is the sense of "a good name" being better than himself and by his nature, perfect in the ways of the Name and ready to become like the Most High, blessed be He. His name proves this: adam derives from "I shall become like the Most High," as explained above, Part I, chapter 26, and as will be explained further in Em Kol Hai, Part II, k-y 32. For this purpose no reward was necessary, since by nature he was compelled to do good, and compulsion is neither praised nor blamed so as to receive reward or punishment. [TN030058]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

After Adam sinned and was enticed by the evil inclination, however, he needed the reward of Torah and commandments to increase his soul's excellence. Accordingly, the verse means that the name adam alone, assigned to his perfection as he was first created, is better than good oil - that is, better than the reward attained through Torah and good deeds which a person needs after sinning.

“The name in itself, unconditionally”: what the name adam, simply stated, determines, namely his existence in the mode of perfection, etc.

“Even without added merit”: that attained from Torah and commandments.

“But simply with the capacity”: to be prepared to become like the Most High, in the sense of the name adam, for which reason he is so called.

“This is the reward of commandments”: an introduction to “good oil.”

“Henceforth”: after Adam sinned and was diminished in worth.

Rema of Fano - continued

“good oil,” the reward for commandments over which he will labor henceforth, after being diminished in worth, although that reward too deserves to enter the category of good.

Even if we describe the reward of a commandment as the commandment itself, nevertheless, now its place and time are not favorable, so that our saying is justified: “All our deeds are formlessness.” This means something incomplete, in the sense of “The LORD will complete on my behalf.” For an Israelite praying outside the land is not like one praying in the land or in the Temple, and all the more in the Garden of Eden. There is likewise a great, obvious difference between a time of favor and times of distress.

What advantage does a person have in being under the sun, bent and subjected to the events perceived day by day, at every time and moment? In proportion to their number, they have wronged him by preventing him from attaining his perfection. Even if he continually occupies himself with Torah and commandments, there is no commandment in this world whose reward would not be fulfilled and more than fulfilled if its merit benefited him merely by restoring him to his natural condition as at the beginning. This is the meaning of “Renew our days as of old,” which the prophet repeated at the end of the scroll of Lamentations, as will be explained.

He added that the day of death is better - on it the name will endure forever, if he sinned and was diminished in worth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Although”: the reward of a commandment too deserves, etc.

“Even if we describe it,” etc. That is, although the reward of a commandment is the commandment itself, as mentioned in the preceding chapter, it nevertheless does not have the same degree of good as the perfection before the sin. The reason is that now, after the sin, the commandment's place and time are not favorable as at first, when the place was the Garden of Eden and the time a time of favor. It is not so now.

“So that our saying is justified”: for this reason we say, “All our deeds are formlessness,” even in matters of commandments; because of the change of place and time, it is something incomplete.

“In the sense of” the verse “The LORD will complete on my behalf” (Psalms 138), meaning: may the LORD grant me to complete the commandments and perform them perfectly.

“For an Israelite is not like,” etc. Thus the place in which the commandment is now performed is unfavorable.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“All the more”: in the case of someone able to pray in the Garden of Eden, like the first Adam before the sin.

Even if one of the chosen few is found who merits both tables, and time does not treacherously prevent him from engaging in the service of the LORD, he nevertheless has no advantage by which his excellence would become greater than it naturally would have been had the first Adam not sinned. There is no commandment whose reward would not be fulfilled sufficiently and more than sufficiently if it could restore the human being to his original natural condition, before the first Adam sinned. But to increase his excellence beyond what he possessed is impossible. Therefore a good name is better than good oil.

“This is the meaning” of Scripture's “as of old”: as before the sin.

“As will be explained”: below, Part V, chapter 2.

“He added,” etc. That is, the end of the verse, “and the day of death than the day of one's birth,” also concerns the subject of its beginning. Its meaning is that for the name adam, which denotes perfection, the day of death too is better than the day of merits departing from the world with a good name - than the day of his birth, which contains no abiding assurance, for “He puts no trust in His holy ones.”

Rema of Fano - continued

Or he says that the day of death, which reaches everyone when actualized, is better than the day of its birth: the day of sin, when death was born of itself and came into being only potentially. This too is among our explanations of the doubling in the warning mentioned in the preceding chapter. On that very day death was prepared, and it is destined to become actual for each person on his day.

Furthermore, on the day of sin the nullifier is born, and on the day of death the nullifier is nullified. “And behold, it was very good.” For this verse was said concerning the existence of the nullifier, whether the evil inclination, death, or Gehinnom - all are included. Their existence is additional to creation's purpose, since they are not intended for themselves; it is therefore fitting to say “very” of them.

Moreover, the entire world is in their power, to exact payment from the wicked - meaning to draw aside through them the screen separating the Divine Presence and the righteous, with the nullification of the nullifier. “And behold, it was very good”: when the evil inclination itself is purified, good increases from it and within it. Gehinnom too will be purified and added to the boundaries of the Garden of Eden, as will be explained. Everything goes to one place, upholding all the birth, for on the day of death that name and its significance endure forever and ever. See Exodus Rabbah, portion Vayaqhel, and what Ha-Yefeh wrote there. [TN030059]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Or he says,” etc. That is, it is also possible to explain that the end of the verse does not concern the name mentioned at the beginning but is a separate matter: the day of death is better than the day of death's birth. For when a person sins, he generates death potentially, since there is no death without sin, as our Rabbis said. When he dies, he brings that death from potentiality into actuality. He says that the day of death is better than the day of sin.

“This too is among our explanations” of the doubling mot tamut in the Holy One's warning to the first Adam. One part indicates potential death, prepared for him and all who enter the world on the very day the first Adam sinned; the second indicates its actualization for each person on his day.

“Furthermore”: another reason why the day of death is better than the day of sin. On the day of sin the nullifier is born: the evil angel formed from the sin, the evil inclination that seeks to nullify the sinner through its accusation, as our Rabbis said, “It descends and entices; it ascends and accuses.” On the day of death the nullifier itself is also nullified. This is what is written of death: “And behold, it was very good.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

words of the Sages. [TN030057]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For this verse,” etc. What we find concerning this verse being expounded of the nullifier's existence also intends that in the future the nullifier will be nullified. For so, one ... [?] of what our Rabbis expounded in Genesis Rabbah on this verse concerns the existence of the evil inclination, death, and Gehinnom. The reason is that these three things' existence is additional to the general purpose of creation. Apart from that general purpose they are not intended for themselves at all: their existence is not intended for their own need, as other existing things are. It is therefore fitting to say of them “very good.” [TN030060]

There is another reason too for saying “very good,” in the manner we have stated. The matter is that the entire world, both righteous and wicked, is in the power of these three, in order to exact payment from the wicked, as the expression occurs in Genesis Rabbah concerning the death of the righteous: “to exact payment from the wicked twofold.”

The master explains “to exact payment” through the sense of “uncovered and revealed.” The intention follows the verse “Your iniquities have separated,” etc. Through their sins, the wicked cause and make a screen separating even the righteous and the Divine Presence. When the wicked perish, that screen is uncovered and removed, for the obstacle and nullifier - the evil angel formed from the sins - is nullified. Since this is so, it is certainly fitting to say “And behold, it was very good” of death and the nullification of the nullifier, which returns to become a good angel. This is also the reason concerning Gehinnom, which will be purified in the future.

“As will be explained”: below, Part V, chapter 5.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“That the name should be considered unconditionally good.” That is, the name adam, which is three [?], the Name of 45, YHWH spelled out with alephs. Had this alone been so - that he was designated by this name without merit, but only with the capacity to become like the Most High, from the expression “I shall become like the Most High,” alluded to in adam, as above, Part I, chapter 26 - it would have been better for him than good oil. [TN030061]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Now that he has sinned, he has been diminished in worth. Whatever he labors over henceforth, although it too deserves to enter the category of good, will nevertheless suffice only to restore his original excellence, as at the beginning. He cannot add strength to the might above, since he was expelled from the Garden of Eden after sinning. One praying outside the land is not like one praying in the land of Israel or in the Temple, all the more if he could pray in the Garden of Eden. Now he has been expelled from it and made subject under the sun, submitting to perceived events, a son of Cush [?]. [TN030062]

Therefore, even if he continually occupies himself with Torah and commandments, there is no commandment whose reward would not be complete and more - that is, sufficient and more than sufficient - if it benefited him by restoring him to his original condition, in the sense of “Renew our days as of old.” The prophet repeated this at the end of the scroll of Lamentations, in the verse “Bring us back,” which is repeated. This is the meaning of “A good name is better than good oil,” just as the day of death is better than the day of birth: now he has certainly departed with a good name, whereas at birth one does not know what a day will bring, for “He puts no trust in His holy ones.” So a good name would have been good for Adam had he not been diminished in his original worth and excellence.

“Or he says that the day of death is better than the day of its birth,” etc. This also refers to death's birth. At the moment the human being sinned, the power of death was immediately born, but it did not become actual until it performed its mission and brought death about in him, even after many years. This is the meaning of the doubling, “For on the day you eat from it, mot tamut.” The first refers to the birth of death's power on the day of his sin; the second to the day of actual death. On the very day Adam sinned, death was prepared for him and destined to become actual for every person on his day - that is, for all the world, who came from the first Adam's comprehensive form.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Furthermore, on the day of sin”: another plain interpretation of the verse “and the day of death,” etc. On the day of sin the power of death is born and grows stronger until the hour of death, when it performs its mission through death itself. Then, after performing its mission, the nullifier is nullified: the accuser and power of death. Therefore they expounded, “‘And behold, it was very good’: this is death,” or the evil inclination, or Gehinnom.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 6

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The verse concerns the nullifier's existence, whose existence - that is, whose creation - is additional to the purpose of creation for the world's need; they were not created for our own need. [TN030063]

They are therefore very good, for death is very good in that the nullifier is nullified, as above. They are also good because they cleanse a person's sins through suffering, so that through them the separating screen in their sin may be uncovered, with the nullification of the nullifier. That is, when it has performed its mission and is nullified, or the separating screen is uncovered, as above. Yet another good will occur in the future: the evil inclination will be purified and become a holy angel, and Gehinnom too will be purified and added to the boundary of the Garden of Eden.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 7 (ז)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“The doubling of death”: in the expression “You shall surely die” [mot tamut]. “With a nature capable of everlasting life”: that he should live and endure forever. “As an enduring condition”: one that does not change. This is mot tamut: mot is an infinitive and a characterization, while tamut is the subject's action, as will be explained; because of this characterization it becomes true to say of him, and so forth.

“Concerning doubled verbs”: that is, when an infinitive appears with a

Rema of Fano

Alternatively, the doubling of death pronounced upon Adam may be explained as follows. On the very day he was created with a nature capable of everlasting life, by his Creator's will, he was changed through sin by his own will and sentenced to death as an enduring condition, so that it became true to say of him, “A person's end is to die.” This is a general principle concerning doubled verbs throughout Scripture: the infinitive adjoining a past or future verb is a verbal noun by which the subject of that action is characterized. When the characterization is intensified, however, it precedes the action, as in “If you indeed listen” [shamoa tishme'u]. The reverse applies when it follows it, as in past or future verb from the same root, one after the other, such as paqod yifqod, yatzo yatza, and the like. The infinitive adds a characterization, although the past or future verb alone would have sufficed. The point, however, is that the infinitive is itself the verbal noun, for it characterizes the actor, the subject of the action. Sometimes the infinitive precedes the action, and sometimes the action comes first. These depend on the strength of the characterization: if it comes to emphasize the matter very strongly, the characterization precedes the action; if it does not reinforce it so strongly, it follows the action. “Sometimes” the infinitive and characterization itself is found to be the subject described by the action.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“As in ‘You have indeed thrust me,’” followed by “to fall”: this is said of the evil inclination, as appears in the Zohar and in Sh.H., as mentioned above. Dahoh is the infinitive and characterization, and it is itself the one described, for this is what the evil inclination is called. [TN040001]

“For these,” and so forth: that is, this verse and those before it—“All nations surrounded me; in the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down”; “They surrounded me; indeed, they surrounded me; in the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down”; “They surrounded me like bees; they were extinguished like a fire of thorns; in the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down”—speak of the evil inclination and its bands of destructive angels. Concerning them David said “I shall cut them down” in the plural.

“The first” time he said “In the name of the LORD,” and so forth, concerns its leading astray. As is known, Satan descends

Rema of Fano - continued

“And he insists on judging” [va-yishpot shafot]. Sometimes the characterization itself is the subject described in Scripture, and nothing else, as in “You have indeed thrust me” [dahoh dehitani]. For these three times King David, peace be upon him, spoke concerning the evil inclination, which is the old and foolish king, and concerning all those born in its household, its officers and servants: “In the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down.” The first concerns its leading astray through every form of incitement and enticement. The second concerns its accusing, going about as a talebearer, and testifying against a person in general, whether he is greatly sinful when the scales are weighed, and in particular concerning all his deeds. This is “They surrounded me; indeed, they surrounded me.” After obtaining permission, it collects its debt from him through various punishments, like those bees, with their honey and their sting. This is the reason for its three proper names, as is known.

What that elder taught Abaye is also known: “Whoever is greater than his fellow has an inclination greater than his.” This serves to complete the testing, which brings it about that “God has made this corresponding to that.” Such a person is called one who enjoys the fruit of his toil, and he is greater than one who fears Heaven whose inclination does not press him. The former, however, benefits and is rewarded for the effort and labor he expends in subduing his inclination. Thus it is written, “I shall remove the northern and incites, ascends and accuses, then receives permission and collects his debt. David spoke in correspondence to these three things. Concerning its incitement he said, “All nations”—namely the evil inclination and its camp, a multitude of nations—“surrounded me” to incite me; nevertheless, “in the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down” and destroy them. Concerning its accusation above, he said the second time, “They surrounded me,” and so forth. Concerning its collecting the debt, he said the third time, “They surrounded me like bees,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In general”: when a person's transgressions are weighed against his merits. “In particular”: at the time the transgressions are committed. This is “They surrounded me; indeed, they surrounded me,” doubled, once corresponding to the general reckoning and once to the particular act. “It collects its debt”: corresponding to this he said the third time, “They surrounded me like bees,” those which give their stings to anyone who approaches them to eat their honey. Such is the way of the evil inclination and the members of its household, to entice toward their iniquity [gap], “what is sweeter than honey,” like those things;

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

afterward, when it comes, its end is feared. [TN040002]

“This is the reason for its three names”: the evil inclination, Satan, and the Angel of Death. These are its proper names; as for the seven descriptive names, it has seven names, as is known. The master says that these three proper names correspond to the three functions already mentioned. In the aspect of incitement it is called the evil inclination; in the aspect of accusation it is called Satan; in the aspect of collecting the debt it is called the Angel of Death.

“It is known,” and so forth: he now explains “You have indeed thrust me,” and so forth. “What was taught here,” and so forth: in chapter 5 of Sukkah. “This serves to complete the testing” and trial, so that his reward will be very great if he subdues his great inclination. “God has made this,” and so forth: a person is created with two inclinations, each of which wishes to prevail. Thus, if the good inclination is great, the evil inclination is also great.

“Such a person”: someone whose inclination is great. He is called “one who enjoys the fruit of his toil,” as appears in chapter 1 of Berakhot: “One who enjoys the labor of his hands is one far from you,” because “he has done great things”; they expounded this as referring to Torah scholars more than to anyone else. Alternatively, “one who enjoys the fruit of his toil” may be understood literally: he acknowledges the justice of Heaven's judgment upon him and rejoices in the decree that he should eat only from the labor of his hands. He is greater than someone who relies on a miracle, who certainly fears Heaven and relies on the verse that says, “Those who fear Him lack nothing.”

Rema of Fano - continued

From this, according to the first approach, a true, sound and clear plain meaning may be understood in the verse “May the LORD rebuke you, who chooses Jerusalem.” It says that it is fitting and necessary that Satan should be confounded by the first rebuke, in general, and by the final rebuke, in particular, because Satan chooses to prevail against his opposite in Jerusalem, the city of righteousness, the faithful city. Our master David had already feared that his words might be regarded as an arrow in Satan's eye, so that Satan would prevail against him, God forbid, for “he cannot contend with one who has become stronger than he.” Here the transmitted written form is authoritative: he has, as it were, strengthened himself, contrary to what was intended in his creation. Or he received his strength and might from the person who sins; how, then, could that person contend with him? Accordingly, in this verse David acknowledged to him that he possesses great power to thrust aside and is characterized by the force of his action, and that there is no escaping greater than one who fears Heaven; for concerning one who fears Heaven it is written,” and so forth. This saying is difficult, and the author of Ein Yaakov has already raised the difficulty. The master explains that “one who fears Heaven” is someone whose inclination does not press him so strongly, whereas “one who enjoys the fruit of his toil” is someone whose inclination is great, and who subdues it through the toil of his strength and the mighty hand of his piety. He is therefore greater than one who fears Heaven. See chapter 6 of Maimonides' Eight Chapters. “The former,” whose inclination is great, “benefits and is rewarded”: this is the meaning of “enjoys” in the saying; he explains it as “is rewarded.” “They expounded”: in chapter 5 of Sukkah.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Alternatively”: incidentally, the master explains the saying “One who enjoys,” and so forth, in another way. “Literally”: he earns his living through the work of his hands. “He acknowledges the justice of Heaven's judgment”: that is, “enjoys” means that he rejoices in this, that he should earn his living specifically through the work of his hands. “He is greater than someone who relies on a miracle”: this is the “one who fears

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Heaven" of whom the saying speaks. He relies on "Those who fear Him lack nothing," sits idle and does not work to support himself, thinking that the blessed Name will perform a miracle for him. The author of Ein Yaakov explains it in a similar way; see there. "Who," relying on a miracle, "certainly fears Heaven": for we are not dealing with fools.

"In the verse": "The LORD said to Satan: May the LORD rebuke you, Satan; may the LORD rebuke you, who chooses Jerusalem" (Zechariah 3). According to the commentators, "who chooses" is joined to "the LORD," as though it were written, "May the LORD, who chooses Jerusalem, rebuke you." This is strained. Apart from having to say that the verse is transposed, it is also difficult to see what purpose the description "who chooses Jerusalem" serves here. The master therefore thinks it should be explained according to its straightforward order. The meaning is: May the LORD rebuke you, Satan, who chooses to prevail against the righteous, the people of Jerusalem. The verse names the place in place of its inhabitants, as is customary in figurative language. "It says": Satan should not have had the strength to accuse, for he ought to have been

Rema of Fano - continued

him except through the help of the LORD and His court, for the nullification of the nullifier is an act of judgment. This accords with "They were extinguished like a fire of thorns": the completion of its mission is its extinction.

The statement "You shall surely die" [mot tamut] also contains a positive commandment to which the prohibition "You shall not eat," earlier in the verse, is attached for its rectification. This commandment is surrendering oneself to death for the sanctification of the Name, and for no other purpose: either in an act fully carried out when the occasion presents itself, or in an act of imagination, as in the falling upon one's face to which we alluded above. This is the choicest of the explanations designated as the plain meaning, and completes them all. We have further true approaches to this, through which the doubling of death can be understood in the light of what happens among the components of a person's soul: when its parts depart, he is still alive, but when some become hidden from others, what remains is as though dead. We have explained this in the discourse Ha-Nefesh, with Heaven's help.

Above, in Part I, chapter 12, we already mentioned the reason for this doubling according to its plain meaning: it applies to Adam and to David. Adam was also informed that he would not continue to grieve thereafter, for our King Messiah will live forever and will not see corruption. Included in this was the revelation to Adam that "David is the youngest," smaller than every living confounded and affected by His blessed rebuke directed at him, first in general—this is "May the LORD rebuke you, Satan"—and then by the particular rebuke for choosing Jerusalem. This is the second "May the LORD rebuke you," and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"His words": what he said, "In the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down," might be considered an arrow in Satan's eye, and Satan might thereby prevail against him, God forbid. "The transmitted written form is authoritative": incidentally, the master explains the verse "He cannot contend with one who has become stronger than he" (Ecclesiastes 6). The reading is she-taqqif, without the he. The master says that the reason for the written tradition, which has the he, is to indicate something further beyond the plain meaning. That is: who could contend with the one who is strong of himself? This is the evil inclination; here mimmennu means "of himself," contrary, as it were, to His blessed intention in creating it, as above in the preceding chapter. Alternatively, mimmennu means "from him," from the sinner. The meaning is that the sinner cannot contend with the evil inclination, which is strong, when its strength comes from the sinner himself; sin gives it vigor and great strength.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Accordingly”: so that his saying “I shall cut them down” these three times would not be regarded as an arrow in Satan's eye, he concludes, “You have indeed thrust me.” That is: it is true, I know very well that Satan has great strength to thrust me down. But “the LORD”—the form with the conjunction, meaning He and His court—“helped me.” For this reason I said, “In the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down.” “And is characterized”: by the characterization of the action. He therefore placed the characterization before the action, as mentioned. “For the nullification” of the evil inclination “is an act of judgment”; he therefore needed His court. “As in ‘They were extinguished like a fire of thorns’”: this too refers to the nullification of the evil inclination. It means that the evil inclination and its company were extinguished like a fire which, after doing its work, ceases of itself. They too cease after completing their mission. See above, Part I, chapter 23.

“The statement,” and so forth: the master returns to the verse “For on the day you eat from it, you shall surely die.” “A positive commandment”: in the Midrash ha-Neelam, person born, because he was destined to be born in the manner of miscarried infants who have no life even for a short time. For a person's future mazal corresponds to his previous merit. This is why his father Jesse expressed wonder when he said to Samuel, “The youngest still remains”: that is, he is still alive, contrary to nature. Samuel said to him, “Send and fetch him, for we shall not turn about [nasov] until he comes here.” For the word nasov is like na'or, or like “the wheel is broken” [ve-narotz ha-galgal]. He said that David's second circuit of that allotted hour had not been completed before he came to be anointed and the spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him. From this one may understand literally what they truly call our King Messiah in the chapter Heleq: Bar Nafli, “son of the fallen ones.” He is literally the son of two miscarried beings, for Adam became such a being on the day he ate from the Tree of Knowledge, namely the first day of his creation, and David did so as we have said.

Rema of Fano - continued

To atone for both of them, the Messiah will “make his soul a guilt offering,” as is expressly written concerning him in the section “Behold, My servant shall prosper.” ASHAM, “guilt offering,” has the numerical value of MENAHEM BEN AMMIEL. What is written afterward? “He shall see offspring; he shall prolong his days; and the LORD's purpose shall prosper in his hand.” David looked toward him all his days, hoping that through his songs and psalms he might merit becoming the Messiah, as it is written, “And I shall hope” [va-ani

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rabbi Beroqa says: “He was commanded concerning the Name and sinned concerning the name. He was commanded concerning the Name”—this is the unique Name, as it is written, “And the Tree of Life,” and so forth —“and sinned concerning the name”—this is the shared name, as it is written, “And the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat from.” On this basis the master also expounds the end of the verse, “For on the day you eat from it, you shall surely die,” as a positive commandment to surrender himself to death for the sanctification of His blessed Name. Thus the prohibition “You shall not eat” is a prohibition attached to a positive commandment for its rectification.

“Either in an act” in reality: that he should be killed rather than transgress if the occasion presents itself. Even if the occasion does not present itself, he fulfills the commandment through an act of imagination, surrendering himself to death through the intention of saying this in his mind at the “folly of faces” [uncertain source expression]. This is the reason for the doubling mot tamut: once for action and once for thought. [TN040003] “To which we alluded above”: Part I, chapter 22. “Through which the doubling” of the expression mot tamut “can be understood.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In the light of what happens,” and so forth: it is known that the parts of a person's soul which our sages, of blessed memory, called nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah and yehidah correspond to the inanimate, the vegetative, the animate and the speaking. Nefesh names the vital soul, which is the

Rema of Fano - continued

AYAHEL]. AYAHEL is an acronym for “If he delays, wait for him” [Im Yitmahmah, Hakeh Lo], “for he will surely come; he will not delay.” The numerical value of the whole expression, with the verse counted as a whole, is BERESHIT, “In the beginning,” for this is the purpose of creation. None wait for him except ISRAEL, whose numerical value is that of “if he delays” [im yitmahmah]. What is written afterward? “Wait for him” [hakeh lo], in the singular, as in “The LORD alone shall lead him, and no foreign god is with him.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

power of the inanimate; ruah corresponds to the speaking soul; neshamah corresponds to the soul of the living creature that moves from place to place; hayyah is the soul that grows and develops, and the rational soul unique to the human species alone. Concerning it, “The human became a living soul” was said. Our sages further said concerning “Let the earth bring forth a living soul”: this is the spirit of Adam the first human.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yehidah is very high and exalted; it has no dealings with us. The master has explained this in many places. [TN040004]

When these nefesh, ruah and neshamah are present in a person, these soul-parts are also considered in relation to a person in two respects. The first is a particular level, in which each of these parts is perceptible in the person and is present independently. Because vitality is found in a person, it is known that he has the vital soul, as in the inanimate. Because a person grows and develops until he reaches his proper measure, it is said that he has the vegetative soul. Likewise, because a person moves from place to place, it is evident that he has the animate soul; because he possesses intellect, it is said that he has the speaking soul. The second aspect is comprehensive: the living soul includes its other parts, neshamah, ruah and nefesh, which are the soul of every animate, vegetative and inanimate thing. Similarly, the soul of an animal includes the vegetative and inanimate soul, and the vegetative soul includes the inanimate soul, but not conversely, for the whole is greater than the part and contains it, and not the reverse.

Concerning this the master said, “When its parts depart, he is still alive.” That is, even if all the parts of a person's soul depart in their particular aspect, so that the vital, vegetative and moving powers no longer operate, the person nevertheless remains alive through the power of the soul unique to him, the living soul that includes all its other parts. But “when some become hidden from others”—that is, when one of the encompassing parts becomes hidden and separated from the parts encompassed, as when the vital soul becomes hidden and separated from the vegetative soul and the other parts—the remaining parts necessarily become as though dead. What can the vegetative, moving or speaking soul gain or add when deprived of vitality? All the more so if the vegetative soul, which includes vitality, is also separated from them; and likewise with them all.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Accordingly, at the time of his visitation, a person can die all at once, with the departure of the speaking soul that includes all the parts. He can also undergo a single death in two stages: the soul-parts depart in their particular aspect, and afterward his speaking soul also leaves him; or the other parts first become hidden and separated from the speaking soul, and afterward it too departs. The doubling mot tamut conveys this meaning.

“We already mentioned above”: another reason for the doubled expression of death, once for him and once for David, who was the reincarnation of Adam the first human. Through this warning, death was also decreed upon David, that he should be like a miscarriage hidden from the womb, carried to the grave; see there. “Adam was informed” through this that he would die only twice, but not in the third reincarnation. For King Messiah, who is his third reincarnation—as is known, ADAM is an acronym for Adam, David, Messiah—will live forever. “Included in this”: through His blessed saying mot tamut, Adam learned that David was destined and prepared to be miscarried. For the future mazal of the reincarnation corresponds to the merit of the first person. Since death had been decreed upon him on the first day of his creation, he knew that his reincarnation too would die on the very day of his birth. Thus they said in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer: he saw David, whose life was inscribed for three hours, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“David is the youngest”: incidentally, the master teaches us the reason for the verse's statement “David is the youngest”: by nature he was prepared to be a miscarriage, smaller than all the living. “When Samuel said,” and so forth: as it is written, “Samuel said to Jesse: Are the young men all here? He said: The youngest still remains, and behold, he is tending the sheep. Samuel said to Jesse: Send and fetch him, for we shall not turn about until he comes here” (I Samuel 16). The master explains Jesse's words as an expression of novelty and wonder: “The youngest still remains”—even the smallest of all those born alive, who by nature was not fit to live because he was Adam's reincarnation, has nevertheless survived and is still alive. Samuel answered that there was no reason for wonder: rather, “Send and fetch him, for he has not completed his circuit”—Adam's circuit, his reincarnation, was not yet complete, since Adam had already given him seventy years of his life —“until he comes here” to be anointed. For that reason Adam had allotted him those years.

“For the word nasov” is not a verb but a noun, as in “You are na'or,” and means a circuit. Or nasov is a verb, but its meaning does not indicate a future plural: it is a past passive, like “the wheel is broken” [ve-narotz ha-galgal]. It also resembles it in subject matter, since “the wheel is broken” is interpreted concerning the mystery of reincarnation, as is known. Either way, “for he has not completed his circuit” means that the circuit was not yet complete. “Of that allotted hour”: which David had to live.

“In the chapter Heleq”: there Rav Nahman said to Rav, “Have you heard when Bar Nafli will come?” He said, “Who is Bar Nafli?” He said, “The Messiah.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Do you call the Messiah Bar Nafli?” He said, “Yes, for it is written: On that day I shall raise up David's fallen booth.” The master understands the statement “Yes, for it is written,” and so forth, in which the transmitted wording here also names Rav Nahman, as giving merely an appellation. It would have been more fitting to name him after the raising up than after the falling. In truth, however, he called him this according to the mystery of reincarnation: he was the son of Adam the first human and David, both of whom were miscarried beings. Adam was sentenced to death on the day of his creation, and David was a miscarriage by nature. Therefore he said nafli, “fallen ones,” in the plural. [TN040005]

“Will make his soul a guilt offering”: to nullify the prohibition. “In the section ‘Behold, My servant shall prosper’” (Isaiah 53): there it is said, “The LORD desired to crush him with illness; if you make his soul a guilt offering, he shall see offspring,” and so forth. “ASHAM has the numerical value,” and so forth: incidentally, the master brings an elegant subsidiary interpretation: ASHAM hints at the Messiah's name, which is Menahem ben Ammiel, as appears in the Zohar, section Shelah Lekha, page 22. Its numerical value is 341. “Toward him”: that is, toward the Messiah.

“Hoping that through his songs,” and so forth: it seems to me possible to say further that this is why Adam stipulated in making the gift that David should sing before the Holy One, blessed be He, as appears in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer: perhaps through his songs he might merit becoming the Messiah. “As it is written”: “And I shall hope continually, and shall add to all Your praise” (Psalms 70, as cited here). The allusion lies in AYAHEL, whose acronym is “If he delays, wait for him” (Habakkuk 2), which our sages expounded concerning the Messiah. David asked that success should come through his songs; he therefore concludes, “And I shall add to all Your praise.” [TN040006]

“The numerical value” of these words is 912; with the verse as a whole counted as one, there are 913, the numerical value of BERESHIT. This hints that the Messiah is the purpose of the creation of the world, and he is one of the seven things that preceded the world, as is known. “None wait for him," and so forth: that is, the allusion of "If he delays," and so forth, in BERESHIT is also fitting because none wait for King Messiah except Israel. The sages' exposition is already known: BERESHIT means "for Israel, who are called reshit."

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Whose numerical value is 'if he delays'": that is, the whole language of this verse also refers to Israel. The allusion is that im yitmahmah has the numerical value 541, like ISRAEL. It means: if Israel delays in their exile; or if the Messiah delays because Israel delays in repentance, since the matter depends only on repentance, as the sages said—nevertheless, "wait," Israel: wait for him, the Messiah. "Wait" refers to Israel, as appears from the sages' exposition. This is also Abravanel's opinion, rather than its referring to Habakkuk, according to Rashi's explanation. "In the singular": as for telling Israel hakeh in the singular rather than haku in the plural, such is the manner of the language, as in "The LORD alone shall lead him," which does not say "shall lead them." Likewise, at the end of the verse, "and no foreign god is with him," according to the commentators' view that it refers to Israel, it does not say "with them."

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Alternatively, the doubling of death may be explained": that is, MOT TAMUT. The explanation is that he was sentenced to death as an enduring condition for the future: a person's end is to die. "By which the subject of that action is characterized": that is, the person who acts in the world. "When the characterization is intensified, it precedes the action": as in "If you indeed listen." Shamoa is the infinitive and the subject of the action; it comes before the action, for tishme'u is the action.

"And the reverse, in its joining it": that is, when the action comes first and the infinitive afterward. This comes about because it is not so strong, and it follows the action. "Sometimes it itself is what is described": the one of whom the characterization is spoken is himself characterized by it. Thus dahoh is not a noun here, but the evil inclination itself is what is called "the one who thrusts me": you, evil inclination, have thrust me. The following abbreviated connective wording is uncertain: "אע"ב ... ומ"כל." For these three times he said, "In the name of the LORD, I shall cut them down": once corresponding to incitement and enticement, and once corresponding to its going about as a talebearer and testifying against a person. He therefore said, "They surrounded me; indeed, they surrounded me"—many surrounding forces. Afterward it collects its debt from him, as we say in the Gemara: it ascends and accuses, then descends and performs its mission. [TN040007]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Therefore he said afterward, 'This is the reason for its three names'": that is, corresponding to the three matters already mentioned. These three names are the evil inclination, Satan and the Angel of Death; the three functions are hinted at in them. "Whoever is greater than his fellow has an inclination greater than his": that is, what really is the reason his inclination is greater? It is to complete the intended testing, so that his reward will be great. "Such a person is called one who enjoys the fruit of his toil": one who strengthens himself against the evil inclination is called one who enjoys the labor of his hands.

"And he is greater than one who fears Heaven": one who fears Heaven does not toil and labor as much as the first, and he relies on a miracle. Consequently, "enjoys" applies to both, as though it were written, "One who enjoys the labor of his hands is greater than one who enjoys [what comes] from fear of Heaven." That is, one who enjoys his toil is greater than one who benefits from being a fearer of Heaven, meaning that a miracle is performed for the latter from Heaven. The former is better to regard as greater than someone relying on the verse "Those who fear Him lack nothing."

"From this, according to the first approach, 'May the LORD rebuke you, who chooses Jerusalem' may be understood": that is, Satan should be confounded by the first rebuke in general—that is, by the Holy One, blessed be He—and by the final rebuke concerning Satan's choosing to prevail against his opposite in Jerusalem. These are the righteous, who are called "Jerusalem, whole," "the city of righteousness, the faithful city," after the Shekhinah, which is called this. "Fearsome in his eyes, that he would prophesy," and so forth: that is, through his songs and psalms. [TN040008]

"For he cannot contend with one who has become stronger than he": that is, the one who has become strong and prevails does so “from himself,” of himself. “As it were, contrary to what was intended in his creation”: the Holy One, blessed be He, has no share in his growing strong. “Or he received his strength and might from the person who sins”: consequently, “from him” refers to the sinner. Because that person once obeyed his stratagem, strength and might came to him. If it came from that person, how can the person contend with him, when he himself gives him strength? “Accordingly, in this verse he acknowledged”: King David, peace be upon him, acknowledged that the evil inclination's power to thrust aside is great, and there is no escaping it except through the help of the blessed Name. The following abbreviated wording is uncertain; the explanation continues from “The LORD helped me.” Wherever “and the LORD” is said, it means He and His court. Then he gives the reason: “The nullification of the nullifier is an act of judgment.” [TN040009]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“The completion of their mission is its extinction”: as we said above, Part I, chapter 26, concerning “He kindled a fire in Zion.” Once the fire had performed its work, it ceased. It is the same here: “They were extinguished like a fire of thorns”; once it has acted, it too ceases. When evil comes upon a person and has done its harm, the accuser then ceases.

“The statement MOT TAMUT contains a positive commandment”: that is, mot—you, human, who are called mot—tamut: you are now obliged to surrender yourself to death for the sanctification of the Name. This may be “in an act fully carried out when the occasion presents itself,” as with the ten martyrs executed by the kingdom, or “in an act of imagination, as in the falling upon one's face to which we alluded above,” in chapter 26 of Part I. There are three kinds of death: a person must surrender his soul as though he were being killed at that moment. The first is during the recitation of the Shema; the second is in falling upon the face; the third is actual death, in accordance with the doubling of death in Adam the first human.

“In the light of what happens among the components of a person's soul”: a person has nefesh, ruah and neshamah, with neshamah above them all. If a person sins, his neshamah departs, leaving nefesh and ruah; the adjoining wording about the person while still alive is uncertain. He says—that is, in the prayer—“My God, the soul You gave me is pure.” It is difficult: how can every person say his soul is pure, when not every person merits a pure soul? The answer is that it is certainly true that at the moment You gave the soul to the person, it was pure; but when the person sins, the neshamah leaves him, while nefesh and ruah remain, and there are impairments in these two. [TN040010]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“When some become hidden from others,” through “what remains is as though dead”: this is why he said mot tamut. First, when Adam the first human sinned, he began to die when his neshamah left him; afterward, tamut, you shall die again, the remaining death. “The reason for this doubling according to its plain meaning applies to Adam and to David”: this is why mot tamut is said twice, once for Adam and once for David, who belonged to Adam's reincarnation. “He was informed that he would not continue to grieve thereafter”: for the Messiah too is the reincarnation of ADAM, and the Messiah will live forever and will not see corruption.

“For we shall not turn about until he comes here”: the word nasov refers to David. It is not the passive form, like other words beginning with nun, but a past form in the third person. It means that David's second circuit was not completed until he came to be anointed and the spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him. [TN040011]

“The numerical value of the whole expression is BERESHIT, together with the verse as a whole, for this is the purpose of creation”: before the world, the Messiah had been created, as is said, “And the spirit of God was hovering”—this is the spirit of the Messiah, and so forth. “‘Wait for him,’ in the singular”: it is the Holy One, blessed be He; that is, wait for Him, as in “The LORD alone shall lead him, and no foreign god is with him.”

Return to chapter in contents

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 8 (ח)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"The nullification of the nullifier": the evil inclination, which we said in the preceding chapters is nullified through death. It "resembles what was said: Your corpses, you yourselves," and so forth, as appears in the Zohar, section Shelah Lekha, page 308. Its wording here is: "Thus, 'I said: You are gods,' and so forth; 'nevertheless, you shall die like Adam.' What was Adam's death to the world? It was so that the evil inclination within him should be erased; the evil inclination would become death and be completed within him [uncertain wording]. That elder said concerning them: Here Scripture writes, 'Your corpses, you yourselves, shall fall in this wilderness.' 'Your corpses' is the evil inclination, including male and female. 'They were diminished, for this is within you': the evil inclination descends first and does not ascend, from before the worlds, and they do not bring down [uncertain wording]. In the wilderness they always bring down and do not go up. Therefore 'your corpses' means the breaking of your hearts, as it is said, 'who were too

Rema of Fano

The nullification of the nullifier of which we spoke resembles what was said to the generation of knowledge concerning the sin of the spies: "Your corpses, you yourselves, shall fall in this wilderness." Their greatness is known: at Sinai they merited seeing what is heard, and at the sea they said, "This is my God, and I shall glorify Him." From this Rabbi Akiva learned, in the chapter Heleq, that they have no need of the world to come. Although Rabbi Yohanan said of him, "Rabbi Akiva has abandoned his piety," this was because he expressed his statement in language admitting two interpretations, so that it might serve as atonement for them. For this same reason we also teach the statement concerning the three kings, and read and translate the first account of the calf.

What we said, that they have no need to return in the world to come, is because concerning it Scripture says, "On that day one shall say: Behold, this is our God." They had already pointed to Him with a finger in this world, as we have said. There Rabbi Eliezer already expounded concerning them, "Gather to Me My faithful ones": they acknowledged the justice of Heaven's judgment upon them and died willingly, as we shall mention. "Those who make My covenant over a sacrifice": either because they were able to be covenant partners of God in this world, in which exhausted to cross the stream,' and so forth. The end of the verse proves this, for it says 'they shall fall,' not 'you shall fall.' Therefore 'In this wilderness they shall be consumed' refers to these corpses, 'and there they shall die,' for the Holy One's will is to destroy these corpses from the world forever." [TN040012]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Their greatness is known": this interpretation was offered because of the greatness of the wilderness generation, which, as is known, was very great. "They merited": incidentally, the master enumerates their greatness in order to expound its significance. "What is heard": as they expounded "All the people saw the sounds." "At the sea": they merited seeing the glory of the Holy One, blessed be He, eye to eye—what cannot ordinarily be seen and heard—as they said, "This is my God, and I shall glorify Him," which the sages expounded concerning their seeing the Shekhinah.

"In the chapter Heleq": the Mishnah there says, "The generation of the wilderness has no share in the world to come, as it is said, 'In this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die': the words of Rabbi Akiva. Rabbi Eliezer says: Of them it says, 'Gather to Me My faithful ones, those who make My covenant over a sacrifice.'" Since it would seem extraordinary for Rabbi Akiva to say of such a generation of knowledge that it has no share in the world to come, the master incidentally interprets Rabbi Akiva's words favorably as well: the wilderness generation's excellence was so great that they have no need of the world to come, as he shortly concludes.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Rabbi Akiva has abandoned his piety," for it is said, "Go and proclaim in the ears of Jerusalem, saying: I remember for you," and so forth. Rashi explains: he abandoned his piety, for he customarily vindicated Israel, whereas now he condemns them. "For it is said, 'Go and proclaim,'" means that he could have expounded that they have a share in the world to come. The master says that one should not prove from this that Rabbi Akiva's words must be taken at face value. Rabbi Yohanan said he had abandoned his piety because he should not have spoken in language admitting two interpretations. His statement that they have

Rema of Fano - continued

there is slaughter and eating, in the sense of peace-offering sacrifices, which make peace among the company above and the company below; or because making the covenant consisted in the very act of slaughter, sacrifices of righteousness to atone for the entire world. In the baraita of Rabbi Eliezer, at the end of chapter 41, their excellence is greatly extolled; see there. In Midrash Rabbah, at the end of the section Ve-Hayah Ki Tavo, they said that worms did not rule over their flesh. This can be understood both leniently and stringently, for "according to the camel is the burden." See the Zohar, section Shelah Lekha, folio 162b.

However, the fact that the earth could not bear them resembles what the sages say concerning Elijah in the Zohar, section Va-Yiggash: the world could not bear him. Just as Isaac's soul flew away at the binding, so Israel's souls flew away at Sinai, and Phinehas's soul at Shittim, as is known. From the flight of Isaac's soul, the ram took bodily form. It had been created only potentially on the eve of the Sabbath at twilight; therefore it is called Abraham's ram, for it belonged to him, not to Isaac, since there is no acquisition in the grave. The intended purpose was not completed until Abraham offered it, since it was his property. He also bound it, as the daily offerings were bound, in the chapter "They did not tie it." See the discourse Em Kol Hai: the ram too was created through judgment. Skinning, dismemberment and complete burning in the fire were performed upon it; thus it was as though Isaac had been no share in the world to come can also be understood unfavorably according to its plain meaning; indeed, it is more readily understood that way than favorably, as saying they have no need of it. Rabbi Akiva should have explained his words.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"So that": Rabbi Akiva intended to use wording that also admits an unfavorable meaning, so that it would serve as atonement for them. "For this reason": this is also the reason concerning the three kings of whom the Mishnah there teaches that they have no share in the world to come. What practical consequence does that teaching have for us? Rather, it was taught for atonement, so that they might gain atonement through it. "And we read": similarly, we find that the first account of the calf is read and translated because Israel welcomes this as atonement for them, as appears in chapter 1 of Megillah.

"What we said, that they have no need of the world to come": the reason is that the purpose of the world to come is to behold the pleasantness of the LORD. Their excellence in that vision will be so great in the world to come that each Israelite will point to Him with a finger, as the sages say at the end of Taanit concerning "On that day one shall say: Behold, this is our God." The wilderness generation had already merited this distinguished level at the sea, pointing to Him with a finger when they said, "This is my God," as the sages say in Exodus Rabbah at the end of chapter 23.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Rabbi Eliezer already expounded": all the more was the greatness of the wilderness generation considerable according to Rabbi Eliezer's words there. "They acknowledged the justice": "Gather to Me My faithful ones" was said of them because they acknowledged the justice of the judgment upon them and died willingly. This is explained in the Jerusalem Talmud, Taanit, and Rashi cites it at the end of Taanit: throughout those forty years in the wilderness, a herald would go out before Moses every eve of the Ninth of Av and proclaim, "Let everyone go out to dig." Each Israelite would go out and dig a grave for himself, and in the evening each would lie in his grave. The next day the herald would go out and proclaim, "Let the living separate from the dead." Whoever still had breath would rise and come out. Whoever was destined to die would have a worm emerge from his navel and enter his mouth, and he would die, and they would bury him. So it was every slaughtered, as though Isaac had been burned.

Rema of Fano - continued

From what is said concerning Isaac, that the spirit returned from the upper world alone—see the Zohar at the beginning of the section Noah—while the spirit of the lower world took bodily form as stated, we learn concerning Phinehas and the generation of knowledge that they did not return to their former condition in the natural life of this world. The exceptions were "the kings assembled; they passed together," departing from the counsel of the spies: Caleb, who came from Judah, "because another spirit was with him," as in "May the LORD add another son for me," which he merited in Hebron; and "he fulfilled after Me," completing the aspect of the back together with the awesome face. From Joseph there was Joshua son of Nun, a youth, with whom Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, joined the Shekhinah, which precedes and comes to every gathering of ten. In her honor he "would not depart from within the tent."

Concerning all the rest of that generation, it is proper to say "your corpses" of the living who were still alive, since they were already bereft of the spirit of this world. He said "you yourselves" because they had the power to purify their matter, like Isaac and Elijah, so that it would be a throne of glory for that upper spirit. By their own will they became exhausted and slackened their hands from that rectification, as Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, reproved them for this. He

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

year, and so forth; see there. "As we shall mention": in this chapter.

"Those who make My covenant," and so forth: the end of the verse is said of them either because "they were able," and so forth—that is, because they were covenant partners of the blessed Name even in slaughtering and eating meat to satisfy their appetite. Their slaughter was for the sake of Heaven, and enjoyment arose above from their eating, for when nourishment is found below, nourishment is found above, as explained in the Zohar, section Va-Yiqra, page 9. The verse means that they made a covenant with the blessed Name even over their slaughtering and eating in this world. "In the sense of peace-offering sacrifices": these are so named because they make peace among the company above and the company below, as explained in several places in the Zohar. In Va-Yiqra, page 15, it says: "Because peace is found among those above and those below." The reason is that the owners eat and raise a pleasing fragrance above. See also the Zohar, section Phinehas, pages 101 and 102.

"Or because making the covenant": alternatively, the verse means they made a covenant by sacrificing themselves through their death in the wilderness, to atone for the whole world. Israel had incurred destruction in the wilderness, as the LORD said, “I shall strike them with pestilence,” and so forth. This is “over a sacrifice”: over their own sacrifice, their willing death. “In Midrash Rabbah”: concerning “Your garments did not wear out upon you,” Rabbi Eliezer son of Rabbi Shimon ben Yohai asked Rabbi Shimon ben Yose, and so forth, “Did moths not eat them?” He answered: “If worms did not rule over them at their death, how much more so during their life.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“This can be understood”: the claim that the wilderness generation's greatness was such that worms did not rule over them admits a lenient and a stringent aspect. The stringent aspect is that a person's sin is reckoned according to the abundance of his stature and excellence: “according to the camel is the burden.” The more perfect a person is, the more he ought to guard against sin. This is what the sages said: the Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting with the righteous to the breadth of a hair. Therefore the verse “Your corpses,” and so forth, may also be expounded both leniently and stringently. “See the Zohar, section Shelah informed them that indeed the corpses would fall, whereas “you yourselves” implies that they would endure, for they would live again after their bodies fell. The expression also includes the difficulty of separation, to complete their cleansing: you stand healthy and sound, and suffer the falling of your bodies. It also hints that it would be reckoned as great merit if they fell willingly in atonement for their souls. So they did: on the night of the Ninth of Av they went out to dig, as the sages say in the Jerusalem Talmud at the end of Taaniyot.

Rema of Fano - continued

It is known that the affair of the spies was reckoned as the community's sin, a second offense, for the calf had preceded it. Concerning the calf they said in aggadah that from its middle toward its head it was in the form of an ox eating grass. This is a restrictive expression, for its mouth is discriminating: it selects what it eats, unlike a donkey which eats thorns, as appears in the chapter Tolin. Toward its tail it was a donkey. These are two powers in the qelippah, corresponding to Yunus and Yumbrus, Balaam's sons. Of this hybrid they said, “These are your gods, Israel.” Their counterparts in holiness are “Behold, Aaron and Hur are with you.” The latter, however, had mediation through the elders who sat at the place of assembly, for a court must not be evenly balanced. Even when the head of the court is elsewhere, the place of assembly is what matters. The former had no mediation and caused corruption.

When Hur died, Aaron built an altar

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Lekha”: there “your corpses” is expounded leniently concerning the nullification of the evil inclination, as mentioned; I copied its wording above.

“However”: the verse “Your corpses,” and so forth, may also be expounded stringently. From their praiseworthy qualities Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, reproved their fault, as he shortly concludes. Their dying before entering the Land of Israel was also because of their greatness: the land could not bear the immense light of their holiness. We find this concerning Elijah, of blessed memory, of whom the Zohar, section Va-Yiggash, page 426, says that the Holy One told him, “The world cannot bear you among human beings”; see there. “Just as”: the reason is that Israel's souls had already flown away at Sinai when the Torah was given, as the sages say in the chapter Rabbi Akiva concerning “My soul departed when he spoke.” Afterward, only their spirit from the upper world returned, and the world could not bear it. This is also the reason concerning Elijah, as will be explained.

“Isaac's soul flew away”: as it is said in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer and in the Zohar, section Noah, cited shortly. “Phinehas's soul”: as explained in the Zohar, section Phinehas, page 398. “Know”: having mentioned the flight of Isaac's soul, the master also explains what is connected with it. “The ram took bodily form”: Isaac's soul, which had flown away from him, entered the ram created on the eve of the Sabbath at twilight, as we teach in Avot. The ram had been created only potentially; through Isaac's soul it took actual bodily form. “Therefore it is called” in the Mishnah there and elsewhere “our father Abraham's ram”: because his son Isaac's soul was in it, the ram was reckoned as his and as belonging to him. It did not belong to Isaac, who had already died when the ram came before himself to strengthen the aspect of holy lovingkindness. “Aaron proclaimed and said: A festival to the LORD.” He sought mercy for the fast of the fourth month, that it should become joy and gladness. There is nothing in the Prophets that is not hinted at in the Torah. Nevertheless, since the world is judged according to its majority, it was unquestionably the congregation's sin. From then on we became obliged to remove our ornament from Mount Horeb, for from it come the issues of life: freedom from the Angel of Death, as will be explained in the next chapter. That was only a preparation for death; here actual death followed, in the sense of mot tamut, “you shall surely die,” for the reward of a transgression is a transgression, and in the sense of “On the day I visit, I shall visit.” But He is merciful and will atone.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

into actuality; there is no acquisition after death, so it is inappropriate to call it Isaac's ram. “The intended purpose”: that is, the ram.

“As we teach”: they would not tie up the burnt offering, but bind it. The Mishnah there will be further explained, and the binding was fulfilled in Isaac son of Abraham. “See the discourse Em Kol Hai”: Part III, section 32. There the matter of the upper aspect in the binding is explained; the wording here is uncertain. Therefore Abraham also bound the ram, which, like Isaac, was created through judgment. [TN040013] “And there was performed upon it”: as the sages say in Genesis Rabbah, section

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Va-Yera, concerning “He offered it as a burnt offering in place of his son.” The citation also mentions section Shelah Lekha. What does “in place of his son” mean? Abraham said: “Master of the worlds, may You regard it as though Isaac's blood were sprinkled before You.” He took the ram and skinned it, saying, “Thus may You regard it as though I had skinned Isaac before You.” He took it and bent it over, saying, “Thus may You regard it,” and so forth; see there. The reason is that Isaac's soul was within it.

“From what is said”: the master now concludes the reason the world could not bear Elijah and the generation of knowledge. In the Zohar, section Noah, page marked קמ”ע in this source, it says: “Why is ‘Noah, Noah’ written twice? Every righteous person in the world has two spirits: one spirit in this world and one in the world to come. So you find concerning all the righteous: ‘Moses, Moses’; ‘Jacob, Jacob’; ‘Abraham, Abraham’; ‘Samuel, Samuel.’ The exception is Isaac, of whom it is not written as it is of them, because when Isaac was brought upon the altar, the soul he had in this world departed. When Abraham said to him, ‘Blessed is He who revives the dead,’ the soul of the world to come returned to him.” The reference is to Binah, the upper world, and Malkhut, the lower world. Every righteous person has two souls, one from Binah and one from Malkhut, the Shekhinah among the lower beings. The latter did not return to Isaac. [TN040014]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“We learn concerning Phinehas and the generation of knowledge”: after their souls left them and the spirit of this world departed, it did not return to them again. Only the spirit of the upper world returned and gave them life. Consequently they did not return to their former strength, to live according to the nature of this world, to the point that the world could not bear them. “The exceptions”: Joshua and Caleb, who did not participate in the counsel of the spies. Concerning them it is fitting to recite “The kings assembled; they passed together” (Psalm 48), which Genesis Rabbah, section Va-Yiggash, expounds concerning Judah and Joseph; see there. These two also attained the spirit of this world.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Caleb” merited the spirit of this world, as it is written of him, “Because another spirit was with him, and he fulfilled after Me.” The meaning is that another spirit from the lower world, which he had at first, was now with him as well. “As it is said”: calling it “another” is along the lines of “May the LORD add another son for me.” Rachel intended by this her own quality, the mistress of the house, the lower world, from which [gap], and she would be built up further. See the Zohar, section Va-Yetze, pages 364–365. “Which he merited in Hebron”: when he went to pray at the graves of the patriarchs, as the sages say concerning “He came as far as Hebron.” In the Zohar, page 302, they also expound it concerning the Shekhinah, who entered there; see there. Both are true. There Caleb cleaved to the Shekhinah who entered there, just as Joshua also merited the spirit of this world, which came to him from her place.

“He fulfilled after Me”: the end of the verse therefore says this, because he completed the aspect of the backs, the levels of the Shekhinah called “after Me,” together with the awesome faces, Binah and Tiferet. Thus va-yemalle means that he filled and completed the aspect called aharai, “after Me.” “From Joseph”: this returns to the earlier statement, “The exceptions were the kings,” and so forth; that is, the further exception was Joshua, who came from Joseph. “Moses our teacher joined the Shekhinah with him” in the mission, as the Zohar, section Shelah Lekha, page 301, says concerning “Moses called Hoshea son of Nun Joshua”: “Rabbi Abba said: Since he sent him to enter there, he had to be complete. Through what? Through the Shekhinah. Until that time he had been called a youth, as we have established. At that moment Moses bound him to her,” and so forth; see there. Since the Shekhinah was with him, that spirit he had from her certainly returned to him.

“Which precedes every gathering of ten”: the Zohar means that he called him Joshua because of the Shekhinah to whom he bound him, through the yod that hints at her, as the sages say: to every gathering of ten she precedes and comes. “In her honor”—the

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shekhinah's—“he would not depart from within the tent.” In the Zohar, section Be-Shallah, page 116, concerning “Your eyes shall see Jerusalem, a peaceful dwelling, a tent that shall not be moved,” it says: “The Jerusalem above, called ‘a tent that shall not be moved’ ... This is the mystery of ‘Joshua son of Nun, a youth’: certainly a youth, who would not depart from within that tent called ‘a tent that shall not be moved.’ This teaches that each and every day he would draw sustenance from the Shekhinah. Just as that youth above would not depart from within the tent and draws sustenance from it continually, so this youth below would not depart from within the tent and draws sustenance from it continually,” and so forth; see there. Just as Metatron, the youth above, would not depart from the Shekhinah, called Tent, Jerusalem, the quality of Malkhut, so Joshua below would not depart.

“It is proper”: the master now concludes the stringent exposition of “Your corpses.” It was proper to use this expression concerning them even while they were alive, because at Mount Sinai they had already become bereft of the spirit of this world, which did not return to them. “He said ‘you yourselves’”: you yourselves caused the condition of “your corpses,” for after the spirit of this world departed they had the power to become like Elijah as well. “As Moses our teacher reproved them for this”: his statement “your corpses, you yourselves” is a rebuke, the stringent interpretation already mentioned.

“He informed them” further that the corpses would indeed fall. He therefore said “they shall fall,” not “you shall fall,” as the cited Zohar asks. “They shall fall” refers back to “your corpses,” while “you yourselves,” said afterward, expresses endurance: your corpses shall fall, but you endure after the corpses fall. “The expression also includes”: the words “you yourselves” convey the difficulty of their separation, their bodies' falling while they were in great strength, healthy and sound, without illness. Thus “your corpses, you yourselves” emphasizes the difficulty of the separation: your corpses fall while you remain yourselves, in your strength and health, since “you yourselves” hints at endurance. “To complete their cleansing”: so that their iniquity would be completely cleansed. “It also hints”: secondly, “you yourselves” indicates that the meaning is as though it said, “Your corpses shall fall by your own will.” “In the Jerusalem Talmud”: I copied this above.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It is known”: in expounding the affair of the spies, the master also expounds the calf, the first offense. “They said concerning it in aggadah”: in Tiqqunim, folio 160, its wording here is: “When they made the calf, Moses sat ... Israel made it,” and so forth; “immediately the spirit descended, a calf engraved with ox and donkey,” and so forth; see there. The Zohar, section Ki Tissa, contains a similar account, which will be cited shortly. [TN040015] “This is a restrictive expression”: the master explains why Scripture specifies “eating grass” in “They exchanged their glory for the form of an ox eating grass.” It indicates that from its middle upward it was an ox, not a donkey. “Eating grass” is restrictive: it does not eat thorns, excluding the donkey, which does eat thorns. As they say in Shabbat, chapter Tolin (folio 140), the teaching that one may remove food from before an animal with an indiscriminate mouth applies to a donkey, which does not select what it eats, and one may place it before an animal with a discriminating mouth, namely a cow, which does select what it eats. Rashi explains “does not select what it eats” as eating thorns and thistles.

“These are two powers in the qelippah”: as explained in the Zohar, section Va-Yishlah, page 323, concerning “I have ox and donkey”; section Shemot, page 7; and section Be-Shallah, page 114, concerning “those who send forth the feet of the ox and the donkey.” “These are the two crowns of the left. When Israel is worthy, they send them away, and they cannot rule over them. This is ‘those who send forth the feet of the ox and the donkey’: they do not rule over them. Rabbi Abba said: When they join together, the people of the world cannot stand against them. Therefore it is written, ‘You shall not plow with an ox and a donkey together’—‘together’ precisely,” and so forth. See also section Shelah Lekha, page 310.

“Corresponding to Yunus and Yumbrus”: the cited folio of Tiqqunim and several places in the Zohar, section Ki Tissa and section Balaq, page 359, explain that Yunus and Yumbrus were Balaam's two sons, chiefs of Pharaoh's sorcerers and leaders of the mixed multitude, who made the calf through their sorcery. In Ki Tissa, page 336, concerning “He took it from their hands,” the quoted wording here says: “Nullified, for corresponding to the side,” and so forth, [gap], “theirs, by their names, and they draw down workings of spirit from the side” [gap], “into the male, and one from the female, and he included both together.” He hinted at them all, saying “These are your gods,” as appears there. When the two forms emerged, it was written “These are your gods, Israel.” It does not say “this,” but “these”: there were two that became one. “Who brought you up from the land of Egypt”: it is written he'elukha, plural, rather than he'elkha, singular. [TN040016]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Their counterparts in holiness are ‘Behold, Aaron’”: the aspect of lovingkindness; “and Hur”: the aspect of judgment, as explained in the Zohar, section Huqqat, page 345. “The latter had mediation”: the matter of mediation is known. Tiferet mediates between Gedullah and Gevurah, lovingkindness and judgment, includes both, and is the line of mercy. The same applies to the other mediating qualities. It is also known that Moses is the quality of Tiferet, in the mystery of mediation. At the end of the section Mishpatim it is written: “Moses arose, and Joshua his servant, and Moses ascended the mountain of God. To the elders he said: Remain here for us until we return to you. Behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; whoever has a matter should approach them.”

This needs explanation. Since Moses wanted anyone with a matter to approach Aaron and Hur, why and for what purpose did he tell the elders, “Behold, Aaron and Hur are with you,” as though they too participated in this? The master's resolution is that the elders would be the mediators, sitting in his place at the place of assembly, which is decisive. As we say concerning the court in the Mishnah in the last chapter of Rosh Hashanah, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai instituted another provision concerning testimony: even if the head of the court is anywhere else, the witnesses should go only to the place of assembly. Therefore he told them, “Behold, Aaron and Hur are with you.” A court must not be evenly balanced: you stand in my place at the place of assembly to decide every dispute and every affliction. The adjoining connective wording in this source is awkward; the point continues that one with a matter should approach them as judges,

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

while you serve as mediators. In the hidden interpretation too, the elders, like Moses, mediate between Aaron, the quality of lovingkindness, and Hur, the quality of judgment. [TN040017]

But the former, Yunus and Yumbrus, had no mediation, for there is no mediation in the qelippah and impurity, as stated above. They therefore envied holiness and imagined becoming like it, and they caused corruption through a form combining ox and donkey, so that they too would have mediation. “When Hur died,” leaving Aaron alone, Aaron thought to strengthen his own quality, lovingkindness, thereby, and built an altar in its name. This is “Aaron saw”—he saw that Hur had been killed, as the sages say—“and built an altar before him”: that is, before himself, for the quality of lovingkindness.

“Aaron proclaimed”: incidentally, the master explains the verse “He said” and its words “A festival to the LORD tomorrow” as hinting at the future. He sought mercy for the following day, which, as is known, was the seventeenth of Tammuz, that in the future it should become joy and gladness, as it is written, “The fast of the fourth month shall become joy and gladness for the house of Judah.” “Nevertheless”: although Aaron and those accompanying him did not sin, as mentioned. “That”: the Angel of Death was only a preparation for death, whereas here, through the calf and the two qelippot, actual death followed. Therefore we became obliged to remove our ornament, through which we had been free of the Angel of Death. “In the sense” of the doubling in mot tamut, explained above in chapter 5: one expression indicates preparation for death, and the second indicates actual death. “And in the sense of ‘On the day I visit, I shall visit,’” said concerning the calf's sin: there are two visitations, one for the transgression and one for its reward, which is also a transgression, in that they incited the Angel of Death against themselves. But He is merciful, will atone for iniquity and will not destroy, as He promised us: “He will swallow up death forever,” and so forth. Amen.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The nullification of the nullifier”: this is the accuser, as above. “Your corpses, you yourselves”: “your corpses” means the accuser; “you yourselves”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

means that you shall fall in the wilderness. The adjoining wording about diminution and the greatness of the wilderness generation is uncertain. They were called the generation of knowledge, for they merited, and so forth. “They merited seeing what is heard at Sinai”: in the sense of “All the people saw the sounds.” “At the sea they said, ‘This is my God, and I shall glorify Him’”: even little children saw the Holy One, blessed be He, and pointed with a finger. [TN040018]

“From this Rabbi Akiva learned that they have no need to return in the world to come”: they already saw the Holy One now, as will be stated below. “So that it might serve as atonement for them”: Rabbi Akiva therefore spoke of them in language admitting two interpretations, so that they might receive atonement. The same applies to the three kings, who “have no share in the world to come,” and to the first account of the calf, which we read and translate: this is so that it may serve as atonement for them. Afterward Rabbi Yohanan said, and so forth. “They pointed to Him with a finger in this world: ‘Behold, this is our God’”: Rabbi Akiva therefore said they have no need, since they had already seen God.

As related in the Gemara, Taanit, Rabbi Eliezer decreed the recitation of twenty-four blessings, but rain did not come. Rabbi Akiva stood and said “Our Father, our King,” and was answered. They said it was not because he was greater, but because he passed over his own qualities. That is, Rabbi Akiva came from the source denoted here by the uncertain word הכרא, as stated in the Ari's intentions. Therefore the Gemara says it was not because he was greater, but because he passed over his qualities. He came from a wicked person and passed beyond his qualities: the wicked quality from which he came became good. Rabbi Eliezer did not need this, for he was pious of himself. “Therefore he was answered first,” the source concludes; see there. [TN040019]

“Gather to Me My faithful ones, who acknowledged the justice of the judgment”: Heaven's judgment, and they died willingly. That is, they surrendered their lives of their own free will for the sanctification of the Name. “Those who make My covenant over a sacrifice”: how can “over” apply

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

here, above Him? He therefore gives what the source calls three interpretations of these words. The first is that they were covenant partners of God in a world containing the slaughter of peace offerings, making peace among the company above through their good deeds. Alternatively, “those who make My covenant over a sacrifice” means that they sacrifice themselves to atone for the world. Consequently the meaning of slaughter here is the slaughter in which they sacrifice themselves to atone for the world. [TN040020]

“This can be understood leniently and stringently, for according to the camel is the burden”: for the righteous alone it is good in its ordinary sense, that they should have no suffering; for the wicked it is stringent. As written in the Zohar, section Shelah Lekha, as long as the flesh remains, they continue judging him above. He therefore says “according to the camel is the burden”: one application for the righteous, another for the wicked. Examine this carefully; the source appends the reference מ”א פ”ח. [TN040021]

“However, the earth could not bear them”: if the wilderness generation possessed such greatness, why did they not enter the Land of Israel, and why did the land not bear them? He answers that it resembles what the sages said of Elijah. “Just as Isaac's soul flew away at the binding, so Israel's souls flew away at Sinai”: the matter is as follows. When the Holy One, blessed be He, said “I am” and “You shall have no other,” their souls flew away. They could not bear the soul they possessed at that time, for the human being was full of the holy spirit. Afterward, when their bodily souls flew away, they were given a spirit from above. When they made the calf, “the pollution?” returned to them as at first; the following expression about cessation is insecure. They had surrounding light. Initially the body was a garment for the soul, and the soul was internal light for the body; afterward, when it flew away, the soul became surrounding light, “without ... without? blended” [uncertain wording]. Thus, in relation to the soul, its light surrounds the body. The surrounding light was greater than the internal light, so the land could not bear them because of the abundance of surrounding light. This also explains the word “bear”: the land could not sustain them because of their surrounding light.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

[TN040022]

But there is a difficulty: Elijah did not die, and his light was internal rather than surrounding; why could the world not bear him? He answers that Elijah had a mantle, as it is said, “He wrapped his face in his mantle.” Therefore the world could not bear him because of the abundance of his light. “From the flight of Isaac's soul the ram took bodily form”: when Isaac was bound upon the altar, the soul he then had departed and entered the ram, which had been created on the eve of the Sabbath potentially but not actually. Now, through his soul, it became actual. Concerning this, the eminent teacher designated here מו”רל מלבני explained, “God will provide for Himself the lamb for a burnt offering, my son”: the lamb that would be offered was literally his son, through the power of the soul that came to it at the binding. [TN040023]

“Therefore it is called Abraham's ram, which belonged to him”: Isaac at that time resembled a dead person, for his soul departed and entered the ram. Isaac has no acquisition in the grave, whereas it belonged to Abraham. “The ram too was created through judgment”: like Isaac, who belongs to the attribute of judgment. “Skinning and dismemberment were performed upon it, as with the daily offerings, as though Isaac were slaughtered and burned”: through the power of Isaac's soul, which made it resemble him. “The spirit of the lower world took bodily form as stated”: that soul entered the ram, as above.

“We learn concerning Phinehas and the generation of knowledge that they did not return” to the natural life of this world: when their souls returned after flying away at the giving of the Torah or at the incident of Zimri, this was not according to the nature of this world, but as an additional soul from the upper world. Although through their sin it became surrounding light, as above, they could not enter the Land of Israel, except for Caleb and Joshua. “‘Those who walk assembled; they passed together,’” as the lemma reads here: Caleb and Joshua, who were not in the spies' counsel. “Caleb, who came from Judah, and merited it in Hebron”: he went to Abraham's grave; Eliezer was there, and Caleb was Eliezer's reincarnation. Just as Eliezer was a faithful servant, so Caleb was a faithful envoy to the one who sent him. Therefore it says, “Because another spirit was within him.” In the Ari's intentions it is said that the ten tribes were reincarnated in the ten spies, as “heads of the children of Israel” says—“Israel” precisely. This refers to the soul he had, or to Eliezer's reincarnation, as mentioned. [TN040024]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“He fulfilled after Me, completing the aspect of the faces together with the awesome backs”: the latter is judgment from the side of the qelippot, while the face is mercy. “From Joseph there was Joshua son of Nun, until Moses our teacher joined the Shekhinah with him”: this is Metatron, who is called a youth; everywhere the Shekhinah clothes herself in Metatron. “To every gathering of ten she precedes and comes”: why, in truth, does the Shekhinah come first, or what is hinted at here? The explanation is written in Tiqqunim, tiqqun 20. Ten times ten is qof, one hundred; nine times nine is eighty-one; and similarly all of them, in the sequence the source describes as “up to the yod.” Their total is the numerical value of SHEKHINAH. Thus “every gathering of ten” means each grouping of the ten letters preceding the yod: the Shekhinah comes in her numerical value, the value of SHEKHINAH. [TN040025]

“In her honor he would not depart”: in honor of the Shekhinah. “It is proper concerning all the rest of that generation”: the generation of knowledge in the wilderness. The verse “your corpses, you yourselves” applies even while you are alive. Even while you are in this world, it is still appropriate to say “your corpses,” with respect to the spirit of this world, for they could have purified themselves, and so forth, but willingly became exhausted. Alternatively, the verse means: “your corpses”—although your persons become corpses, nevertheless “you yourselves”: we read “you yourselves” as meaning that you endure. Therefore he says, “Indeed the corpses shall fall, whereas you yourselves,” and so forth. “The expression also includes,” another interpretation, “to complete their cleansing”: the falling of “your corpses” comes from your own strength; you yourselves bear the falling of the bodies.

“Concerning the calf they said in aggadah that from its middle toward its head it was an ox, and toward its tail a donkey.” Why does it say “eating grass,” specifically grass? It is restrictive: its mouth is discriminating and selects what it eats, unlike a donkey, which eats thorns. “These are two powers in the qelippah”: in impurity. “Of this hybrid they said, ‘These are your gods, Israel’”: because the calf was ox and donkey, it is forbidden to plow with this mixed pair, as in “You shall not plow with ox and donkey together.” Concerning this, the abbreviated attribution here introduces an explanation of the Mishnah: “On the first of Adar they announce concerning the shekels and concerning mixed kinds.” These are hinted at in the shekels because of the calf, in the sense “Let the gold of the Tabernacle come and atone for the making of the calf”; the calf is also mixed kinds, as stated. These two matters are therefore mentioned together. [TN040026]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Their counterparts in holiness are ‘Behold, Aaron and Hur are with you’”: the matter is this. Aaron is the aspect of lovingkindness, the high priest, which is Abraham's quality, and he corresponds to the donkey of the calf, for God made this corresponding to that. Abraham was first called ABRAM, equated here with נג”ס; afterward ABRAHAM is equated in the transmitted wording with “oven, womb?” and HMR, “donkey,” written without vav. [TN040027] Its counterpart in the qelippah is a harmful donkey, Ishmael. Therefore Rabbi Phinehas ben Yair's donkey was stolen, to rectify Ishmael's soul, among whose people there are thieves. Rabbi Phinehas was a spark of Abraham; consequently the donkey is on the right, with Aaron corresponding to it. This is also the mystery of Balaam's she-ass; see the Book of Creation. In holiness there is an ox corresponding to the left, “a bull with horns,” and “bulls,” in the source's expression. Why is there an ox on the left? Because PAR, “bull,” has the numerical value of MANTZEPAKH, and these are the 280 judgments, as is known to the sages of truth; it is therefore on the left. [TN040028]

This is in holiness. Its counterpart on the Other Side is a forewarned ox, from which one keeps as far away as the eye can see. Esau is the forewarned ox, for spelling out Esau's three letters, ayin, shin, vav, gives the numerical value of SHOR, “ox.” It consequently corresponds to Isaac. This is the mystery of what Jacob sent to Esau: “I have ox and donkey.” HUR, written without vav, has the numerical value of ISAAC.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“The latter had mediation through the elders”: the elders were also there; why then mention Aaron and Hur? Because the elders mediated, and so forth. “The former had no mediation and caused corruption”: mediation means the following. In the holy qualities, Hokhmah and Binah have Daat as mediation; Gedullah and Gevurah have Tiferet as mediation; Netzah and Hod have Yesod as mediation. On the Other Side, however, they have no mediation. The speaker designated here by an unresolved abbreviated attribution asked: Scripture says of Balaam, “He knows the knowledge of the Most High,” implying that they possess Daat; how then can we say they have no mediation? He answered: he knew “upper knowledge,” meaning when Daat ascended above into Keter and did not function as mediation. “Upper” is precise. Ordinary Daat functioning as mediation he did not know. [TN040029]

He further said: this is what we say in the Gemara, that if not for the vav in he'elukha, “who brought you up,” no survivor or fugitive would have remained of Israel's enemies. This too concerns that mystery. The word “these” is plural, as in “these ordinances,” “these words.” Had they, Heaven forbid, used the singular in “brought you up,” they would at that moment have given those powers mediation, and the powers would have ruled and prevailed over them, Heaven forbid, leaving none of their enemies, and so forth. This is the intention of “El, Elohim, the LORD,” and so forth: El is lovingkindness, Elohim judgment, and the divine Name is mercy, which mediates. This is “He spoke and summoned the earth,” giving them endurance. Therefore it says “from the rising of the sun to its setting”: Moses mediates and is called the sun, “Moses' face is like the sun.” The adjoining words א”ל משה are retained as an uncertain connective. [TN040030]

This is also the intention of the verse concerning Korah, who said, “For the entire congregation are all holy, and the LORD is among them; why do you exalt yourselves?” That is, the Name YHWH, which is mediation, is among them. He was contending against Moses, for Moses was the true mediation: Jacob on the outside, Moses on the inside. Moses' face is like the sun; he is Tiferet and mediation. Korah wanted to abolish this, saying, “All are holy, and YHWH,” the mediation, “is among them.” This is what Moses intended when he said, “Therefore you and all your congregation who gather against the LORD—and Aaron, what is he,” and so forth. He hinted that Korah was contesting the mediation, saying “the LORD is among them” to abolish Moses' mediation. If so, “Aaron, what is he that you complain against him?” Aaron belongs to lovingkindness, not mediation; why complain against him and speak in the plural, “you exalt yourselves”? Thus far.

I heard in the name of my teacher, Rabbi Jacob of Lublin, peace be upon him, that it is as follows. Moses is Abel's rectification, and Aaron is Cain's, as the Ari wrote. Moses therefore said: As for your contending against me, that is understandable, for we already contended as Abel and Cain. But “Aaron, what is he that you complain against him?” He is your own rectification. Examine this there carefully.

Therefore the sacred periods of the year also follow this arrangement in relation to them, without mediation. Nisan belongs to Israel, mercy; Iyyar is judgment; Sivan, the Twins, is our mediation. But Tammuz and Av belong to them and have no mediation. Elul belongs to our mercy, so that they should not have mediation. “From Aram Balak led me”: ARAM is an acronym for fire [esh], wind [ruah], water [mayim]. IM RA is given as an acronym for fire, wind, water and earth [afar]; its precise letter arrangement is not explained here. [TN040031]

“When Hur died, Aaron built an altar and said, ‘A festival to the LORD,’ seeking mercy for the fast of the fourth month, that it should become joy and gladness”: on the sixteenth of Tammuz the tablets were broken, according to this commentary's transmitted date. In the future the Ninth of Av will become a festival, and the sixteenth of Tammuz likewise. Therefore he prayed, “A festival to the LORD tomorrow,” in the world to come. [TN040032] “In the sense of mot tamut,” the doubling of death: before the calf they were sentenced to death initially [gap]; now, mot tamut, for the reward of a transgression is also a transgression. But He is merciful and will atone.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 8

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 9 (ט)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"After they heard": having mentioned the removal of the ornament in the preceding chapter, the master further explains what relates to it here. After the calf episode, in Ki Tissa, Scripture says: "The LORD spoke to Moses: Go, ascend from here," and so forth; "I shall send an angel before you," and so forth; "for I shall not ascend in your midst, because you are a stiff-necked people, lest I consume you on the way. The people heard this evil word and mourned, and no man put his ornament upon himself. The LORD said to Moses: Say to the children of Israel: You are a stiff-necked people; were I to ascend in your midst for one moment, I would consume you. Now remove your ornament from yourself," and so forth. "The children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornament from Mount Horeb. Moses would take the tent," and so forth. This certainly requires explanation. Since Israel mourned on hearing the evil word and willingly refrained from putting on their ornaments, why did the divine word subsequently say, "Now remove your ornament"? What does "They stripped themselves" add, when they had already done so [gap], as "they mourned" says? Initially Scripture used the expression of removal; the concluding connective wording here is uncertain. The master explains all this in two ways. [TN040033]

"Yet they trusted": the master proposes, according to the first approach, that "no man put his ornament upon himself" applied only for the time being. The next clause is damaged: "for then [gap] they would remove them, a complete ornament, and did not bring it up [gap] only." Their intention was to adorn themselves with it again when their indignation passed. Therefore the blessed Name told them, "Now remove your ornament," entirely from your thought, without hope of adorning yourself with it again. [TN040034]

"For": Jonathan translated "For I shall not ascend in your midst" as "For it is impossible that I should

Rema of Fano

After our ancestors heard the evil word spoken to Moses concerning the sin of the calf, "For I shall not ascend in your midst," it is written, "They mourned, and no man put his ornament upon himself." Yet they trusted that the indignation would pass and they would again adorn themselves with it. For from the translation of Jonathan ben Uzziel we have learned two things encompassed by a single statement. The first is his wording, "It is impossible that I should remove the Shekhinah of My glory from among you." This is also what Onqelos translated. It refers to "who dwells with them amid their impurities": a hiding of the face, through the Shekhinah's clothing herself in holy separate beings, who in turn clothe themselves in external powers. Therefore Scripture precisely says "amid their impurities." He does not dwell in their impurity, God forbid: who would put a nazirite among drunkards, or a priest among graves? Rather, He dwells in that inward part outside which impurity is present because of them. We have already hinted at this in Part I, chapter 15. The second statement is, "But My glory shall not dwell in the habitation of your camps."

They mourned over the second interpretation, while the first offered them some consolation. Therefore this remove the Shekhinah of My glory from among you; but My glory shall not dwell in the dwelling of your camps." From this we learn that He indicated two things in the single statement "I shall not ascend in your midst." "What Onqelos also translated": "For I shall not remove My Shekhinah from you." "It refers": to the statement in the Day of Atonement service, "Thus shall he do for the Tent of Meeting which dwells with them amid their impurities." This means that the Shekhinah is with Israel even when they sin, but with the face hidden: she dwells within the holy angels, and these angels clothe themselves in the external powers that come into being from the pollution of sins, which breaks through and rises. The meaning here is likewise, "It is impossible that I should remove the Shekhinah of My glory from among you." Although you sin against your souls, My Shekhinah will nevertheless be present amid your impurity with the face hidden, through clothing herself in separate beings. "Holy separate beings": angels separate from matter.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Amid their impurities": it does not say "in their impurity." "Rather, He dwells in that inward part": within the impurity, was not reckoned as complete repentance, but as resembling the repentance of a hypocrite. For the essential mourning to which our sins and our ancestors' iniquities oblige us is not for fear of punishment. On the contrary, this very response provokes punishment against oneself and does not atone, in the sense of "I had no ease, and I had no quiet," said concerning Job. Rather, we must surrender ourselves wholeheartedly to death and desire it, to atone for the removal of the Glory from the house of our life. Then, from the moment of surrender, the statement "atonement for Me" applies truly to our souls in all its true interpretations. This is the meaning of "One who wishes to live should put himself to death," in the manner we have explained. When a person's resolve rests completely upon this, he both atones and receives atonement while still alive. All the more, after his death he can undoubtedly be numbered among those who bring righteousness to the many.

Rema of Fano - continued

Therefore Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, warned them and informed them, through the LORD's compassion, that they should remove their ornament entirely from their thoughts, for their own good. Let every pious person reflect upon this and take it to heart: someone who, in a day of good fortune, did not know how to justify Heaven's mercies through right conduct—and of whose wrongdoing it is written, "I shall reprove him with the rod of men"—how good and pleasant it is if on a day of adversity he acknowledges the justice of the judgment upon himself, without any

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

that is, within the angels, whose holiness forms a barrier, while the wicked walk about around them. The blessed Name dwells in that inward part, amid their impurities. "The second" thing learned from Jonathan's translation is his conclusion, "But My glory," and so forth: His blessed Glory itself was withdrawn from them. "They mourned over this second interpretation" [gap]; "there is no place from which I should remove the Shekhinah of My glory from among you" [gap], with the face hidden. They thought [gap] and would return to adorn themselves with their ornaments. [TN040035]

"Therefore their mourning was not reckoned as complete repentance": it concerned only the punishment, the blessed Omnipresent's withdrawal from them. The essential mourning that would help must be on account of the sin; the following expression concerning the Shekhinah is uncertain. As explained above, Part I, chapter 24, it must concern the sins that caused the punishment and be intended to atone for them. [TN040036] "In the sense of 'I had no ease,'" and so forth (Job 3): he said that because of terror and fear of punishment, "I had no ease," and so forth; from this "agitation came," for I was provoking punishment against myself. “Rather,” on the contrary, we must desire the punishment and surrender ourselves to death to atone, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Then it applies” also to our souls, which we surrender for the sanctification of His blessed Name, as the Holy One, blessed be He, said concerning the moon's diminution: “Bring atonement for Me,” as mentioned in Hullin, chapter Ellu Terefot. Surrendering our souls is reckoned as atonement for the upper holiness distant from us through the impurities of the children of Israel. “In all its interpretations”: to be explained in the discourse Em Kol Hai, Part I. “This is the meaning” of the sages' statement in tractate Tamid: “One who wishes to live,” and so forth. “In the manner we have explained”: surrendering oneself to death for the atonement of one's transgressions, for the sanctification of His Name in any event. “Then he atones”: for the upper holiness, as it were, blessed be He, and he himself receives atonement. “Among those who bring righteousness to the many”: his merit will protect Israel even after death. The adjoining phrase about an offering is other mental image. Concerning the righteous who fulfill this in themselves, it is undoubtedly true that in their death they are called living. Of them it is written, “He satisfies every living being with favor,” according to their souls' ascent at that moment to cleave to the supreme Will. It is written, “But his flesh shall ache over him, and his soul shall mourn over him.” This teaches concerning someone who mourns not over himself but over his iniquities, and rejoices in afflictions for Heaven's honor, that his flesh will not ache in his life or in his death; Heaven will have compassion so that he does not feel his suffering.

Rema of Fano - continued

Scripture records to their praise, “The children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornament.” This is more than taking it off, as Jonathan translates, “They emptied themselves.” They gave it up and no longer desired it at all, after seeing that their death was better than their life, along the lines of Isaiah's words, “Only through You shall we invoke Your name; the dead shall not live.” All the more so with the ornament's giving them up: this is the force of “their ornament” as the direct object, rather than “from their ornament.” Nahmanides has already explained this in connection with Genesis Rabbah, and it is the view of the first translator we mentioned, transmitted from Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi: that ornament made them free of the Angel of Death. Had they merely taken it off, this would have indicated accepting death lovingly if the LORD desired it, in the sense “with all your insecure; the point continues with one who wishes to live forever, atoning for the impurities of Israel even when he departs this world and is no longer here. [TN040037]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Therefore”: this concludes the argument. Since Israel mourned only over the punishment and consequently did not remove their ornaments altogether, but merely “did not put them on,” Moses our teacher warned them and conveyed, from His blessed mouth and through His compassion, fitting counsel: they should remove entirely from their thoughts the ornaments through which they had been free of the Angel of Death. They should not return to adorn themselves with them, but surrender themselves through this to death for the atonement of their iniquity, for their own good.

“Upon this”: incidentally, the master mentions counsel for someone who faces the judgment of one of the four deaths or something similar: how he should think, for his benefit. “Through right conduct”: in the day of his good fortune a person must [gap] his deeds and walk in the LORD's ways with special care, to justify Heaven's mercies upon him—why the LORD has done so much good for him. Someone who did not do this, and did not serve the LORD with joy and a good heart [gap], when adversity falls upon him as punishment for this, as it is said [gap], “I shall reprove him,” and so forth [gap], must acknowledge the justice of the judgment he brought upon himself, reversing his earlier failure to justify Heaven's mercies. [TN040038] “Without any mental image”: or other thought.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It is undoubtedly true” to say of them what the sages say: the righteous are called living in their death. In this very death, in which they die for the sanctification of the blessed Name, they are called living. “To the supreme Will”: the expression adjoining this is damaged. The recoverable explanation is that the blessed Name brings to every living being who surrenders for His Name's sanctification the will and influx from above, and the soul labors to cleave to it. [TN040039]

“In the sense of ‘But his flesh,’” and so forth (Job 14): “But his flesh shall ache over him”—when? When his soul mourns over him, that is, over his flesh crushed by afflictions. But someone who does not mourn over the afflictions and instead rejoices in them will find that his flesh no longer aches and he does not feel soul,” even if He takes your soul. But the emptying of which we spoke unquestionably means an intense desire to cleanse the iniquity through death in any event, like Rabbi Akiva, who longed for the occasion to arise when he could fulfill this verse.

Rema of Fano - continued

This was not without reason. It was fitting for him to atone for the exile of the Glory in Joseph's sale, according to each master's view: either for beginning the corruption with the statement “Behold, the master of dreams,” from which he came to the trial and proved more righteous than his predecessor, according to the approach of the Ari, of blessed righteous memory; or for involving the Shekhinah in concealing the sale. Blessed is He who knows whose height reached heaven in this matter. That longing was what arose in His blessed thought, and it was not sent back empty, in the sense “Let us fall into the LORD's hand, for His mercies are many.” Of this the heavenly voice said, “Fortunate are you, Rabbi Akiva, that your soul departed with ‘One.’” So it is written, “He is in one, and who can turn him back? What his soul desires, he does” (Job 23:13); “for he will complete my allotted portion” (Job 23:14), and many such things are with him. This is a reward beyond which none is higher, for this is what was shown to Moses our teacher as the reward for Rabbi Akiva's Torah, so great is it; let an empty-headed man gain understanding.

A further explanation is possible. Initially, “no man put his ornament upon himself” referred to each Israelite's

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

the suffering. See the discourse Yonat Elem, chapter 22. “Scripture records”: the master returns to explain the verse “They stripped themselves,” saying that Scripture seeks their good and praise. They did more than Moses had instructed. The wording here concerning the instruction to remove the ornaments is unstable; the argument is that they emptied themselves of them. Jonathan translates ve-itroqqenu, “they emptied themselves,” an expression used of something one does not desire at all. Once they saw that death was better than life, to atone for the removal of the Glory, they intensely desired death and entirely rejected the ornaments that made them free of the Angel of Death, as will be explained. [TN040040]

“Isaiah's words” (26): “LORD our God, other masters besides You have ruled us; only through You shall we invoke Your name; the dead shall not live,” and so forth. The Zohar, Shemot, page 14, expounds “Only through You shall we invoke Your name” concerning the removal of His blessed Glory from us; see there. The master says this is why the verse concludes, “The dead shall not live”: because of the Glory's removal, we are dead, and so forth. “All the more”: the source has a difficult negative formulation about Israel and the ornaments giving each other up; the following explanation makes the intended mutual abandonment explicit. [TN040041] “It does not say ‘from their ornament’”: according to the translation of “they stripped themselves” as “they emptied themselves,” it should have said “from their ornament.” Rather, they desired death with such extraordinary longing that their ornaments could no longer find them to adorn them.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Nahmanides also explained” that removing their ornaments was accepting death. He writes: “Onqelos, who translates the ornament as equipment of arms, follows the opinion in Midrash Rabbah that He girded Israel”—that is, the Holy One girded them at the giving of the Torah with weapons to save them from every injury and from the Angel of Death, as they expounded harut, “engraved,” upon the tablets as herut, “freedom,” from the Angel of Death. These were the Holy One's names. “Israel willingly accepted death upon themselves because of the punishment for the calf,” and so forth. See the Zohar there, page 339. It is explicit in Midrash Rabbah, section Pequdei:

Rema of Fano - continued

crown and testimony of “We shall do” and “We shall hear,” which six hundred thousand ministering angels tied upon them. These correspond to the sixty mighty ones who stand as guardians with Michael over Israel. Israel voluntarily treated themselves as under rebuke, withdrawing from those angels, in the sense of the Jerusalem Mishnah in Taaniyot: Simeon ben Shetah sent to Honi the Circle-Maker, “You need to place yourself under a ban.” This means good advice: although he did not take a formal decision against Honi, Honi should observe a condition of rebuke upon himself. This version thus completes the Babylonian version, and combining the two completes the correction given to the person concerned. The listeners will find it pleasing, for no variant reading is without significance.

Similarly, at the end of Ketubbot: “All may bring others up, but may not bring them out, men and women alike.” Some teach “women and slaves alike.” Both are valid: one concerns those who bring others up, and the other those who are brought up. There are many such cases. Let us return to the wilderness generation, who fulfilled in themselves Simeon ben Shetah's counsel. Each individual was entitled to impose this disadvantage upon himself. The community's crown, however, bestowed through the merit of their saying together with one voice “We shall do” alone, on two occasions—we shall discuss these in the chapters on image and likeness in Part IV of this discourse, with Heaven's help—they had not yet

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rabbi Shimon ben Yohai says, “He girded them with weapons, upon which the great Name was engraved. For as long as they possessed them, the Angel of Death could not rule over them,” and so forth. See the book Yefeh Toar there and in Ki Tissa. “The first translator”: Jonathan ben Uzziel, who translated the ornament as equipment of arms upon which the great and holy Name was engraved and expressly inscribed.

“Had they merely taken it off”: this would show their willingness that the ornaments which protected them from the Angel of Death should no longer help them. If the LORD wished to put them to death, they would be ready to accept death lovingly. It would not imply rejecting life even if the blessed Name did not decree their death. Their emptying, however, revealed the worthy resolve that they desired only to die for the atonement of their souls. “In the sense ‘with all your soul’”: the sages said, “even if He takes your soul.” If the blessed Name takes your soul, you should lovingly consent; but if He does not take it, you should also accept the good.

“Like Rabbi Akiva”: the exposition “even if He takes your soul” did not suffice for him. Rather, he longed for the blessed Name to take his soul in any event, saying, “All my days I was distressed over this verse ... When will the occasion arise for me to fulfill it?” as appears in the chapter Ha-Roeh. “Not without reason”: he desired death also to atone for the exile of the Glory, for the Shekhinah went into exile in Egypt with our father Jacob through Joseph's sale, as is known. Rabbi Akiva was one of the ten martyrs executed by the kingdom, reincarnations of the tribes, who bore their iniquities from Joseph's sale, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“According to one master's view”: Rabbi Akiva was Simeon's reincarnation, the Ari's approach. “According to the other master's view”: Rabbi Akiva corresponded to the Shekhinah, who assented to the ban imposed by the tribes. Either way, it was more fitting for Rabbi Akiva than for another to atone for the sale. Even if he corresponded to Simeon, Simeon required additional atonement because he initiated the corruption: “They said to one another: Behold, this master of dreams is coming. Now come, let us kill him,” and so forth. These were Simeon and Levi, as the sages say. “From which he came”: Rabbi Akiva came to the trial of being seized for removed. Through it they remained free of the Angel of Death until the divine word gave them fitting counsel, which they received graciously, as stated.

Rema of Fano - continued

In this light, the singular wording “Remove your ornament” is precise, as is “They stripped themselves of their ornament from Mount Horeb”: only now, not previously, did everything they had received from Horeb cease for them. Therefore one million two hundred thousand destructive angels descended and stripped them, for they accepted the doubled death according to all its sound interpretations. See our discourse Ha-Nefesh, chapter 28. This is the reason for doubling the number of these angels, who carry out the word of the Name ELOHIM in its 120 permutations. Corresponding to them, we require 120 people in a single city for it to be fit for a Sanhedrin.

Moses merited and took them all, as it is written, “Moses would take the tent,” for he was the first to surrender himself to death on their behalf. Moreover, holy things are not handed over to destructive angels, God forbid, as Rabbi Yeiva the Elder was careful to explain in the Zohar, Mishpatim, concerning “If she is displeasing in her master's eyes”; see the end of that section. Here too Moses took them to bequeath them to everyone who walks in his ways. Scripture demonstrates this, saying, “Everyone who sought the LORD,” and so forth. Through Moses, who is true, and his Torah, which is true, the Holy One, blessed be He, will restore them to Israel, as the discussion concludes in the execution because Simeon had said, “Now come, let us kill him.” “For involving the Shekhinah”: they included her in the ban concealing the sale from Jacob, as is known. “Blessed is the LORD who knows” the truth: whose height reached heaven, whether Rabbi Akiva stood for the Shekhinah or in Simeon's place.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“That was what arose in thought”: as appears in chapter 3 of Menahot concerning Rabbi Akiva. Moses said, “Master of the universe, You have shown me his Torah; show me his reward.” He answered, “Turn backward.” He saw Rabbi Akiva's flesh being weighed in the market. He said, “Master of the universe, is this Torah, and is this its reward?” He answered, “Be silent: thus it arose in thought before Me.” The intention is the Shekhinah, Malkhut, called Thought: Rabbi Akiva's longing to die arose in the Shekhinah because of her exile in Egypt. Therefore be silent, for I shall not send his longing back empty. “In the sense ‘Let us fall,’” and so forth: because His mercies are many, He will fulfill our requests and our wish to fall into the LORD's hand.

“Of this it was said”: as appears there in Ha-Roeh, meaning that your soul departed for the sake of “One,” namely the

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shekhinah's exile in Egypt. Then the union above was separated and was not called One, as appears in the Zohar, Va-Yiqra, at the page designated here אחד: "At the time male and female are called One," and so forth; "now the chapter Rabbi Akiva, from "The redeemed of the LORD shall return and come to Zion with song, and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads": the joy that was upon their heads from of old. We shall return to speak of these matters at the end of this Part, with Heaven's help.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Holy One is not called One. The mystery is that the Congregation of Israel is in exile, and the Holy One rises higher and higher, and the union is separated," and so forth; see there. Rabbi Akiva desired to die for this; this is "with One." It accords with all opinions. There is no need to interpret "with One" as "for the Shekhinah, who is one," as in the Book of Intentions, for that interpretation accords only with the opinion that Rabbi Akiva corresponded to the Shekhinah. [TN040042]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"So it is written, 'He is in one,'" and so forth (Job 23): while discussing his own suffering, Job also mentioned Rabbi Akiva's afflictions and death. He said concerning him, "He is in one": he desired death for the sake of One, the union of Tiferet and Malkhut. Who could turn him back from it, when his soul desired to die for this and he acted accordingly? "For he will complete my allotted portion": that of Tiferet and Malkhut, for hoq is a designation of them. "And many such things" of reward "are with him." See Yonat Elem, chapter 60. "This is a reward": therefore he said, "Fortunate are you, Rabbi Akiva," since his death itself is the reward beyond which none is higher. The proof is that when Moses asked, "Show me his reward," he was shown Rabbi Akiva's flesh being weighed in the market. His death itself is that very great and mighty reward.

"A further explanation is possible": the master returns to resolve the stated difficulty in a second way. Why tell Israel "Now remove your ornament" when they had already done so of themselves, "no man put his ornament upon himself"? One can further answer that the ornament consisted of the crowns six hundred thousand ministering angels tied on each Israelite at the giving of the Torah. Initially, "They did not put" referred to these. The community's crown still remained, through which they were free of the Angel of Death, until they were told "Now remove your ornament"; this will be explained. "And testimony": he interprets adi,

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"ornament," as related to edut, "testimony."

"Which they tied upon them": in the Gemara, chapter Rabbi Akiva, Rabbi Simai expounded: when Israel placed "We shall do" before "We shall hear," six hundred thousand ministering angels came and tied two crowns upon each individual, one corresponding to "We shall do" and one to "We shall hear." Once Israel sinned, one million two hundred thousand destructive angels descended and stripped them, as it is said, "The children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornament from Mount Horeb." "Corresponding to the sixty mighty ones": as appears in the midrashim, with its mystery in several places. "Who stand as guardians": as appears in the Zohar Hadash, section Lekh Lekha. "Israel treated themselves as under rebuke": by not putting on their ornaments, withdrawing from the angels who had tied them.

"In the sense of the Mishnah": in chapter 3 of Taanit, the Mishnah relates that they told Honi the Circle-Maker, "Pray that rain may fall," and so forth. Simeon ben Shetah sent to him: "If you were not Honi, I would decree a ban upon you; but what can I do," and so forth. This is the version in our Gemara. The Jerusalem version, however, has Simeon ben Shetah send, "You need to place yourself under a ban." His intention in sending these words was to give good counsel, so Honi would know to observe a condition of rebuke upon himself, although Simeon had not placed him under a ban. Thus "you need to be under a ban" means by your own action.

"This version": at first sight the two versions appear to disagree. In our Gemara "If you were not," and so forth, implies that he did not ban him, whereas the Jerusalem version seems to imply that he did, by sending “You need to be under a ban.” According to our interpretation, however, he sent good counsel, and there is no dispute. According to both, Simeon ben Shetah did not ban Honi. What our version lacks, the Jerusalem version supplies. Together they complete Simeon ben Shetah's corrective message: by sending “If you were not Honi,” he revealed that the matter warranted a ban; by sending “You need to be under a ban,” he advised Honi to observe rebuke upon himself. Thus the master incidentally opens up the interpretation of these variant readings.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Similarly, at the end of Ketubbot”: we teach, “All may bring others up to the Land of Israel, but not all may bring them out; all may bring others up to Jerusalem, but not all may bring them out, men and women alike.” The Gemara asks, “What does ‘all may bring up’ include? Slaves. According to the version explicitly teaching slaves, what does it include? From a good dwelling to a bad dwelling.” Rashi explains: “All may bring up”: a man may compel all his household to ascend and live with him in Jerusalem. “Men and women alike”: a wife too may compel her husband to ascend and dwell there, and so forth. “To include slaves”: if he has a Hebrew slave, the slave must follow him against his will.

The master says that both versions, the one that mentions slaves and the one that does not, are valid. One, our version which does not mention slaves, concerns those who bring others up; “all” refers to them. The tanna means that all may compel and bring others up to Jerusalem: men compel women, and women likewise compel men and bring them up. It is inappropriate to teach “slaves alike,” for Hebrew slaves cannot compel their masters to ascend. Otherwise every Hebrew slave could free himself from his master's authority by this means. The other version, explicitly mentioning slaves, concerns those who ascend. “All” means that everyone may be brought up to Jerusalem: men, women and slaves alike may be brought up and compelled to ascend. On this interpretation, “all” refers to those compelled to ascend, not to those compelling and bringing them up. These two versions therefore agree in substance, differing only in the interpretation of “all.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

You can see for yourself that the master disagrees with Rashi's explanation, “‘All may bring up’: a man may compel all his household,” and so forth, which makes “all” refer to those compelled to ascend rather than those bringing others up. For the master, this is correct only for the version explicitly mentioning slaves. It seems to me that Rashi explains it this way because the Gemara says, “‘All’ includes what? Slaves,” meaning that one compels them. Thus “all” refers to those ascending. He explains “women alike” as referring to those bringing others up—“a wife too may compel her husband”—because the Mishnah's plain progression is “not only this, but also that.” If it concerned those ascending, it should have stated the reverse order, “women and men alike,” since women's being brought up is more obvious than men's.

The master considers it strained to explain “all,” the general rule, as concerning those ascending, while explaining the particulars, “men and women alike,” as concerning those bringing others up. He prefers to explain “all” also as referring to those who bring others up. According to him, the Gemara's “to include slaves” must mean “to include the law concerning slaves,” namely their master, who brings them up. For the version explicitly mentioning slaves, the entire Mishnah concerns those ascending; that version does not include “men alike.” If it does include those words, one must say the teaching uses the progression “this, and it goes without saying that.” All this is how Rashi's and the master's positions appear to me.

Maimonides, however, in chapter 8 of the Laws of Slaves, has another opinion. He holds that this concerns Canaanite slaves, who can also bring their master up. The master's reasoning also accords with him, but in reverse: the version explicitly mentioning slaves concerns those bringing others up, according to the expression's plain meaning; the version including slaves through “all” concerns those ascending, interpreted as “everyone,” as stated.

“Simeon ben Shetah's counsel”: they treated themselves as under rebuke and “no man put his ornament upon himself.” These were the crowns of each individual, for each had the right to act thus and impose this disadvantage upon himself. “On two occasions": in Yitro it is written, "All the people answered together and said: Everything the LORD has spoken we shall do"; in Mishpatim, "All the people answered with one voice and said: Everything the LORD has spoken we shall do." Undoubtedly through these pure utterances they merited the communal crown. "They had not yet removed it": for they were not entitled to impose a disadvantage upon the community. "Until the divine word gave them counsel": "Now remove your ornament from yourself." "They received it graciously": "They stripped themselves," translated as "they emptied themselves," which is more than removal, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"In this light, it is precise": Scripture says edyekha in the singular, not adiyyekha with two yods in the plural, to indicate that it concerns the one communal ornament, not the ornaments received by each Israelite. Likewise "from Mount Horeb" is precise and now makes sense. Scripture did not mention this initially in "no man put his ornament upon himself," although it could have said "his ornament from Mount Horeb." Rather, as we explained, only now, when they also stripped off the communal crown, did all the freedom received from Horeb cease. Therefore "from Mount Horeb" is said here to indicate this. "Not previously": when no man put on his ornament, not everything received from Horeb had yet ceased, for the communal crown remained.

"Therefore": Tosafot in the chapter Rabbi Akiva explains that the number of destructive angels was doubled because the measure of goodness is greater than the measure of punishment. A good angel could tie two crowns, whereas a destructive angel had power to remove only one; see there. This does not fit the master's approach, which interprets "they stripped themselves of their ornament" as the one communal ornament. Six hundred thousand destructive angels would have sufficed, one per Israelite. Therefore the master says that their number was doubled because the people accepted upon themselves the doubled death in "On the day you eat from it, you shall surely die," as explained at the end of the preceding chapter, according to the two interpretations mentioned above in chapters 5, 6 and 7; see there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Who carry out His word": incidentally, the master mentions another reason. These one million two hundred thousand angels correspond to the 120 permutations of the Name ELOHIM, the attribute of judgment: its five letters produce 120 permutations. "Corresponding to" the Name ELOHIM's 120 permutations, we require 120 people, and so forth, as appears in the Mishnah at the end of chapter 1 of Sanhedrin. This is to sweeten the judgment of the 120 permutations: through 120 people, judgment and a Sanhedrin exist below; when there is judgment below, there is no judgment above, as is known.

"Moses merited them all": this is Rabbi Yohanan's statement there. The master says the reason was also that through the crowns Israel had been free of the Angel of Death. When the blessed Name desired to remove them from Israel and expend His arrows among them because of the calf's sin, Moses surrendered himself to death over this, saying, "If not, erase me, please," and so forth. Therefore, when they removed the crowns from themselves, Moses merited taking them. "Moreover, holy things are not handed over to destructive angels": Moses therefore had to take them. The Zohar, Pequdei, page 423, says concerning "Moses would take the tent": "Why? Because ... he was damaging among them," in a damaged wording here. Moses said, "The side of holiness must not dwell within the side of impurity." [TN040043]

"In the Zohar, Mishpatim": there the passage "If a man sells his daughter as a maidservant," and so forth, is expounded concerning a person's soul. At the end of that section, page 170, it says: "If she was not worthy, many foreign camps await on the road to Gehinnom. These are camps of destructive angels, ready to exact vengeance upon her. Scripture comes and teaches: 'He shall have no authority to sell her to a foreign people'—these are destructive angels. 'In his clothing her': this is a protection. The Holy One provides her with protection, so that a foreign people cannot rule over her, through the covering spread over her."

"To bequeath them": there Resh Laqish said that the Holy One will restore them to us, as it is said, "The redeemed of the LORD shall return," and so forth: the joy that was upon their heads from of old. The master explains that Resh Laqish comes to interpret Rabbi Yohanan's statement: Moses did not take them to remove them far away, but to bequeath them to all who seek the LORD and meditate upon His Name. Hence "the Holy One will restore them to us," through Moses and his Torah. "Scripture demonstrates this": "Moses would take the tent," and so forth, followed by "Everyone who sought the LORD would go out to the Tent of Meeting," and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Which is a hiding of the face": concerning their sin it is said, "I shall surely hide." "Through the Shekhinah's clothing herself in separate beings": these are the angels, who clothed themselves in the external powers. Therefore Scripture precisely says "amid their impurities," for He does not dwell, Heaven forbid, in their impurity: what has a priest to do in a cemetery? Rather, He dwells within; the inward part does not clothe itself in the impurity outside it. Within itself there is no impurity. Consequently "amid" means the inwardness, as stated. "Because of them": because of Israel, who sin.

"The second, 'But,'" and so forth: this is the second matter learned above from Jonathan ben Uzziel's translation. "They mourned over the second": that He told them His glory would not dwell in their habitation. The first statement, "It is impossible," and so forth, offered some consolation. Therefore their not putting on their ornaments was not reckoned as complete repentance but as hypocrisy and ulterior motive, for they consoled themselves with the first interpretation in the translation. In truth, the essential repentance and mourning over sins should not be like this, on account of punishment. On the contrary, this provokes punishment against oneself and does not atone, as stated above, Part I, chapter 24: fear of punishment is not repentance.

"To atone for the removal of the Glory": at the destruction, the Shekhinah ascended above and became distant from the house of our life. Moreover, "I am with him in distress": as it were, above she has no union. Through our good deeds below, feminine waters are formed and bring about union above. "Then the statement 'atonement for Me' applies": since she has no union except through the surrender of our souls, he literally brings atonement "for Me," as it were, enabling union above. "This is the meaning of 'One who wishes to live should put himself to death'": through surrendering his soul and intending death, he lives from it, as stated. "Then he atones and receives atonement": he atones for the Shekhinah, as it were, and he too receives atonement through that repentance at the same moment.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Therefore Moses our teacher warned them to remove their ornament entirely from their thought": by surrendering his soul and removing alien thought, it is good for them. "Let every pious person reflect and take it to heart": he should perform this repentance, contemplating this union, as stated. "Someone who did not know in a day of good fortune": a day when he had not sinned. "To justify Heaven's mercies": bringing about union above through the right deeds he performed below. "Of whose wrongdoing": he then comes to sin. "How good it is if he acknowledges the justice, on a day of adversity": on that day of adversity when he sinned, he should perform complete repentance as though his soul were being taken from him.

"Concerning these righteous," through "in their death they are called living": in surrendering his soul he becomes dead at that moment, and in that death he is called living. "Of them it is written, 'He satisfies every living being with favor'": because he intends death in order to cleave to the supreme Will. The verse means: He satisfies every living being—which person? One who follows and cleaves to the supreme Will. Who is he? "The LORD is righteous in all His ways." This Will is that discussed above, chapter 32. "It is written, 'But his flesh shall ache over him'": it aches from afflictions when his soul mourns over himself rather than over his sins. Then his flesh aches. But if he mourns over his iniquities, his flesh will not ache and he will not feel his suffering, like the holy ones in the land, who feel no suffering, as is known.

"Had they merely taken it off": there is a difference between removal alone and emptying. Emptying is intense longing to surrender oneself to death for the cleansing of iniquity, like Rabbi Akiva, who longed for it. Rabbi Akiva's longing was not without reason; it was for the exile of the Glory, the Shekhinah, to

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Egypt through Joseph's sale. “Either for initiating the corruption”: Simeon first said, “Behold, this master of dreams is coming,” and so forth. Rabbi Akiva was Simeon's reincarnation, and from there he came to the trial; Rabbi Akiva was more righteous than he. The following phrase בפיי משמע? is uncertain. Rabbi Eliezer was Reuben's reincarnation; hence it is said of him that he was seized—the source has the insecure word כנירה—corresponding to Reuben's saying “Let us cast him into the pit.” Afterward Rabbi Eliezer was saved, just as Reuben saved Joseph from death, as below in chapter 15 on “He saved me from Pharaoh's sword”; see there. [TN040044]

“Or for involving the Shekhinah”: they involved her with them in the sale, and Rabbi Akiva stood in the Shekhinah's place, as it were, according to the Ari's view. “Fortunate are you, Rabbi Akiva, that your soul departed with ONE”—precisely One. Or he stood in Simeon's place; the following wording, שהפיר נחל לוי, is insecure, followed by “as it is said, ‘the one opened.’” Or the Holy One [gap] Yesod, “foundation,” and unique—the adjoining abbreviated wording is uncertain—[gap]. The phrase “whose height reached heaven” then turns to Rabbi Akiva and his longing to surrender his soul, which ascended before Him, as He said, “Thus it arose in thought before Me.” It was not sent back empty, and his request was fulfilled. [TN040045]

“Although he did not take a formal decision against him”: although Simeon ben Shetah did not act against Honi, being able to decree a ban upon him, he nevertheless teaches us good counsel: Honi should impose a condition of rebuke upon himself. “This version”: the Babylonian version is “If you were not Honi, I would decree a ban upon you,” implying that he did not actually ban him. The Jerusalem version has “You need to be under a ban.” Rather, it is as we said: good advice is included, that he should impose rebuke upon himself. The transmitted spellings in these connective clauses are unstable, but this distinction is explicit. [TN040046]

Return to chapter in contents

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Similarly, at the end of Ketubbot”: the versions do not disagree; both are the words of the living God. Concerning men and women, “bringing others up” applies: just as a man brings his wife up, so she brings him up. This is not so with slaves, who cannot bring their masters to the Land of Israel against their will. Therefore they only ascend; they do not bring others up. “Simeon ben Shetah's counsel”: they treated themselves as under rebuke and removed each individual's ornaments separately. The communal crown, which the source here says was given to them “at the calf,” apart from the individual crown, had not yet been removed, until the divine word told them, as above. [TN040047]

“Your ornament,” in the singular, hints at the crown given collectively to the community. “Only now did everything they had received cease”: both each individual's diadem and the crown given to them collectively. “ELOHIM in 120”: previously there were six hundred thousand, one crown for each. But when they sinned against “We shall do” and “We shall hear,” the attribute ELOHIM came upon them. ELOHIM has 120 permutations. The opening permutation statement is damaged: the source says, “a word of two letters ... six ... two.” Four letters give four times six, twenty-four arrangements; a word of five letters gives five times twenty-four, with the numerical value 120. [TN040048]

This is the received interpretation of “You made him lack a little of ELOHIM”: meat, “a little,” has the numerical value 119, while ELOHIM in its permutations has 120. Consequently Moses literally lacked one, which is designated here by the letter ה׳; see there. [TN040049] “Moses merited all of them”: all the crowns Israel stripped off. “Holy things are not handed over”: in Mishpatim the passage concerns the soul, which is not handed over to evil; here too Moses took them.

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 9

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 9

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 10 (י)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"The master said": after completing the expositions drawn from his initial explanation of Rabbi Keruspedai's saying above in chapter 4, the master now returns to that saying to explain it. "We already mentioned": in chapter 4. "Used three times": in the latter clause, "of the righteous," "of the wicked," and "of the intermediate people," followed by "are written," and so forth. The expression shel, "of," seems appropriate only in the opening clause concerning three groups.

"We add": two further difficulties concerning the intermediate people. The phrase concerning their being suspended has an unstable connective here; the explicit first difficulty concerns "If they merit, they are written for life; if they do not merit, they are written for death." It does not say "written and sealed," as concerning the others. Neither for good, "written for life," nor for its opposite, meaning evil, "written for death," does it mention sealing. [TN040050] "The other": the second difficulty and its answer will appear below, chapter 12: why

Rema of Fano

The master said: "Those of the completely righteous are written and sealed immediately for life." This is the reading in some copies. We have already mentioned the difficulty others found in the word shel, "of," used here three times in connection with being written. We add two observations concerning the book of the intermediate people: first, sealing is not mentioned in it, whether for good or for its opposite; the other observation and its answer have passed together to chapter 12. If we agree to take it as established that the reading is precise, the first difficulty can be satisfactorily resolved in eight true ways.

Rabbi Yohanan, the author of this saying —concerning whom Rabbi recited "Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you" in the last chapter of Yoma, and whom he favored at the beginning of Pesahim because he was precise in his speech, like Hillel the Elder, discussed below in chapter 19—here too opened his mouth with wisdom, attaching the curse to the book rather than the person, along the lines of "Let sins cease," not sinners. He placed a safeguard around his words, seeing the end from the beginning.

Alternatively, he expressed his saying here according to the approach of the baraita concerning the Day of Judgment does it say of the intermediate people, "If they do not merit, they are written"? Let it say, "If they incur guilt, they are written for death"; see there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"If we agree": some copies do not read shel in the latter clause. If we assume the correct reading includes shel there as well, we shall resolve the verbal difficulty in eight true ways. "For": the first way is that he says shel because of the wicked. He did not wish to attach the curse to them, saying, "The completely wicked are written for death." He chose refined language and said "of the wicked," referring to the book, attaching the curse to it like someone who attaches his curse to another object. Thus the wicked people's book is written and sealed for death. Rabbi Yohanan, the author of this saying—for Rabbi Keruspedai said it in Rabbi Yohanan's name —was careful to choose refined language.

Even from his mother's womb his nature showed that no stumbling should come through him. In the last chapter of Yoma (82b), a pregnant woman smelled food. They came before Rabbi, who told them, “Go and whisper to her that it is the Day of Atonement.” They whispered, and she was calmed. He recited concerning her child, “Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you,” and so forth. Rabbi Yohanan came from her. Rabbi further favored Rabbi Yohanan in chapter 1 of Pesahim (folio 3), because he was precise in his speech and did not utter an improper expression. There two disciples sat before Hillel, one of them Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai; another version places them before Rabbi, with Rabbi Yohanan as one of them. One asked, “Why do we harvest grapes in purity and gather olives in impurity?” The other asked, “Why do we harvest grapes in purity but not gather olives in purity?” He said, “I am certain this one will issue rulings in Israel,” and so forth. Here too Rabbi Yohanan was concerned not to utter a curse upon the wicked and not to cause them harm through himself.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Like Hillel the Elder”: who also said, in the wording transmitted here, “Why do we harvest grapes in purity and not gather olives in impurity?” as appears in chapter 1 of Shabbat (folio 17), and as will appear below in with which we opened this discourse. There the wording is appropriate, since it concerns groups: the group of these and of those is written as befits them and their corresponding patterns. It is correct to say that the group of the wicked—their binding together and association, like the case of ten who gather and steal a beam—or the way of the wicked, in the words of the king, the sweet singer, is what wholly perishes through the praiseworthy dispersal beneficial to them, as it is written, “All evildoers shall be scattered.” A conspiracy of the wicked does not count as a valid assembly. But the wicked themselves will benefit from cleansing at the end of days, as will be explained.

Rema of Fano - continued

In this manner we must interpret everywhere the verses that threaten them, such as “For the wicked shall perish.” Their intention is as he explains elsewhere, “And the wicked are no more.” This follows the beginning of that verse, “Let sins cease”—not sinners—and they are no longer wicked. Rather, they will ultimately be rectified through righteous judgment, with a change of name, a change of place and a change of conduct, for it is no empty matter. Similarly, “Let the wicked perish before God”: to appease judgment they must indeed be made to perish, but once the Judge has been appeased, they become like a lost thing that is sought.

Even Gebal, Ammon, Amalek and that entire conspiracy of the wicked, concerning which Asaph alarmed the upper beings, saying, “God, do not be silent; do not be deaf and do not be still, chapter 19. [TN040051] “Along the lines”: as we say in chapter 1 of Berakhot, “Does it say, ‘Let sinners cease’? It says sins.” “Rabbi Yohanan placed a safeguard around his words”: initially, concerning the righteous, he likewise used shel. Although there it would have been preferable to say “The righteous are written,” without shel, attaching the blessing to them themselves, he nevertheless uses shel in the first clause because he must use it in the final clause concerning the wicked.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Alternatively”: a second approach. He uses shel because this saying follows the baraita “There are three groups on the Day of Judgment,” taught first there. There shel is appropriate even in the later clause, because it concerns groups. The word refers to the group: the group of the righteous, the group of the wicked and the group of the intermediate people is written. Because it uses shel there, it uses it here too, carrying over the arrangement from there. “And their dogmatrin”: that is, their corresponding patterns.

“It is correct to say”: do not object that, although shel is appropriate there because it refers to groups, omitting it in the later clause would also have been acceptable. He could have said: “There are three groups on the Day of Judgment, of righteous, wicked and intermediate people. The righteous are written and sealed ... the wicked are written ...” This would indeed be good. One could also ask that he omit “groups” in the opening and say, “There are three on the Day of Judgment: wicked, righteous and intermediate people; the righteous are written ...” There is no difficulty in such wording. Yet what we say is correct because the intention there specifically concerns the group, not the righteous and wicked individuals themselves.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Or”: the group may be interpreted as the way. “In the words of King David”: “The way of the wicked shall perish” (Psalm 1). “Through”: that is, by means of dispersal, as the sages say, “Dispersal is good for the wicked and good for the world.” “Does not count”: as the sages say in chapter 3 of Sanhedrin (folio 26) concerning Shebna and his company. “As will be explained”: in Part V.

“Such as” the verse “For the wicked shall perish” (Psalm 37): we must explain its intention as David explains elsewhere, “Let sins cease from the earth, and the wicked are no more.” Beruriah, Rabbi

Rema of Fano - continued

O God”—what is written concerning them? “Let them be ashamed and terrified forever; let them be confounded and perish.” Afterward it is written, “Let them know that You, whose name is the LORD, alone,” which is a great rectification for them. This suffices for the present purpose.

The righteous group, by contrast, is undoubtedly rewarded with surpassing excellence: “In a multitude of people is the king's glory.” This is the gathering of the righteous, good for them and good for the world. They form groups upon groups, companies upon companies, to enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah in the great hall. Here one can say that the expression used there was carried over. The same must be said of “immediately” [le-altar] here: it is not exact. Otherwise Rabbi Yohanan would be speaking in accordance with no one, for no tanna disputes that each person's final judgment is sealed only on the Day of Atonement, as above in chapter 1 and as will be explained. Thus that day is called their “immediately” with respect to sealing. What is le-altar? It is like al atar, “at the place”; here too it means each at his proper station and place.

Therefore concerning the intermediate people, whose judgment remains pending until the Day of Atonement, he says they are then written for life, without mentioning sealing. He relied on the earlier clauses and on what is well known from the teaching of the four periods: sealing is the observance proper to that day. The only difference between the first two books and the

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Meir's wife, said: “Does it say sinners? It says sins.” Furthermore, once sins cease from the earth, it is obvious that the wicked are no more. Here likewise, “For the wicked shall perish”: this dishonorable designation is what they lose, not their own persons. “With a change of name,” and so forth: the sages said these changes tear up a person's decree. Here too there will be a change of name, for they will no longer be called wicked, and a change of place, for they will ascend from Gehinnom, through a change of conduct, returning to the good. “For it is no empty matter”: nothing will remain empty in the world without rectification; everything will be rectified in the future.

“Similarly,” the verse “Let the wicked perish before God” (Psalm 68) is explained in this way. The wicked perish through many kinds of punishment that come upon them. Nevertheless, this is only “before God,” to appease the attribute of judgment, and there is hope for their latter end. “Even Gebal”: and the others mentioned in Asaph's psalm (Psalm 83). “Which is a great rectification for them”: when they know and recognize the LORD. The following phrase וכמצליחיו יתפלו מאד is uncertain.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

[gap] “For the present purpose”: according to the first part of the explanation concerning the wicked in the baraita of the three groups—the group is written for death, but not the wicked persons intermediate people's book is the time of writing. So too in many places the Mishnah gives differing clauses, whether adjacent or separated, such as those in Qinnim, Horayot, Keritot and the like: one explains the other. Here it is the same.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

themselves. [TN040052]

“The righteous group”: shel in that baraita's phrase concerning the righteous being written also refers to the group. It does not exclude the righteous persons themselves, God forbid, but adds to them: they receive their reward and recompense with greater excellence and strength when gathered in honor and multitude, in the sense of the sages' statement, “Gathering is good for the righteous,” and so forth, the opposite of dispersal, which is good for the wicked. “Here”: this concludes the argument. In the baraita of the three books, shel may be imprecise, carried over from the expression concerning the three groups.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The same must be said” of “immediately” in “The completely righteous are written and sealed immediately for life,” and likewise concerning the wicked. It is not exact: they are sealed on the Day of Atonement. “As will be explained”: in chapter 26. “Thus that day,” the Day of Atonement, is called their “immediately,” for the righteous, wicked and intermediate people. Concerning writing, Rosh Hashanah is their immediate time; concerning sealing, however, the Day of Atonement is their immediate time. Since it does not say “written immediately and sealed,” but “written and sealed immediately,” placing “immediately” beside “sealed,” it is evident that “immediately” is not literal and does not mean at once. Rather, it means “at its place,” being a compound like al atar. The intention is that each is written and sealed in its proper place and time: the writing immediately on Rosh Hashanah, and the sealing on the Day of Atonement. See the further chapter2 reference as written here, where the master explains in general the meaning of “immediately”; its connective wording is uncertain. [TN040053]

“Therefore”: on this reading, the “immediately” said of the righteous and wicked is the Day of Atonement. The intervening formulation is awkward, but the stated reason sealing is not mentioned for the intermediate people is that the tanna relied on the first clauses concerning the righteous and wicked, who are written on Rosh Hashanah and sealed on the Day of Atonement. The intermediate people, however, are written on the Day of Atonement. Although “written and sealed” is not stated, the tanna relied on what is well known from the teaching of the four periods: sealing occurs on the Day of Atonement. Here likewise, the teaching of the four periods explains the earlier clauses in general, and they explain the clauses concerning the intermediate people.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The master said, ‘Of the righteous’”: see above, chapter4 of this Part. “We add two observations”: difficulties. The first is that it says they are written for life, and if they do not merit, and so forth, without saying “and sealed” concerning the intermediate people as it does concerning the righteous and the other group. “Whether for good or for its opposite”: the latter expression names evil, but he uses refined language, as also above in chapter2. “The other”: the other difficulty and its answer “have passed together to chapter12,” meaning that he will resolve them there.

The next lemma, ר’ דההווייתיהו?, is uncertain; its explanation is that Rabbi Keruspedai said it in Rabbi Yohanan's name. “He favored him”: he favored Rabbi Yohanan for being precise in his speech in that other place as well. [TN040054] “He opened his mouth with wisdom, attaching the curse to the book”: therefore he says “of the wicked,” meaning the wicked people's book is written for death, not the person. “He placed a safeguard around his words”: he also used shel concerning the righteous. There the reasoning would be the opposite: they themselves are written for life. But because he wished to teach shel in the later clause concerning the wicked, he also used it concerning the righteous, as in “because it teaches this at the end, it teaches it at the beginning." This is "seeing the end from the beginning"; understand this.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Alternatively," through "with which we opened": before Rabbi Keruspedai's saying. "Of the wicked": shel refers to the group of the wicked. "It is correct to say": we properly say it refers to the group, for their association is bad for them and bad for the world. Or "of the wicked" refers to the wicked people's way, which is written for death. The wicked persons themselves, however, benefit from death and cleansing at the end of days. Therefore King David, peace be upon him, said, "The way of the wicked shall perish." In every place where a threat is pronounced against the wicked, it must be explained similarly: "Let sins cease from the earth," not sinners; "and the wicked are no more," for all will be righteous, as above and in the Zohar, Be-Har.

"With a change of name," and so forth: these correspond to three reincarnations—Abraham, a change of name; Isaac, a change of place; Jacob, a change of conduct. "Before God": He must make the wicked perish through afflictions, yet their hope is not lost; they will become like a lost thing that is sought. "The group of the righteous": here too "of the righteous" refers to their group, which is good for them and good for the world. "Here one may say": what we said about its referring to groups is carried over from the beginning of the discourse, just as with "sealed immediately."

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

But sealing occurs on the Day of Atonement, not on Rosh Hashanah. Therefore "immediately" is certainly not exact; it is like al atar, each at its appointed time. Hence he did not say "sealed" concerning the intermediate people, who remain suspended until the Day of Atonement, because he relied on the earlier clauses concerning the righteous and wicked, which the closing wording here describes as "sealed on Rosh Hashanah." The observance of the day is sealing, and he relied on what is known. This resolves one of the two observations he added above; the final wording again mentions Rosh Hashanah. [TN040055]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 10

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 11 (יא)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Or, if you prefer": a third way of resolving the difficulty of shel, "of." Shel refers to the books: the books are written and sealed for life or death, not the righteous and wicked persons themselves. The tanna did not say this of the wicked merely as a refined expression, attaching the curse to their book while still intending the wicked themselves, just as with the righteous, according to the first

Rema of Fano

Or, if you prefer, say: yes, certainly it is the book of the righteous and of the wicked that is written and sealed for life or death, not the person. This upholds the words of Tosafot that we shall mention in chapter21. For these lives—the true lives written in the book—may cause a person, for the moment, afflictions or death by way of cleansing. Conversely: "He repays His enemies to His face, to destroy it." This means that He immediately pays His enemies the reward for commandments they answer in the preceding chapter. Rather, yes: it is certainly and truly so. The reward of righteous and wicked is written and sealed, not the person. The reason is that those books contain only each person's life and death in the judgment of the world to come, not the judgments of this world. Some righteous people encounter what befits the deeds of the wicked, and are sometimes written for death in this world. Conversely, a wicked person is sometimes written for life in this world, as Scripture says, “He repays His enemies to His face, to destroy him.” Tosafot there in Rosh Hashanah accordingly explain that the death mentioned here for the wicked and the life for the righteous concern life in the world to come; see there and below, chapter21. Since this world's judgments are not written in the book at all, the tanna did not say “The righteous and wicked are written,” which would sound as though it also concerned their judgment in this world. He said “of the righteous” and “of the wicked”: their book is written and sealed for the purpose for which it was made, namely the judgment of the world to come—for life like the righteous, or death like the wicked.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“These lives”: those of the world to come. “Conversely”: death in the world to come can cause life in this world, as it is written, “He repays His enemies,” and so forth. This is the proof Tosafot bring there. “This means”: having cited the verse, the master explains it in several ways. “Immediately”: in this world. “This is ‘His face’”: it relates to “He repays”; the meaning is that He repays His enemies for perform to glorify themselves. This is “to His face”: their actions are only for appearances, to show themselves flatteringly before Him, blessed be He. As our sages said, in the future both these and those take a Torah scroll and come to receive their reward. He therefore anticipates His enemies and pays the reward for their deeds in this world, “to destroy it”—that payment of recompense—so that His liability to make payment will not be found written in the book of remembrances on high.

Rema of Fano - continued

Concerning the worthy, by contrast, it says, “I shall be gracious to whom I shall be gracious.” For there is no reward for commandments in this world; in His ledger it is written: I shall favor so-and-so with such-and-such, and have mercy on so-and-so with such-and-such, after the manner of “He is gracious and gives.” We explained this in PartI, chapter2. In the Masorah, ve-hannoti occurs twice, the other occurrence being “and my entreaty to the children of my womb.” This teaches that this measure applies only to those borne from the womb. [TN040056] Alternatively, “I shall be gracious” means the good of the righteous, and “I shall have mercy” means giving them strength and a receptacle to bear those good things. This is truly the shared meaning of the word. But the reward of these others “shall not be stored or hoarded.”

Therefore it repeats, “He will not delay for His enemy,” here changing from plural to singular to teach that even if a single one of them at the world's end does a small deed, they hasten to give

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

what they do to His face, blessed be He, in flattery, as will shortly be explained. “To destroy it” refers to the payments: not to bring their remembrance into the book above, since He gives their reward during their day in this world. Therefore it says le-haavido in the singular. On the plain reading, if it referred to “His enemies,” it ought likewise to say le-haavidam in the plural.

“I shall be gracious”: I shall be gracious in the world to come to the one of whom it is written in His book, “I shall favor him with such-and-such.” For this verse indeed speaks of the judgments of the world to come, as is known from “There is no reward for commandments in this world.” “This teaches that this measure”: the free gift applies only to Israel, borne from the womb. “Alternatively”: “I shall be gracious,” and so forth; “I shall have mercy,” ve-arahem, is from rehem, “womb.” I shall make for them, as it were, a womb and receptacle. The meaning is that I shall give them strength to bear all those good things, for Israel cannot endure an abundance of goodness, as our sages said. “This is truly”: the reason for the shared term rehem, used for the womb and for mercy and compassion: both involve expansion.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“But”: this returns to what was said above of the wicked, that their reward should not be found written in the book of remembrances as it is for the worthy. For the reward of these wicked people “shall not be stored,” and so forth. “Therefore”: our interpretation of “He repays His enemies” explains why Scripture repeats, “He repays His enemies to His face, to destroy it; He will not delay for His enemy; to his face He will repay him” (Deuteronomy 7). Moreover, it changes from plural to singular in the closing clause. In the opening it says le-son'av, “His enemies,” with a yod, a plural; here it says le-son'o, “His enemy,” a singular. On this interpretation it is indeed entirely clear.

“To singular”: to teach that even for a single enemy, if some good thing is found in him, He pays him immediately in this world. The Holy One, blessed be He, withholds no creature's reward, even the reward for a small utterance, as the sages said about Lot's daughters. The next connective is uncertain; along our approach we may further say that the repetition explains the opening “to His face.” [TN040058] As he says: from the singular “His enemy” here, with him his reward. The Holy One, blessed be He, despises nothing, not even the reward for gracious speech. Furthermore, from the singular “His enemy” here, with which “to his face He will repay him” fits well, we learn that the earlier “to His face” does not speak of the enemy. If it did, it should say “to their faces,” since “His enemies” is plural. Rather, the opening “to His face” means the face of the Giver, as we explained. Just as their deeds are for appearances, so their reward is only for appearances, from this world's pleasures, a thing without substance. This is “to his face”—the recipient's—“He will repay him.” The deed came flatteringly before the Giver, but their heart was not steadfast with Him. We have thus escaped both the repetition and the change in number, and the parts of the verse are as utterly precise as they should be.

Rema of Fano - continued

Alternatively, the opening of the verse may be explained of transgressors among those other than ourselves. “To His face” then means as long as they remain in rebellion and are still His enemies to His face. It is known that their prohibition is their death sentence; repentance does not suffice for them until they become full converts and enter the congregation, of whom it is written, “As the convert, so the native.” The reason is that repentance is a positive commandment with which Israel was uniquely favored out of compassion, and the convert joins them. One who is not commanded cannot on his own authority wipe away his transgressions like a thick cloud and his which singular “to his face” also fits, we learn, and so forth. Had Scripture not repeated “to his face He will repay him,” I would have said that the opening “to His face” referred to the faces of His enemies. As for the objection that it should say “their faces,” Scripture can change its language from singular to plural and conversely. But now Scripture has taken the trouble to repeat “to his face” in the latter clause, speaking of the face of His enemy, to indicate that the first “to His face” does not concern the face of His enemies.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For ‘His enemies’ is written”: with a yod, in the plural. “Rather, the opening ‘to His face’”: it means the face of the blessed LORD, who gives and pays recompense. It relates to “He repays,” as we explained: what the wicked do to the blessed LORD's face in flattery. “For just as”: Scripture takes the trouble to repeat, “He will not delay for His enemy, to his face,” in order to indicate the nature of the payment. It too is only of this world's pleasures, for appearances. This is “to his face”—the enemy receiving recompense —“He will repay him,” just as he himself acts for appearances. “We have thus escaped”: this explanation removes the difficulty of the repetition and the change of language from singular to plural occurring in the verse.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Alternatively”: the repetition may be explained another way. The opening, “He repays His enemies,” concerns gentiles; the closing “He will not delay,” and so forth, concerns Israelite transgressors. “Even Naaman, a resident alien”: he accepted upon himself not to practice idolatry. “They are, however”: their repentance helps them in this respect, bringing them closer to rectification than others who did not repent during their lives. “The people of Nineveh”: they were of the nations, yet their repentance saved them from the calamity decreed against them. “For 120,000 people”: as stated in Scripture. “To Torah law”: as the sages said in the second chapter of Taanit concerning “Let each turn from his evil way and from the violence in their hands”: even one who stole a beam and built it into a mansion tore the entire mansion apart. Since they acted according to Torah law, repentance too benefited them according to Torah law.

“They were not saved”: not completely from the calamity, but temporarily. Ultimately Nahum's prophecy was fulfilled in sins like a cloud. Even Naaman, a resident alien, and all like him will have to render judgment for the forbidden deeds they committed. They are, however, near to rectification, and this is easy in the LORD's eyes.

Rema of Fano - continued

Do not find the people of Nineveh a difficulty, for there are many answers. First, their great population awakened mercy for them, on account of 120,000 people without sin and many animals: the city's destruction would have destroyed a large, distinct portion of the world. Second, the Ninevites subjected themselves to Torah law by returning stolen property itself, as will appear in PartIV, chapter13. Third, they too were not finally saved: He prolonged His patience toward them to pay the recompense for their outcry and their deeds in this world. Ultimately the whole vision of Nahum the Elkoshite was fulfilled in them, from “The LORD is a jealous and avenging God” to the end of the book.

But a convert who converts is like a newborn child. The parallel in the law of damages is an ownerless ox that causes damage—for these people are content with ownerlessness—and, before the injured party seizes it, another anticipates him and acquires it. Here the injured party is the accuser who exacts payment from him, and the acquisition is the court's converting him. He is exempt, as we said.

The latter part of the verse, “He will not delay for His enemy,” can be explained of an ordinary individual among us, them, as it is written, “The burden of Nineveh; the book of the vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.” Rashi wrote: “It was already written concerning it,” namely Jonah son of Amittai's prophecy; now Nahum the Elkoshite again prophesied this burden concerning it, and so forth. See there, and Jonathan's Targum.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“But a convert”: this returns to what was said above, that even Naaman the resident alien and all like him will have to render judgment. A full convert, however, is like a newborn child, and none of his former transgressions will be remembered against him. “The parallel in damages”: the law is that if an ownerless ox gores and someone acquires it before the injured party seizes it, it is exempt, as explained by the legal authorities, from the Gemara in Bava Qamma, folio13. The adjacent chapter abbreviation is unclear. [TN040059] Here too, though he is content with ownerlessness, if the court converts him before the accuser comes to seize him and exact payment, he is exempt. “It is the accuser”: made from the sin itself; his coming into existence is his injury.

“The latter part of the verse”: this concludes the earlier explanation that

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

the opening concerns transgressors among those other than ourselves. “An ordinary individual among us”: Israelite transgressors, referring to an individual; therefore it says “His enemy” in the singular. “The parallel is an Israelite's ox”: if it gores and is subsequently consecrated, or gores and is subsequently declared ownerless, it is exempt, as stated there in the Gemara and ruled by the legal authorities. Here too, if an Israelite transgresses and afterward repents, he is wholly exempt. If he abandons himself by throwing off the yoke, he is exempt from this world's judgments, while the greater penalty remains for him in the judgments of the world to come. They also give him the reward of the minor commandments he performed in this world, since the Holy One, blessed be He, withholds no creature's reward. The verse means that the blessed LORD will not delay the recompense for minor commandments to His enemy, an Israelite who casts off the yoke of the kingdom of Heaven; He will repay him to his face while he is in this world. “The first”: where he subsequently consecrated it. “The second”: where he subsequently declared it ownerless. “Here”: in the latter clause it does not say “to destroy him,” as in the solitary and isolated, who throws off the yoke. Its parallel is an Israelite's ox that gores and is then consecrated, meaning that he repents completely; or it gores and he then declares himself ownerless, selling himself to do evil. The first is exempt by virtue of repentance. The second too is exempt from this world's judgments, for they give him the reward of minor commandments, as it is written, “To his face He will repay him.” Here it does not say “to destroy him,” for in the end the Holy One, blessed be He, collects what is His, in the manner explained in PartI, chapter9.

Rema of Fano - continued

Alternatively, Rabbi Keruspedai may mean that the book is written for death, not the person, so that “You return man to crushing” may be fulfilled in him. Concerning the righteous it says, “Behold, He puts no trust in His holy ones.” Therefore the book is written for life, while they remain capable of choosing throughout their lives.

Alternatively, the book is written and sealed immediately for death, but not the warrants: these are written immediately and sealed later, as explained in the Zohar, Emor, and reproduced in the printed books in Vayehi. We shall discuss this in chapter25.

Alternatively, the wicked people's book, even their good deed, is all sealed for death, in the sense of “to destroy it” mentioned above, for their sacrifices are not accepted. The righteous people's book, both the good and the “made good,” is all sealed for life, in the sense of opening, because it concerns an Israelite. Even though he has sinned, he is an Israelite. The Holy One, blessed be He, will ultimately collect His own, His portion from on high—the soul—through its rectification and refinement from the impurity of its filth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Alternatively, Rabbi Keruspedai may mean”: a fourth way, likewise taking shel to refer to the books: they, not the person, are written. But the reason differs from the third approach. It is to leave a person free to choose throughout his life. After their evil decree the wicked may repent, as it is written, “You return man to crushing,” which the sages interpreted as “until the crushing of the soul.” The righteous may likewise do evil, as it is written, “Behold, He puts no trust in His holy ones.” Thus Rabbi Keruspedai teaches us that the books are written and sealed, but a person can escape through his choice.

“Alternatively”: the fifth approach. The books are written and sealed immediately on Rosh Hashanah, as distinct from the warrants mentioned in the Zohar, Emor, folio270, which are written on Rosh Hashanah and sealed on the Day of Atonement, as explained there. According to this, “immediately” is exact even concerning sealing, unlike the proposed interpretation at the end of chapter10. “In the printed books”: the small-format printing, Vayehi, folio217.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Alternatively”: the sixth approach. By shel Rabbi Keruspedai means that the deliberate sins becoming merits. This is the precise implication of Rav Nahman bar Yitzhak's verse; examine it and you will find it. [TN040057]

Rema of Fano - continued

Alternatively, the book is judged, and its owner with it, whether for death or for life. We shall explain this immediately below.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

books are written, for good or for evil, in accordance with everything written in them. For the wicked, even their good deeds are written for death; conversely, for the righteous, everything in the book is written for life, even their evil. “In the sense of ‘to destroy it’”: we explained that this means removing from the book the recompense for the wicked people's good deeds, because they perform them only for ostentation and their sacrifices are not accepted. “The made good”: that is, the evil. “In the sense”: the sages said concerning repentance that deliberate sins become merits; here too, even transgressions are written for life like merits.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“This is the precise implication of the verse”: “But if not, blot me, I pray, out of Your book which You have written,” in Rav Nahman bar Yitzhak's exposition there in the saying about the three books: “Blot me, I pray”—this is the book of the wicked; “out of Your book”—this is the book of the righteous; “which You have written”—this is the book of the intermediate people. Since he calls the righteous people's book “Your book,” where he could have said “out of a book,” it follows that the entire substance and essence of the book is acceptable and belongs to the Holy One, blessed be He. This is unlike Rabbi Abbahu there, who derives the book of the righteous from “life” in “Let them be blotted out of the book of life”; that provides no evidence about all the book's contents.

“Examine it and you will find it”: do not object that “Your book” may simply indicate that the blessed LORD owns the book, since all three books are His and are written on high with Him, as it concludes even of the intermediate people, “which You have written.” How, then, do we know that “Your book” indicates the book's nature? Examine it and you will indeed find that “Your book” speaks of the goodness of its nature with respect to everything written in it. The source continues: if “blot me” [gap] is expounded concerning the wicked, as appears, then “all this is the book of the wicked”—whence do we know? The ensuing clause about what must be added or, conversely, what “blot me, I pray” indicates is textually unclear. It asks how this can indicate the wicked people's book without the word “out of Your book,” which by itself would make no sense. [TN040060] It seems to me that the meaning is this: to complete “blot me, I pray,” it would suffice to say “out of a book.” Rav Nahman's intention is that “blot me, I pray,” together with its accompanying word “out of a book,” indicates the book of the wicked. From the kaf alone in “Your book,” addressing the blessed LORD, he further derives the book of the righteous: the entire content and nature of the book belongs to the blessed LORD. This proves what we said.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Alternatively”: the seventh approach. Rabbi Keruspedai indicates through shel that the books too are judged. This does not exclude the person, as in the preceding approaches, but includes the books, which are judged together with their owners, as will be explained in the following chapter.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Or, if you prefer,” through “not the person”: the book is written for eternal life, and therefore the person himself must die and receive afflictions in this world so that his reward will be paid fully in the world to come. Thus the book is written for life, while the person is written for death and afflictions. This is a benefit, cleansing a measure of transgression. Conversely, enemies are written in the book for death in the world to come, while the person is written for life in this world.

“Only for appearances”: “before Him” refers to the blessed LORD. The wicked person performs a commandment as flattering display; therefore He pays His enemies a commandment's reward in this world “to destroy it,” meaning to destroy for him what would pass into the world to come. The exact word rendered “what would pass” is uncertain. [TN040061] He receives his reward, and the transgressions of this world are visited upon him to allot him Gehinnom in the world to come. Therefore he says “of the righteous” and “of the wicked,” referring to each one's book. “I shall be gracious to whom I shall be gracious”: that righteous person whom I have written in the book to favor in the world to come. “Those borne from the womb”: Israel.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“‘I shall have mercy,’ to give them”: the expression comes from the womb, the receptacle for a fetus. Therefore it says, “May God give you,” and so forth. The subsequent wording concerning an order, “giving,” and capacities or subduing is damaged: “in the order hen ve-khivush… that they should… give… and their khivushim.” Its stated conclusion is that you should be a receptacle able to bear the good, just as in the future He will give the righteous strength to bear their good, as the sages said. [TN040062] It concludes with “blessings of breasts and womb,” for Jacob stood between judgment and lovingkindness and was called mercy, rahamim, from rehem, “womb,” bearing both: some judgment and some mercy. “The shared meaning of the word”: the word rehem.

“He will not delay”: in paying good recompense to His enemy, a single person, even one at the world's end. This resolves why it begins with plural “His enemies”—le-son'av with a yod is plural—and concludes with singular “His enemy.” “With which it fits”: singular “to his face” fits the singular enemy. From this we learn that the opening “His face,” beside plural “His enemies,” does not refer to His enemies but to the blessed LORD: as above, what they do before Him flatteringly. This is “to His face He will give.” The second “to his face” refers to the recipient: He pays him a reward that is itself merely for appearances, this world's pleasure, a thing without substance, measure for measure. This resolves several precise points in the verse; examine it carefully.

“The opening of the verse, ‘He repays His enemies to His face’”: this concerns transgressors among the nations. “His face” means to His face: they do evil deeds and remain rebellious before Him. The source's form at the next clause is uncertain; it states that the nations' prohibition entails their death, as explained in the Gemara concerning Noah's descendants. [TN040063] As for the people of Nineveh, whose repentance helped although they were of the nations, there are many answers: first, their great population caused it; second, they subjected themselves to Torah law; third, they were not saved forever, only temporarily.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“An ownerless ox that causes damage”: this is the wicked man who sinned and caused harm, for such gentiles are content with ownerlessness. Before the injured party seizes him—the accuser, who is injured through him, since completion of his mission is his annulment—if another seizes him and converts him, he is exempt, as above. Therefore it specifically says “to His face”: while he remains rebellious and does not repent and convert himself. The latter clause, “He will not delay in repaying His enemy to his face,” is explained of an ordinary Israelite who gored and sinned, then consecrated himself by repenting; or, conversely, transgressed and denied the God of Israel. The first, who repented, is exempt from the judgment of the world to come in Gehinnom. The second is exempt in the opposite direction, from this world's judgment: he remains in this world and is given the reward for minor commandments. Here it does not say “to destroy him,” for his soul will ultimately be rectified after judgment. It is otherwise with the wicked among the nations.

“Alternatively”: another answer concerning “of the righteous.” The righteous person's book is written for life, not the righteous person, since “He puts no trust in His holy ones,” and he may corrupt his deeds. Likewise for the wicked: the book is written for death, not the person, for he may correct his deeds during his year. “Alternatively”: another answer. The book is written and sealed, but not the warrants handed over to the agents of the Angel of Death: these are sealed only later.

Or another answer: the book as a whole—even the wicked person's good deed—is written for death, and his few merits become deliberate sins. With the righteous it is the reverse: their little evil is written as merit. Thus his whole book includes both the good and the “made good,” meaning evil, as above. This is the precise implication of Rav Nahman's verse, brought above in chapter4, from the verse “blot me,” whose next abbreviated word is unclear. [TN040064]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Alternatively”: another answer. The book is judged

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 11

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

together with its owners, as explained in the chapters immediately following, concerning the sword of the Sanhedrin and, conversely, the item called khistalin in this source reading. See below. [TN040065]

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 12 (יב)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“We already mentioned”: to explain the statement at the end of the preceding chapter that the book too is judged with its owner on Rosh Hashanah, he now explains what the books are, how they are written, and their division into three books, as he promised above in chapter4. “As the plain meaning of the Mishnah”: “All your deeds are written in a book” implies a single book, although three books are opened on Rosh Hashanah. This is certainly a difficulty.

“Know”: the master intends to resolve this difficulty and explain the books philosophically, bringing the statements, in their actual meaning, close to nature. He does not follow those who think these statements were said merely to make the matter comprehensible to the ear, because they found the

Rema of Fano

We already mentioned in chapter4 that all a person's deeds are written, at the time they occur, in a single book, as the plain meaning of the Mishnah at the beginning of chapter2 of Avot indicates, although three books are opened on Rosh Hashanah. We must determine the exact nature of these matters. Know that the comprehensive book, in which all a person's deeds are written immediately as they occur, is the transparent air, the surrounding air. In it every detail of human movement is engraved: whether a person moves an eyelid, opens his mouth and utters a sound for good or for the “made good”—all the more so with the other limbs. Therefore one who raises his hand is called wicked. Even his heart's thoughts cannot fail to produce joy or sadness on his face, and the like. “The LORD sees into the heart.” He immediately discriminates, gathering the good deeds in the air of the Garden of Eden, which clothes itself for them in the air of this world, and likewise the evil deeds in the air of Gehinnom. For “God has made the one corresponding to need for books difficult when there is no forgetfulness before Him, blessed be His name. The master takes the statements according to their plain sense and meaning, as he wrote above in chapter4. This follows the unanimous agreement of the early natural philosophers that there is no vacuum in the world: the space between earth and firmament is filled with air, one of the four elements. Its nature is clear, fine and light, as Maimonides explains in chapter4 of the Laws of the Foundations of the Torah. Because of its fineness, everything displaces it and it resists nothing, even the finest movements. Nevertheless, it has the capacity and power to carry those movements, sometimes carrying them together with what moves them. We see that it carries flying birds, and likewise

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

vapors rising from the ground one by one in fine portions: the air carries them until they thicken and rise there according to their nature. The source then mentions rain, snow and vapor, [gap], and “they already perceive power,” [gap]. [TN040066]

Likewise, the air carries the natural movements within it from place to place, as we know from the manner of hearing: air moves from the speaker's mouth to the hearing ear. The sound issuing from the throat with the breath of the mouth moves the air until they reach the listener's ear together. Natural philosophers discuss this at length; this is not its place, except as needed for our subject. The master understood the books in this way too. The comprehensive book, of which it is said, “All your deeds are written in a book,” is the air that carries the movements made by a person in performing commandments or transgressions. This is their writing. For example, hands writing a Torah scroll or feet running to the synagogue, and similar acts, move the air; the commandment's movement from hands and feet is then engraved in it. Conversely, hands shedding blood or feet running to evil likewise engrave inscriptions of the other” in every place, in absolute equivalence.

Rema of Fano - continued

For one whose majority is merits, on Rosh Hashanah the gates of the Garden of Eden open to his deeds, and the air within receives them and their air. This is “written and sealed for life”: a new writing with respect to the inner air, and a sealing with respect to the air entering. Even if the person subsequently turns sour, these are never lost, but follow the sages' statement: “If he merits, he takes his portion and his fellow's portion in the Garden of Eden.” We shall explain this in chapter14. The reverse applies in the opposite case.

As for the intermediate people's book: go here, and it is rejected; go there, and it is rejected. Therefore they remain suspended in the air clothed in this world until the Day of Atonement. If they merit, they are written for life, as stated. From this you learn that one whose majority is merits does not receive their reward in this world, since they have already been stored in the air of the Garden of Eden and are reserved for the world to come. Even before Rosh Hashanah, what will be stored is regarded as already stored. On the contrary, he must necessarily suffer and be scoured and rinsed in this world of the minority of his transgressions, which did not enter the air of Gehinnom: here is their place of atonement.

A precise question arises about the intermediate people's judgment. Why say, “If they do not merit, they are written for death”? Let it say, “If they iniquity and transgression in the air. The blessed LORD recognizes the movements of a commandment and of a transgression so that the air carries each to its proper place: commandments to the air of the Garden of Eden, which clothes itself in this world's air outside the Garden's gates; transgressions to the air of Gehinnom, which likewise clothes itself in this world's air outside Gehinnom's entrance.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

In terms of the air thus clothed together, they are three books. The air of the Garden of Eden clothed in this world's air is called the book of the righteous for one whose recorded majority is merits. Likewise, the air of Gehinnom is called the book of the wicked for one whose engraved majority is transgressions. For one whose transgressions and merits balance across the two, it is called the book of the intermediate people. This is his view in general; it will be explained further below.

“The transparent air”: clear and fine. Sefer, “book,” also suggests sappiri, “transparent,” alluding to air. “The surrounding”: around the person; physicians too call it “surrounding air.” “Therefore one who raises his hand”: against his fellow is called wicked, even though he has not struck him, as the sages said. The reason is that immediately on raising his hand to strike, he makes an evil movement in the air. “Joy or sadness”: thoughts cause movement of the blood; the blood moves the flesh of a person's face, in which the thoughts' joy and sadness are impressed. The flesh moves the air. Thus if the thoughts concern a commandment, all the movements arising from them are movements of a commandment; the reverse is true in the opposite case. “The LORD sees into the heart”: He knows whether the thoughts were for a commandment or for a transgression. “Immediately”: as the act occurs, when the movements are inscribed in the air, whether good or evil, He discriminates, separating good movements from evil ones. “Gathering”: bringing into a treasury. “In the air of the Garden of Eden”: it comes out and clothes itself in this world's air to receive good deeds, remaining outside until the day of judgment. “One corresponding to the other”: He created the Garden of Eden and created Gehinnom, as the sages said. “In absolute equivalence”: therefore Gehinnom's air stores evil deeds as the Garden of incur guilt, they are written for death.” Otherwise, “abundant lovingkindness inclines toward kindness”; or let their judgment remain suspended even for a long time. Perhaps this period counts for them as a time of wrath, when punishment is inflicted even for neglect of a positive commandment, as the angel told Rav Qetina in the chapter Ha-Tekhelet. Therefore, if the ten days pass without their gaining any merit, they have caused their own loss. But if they merit some commandment in the intervening days, so that they cannot be judged as transgressors, then even if they sin correspondingly and the judgment returns to an equal balance on the Day of Atonement, it is entirely proper to say, “Abundant lovingkindness inclines toward kindness.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Now this remembrance in the book of the completely wicked—whose end is utter destruction—is judged with them on Rosh Hashanah, as explained in the preceding chapter. We have investigated it and found it so in the stone used in the commanded stoning, the sword used for those executed, and similar things: they require burial or removal from use, “to still the enemy and the avenger.” Thus it is written, “You shall forget the shame of your youth”; and, “You shall kill the animal.”

We have already escaped the strangeness of the reading mentioned in chapter4 and at the beginning of chapter10 through seven other ways, all plain to one who understands. This last one too is dear to us. We shall expand its explanation as far as we can, for the Eden's air stores good deeds.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For one whose majority is merits”: the statement that three books open on Rosh Hashanah concerns the air inside the Garden of Eden and Gehinnom. Each, together with its air already clothed outside, is reckoned a book. Before Rosh Hashanah the inner portions were closed; now they open. The Garden's gates open to receive the merits together with their air outside; likewise Gehinnom's gates for transgressions. “A new writing”: “written” concerns the inner air receiving the deeds and their air. “Sealed” concerns the entering air: its writing occurred with the deed, and its entry now effects the sealing. “Even if the person subsequently turns sour”: and commits transgressions, the merits that already entered the Garden of Eden are not lost. Rather, his righteous fellow takes their reward, as the sages said. “The reverse applies”: Gehinnom's gates open for one whose majority is transgressions.

“The intermediate people's book”: the air from the Garden of Eden and Gehinnom clothed in this world for their evenly balanced merits and transgressions. Go here, to the Garden of Eden, and it is rejected: it cannot enter because of Gehinnom's air. Go there, to Gehinnom, and it is rejected because of the Garden's air. “If they merit”: and their majority becomes merits, they are written for life and their deeds enter the Garden of Eden's treasury, as stated. “Does not receive reward”: he receives no reward for them in this world. Of these it is said, “There is no reward for commandments in this world.” “Already stored”: on Rosh Hashanah. “Before Rosh Hashanah”: although they have not yet entered the Garden, he still receives no reward for benefit flowing from this good measure is very great, as will appear in these chapters. The righteous people's book itself endures and is honored with them. This is the implication of Rabbi Abbahu's verse, readily understood. Go and learn from what the Torah testifies about the righteous, as written of Reuben: “In order to rescue him from their hand.” Moreover, the reward of thought as equal to the reward of action is written and repeated in the book in many places. Thus “The children of Israel did”: they accepted Moses and Aaron's commandment wholeheartedly, and Scripture credited them as if they had performed it. Afterward, “so they did,” at the time of actual performance.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

them, because what will be stored is regarded as already stored.

“Why say”: “They are written for life; if they do not merit, they are written for death”? Even if they do not merit, their merits and transgressions are balanced. Let the measure “abundant lovingkindness inclines toward kindness” avail them, so that if they gain neither merit nor guilt they are written for life. He should have stated the reverse: “If they incur guilt”—committing a transgression in the meantime—“they are written for death; if they do not incur guilt, they are written for life” by the measure of abundant lovingkindness, as stated of the intermediate people in the baraita of the three groups for the Day of Judgment.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Or let their judgment remain suspended”: surely if they gain neither merit nor guilt, the measure of abundant lovingkindness avails to write them for life, according to the plain meaning of the baraita of the Day of Judgment. One cannot object: if so, why do they remain suspended from Rosh Hashanah to the Day of Atonement—let abundant lovingkindness write them for life immediately on Rosh Hashanah. One may answer that Rosh Hashanah is different. Since it is only the beginning of judgment, justice does not allow them to be written for life by this measure before final judgment, lest they incur guilt. Their judgment is therefore suspended until the Day of Atonement, the time of final judgment. This is the tendency of Sefer Hasidim, section608, in its first answer to this question; see there. But if you say that abundant lovingkindness does not suffice to write them for life, which is why they are not written so immediately on Rosh Hashanah, surely this measure at least suffices to suspend them for more days, until one of the scales inclines. At least it should say: “If they incur no guilt, their judgment remains suspended.” Why say, “If they do not merit, they are written for death”?

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Perhaps”: the reason abundant lovingkindness does not help when they gain neither merit nor guilt in the interval, as it does in judgment for the world to come, is that the period from Rosh Hashanah to the Day of Atonement, when judgment abounds in the world, is considered a time of wrath. In a time of wrath they punish, as stated in Ha-Tekhelet. An angel encountered Rav Qetina, who was wearing a linen garment, and said: “Qetina, Qetina! A linen garment in summer and a cloak in winter—what is to become of fringes?” He replied: “Do you punish for neglecting a positive commandment?” The angel replied: “Yes, in a time of wrath we punish.” [TN040067]

“Without any merit”: without performing a commandment. They cause their own loss and are punished for neglect of a positive commandment, as though their majority were transgressions. This is “If they do not merit, they are written for death.” “But if they merit”: although “If they merit, they are written for life” seems obvious, it teaches that if they merit some positive commandment, so that they cannot be judged as transgressors on this account, then, even if they also commit a corresponding sin and remain evenly balanced, they are written for life through abundant lovingkindness, which is revealed on the Day of Atonement as stated.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In the book”: the surrounding air. “Judged with them”: it itself enters Gehinnom, as explained. “Require burial”: as stated in Sanhedrin, the chapter Nigmar Ha-Din: the stone with which he was stoned, the wood on which he was hanged, and so forth, are all buried with him. “To still the enemy”: born from the transgression, as is known. Therefore no remembrance or trace of the transgressions should remain in the world. “You shall kill the animal”: the sages said, so that the animal will not pass through the market and people say, “This is the one on account of which so-and-so was stoned.” “The strangeness of the reading”: the seemingly strange word shel in the closing clause of the baraita of three books. “This too”: the eighth approach.

“For the righteous people's book”: Rabbi Keruspedai used shel, referring to the book, on account of the book of the righteous: their book itself is written for life, meaning that it itself endures and is honored with the righteous. “Rabbi Abbahu's verse”: he derives it from “Let them be blotted out of the book of life”: the righteous people's book itself is a book of life and endures. “As written, ‘In order to rescue’”: the Torah testifies to this and is honored by it. As the sages said: had Reuben known that the Holy One, blessed be He, would write of him, “Reuben heard and rescued him from their hand,” he would have carried him on his shoulders and taken him to his father.

“Moreover”: further proof comes from the repetition. The Torah says many times, “The children of Israel did so; according to all that the LORD commanded Moses, so they did.” The repeated “they did so” and “so they did” allude to thought's power: Scripture credits them as though they had performed the act. This is the first “The children of Israel did so.” The later “so they did” refers to the act itself. The adjacent connective is uncertain, but the explanation is that Scripture praises them and records their thought and their actions, all alike for good. [TN040068]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“As the plain meaning of the Mishnah”: they said, “All your deeds are written in a book.” “The exact nature of these matters”: he says three books, yet there are many books, belonging to each and every person. “The transparent air”: what they call transparent air is like a sponge; when one presses it with the hand, it forms a hollow. This is transparent air. The verb describing the hand's pressure is uncertain. [TN040069]

“The surrounding”: around the person. The source's abbreviated origin designation here is uncertain: transparent air comes forth into this world and surrounds the person. In it are engraved and written the commandments he performs in every movement, whether for good or for the “made good,” meaning evil. [TN040070] Therefore one who raises his hand is called wicked: immediately through his movement he makes an impression in his air. Even the thoughts of his heart, without moving any limb—since they bring joy to his heart—are visible on his face, and the LORD sees into the heart. Likewise, from Gehinnom comes surrounding light, in the wording of this occurrence, in which all the evil a person does is engraved. [TN040071]

“The air within”: within the Garden of Eden. It receives the good deeds and the airs in which they were impressed. This is called “written and sealed.” With respect to the inner air it is called a new writing, since they are now impressed and sealed in it. With respect to the entering air it is called sealing, since the writing already occurred. “They are never lost”: the good deeds impressed in the air are not lost; their reward is given to another righteous person, according to “He takes his portion and his fellow's portion in the Garden of Eden.”

“Even before Rosh Hashanah”: although the air has not yet been stored in the Garden of Eden, since it will be stored it is regarded as already stored. He must receive afflictions to erase the few transgressions impressed in Gehinnom's air. “Let their judgment remain suspended even for a long time”: even beyond the Day of Atonement. “For them, a time of wrath”: for the intermediate people this is a time of wrath. During the ten days of repentance they punish for a positive commandment even when one has merely failed to fulfill it. Therefore he says “If they do not merit”: they have not fulfilled the positive commandments.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Whose end is utter destruction”: the book is written for death together with its owners. This is the eighth answer given above in chapter11. “We investigated it and found it so”: this is the truth as we understand it concerning the objects used for those stoned, which are forbidden for benefit; the wording of the prohibition is damaged. [TN040072] “Through seven other ways”: seven other answers to the preceding difficulty concerning “of the righteous.” “Concerning Reuben,” where “in order to rescue him” is written: the book is honored with him. “As written, ‘They did’”: this implies that they had already done it, yet it then concludes, “As He commanded… so they did,” a repetition. Rather, by “they did,” Scripture credits them as having already performed it once they accepted upon themselves to do it; afterward they actually did it.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 12

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 13 (יג)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Yet”: this returns to the end of the preceding chapter, where the Torah testified to the children of Israel's performance of commandments. Therefore, when Moses our teacher could no longer testify afterward concerning his people Israel's mourning for him, he anticipated the event and made known his people's conduct in the eight verses from “Moses died” to “before the eyes of all Israel.” There it is written, “The children of Israel wept for Moses,” as will be explained at the end of this chapter.

“They said”: having mentioned the eight verses, the master explains that subject and everything belonging to it, then returns to the stated

Rema of Fano

Yet when the faithful lawgiver had no opportunity, after the deed, to bear witness and plead merit for his people, the flock of his pasture—“we seek him, but he is not”—he displayed wondrous wisdom at the time of the deed. He made known his ways in the eight verses at the end of the Torah. In the chapter Ha-Qometz Rabbah they said of them: “An individual reads them in the synagogue.” We explain this as permission to read them without an intermediary. Our explanation also includes Rashi's, that one does not interrupt them. The reason for all this is that Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, did not mediate these verses to Joshua or explain anything in them, to him or anyone else. Here there is no “order of teaching” from the chapter Keitzad Me'abberin requiring many to attend to them. Rather, the Holy One, blessed be He, said them and Moses wrote them in tears in exposition. The Gemara in Ha-Qometz reads: Rabbi Yehoshua bar Abba said in Rav Giddel's name, in Rav's name: “An individual reads the Torah's eight verses in the synagogue.” According to whom—not Rabbi Shimon? For it was taught: “‘Moses, servant of the LORD, died there.’ Is it possible that Moses was alive and wrote ‘Moses died there’? Rather, up to here Moses wrote; from here on Joshua son of Nun wrote.” These are Rabbi Yehudah's words; some say Rabbi Nehemyah's. Rabbi Shimon said to him: “Can a Torah scroll lack one letter, when it is written, ‘Take this Torah scroll and place it,’ and so forth? Rather, up to here the Holy One, blessed be He, spoke, Moses repeated and wrote. From here on the Holy One spoke and Moses wrote in tears, as it is said elsewhere, 'Barukh said to them: From his mouth he dictated all these words to me, and I wrote them in the book in ink.'" Shall we say the ruling is not Rabbi Shimon's? It may even be Rabbi Shimon's: since their manner changed, their reading changed. Rashi explains "an individual reads them" as one person reading them, without interrupting so another may stand and read.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Without an intermediary": without an interpreter. The whole Torah was read through two people, reader and interpreter: the reader reads one verse and the interpreter follows him, as in Sotah, the chapter Ve-Ellu Ne'emarin. The Jerusalem Talmud, Megillah chapter4, forbids reading without an interpreter, because, as the Torah was given through an intermediary, we must handle it through an intermediary. The Gemara here teaches that these eight verses may be read by one person without an interpreter. "Our explanation also includes": Rashi's explanation concerning interruption, unlike Maimonides in chapter13 of the Laws of Prayer, who interprets "an individual" as reading outside a public congregation; see there.

Rema of Fano - continued

the book placed beside the Ark of the Covenant, from which copies are made, or readings given, for the king. It was concealed with the Ark in Josiah's days. Afterward doubt arose concerning the three books found in the Temple court, as stated in tractate Soferim, chapter6.

The plain meaning is that Moses' eye wept tears over what he knew: after his death they would surely corrupt themselves; they had not merited his entering the Land of Israel with them, to fasten them as a peg in a secure place and annul the decree of exile pronounced at the Covenant between the Pieces. Those tears had the color of ink, from the black within the eye's pupil. They descended drop by drop for each letter, their fluid gleaming like the very heavens, until the letters were perfectly matched. Neither Moses' eye nor the Torah scroll lacked anything.

There were eight verses: at that hour the seven letters of the Name as written and the Name as read, and all similar Names of unification, united with him. Correspondingly Moses' name occurs in them eight times. Their words number YBQ [112], whose mystery is known, and their letters number HShQ [408]. This suffices to awaken the discerning. [TN040073] But in the twelve books Moses wrote for the individual tribes, "He who tends a fig tree shall eat its fruit" was fulfilled: Joshua wrote these eight verses. Thus all the sages' statements stand.

There is no doubt that the entire Torah was worthy of being written in those

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Not to him": even Moses himself did not say the verses when writing them, as the statement distinguishes: up to here the Holy One spoke and Moses repeated and wrote; from here the Holy One spoke and Moses wrote in tears. Rashi wrote that Moses repeated after Him so as not to err in writing, then wrote. From here Moses wrote in tears and, because of his great distress, did not repeat after Him. Likewise, "From his mouth he dictated," and so forth: Barukh did not repeat after him because these were lamentations. End of quotation. There is another reading here too, as Tosafot wrote; see there, in Bava Batra chapter1, and Ritva there. The master follows Rashi's reading and explanation.

"The order of teaching": mentioned in Keitzad Me'abberin. The rabbis taught: how was the order of teaching? Moses learned from the mouth of the Almighty. Aaron entered, and Moses taught him his lesson. Aaron moved aside and sat at Moses' left. His sons entered, and so forth; all the people entered, and he taught them their lesson, and so forth. "Attend to them": to learn the eight verses. "Moses wrote them in tears": without saying anything about them.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"In the book placed": the master holds that Rabbi Yehudah's and Rabbi Shimon's words in Ha-Qometz are both true. Moses wrote the eight verses, as Rabbi Shimon says, in the Torah scroll beside the Ark. Rabbi Shimon objected to Rabbi Yehudah from that scroll: "Can a Torah scroll lack one letter, when it is written, 'Take this Torah scroll and place it beside the Ark of the Covenant'?" His objection is: how could Joshua write something in the Torah scroll Israel were commanded to place in the Ark, when the commandment's entire reason is to copy from the scroll Moses wrote from the mouth of the Almighty, as in Midrash Rabbah, Vayelekh, quoted below? In the other Torah scrolls Moses wrote that day for the twelve tribes, as also stated there in Midrash Rabbah, Rabbi Yehudah's words stand: Joshua wrote the eight verses, as the master concludes shortly.

"From which copies are made": when writing a Torah scroll for the king, as Maimonides says in chapter7 of the Laws of a Torah Scroll and chapter3 of the Laws of Kings. Likewise, when they read to the king, they read from this book. Possibly the king's reading of the Haqhel passage too was from this scroll. "Concealed in Josiah's tears, but we did not merit making use of them. For the man Moses, of whom it is written, "I drew him out of the water"—for those who know his mystery—returned to his foundation when he ascended from the mixed state to the heights of heaven; see the discourse Em Kol Hai, PartIII, section11. Nevertheless, "his eye did not grow dim" from the radiance of the skin of his face, like the appearance of fire, a dwelling for the Torah, which is berit esh, "a covenant of fire," the measure of judgment. The world could not have endured through it unless the measure of mercy joined it, as it is written of Moses, "He saw the first portion for himself." "His moisture did not flee," unlike water flowing downhill.

Rema of Fano - continued

Of that ascent it is written, "Moses died there," and this was true at that very hour, in the manner we have described. For he had already been told, "Ascend Mount Abarim and die there": an actual command to die willingly. Here the Torah testified that he fulfilled this positive commandment as he fulfilled the others. Then the Holy One, blessed be He, was saying, "Moses died there," while Moses was undergoing death and writing in tears, in the sense of "Those passing through the valley of weeping make it a spring," which we shall explain in PartV, chapter6. This was to awaken mercy immediately for the dead of the wilderness, the people with him. No plain reading of "at the mouth of the LORD" is more exact than this. Of Aaron, however, it says, "He ascended at the mouth of the LORD, and died there." The difference between them is plain and manifest.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

time": as in the Jerusalem Talmud, Sheqalim chapter6. "Afterward": once the Torah scroll Moses himself wrote was concealed, uncertainties concerning Torah scrolls began, as occurred with the three scrolls found in the Temple court: the Me'onah scroll, the Za'atutei scroll and the Hi scroll. One read me'on Elohei qedem, two read me'onah; they upheld the two and rejected the one, and so on. See there.

"The plain meaning": concerning the tears. Moses did not weep out of sorrow for his own death; he grieved over Israel's suffering. He knew that they would be carried captive into exile because they would corrupt their way after his death. Had he merited leading them into the Land of Israel, he would have led them into the Garden of Eden, as below in chapter16, and annulled the decree of exile. Over this his eye wept, as will be explained shortly. "The color of ink": lest one object that tears cannot be used to write, since every color except ink's black is invalid for a Torah scroll. The tears were indeed black, from the weakening of the light in his eye's pupil. "For each letter": he took from the drops, their number corresponding to the letters. "Gleaming": the tears gleamed like the heavens because he wrote through his honored Torah-light, as will appear shortly; the final possessive wording in this phrase is unstable. “Perfectly matched”: complete. [TN040075]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Moses' eye lacked nothing”: although “Moses was 120 years old at his death; his eye did not grow dim.” The sages said, “Even at his death,” joining “at his death” to “his eye did not grow dim.” One might think that at death the eye was damaged by the tears, so intense that they touched its pupil. Scripture teaches that Moses' eye lacked nothing because of this. “The Name as written and as read”: YHWH and Adonai; “and all similar ones,” such as Ehyeh. “Their words”: the eight verses' words number YBQ [112], whose mystery is known. It is the numerical value of YHWH, Adonai and Ehyeh, and also of YHWH and Elohim. It alludes to further wondrous matters, as explained in Pardes, the Gate of Epithets; see also Ra'aya Mehemna, Mishpatim, page206. “The value of HShQ”: its mystery is likewise known, as explained in the Zohar, Bereshit, page153.

“But in the twelve books”: this concludes the earlier statement that Moses wrote the eight verses in the book placed in the Ark.

Rema of Fano - continued

It is written, “Moses, servant of the LORD, died there.” Eved, “servant,” has the numerical value of nihoah, “pleasing.” Be-eretz Moav, “in the land of Moab,” has the numerical value of bosem, “fragrance,” namely ba-sefer, “in the book.” Al pi YHWH, “at the mouth of the LORD,” has the numerical value RYW [216]; the vav ascended to the Possessor of the Nose of his full stature, namely the foundation of the supernal Father. “In the land of Moab”: we expound Moav as me-av, “from the Father,” to be there a “pleasing fragrance,” whose numerical value equals be-eretz together with the word itself. Eved YHWH be-eretz Moav has the value TMD [444], twice barekh [222], “blessed.” Therefore Scripture doubles its wording: “This is the blessing with which Moses blessed.” See below, chapter15.

Aaron too was a pleasing fragrance to the stature alluded to by “Hor Ha-Har, at the mouth of the LORD,” namely the Possessor of the Nose of the Mother's foundation. It is called Hor Ha-Har after “a man of understandings.” The ascent was at the mouth of the LORD, and death followed from it, for he gives life to the living, the supernal bridal attendant. How could the LORD's mouth tell him to die? Rather, Moses became the Omnipresent's agent in this. With Miriam, “at the mouth of the LORD” was not stated concerning the stature alluded to by Qadesh, for she is a female burnt offering, permitted only to an individual at a private altar. The proof is Samuel's suckling lamb and the two cows the Philistines sent with the Ark of God.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“‘He who tends the fig tree’ was fulfilled”: in Joshua, as expounded of him in Sifrei, Pinehas. “All the sages' statements”: Rabbi Yehudah's and Rabbi Shimon's both stand and do not disagree. “In those tears”: gleaming like the very heavens in purity. We did not merit using them, so he wrote the rest of the Torah through the light of his garment, as stated shortly.

“For those who know his mystery”: according to the Zohar, Va-Era, page37, on “The LORD appeared to him in a flame of fire.” Rabbi Abba said: “Moses' matter requires contemplation in supernal wisdom. It is written, ‘I drew him out of the water.’ One drawn from water does not fear fire. For it was taught: Rabbi Yehudah said, ‘No other person was hewn from the place from which Moses was hewn.’” Rabbi Abba means that Moses was from lovingkindness, called water. He cites Rabbi Yehudah to explain that one should not take this merely as the measure of lovingkindness, but as “the lovingkindness of Father,” in a damaged phrase, [gap], followed by wording concerning the lovingkindness of Arikh. Of this it is said, “I, Wisdom, dwell with prudence,” ormah; the ensuing numerical comparison mentions “Noah's descendants" and an abbreviated form, [gap], with a damaged continuation referring to the master's Yonat Elem, chapter44. [TN040076] This is "No other person was hewn from the place from which Moses was hewn." "Returned to his foundation": to the foundation of Father. Moses therefore wrote the eight verses through this stature, as below.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"When he ascended from the mixed state to the heights of heaven": Em Kol Hai, PartIII, section11, explains that the thousand generations before the giving of the Torah were in the mystery of the priestly offering, which is one fortieth. One fortieth of a thousand is twenty-five in number, plus one for measure and weight, as explained there: twenty-six. These are the twenty-six generations from Adam to Moses, the priestly offering. The other 974 generations passed away from the ordinary portion. Before the Torah was given, the world was still untithed and mixed, ordinary produce and priestly offering mingled, until Moses came and raised the offering from the mixture. For this he came into the world; afterward, when he too ascended, he returned to his foundation. "Nevertheless": though he returned to his foundation,

Rema of Fano - continued

We have learned that the righteous person's deed is actually written before Him, blessed be He, as it occurs: the commandment ascends and writes itself on high.

It is true that the Zohar indicates Moses our teacher departed on the Sabbath, and this is also found in the responsa of the Geonim. I, however, speak in accordance with Rabbi Yannai in Midrash Rabbah and the tanna of Seder Olam, cited by the Rosh in the chapter Arvei Pesahim, from which it follows that it was on Friday. I can infer that the Zohar does not disagree, for in Terumah it says that at the Sabbath afternoon prayer Moses' study house ceased its activity. It would not be correct to say this of someone whose hands were occupied at that very hour adding eight verses to the Torah scroll. Certainly this did not occur on the Sabbath, since one cannot apply "free among the dead" in such a case. What then must we say? On Friday he was writing while undergoing death, as we shall shortly mention, but he did not depart completely until the time of afternoon prayer on the Sabbath.

Support for this occurs in Yitro: "Come and see: on all six days of the week, when the time of afternoon prayer arrives, severe judgment rules and all judgments awaken. But on the Sabbath day, when the time of afternoon prayer arrives, the favor of favors is present. The Holy Ancient One reveals His favor; all judgments are subdued, and favor and joy are found in all. In this favor Moses, the faithful holy prophet, his eye did not grow dim.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The Torah, a covenant of fire": the world was created for its sake, as the Tiqqunim expound bereshit as berit esh. This is the measure of judgment, through which, the sages said, the world could not endure. He joined mercy to it, the merit of Moses, as they also expound bereshit: for Moses' sake, since he is called reshit, "first," as it is written, "He saw the first portion for himself." The skin of Moses' face shone from the Torah, the covenant of fire, and these two measures were included in him.

"His moisture did not flee": this gives the reason his eye did not grow dim. His eye, like crystal, did not dim from the radiance of his face's skin, the measure of fire, because his moisture—his faithful waters—did not flee, unlike other waters flowing downhill until they are exhausted and gone. His measure of mercy persists even in descent and at death; its strength is now as it was then. Therefore his eye did not grow dim, for one drawn from water does not fear fire. "Of that ascent": he ascended to his foundation, and "he died there" means in the place of his foundation. "This was true": he died in the very hour he wrote. "In the manner described": he ascended to his foundation while still Moses, undergoing death, as will be explained. "He fulfilled": the positive commandment of "die there."

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"In the sense of 'Those passing'": the tears he shed served to rectify the coming of the dead of the wilderness, as will be explained in PartV, chapter6, on "Those passing through the valley of weeping." There the meaning is that the wicked in Gehinnom will be rectified in the future by the tears the righteous shed for them. "Immediately": without waiting until the future general rectification. "Than this": "Moses, servant of the LORD, died there, al pi YHWH." On its literal construction al pi means the nose, which is above the mouth. The supernal allusion is to the foundation, called nose, above sovereignty, called mouth. "But of Aaron it says": in Masei, "Aaron the priest ascended Hor Ha-Har at the mouth of the LORD and died there." The difference is plain: with Aaron, "at the mouth of the LORD" is not attached to "he died," for the reason given shortly.

"It is written": the master incidentally expounds some appetizers of wisdom in this matter. "The value departed from the world, to make known that he did not depart through judgment. At that hour, in the favor of the Holy Ancient One, his soul went forth and was hidden in Him," and so on. End of quotation. Thus he was fit to depart on a weekday, but the completion of his departure was delayed until the Sabbath, "to make known," and so forth. We shall explain this shortly.

Rema of Fano - continued

Moses our teacher called himself "the hidden lawgiver," mehoqeq safun. Had safun described the allotted portion, it would have had to say sefunah, in the feminine. For while he was inscribing the two verses "he died" and "he buried," he also underwent burial. The Holy One, blessed be He, says "He buried him," and Moses writes and buries in his tent, at the utterance, that stature of his garment's light through which he wrote the rest of the Torah. All this was on Friday. Thus both are correct: the Holy One buried him by the utterance, and he buried himself through the act. Through writing and surrender, "he is borne to the grave." We shall return to this again. From this point on, while writing the remaining verses to the Torah's end, he was already hidden, yet still inscribing in the particular book mentioned above. This honored stature, through which he wrote the eight verses, was not concealed until the Sabbath.

What we are explaining is readily understood in conjunction with what we fully explained in the discourse Ha-Nefesh, chapter15: every righteous Israelite has an upper image and likeness, which did not depart from our

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

of nihoah": Moses was a pleasing fragrance to this nose. "The value of bosem": he was received as spices giving a good scent. "Namely in the book": the supernal Father is called book, as explained in the Zohar, Terumah; foundation too is called book, as is known. "We expound 'from Father'": the supernal Father; therefore these numerical allusions fit well in be-eretz Moav. "The value of TSD [464]": which the commentary calls twice barekh [222], corresponding to the stature's two halves, from the appearance of its loins upward and from its loins downward, as explained below in chapter15; see there. The transmitted number here differs from the body's 444 and from twice222. [TN040077] "Therefore the wording doubles": otherwise "the blessing" would seem superfluous; it would suffice to say, "This is what he blessed."

"Aaron too was a fragrance": to his stature, the foundation of Mother, alluded to by Hor Ha-Har. Thus "Aaron the priest ascended Hor Ha-Har at the mouth of the LORD": to the Possessor of the Nose there. "After 'a man of understandings'": the master writes in Yonat Elem, chapter7: "The supernal Mother has three aspects. First, when she is together with Father, having ascended to him for union, she is called Binah. Second, when in her place without union, alone, she is called Tevunah. This is also her name in the third aspect, when she descends into the Lesser Countenance to bestow upon him. When the Lesser Countenance ascends to the place of supernal Binah, she ascends with him from there to Father's place," and so forth. Of him it says, in this mystery, "A man of understandings draws her up": he raises her in her two lower aspects to Father. Then he rises from being a son and not a man; she rises from being Tevunah in both aspects to being Binah. Both are called binot, "understandings," and so forth; see there. Aaron is the man of understandings who rises to Father, the Matron's bridal attendant, bringing her to the King, as known from many places in the Zohar. Therefore his stature too is called Hor Ha-Har: har, "mountain," is an epithet of foundation, and ha-har alludes to Father, namely Binah's ascent to him.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The ascent": the statement "at the mouth of the LORD" concerning Aaron's ascent is as though it were written of his death, since the ascent's purpose was death and death followed from it. It is master Moses until the Sabbath, and a lower image and likeness, which departed on Friday. Those whose inquiry is complete will not deem it remote that Moses' upper stature delayed leaving this world, with a form visible to the eyes refined for it, like the three men at the terebinths of Mamre. Or it was like Rabbi Nehunya ben Ha-Qanah and the others executed by royal authority: after they were sold and judgment was actually completed against them to atone for the children of Israel, they were redeemed through a likeness of their image descending and appearing to their ravagers, who carried out punishments upon it. In the end, "when their slain were slain, they were slain," as stated in Pirqei Heikhalot and explained by the Ari, of blessed memory. [TN040074] Or Moses' embodiment was in a more spiritual and perfect manner.

Rema of Fano - continued

They will especially grow to love this exposition in light of Midrash Rabbah at the end of Vayelekh: after writing thirteen books, Moses rose early to Joshua's doorway. "Rising early" means the following morning. When they entered the Tent of Meeting, the pillar of cloud divided them, since one reign does not encroach on another, as stated there. We have said that Moses lingered only "to make known that he did not depart through judgment." Hence the Zohar calls him "the faithful holy prophet": by that hour he had already been sanctified for acceptance in the supernal favor, having shed his lower image and likeness on Friday, as stated.

From then on, all Israel perceived that not attached to "he died," because that would not be correct in its plain meaning: how could the LORD's mouth tell him to die, when he is the Matron's bridal attendant, "giving soul to the people upon her"? Therefore the blessed LORD spoke of Aaron's death only to Moses, His agent in this, as explained in Huqqat.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"With Miriam 'at the mouth of the LORD' was not stated": the sages said that Miriam too died by a kiss, learned by comparing "there" with "there." Why was "at the mouth of the LORD" not written of her? Because the expression would be indecorous. Following his approach, the master says she too departed to her stature, sovereignty, as in the Zohar, Huqqat, page345. This stature is alluded to by Qadesh in "The people dwelt at Qadesh, and Miriam died there," for Qadesh is an epithet of sovereignty. Miriam too died at the mouth of the LORD, ascending to the Possessor of the Nose of her stature, namely the foundation within sovereignty. Scripture did not state this explicitly because she was a female burnt offering, permitted for an individual but not for a multitude. Foundation is called rov, "multitude," as explained in the Zohar, Toledot. Therefore Scripture did not explicitly say she ascended to foundation. “The proof from the suckling lamb”: as in the chapter Ein Ma'amidin.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“We have learned”: from the Torah's testimony concerning Moses, “He died there,” that he fulfilled the positive commandment “die there,” as above. “It is true”: the master further explains Moses' death and burial in order to reach the exposition announced at the beginning of the chapter.

“The Zohar indicates”: in Terumah, page278, it says: “Moses departed from the world at the hour of Sabbath afternoon prayer, when a time of favor is present. At that hour there was favor above and sorrow below. Therefore the gates are closed from the time of afternoon prayer onward. Which gates are closed? The gates of the study house, to remember Moses, the faithful shepherd, for whose sake Torah study ceased at that time. Moses' study house ceased its activity; how much more others! Who sees the gates of Moses' study house closed without all the others closing? Moses' Torah is sorrowful over him at that time; who would not be sorrowful? Therefore all the study-house gates close, and everyone must shedding and departure, and agreed to weep for thirty days. From the moment of their agreement it is written, va-yittemu: the days received completeness from Israel's accepting them. Their agreement was accepted favorably before Him, blessed be He, to plead their merit, joined to action as though they had already performed it, and worthy of being written in the LORD's perfect Torah, whose faithful reading accords with its writing and language. Far be exaggeration from it. It is remote from equivocation and borrowed expressions: the Torah has seventy faces, and each face rises into many interpretations.

Rema of Fano - continued

We do find, however, one verse explaining another differently from the sages' exposition. This is clear evidence that throughout the whole Torah a verse never leaves its plain meaning, as Rava says in Yevamot. In Chronicles, Amaziah killed his father's killers but did not put their children to death, “as written in the Torah of Moses: Fathers shall not be put to death for children.” There, however, this is required for the law of testimony: fathers shall not be put to death on their children's testimony. It is as we have said.

We have likewise explained “great cities fortified in the heavens”: it is literally true, since the external princes do not enter the Land's boundaries on high. Similarly, Abraham told his young men, “We shall worship and return to you.” Had Isaac been slaughtered, this would have been fulfilled at the resurrection of the dead, for Eliezer entered the Garden of Eden alive and Ishmael will merit it acknowledge the Holy One's justice in the Sabbath manner. This is ‘Your righteousness is like the mountains of God.’ Three departed from the world at this time, and all are included in Moses: one is Moses, the supernal faithful prophet; one Joseph the righteous; one King David. Therefore there are three declarations of the justice of judgment here,” and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Also in the Geonim's responsa”: for this reason they instituted acknowledgement of judgment at the Sabbath afternoon prayer, and it was customary not to establish a study session at that hour, because when a sage dies all study houses cease their activity. “Rabbi Yannai in Midrash Rabbah”: quoted shortly, says Moses wrote thirteen Torah scrolls on the day he died, which could not have been the Sabbath. “The tanna of Seder Olam”: on “On the seventh day the wall fell,” Rabbi Yose says it was the Sabbath, the twenty-eighth of Nisan. It follows that the first of Nisan was Sunday, the first of Adar was Sabbath, and the seventh of Adar, when Moses died, was Friday. The Rosh sets all this out in Arvei Pesahim.

“It would not be correct”: to say his study house ceased when he was engaged at that very hour in the eight verses he wrote. Moreover, this could not have occurred on the Sabbath: how could he write on the Sabbath? We cannot say it was permitted because of “free among the dead”—that when a person dies he becomes free of commandments—since while writing he was not yet dead. We must therefore say what follows. “Support for this”: in the Zohar, Yitro, page129.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“He called himself ‘the hidden lawgiver’”: “He saw the first portion for because he repented. This is why he told them, “Stay here with the donkey”—but not with the donkey in the world to come.

Rema of Fano - continued

Even David's words to Ahimelekh the priest, which appear to deceive for the saving of life, and the words he put in Hushai the Archite's mouth to appease Absalom, are all the language of wisdom, preserving truth forever, as we have fully explained in its place. They were included in the prophetic books to teach that truth saves its possessors. Whoever wishes to err may err; truth always stands. Likewise Micaiah's words to Ahab, “Go up and succeed”—we shall explain them.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

himself, for there is the portion of the hidden lawgiver.” While inscribing and writing, he was already hidden and buried, as the master concludes. “Had safun described”: had it been an adjective joined to helqah, “portion,” as Rashi explains, “that portion is hidden and concealed from every creature, as it is said, ‘No one knew his burial place,’” it should say sefunah, feminine like helqah. Mizrahi's answer—that one cannot object from masculine safun to feminine helqah, since helqah means heleq, a masculine “portion,” to which safun refers—seems forced to the master. He prefers to take safun as an adjective joined to mehoqeq, “lawgiver,” as Onqelos translates: “For in his inheritance Moses, the great scribe, is concealed.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The master nevertheless changes the meaning. Onqelos would mean: there is the portion where the lawgiver is hidden, taking safun as a passive participle. But then the construct tav in helqat is difficult: it ought to say ki sham helqah, “for there is a portion.” This difficulty surely pressed Rashi into joining helqat and safun. The master therefore connects and arranges the wording like Onqelos, but says safun is an adjective, not a passive participle, of mehoqeq: there is the portion of Moses, who is a hidden lawgiver. This description fits because he was buried while writing the two verses “he died” and “he buried”; when he afterward wrote the remaining verses, he was already buried and hidden.

“For the Holy One says ‘He buried’”: as said above of his death: the Holy One said “Moses died,” while Moses wrote and underwent death. “At the utterance, that stature”: the burial consisted in ceasing to write through his garment's light. With respect to that stature he buries, while writing the eight verses through this stature, the foundation of Father. “Thus both are correct”: the sages disagreed in explaining “He buried him in the valley,” one saying he buried himself and another that the Holy One buried him. Both are true: the blessed LORD buried him by the utterance “He buried him”; Moses buried himself by writing “He buried him,” as above in the Gemara: the blessed LORD speaks and he writes. “Through his writing”: Moses' writing and surrendering the stature of his garment's light. “From this point on”: the conclusion of the matter. “In the particular book”: the foundation of Father, called book. This stature was not concealed until the Sabbath; thus all the sages' statements are true together.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Readily understood”: one may further say that Moses' lower image and likeness departed on Friday, and the upper on the Sabbath. “What we are explaining”: below in PartIV. “They will not deem it remote”: there is no objection that, if Moses' body died when his lower image departed on Friday, his upper stature could not remain below without a body until Sabbath afternoon. A form visible to the eyes could have been refined for it, as with the angels who came to Abraham our father, or the ten executed by royal authority. “They were redeemed”: they disappeared from sight in body and soul, and the likeness of their image descended to receive the great blows inflicted by the ravagers. “In the end”: the ravagers and enemies were killed “when their slain were slain,” namely by those likenesses.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“They will especially grow to love”: those whose inquiry is complete will cherish this exposition reconciling the views about the time of Moses' death, because of Midrash Rabbah, Vayelekh, on “Behold, your days approach.” It reads: Rabbi Simai says: “The day complained before the Holy One: ‘Master of the world, I will not move or set while Moses lives.’” Once Moses knew he was to die that day, what did he do? Rabbi Yannai said: “He wrote thirteen Torah scrolls, twelve for the twelve tribes, and one he placed in the Ark, so that if they sought to falsify anything they would bring out the one in the Ark. Moses said: ‘While I am occupied with the Torah, which is wholly life, the day will set and the decree be annulled.’ What did the Holy One do? He signaled to the sun, which stood firm against him, saying, ‘I will not set while Moses lives in the world,’” and so forth. “‘Call Joshua’: Moses said before Him, ‘Master of the world, let Joshua take my office and let me live.’ The Holy One said, ‘Do for him as he does for you.’ Immediately Moses rose early and went to Joshua's house,” and so forth. It thus says he wrote the thirteen Torah scrolls on the day he died, which cannot have been the Sabbath. It further says that on the next day he rose early to Joshua's doorway, and departed that day. How can this be? Certainly as we have said.

“We have said”: the reason the upper image and likeness lingered is likewise as the Zohar says, “to make known,” and so forth. “He had already been sanctified at that hour”: from the previous day, to be received in the supernal favor of the Holy Ancient One. “From then on”: on Friday they agreed to weep. Moses could therefore properly write, “The children of Israel wept,” although it had not yet occurred, because their agreement and thought counted as action. Hence also “The days of weeping in mourning for Moses va-yittemu,” although they were not yet finished: va-yittemu here means completeness, not termination. The days received completeness and merit from the moment of agreement. See the master's Yonat Elem, chapter26.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

This also resolves the grammarians' observation that the tav of va-yittemu should have a patah, not a sheva, as in yittammu hata'im min ha-aretz, “Let sins cease from the earth,” as Radak writes in the Book of Roots. If it means completeness, the sheva is correct.

“As though they had already performed it”: as the master said at the end of the preceding chapter. Therefore it is worthy of being written, even though not yet done. “According to its writing”: the source adds, “the tav of va-yittemu has the numerical value KH [28],” a numerically problematic transmitted gloss. [TN040078] “Far be it from the Torah”: to say it speaks in exaggeration, as others do rhetorically. “Remote from equivocation”: speakers commonly embellish language with a shared name or a term borrowed from something else. But all the Torah's lovely words, although given to be expounded in seventy faces, are also true in their plain sense, all righteous together.

“As Rava”: in Yevamot chapter2, folio24, concerning levirate marriage: “‘In his brother's name’ means inheritance. You say inheritance; perhaps it means the actual name—if Joseph, call him Joseph; if Yohanan, call him Yohanan? Here it says, ‘He shall succeed in his brother's name,’ and elsewhere, ‘They shall be called in their brothers' names in their inheritance.’ As ‘name’ there means inheritance, so ‘name’ here means inheritance.” Rava said: “Although throughout the Torah a verse never leaves its plain sense, here the verbal analogy comes and removes it entirely from its plain sense.” Rashi explains “a verse never leaves its plain sense”: although we expound it homiletically, it does not wholly leave its plain sense.

“In Chronicles”: IIChronicles25, “but their children,” and so forth. “There”: in the Gemara, the chapter Zeh Borer, “They shall not be put to death” is expounded concerning testimony. “As we said”: the plain sense too is true. “We have explained”: in Eqev, “Hear, Israel: you are crossing the Jordan today to dispossess nations greater and stronger than yourself, great cities fortified in the heavens.” This is no exaggeration. As the Zohar says in Vayaqhel, page375, there are partitions above separating the territory of the Land of Israel from the lands of the nations. The other princes appointed over the nations' lands stand outside the Land of Israel at a distance of a thousand cubits and may not enter it. Nor may any enter another's territory unless given permission to rule over him. See there. Galante accordingly expounds “The kings of the earth and all the world's inhabitants did not believe that foe and enemy would enter Jerusalem's gates”; see there. On this basis it properly says: you are crossing to possess the cities of the Land of Israel although they are great and fortified above in the heavens, where none of the princes may enter. You are now under the Holy One's kingship, not the princes'. In my opinion this is why it concludes, “Know today that the LORD your God is the One passing before you.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Likewise Abraham's words”: to his young men, “I and the lad… we shall worship and return,” in the plural, meaning himself and Isaac. Though he expected to slaughter Isaac, he spoke correctly and did not inwardly deceive. Had Isaac been slaughtered, the promise would still have been fulfilled when he returned to them at the resurrection. There is no need for Ibn Ezra's strained explanation here. The sages say in the midrashim that he said it prophetically, as Rashi too writes: he prophesied without knowing what he prophesied. This too is insufficient, as written in Yefeh To'ar. “This is why he says ‘here’”: specifically here with the donkey, but not in the world to come, when they will be with Isaac in the Garden of Eden.

“Even David's words”: when fleeing Saul, he lied to Ahimelekh, as stated in the scriptural narrative, cited here as “Kings21.” He was permitted to mislead him to save life. Likewise, the words he put in Hushai the Archite's mouth to Absalom, “I am your servant, O king,” and so forth (IISamuel15). Though permitted to do so to save himself and frustrate Ahithophel's counsel, he nevertheless spoke truth; they were all the language of wisdom. [TN040079] “To teach that truth saves”: not as if wisdom lay in falsehood. “Likewise Micaiah's ‘Go up and succeed’”: he spoke truth. “We shall explain”: in Em Kol Hai, PartII, section3.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“We seek him, but he is not”: Moses departed from the world. “Our explanation also includes”: we explain “an individual reads” as without an intermediary, and this includes Rashi's statement that one does not interrupt them to have them read through an interpreter. One must pause between verses for the translation's reading; therefore he says an individual reads them without an interpreter. “Afterward doubt arose”: after the Torah scroll Moses wrote in tears was concealed, uncertainties arose, because they no longer had Moses' scroll from which to learn.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“To annul the decrees of exile”: as below, chapter15, Moses' stature and that of the wilderness generation surpassed the Land of Israel's stature. Had he entered with them, they would have passed through the Land of Israel into the Garden of Eden; he would have annulled the turning sword guarding the way to the tree of life. See there. “Until the letters were perfectly matched,” through “neither Moses' eye nor the Torah scroll lacked”: this is “until their completion,” meaning both were whole—Moses and the Torah scroll.

“The Name as written”: YHWH; “the Name as read”: Adonai. Together they have eight letters, corresponding to the eight verses, in which Moses is mentioned eight times. For YHWH, filled with yods, has the value184. How? Yod; yod he; yod he vav; yod he vav he, in the spelled forms יו״ד, יו״ד ה״י, יו״ד ה״י ו״ו, יו״ד ה״י ו״ו ה״י: together184. Ehyeh in its filled form has the value161: alef he yod he, אל״ף ה״י יו״ד ה״י, is161. The source then says that184 and161 total “the value of HShQ,” followed by the obscure wording “in the name, meaning KQ.” The arithmetic and ending are not reconciled here. [TN040080]

“The words are YBQ”: the two Names Elohim and YHWH total112; YHWH, Ehyeh and Adonai likewise total112. It is also the initials of “He will answer us on the day we call,” ya'anenu be-yom qor'enu, and the numerical value of the initials of “May the LORD answer you on the day of distress,” ya'ankhah YHWH be-yom tzarah, is YBQ. “The letters number HShQ”: there are three kinds of love, listed here as hefetz, “desire,” hashiqah, “yearning,” and devequt, “attachment,” with the stated initials EHD, “one.” Thus Rabbi Aqiva's soul departed with “One.” I heard this in the name of R.Sh. son of R.Q., of blessed memory. They correspond to the four letters of YHWH. The listed initials and the three/four correspondence remain uncertain as transmitted. [TN040081]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“All the sages' statements stand”: sometimes the text implies that Moses wrote the eight verses in tears, while elsewhere the sages say Joshua wrote them. Both are words of the living God: in the thirteenth Torah scroll, which Moses himself wrote, he wrote the eight verses too; in the other twelve scrolls Joshua wrote the eight verses. “‘I drew him out of the water’ is written of him”: Moses' level was the foundation within Wisdom, the supernal Father; now at death he returned precisely to that foundation, that level.

“When he ascended from the mixed state”: like one se'ah of priestly offering falling into a hundred se'ah of ordinary produce. This alludes to Moses, who had no inherent connection with this world and descended only to raise sparks of holiness from the world of Action, where they had descended through Adam's sin. The se'ah of priestly offering is Moses, falling into the hundred se'ah of ordinary produce, Israel. Afterward, when he died, he raised the mixture in101. “To the heights of heaven”: Moses ascended on high.

“Nevertheless his eye did not grow dim,” through “like the appearance of fire, a dwelling for the Torah”: bereshit is expounded as berit esh, “covenant of fire,” and also as beit esh, “house of fire.” The resh in the middle is Elohim in this progressive combination: alef; alef lamed; alef lamed he; alef lamed he yod; Elohim—א’ א”ל אל”ה אלה”י—totaling resh [200]. Moses' eye did not dim from that point indicating judgment; the source word for the point is unclear. The world could not endure except through joining “the measure of judgment,” as this occurrence reads, for Moses was also of lovingkindness. [TN040082] This is “I drew him out of the water,” in lovingkindness; and “He saw the first portion for himself,” through Moses' merit. Therefore it says his moisture did not flee like water, and so forth. Of the ascent whereby Moses rose on high at his departure it says, “Moses ascended,” and “he died there.”

“In the sense of ‘Those passing through the valley of weeping’”: in the world of Action, where wicked Israelites weep from the distress of being judged, and Moses rectified them. “No ‘at the mouth of the LORD’ is more exact”: Moses' root is in Father's foundation; each measure constitutes a complete stature and countenance. Moses died in foundation within Wisdom, in the measure of long patience, the nose. Hotem, “nose,” has the value63, where the Name of63 shines. This is the mystery of “For you I restrain My anger,” ehetom, and “To the Possessor of the Nose I pray.” The nose was above the mouth; the following wording about the sefirot and the place of Moses' departure is damaged. The next source fragment, בני יומא כירום נקם, is unresolved. It continues that this is the nose, and Moses was a male burnt offering, received there as a pleasing fragrance. [TN040083]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Namely in the book”: the source states that yakhol is called book, with reference to “Joseph, a Torah scroll,” as above; the word yakhol is uncertain here. [TN040084] “We expound ‘from Father’”: alluding to the supernal Father, yod. “To the stature alluded to by Hor Ha-Har,” after “‘a man of understandings’”: Aaron's stature is in the foundation—the wording also inserts “Father”—of the supernal Mother. From the appearance of her loins upward she is called Binah, from the union of Wisdom and understanding, as mother over the children; from the appearance of her loins downward she is called Tevunah. The upper portion is called har and the lower ha-har. He ascended to Hor Ha-Har, to his stature up to the nose, to be a pleasing fragrance, as above. This too is “at the mouth of the LORD.” [TN040085]

“Death followed from it”: by itself. He did not decree that Aaron ascend and die, as He commanded Moses, “Die there.” Aaron was the supernal bridal attendant and the source of living water; how could He decree that he die? It was therefore told to him through an agent, Moses. “With Miriam”: she too died in the foundation of sovereignty. In that stature she departed as a pleasing fragrance to the nose, as above. But because a female burnt offering was permitted only “in the future,” in this transmitted reading, “at the mouth of the LORD” was not explicitly stated of her in the Torah. [TN040086]

“We have learned that the righteous person's deed”: this refers back to chapter12, where the righteous people's books are honored with them; see there. “It would not be correct”: to say his study house ceased, since he then added eight verses to the

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Torah. Moreover, it was not on the Sabbath, when writing is forbidden. “Severe judgment rules and all judgments awaken”: when judgments descend from above to sovereignty, they are severe. The word “awaken” suggests descending below; the intervening abbreviation is unclear. See there. [TN040087] “The completion of his departure was delayed until the Sabbath, to make known”: to make known that he did not depart through judgment, since weekday afternoon is a time of judgment, unlike the Sabbath.

“Had it described the portion”: if safun described helqah, “portion,” it should say sefunah in the feminine. Rather, it refers to Moses: he was hidden and buried, yet still inscribing the eight verses. The stature through which he wrote the rest of the Torah departed and was buried on Friday. The stature through which he wrote the eight verses did not depart until the Sabbath. “Upper image and likeness”: corresponding to neshamah and hayyah. “Lower image and likeness”: corresponding to nefesh and ruah. Yehidah, however, requires no garment; see above, chapters4 and5.

“Those whose inquiry is complete will not deem it remote”: they will not find it strange that the upper stature lingered until the Sabbath after the lower had departed. How could it remain in the world without a body? He therefore says that another form was refined for it, like the three men, Abraham's angels, who clothed themselves in bodies; or like those executed by royal authority, whose image-likenesses descended. Moses had a more spiritual embodiment than those righteous persons.

“They will especially grow to love”: those mentioned will agree with the exposition that he departed on Friday and on the Sabbath. After he wrote thirteen books on Friday, it says “he rose early to his doorway,” implying the next day, Sabbath, since rising early refers to the following morning. Thus the completion of his departure extended to the Sabbath itself. “From then on all Israel perceived”: he has explained Moses' death so that the sayings do not contradict one another, but it remains to explain how he wrote that Moses' mourning days “were completed” while he was still alive writing eight verses. He answers that once all Israel perceived the departure of Moses' lower image and likeness on Friday, they accepted thirty days of weeping. Those days acquired completeness, and Scripture credited them as already performed. Far be exaggeration from the Torah, God forbid: it has seventy faces, and each face rises into many interpretations.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Differently from the sages' exposition”: a verse never leaves its plain meaning. The following connective is damaged; it refers to exposition and “words of the living God.” [TN040088] “There it is needed for testimony”: “Fathers shall not be put to death” was expounded concerning their children's testimony. How, then, does Chronicles say he did not put the children to death, when the Torah of Moses concerns children's testimony? Although this sentence's wording is damaged, its conclusion is that a verse never leaves its plain sense. [TN040089]

“Cities fortified in the heavens”: literally, for around the heavenly Jerusalem is a wall of fire. The names given to these enclosing powers, and the cited commentator's name, are damaged and uncertain. Samael and the upper powers cannot enter within them, as explained on “The kings of the earth did not believe that foe and enemy would enter Jerusalem”—the Jerusalem above. Thus there is no exaggeration in the Torah, contrary to the view attributed here to commentators and Rashi. [TN040090]

“Likewise with Abraham,” who said, “We shall return to you”: this alludes to the world to come. Isaac will endure for the resurrection of the dead, Eliezer entered the Garden of Eden, and Ishmael repented. Thus they are all together in one place. This differs from “here with the donkey”: now he resembles a donkey, but not in the future, after repenting. “They were included in the prophetic books”: they were written there to show that the words are not mere exaggeration; everything is in truth and integrity.

Return to chapter in contents

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 14 (יד)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"For this": connected with the end of the preceding chapter: everything in the Torah is the language of wisdom, even when its plain wording does not appear so. The master says the tanna prayed at the end of Avot, "May it be Your will… give us our portion in Your Torah," for what an accomplished student innovates and explains in such matters. The meaning is: let our portion, which we renew in Torah below, also be placed above in Your Torah, as will be explained.

"Just as": the LORD reveals the supernal mysteries to Israel and the sages, so the blessed LORD reveals above to the angels what the Torah scholars below renew in Torah. "Literally making His word": "By the LORD's word the heavens were made." The LORD's word is Torah, the Holy One's artisan's tool, as known from the beginning of Bereshit Rabbah. Likewise the righteous make new heavens through their words, their new Torah insights, day by day.

"As Rabbi Shimon says": Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai in the Zohar, Bereshit,

Rema of Fano

For this the tanna of Avot prayed when he said, "Give us our portion in Your Torah." Just as He told His people the power of His deeds above, so the deeds of the righteous—mighty in strength, literally making His word through new insights in Torah law—are placed in the King of the world's treasury: the Torah above. It is His artisan's tool, with which He continually makes new heavens and a new earth each day from them, as Rabbi Shimon says in his aggadah.

Of this they said, "Everything depends upon mazal, even a Torah scroll in the sanctuary," in its plain sense: it lies closed in a corner until "water flows from Israel's buckets," as they orally renew the Torah's mysteries in it. This flowing does not cease throughout the days of willing activity. One generation raises a greater population of sages than another. With this intention Rabbi Zeira said when he went up there, "May it be His will that I say something that is accepted"—meaning in heaven above and on earth below.

The tanna says "our portion" in the plural, either to include all the sages and join himself to the merit of the many, or following the saying on "Then they spoke… and it was written": the words of two are written in the book of remembrances. This must concern the elevation of new Torah insights.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

page24: "Rabbi Shimon opened: 'I have placed My words in your mouth.' How greatly must a person labor in Torah by day and night! For the Holy One listens to the voices of those occupied with Torah, and with every word renewed in Torah through the one studying it, He makes a firmament. We have learned: when a Torah word is renewed from a person's mouth, it ascends and stands before the Holy One. He takes that word and kisses it," and so forth. "That word flies, ascends, descends and becomes a firmament," and so forth. "All the other Torah words renewed stand before the Holy One, ascend and become lands of the living," and so forth. "Therefore it is written, 'As the new heavens and the new earth which I make stand before Me.' It does not say 'I made,' but 'I make': He makes them continually from those new insights and mysteries of Torah," and so forth. See there.

"Until water flows": he explains a Torah scroll's dependence on mazal as what a scholar pours into it orally through his new insights. "Meaning": that the new Torah teaching is accepted above too. “He says ‘our portion’ in the plural”: not “my portion.” “To include all the sages”: either he asked this for all the sages in order to join himself to them, as the sages said, “A person should always join himself with the community.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Or following”: alternatively, following the sages' saying in Berakhot chapter1 on “Then those who feared the LORD spoke, each to his fellow; the LORD listened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before Him.” They said: “Whence do we know that when two sit engaged in Torah the Shekhinah is with them? From ‘Then those who feared the LORD spoke, each to his fellow.’ Whence even one?” and so forth. “Since even one, need two be stated? The words of two are written in the book of remembrances; the words of one are not written in the book of remembrances.”

“This must concern”: new Torah insights: precisely two have their new insights written, not one. Otherwise, if it concerned ordinary Torah study, why would one person's words not be written? We learned, “All your deeds are written in a book”; is Torah study inferior to other commandments?

Rema of Fano - continued

Otherwise, is Torah study inferior to any other commandment, even a minor one, when all our deeds, including an individual's, are written in a book?

Or, if you prefer: Scripture, Mishnah and Gemara took the trouble to teach that precisely two have their words written, whether words of Torah or other commandments. These two are the good inclination and the evil inclination, specifically “each to his fellow.” Everywhere read not ra, “evil,” but rea, “companion”: it was created to serve us and assist us in Heaven's service. These are the two ministering angels who arrange a person's learning before him when he leaves the world, so he will not be ashamed before the Holy One, blessed be He, as the sages say on “The LORD will not let the righteous soul hunger.” It rests upon them to arrange before him the Torah they heard from his mouth throughout his life. Both were renewed through him, since he drew them to the study house. Who are the ministering angels? The rabbis.

In the Masorah, va-yagel occurs twice: “He rolled away the stone,” and “My glory rejoices.” This teaches that the stumbling stone rejoices when the righteous person moves it from the well's mouth, for the evil inclination intends to do its Maker's will. Again in the Masorah, req occurs twice: “The pit was empty,” and “It is no empty matter.” This teaches that everything serves the world's rectification. When the evil inclination obeys the good inclination, it too is made good, and their words are written. The words of one alone are not Tosafot there already noticed this difficulty. They explain that two have their words written with others, while one has his words written alone. The master finds that forced and prefers to explain it of the elevation of new Torah insights: two have their words written. Therefore the tanna too says in the plural, “Give us our portion”—our new Torah insights—to be written above in Your Torah, since the words of two are written.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Or, if you prefer”: Scripture, the Mishnah of Avot and the Gemara of Berakhot all repeat this matter to teach that two are required not only for Torah words but also for commandments. The two are not two people, but a person's two inclinations, good and evil. A person must serve the LORD with both, as the sages explain “with all your heart”: with both inclinations, good and evil. They further said in Berakhot chapter1 that a person should always arouse the good inclination against the evil. Thus “two” means that the evil inclination too assists him and engages in Torah; their words are written. “One” means the good inclination alone engages in Torah, while he does not bring himself to prevail upon the evil inclination so that it too consents: his words are not written. “All your deeds are written in a book" concerns matters of commandments, [gap]; the Mishnah and Gemara likewise refer to Torah study because it is easier in Torah to compel the evil inclination too, as the sages said, "If that repulsive one meets you, draw him to the study house." [TN040091]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Specifically 'each to his fellow'": in the verse, the evil inclination too is like a companion and brother to the good in Heaven's service. Read not "evil inclination," ra, but "companion," rea, as above, PartI chapter21, and Em Kol Hai, PartII section21. "As the sages say": in the midrash brought in Yalqut, Proverbs: "'The LORD will not let the righteous soul hunger'—this is a Torah scholar who studies Torah throughout his life. If a chapter or some part of his learning becomes hidden from him, he does not depart the world before the ministering angels come at his departure and arrange it before him, so he will not be ashamed before the Holy One in the future." The master's reading is "two ministering angels," which he explains as the good and evil inclinations; the task rests upon them. "He drew both": to the study house. Of these one can certainly say, "Who are the angels? The rabbis."

Rema of Fano - continued

written upon stones of pure marble, since they were not written in this world upon the heart of stone.

This is the meaning of "If he merits, he takes his portion and his fellow's portion in the Garden of Eden." He takes his reward and becomes a conduit for the reward due to his fellow, like one counted among the first ten, who takes the reward of all who come afterward. This does not diminish their share: they all merit through him, so he receives all their reward and gives it to them, while a reward equal to them all remains his. The others take from him and he loses nothing. Both formulations hold, as we shall mention below.

From this we learn that the bodies of the righteous, who eat to satisfy their soul, restoring the eaten thing's form so it becomes the substance of the eater—as we shall discuss in chapter17—never return to their dust after meriting resurrection, as our masters said. Although there is no eating or drinking in the world to come, the existence then of organs assigned to those purposes must not be considered useless. They served holy purposes in this world, as in eating commanded by a precept, "to eat bread before God." With every act of chewing, they added strength to the Might above to renew continually, every day, the work of creation. Through them an intellectual form was renewed in salt and water, whose form is inanimate, and all the more in things with vegetative or sensitive form.

These righteous people deserve two

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"This teaches": "He rolled away the stone"—when the righteous person lifts, moves and subdues the evil inclination, called stone, from the well's mouth, the stone itself rejoices. This is "my glory." "Intends to do its Maker's will": even while enticing a person toward transgression, it desires the LORD's righteous purposes; it wishes the person to subdue it to that end. "Everything": even the evil inclination serves the world's rectification. Its enticement aims for a person to overcome it and receive reward; the evil inclination itself too will ultimately be rectified. Thus "the pit"—the evil inclination—"is empty" of commandments; nevertheless "it is no empty matter," but the world's rectification. "When it obeys": this concludes the explanation of "the words of two are written." "One": the good inclination alone, without compelling the evil inclination to join its deeds.

"Upon stones of pure clay": above. This occurrence reads "clay," unlike the body's "marble." [gap] "The stone": in the evil inclination. [TN040092]

"This is the meaning": of the sages' saying in Hagigah chapter2, "If he merits," and so forth. If he merits by compelling the evil inclination too, the good inclination takes its portion and its companion's—the evil inclination's—portion. Because it enabled the latter to receive reward, it also takes this reward for having brought it to that merit. The evil inclination's reward is not diminished by this.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Like”: in the chapter Sheloshah She-Akhelu, Rabbi Yehoshua ben Levi says: “A person should always rise early to the crowns upon each head, for windpipe and esophagus: each in its own way, one through rectifying the act and the other through rectifying the blessing over enjoyment, which became for each righteous person a blessing over a commandment. The radiance of the Shekhinah rises above them according to their daily purity of thought and refinement of intention. This is the radiance in which the Shekhinah delights, in the sense of “They ate of the produce of the land”; for “The LORD will not forsake His people on account of His great Name,” and it is written, “From Me your fruit is found.”

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

synagogue, to merit being counted among the first ten. Even if a hundred come after him, he receives the reward of them all.” Their entire reward—could that be? Rather say, “They give him reward equal to them all.” Following his approach in many places, the master explains that “rather say” does not reject the first statement: both are true. “He receives their entire reward” means he receives it and gives it to them; he too loses nothing, but is also given reward equal to them all. “Below”: PartIII, chapter8.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“We learn”: from the evil inclination's also receiving reward because it is needed for, and serves, holiness. All the more do the righteous people's organs receive reward in the world to come, even though they are then unnecessary, since they at least served holiness. “Restoring the form”: of what is eaten, whether inanimate, vegetable or living, and raising it into the substance of the human eater and his form, the speaking soul. “After they merit”: after the souls merit resurrection and eat the Leviathan feast, they will not again return to dust, but remain body and soul with all their organs. “As our masters said”: in the chapter Heleq.

“Useless”: we should not therefore say that in that world the body and organs perish, as some hold. The source continues that “the waters and stars are chosen to receive reward, since they served holiness for the angels in this world, for their eating.” The objects named in this clause are uncertain in context and are not silently replaced. [TN040093] “With every chewing”: they increased their reward by raising the eaten thing's form to the eater's level. “An intellectual form was renewed through them”: for the inanimate foods, salt and water, converting them into the eater. “All the more”: plants and animals, whose form more readily becomes the eater's form.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Two crowns”: the Gemara in Berakhot chapter2 says, “In the world to come there is neither eating nor drinking, but the righteous sit with their crowns upon their heads and enjoy the Shekhinah's radiance.” “Their crowns” is plural, whose minimum is two, and refers to each righteous individual: one for the windpipe, one for the esophagus. “One”: the esophagus, in its way of eating and drinking, through which they rectified the eaten thing's form—practical rectification. “The other”: the windpipe, in its way of producing sound, through which they blessed over their food, “the exaltations of God in their throat,” in blessings over enjoyment. Therefore they merit two crowns. The saying means that, since the world to come has neither eating nor drinking, the organs for these purposes seem useless. Nevertheless the righteous retain them because they served holiness. Moreover, their crowns—the two crowns gained through eating in this world—are upon each one's head.

“Above them”: above the crowns. This is “they enjoy the Shekhinah's radiance.” As explained above, PartI chapter21, enjoyment in a commandment awakens love between Israel and their Father in heaven. The Shekhinah delights according to the purity and activity of the thought involved in that enjoyment. Thus “the Shekhinah's radiance” means the radiance and brightness of thought that delights the Shekhinah; it rises above them, so now the righteous themselves also enjoy that radiance.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In the sense of ‘They ate of the land's produce’” (Joshua5): they ate of the fruit of the upper land, the Shekhinah. Similarly, “on account of His great Name” refers to this. Ba-avur is like me-avur ha-aretz, “of the land's produce”: through the fruit of His Name, the LORD will not forsake His people, but sustains them with the fruit of His Name. “It is written, ‘From Me your fruit is found’” (Hosea14): the Zohar, Lekh Lekha, page238, expounds it of the Shekhinah's fruit; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Heavens and earth”: as explained in the Zohar on “which I make.” The cited authority's abbreviation is unclear. From studying Torah's hidden mysteries new heavens are made; it is written, “The heavens are the LORD's heavens.” This is “the hidden things”: through Torah's mysteries heavens are made for the LORD, for the heavens belong to Him. From studying the revealed matters new lands are made, as it is said, “The earth He gave to humankind.” Therefore he says, “The revealed things belong to us,” and so forth. [TN040094]

“Everything depends upon mazal”: from “Water flows from his buckets,” Israel's buckets. All the new insights Israel produces are placed in the King of the world's treasury, the Torah above. This is precisely “Give us our portion in Your Torah.” Dalyo, “his buckets,” has the value50, the fifty gates of understanding. Therefore the sages said, “Take care with the children of the poor, for Torah comes forth from them”: the fifty gates of understanding.

“The words concern new Torah insights”: “The words of two are written” concerns new Torah insights specifically. Otherwise, is Torah study inferior to other commandments, all of which, even an individual's, are written in a book, as “All your deeds are written in a book”? Why here say precisely two have their words written? It must concern new Torah insights. Or, if you prefer, it also refers to all other commandments: “precisely two” means the good and evil inclinations, both of which perform the commandments when one arouses the good inclination against the evil. Read not “evil” inclination but “companion,” as it is said, “Then they spoke, each to his fellow”: the good and evil inclinations.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“The evil inclination rejoices”: the stumbling stone is the evil inclination. When the righteous person moves it from the well's mouth, this means the person subdues it, for it intends to do its Maker's will: that the person subdue it and do his Maker's will. “The pit is empty”: the evil inclination. “It is no empty matter”: even the evil inclination serves the world's rectification. Thus the words of two are written, excluding one who does not subdue the evil inclination and has only the good inclination. That one person's words are not written upon the stones of pure marble above.

Its mystery is “to bequeath substance, yesh, to those who love Me.” Crown has620 lights, the value of keter, twice yesh [310]. It gives310 to Wisdom and310 to Understanding, with Crown between them. To Wisdom it gives by direct light, and to Understanding by reflected light. This is the mystery of “A wise one praises her afterward.” It is alluded to in “LORD, I have heard,” YHWH shama'ti, initials YSh; “Your report, I feared,” shim'akha yareti, initials ShY. YSh is direct light, ShY reflected light. This is shayish, “marble”: ShY and YSh, the yod serving in both directions.

“Both hold”: the Gemara objected, “Their entire reward—could that be?” and answered, “Equal to them all.” The author explains that both hold: first he takes all their reward, then gives each his portion, and a reward equal to them all remains his too. He loses nothing, like lighting one lamp from another.

“Restoring the eaten thing's form”: rectifying the item designated by the uncertain abbreviation HDQ, or any food, to raise the holy sparks within it that fell through Adam's sin, as above: they fell into animal, vegetable and inanimate things. Through the righteous person's eating with good intention, he rectifies that food and incorporates it into his substance, in which it has a root and substance. [TN040095]

“Although there is no eating or drinking”: one might object that, since there will be no eating and drinking, why should the resurrection recreate him with teeth and eating organs? He answers that they served holiness in this world through their eating and good intentions. An intellectual form sanctified water and salt, the inanimate things, all the more plants and sensitive animals. The righteous deserve two crowns, one corresponding to the windpipe and one to the esophagus. The windpipe produces the sound of blessings over enjoyment; with the esophagus one eats and rectifies what is eaten. This explains the Gemara: “In the future, in the world to come, there is neither eating nor drinking; the righteous sit, their crowns upon their heads, and enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Became for each righteous person”: his blessing over eating was like blessing over commandments, since his eating was for a commandment. The next connective is uncertain. “This is the radiance in which the Shekhinah delights”: “They enjoy the Shekhinah's radiance” means the radiance the Shekhinah herself enjoys, the measure of Beauty shining into Sovereignty, the Shekhinah. It is brought to the level designated in the source as zokher, apparently the male level, called the radiance the Shekhinah enjoys. [TN040096] See the Zohar, Bemidbar, page228: “He is called holy”; ziv alludes to this month and year illuminating the moon, for body and covenant are reckoned one.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This is “As long as the righteous person”—Foundation—is “in the city”—Sovereignty—“he is its radiance.” The Tiqqunim give “Hod” in its ordinary sense, and “splendor, KLH,” as this source abbreviates it; this is its radiance. Likewise, “Its radiance departed”: when the righteous person leaves the city, the influx no longer comes from the supernal radiance, the righteous one, foundation of the world. It is known that these three—Hod, Foundation and KLH—together are one matter, as we shall explain in the next chapter. The abbreviations and wording are unstable. [TN040097]

This is the mystery of the Torah's being given in Sivan, which the source calls qodesh ziv and calls “Twins.” We said above that Torah is in Beauty and Joseph in Foundation, and we reckon them one: the radiance of Torah. The concluding letter-combination passage reads “ve-yihu, and the vav, meshekh, and the vav,” and is not secure; Jacob and Joseph, body and covenant, are reckoned one. [TN040098]

“From Him your fruit is found”: avur ha-aretz is the fruit of Sovereignty, called earth. This is ba-avur shemo, “through the produce of His Name,” Adonai. See the Zohar, Lekh Lekha, page433.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 14

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 15 (טו)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“It can be explained”: the tanna's prayer, “Give us our portion in Your Torah,” means that You should mention above, in the academy on high, a legal teaching in the name of the one who stated it below.

Rema of Fano

“Give us our portion in Your Torah” can also be explained as a request of Him, blessed be He, that our portion in Torah be acceptable before Him, included in the teaching He studies in the academy above. Thus He sits and teaches: “My son Eliezer says: a heifer is in its first year, a cow in its second.” Rabbi Eliezer was

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Thus”: in the midrash, Rabbi Aha says in Rabbi Yose bar Hanina's name: when Moses ascended on high, he heard the Holy One's voice, sitting and studying the passage of the red cow and stating a law in its author's name: “My son Eliezer says: a cow is in its second year and a heifer in its first,” and so forth. Moses said before Him, “Master of the world, may it be Your will that he issue from my loins.” The Holy One replied, “By your life, he shall issue from your loins.” This is “The name of the one was Eliezer”: the name of that distinguished one was Eliezer.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Because Rabbi Eliezer was”: in chapter2 of Avot he used to say, “If all Israel's sages were on one scale and Eliezer ben Hyrqanus on the other, he would outweigh them all.” Abba Shaul says in his name: “If all Israel's sages were on one scale and Eliezer ben Hyrqanus with them, and Elazar ben Arakh on the other, he would outweigh them all.” The commentators explain that both statements [gap]. Rabbi Eliezer ben Hyrqanus outweighed all Israel's sages in his received teachings, as below; in this he was Sinai. Rabbi Elazar ben Arakh outweighed them in acuity and dialectical reasoning, uprooting mountains, as the Gemara in Horayot says of Rav Yosef and Rabbah.

This Rabbi Eliezer, who said “a cow in its second year,” is Rabbi Eliezer ben Hyrqanus, the unspecified Rabbi Eliezer of the “Sinai,” outweighing all Israel's sages in this respect, although together with them he was outweighed by his colleague who uprooted mountains. Therefore Moses desired that he should issue from his loins, and called his son by his name. See the end of PartIII.

Rema of Fano - continued

One familiar with the sages' discourse concerning the supernal living creature, whose name is Israel—Israel from the appearance of its loins upward, Jacob from its loins downward, as it is written, “How shall Jacob stand, for he is small?”—will understand “May it be Your will that he issue from my loins.” He is therefore specifically Sinai. Of this mystery it is written, “The remembrance of a righteous person is for a blessing.” The Zohar at the beginning of Bemidbar implies a doubled blessing here: zekher, “remembrance,” has the numerical value of berakhah, “blessing,” like Moses' “May He add to you as many as you are,” followed by “and bless you.” For one who mentions the righteous person awakens his countenance before him. Partzuf, “countenance,” has twice the numerical value of barukh, “blessed”; therefore one must double the blessing to include the entire extent of his stature.

It is written, “Blessed is the LORD forever, amen and amen,” whose numerical value is “He alone guides him, and no foreign god is with him.” Thus the doubling applies also to one answering amen after his own blessings. Amen ve-amen has the numerical value of Ya'aqov spelled fully with vav, so that his full stature may be blessed. Likewise

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Talmud. The source then says he brought himself into the “pressures” mentioned in Avodah Zarah; the transmitted term is uncertain. [TN040099] The master says that because he was Sinai, Moses desired him to issue from his loins, although he was not so much an uprooter of mountains: Sinai is preferable, because all need the owner of the wheat, as stated there in Horayot. “His colleague”: Rabbi Elazar ben Arakh.

“See”: the end of PartIII, section33, where Eliezer was from the appearance of Moses' loins downward. “One familiar with the sages' discourse”: concerning the supernal living creature will understand Moses' request that Rabbi Eliezer issue from his loins, from the appearance of his loins downward. Moses' case parallels Israel and Jacob. There the meaning is the Lesser Countenance: from the midpoint of its Beauty upward it is called “the lad Israel”; from the midpoint of Beauty downward, Jacob, as explained in Yonat Elem, chapter23. Jacob's countenance is small; of it it is said, “How shall Jacob stand, for he is small?”

So too with Moses, for both are from Father's foundation, except that Jacob is outside and Moses within, as in the Tiqqunim. Jacob is from the outer aspect: what issued from the illumination of Father's foundation outward before the Lesser Countenance's stature wherever it is. Moses is from within, from the illumination that this foundation retained for itself within the Lesser Countenance, as also stated in Yonat Elem, chapter77. Moses too was "God" from his middle upward and "man" from his middle downward. His prophecy was clarified and explained through the Lesser Countenance's Victory and Splendor, corresponding to the tops of the loins, as also explained there. Therefore, when Moses saw the LORD's spirit stirring in Rabbi Eliezer to determine the law as received from Sinai, he requested that he issue from his loins, from their appearance downward.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"He is therefore": Rabbi Eliezer was for this reason specifically Sinai. The following sentence is unstable; it links law, possible superiority, Moses' prophecy and Sinai, without a secure grammatical connection. [TN040100] "Of this mystery": the stature from its middle upward and from its middle downward. It is written, "The remembrance of a righteous person is for a blessing": one must bless Ya'aqov without vav has the numerical value of malakh ha-Elohim, "the angel of God," namely amen amen. How good, therefore, for every person to have two companions listening and answering amen after his blessings.

Rema of Fano - continued

According to the plain meaning, perhaps when the Holy One showed Moses each generation and its sages, Moses perceived Rabbi Aqiva's stature and knew that from the six days of creation it had arisen in thought that Aqiva should be descended from converts. He therefore requested that Aqiva's teacher issue from his loins. Perhaps Rabbi Eliezer was descended from Moses' daughters. When he was arrested by the authorities, "He rescued me from Pharaoh's sword" was fulfilled in him: Moses made this a symbolic act for Rabbi Eliezer's rescue.

Further, taste and see that the matter depends on us, obligating us to care and diligence in commandments according to our strength. This is "our portion in Your Torah." We have the LORD's festival on the day our Torah was given, a holy convocation at the end of fifty days after Passover. But the Egyptian Passover was on Thursday, and all agree that Torah was given on the Sabbath, at the end of fifty-one days. This itself is difficult.

Certainly, since Torah was given outside the Land, "the LORD desired, for the sake of His righteousness," to give us our portion in His Torah. The supernal mind agreed to celebrate, in His own person and glory, on the festival day of the diaspora, which Moses added on his own him with two blessings for the two halves of his stature. Zekher too is a blessing, since it has that numerical value.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The Zohar at the beginning of Bemidbar": page226: "Come and see: one who praises his fellow concerning his children or property must bless him and acknowledge blessings upon him. Whence do we know? From Moses: 'Today you are as numerous as the stars of heaven.' What is written afterward? 'May the LORD, God of your fathers, add to you a thousand times as many as you are.' There were two blessings: 'May the LORD, God of your fathers…' is one; afterward, 'and bless you as He spoke to you,' acknowledging blessings upon blessings," and so forth. See there. The reason is that mentioning the righteous person awakens his countenance before the speaker. This is the Jerusalem Talmud's saying in Sheqalim chapter4: one stating a teaching in its author's name should see its author as though standing before him, as it is said, "Only in an image does a man walk."

"To include his entire stature": from the loins upward and downward. "The numerical value of 'He alone'": therefore the doubled amen does not imply two authorities, God forbid, as the rabbis say concerning “We thank, we thank.” “Thus the doubling”: amen ve-amen even after a blessing already saying “Blessed is the LORD.” The reason for doubling is that amen ve-amen equals Ya'aqov fully spelled with vav, alluding to his full stature, loins upward and downward, so all of it is blessed. “Namely”: numerically amen amen. “Two companions”: two who answer amen.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“According to the plain meaning”: “issue from my loins” implies Moses requested that Rabbi Eliezer issue from his seed. The reason may be that at the time described, and so initiative according to Rabbi Yose. There the words of the beloved are sweet to Him: they are the potters. “It is time to act for the LORD”; therefore “they have annulled Your Torah,” like the prophet Isaiah's complaint, “Through You alone we mention Your Name,” which bar Yohai expounded concerning this mystery.

Rema of Fano - continued

For this reason Scripture nowhere states that the Festival of Weeks is the day of the giving of the Torah; the later authorities' struggles over this are unnecessary. If from the outset it was a temporary ruling from heaven, as the anonymous tanna in the baraita in the chapter Rabbi Aqiva says, happy is the Father whom they praise, as one speaking to a listening ear: blessed is He who chose them and their teaching.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

forth. “Descended from converts”: from Sisera's descendants. “His teacher”: Rabbi Aqiva's teacher, Rabbi Eliezer. “Perhaps”: perhaps this happened and Rabbi Eliezer descended from Moses' daughters; he could not descend through his sons, since he was not a Levite.

“When he was arrested”: Moses named his son for him as a symbolic act for his rescue. Just as his son Eliezer indicates Moses' rescue—“My father's God was my help and rescued me”—so Rabbi Eliezer would be saved from the sword. This occurred: when Rabbi Eliezer was arrested by the authorities, the symbolic act was fulfilled and he was rescued when he said, “The Judge is trustworthy to me.” The governor thought he meant himself, and so forth, and told him, “You are acquitted,” as in Avodah Zarah chapter1.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Further, taste”: the master returns to “Give us our portion in Your Torah” and offers another explanation: the tanna requests the LORD's agreement with us in Torah and commandments. “Give us our portion”—what we do—“in Your Torah,” and agree with us. The matter certainly depends on us, obligating us to diligence and application in commandments; therefore we ask His agreement, as occurred at the Torah's giving.

“For we have”: the introductory wording of this gloss is damaged. It explains our observing the LORD's festival on the sixth of Sivan, when Torah was given, after forty-nine days of the Omer and fifty days from Passover—that is, the fifty-first day, the Festival of Weeks. This is certainly a difficulty, since the Egyptian Passover was Thursday, as in the chapter Rabbi Aqiva: fifty-one days ended on Friday, and Torah was given on Sabbath, the fifty-second day. Rivash already raised this in responsum96; see there. [TN040101]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Certainly”: this is what we have said: the blessed LORD agreed with us concerning the two diaspora festival days. Declaring the end from the beginning, He foresaw Israel's future observance of two days of the Festival of Weeks outside the Land. He therefore gave Torah at the end of fifty-one days from Passover, the second diaspora festival day outside the Land.

“Which Moses added on his own initiative”: there the rabbis and Rabbi Yose disagree. According to the rabbis, Torah was given on the sixth of the month; according to Rabbi Yose, on the seventh. The Gemara says all agree it was given on Sabbath; they dispute the month's fixing. Rabbi Yose places the new month on Sunday, the rabbis on Monday. The Gemara objects to Rabbi Yose from “today and tomorrow,” and answers: Rabbi Yose says Moses added one day on his own initiative. For it was taught: Moses did three things on his own initiative, and the Holy One agreed with him: he added a day, separated from his wife and broke the tablets.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“He added a day on his own initiative”—what did he expound? “Today and tomorrow”: today like tomorrow. Just as tomorrow includes its night, today too must include its night. Today's night has already passed; thus two days besides today are meant. Whence do we know the Holy One agreed? Because the Shekhinah did not rest until Sabbath morning, and so forth. Through Moses' added day, Torah was given on Sabbath, the fifty-second day, the second diaspora festival day.

“There the words”: the reason is that the words of the beloved—the Torah scholars who would institute the two diaspora days for the Shekhinah's honor—were sweet to Moses. “They are the potters”: they drew this forth because “It is time to act for the LORD.” We are indeed expert in fixing the month; we observe two festival days only because of our ancestors' custom. Even during the Temple period they observed two days out of doubt where messengers could not reach. The master says their intention was “a time to act for the LORD,” for in exile separation is present above, and the supernal union ceases except on Sabbaths, festivals and new moons, as known from many Zohar passages. The sages therefore maintained the custom of observing two festival days for the supernal union's honor. This is “It is time to act for the LORD.” “Therefore they annulled”: the blessed LORD and Moses annulled His Torah on the fifty-first day, postponing its giving to the fifty-second, in agreement with a later generation.

“Like the prophet's complaint”: this explanation of “It is time to act for the LORD” follows the Zohar, Shemot, page15, on “Through You alone we mention Your Name”: “‘Through You alone’ is the mystery of the holy Name, the totality of twenty-two letters. The Congregation of Israel is blessed only through this Name, called bakh, as in ‘You swore to them by Yourself.’” The following clause about the Congregation of Israel and known mysteries is textually uneven. It continues: “When they completed love, one was not separated from the other. To separate one from the other, a wife from her husband,” followed by damaged wording concerning supernal will and the heart, “so as not to show separation. But now, in exile, through distress they cause separation, mentioning that Name apart from her husband because she lies in the dust. This is ‘Through You alone we mention Your Name,’” and so forth. [TN040102]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For this reason”: because the Torah's giving was not on the fiftieth day from the day after the festival, Scripture nowhere states, and so forth. “The later authorities”: see the cited Rivash responsum. “It was a temporary ruling”: analogous to the diaspora's second festival day. “From heaven”: the Holy One agreed to give Torah on the fifty-second day from Passover, and the Shekhinah did not rest until Sabbath morning. “The anonymous tanna in the baraita”: of the three things Moses added on his own initiative, which undoubtedly accords with all views. “Happy is the Father”: to praise Him thus and say, “Blessed is He who chose them and their teaching,” as the sages say in Avot chapter6. This praise is like speaking to a listening ear, making the matter accessible to hearing.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Included in the teaching”: from “You shall teach them diligently to your children.” This is the study of the company above, which cites a statement in its author's name: “My son Eliezer,” and so forth. Thus our request is precisely “Give us our portion in Your Torah.” “Rabbi Eliezer was Sinai and outweighed”: as in Avot, if you place all Israel's sages on one scale and Rabbi Eliezer on the other, he outweighs them all. Although it also says there that Rabbi Elazar ben Arakh outweighs Rabbi Eliezer together with all the others because he uprooted mountains, Rabbi Eliezer's knowledge as Sinai outweighs them all except Rabbi Elazar ben Arakh, who uprooted mountains. “He called his son”: Moses named his son for Rabbi Eliezer. This is “the name of the one was Eliezer,” the distinguished one, as the sages said.

“Whose name is Israel”: in the upper stature, the first three measures—the shoulder, right arm and left, in the wording here—are Greatness, Might and Beauty, considered among the six extremities in the world of Creation. Corresponding to them is the mystery of the two countenances. From the appearance of the loins upward they are called

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Israel, with Leah's union. From the loins downward, the right and left leg and the covenant—Victory, Splendor and Foundation—they are called Jacob, with Rachel's union.

The upper three are called “uprooter of mountains”; the source abbreviates them GNT. “I lift my eyes to the mountains” was expounded of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, called mountains, again GNT in the source. They uprooted the measures in impurity to restore them to holiness: this is “uprooter of mountains.” Consequently those from the loins downward are called Sinai. Rabbi Eliezer too is Sinai. Moses therefore said with great precision, “May it be Your will that he issue from my loins”: specifically from the lower half of the stature, called Sinai. He could not issue from the upper half, called uprooter of mountains, since Rabbi Eliezer is Sinai, not an uprooter of mountains. This is “a knob and a flower,” beautifully fitted, for Moses too was of that stature. [TN040103]

“The doubled blessing”: includes his whole stature, the two aspects just described. “Awakens his countenance before him”: as in the Zohar, Pinehas, page600, in the fragment “the place of this shade,” whose opening is uncertain. This is the saying that a person should always see himself as though the author of the teaching stands before him, as it is said, “Only in an image does a man walk”: that holy shade. Likewise in tractate Shabbat, “By God, my eyes saw, and not a stranger”: they said this from Rav's mouth because they saw him standing before them. This also is the Gemara's intention: one should part from a fellow only with a legal teaching, so that through it one remembers him. Whoever says something in its author's name has that form appear before him; therefore “through it he remembers him,” for his mazal sees that person. [TN040104]

“Partzuf is twice berakhah”: this lemma says berakhah, whereas the ensuing calculation says barukh. Thus one must double the blessing for the whole stature. This countenance contains two countenances, Israel and Jacob, one above the other. “How shall Jacob stand, for he is small?” means his countenance is smaller than Israel's. Partzuf has twice the value of barukh, and barukh is also rokhev, “rider.” This is “Behold, He rides upon a light cloud.” The two names are given in a damaged numerical phrase as KR, with a question mark; YHWH is26, together totaling rokhev. The next phrase is also unstable. Its discernible explanation is that the power of YHWH completes the number rokhev with av qal, “light cloud.” [TN040105]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Likewise, “Blessed is the LORD forever”: barukh is BR plus26; YHWH is26; le-olam is176. An intervening abbreviated phrase is unclear. The26 within barukh can belong above or below, as though it were written BR,26,26,176. At the beginning is BR; at the end, YHWH with le-olam likewise equals BR; in the middle is26, the Name YHWH. Thus there is a doubled blessing. The opening lemma of the next gloss, “benei barekh Ya'aqov,” and its repeated wording are damaged. Its explanation is: do not infer two authorities, God forbid, because amen ve-amen is doubled. The repeated wording teaches that, despite the doubling, there is no room for error; on the contrary, it indicates the Name's unity. Amen ve-amen equals Ya'aqov with vav; amen amen equals Ya'aqov without vav, alluding to the two statures described. [TN040106]

“He therefore requested concerning his teacher”: Rabbi Elazar, as this occurrence names him, was Rabbi Aqiva's teacher. Rabbi Aqiva could not issue from Moses' loins because he had to be descended from converts. Therefore Moses asked that his teacher Rabbi Eliezer issue from his loins. Perhaps Rabbi Eliezer was descended from Moses' daughters. The source then says that when Rabbi Aqiva was arrested by the authorities, he was rescued, as above in chapter9, and “He rescued me from Pharaoh's sword” was fulfilled in him. This Aqiva/Eliezer variation is retained. [TN040107]

“Further, taste and see”: another explanation of “Give us our portion in Your Torah”: that the Holy One agree with us concerning the diaspora festival day and the mystery of intercalation, in the matter of “This month is yours,” as will be explained. The Torah places the Festival of Weeks on the fiftieth day of the Omer count, but Torah was given on the fifty-first day according to the calculation: the first Passover day was Thursday; the second, the first Omer day, was Friday. Fifty days thus ended on Friday, and all agree Torah was given on Sabbath.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

This must be the day Moses added on his own initiative. On account of these two days, the Festival of Weeks has two diaspora festival days, since they were still outside the Land. The words of the beloved are sweet to Him: the righteous of every generation, “they are the potters.”

“Like Isaiah's complaint,” which bar Yohai expounded concerning this mystery: see the Zohar, Shemot, page15. In exile, “through You alone,” bakh, is the vav of the Name, with the stated value22. “We mention Your Name” is the final he alone. Through our diaspora festival observance we cause a separation in exile between vav and he. The quotation reads, “And at every time and time,” meaning each festival, “we cause separation.” “Through You alone” is Beauty, where the Name of twenty-two is; “we mention Your Name” is the crown. Thus outside the Land we observe two festival days, the second honoring the Shekhinah, who is with us in exile. Examine this closely; see Emor in Yalqut. The source's abbreviated relation of vav to22 is preserved without an invented expansion. [TN040108]

Return to chapter in contents

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“The day of the giving of Torah”: throughout the Torah the Festival of Weeks is called the fiftieth day, but Torah was actually given only on the fifty-first. Therefore it does not say this is the day Torah was given. “According to the anonymous tanna in the baraita”: he holds that Iyyar that year was full, thirty days. “As one speaking to a listening ear”: “and their teaching” means that He agrees with the righteous people's teaching when they make months full or deficient.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 16 (טז)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“In the Jerusalem Talmud”: the master wishes to explain the tanna's request, “Give us our portion in Your Torah,” in another way, as he concludes. He therefore prefaces it with this Jerusalem Talmud statement. “Between each utterance”: it further concludes there that, on reaching this verse, Resh Laqish said: “Hanani, Rabbi Yehoshua's nephew, taught me well. Just as the sea has a small wave between each great wave and the next, so between each utterance and the next were the Torah's fine details and letters.” “However understood”:

Rema of Fano

In the Jerusalem Talmud, Sheqalim chapter 6, Rabbi Hanina, Rabbi Yehoshua's nephew, expounds “filled with tarshish” (Song 5:14) concerning the tablets: between each utterance and the next were the Torah's fine details and letters, however this is understood. This agrees with the Babylonian Talmud's exposition of “the Torah and the commandment which I have written” (Exodus 24:12): all were given to Moses at Sinai, and from that moment “which I have written” could be read of them.

For us these matters have their plain meaning. Had it not been for the serpent's pollution, the entire Torah would already have been placed in the interpreting that statement is not the purpose here; let it be understood however it is understood.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In the Babylonian Talmud”: Berakhot chapter1. Rabbi Levi bar Hama, or some say Resh Laqish, said: “What is the meaning of ‘Ascend to Me on the mountain, and I shall give you the stone tablets’? ‘Tablets’ is Torah; ‘and the Torah’ is Mishnah; ‘commandments’ are commandments; ‘statutes and ordinances’ are the laws; ‘which I have written’ are the prophets; ‘to teach them’ is Talmud. This teaches that all were given to Moses from Sinai.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

This is the citation's transmitted sequence. [TN100002] "'Which I have written' could be read of them": upon the tablets.

"We hope from it, according to the promise": as Jeremiah promised in chapter31. The intention of "upon their heart" is explained next. "And the ease of recognition": this lemma reads "recognition"; its gloss is that it is liable to be forgotten. [TN100003] "In the brain, however": aligned above the heart, Torah will never move from there. This is "upon their heart": in the brain above the heart, "I shall write it," so it will not be forgotten. "Each calls to the other": heart and brain give and impart to one another through a path and passage hidden from the eyes of sages skilled in anatomy. "As is known": to physicians, who unanimously hold that a person has hidden paths and courses besides those visible to the eye.

"This is the mystery of tefillin": the hand-tefillin is opposite the heart, the head-tefillin at the brain's place. "Once we lost": through the serpent's pollution, the Torah that was our intrinsic perfection, placed within the human heart. We required perfection outside, at the heart's and brain's places, as a likeness heart of Adam and his descendants, as we hope from Jeremiah's promise: "I have placed My Torah within them, and upon their heart I shall write it" (Jeremiah 31:32). The intention is that Torah within our heart is a gift, readily removed. In the brain, however, which is aligned above the heart—each calling to the other at the sound of its channels, ascending and descending through a hidden path, as is known—"apple/ swelling" [?], God's writing, will never move from there. [TN100001] This is the mystery of tefillin at the heart's place and the brain's place: once we lost our intrinsic perfection, we needed its likeness outside. Of this it is said, "Set me as a seal upon your heart," as we explained in Em Kol Hai.

Rema of Fano - continued

The pollution of Israel who stood at Mount Sinai ceased. Since it had not ceased from the world as a whole, they required the tablets of the covenant. Alternatively, once we became free from death, afflictions and kingdoms, our heart and intellect became like the very heavens in purity. We injured ourselves by telling Moses, "Let God not speak with us, lest we die." From then on Torah was given to be written on stone tablets, to remove the heart of stone from us. Therefore they said that, had the first tablets not been broken, Torah would not have been forgotten by Israel (Eruvin 54a).

Had we not sinned with the calf, the tablets would not have needed to be stored in the Ark. Moses' hands would have served their holiness as a throne of glory and an honored seat, to enter and substitute for inward perfection. "Of this": the external tefillin, "Set me as a seal upon your heart and as a seal upon your arm," which the Zohar expounds of tefillin. "As a seal upon your heart": the head-tefillin, corresponding to the brain above the heart. "As a seal upon your arm": the hand-tefillin. "In Em Kol Hai": PartI, section10; see there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Their pollution ceased": Torah should therefore have been engraved upon the tablet of their heart as at first. But because the world's pollution had not yet ceased, they required tablets. In the future, when pollution ceases from all creatures, "I shall write it upon the tablet of their heart" will be fulfilled, as in the days of old and former years.

"Alternatively": we required tablets, despite pollution having ceased, because we damaged our own conduct. After becoming free of the Angel of Death and so forth, as is known, we should not have feared death and said, "Let God not speak with us, lest we die." Therefore, although our intellect was like the very heavens in purity, because we spoke against God, asking Him not to speak with us, we required stone tablets to remove the heart of stone. "Therefore": since the tablets rectified the distortion brought upon us by the serpent's pollution, the sages correctly said in Keitzad Me'abberin, folio54, that had the first tablets not been broken, Torah would not have been forgotten by Israel. It would have been as at first, before the serpent introduced pollution.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Had we not sinned”: why would the first tablets have prevented Torah's being forgotten, whereas the second did not achieve this? Had we not sinned with the calf, Moses' hands would have faithfully sustained the two tablets upon them continually, bringing Israel across with them, so that every accomplished student could look and understand all the Torah's fine details written upon them, as he concludes shortly. “For Moses' stature greatly exceeded”: thus one cannot say he desired the Land on account of its superior stature. “As explained in the Zohar”: Bereshit, page100; see there.

“He asked only to pass through”: through the Land of Israel, since he wished to go to the Garden of Eden's gates. He specifically requested passage through the Land in order to set his eyes upon it, resembling his Creator, of whom it is written, “The eyes of the LORD your God are always immediately with them, amid all Israel, into the Land and Zion, perfection of beauty. He would not have settled or even sojourned there, for Moses' stature and that of the wilderness generation greatly exceeded the stature of the Land of Israel, as explained in the Zohar. Even at the end of the forty years, when the wilderness generation had finished dying from among the people, Moses pleaded, “Let me cross over, please, and see.” He asked only to pass through and set his eyes upon it, in the sense of “The eyes of the LORD your God are always upon it,” for those who know his mystery. Moses greatly desired to reach the gates of the Garden of Eden, remove the cherubim and the flaming sword from there, and open the way to the tree of life for a righteous nation keeping faith.

Rema of Fano - continued

Had we merited Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, going before us from elevation to elevation, with the tablets of testimony upon his two hands, every accomplished student drawing near could have looked and contemplated them, seeing according to his capacity the Torah's fine details engraved upon them, for everything was said to Moses at Sinai.

Our cry before Him, blessed be He, is one. Thus we have said: let our portion in Torah's labor, entrusted to our intellect to understand and comprehend, be placed and hidden within the LORD's perfect Torah, engraved upon the tablets. Let it not be despised or rejected like Doeg's Torah, of whom it is written: “God shall likewise tear you down upon it.” This alludes to the supernal Land of Israel, the measure of Malkhut, as explained in the Zohar and in the master's Em Kol Hai, PartII section8. Moses desired to set his eyes upon the lower Land of Israel, so that awakening below would awaken what is above.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Had we merited”: this returns to the statement that, had we not sinned with the calf, Moses' hands would have served holiness as a glorious throne for the tablets. Had we merited this, Torah would not have been forgotten by Israel. Every accomplished student approaching the tablets would have seen their fine details directly, according to his capacity and apprehension for innovation and understanding. “Everything was said to Moses at Sinai”: even what an accomplished student would one day innovate, as the sages said. It was engraved on the tablets in a wondrous allusion, until that student's time came to contemplate them and bring wisdom's hidden things to light.

“Our cry”: for this the tanna prayed, “Give us our portion in Your Torah.” Our portion is what we now apprehend in Torah through labor and exertion of intellect, not by gazing upon the tablets. Place it in

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Your Torah, and let it too be engraved upon the tablets, as though we had attained it by contemplating them. “Like Doeg's Torah, of whom it is written”: as the sages said in the chapter Heleq. David asked that Doeg's Torah be effaced and rejected from the tent of the tablets.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Readily removed”: removal means it is easily forgotten. “Each calls to the other”: they impart to each other, like “receiving one from another,” which its channels”: from the heart a channel runs along a hidden path invisible to our eyes. “Intrinsic perfection”: Torah itself being in brain and heart.

When they stood at Mount Sinai, their pollution ceased. They became free of the Angel of Death and kingdoms; their heart became like the very heavens, and so forth, so they should never have been liable to forgetfulness. But we brought the injury upon ourselves. Had we not sinned with the calf, the tablets would not have been concealed in the Ark. Moses' hands would have served their holiness, carrying them forever. He would have entered the Land of Israel with them immediately, and from there the Garden of Eden, annulling the flaming, turning sword guarding the way to the tree of life. He would only have passed through the Land, as “Let me cross over, please, and see.”

“More than the Land of Israel's stature”: as the Zohar says: “All those600,000 were from the upper world, and in that likeness they walked in the wilderness; not one of them entered the Land.” See there. “His eyes seeing according to his capacity”: each person would have seen the Torah's fine details and the new insights belonging to his portion to renew, written between each utterance and the next—even what an accomplished student would one day innovate, as above, since all was said to Moses from Sinai. Our request of Him, blessed be He, is “Give us our portion”: the Torah innovations allotted to each of us, in Your Torah engraved upon the covenant tablets.

“Let it not be despised,” through “as though his eyes had seen”: as though they had seen his new insights in the tablets themselves, between each utterance, as above. Concerning this, as mentioned earlier, we say in the Gemara of Shabbat, “My eyes saw, and not a stranger”; see there.

Rema of Fano - continued

forever”—that he should not come to the world to come; “He shall uproot you and pluck you from the tent”—that no teaching should be said in his name in the rabbis' study house; “and root you out of the land of the living, selah”—that he should have no rabbinic sons. Whoever merits seeing during his life everything issuing from his mouth engraved upon the tablets is assured that he and his Torah live and endure in the light of the King's face. Now that the covenant tablets are concealed, everyone who studies Torah for its own sake will receive this glad assurance, as though his eye had seen it.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

we discussed above, PartI chapter14; see there. “Engraved, God's writing”: the expression is like “you shall engrave upon the stones” of the ephod. Thus Torah is engraved in the brain and never moves from it. But when we lost perfection and sinned, Torah was forgotten, and we required a likeness: corresponding to the brain, head-tefillin, the upper chariot; hand-tefillin, the lower chariot; and their connecting channel, opposite the heart externally. “At the sound of

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 16

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 17 (יז)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Everyone”: after describing in the preceding chapter how everything an accomplished student would innovate was engraved upon the tablets, the master further explains the celebrated statement that some prohibit and others permit, yet all their words are the words of the living God. Everyone misinterprets it and removes it from its plain meaning, finding it difficult that contradictory statements could both be true. The master says the clear truth is literal. The Mishnah says every dispute for Heaven's sake will endure: both its parts will stand, as with Hillel and Shammai, both being words of the living God. It has a supernal mystery; in practical law too each is true for its time. “Will endure” means that if one part is true now, the other will stand at another time. A dispute not for Heaven's sake, such as Qorah's, will never stand in both its parts at any time: forever and ever Moses and his Torah alone are true.

“Thus”: the dispute over procreation in Ha-Ba Al Yevimto, folio 61b. The Mishnah: “A man must not cease procreating unless he has children. Beit

Rema of Fano

Everyone knows, and misinterprets, the sages' celebrated statement that some prohibit and others permit, yet all are the words of the living God. The clear truth is that every dispute for Heaven's sake will endure, and its statements in all their parts will prove true. Thus the rabbis disagree concerning procreation in the chapter Ha-Ba Al Yevimto. Our Mishnah's tanna and one tanna of an external teaching agree in Beit Hillel's name that a male and female are required; another external tanna teaches this in Beit Shammai's name. This is certainly the clear conclusion, learned from the world's creation, Adam and Eve. Their corresponding pattern is the Name's first two letters, which include the entire Name, as is known. The fathers of the world did not disagree about this.

When students who had not served their teachers sufficiently multiplied, as below, one taught in Beit Shammai's name that two males are required. This is our Mishnah's tanna, deriving it from Moses' sons: otherwise Moses would not have separated from his wife. His pattern is the Name's yod and vav, which seek the lost thing they require. He does not wish to derive the rule from the world's creation, because one does not infer what is possible from what was impossible otherwise. Yet this poses a real difficulty: suppose you learn from Moses that a man who has fathered two males has fulfilled his obligation; have

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shammai say two males; Beit Hillel say a male and a female, for ‘male and female He created them.’” The Gemara asks Beit Shammai's reason: they derive it from Moses, “Moses' sons: Gershom and Eliezer.” Beit Hillel derive it from the world's creation. Why do Beit Shammai not derive it from creation? One cannot infer what is possible from what was impossible otherwise. Why do Beit Hillel not derive it from Moses? They answer: Moses acted on his own initiative. It was taught that he did three things on his own initiative and his mind agreed with the Omnipresent's: he separated from his wife, and so forth. What did he expound? If Israel, whom the Shekhinah addressed only temporarily, with an appointed time, were told, “Do not approach a woman,” how much more I, appointed for speech at any hour, without a fixed time! His mind agreed with the Omnipresent's, as it is said, “Go tell them, Return to your tents.” Rashi explains: from Moses, who separated once he had two sons; from creation, Adam and Eve; “impossible otherwise,” since without creating Eve there would have been no other female, whereas someone with sons now has many females in the world.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

It further teaches there: Rabbi Natan says Beit Shammai require two males and two females, Beit Hillel a male and female. Rav Huna explains Rabbi Natan's reason according to Beit Shammai: “She again bore his brother, Abel”—Abel and his sister, Cain and his sister—and “God has appointed another seed for me in place of Abel, because Cain killed him.” The rabbis reply that she was merely giving thanks. Another baraita: Rabbi Natan says Beit Shammai require a male and female, Beit Hillel either a male or female. Rava explains Rabbi Natan's reason according to Beit Hillel: “He did not create it for emptiness; He formed it to be inhabited,” and he has made it inhabited. Rashi explains that et before Cain and Abel is repeated inclusively to indicate females with them. “God appointed seed in place of Abel” implies replacement is required: fewer than two males and two females do not suffice.

“Rabbi Natan's reason according to Beit Hillel”: one male or female; he derives it neither from creation nor Moses. God did not create His world for emptiness, but for you heard from him that one does not suffice? Perhaps he would have separated even with one.

Rema of Fano - continued

Rather, nothing can be derived from Moses. He exempted himself as one engaged in a greater commandment: he separated from his wife for the Shekhinah's honor, reasoning a fortiori from the separation at Mount Sinai, and the Omnipresent agreed with him. Moreover, it is written, “Your wife and her two sons with her.” Moses, the man of God, possessed something exceptional, as Chronicles says, “His sons shall be reckoned to the tribe of Levi,” as will be explained.

One external tanna teaches in Beit Shammai's name that two males and two females are required, forming the complete pattern of four letters. He derives it differently from the world's creation: Adam and Eve were commanded to procreate and bore Cain, Abel and their sisters. After Abel was killed and Seth born, it says “in place of Abel”; thus fewer do not suffice. The Gemara replies that this is simply an expression of thanksgiving: “God has appointed another seed for me.” Another external tanna teaches in Beit Hillel's name that one, male or female, suffices: we require inhabitation, and that exists. Its pattern is yod, male at the beginning of the written Name and female at the end of the read Name.

In truth, however, this is not the law. One alone is not called “inhabitation”: one alone sees and is harmed, and it is written, “When brothers dwell together.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

inhabitation, for people to occupy themselves with settling it. “One of the external tannaim”: Rabbi Natan according to the two baraitot; “another external tanna”: Rabbi Natan according to the other teaching. “This is the clear conclusion”: the law, for Beit Hillel and Beit Shammai alike, requires a male and female.

“The corresponding pattern”: the Zohar, Tzav, page 28, explains that the Name's four letters correspond to man, woman, son and daughter; we quote it shortly. The master accordingly gives an excellent reason for each opinion through the Name's male and female letters: yod and vav are male, the two he's female. The view requiring male and female corresponds to the first letters, yod-he, male and female, Hokhmah and Binah. “Including the entire Name”: although the last letters, vav-he, are also male and female, one pair suffices because the first letters include the last. Sefer Ha-Orah, cited in Pardes, Gate of the Names chapter 3, says: “When you pronounce Yah, the Name's extremities are also included, without cutting off. Likewise the mystery of yod-he spelled out, יו”ד ה”א, equals the whole, and half equals the whole.”

“The fathers of the world

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

did not disagree": Shammai and Hillel, according to the other tanna in Beit Shammai's name. "As below": chapter 19. "Yod and vav in the Name": two males, whose way is to seek their required lost thing, their females: yod seeks the first he, supernal Mother; vav the last he, lower Mother. "Yet": the master proves the law cannot follow the opinion requiring two males: how could Moses show that one does not suffice?

"Rather": nothing can be derived from Moses, who acted on his own initiative because someone engaged in one commandment is exempt from another. He knew from an a fortiori inference that the LORD's speech requires separation. Although it is not a complete inference—does being commanded once to refrain mean permanently abandoning procreation, as Tosafot ask there?—he was unconcerned about procreation because the greater commandment of the Shekhinah exempted him.

"Moreover": one cannot derive it from Moses because Torah attributes his sons to their mother: "her two sons." Moses had an exceptional quality: he came into the world only to sustain it, sweetening with his measure of

Rema of Fano - continued

What must we say? Scripture is precise: "Be fruitful," to beget a male, the principal fruit; "multiply," to beget a female, for multiplication. The pattern is completed, as the rabbis say, in himself, his wife, his son and his daughter.

The Torah explicitly commands that practical rulings follow the majority, for all its paths are peace. But one must not suppose the rejected minority opinions are false. Nothing imagined as false, God forbid, belongs to what was said at Sinai or engraved on the tablets, as we explained. On the contrary, that comprehensive contemplation, preserving truth forever, judges what is fitting or unfitting in human actions, according to conduct at that time. What was fitting before sin—the man and his wife being naked—became unfitting after sin. Fitting and unfitting nakedness, each at its proper time, are thus the words of the living God, who rules over opposites through changing times.

No Torah sage ever disputed to permit the raven and prohibit the dove. What did they dispute? A matter with two true, valid aspects, one on each side. Some show grounds for permission, others for prohibition, according to place and time. Permission and prohibition are both true, and the court's intention stipulates which is fit as practical law. Hence there is law that is not for practice: precisely as we have said. We have already shared the mystery, in matters of study, of Rabbi Yehoshua's statement in Berakhot: "The living cannot contradict the living."

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

lovingkindness the judgment through which it was created, lest it perish, as below, Part III chapter 4. He did not come for his own need; therefore his sons were named for their mother. This also explains "man of God": he did not come for himself. Thus I Chronicles 23 says, "Moses, the man of God—his sons shall be reckoned to the tribe of Levi." Because he is the man of God, his sons are reckoned generally to Levi's tribe, not specifically to his name, as below, Part III chapter 5.

"Four letters": two males and two females, as stated. "The Gemara replied": therefore the law does not follow him. "The pattern in yod": male at the beginning of YHWH, as above, or female at Adonai's end: the yod in Malkhut, the mystery of lesser Wisdom, corresponding to YHWH's final he, as in the Zohar, Pequdei, and Pardes, Gate of the Names chapter 13.

"In truth": the master gives an excellent reason why this is not the law. "For": [gap] "are harmed," as in the chapter Keitzad Me'arvin. [TN100004] "It is written": further proof from the commandment of levirate marriage, "When brothers dwell together," meaning they share one dwelling in the world, excluding the wife of a brother who was not alive in his lifetime, as the sages said. Thus specifically two are called dwelling. “What must we say”: the law follows our Mishnah's Beit Hillel, a male and female. “Be fruitful and multiply” also indicates this: fruitfulness belongs to the male, the fruit; multiplying to the female, who is not the principal fruit but serves multiplication and growth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The pattern is completed”: earlier the master located the pattern in the Name's first two letters, which include the whole Name. After explaining every opinion this way, he says that according to the law requiring a male and female, the pattern is completed in all four letters through himself, his wife, his son and his daughter. This is in the Zohar, Tzav, page 27, Ra'aya Mehemna: “The arrangements of the letters are yod in man, he in woman, vav in the son, the bridegroom, he in the bride. Happy is one who pronounces YHWH's letters in himself, his wife, his son and his daughter,” and so forth. “Therefore a person is complete only with a son and daughter. One without a son, who is vav, has the yod depart. One without a daughter lacks he, the daughter; the upper he, the mother, departs from his mate, for the letters rest only one on

Rema of Fano - continued

From there we also learn the case in Bekhorot. Had the Temple been standing, we would distinguish a scrupulous associate from an unlearned person, since associates were not suspected of blemishing sacred animals. After the destruction we made no distinction. All the sages' words stand.

Likewise, meat was wholly forbidden to Adam, except meat descending from heaven, which the ministering angels roasted before him, or meat from an animal he himself killed for its blood or hide, as below, Part IV chapter 18. Meat was wholly permitted to Noah and his sons. Some was permitted to Israel within the renewed prohibition of other kinds. In the future, “The LORD releases the bound”: He will complete the signs of cleanness in some of those kinds.

The reason is that eating indicates the eaten thing's need and readiness to ascend to the eater and become incorporated into him. It also indicates the eater's perfection, from whom food issued. This is his fruit: to return the branch to the root. Before Adam's sin, however, his eating did not replenish what was consumed, since one part of his nature did not oppose another. He was commanded to eat from every garden tree except the tree of knowledge, as priests were commanded to eat various sacred offerings except the burnt offering. One eating a sin offering but not a burnt offering fulfills both a positive commandment and a prohibition through that eating. Likewise, we were commanded to eat the Passover offering except its blood account of another. Man, woman, son and daughter, properly constituted, have YHWH resting upon them and are called children of the Holy One: ‘You are children of the LORD your God.’”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The Torah, however”: as each procreation opinion corresponds to the Name's letters, so every side in other legal disputes alludes to supernal mysteries. In practical law we follow only the opinion agreed upon by most sages; nevertheless the other opinion too is true even for practice, at another time when the sages agree upon it, as explained below and in the next chapter. Both parts will thus ultimately stand in practice at different times, just as both are true concerning the supernal mysteries they signify. “All its paths are peace”: Torah commands following the majority solely to settle disputes, not because minority views are false.

“Engraved upon the tablets”: everything an accomplished student would innovate, both prohibition and permission, was engraved there, as in the previous chapter. “On the contrary, that contemplation”: of the tablets, encompassing all parts of the law, judges according to a person's conduct at a given time: when one side is correct and fitting, and when the other is correct and the first becomes unfitting. Thus it preserves truth forever. We find this likewise with Adam's first action: what was fitting, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Rules over opposites”: not that the supernal mind changes, God forbid, because time changes. Both were in God's will from the beginning; both are true, neither superior. For thus [gap] He rules over opposites and changing time. Change exists only relative to us, dependent upon time's changes; all is one in His seal. [TN100005] “The court's intention stipulates”: and decrees concerning them. “Hence”: the expression “practical law” found in many Talmudic places implies what follows.

“We have explained”: mystically, the account in Berakhot chapter 4. A student asked Rabbi Yehoshua whether the evening prayer was optional or obligatory. He answered optional. The student asked Rabban Gamliel, who answered obligatory. He replied, “But Rabbi Yehoshua told me optional,” and so forth. When the shield-bearers entered the study house, the questioner stood and asked whether evening prayer was optional or obligatory. Rabban Gamliel and sacrificial portions, and there are many similar examples. Through such eating we enjoy His radiance: He spoke and His will was performed, bringing Him satisfaction.

Rema of Fano - continued

The garden trees were ready at that time for Adam's service, which he was commanded “to cultivate it,” however understood: either the Shekhinah, as we explained above, or the living soul mentioned in preceding verses, despite an intervening passage, as another interpreter explains correctly. Living animals, however, still awaited their time and were unready to receive human form in the full perfection appropriate to them, because of their close participation in sensation and reproduction of their own kind.

After the sin—“You change his face and send him away”—Adam lacked the power to complete their deficiency. This is like the rule that the unlearned may not eat meat, for they themselves are beasts in relation to them. All the more after Eve fed every domestic animal, wild animal and bird from the tree of knowledge, as we expound from the inclusive “also” in “She also gave to her husband.” They were nevertheless subsequently rectified through the ox-bull Adam offered. Pesiqta says there is a bird called hol that refused to eat from it. It lives a thousand years; at their end its body wastes away and its feathers fall, leaving an egg-sized remnant, which grows limbs anew. Of it Scripture says, “Like the hol I shall multiply days.”

Another approach holds that something answered obligatory, then asked the sages whether anyone disagreed. He told Yehoshua, “Stand on your feet, and let them testify concerning you.” Rabbi Yehoshua stood and said: “Had I been alive and he dead, the living could contradict the dead. Now that I am alive and he alive, how can the living contradict the living?” Rashi explains: I am compelled to admit I told him it was optional.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Likewise in Bekhorot chapter 5, folio 36: Rabbi Tzadoq had a firstborn animal. He put barley for it in a basket; as it ate, its lip split. He asked Rabbi Yehoshua, “Do we distinguish a priest who is a scrupulous associate from an unlearned one?” Rabbi Yehoshua said yes. He asked Rabban Gamliel, who said no. “But Rabbi Yehoshua told me yes,” and so forth. When the shield-bearers entered the study house, the same occurred. Rashi explains: am I suspected, like an unlearned priest, of deliberately making a blemish? Rabbi Yehoshua answered: yes, we distinguish, and you are not suspected.

“Had I been alive and he dead”: I could have denied saying it. “How can the living contradict the living?” Certainly I said it, and I retract. Tosafot explain as Rashi does in

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Berakhot and add that the commentary's explanation, “Certainly I said it and retracted,” cannot apply in the chapter Tefillat Ha-Shahar, where the law follows Rabbi Yehoshua. End of quotation.

Either way this is very puzzling. If Rabbi Yehoshua retracted, as Rashi explains in Bekhorot, why say “Had I been alive,” and so forth? He should simply have answered, “I retract.” Why retract before hearing Rabban Gamliel's reason? If he did not retract, as Rashi in Berakhot and Tosafot hold, why did Rabbi Yehoshua deny disagreement, saying no when Rabban Gamliel asked whether anyone disputed it? Moreover, why formulate this identical expression twice, previously in Bekhorot and now in Berakhot? Rhetoric does not commend repeating one matter in identical words; it calls for varied expression.

These difficulties surely forced the master to interpret the expression mystically in responsum 14. Since his words there also came briefly, “as wholly perfected in its nature is not eaten: it does not wait for a human being to strip away its first form and clothe it in another. On this view, the complete rectification of animals was entrusted to Adam when he named them. We have already drawn attention to this in its place. Thus killing animals for meat was entirely forbidden to Adam, both before and after sin, until all animals corrupted themselves in the Flood generation. Noah found favor; therefore he was told, “Like green vegetation I have given you everything.” It does not say “like everything bearing seed”: this alludes to the reason for permission. Like the green plants that reasoned a fortiori not to emerge in mixed kinds, I give you for food every living moving creature, to rectify the mingling of powers corrupted by their kind through mating outside their kind.

Rema of Fano - continued

When Israel's pollution ceased, their animals' pollution also ceased, in the sense of “Jacob separated the sheep,” and “The LORD shall distinguish between Israel's livestock and Egypt's livestock.” We learned there, at the end of Ha-Parah, that an ox and every domestic animal, wild animal and bird are alike for all these matters. In the future pollution will cease from all that is born: “Say to the prisoners, Come out.” We shall explain this.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

between them, an explanation” [?], I did not tire of copying them in their wording. Yet their general intention is as follows. [TN100006] Rabbi Yehoshua retracted and agreed with Rabban Gamliel in both rulings. Concerning evening prayer, since Jacob instituted it in exile, in this present exile whose end has not been revealed we must increase prayer. Initially he considered it optional, as during the Temple and even Babylonian exile, whose end was revealed. Immediately after the destruction he thought to leave things unchanged: if this exile's end was unrevealed, that was preferable, since salvation could come soon, depending only on us —“Today, if you heed His voice.” Rabbi Yehoshua wished to establish law oriented toward redemption: evening prayer optional, without fearing prolonged exile, since it depends on us.

When he later retracted and agreed with Rabban Gamliel, he justified the retraction with “Had I been alive,” a figurative saying as though the blessed LORD spoke. Our Redeemer and Savior lives and endures forever, but our sins, our fathers' sins, and the accuser and accusation created from them, which must be abolished through exile, still exist and have not died. Thus: “Had I, Israel's Redeemer, been alive

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

while he, the accuser, was dead, I could contradict him and bring everlasting righteousness. But the accuser is alive and not yet removed from the world, because no one takes to heart abolishing him through fitting repentance. How can such imminent redemption contradict the measure of judgment and the accuser?" For this reason I agree that increasing prayer is preferable and making even evening prayer obligatory.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Likewise in Bekhorot, Rabbi Yehoshua first intended to distinguish the scrupulous priest from the unlearned one, as when the Temple stood, for an associate-priest is not suspected of deliberately blemishing his firstborn animal. He later retracted on discerning the length of this bitter exile, the subjection to kingdoms and their harsh yoke, until we are all guilty, [gap], amid exhausting labor and difficult servitude. I therefore know no distinction between the associate-priest and the unlearned one. [TN100007] On retracting he gave a reason: "Had I been alive," and so forth. I see sin and accuser still in the world; the blessed LORD does not contradict the accuser but lets him collect what is his through exile and servitude. Therefore no distinction should be made. This is the substance and intention of the master's concise words there. I have expanded the explanation because these are his words' meaning here: all the sages' statements stand. Rabbi Yehoshua's first and later rulings are all true and just at different times.

"Likewise with meat": sometimes eating it was forbidden, sometimes permitted, according to time. At first it was forbidden to Adam, as in Sanhedrin, the chapter Arba Mitot, folio 59b. "Except meat descending from heaven": also there. "Or meat from an animal killed by his hand": he himself killed it to benefit from its blood or hide; it did not die naturally. "Afterward permitted to Noah": derived there from "Like green vegetation I have given you everything." "Some permitted to Israel": clean species, within the new prohibition of unclean ones.

"In the future": the blessed LORD will permit some kinds now forbidden, as the sages expound in Yelammedenu: "The LORD releases prisoners"—He permits prohibitions. The author of Iqqarim, Part III chapter 16, interprets this of the future. Likewise the midrash asks why the pig is called hazir: because He will restore it, le-hahaziro, to Israel. "Complete the signs in some": not that Torah will be annulled in the future, as the author of Iqqarim holds there. Torah will neither change nor be replaced forever. Rather, the LORD will complete their signs of cleanness: the pig will also chew cud, so its permission too follows Torah law.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The reason": for the four differing rulings on meat in these periods. Eating indicates that the human eater needs what is eaten to replenish what is consumed daily. It also indicates the eaten thing's readiness to rise to the eater's human level and become incorporated and attached to him, whether inanimate, like salt and water; vegetable, like fruits and greens; or sensitive, like animals. This also perfects the eater, "from whom food issued": many souls reincarnated in food are rectified by eating. This is his fruit: returning the branch, the captive holiness reincarnated in what he eats, to its root in holiness.

"Before the sin, however": Adam did not need food, since eating then did not replenish what was consumed, as it now replaces what natural heat consumes daily, explained above in chapter 5. "Since": consumption is caused by composition. Man is composed of four opposing elements—cold and hot, moist and dry—each acting by its nature against its opposite. Their interaction consumes some natural heat and radical moisture, as natural philosophers know. Before sin, man was unified so he might live forever without corruption; his nature did not oppose itself. Nothing was consumed and he did not need eating. See Bahya on Bereshit, who holds otherwise.

"Rather": before sin he ate only to increase his own strength and perfect the eaten thing to become like him, receiving human form without his needing it. For this it was enjoined as a positive commandment, as already explained in chapter 5. "Fulfills a positive commandment and a prohibition": so too Adam, as there. "His radiance": the enjoyment is not merely eating but performing His will. "The trees were ready": for this purpose the garden trees alone were ready for Adam's service of the blessed LORD, as "He placed him in the Garden of Eden to cultivate and guard it." "However understood": whether "cultivate it" refers to the Shekhinah, as above, Part I chapter 25, or to the soul mentioned earlier, "He breathed into his nostrils a living soul," either way it means serving Him.

"Living animals, however": were not ready, as His wisdom determined. Since Adam's eating was not then for replenishment, animals were unsuitable as nourishment for the stated purpose. Thus they still awaited their time and were not ready to ascend through eating to a higher level and receive human form for their full perfection, as would befit them. “Their closeness to man”: they share sensation and reproduction of their kind with him. Garden trees share with humans only growth and producing their kind, not sensation.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“After sin”: Adam no longer ate by way of commandment but to replenish consumption, and animals were suitable for that. Nevertheless they remained forbidden, since eating would not benefit them: they could not receive human form from the giver. Sin deprived man of the power and capacity to complete their deficiency and rectify them. “Like the rule”: in Ellu Overin, the unlearned may not eat meat, as “This is the Torah of animal and bird”: whoever studies Torah may eat, and so forth. They themselves resemble beasts and are like the animals, unable to rectify them because of their scant merit. “All the more”: Adam could not rectify them after sin, since through him they too stumbled by eating from the tree of knowledge. “As we expound”: in Bereshit Rabbah, from the inclusive gam, “also.” “Pesiqta says”: this too is there in Bereshit Rabbah.

“Another approach”: the preceding view makes animals unready for rectification before sin; another holds they then needed no rectification. “It does not wait for man”: fully perfected in its nature, it does not need a human being to eat it and strip off its original form, impressed at creation, in order to clothe it with human form and rectify it. “When he named them”: they were then properly rectified and needed no further rectification through human consumption. “In its place”: see Em Kol Hai, Part II, and so forth.

“Thus”: killing animals was forbidden before Adam's sin and afterward until they corrupted themselves in the Flood generation: “All flesh corrupted its way.” The sages said even domestic animals, wild animals and birds mated outside their kind. “Noah found favor”: he was fit to rectify them, so meat was permitted to him; “Like green vegetation” meant rectification through eating.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It does not say ‘like everything bearing seed’”: as Adam was told, “I have given you every plant bearing seed.” “Like green vegetation” also alludes to the permission's reason. In the chapter Ellu Terefot the sages said: when the Holy One said “according to its kind” of trees, the grasses reasoned a fortiori: if He says “according to its kind” of trees, which do not ordinarily emerge intermingled, how much more of us! Thus: like the grasses that did not emerge intermingled at creation, I give you everything for rectification, because the animals corrupted themselves by intermingling.

“When pollution ceased”: another reason underlies permitting some animals and forbidding others at the giving of Torah. Then Israel's pollution, introduced by the serpent into Eve, ceased, as in Ein Ma'amidin. They became fit to rectify animals and raise them to human level. Their animals' pollution likewise ceased, as His wisdom decreed, so they would be fit for rectification. Those whose pollution did not cease were forbidden, being unfit for rectification. “In the sense of ‘Jacob separated the sheep’”: he separated the clean animals whose pollution ceased from the unclean. This also explains “The LORD shall distinguish.”

“We learned”: although “livestock” includes only domestic animals, not wild animals or birds, the legal scope is not restricted accordingly. At the end of Ha-Parah the sages likewise say “an ox” and so forth, although Torah mentions neither wild animal nor bird for the listed matters; they include them there through superfluous scriptural wording. “In the future”: a new Torah will issue from Him to permit what is forbidden. The reason is that pollution will cease from all that is born: “Say to the prisoners, Come out” (Isaiah 49), like “releases the prisoners” above.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“In all its parts”: both will stand, each at its own time, as stated. A dispute not for Heaven's sake ultimately sustains only one side, not the other, as with Qorah and his assembly against Moses, whose words stood. “Words of the living God”: EḤD, “one,” is an acronym for divrei Elohim hayyim, “words of the living God.” [TN100008] “A male and female are required”: to fulfill procreation. “In two letters that include”: yod-he spelled יו”ד ה”א equals 26, the full

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Name's value. Thus the poet says, “From its half its word is filled,” concerning this mystery.

“They seek”: the first yod seeks the supernal Mother; vav likewise seeks the last he, lower Mother, the Lesser Countenance's female. “One does not infer what is possible”: see all this in Ha-Ba Al Yevimto. At creation a female was indispensable. “Yet there is a difficulty”: we learn from Moses that two males suffice, since he separated from his wife after two sons were born. Perhaps one also suffices: had the Holy One appeared to him after one son's birth, he would have separated then too.

“Moses had something exceptional”: he had no belonging to this world but came from the world of lovingkindness, created to join with Israel, as below, Part III chapter 6. We wrote above: “‘B, her sons” [?], and not “his sons”; likewise, BKhʾ [?], they are named after Levi's tribe, not Moses himself. [TN100009]

“At the beginning of the written Name”: YHWH. “At the end of the read Name”: in YHWH the first yod is male; in Adonai it is female. The kabbalists wrote that yod is a glowing coal and the remaining letters of YHWH extending from it are the flame bound to the coal. The yod of Adonai is likewise a coal, and alef-dalet-nun the flame bound to it. Thus the Name becomes complete: a lengthwise line is vav, a crosswise line likewise gives dalet, and yod itself is the point within—thus the whole Name. Examine this closely.

“In himself and his wife”: as the sages said, man and wife allude to yod-he, so the Shekhinah rests between them; son and daughter allude to vav-he, completing the Name. Therefore a man fulfills procreation with a son and daughter. “As we explained”: even what an accomplished student would innovate was written upon the tablets. Thus the minority opinions not followed as law cannot be false, God forbid, since they were found there and were there. Rather, the One preserving truth forever judges each at its proper time, so both are true. “Hence you learn”: saying “practical law” implies another law whose place and time have not yet arrived, as he explains.

“In matters of study”: his responsa, composed

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

through dialectical reasoning, are called shinnun, from ve-shinnantam, an expression of sharpening. “All the sages' words”: sometimes you hear associates are suspected of blemishing a firstborn animal, sometimes the opposite. The permissive authority [?] distinguishes the Temple's standing from the reverse condition. This proves his point: both are words of the living God at their proper time. [TN100010]

“Except meat descending from heaven”: the initials spell behemah, “animal.” MHRL TsQ [?]; Wings of the Dove, S. N., section KL [?]. [TN100011] Why specifically roasted? The angels are in the world of Formation and Adam in the world of Action. They roast meat for him, and wine, “pits” [?], the Garden of Eden. The meat Adam ate was the beast reclining upon a thousand mountains, from Creation; he enjoyed that light. [TN100012]

“Meat from an animal killed by his hand”: Adam killed it for blood or hide, not for eating. “Some for Israel”: unclean species outnumber clean, so the clean ones were written, as Rashi says. In the future more will become fit, possessing signs of cleanness they now lack. As the verse intends: “And grain/cud [?] it will not sift/chew [?],” which Onqelos translates, “And it is interpretation, not interpretation” [?], changing the verse from future to past, because in the future they will possess signs of cleanness. [TN100013]

I also heard an explanation through reincarnation. When someone enters an unclean animal, it indicates that he has not attained rectification: it has signs of uncleanness and requires further repair. If he enters a clean animal, its signs of cleanness indicate rectification through the blessing recited over it, and also through a Torah scholar's eating. Therefore the masters of truth wrote that eating fish at Sabbath afternoon is a commandment: righteous souls reincarnate in fish. Thus mere gathering is prescribed for them, and they are called “open eyes that do not sleep.” By this eating one raises their souls. See the extended discussion, “as a drug” [?]. [TN100014]

“For eating”: one must rectify and raise the holy sparks in the eaten thing, in animals and the like, so they acquire substance, returning the branch to the root. MHRL TsQ [?] explains: shoresh, “root,” equals 800; anaf, “branch,” equals 200; together 1,000. Through sin he squandered a fifth from holiness to impurity. Therefore the sages said, “One who distributes generously should not distribute more than a fifth.” One must restore the branch, the fifth, to holiness, the root. [TN100015]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

I heard in the name of my teacher, RL MLBKh [?], that this is the mystery of “The thousand are yours, Solomon, and two hundred for those guarding its fruit.” One must guard the two hundred—that is, its fruit, the branch; a thousand, which is the root's 800 [?], for Solomon, who is sacred. That is, one must include the branch with the root in holiness. [TN100016]

It is also a known premise that before Adam's sin there were garments of or, “light,” spelled with alef: one channel in Emanation, a channel of favor. Afterward there were garments of or, “skin,” with ayin, which has two projections, alluding to two channels. An extended qof likewise has two channels; through the ayin the seventy princes also draw from holy sparks. Those souls required rectification through the mystery of “You shall consume all the peoples,” as in Reqanati on “Do not make your souls detestable through every living thing.” [TN100017]

This is the eaten thing's form and readiness. Sometimes holiness is present, but its time for purification has not arrived, since the shell still prevails. The unclean animal's signs indicate that the shell remains with it. “The eater's perfection” too is required, for not everyone raises equally, as above, Part I chapter 21. This is the mystery of Rabbi's calf, which came specifically to him for rectification; he therefore sinned by driving it away.

“One part opposed another”: man was created from four elements opposing one another. Cold nature desires food and hot nature drink. Not so Adam: why would his eating be natural, replenishing what is consumed? [?] He was therefore commanded to eat from the garden to rectify what was eaten, which was ready for that at the time. [TN100018] “Either the Shekhinah”: “cultivate it” refers to the Shekhinah, as above, Part I chapter 25; or it refers to the living soul in previous verses. Although something intervenes, it can still refer further back.

Return to chapter in contents

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Animals still awaited their time”: for rectification to receive human form. “And your equality according to sensation” [?]: the animal senses, whereas an inanimate thing does not sense. Their time to be as they ought had not yet arrived, so Adam was permitted only the garden's trees. [TN100019] After Adam's sin, although animals were ready for rectification, man was no longer worthy to rectify them, having become like a beast. Therefore an unlearned person may not eat meat: he is no better than the animal, cannot rectify anything, and should not kill a creature for nothing. All the more since they too sinned by eating from the tree of knowledge when Eve fed them: they remained unfit for rectification even on their own account.

“Another approach”: animals needed no rectification before sin, already perfected and not needing to be stripped of matter into form. How were they perfected? Through Adam's naming them. Thus both before and after sin, killing animals was wholly forbidden to him. “Until animals corrupted themselves in Noah's days”: they needed rectification, and Noah found favor and was fit to rectify them. He was told, “Like green vegetation”: as green plants reasoned a fortiori not to emerge intermingled, so I gave you everything, even animals, to eat and rectify their corruption through intermingling, MRShM [?], and they corrupted their way upon man [?]. [TN100020] The conclusion of this entire chapter is that both are words of the living God, each according to its place and time.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 18 (יח)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“These”: the conclusion of the preceding chapter. In sum, differing rulings permitting meat are all words of the living God, eternally from Him. “Before a court was appointed”: so too in the sages' disputes, both the prohibiting and permitting opinions are true at differing times, according to what the majority then decrees. Before Torah was given and the court below appointed, Torah issued from the court above, from the blessed LORD Himself, according to time—a time to prohibit and a time to permit. How good a word in its time, as His wisdom decreed! Now that Torah commands “incline after the majority,” differing rulings follow the changing majority, [gap], among each generation's sages. You have only the judge of your own days: Jephthah in his generation is like Samuel in his. [TN100021]

“A court may overturn”: as Maimonides writes in chapter 2 of the Laws of Rebels: “If a Great Court expounds through one of the measures, according to its judgment that the law is thus, and rules accordingly, and a later court sees another reason to overturn it, that court

Rema of Fano

These opposites and differing rulings, such as permitting or prohibiting meat wholly or partly as times change, are all words of the living God. Before a court below was appointed, Torah issued from the court above: how good is a word at its proper time! Now Torah has been given, with the new rule “incline after the majority.” You have only the judge of your own days. A court may overturn an earlier court's ruling, even if smaller than it, when the disagreement concerns understanding Torah's interpretive methods: one expounds by one measure, another by another, such as inclusions and exclusions or general and particular terms.

Suppose an individual in the first court expounded as the second court would later expound, while an individual in the second expounded as the first had done. Each in his own generation becomes a rebellious elder if he instructs others to act on his opinion after his contemporary court has agreed on the opposite. We learn that both ways of ruling are true, while the desired practical act is what the majority agrees upon for that place and time—provided these are the occupants of the Chamber of Hewn Stone and their subsequent disciples, directing their hearts to the Omnipresent.

To abolish an enactment or custom, however, a greater court is required, as we learned in Behirata. If it fences off overturns it and rules as it sees fit. For it is said, ‘To the judge who shall be in those days’: you are obligated to follow only the court of your generation.” End of quotation.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“When disagreement concerns”: a law dependent on understanding Torah's methods. One expounds by a measure yielding permission or cleanness, the other by a measure yielding the opposite. “We learn the truth of ruling”: the ruling is legally true in both aspects; whichever the majority agrees upon according to place and time is alone desired in practice, although at another time agreement is opposite. “Directing their hearts to the Omnipresent”: who commanded following the majority.

“To abolish an enactment”: this qualifies the earlier statement that a court, even a smaller one, may overturn an earlier court when the dispute concerns Torah interpretation. To abolish an enactment or custom established by the first court and spread through Israel requires a greater court. Concerning this we learned in Eduyot that a court cannot overturn another's words unless greater in wisdom and number. Maimonides explains this there too. “If it fences off conduct”: likewise explained there by Maimonides.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For”: the master gives an excellent reason enactments and fences are stricter than Torah laws. With Torah laws, each opposite is Torah at its time if the majority agrees; therefore each generation's court may judge by the majority of contemporary sages. This cannot be said of enactments and fences. They therefore remain under the prohibition “You shall not depart,” until the enactment is abolished by a court greater than the first.

“Therefore”: since the legal ruling is true in both ways but the agreed one is desired in practice, Rabbi Yehoshua rightly said in Bava Metzia, concerning the oven of Akhnai: a heavenly voice declared, “What have you against Rabbi Eliezer, whom the law follows everywhere?” Rabbi Yehoshua stood and said, “It is not in heaven.” What does that mean? Rabbi Yirmeyah said: we do not heed a heavenly voice, since You already wrote in the Torah at Mount Sinai, “Incline after the majority.” As we said: although law is certainly in heaven, practical law is not in heaven, because it conduct to prevent transgressing a Torah prohibition and has spread throughout Israel, even Elijah and his court cannot abolish it. For an enactment or protective fence does not allow saying that each alternative is Torah; rather, they stand under “You shall not depart.” Rabbi Yehoshua therefore rightly said that practical law “is not in heaven,” although all paths of dialectical reasoning are true and righteous together.

Rema of Fano - continued

The heavenly voice saying that the law follows Rabbi Eliezer everywhere spoke truth: he never said anything he had not heard from his teachers. Everywhere there are courts of Beit Shammai's disciples ruling like him, without violating “Do not form factions,” as explained at the beginning of Megillah and in Yevamot chapter 1. Moreover, they are sharper. Nevertheless, courts ruling as Beit Hillel became more numerous, since they were humble and agreeable. We follow them, and many of Beit Shammai's disciples acted only according to Beit Hillel's words.

From our explanation the discerning will understand the gravity of Doeg's malicious speech, of which it is written, “He who blesses his fellow with a loud voice.” He told Saul, “I have seen a son of Jesse the Bethlehemite,” praising him extensively, as Scripture and the Gemara in Heleq recount. To each praise Saul replied, “My son Jonathan is likewise.” When Doeg concluded, “The LORD is with him”—the law follows him everywhere—Saul was disheartened and answered no more. This cannot be said depends upon the court below's agreement. “The heavenly voice”: also spoke truth, for Rabbi Eliezer received this from his teachers; undoubtedly it was agreed in their time.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Everywhere there are”: further proof that every path of dialectical reasoning is law. Even at one time some courts rule as Beit Shammai and others as Beit Hillel, as in Eruvin chapter 1, Rosh Hashanah and Hullin: “The law always follows Beit Hillel, but one who wishes to act as Beit Shammai may do so.” Yevamot chapter 1 records Rav and Shmuel's dispute: according to Rav, Beit Shammai did not act on their own rulings; according to Shmuel, they did. The former reasons that Beit Hillel were the majority; the latter that we follow a majority where the sides are equal, but Beit Shammai were sharper.

“No violation of ‘Do not form factions’”: as stated there, the prohibition applies to a single court in one city, half ruling as Beit Shammai and half as Beit Hillel. Two courts in one city pose no such problem. “From our explanation”: that opposite rulings are true and practical law depends on the generation's sages' agreement, the discerning will understand what follows. “Of which it is written, ‘He who blesses’”: as in Heleq.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“This cannot”: one cannot award the same exclusive claim to two parties. If David and Jonathan dispute a law and David merits establishing it correctly, one cannot say Jonathan does likewise. Therefore Saul was disheartened and answered no more. Doeg intended malicious speech against the Great Court, upon whom it depends to decide freely between disputants: whoever they choose is the sanctified one of two disputants, only of the one who merits establishing the teaching according to the law.

Rema of Fano - continued

Doeg thus spoke maliciously about the heads of the Sanhedrins and the Great Court: they determined the law according to David by their own choice, though authorized to decide either way. In truth, law is established only in accordance with custom. Whenever the people practice a thing, we do not protest; if it is a custom of the scrupulous, we instruct accordingly. Once the law is established, we expound it in public teaching. This is the meaning of “The LORD is with him”: He and His court, above and below.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

whose opinion is desired in practice. Yet they continually decided everywhere in David's favor.

It seems to me Doeg intended to distance David lest he take Saul's kingship. When Saul requested a skilled player, Doeg feared someone would first advise bringing David, who played well. He therefore blessed him loudly and maliciously: “I have seen a son of Jesse the Bethlehemite,” and so forth, multiplying praise in plain and homiletical senses. All this was to put fear in Saul: if he brought David near, he would have to fear him throughout his life. Therefore Doeg concluded, “The LORD is with him”: do not dismiss my words and suppose he can never become king because he descends from Ruth the Moabite and is disqualified from the congregation. “The LORD is with him”—the law follows him everywhere, since the Sanhedrin always decides as he wishes. Certainly here too they will rule “a Moabite male, but not a Moabite female.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In truth”: incidentally the master teaches that, although the court may decide freely, law should be established only by custom where the people practice one of the alternatives. This comes from Soferim chapter 14. “This is the meaning”: returning to the earlier point. Doeg intended malicious speech against the Sanhedrin for freely deciding as David did; therefore he said “the LORD,” ve-YHWH. Wherever this occurs it means Him and His court. Here it alludes also to the court below: upper and lower courts both agree with him in law. This is remarkable: although from the blessed LORD [gap] David to determine the law as the court above rules, the lower court's conduct is evil in my eyes—also deciding in his favor practically without compulsion, when it may decide the opposite, since practical law is not in heaven, as stated. [TN100022]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Wholly or partly”: in Adam's days all animals were forbidden; at the giving of Torah, some were forbidden for lacking signs of cleanness. Each according to its place and time, when they merited rectifying the reincarnated soul and spark, as in the previous chapter.

“This cannot be said”: one cannot say “the law follows him everywhere” of both. “Only he did not merit to establish” [?]. “Though authorized”: to rule whichever way they wished, they nevertheless ruled as David did. This is “the LORD is with him”: wherever ve-YHWH occurs, it means Him and His upper and lower courts. YHWH is the court above; “the Z’W” [?] is the court below in his stature. [TN100023]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 18

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 19 (יט)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“The first dispute”: having explained in preceding chapters the paths of disputes for Heaven's sake in Torah law, the master now explains related matters. “Through five pairs”: Hagigah chapter 2: Yose ben Yo'ezer says not to lay hands; Yose ben Yohanan says to lay hands. Yehoshua ben Perahyah says not to; Nittai the Arbelite says to. Yehudah ben Tabbai says not to; Shimon ben Shetah says to. Shemayah says to; Avtalyon says not to. Hillel and Menahem did not disagree. Menahem departed and Shammai entered; Shammai says not to lay hands, Hillel says to. The first named were heads of the academy, the second heads of court. Rashi explains: not to lay hands on a festival; this was the first dispute among Israel's sages. “Because”: laying hands on an animal on a festival is prohibited only as a rabbinic restriction.

“In the earlier pairs”: the prohibiting authorities were the heads of the academy in the first three pairs according to Rabbi Meir, the first two according to the rabbis, as

Rema of Fano

The Mishnah's sages' first dispute, over laying or not laying hands upon an offering, continued through five successive pairs of tannaim, one the nasi, presiding head, and the other head of the court. They did not take a vote, because it concerned only a rabbinic restriction on festival activity. In the earlier pairs the nasi prohibited it, and out of respect for them permission was not granted in assembly. Then Bava ben Buta, one of Beit Shammai's disciples, knowing the law followed Beit Hillel's permission to lay hands, found the Temple court empty on festivals. He brought three thousand inspected lambs from Kedar's flocks, stood them on the Temple Mount and said, “Hear me, house of Israel! Whoever desires, come and lay hands.” At that moment the law was established according to his words.

The earlier sages had no other dispute until Hillel and Shammai disagreed on three further matters: the quantity requiring hallah, invalidation of immersion pools, and retroactive reckoning of menstrual impurity. When they took a vote, the established law followed neither, as we learned in Behirata. They also disputed another matter in a baraita: “One harvesting grapes for the winepress—Shammai says they have been rendered susceptible to impurity.” That day Hillel sat bowed in the Gemara there. “Until Bava ben Buta arose”: as in Beitzah chapter 2, folio 20. “Three other matters”: Shabbat chapter 1, folio 15. Rav Huna says Shammai and Hillel disputed in three places: Shammai requires hallah from a qab, Hillel from two qab; Hillel says a full hin of drawn water invalidates an immersion pool, Shammai nine qab; Shammai says all women's impurity begins at discovery, Hillel from the previous examination. These appear in Eduyot chapter 1.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It was taught”: Shabbat chapter 1, folio 17: one harvesting grapes for the winepress—Shammai says they are susceptible to impurity, Hillel says not. Hillel asked Shammai, “Why harvest grapes in purity but not olives?” He replied, “If you provoke me, I shall decree impurity even for the olive harvest.” They planted a sword in the study house, saying: whoever enters may enter; whoever would leave must not leave. That day Hillel sat bowed before Shammai like a student. It was as difficult for Israel as the day the calf was made.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shammai and Hillel decreed, but people did not accept it. Their disciples came and decreed, and people accepted. Rashi explains Hillel's question: why require pure vessels for gathering grapes, by saying they become susceptible, but not for gathering olives? “May enter”: the study house; “must not leave,” because they wished to take a vote. It was difficult because Hillel was the nasi and humble.

“They were distressed”: without Hillel's gentleness and lowliness of spirit, they might have feared Torah becoming two Torahs, God forbid, as happened later when insufficiently trained disciples of Shammai and Hillel multiplied, as in Sotah's final chapter. Shammai's winning through strictness when Hillel was nasi was therefore nearly a humiliation and distressed Israel. “Like the day the calf was made”: Israel then became two groups, and here Torah nearly became two Torahs. “Although”: Hillel was nasi and the court's head could not rule before him. “In Ein Doreshin”: the Gemara challenges the proposed assignment of Yehudah ben Tabbai and Shimon ben Shetah's offices: can a head of court rule before the nasi? It answers concerning Shimon ben before Shammai like a student, and it was as difficult for Israel as the day the calf was made, as in Shabbat chapter 1 (17a).

Rema of Fano - continued

They were especially distressed that Shammai's strictness overcame Hillel's humility. Hillel asked why grapes were harvested in purity; Shammai replied, “If you provoke me, I shall decree impurity even concerning the olive harvest.” Without Hillel's lowliness of spirit, they might have feared, God forbid, that Torah had become two Torahs that day. Although the court's head may not issue a ruling before the nasi, who is reckoned his teacher—as explicitly stated in Ein Doreshin concerning Yehudah ben Tabbai and Shimon ben Shetah (Hagigah 16b)—here the nasi accorded him honor. Moreover, the matter was a protective fence for the purity of priestly portions and sacred offerings. Nevertheless, the community did not accept their decree out of respect for the nasi: he waived his honor, but they were concerned for it. Shammai's decree was not established that day; their disciples later decreed it and established it by a numerical majority.

Incidentally we must know that Sifrei, in the passage about the king, teaches that the sons of all Israel's leaders succeed them. Torat Kohanim derives from “who shall fill his hand,” concerning the high priest, that he must fill his fathers' place. Ha-Nose indicates that filling it in fear of Heaven suffices, even if not in wisdom. This applies to the crown of priesthood, the crown of kingship and similar offices, such as municipal authority.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shetah's lifetime, and so forth. “Here it differs”: Hillel himself honored Shammai by sitting before him like a student. “Until”: the disciples took a vote.

“Their sons succeed them”: derived from “he and his sons in Israel's midst”: whoever holds office in Israel's midst is succeeded by his son. “Fills his fathers' place”: he then precedes others even greater than himself. This is derived from “they had no sons”: had they sons, those would precede even if not equal to Eliezer. [TN100025] “In Ha-Nose”: concerning “My son Shimon is wise; my son Gamliel shall be nasi,” the Gemara says that although Rabban Gamliel did not fill his fathers' place in wisdom, he did in fear of sin. “Municipal authority”: as Maimonides writes in chapter 1 of the Laws of Kings, from the cited Sifrei and the king's “he and his sons in Israel's midst.” “This is not so”: Torah law does not require a nasi's son to succeed him.

“Until Hillel the Elder onward”: he descended from David through Shephatyah son of Avital, as in Ketubbot, Ha-Nose. He ascended from Babylon to Jerusalem, hence Hillel the Babylonian, and received leadership from the sons of Beteira, as is known. “The master said”: Shabbat chapter 1, folio 15.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rashi explains Hillel and Shimon: Rabban Shimon was Hillel's son; Rabban Gamliel was Rabban Gamliel the Elder; Shimon was the executed Shimon, one of those executed by royal authority. He fathered the Rabban Gamliel who distressed Rabbi Yehoshua ben Hananyah and disputed with Rabbi Eliezer ben Hyrqanus.

“This is Shimon ben Gamliel”: incidentally, after mentioning Hillel's lineage, the master explains everything pertaining to it. This Shimon ben Gamliel was executed by Titus at the destruction and spoke in Avot chapter 1, as stated. Abarbanel and the other commentators there likewise identify him as Shimon ben Gamliel the Elder. “Greater than Rabban is his name”: as the sages said. Maimonides writes in his introduction to the Mishnah commentary that this reflects their greatness and honored stature: no fitting epithet could be found to honor their names, as the prophets have no such epithet.

“At the end of Keritot chapter 1”: bird-offering pairs in Jerusalem cost gold dinars. Shimon ben Gamliel said, “By this Dwelling, I will not sleep tonight until they cost dinars,” and so forth; that

Rema of Fano - continued

With the nasi and head of court, however, the crown of Torah lies in a corner for whoever wishes to take it; Torah law does not prescribe such succession. Therefore we do not find the earlier heads transmitting their crowns to their sons until Hillel onward.

The master said: Hillel and Shimon, Gamliel and Shimon exercised their leadership during the Temple's existence for a hundred years. The latter is Shimon ben Gamliel, one of those executed by royal authority, who says in Avot chapter 1, “All my days I grew up among the sages.” He is not called Rabban to honor his leadership because “greater than Rabban is his name.” He appears once more in the Mishnah, at the end of Keritot chapter 1, where he fixed the price of bird-offering pairs in Jerusalem at quarter-coin prices (Keritot 1:7).

Perhaps, since the Hasmoneans' servants corrupted matters in the Second Temple period, and Herod and his sons arose and seized improper kingship over Israel, the court enacted that Torah's crown should supplement kingship's crown, seating a son on his father's throne. We mentioned at the end of Part I an exceptional quality Hillel possessed. The Holy One agreed with them: they merited a great genealogical chain, all worthy of leadership. Thus Rabbi asks at the end of Horayot, “What is my status concerning a goat-offering?” (11b). In Rabban Gamliel's time the baraita in Lifnei Eideihen was taught: as objects are burned in honor of kings, so they are burned in honor of the heads of the day their price fell to quarters. The master upholds this reading, unlike those reading Rabban Gamliel. It must be Shimon ben Gamliel the Elder, since the Temple was already destroyed in the days of the second, Rabbi's father. “Perhaps”: this explains inheriting leadership from Hillel onward, though Torah law does not require it.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The court enacted”: Abarbanel writes in his introduction to Avot: “Jerusalem's custom was that, although the Hasmonean and Herodian houses went out and came in at war and governed the kingdom, there was always a nasi from David's house, together with the high priest and Sanhedrin, for all judicial matters and teaching Torah, statutes and laws.” End of quotation, from Yosippon. The reason is that the nasi mentioned by Torah concerning the offering is the king, as Horayot chapter 3 asks and answers: “Which nasi? The king.” In the Second Temple period the priests, followed by the Herodian house, unlawfully seized kingship. Therefore even from Shimon the Righteous's time, the greatest sage served as nasi for Torah, commandments, statutes and laws. The master says that from Hillel, who descended from David, the court gave the son priority for leadership, as with kingship, so its crown would complete the damaged crown of kingship.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Hillel's exceptional quality”: he upheld Torah in poverty, then he and his sons became heads of the academy and he merited upholding it in wealth. “The Holy One agreed”: as the sages expound “a lawgiver from between his feet” of Hillel's descendants. “What is my status concerning a goat”: Rashi explains, is my leadership full leadership, so that were the Temple standing I would bring a goat, or not? The master explains Rabbi's reason for asking: since leadership was his inheritance, truly resembling kingship, he had grounds to consider himself liable for a goat. Rabbi Hiyya answered, “Your rival is in Babylon,” as there.

“In Rabban Gamliel's days”: the Elder, as the baraita concludes with his death, when Onqelos the convert burned seventy Tyrian maneh in his honor. “His son Gamliel was young”: the master holds that this explains why he did not immediately succeed his executed father Shimon. Sefer Yuhasin, however, says Gamliel the Elder died eighteen years before the destruction and his son academy.

Rema of Fano - continued

When the second Shimon mentioned above died and his son Gamliel was young, ben Zakkai took his place. He requested of Titus “the line of Rabban Gamliel,” meaning that leadership should not cease from his house. [TN100024] He was called Rabban Yohanan, having established many disciples. The Sanhedrin had already been exiled in his time and Torah stood with weakened hands; therefore they no longer honored the heads by using their names alone as at first. After him they continued calling them Rabban, as with Rabban Gamliel; in his honor they called his grandfather Rabban Gamliel the Elder. After him was Rabban Shimon ben Gamliel, Rabbi's father, who was greatly concerned for the leadership's honor in tractate Horayot, although he was humble. He taught in Avot, “The world endures through three things.” After his name they called his grandfather in Keritot, as mentioned, Rabbi Shimon ben Gamliel. This is the true sequence, although some commentators were not precise about it.

I further say that Rabbi placed his own words at the beginning of Avot chapter 2 next to his father's words just mentioned, then his son's words: “Torah study is fitting together with worldly occupation.” Afterward comes “Do not separate from the community,” the words of Hillel, his grandson, who bathed at Kabul with his brother Yehudah in the chapter Maqom She-Nahagu (Pesahim 51a). Here Rabbi taught concerning himself, “They shall

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shimon led for those eighteen years. On that account Gamliel would have been at least twenty-three or twenty-four when his father was killed. At Yevamot's end Gamliel recalls that victims were killed at Tel Arza and his grandfather permitted their wives to remarry on one witness's evidence. To remember his grandfather's teaching and act, he was surely at least five or six when his grandfather died.

I saw that Abarbanel in Avot thought Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai was appointed after Shimon ben Gamliel the Elder because he was close to the authorities. Sefer Yuhasin says Gamliel was not yet fit for leadership when his father died. Perhaps the master means the same: “young” for leadership. It seems more likely to me, however, that Titus killed Shimon ben Gamliel from hatred of Davidic leaders, whose office resembled kingship. The sages could not appoint his son because of the oppressor's fury: what greater power had the son than the father? The king would be angrier upon seeing leadership hereditary like kingship.

They therefore appointed someone not of David's line: Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, the priest, greatest in Torah and wisdom of his generation, still remaining from Hillel and Shammai's disciples and receiving from them. He became nasi; being close to the authorities, he requested from the emperor Gamliel's lineage: that he remove his fury from David's house and allow their crown of leadership after him as before. His request had an opening because the ruling king's will had already been fulfilled through appointing a non-Davidic head. Moreover, that head himself requested it, refusing to leave the blessing of leadership to his own descendants. The emperor consented. So it seems to me, correct, pleasing and acceptable as truth.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Ben Zakkai”: he was called this before his leadership, from Hillel's days, as in the chapter BM and Sanhedrin chapter 5. [TN100026] “Took his place”: became nasi. “‘Gamliel's lineage’”: as in Ha-Nizakin. Rashi explains: the head's family should not be killed, nor David's house's authority extinguished. “Rabban Gamliel”: of Yavneh, son of the executed Shimon, who became nasi after Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai.

“They called his grandfather”: Rabban too, although in his own time he was not called this, his name being greater than not depart from your mouth, your offspring's mouth, or your offspring's offspring's mouth.” After this Hillel he placed the words of Hillel the Elder, ancestor of the lineage: “An uncultivated person does not fear sin.” Those reciting the teachings were not precise, and recite “He used to say” before “An uncultivated person does not fear sin.” Many likewise confused the two Shimon ben Gamliels at the end of chapter 1 and recite “He used to say” for the second. The truth in both cases is as we have explained.

Rema of Fano - continued

Disputes did not multiply in Israel until after the second destruction, in the days of Rabban Gamliel of Yavneh and his colleagues, Shammai and Hillel's disciples: the disciples of Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai, Hillel's disciple, and their counterparts from Beit Shammai. Neither group had served their teachers sufficiently—not from negligence, God forbid, but because the Chamber of Hewn Stone ceased in their days. Ben Zakkai their teacher, who lived many years during the Temple, had learned even Abaye and Rava's dialectical discussions. He and his teachers had already merited establishing decided laws in all of them without dispute. But deteriorating times and the turmoil of the hour made law difficult for us and rulings doubtful, leaving two undecided sides, although both were received from Sinai and all engraved upon the tablets: between each utterance were the Torah's fine details and letters, as mentioned. This resembled the Urim and Tummim, each in its own manner.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rabban. To avoid implying any lowliness or inferiority in the second Gamliel, they called his grandfather Rabban as well. “After him”: after the second Gamliel came his son Shimon, the third Shimon, Rabbi's father. “Greatly concerned for the leadership's honor”: Horayot chapter 3 teaches that when the nasi enters everyone stands until he tells them to sit; when the head of court enters, they make a row on each side, and so forth. Rabban [?] Yohanan said: “In Rabban Gamliel's days this teaching was taught.” Shimon ben Gamliel was nasi, Rabbi Meir sage and Rabbi Natan court head. When Shimon ben Gamliel entered, all stood; when Meir and Natan entered, all likewise stood. He said, “Should there be no distinction between mine and theirs?” and taught that rule. Meir and Natan were absent that day. See the entire incident there. [TN100027]

“He taught”: at Avot chapter 1's end, Shimon ben Gamliel says “Through three things,” and so forth. Abarbanel and the others identify him as Shimon ben Gamliel of Yavneh, Rabbi's father. “After his name”: because they called him Rabban, they also honored his grandfather Shimon with Rabban, although the grandfather's name was greater than

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rabban, as with Gamliel. “In Keritot”: why then does Avot chapter 1 say only “Shimon his son says, All my days I grew up,” not Rabban Shimon? One must answer, as Maimonides does, that he said this as a young man before becoming nasi.

“I further say”: based on identifying Avot chapter 1's last Shimon ben Gamliel as Rabbi's father. “At chapter 2's beginning”: Rabbi says, “Which is the upright path?” After his own words he arranged his son Rabban Gamliel son of Rabbi Yehudah the Nasi's saying, “Torah study is fitting,” and so forth. Abarbanel asks how a saying uttered by Gamliel as nasi after his father's death entered the Mishnah Rabbi composed while alive. Either he said it while his father lived and Rabbi wrote it as Gamliel his son, with Rabban added after his appointment; or Rabbi did not write this Mishnah during his life, and it was added after death, as similar cases occur in Pesahim. The master prefers the first answer: Rabbi himself wrote his son's words.

“After him”: after his son Gamliel's words he placed Hillel's “Do not separate from the community.” The master identifies this Hillel as Rabbi's grandson, Gamliel's son. Maqom She-

Rema of Fano - continued

For this too the tanna pleaded before Him, blessed be He: let our portion in new Torah insights—the soul's portion specifically, hewn from the place of Torah and supernal Wisdom—be written with God's writing and sealed in His treasuries wherever they are. For He has allotted to those who fear Him a portion of His actual wisdom, in which He continually engages. Not so ordinary flesh and blood, over whom the blessing says He “gave of His wisdom”: either it is a gift to one unworthy, whereas a portion indicates a rightful claim; or what is given them is relinquished and abandoned by the Giver as something insubstantial. The portion given us, however, remains guarded for the Lord of all, blessed be He. From it comes the immortality desired by the perfected, for which King David prayed, “Let me dwell in Your tent forever.” Through Torah's letters Yah, the LORD, was the Rock of worlds. Whoever merits Torah to this extent undoubtedly becomes a partner in creation.

Likewise we bless Him who “allotted of His glory to those who fear Him,” for He is truly Israel's King and Redeemer, saying of David, “I have installed My king upon Zion.” Earthly kingship resembles heavenly kingship. For ordinary flesh and blood, however, He “gave of His glory,” for “Kingship belongs to the LORD, and He rules among the nations.” They explain moshel as ruling, or as uttering parables; both are good together. But as for the title melekh, take it as “May my counsel, malki, please you,” for the LORD's

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Nahagu, folio 51, describes Yehudah and Hillel, Gamliel's sons, bathing together at Kabul. Both were amoraim. Yehudah succeeded his father and was called Rabbi Yehudah Nesia; he and his court permitted gentile oil, as in Avodah Zarah. In his time they ceased calling the heads Rabban, using Rabbi instead, for Rabban is greater than Rabbi. He had a son called Rabbi Hillel who succeeded him, with whom leadership ceased until the nasi, King Messiah, comes speedily in our days. He established our system of calendrical intercalation. Rabbi placed his grandson Hillel's words beside the others to fulfill “They shall not depart from your mouth.” This differs from Abarbanel and the other commentators, who identify this Hillel as Hillel the Elder.

“Who said ‘An uncultivated person does not fear sin’”: the reading should be “Hillel the Elder says,” not “He used to say,” as those commentators read after “Hillel says, Do not separate,” identifying him with the Elder. “They recite”: at the second Shimon ben Gamliel, on “Through three things,” they read “He used to say,” deleting the name. They err: the previously mentioned Shimon ben Gamliel was the executed one, while this was Rabbi's father.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“In Rabban Gamliel of Yavneh's days”: the

Rema of Fano - continued

counsel is forever, His wonders and thoughts toward us.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

executed Shimon's son, appointed at Yavneh after Yohanan ben Zakkai, as stated. His disputes with

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rabbi Yehoshua and Rabbi Eliezer are known. “Hillel's disciple”: Maimonides likewise says so in the introductions to his Mishnah commentary and code. Although Avot chapter 2 says ben Zakkai received from Hillel and Shammai, his principal learning must have been from Hillel. “Rather”: they could not serve sufficiently because the Sanhedrin was exiled; the Temple was destroyed, the Chamber of Hewn Stone ceased, and the Sanhedrin went to Yavneh.

“Even Abaye and Rava's discussions”: Sukkah chapter 2 says Yohanan ben Zakkai left nothing unlearned—Scripture, Mishnah and so forth, great matter and small matter; the small matter is Abaye and Rava's discussions. “As mentioned”: chapters 16 and17. “Like Urim and Tummim”: the questioning priest looks at them and their letters shine and combine into an answer, yes or no, since both are possible from their side. Likewise both disputed alternatives were engraved on the tablets, and an accomplished student saw according to his apprehension.

“For this too”: another explanation of “our portion” in the tanna's prayer, different from chapter 14. These are the mysteries of holy Torah arising from the roots of the student's soul, the soul's portion. The Zohar, Beha'alotekha, page 288, on “Uncover my eyes, that I may behold wonders from Your Torah,” says: “Come and see: a garment is visible to all. Fools seeing a person in a beautiful garment look no further. The garment's value is the body; the body's value, the soul. Likewise Torah has a body,” and so forth. “This body is clothed in garments, this world's narratives. Fools look only at that garment, Torah's narrative, knowing no more and not looking beneath. Those knowing more look not at the garment but at the body beneath it. The wise, servants of the supernal King, who stood at Sinai, look only at the soul, the root of all, Torah itself,” and so forth. Thus supernal mysteries parallel the human soul, and Israel who stood at Sinai contemplate them. The master therefore says the tanna calls these mysteries “our portion”: they arise from the soul, a portion of God above.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Let his portion be written in the book”: the tanna means, place our portion of new Torah insights in Your Torah too. The prayer's reason is that the blessed LORD favored us with a portion of His wisdom, His Torah, through the soul He gave us. Let Him do this further thing: gather and place our innovations in that wisdom's upper treasury.

“To those who fear Him”: incidentally the master explains Ha-Ro'eh: seeing Israel's sages, one blesses Him “who allotted of His wisdom to those who fear Him”; seeing gentile sages, Him “who gave of His wisdom to flesh and blood.” For Israel's sages “allotted” certainly applies: He granted them a portion of His supernal wisdom. “In which He continually engages”: renewing creation, as above, chapter 14, from the Zohar on “the new heavens and new earth which I make”: He continually makes them from the ascending Torah innovations and mysteries.

“We bless ‘gave’”: not “allotted.” “Either”: the wisdom He granted them was a gift. “Allotted” would imply a rightful claim, as Israel's sages have through their soul. “Or”: their wisdom is something the blessed LORD has left behind, withdrawing from it as gift-givers do when a gift is regarded as insignificant. “But the portion”: hence the tanna says He allotted His wisdom. It is our portion allotted by the LORD, yet guarded for Him to renew creation continually. [gap] for eternal life. [TN100028]

“Through Torah's letters”: the blessed LORD created the world, as the sages say at Bereshit Rabbah's beginning, and continues creating new worlds through Torah innovations. Thus “Let me dwell in Your tent” means Your Torah's tent, sufficient for worlds, for creating worlds through it; let me too merit dwelling there as Your partner in creation through these Torah insights.

“Likewise”: this also explains the end of Ha-Ro'eh:

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

for Israel's kings one blesses Him “who allotted of His glory to those who fear Him”; for gentile kings, Him “who gave of His glory to flesh and blood.” The blessed LORD is Israel's true King. From His full kingship He allotted to Israel's earthly kings, retaining His heavenly kingship over them. Concerning other mortals it says He rules among the nations. “But the title king”: He is not called this specifically over them. “Who would not fear You, King of the nations?” uses melekh in the sense of counsel and consultation, as Daniel's “May my counsel please you,” where malki means my counsel. The LORD's counsel is for the whole world, His wonders and thoughts for Israel, as all this is explained in the discourse HKhH, Part II sections 86 and 87. [TN100029]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“They were in pairs”: as above, five tannaim dispute whether to lay hands or not, meaning hands upon the offering; see there. “As difficult for Israel as the day the calf was made”: at the calf they reversed mercy into judgment, lion into ox, since ox is on the left and lion on the right. Here too Hillel was mercy and Shammai judgment, his measure from the left, in the mystery of pushing him away with the builder's cubit in his hand. Hillel was lovingkindness, as in the Zohar, Pinehas. Shammai defeated Hillel, who was from the right and was his reincarnation, as we wrote above, Part I chapter 26. This is alluded to in the final letters of le-einei kol Yisrael, “before the eyes of all Israel,” spelling Hillel. In the Name of seventy-two they are likewise adjacent: MHSh and ALH are Moses and Hillel, corresponding to him. [TN100030]

Alternatively, those who made the calf said, “For this Moses, the man… who shall go before us,” turning Moses into a man. Here too they turned Hillel into Shammai. “The nasi accorded him honor”: Hillel himself honored Shammai.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 19

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 19

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Nevertheless they did not accept”: although Hillel was unconcerned for his honor, they were concerned and did not establish the law as Shammai that day. “He was not called Rabban because his name was greater”: being called by his own name was better than Rabban, as though it said, “Great is his name”; see below, chapter 26. “What is my status concerning a goat-offering”: in Horayot, KL [?]. [TN100031]

“Not so flesh and blood”: Berakhot says that one seeing Israel's sages blesses Him who allotted His wisdom to those who fear Him; for the nations' sages one blesses Him who gave, and so forth. The difference between allotment and giving is that allotment means He gives them one portion while the other remains His, continually engaging in it, for it is supernal Wisdom. To the nations He gave wisdom altogether inferior, retaining none of it for Himself, for it is a thing without substance.

“The soul's portion specifically”: as in the Zohar, Beha'alotekha, Torah has garment, body and soul; mysteries are the soul of the soul, attained by one in a thousand. For this he requests, “Give us our portion in Your Torah”; examine it closely. “Or because it is a gift”: a gift is given to one undeserving and unworthy; for one worthy of it, it is not called a gift, being rightly due him [?]. [TN100032] Therefore he says “portion.” The recipient intended these two approaches in “Let me dwell in Your tent for worlds”: specifically worlds, in the Torah through which the Holy One created worlds. “Or uttering parables”: mocking them, as “The LORD mocks them.” “King of kings”: melekh means counsel, as “May my counsel please you”; melekh is an expression of counsel, and so forth.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 20 (כ)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Now we may understand": the master returns to the tablets. "It teaches there in the Jerusalem Talmud": Sheqalim chapter 6, cited above in chapter 16. This is the true wording: "How were the tablets written? Hananyah, Rabbi Yehoshua's nephew, says five on this tablet and five on that, for 'He wrote them upon two stone tablets.' The rabbis say ten on each, for 'He declared His covenant to you… the Ten Utterances.' Rabbi Shimon ben Yohai says twenty on each, for 'on both their faces.' Rabbi Simai says forty on each, for 'on this side and that they were written,' tetragonal." End of quotation.

Rabbi Ya'aqov ben Haviv, author of Ein Ya'aqov, explains this at length. He holds that all agree the utterances were written on the tablets' surfaces, each six long by six wide. The first tanna assigns five utterances to each; the rabbis ten; Rabbi Shimon ben Yohai twenty: ten from one end to the middle, ten from the opposite end to the middle, as the late craftsman depicted there, in HNHM [?]. [TN100034] Rabbi Simai agrees but adds twenty in the same arrangement on each

Rema of Fano

Now we may understand still more concerning the tablets' writing. The Jerusalem Talmud teaches there: how were the tablets written? Hananyah, Rabbi Yehoshua's nephew, says five on this tablet and five on that. The rabbis say ten. Rabbi Shimon ben Yohai says twenty. Rabbi Simai says forty. The interpretation nearest the saying's plain sense and truth is that each tanna adds to the other's words, without disagreement. All agree that an area six by six holds the Ten Utterances, no fewer and no more. Upon a single surface they can be read from every direction and corner, so that anyone approaching from the four standards—Judah, Reuben from the south, and likewise all the others—can learn to study them. [TN100033] This was God's work, beyond our intellect's measure, not an ordinary artisan's work of the sort another depicted before us in the study house, which a boy could write.

The clear explanation is that the one who says five and five considers them when carried edgewise upon Moses' two hands. They matched and shone toward his face, and he looked and studied all the utterances, five on one and five on the other, since each tablet's thickness was three handbreadths, as is known. The one who says ten on each considers Moses opening them before all Israel, and how they lay in the Ark, as in Bava Batra, Ha-Shutafin (14b). There were twenty on each when both faces are tablet's other face. This is the author of Ein Ya'aqov's view. He labored to find fitting explanations for each authority's proof; see there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The master does not accept this. It requires them also to dispute the writing's size: for the first tanna, large enough that a tablet holds only five; for the rabbis, finer, fitting ten; for Rabbi Shimon, finer still. If they do not dispute size, they must dispute whether writing filled the tablets. For the first tanna and rabbis, a tablet would not be entirely filled. All this is forced. The master therefore considers the writing equal for all, arranged so a six-by-six surface holds the Ten Utterances with no blank space. The tablets were written on all sides: the two six-by-six faces and the four three-by-six edges. Each authority speaks of one aspect, so each says something different without disagreement, as he explains.

"Six by six": the tablets were six long, six wide and three thick, as in Ha-Shutafin. "They can be read": there is no need for Ein Ya'aqov's proposal for Rabbi Shimon and Rabbi Simai, with utterances

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

written from both ends to the middle so they can be read from two directions. All held that every inscription could be read from all four directions without repeating the utterances on one surface or writing from both ends. “God's work”: hence “The tablets were God's work,” and so forth, indicating writing from both directions on one surface. “Which another depicted”: the cited Ein Ya'aqov; “for a notable man; already a wise man will write them” [?]. [TN100035]

“The clear explanation”: five and five concerns the tablets' edges, three by six, each holding five utterances, since six by six holds ten. On Moses' hands they rested upon their thickness. The first tanna speaks of the five on each tablet facing Moses for him to study. “The one who says ten”: the tablets' main surfaces, each six by six, holding ten, counted when he presented and opened them before all Israel. “Twenty”: counting both main surfaces, written on both faces, gives twenty per tablet. “Forty on each”: adds the four edges. The two main surfaces hold twenty; each of the four edges holds five, another twenty, totaling forty per tablet.

“Examine the verses”: Hananyah's proof is from Va-Ethannan after the Ten counted. The one who says forty adds the side surfaces, four for each tablet, each with five utterances as stated. Examine the verses brought as proofs and you will find their words correct.

Rema of Fano - continued

We prefer to say that the verse “God spoke” is not included in that measure, but belongs to the Torah's fine details and letters mentioned in chapter 16. Yet we are guilty: after sinning with the calf, the first tablets were broken, the second concealed, and we required a Torah scroll. Its letters were gathered from the impressions of the letters that flew away when the first tablets broke. Know that the wording of the utterances differs greatly between first and second; undoubtedly their fine details and letters, mentioned in chapter 16, differ too.

To rectify the broken tablets, Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, had to hew a deposit of sapphire-like stone for the second tablets: the inanimate realm. To rectify vegetation he brought gallnuts for the Torah scroll and a reed for a pen. For animals he had to prepare a clean animal's hide, even from their carcasses or torn animals: fallen and broken, for those knowing their mystery. Corresponding to them it says, “He cast” and “he broke” (Exodus 32:19). The finest portion of the letters' impressions remaining in the fragments is the human portion, rectified by Moses through writing a Torah scroll. Of the flying letters themselves, some returned in God's writing engraved upon the tablets.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Utterances: “These words the LORD spoke… He wrote them upon two stone tablets and gave them to me.” God wrote the Ten Utterances on two tablets, five each, as given to me: on their edges. Hence “gave them to me.” The rabbis' ten per tablet comes from Va-Ethannan before the Ten Utterances: “He declared His covenant to you, which He commanded you to perform, the Ten Utterances, and wrote them upon two stone tablets.” They identify their proof from the verse's beginning, “He declared to you,” showing it is not the later “He wrote them upon two stone tablets,” which includes “gave them to me” and concerns their position in his arms. Rabbi Shimon derives his view from “written on both their faces”; Rabbi Simai from the verse's end, “on this side and that they were written,” meaning all four edges.

“We prefer to say”: “God spoke all these words, saying” was not written as part of the utterances upon the tablets. They began “I am the LORD your God.” “God spoke” was like the Torah's other verses, present among its fine details.

“Yet we are guilty”: above in chapter 16 the master said that, without the serpent's pollution, the whole Torah would have been written in the human heart. Though Israel's pollution ceased at Sinai, it remained in the world; alternatively, because they said “Speak with us, God,” and so forth, we required tablets. Without sinning with the calf, the tablets would always have remained on Moses' hands, and each accomplished student near him could contemplate Torah's fine details. See there. [TN100036] After extending the exposition into other matters —“taking, took, to a purchase” [?]—the master returns here: because of the calf we needed a Torah scroll. That sin broke the first tablets, and He knew the second would likewise be concealed on this account in Josiah's days. [TN100037] “Flew away”: as known from the sages' saying, while their impressions remained discernible.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

The breaking of the tablets resembles what is said concerning the suspected adulteress: “Let My Name, written in holiness, be erased upon the water to make peace between husband and wife.” This means completing judgment or magnifying the Good and Beneficent. Shalom, “peace,” with the large final mem has the numerical value of thirteen times seventy-two. Therefore Moses wrote thirteen books in a Torah of lovingkindness. We corrupted ourselves again in the elders' and prophets' days. Their rebukes were written as a sign to the rebellious, and their consolations for those awaiting them. After the Second Temple's destruction everything was permitted to be written because “It is time to act,” according to Rabbi Natan. Alas: “I write for him the many things of My Torah; they are reckoned a strange thing.”

Now that we have found so many pearls beneath the potsherd others lifted in questioning Rabbi Keruspedai's saying, let us return to contemplating the three books and their writing, to understand their outcome.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“To rectify”: Torah was the Holy One's artisan's tool for creating the world. When the tablets encompassing Torah with all its fine details and letters broke, the world and its course were undoubtedly damaged in its four ascending levels: inanimate, vegetable, living and speaking. Their upright nature had already been damaged by Adam's sin. What was rectified at Sinai through the pollution's cessation was reawakened for damage when the tablets broke. Therefore, to rectify again these seven things damaged by the breaking, Moses had to do what follows. [TN100038]

“Even carcasses and torn animals”: external powers had already prevailed over them, as in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 134. Nevertheless their youth has rectification when they are prepared for a Torah scroll's holiness, for which they are permitted, as in the Gemara. [TN100039] “Fallen”: fallen in the field and dead, the carcass. “Broken”: the torn animal, which a beast tore and broke. Some external powers belong to a level seen as “generations and cast down to earth” [?]; these are “the fallen ones were on earth,” producing carcass impurity. Others are in the mystery of the kings' deaths in Edom through the vessels' breaking, known from the Ari's received teaching; these produce torn animals. [TN100040]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Corresponding to them it says”: concerning the tablets, “He cast” and “he broke.” Israel's sin made the letters fly away, and the two groups of shells prevailed until the stones grew heavy on Moses' hands and he had to cast and break them. “Like what is said”: as the sages expound “He made the children of Israel drink,” to test them like a suspected adulteress. “Completing judgment”: upon them if they fail the test; or magnifying and completing with them “God's lovingkindness all day” if they withstand it. This is “peace”: testing them to make peace between Israel and their Father in heaven. The suspected adulteress passage has the same intention. “Peace” cannot be exact in every outcome, since if she was defiled and the water tests her, there is neither home nor peace.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Shalom with large mem”: the final-form mem of MNTsPKh, valued600, making shalom936, thirteen times72. These correspond to thirteen tribes, a book for each containing the Holy One's seventy-two eyes of wisdom, as above. [TN100041] “Because it is time to act for the LORD”: as in Gittin and Temurah. “According to Rabbi Natan”: at Berakhot's end he expounds, “They annulled Your Torah; it is time to act for the LORD.” “Alas, I write for him the many things of My Torah”: the sages in Gittin expound this of oral Torah: because it is time to act for the LORD, they annulled Your Torah; therefore “they are reckoned a strange thing.” “Now”: after completing the expositions arising from Rabbi Keruspedai's saying, begun in chapter 4, the master returns to that saying.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Which another depicted”: Ein Ya'aqov's illustration of the Jerusalem Talmud; see there. Even a boy could write that illustration. The explanation is instead this: five refers to the tablets resting one upon the other, their thickness raised toward Moses' face. Each was three handbreadths thick, with five utterances written on that thickness: five on this edge, five on the second. Ten on each counts them opened before him, each six-wide face toward him, with ten utterances, likewise on the other. Twenty includes the opposite face: written on both faces, ten on each side, totaling twenty per tablet. Forty adds the edges: five on each, with four edges—east, west, north and south—giving twenty; the other twenty on the two broad faces make forty. This is clear.

“Falling and breaking”: mystically, vessels break when light exceeds their capacity. Nevertheless an impression remains in the vessel, like a broken oil vessel retaining drops. A carcass or torn animal is thus breaking in a carcass or the like, and a fallen animal falling from a roof or the like. Corresponding to falling it says Moses “cast”; corresponding to the broken, “he broke them.” [TN100042] Of the impression remaining in the fragments, the good and finest is the human portion rectified, the living speaker. The sapphire deposit already rectified the inanimate; gallnuts and reed, vegetation; hides for the scroll, animals; and the stated impression, the speaking human.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

LHA [?]: when the vessels mentioned in the teachings of Emanation broke, the light departed upward and was concealed in Binah. From “the broken of the fine” [?] the three heads' rectification was made; the remaining light returned below and made the rectification of the Lesser Countenance and its female, together with the six extremities. [TN100043] The light's impression remained in the vessels: as when oil is poured out of a vessel, some must remain adhering. From the finest impression too came rectification of the Lesser Countenance and its female with the six extremities. The remainder of the breaking's impression entered the shells—inanimate, vegetable, living and speaking. This is breaking's mystery.

There is also a mystery of falling that occurred earlier. Those sparks descended farther, to Action's remotest parts: “The fallen ones were on earth.” The tablets' event was exactly like this: their falling from him was falling and breaking, and the impression remaining in the first tablets parallels the vessels' impression. The second tablets were made from the finest of the fine. One may ask why the inanimate was rectified in the tablets while the other elements were rectified in the Torah scroll itself. He did not wish to reveal the reason, for it is a deep mystery—who can find it? [TN100044]

“Like the suspected adulteress”: here too, “Let My Name written in holiness upon the tablets be erased and broken to make peace between Israel and their Father in heaven.” Better that she be judged unmarried than as a married woman, since the tablets were the betrothal, as explained in the midrash. “Peace with large mem”: the final-form mem of MNTsPKh is600, according to HYQ, BKR, as mentioned many times above. [TN100045] “We corrupted ourselves again”: as in the saying that had Israel not sinned, only the Torah's five books and Joshua would have been given them. “They were reckoned strange”: since they sinned as strangers and transgressed, the many parts of His Torah needed to be written.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 20

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 21 (כא)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Some commentators, including eminent ones”: Nahmanides in Torat Ha-Adam, at the opening of the Gate of Recompense. They sought to explain the apparent difficulty in Rabbi Keruspedai's saying: we visibly see the wicked living long lives, while some completely righteous people's days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle. They hold that Rabbi Keruspedai means those found righteous or wicked in that particular Rosh Hashanah's judgment, even if previously the opposite. A completely wicked person emerging righteous in his judgment according to that year's deeds is called completely righteous in Rabbi Keruspedai's saying. Conversely, a completely righteous person condemned in the last year in which he dies is reckoned wicked.

“Some carried it far”: saying even a slight transgression can make a person wicked in his judgment, even if he is greatest among the prophets. This is Nahmanides' view. “One must beware”: of considering their words

Rema of Fano

Some commentators, including eminent ones, say that even someone who is completely righteous because of the abundance of his meritorious good deeds may nevertheless be reckoned wicked in his judgment on the Rosh Hashanah preceding his death. Some have carried their rhetoric far—dominion and dread. [TN100046] One must beware of their words. We do not believe that the perfected, of whom it is written, “I shall fulfill the number of your days,” have their death attributed to Rosh Hashanah's judgment. Even Adam and Abraham, whose numbered days include “which he lived,” teaching that they did not complete the years allotted to them, as below, Part IV chapter 3, were undoubtedly written in their final year only in the book of the righteous. Nor can inscription for death on account of a slight transgression be conceived according to the plain meaning of Rabbi Keruspedai's saying.

We will not incline our heart toward Rabbi Yitzhaq Arama and many other proponents of novel opinions. Their statements on this subject neither help faith nor rescue us from doubts. Would that they did not multiply the earlier perplexities many times! Rather, Tosafot's approach is clear, and their interpretation naturally gives the teaching ample room. We have true. “Of whom it is written, ‘The number’”: the sages expound that the Holy One sits and completes the righteous people's years from day to day, and so forth. “Their numbered days say ‘which he lived’”: Adam's verse says “All Adam's days which he lived”; Abraham's, “These are the days of Abraham's years of life which he lived.” This is superfluous except to teach that they had further years to live had they not incurred liability, and so forth. “For a slight transgression”: as those commentators thought. “According to the plain saying”: it concerns the completely wicked. “Rabbi Yitzhaq Arama”: author of the Aqedah, Gate 67.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Tosafot's approach”: there in Rosh Hashanah: “Sometimes the righteous are sealed for death and the wicked for life, as ‘He repays His enemies,’ and so forth. Here death is said concerning the wicked and life concerning the righteous, meaning life in the world to come.” End of quotation. “The Tosafists say”: they do not mean that no worldly matters are judged above on Rosh

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Hashanah. Rather, “written for life or death” in the baraita concerns the world to come. The judgment extended over the righteous concerning this world is called inscription for life, life in the world to come. Likewise, what is decreed for the wicked concerning worldly life belongs to inscription for death: “He repays His enemies.” Thus one cannot object from the Mishnah's plain meaning, which concerns worldly judgments: they acknowledge that too.

“Concerning the teaching”: there, folio 39b, the Gemara challenges the Mishnah, “Whoever performs one commandment is treated well,” from the baraita, “Whoever has more merits than transgressions is treated badly,” and so forth. Abaye answers that the Mishnah concerns preparing a good day and a bad day for him. Rava assigns it to Rabbi Ya'aqov, who says there is no reward for a commandment in this world. Rashi explains: treating him badly in this world cleanses his transgressions so he receives full reward; treating him well pays his commandments' reward during his life in order to drive him away.

“They prepare a good day”: for one who performs an considerable, lofty support for their view in aggadic books, but brevity is fitting. Everything observed against them and every difficulty raised with their words, without our extending the discussion by copying it, will be properly resolved within our explanation.

Rema of Fano - continued

The Tosafists say that whatever the court above decrees for the righteous on Rosh Hashanah concerning this world's judgments, even afflictions or death, is called life in the soul's judgment. Rashi holds this too, as shown by his explanation in Qiddushin chapter 1 of “Whoever has more merits than transgressions is treated badly,” and so forth; see there. Tosafot's objections there concern only the dispute between amoraim. As to the truth of the matter they agree: this is the measure, as we mentioned.

It is also possible that on Rosh Hashanah a person is simply written among the righteous, which we call inscription for life. This subsequently causes his deeds to be scrutinized during the year to a hair's breadth. This indeed seems reasonable: the Holy One examines the ledgers of those destined to merit the world to come, and for some, “God brings every hidden thing into judgment”; “reproofs of discipline are the way of life.” It is readily understood as belonging to the saying, “The dead inherit the living.” We have heard this concerning the Land's division and found it concerning inheritance of the world to come, as just stated, and Torah, of which it is written, “An inheritance of Jacob's congregation.” As the rabbis say, extra commandment and has a majority of merits, they prepare in this world a good day by exacting his transgressions from him. This prepares a good day for him in the world to come. “Whoever has more transgressions,” of whom it says “they treat him badly”: they prepare a bad day by paying his commandment's reward here, preparing a bad day for him. End of quotation. Thus he interprets good and bad days as days of the world to come.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Tosafot object that this requires even Abaye to assign Mishnah and baraita to Rabbi Ya'aqov. They therefore explain the Mishnah's good and bad days as both in this world. The baraita's “they treat him well” explains the Mishnah: sometimes they make him a good day to receive his commandment's reward here, but most of the righteous person's days are spent in goodness. Likewise, “they treat him badly” for the wicked: sometimes they make him a bad day to cleanse his transgressions here, but most of his days are spent in adversity. This differs from Rabbi Ya'aqov. [TN100047] Thus Tosafot and Rashi agree in the underlying matter, disputing only the passage's plain interpretation so that, according to Abaye,

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Mishnah and baraita do not follow Rabbi Ya'aqov.

“It is also possible”: according to Tosafot, Rabbi Keruspedai's inscription for life or death concerns the world to come, while this world's judgment follows naturally. Someone written among the righteous on Rosh Hashanah has his deeds

Rema of Fano - continued

Torah's words endure only in one who makes himself as dead for them.

These are the three good gifts the Holy One gave Israel, all through afflictions, for their attainment is not perfected in this life, since we are dust. In all three, afflictions come to one whose majority is merits, destined to merit them, cleansing his few transgressions to make him like the ministering angels.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

examined during the year, since the Holy One scrutinizes the righteous, as is known. This causes his death within that year. “Those”: the righteous. “Brings into judgment”: during that year. “This belongs to”: the righteous die to inherit life in the world to come. “The Land's division”: the dead inherited the living, as explained below in chapter 19. [TN100048] “Three good gifts”: the sages say the Holy One gave Israel Torah, the Land of Israel and the world to come through afflictions. Their attainment is not perfected in this world; through afflictions a person attains their perfection in the world to come.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Dominion and dread”: because the Holy One scrutinizes the righteous to a hair's breadth, he is called wicked in his judgment on the Rosh Hashanah before his death. “One must beware of their words”: not interpret as they do. “They did not complete the years”: “which he lived” implies that he still had further life to live. We do not believe that their death should be attributed to Rosh Hashanah's judgment for death like the wicked; they were written in the book of the righteous.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Nor can it be conceived”: the second interpretation, the rhetorician's exaggerated claim that the Holy One scrutinizes, as above. This too is impossible on account of a slight transgression. “Tosafot's objection”: it was not written whether for life or death, only that he is righteous. “The dead inherit the living”: the righteous who undergo death and afflictions afterward inherit the world to come.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 21

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 22 (כב)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Whoever performs”: Rashi explains “is treated well” as implying this world, “inherits the Land” as life in the world to come. “We understand”: unlike Rashi, it means meriting Torah, the world to come and the Land of Israel. “Treated well” corresponds to Torah, for

Rema of Fano

“Whoever performs one commandment is treated well, his days are prolonged, and he inherits the Land.” This is a Mishnah at the end of Qiddushin chapter 1. We understand it to mean that he merits the three gifts mentioned in the preceding chapter: Torah, called “good teaching”; the world to come, wholly long; and the Land of Israel in its plain

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

there is no good but Torah: “I have given you good teaching,” as the sages say in Avot. “His days are prolonged” corresponds to the world wholly long; “inherits the Land” means the Land of Israel literally.

“The conclusion”: the Gemara objects from

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"These are the things whose fruits a person eats in this world while the principal remains for the world to come: honoring father and mother, acts of lovingkindness, making peace between people, and Torah study equal to them all." Rav Yehudah answers that the Mishnah means one commandment additional to his merits: he is treated well and resembles one fulfilling the whole Torah. Rashi explains the objection: these specifically yield fruits and retain principal, not another commandment, whereas our Mishnah says he is treated well and inherits the Land. For the master, who reads this of Torah and the literal Land, the objection must concern "his days are prolonged."

"It says simply": why not explicitly say "one commandment additional to his merits"? To teach that it depends not on quantity and number of commandments and transgressions, but their quality and greatness in the blessed LORD's eyes. Sometimes one commandment counts against many transgressions, and conversely, as Maimonides writes in Repentance chapter 3, quoted above, Part I chapter 8; see there. One commandment may therefore outweigh many transgressions. "One sense. The conclusion is that it means one commandment additional to his merits. It says simply "one commandment" to teach that a single commandment alone, according to its perfection in fulfilling its conditions, boundaries and the needs of its time, may outweigh many transgressions on the scales of the God of knowledge mentioned by Maimonides in the Laws of Repentance. This applies both to fulfilling a positive commandment and to avoiding an opportunity for transgression that comes to one's hand: escaping it is reckoned as performing a commandment. The well-known proof is Joseph the righteous.

Rema of Fano - continued

The conclusion there is that an additional commandment is required only for minor commandments unable to outweigh sins except by numerical majority. Otherwise he is merely intermediate. But if his commandments include one of those whose fruits a person eats in this world while the principal remains for the world to come, then even with the scales evenly balanced it certainly inclines toward merit. He is no longer intermediate but completely righteous. Sending away the mother bird is likewise, though one cannot say the tanna merely listed some and omitted others, since he said "These are the things." It produces no fruits because it is between the person and the Omnipresent: "If you are righteous, what do you give Him?"

Conversely, desecrating the Name inclines toward guilt even with evenly balanced scales. We also say there that commandment" teaches that it may count so greatly as to exceed the merits needed for an equal balance, tip the scale, and bring the stated good.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"According to its perfection": a commandment's greatness depends on fulfilling all conditions required for perfection and on the needs of the time. Sometimes the time makes its performance greater than at another time. "Both fulfilling a positive commandment": there the Gemara asks: the Mishnah says whoever performs one commandment is treated well—if he performs, yes; if not, no? Yet we learned that one who sits without transgressing receives reward like one performing a commandment. The answer is that an opportunity for transgression came to him and he escaped it. "The proof from Joseph": Rashi writes this in Ellu Hen Ha-Loqin.

"The conclusion there": after Rav Yehudah explains one commandment additional to merits, the Gemara asks whether one of the listed commandments suffices even alone. Rav Shemayah replies: if the scale is balanced, it tips it. Rashi explains the question: even if he fulfilled no other commandments? Yet he has a majority of transgressions! The answer concerns half transgressions and half merits, one of those merits being among the listed commandments. It tips the scale as though merits were the majority, without the Mishnah's additional commandment. Without one of these, an additional commandment is needed.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Tosafot ask: even otherwise, Rosh Hashanah says abundant lovingkindness inclines toward kindness when balanced. They answer: with other commandments balanced acts leave him intermediate, but these make him completely righteous. These are precisely the master's words here. I further think his explanation—that one commandment may outweigh many transgressions—also applies to "if balanced, it tips it." With those commandments yielding fruits, if he performed according to the commandment's greatness and quality so that it was balanced on the scales of the God of knowledge, its greatness nevertheless tips the scale [?]. [TN100049] Other commandments require a majority: if on those scales either few or many commandments balance the transgressions, another commandment is needed.

Rema of Fano - continued

one righteous toward Heaven and good to other people has principal and fruits in all his merits. The opposite is different: even for one wicked toward Heaven and bad to others, only a transgression producing fruits, such as desecrating the Name, has fruits. This resolves the difficulty concerning Jerusalem, "She received double for all her sins," according to the commentators' approach. Desecration of the Name causes this: "They said of them, These are the LORD's people, yet they have left His land." A transgression producing no fruits has no fruits.

Further, the Holy One joins a good thought to action. Even if prevented and unable to perform the intended commandment, a person is credited as though he thought and performed it. If he merits fulfilling it, he afterward receives reward for the act itself and for his intention at that moment. This makes "The children of Israel did… so they did" fully precise in the manner explained in chapter 13. An evil thought differs: if it produces fruits, meaning action is present, that thought alone joins the action, and he is punished for thought and deed. Without action, he is punished for the thought alone.

When someone commits a transgression and repeats it, however, its having become permitted to him causes his subsequent thought about it to join action. An idolatrous thought does so even the first time. This decisively explains our first father's punishment for his first sin, even according to the familiar principle: the warning against

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Do not object to the master's interpretation of that answer: how does it distinguish the fruit-producing commandments from others, if other commandments too may count one against many sins and tip the scale [?]? Rather, as we said, these fruit-producing commandments tip the scale even after their greatness has already been reckoned to bring it into balance. This must be their nature and special property. Whether Maimonides too intended this in what he wrote is beyond my searching [?]. [TN100050]

"Sending away the mother bird": Rava challenged Rav Nahman: the listed fruit-producing commandments are taught, but sending away the mother bird also says, "That it may be good for you and your days prolonged." Let it too be listed. "He taught some and left others out." Rava said Rav Idi explained it: "Say of the righteous that he is good, for they shall eat the fruit of their deeds." Is there a righteous person who is not good? Good toward Heaven and others is a good righteous person; good toward Heaven but bad to others is a righteous person who is not good. Likewise, "Woe to the wicked who is bad, for the recompense of his hands shall be done to him.” Are some wicked people not bad? Bad toward Heaven and others is the bad wicked person; bad toward Heaven but not toward others is the wicked person who is not bad.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Merit has principal and fruits,” from “Say of the righteous that he is good.” “Transgression has principal but no fruits,” from “Woe to the wicked who is bad.” Then how is “They shall eat the fruit of their way and be sated with their counsels” fulfilled? A transgression producing fruits has fruits; one producing none has none.

Rashi explains Rav Idi's teaching: the listed commandments are alike in benefiting others; one performing them is good toward Heaven and people. Of him it says he eats his deeds' fruits during his life. Sending away the mother bird is good toward Heaven but provides no benefit to people; “eating his deeds' fruits” is not said of it, so it is not listed. “Bad toward Heaven and others”: murderer, robber or thief. “Bad toward Heaven but not others”: one engaging in forbidden sexual relations, despising festivals or eating prohibited fat. “No fruits”: he is not punished beyond his wickedness. “A transgression producing eating from the tree of knowledge involves an element of idolatry, as explicitly stated in aggadah in many places. Moreover, the serpent misled them concerning themselves by saying, “You shall be like gods,” as we shall mention in Part III chapter 17.

Rema of Fano - continued

It is not difficult to believe that the serpent spoke with the woman in their language and lost that power through the curse “cursed above every animal.” Its fall corresponded to its greatness. It was originally endowed with speech so it could go on Adam's missions to distant ends of land and sea and report to its sender. Now all animals have some communication in their voice, such as birds' chirping and the ox's lowing, through which sages understand what they are permitted; the serpent has none. Alternatively, it too spoke with Eve by winks and signs, now abolished from it. Both approaches have support in the midrash.

Tosafot conclude that for one outside the covenant an evil thought joins action in every case, from Esau's “Because of violence against your brother Jacob.” Although they say there that an estranged son differs, concerning Esau's inheritance, “I gave Mount Seir to Esau,” meaning this is no proof that a gentile inherits his father, that was not the conclusion but an expansive argument. Even if we say so, it is derived from Lot's children: “I gave Ar as an inheritance.” Nevertheless the verse's plain meaning accords with Tosafot. A good thought among a foreign people does not join action: of Darius it does not say that he fruits”: wrongdoing by an important person, whom others learn to imitate. End of quotation.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It produces no fruits”: other people do not benefit from it. “If you are righteous”: Job 35. “Conversely, desecrating the Name”: they learned there, “They do not extend credit concerning desecration of the Name.” What does this mean? Among the explanations: when the scale is balanced, it tips it. “All his merits”: “merit has principal and fruits” concerns a good righteous person, as explained from Scripture. “The opposite”: a bad wicked person's transgressions yield no fruits unless the transgression produces them, as derived from “Woe to the wicked who is bad” and “They eat the fruit of their way.”

“This resolves”: Jerusalem received more than her wickedness merited: “Comfort… speak to Jerusalem's heart… she received from the LORD's hand double for all her sins” (Isaiah 40). It involved desecration of the Name: “They came among the nations… profaning My holy Name, when they said of them, These are the LORD's people” (Ezekiel 36). “According to the commentators”: who interpret this as receiving doubled punishment. See

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rashi on the verses: “the difference of the two, proper in them, to take two for one… before…” [?]. [TN100051] saved Daniel, only that “he was striving to save him” (Daniel 6:15), although Daniel received a small measure of rescue through him until sunset.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Further, He joins good thought to action”: “Then those who fear the LORD spoke, each to his fellow…

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

a book of remembrance was written before Him for those fearing the LORD and thinking upon His Name.” Rav Assi explains the last phrase: even if someone intended a commandment but was prevented from performing it, Scripture credits him as though he performed it. The Holy One does not join evil thought to action: “If I saw iniquity in my heart, the LORD would not hear.” How then is “I bring evil upon this people, the fruit of their thoughts” fulfilled? He joins thought producing action to action, but not thought without action.

Then what of “to seize the house of Israel in their heart”? Rav Aha bar Ya'aqov says it concerns idolatry, which is severe: whoever denies it is as though acknowledging the entire Torah. Ulla answers according to Rav Huna: once someone transgresses and repeats, it becomes permitted to him. Permitted—could that be? Rather, it becomes as though permitted. Rashi explains that fruit-producing thought means carrying out one's intention; it joins action, and payment is exacted for the thought too. Ulla says “the fruit of their thoughts” concerns repeating a transgression: later thoughts of it join action even without performance, because refraining is not for Heaven's sake but because he did not need it, as Rav Huna says it became as though permitted.

“As though he thought and performed”: thought joins the commandment, so performing it gives two commandments, for thought and action. If prevented, the thought is reckoned for both. “If he merits fulfilling it afterward”: thought's reward and action's reward are reckoned again a second time. This confirms the repeated Torah wording, “The children of Israel did according to all the LORD commanded Moses; so they did.” From what we learned, thinking to do, even without carrying it into action, is the first “they did”: Scripture awards reward as though performed. “So they did” concerns actual performance, as above at chapter 13's end; see there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Without action”: for whatever reason, even constraint, he is punished only for evil thought, not as for action, unlike good thought. The favorable measure is greater, as is known. Nevertheless he is punished for thought itself. For this reason the master holds Rav Aha bar Ya'aqov's and Ulla's statements “in their differing method” [?]. [TN100052] “Causes subsequently”: from the second repetition onward, thought joins action, bringing punishment for both even without doing the act. “Even the first time”: before any repetition, according to Rav Aha bar Ya'aqov.

“A decisive explanation”: just as idolatry differs concerning thought, which joins action immediately without repetition, so it differs concerning a person's first sins. The familiar teaching at Yoma's end forgives a first and second offense. Where an element of idolatry exists, however, it is not forgiven. Therefore the blessed LORD judged Adam even for his first sin, as also above, Part I chapter 4. The warning against the tree of knowledge concerned an element of idolatry: lest he make himself a god over other living creatures.

“As explicitly stated in aggadah”: the Zohar, Be-Har, page 271, says at length that Adam transgressed “The LORD your God commanded,” interpreting “commanded” as idolatry. The matter follows the sages' statement in Bereshit Rabbah [?]: “The man has become like one of us,” like the Unique One of the world; as Rashi on the Torah says, lest he mislead creatures. “This is what they said concerning the blinded one in judgment, and under… there was judgment” [?]. [TN100053] Accordingly, the sages fittingly expound “I said, You are gods; yet like Adam you shall die”: like Adam who committed a transgression involving idolatry. After Israel worshipped the calf, “Like Adam you shall die.”

“Moreover”: even if the warning did not intend idolatry, Adam thought it did, since the serpent misled him with “You shall be like gods.” See below,

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

chapter 14: “he raised HK… when they said, we desired the Holy One who created them” [?]. The serpent said, “Every craftsman hates his fellow craftsmen, for He ate from this tree and created the world,” and so forth. Whoever attributes this to his fellow also worships [?]. Hence one does not plead on an enticer's behalf, learned from the primordial serpent, since its guilt involved idolatry. [TN100054]

“It is not difficult”: incidentally the master explains the serpent after mentioning it. Taking the words literally is not difficult, as Ibn Ezra holds. “Its fall corresponded to its greatness”: Bereshit Rabbah chapter 19 teaches in Rabbi Meir's name: as great as the serpent had been, so was its fall—cunning above all, cursed above all. The master explains that it originally had speech, removed through the curse. The next connection, “when they erred… above all” [?], leads to Nahmanides' objection: the serpent now has no speaking soul; had it originally possessed one, its loss would have been mentioned as a penalty. Its curse did indeed distinguish it above them all. [TN100055]

“So it could go”: as said of it in Arba Mitot, “Alas for a great servant,” and so forth. Its greatness is recognizable in all matters: Adam would have sent it with a pack in his hand, and it would have gone, and so forth [?]. [TN100056] “SM” [?]: this is the view of the “some say” in Ibn Ezra there. [TN100057] “Support in the midrash”: there, section 24, on “A man of tongue shall not be established on earth”: the man of tongue is the serpent, which spoke maliciously about its Creator. Further, on “A man of perversities spreads strife”: the serpent, which distorted words about its Creator. The master explains that “tongue” implies speech. “Therefore they objected: today, tongue; and the person set a limit” [?]. According to the view that it spoke through winks and signs, “a man of perversities” describes twisting statements about its Creator through signs. [TN100058]

“Tosafot conclude”: returning to the original subject. Their words there are: “The Holy One does not join evil thought to action. Among gentiles He does, as ‘Because of violence against your brother Jacob, shame shall cover you and you shall be cut off forever.’ Do we find Esau doing any evil to Jacob? Rather, the Holy One joins his evil thought against him to action. He does not join a gentile's good thought to action: Daniel says, ‘Until sunset he strove to save him.’ Darius did all he could to save Daniel from the lions' den. The verse indicates striving until evening. Had his thought been reckoned rescue, rather than seeking to rescue —‘Mordecai in his thought’ [?]—it would have written ‘he saved him.’” [TN100059]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Although the sages say”: also in Qiddushin, of Esau, an estranged son differs. There, folio 18, Rabbi Yohanan says a gentile inherits his father by Torah law: “I gave Mount Seir to Esau as an inheritance.” Perhaps an apostate Israelite differs? Rather, derive it from “I gave Ar to Lot's children as an inheritance.” Tosafot's words raise a difficulty: how can one distinguish Esau as an apostate Israelite, when a gentile's evil thought joins action but an Israelite's does not? Esau is evidently no different from other gentiles. In Tosafot's view, “perhaps an apostate Israelite differs” is not a final distinction, only an expansive argument: even if this troubles you, gentile inheritance is derived from Lot's children. “Nevertheless the verse's plain meaning”: “I gave an inheritance to Esau” agrees with Tosafot, without distinguishing him as an apostate Israelite. “A good thought”: concludes Tosafot's words, as quoted.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Sending away the mother bird likewise”: it too tips the scale, although not listed among the things whose fruits a person eats. One cannot say the tanna taught some and omitted others, since he says “These.” Nevertheless it tips the scale but produces no fruits, because it is only between the person and the Omnipresent.

“As though he thought and performed”: he receives reward for the act a second time. An evil thought differs: if he thought and acted, they join and he is punished for thought and action. Without action he is punished only for thought, not for action as though he had done it. “You shall be like gods”: this implies he misled him into idolatry, becoming other gods. “An estranged son differs”: an apostate whose acts became alien to his Father in heaven differs from a wholly foreign person. “Meaning there is no proof from there”: nevertheless this was not said as the conclusion. “Although some rescue occurred”: even so it says he strove, not that he saved him.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 22

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 23 (כג)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“As is known”: as in Shabbat 29 [?], where Isaac says to the Holy One concerning Israel: How much have they sinned? How many are a person's years? Seventy. Deduct twenty, for which You do not punish, and so forth. Rashi explains: thus we find in the generation of the wilderness; see there. [TN100060]

“A reminder”: it is written of Ishmael in Va-Yera, “An angel of God called to Hagar from heaven and said, What is the matter, Hagar? Do not fear, for God has heard the boy's voice where he is.” “Where he is” requires examination: why is it needed in the plain meaning? Rashi explains: according to his present deeds. As in Bereshit Rabbah, the ministering angels rushed to accuse him: Master of the worlds, will You raise a well for someone destined to kill Your children by thirst? He said: What is he now, righteous or wicked? They replied: righteous. He said: I judge a person only at his time.

Re'em and Yefeh To'ar already objected from the sages' exposition of “She

Rema of Fano

The heavenly court does not punish someone under twenty years old, as is known. A reminder of this is “God has heard the boy's voice where he is.” The allusion concerns “God” and “heaven” mentioned there. For in the earthly court, where “God stands in the congregation of God,” it had already been said, “Whatever Sarah tells you, listen to her voice.” Since kinship does not disqualify a judge regarding a maidservant's son, Abraham's court sentenced him to expulsion for three grave transgressions, which the sages expounded from “playing” (Genesis 21:9). Although Abraham first freed Hagar, according to Jonathan ben Uzziel, before the giving of the Torah freeing slaves was effective only in making them resident aliens. Furthermore, she and he returned to the idols of her father's house. Yet she bound her opening and belonged to no man until Abraham took her a second time. From then onward her deeds were beautiful as incense.

The ministering angels also sought to judge Ishmael on account of his end. The righteous Judge told them that even a stubborn and rebellious son is judged thus only according to his deeds at that time: he is now a glutton and drunkard, and will ultimately rob people. What is done to him is for his benefit: let him die innocent rather than guilty. But if he has saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, whom she had borne to Abraham, playing”: “playing” means illicit sexual relations, idolatry and bloodshed. Ishmael therefore was not righteous then! They strained to establish this exposition according to Rabbi Aqiva, who interpreted “playing” favorably. The master prefers to establish it according to all opinions. He was considered righteous because he was not yet twenty. He was seventeen then, as in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer, and also Bereshit Rabbah according to the Yalqut's reading, as Yefeh To'ar writes. The master says this too is hinted in “where he is”: “he” connects with “God,” and “there” refers to heaven. Its meaning is: God heard the boy's voice and did not punish him for his end, because He is God there in heaven, in the heavenly court, where the boy is now considered righteous.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For in”: Scripture needed this hint because the Holy One had already agreed to sentence Ishmael to expulsion for “playing”: “She said to Abraham,

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Expel this maidservant and her son… God said to Abraham… Whatever Sarah tells you, listen to her voice." The judgments would appear, Heaven forbid, contradictory. To explain their reason, Scripture says "there": this judgment follows His being there in the heavenly court, whereas agreement to expulsion followed the law of the earthly court, Abraham's court. He is with earthly judges: "God stands in the congregation of God." He agrees with them even when judging those under twenty.

"Since": certainly Ishmael's dismissal was effected by a full judgment in Abraham's court, which, according to the divine utterance, agreed to Sarah's request because of "playing" in the three transgressions: idolatry, illicit relations and bloodshed. Abraham himself was qualified to judge, since kinship does not disqualify regarding a maidservant's son. Yevamot chapter 2 says: whoever has a son of any kind, and so forth, except one born of a slave woman or gentile woman. Admittedly, Alfasi's opinion in Yevamot chapter 4 differs concerning one's own slave woman. The master follows Maimonides, Laws of Slaves chapter 9, who makes no distinction; see there.

Rema of Fano - continued

no guilt in the very deed he will later commit, he is not punished even through inaction, such as withholding a well from him, although later he will stumble through active conduct, killing exiles like himself by thirst, who are children of the Omnipresent. Moreover, Ishmael differs: although the beginnings of corruption were present then, as we recalled in the exposition of "playing," he himself would not ultimately kill by thirst; his children would commit the sin. A stubborn and rebellious son is judged only for his own corruption, beginning and end.

Death for those under thirteen, however, comes only through their parents' sin. From thirteen to twenty, death by the heavenly court is always for good. If his merits predominate and he is close to becoming wicked, he is removed from the world to receive reward for commandments and to be renewed according to his merit, as will be explained in chapter 28. They did not say that the heavenly court does not put to death at that age, only that it does not punish. Such death is not by way of punishment, as stated. This too substantially supports Tosafot's opinion mentioned above. If his sins predominate and he dies, this comes under judgment accompanied by righteousness. Sometimes this happens even to someone over twenty: he is swept away without the judgment of his place and time, but in view of his end, to diminish wrongdoing and hasten his atonement. It is true judgment according to his wickedness. The stubborn and rebellious son in the earthly court is its

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Although Abraham first freed Hagar": before having relations with her, according to Jonathan ben Uzziel on "Sarai, Abram's wife." He would therefore have been unqualified to judge. "Furthermore": this freeing lacked substance because she and Ishmael returned, after it and before their expulsion, to her father's household idols, as the sages say in Bereshit Rabbah on "She went and wandered."

"Yet she bound her opening": also in Bereshit Rabbah, on "Abraham again took a wife, whose name was Qeturah": this is Hagar. Rabbi Berekhiah says: although you say "She went and wandered in the wilderness," would you say any person was suspected of relations with her? Scripture says "Her name was Qeturah," from a binding like this, which is sealed, and so forth. Yefeh To'ar similarly explains: although she turned her back, as the sages expound "She went and wandered" to mean returning to her father's household idols, she nevertheless did not break the boundary against promiscuity.

"From then onward": the reason given there in the midrash—that Qeturah was perfumed with commandments and good deeds, quoted by Rashi—does not disagree with the exposition of “She went and wandered.” Rather, her name was favorably changed when Abraham took her again, for then her deeds were beautiful as incense.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

counterpart, as we said.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The ministering angels”: incidentally the master explains the commentators' difficulty with the blessed LORD's answer to the angels: what of a stubborn and rebellious son, judged for his end, as in Sanhedrin? The master holds there is no objection, since that son has already begun accustoming himself to things drawing him toward the sin he will finally commit. Re'em writes likewise. “In that deed”: although he has other sins, as Ishmael did. “Even through inaction”: active punishment for a future sin is obviously unreasonable. See Yefeh To'ar. “Killing by thirst”: Israel when going into exile, when Ishmael's descendants brought them salted foods and inflated waterskins, as in the midrash. “Beginnings of corruption”: the sins of idolatry, illicit relations and bloodshed. “He himself would not ultimately”: Ishmael himself would not kill Israel by thirst; his descendants would commit that sin. Yefeh To'ar answers likewise.

“However”: returning above. Since the heavenly court does not punish anyone under twenty, an explanation is certainly required for the death we see heaven's judgment inflict below that age. The master says death for these comes only through their parents' sin. “From thirteen”: as in the Zohar, Va-Yera, page 291: Rabbi Elazar said, If so, whence is someone who departs the world before twenty punished? Before thirteen he is not liable to punishment, except for his father's sins; but above thirteen, what is the rule? He answered: the Holy One has compassion on him, so that he may die innocent, receive good reward in that world, and not die guilty and be punished there. We have explained this. He asked: if he is guilty and not yet twenty, what then? Once he departs, wherein is his punishment? He replied: then will be fulfilled..., and so forth; see there.

“And all the language, to say in what” [?]: this is the subject of the verses “Visiting the fathers' iniquity upon the children” and “Each man shall die for his sin.” [TN100061] The former concerns children under thirteen, not yet obligated in commandments.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Each man shall die for his sin” concerns those who have reached thirteen but not twenty. This is not punishment: he is benefited thereby. If merits predominate and he is close to wickedness, he is removed while still righteous because of the future sin, so that “shall die for his sin” appropriately applies. If sins predominate, he is nevertheless benefited before adding more sins.

“To be renewed”: through reincarnation. “This too supports”: decisive evidence for Tosafot's opinion mentioned in chapter 21, explaining “written and sealed” as referring to the world to come. Those under twenty are not inscribed for death in this world by way of punishment, yet they die. It must therefore mean written and sealed for the world to come; those under twenty also enter that judgment. “Judgment accompanied by righteousness”: judgment for sins and righteousness in preventing him from adding transgression to his sin. “Its counterpart”: the reason for his judgment is “Let him die innocent rather than guilty,” as we said.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“A reminder... God and heaven”: the verse in Va-Yera says, “An angel of God called to Hagar from heaven.” “Where he is” refers to “God” and “heaven”: up there he is not yet liable to punishment until twenty, and therefore He heard his voice. Down on earth he is liable once thirteen; therefore, “Whatever she tells you,” and so forth, came. The expression “where he is,” in the mystery of AḤH, “for a dwelling for Him,” after the manner of a grave and burial beneath the throne of glory—this is “where he is there,” where the angel of death has no permission to enter [?]. [TN100062]

“Since kinship does not”: although Abraham was related to Ishmael, he nevertheless sentenced him to expulsion, since kinship does not disqualify in the case of slaves, and so forth. “From then onward”: before Abraham took her back she was called Qeturah because she bound her opening; her deeds were not beautiful, for she returned to her father's household idols. When Abraham took her back, however, she was called Qeturah because her deeds were beautiful as incense.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“From thirteen to twenty”: nevertheless he sometimes dies, “because of punishment, but for his benefit” [?], when close to becoming wicked, to give him reward for commandments and to renew him —that is, to reincarnate him again in some body. [TN100063]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 23

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 24 (כד)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“On the New Year”: according to Rabbi Eliezer, the world was created on the twenty-fifth of Elul. The sixth day, when Adam was created, was the first New Year. “For the first sin”: he sinned that very day. “He informed him”: through this word, the first of Tishri, with the rest hinted by the remaining letters of ayyekah. “After it, on the tenth”: hinted by yod; this is the Day of Atonement and judgment's conclusion.

“From the day's sanctity”: from New Year to the closing of the gates on the Day of Atonement are about 243 hours, including the two additions from ordinary time to sacred. For nine days are 240 hours [?], with an hour added at New Year's beginning and an hour at the Day of Atonement's end at the closing of the gates, making 242. The hour of closing, the 243rd, is the conclusion of

Rema of Fano

When the Holy One came to judge Adam on the first New Year for the first sin, He entered into conversation appropriate to the occasion and said, “Where are you?”—ayyekah. He informed him that that day was the first of Tishri, the beginning of a person's judgment every year. After it, on the tenth of the month, comes the conclusion of judgment, at the end of the closing of heaven's gates. From the day's sanctity at the year's beginning, for one who adds from the ordinary to the sacred, until that time there are some 243 hours. After the twentieth of Tishri comes the sealing of judgment, on Hosha'na Rabbah's night, during the moon's dominion, as is known. In that first year Hosha'na Rabbah fell on Thursday; the moon rules at night in the fourth hour, and its indications become known to the many from the fifth hour onward, when judgment is entrusted to the messengers. Thus the day and hour were hinted to Adam by the he in ayyekah. This is another approximately 243 hours from the closing of the gates until then.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

judgment. [TN100064] “For one who holds”: that on Sabbaths and festivals too one adds from the ordinary to the sacred. This is Alfasi's and Nahmanides' opinion. On their view we properly count an hour before New Year, unlike the view that only the Day of Atonement's addition is required by Torah law. This depends on the amoraim's dispute, as stated and explained by the legal authorities.

“After the tenth of Tishri” [?], hinted by the kaf in ayyekah, comes the sealing of judgment, as explained in the Zohar, Emor. [TN100065] “On Thursday”: as known in that year [?]. “On its night”: the preceding night. “In the fourth hour”: as is known, the seven planets govern the hours successively in this order: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon. Accordingly their order at the beginning of days is Sun, Moon, Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, beginning with Sunday. At the beginning of nights it is Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, Saturn, Sun, Moon, Mars, beginning with the night before Sunday. On the night preceding Thursday, "ḤL, KL," the moon is in the fourth hour [?]. [TN100066]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Its indications": what its shadow indicates, as explained in the Zohar there, is not in the fourth hour but becomes known to the many from the fifth onward. He likewise hints this, as stated shortly, and then judgment is delivered to the messengers, as explained in the Zohar. "Another approximately 243 hours": the closing is in the second hour after the Day of Atonement, as mentioned. From the third hour to the beginning of the third hour of the twenty-first's night are 240 hours; at the fifth it is 243. "For both": the first and second 243 hours, together 486, when forgiveness is completed. The sign is be-tof u-mahol: at 486 hours comes forgiveness.

"This number is the numerical value of the great Name": emet, "truth," the Holy One's seal, interwoven with the Name YHWH filled with alefs, totals 486. "In reduced reckoning": the reason for this interweaving is that

Rema of Fano - continued

A mnemonic for both periods is "Praise Him with drum and dance," be-tof u-mahol: at the end of 486 hours forgiveness is completed. This is the numerical value of the great Name with the seal "truth," namely YOD–alef, HE–mem, VAV–tav, HE. In reduced reckoning it amounts to adam, "man," the tithe of emet, "truth," as explained in Tiqqunei Bereshit. Thus the sealing of judgment comes twenty-one days from Adam's birth: its sign is EHYEH; and twenty-six days from the beginning of creation: its sign is the unpronounced four-letter Name.

This testimony is known and accepted among many in Israel. It is fitting that, after each individual's judgment is concluded through writing, sealing and delivery, with no revocation, we multiply supplications the following day for the community's needs. The prophets' custom of beating the willow on this day without a blessing commemorates judgment's annulment and cessation from then onward, after it has been sweetened daily throughout the seven days by the willow's joining the lulav under Torah law. On that day too, one first circles the altar with it seven times, showing its roots' attachment to supreme holiness, from which come Netzah and Hod. Whatever is rooted in it cannot be described as annulled; only that which breaches its boundary will be trampled.

Therefore even one leaf on one branch suffices, showing that the remnants shall have no remnants and will ultimately be entirely annulled. The allusion is only to

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

YHWH filled with alefs totals 45, the tithe of emet, as in the Tiqqunim, folio 98: "Its tithe is YOD HE VAV HE, a tenth of four hundred and forty-one, which… to forty-five" [?], and so forth. This too is the numerical value of adam, as is known. [TN100067] "From Adam's birth": on New Year. "From creation's beginning": on the twenty-fifth of Elul. "This testimony": the beautiful custom in Israel of multiplying prayers and supplications on Hosha'na Rabbah. "Through writing and sealing": on New Year and the Day of Atonement; "delivery": on Hosha'na Rabbah, when the slips are delivered to the messengers and revocation is impossible, as in the Zohar.

"The prophets' custom": while discussing Hosha'na Rabbah's judgment, the master also explains beating the willow, a prophets' custom. The Gemara concludes in Lulav va-Aravah, folio 44, that willow is a prophets' custom, not a prophets' institution; therefore no blessing is recited. The master gives the reason as annulling judgment, as in the Zohar, Tzav, page 22: "The festival's seventh day is the world's day of judgment. Slips leave the King's house; powers of severity stir and come to their end on this day. These brook willows: with them we need to awaken powers toward water and circle this altar seven times, Isaac's waters... For on this day judgment ends. Therefore they must be beaten on the earth and brought to their end so they are no longer found, for this day is arousal and is on the day. Therefore it is arousal and on the day that we act with brook willows...” [?] See there. [TN100068]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The explanation is that brook willows correspond to Netzah and Hod, as in the Zohar, Emor, pages 201–202. Judgments attach there and the shells draw nourishment from them. Therefore the willow is the wielders of the scourge. Holy judgment lives and endures; it saves us through the Binding's merit, in the sense of “For You are our father, though Abraham does not know us and Israel does not recognize us,” explained in our treatise Em Kol Hay. Among the amoraim, however, someone says three moist branches are required. He wished the three Names constituting the court—El, Elohim, YHWH—to agree to its annulment. This is not the law, for the act does not signify the annulment's agents agreeing, but the cessation itself affecting that which undergoes annulment. Similarly, when sprinkling someone impure through a corpse, the commandment of hyssop requires three stalks; its remainder may be two and its stumps any amount.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

beaten on the ground to end and annul judgment. “After it has been sweetened”: judgment, through the willow accompanying the lulav, for the lulav hints at mercy, as is known.

“On that day too”: the Mishnah there, folio 45, states the willow commandment: every day they circle the altar once, and on that day seven times. In the Gemara, folio 43b, the amoraim differ over what they circle with: one says willow, another lulav. All legal authorities rule thus. The master too means the willow in the lulav, since willow has one designation. Seven circuits indicate that the shell's root is attached to the boundaries of supreme holiness, the seven days of building, through the two companions: Netzah and Hod beneath it, and so forth. What is rooted in holiness is not annulled. Rather, the impurity breaching holiness's boundary and drawing nourishment outside shall be trampled, subdued and become like the earth's dust. This is hinted specifically by beating the willow on the ground. Hence too it is a prophets' custom, for Netzah and Hod are their two levels, the two thighs of truth, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Therefore”: the Gemara asks its required measure. Rav Nahman says three branches with moist leaves; Rav Sheshet says even one leaf and one branch. One leaf and one branch—could that be? Rather, say one leaf on one branch. The law follows Rav Sheshet. The master says this hints at diminishing the shell, so even that little is annulled. “Remnants shall have no remnants”: not even a small remnant will remain of the shell, called “remnants” because its existence and root derive from remaining sparks of purity descending from those companions, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The allusion”: what we said about future annulment of judgment refers to the shell, destructive angels wielding the scourge, who will be annulled in the future. Holy judgment—Gevurah and the other sefirot, Netzah and Hod, receiving from it—lives and endures forever. Not only is holy judgment not stretched out against us; it saves and protects us and takes our soul's ransom from judgment through the Binding's reward. This will be explained in Em Kol Hay chapter 29, on “For You are our father,” and so forth; see there.

“However, someone”: the master explains Rav Nahman's opinion: three branches correspond to three Names constituting a court that agrees to annul judgment. See the Zohar there, page 21, which adds a reason they should be moist: “Therefore all must be moist, not dry, to draw blessings to the world. When these below are moist, the two, Netzah and Hod, continually receive supplies of joyful waters, sated at this time.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“For the act”: beating the willow does not hint at the annulling agents' agreement to annul judgment, requiring three branches for that reason. It signifies annulment and cessation themselves, concerning what is annulled: the shell undergoing annulment. Therefore the law requires one leaf on one branch. “Similarly”: the same law and reason apply to sprinkling someone impure through a corpse. Rabbi Yose says at the end of Parah chapter 1: the hyssop commandment is three shoots with three stalks; its remainder is two and its stumps any amount. If one stalk was removed, leaving two, or if they broke, leaving any amount, it is valid. As we said, this indicates that remnants shall have no remnants. Hyssop hints at the attribute of judgment, as Recanati writes in Bo. The master holds that dipping hyssop in water with the red cow's ashes for sprinkling corpse impurity annuls judgment's power, as commanded at the Exodus, “Take a bunch of hyssop.” The Zohar says: to annul the spirit of impurity; see there. Therefore its stumps may be any amount, as mentioned.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“On the first New Year, for his first sin”: ayyekah informed him that it was in Tishri. The sixth day on which he was created was the first of Tishri, for the world was created on the twenty-fifth of Elul, as is known. He hinted this with the alef in ayyekah. On the tenth of the month, the Day of Atonement, is judgment's conclusion, hinted by its yod. A hint to “judgment's conclusion”: from New Year, namely the hour added from ordinary to sacred at its entrance, to the end of the closing of the gates, also adding an hour at its departure, are 243 hours. At the 243rd hour comes the numerical value of “sealing” [?]. [TN100069]

Kaf hints at Hosha'na Rabbah, after the twentieth of Tishri, when there is a sign in the moon's shadow. From the Day of Atonement's seal to the fifth hour of Hosha'na Rabbah's night are another 243 hours. He hinted this by the he in ayyekah: Hosha'na Rabbah then fell on Thursday, hinting also at the fifth night hour. “Its indications become known to the many” means seeing the moon's shadow when the slips are delivered to the messengers.

“What he wrote, a sign for the matter, shoulder (KTF) and perversity/dance”: “it is written, S, three, in the verse, 243; at the end of three times 243 the sealing is completed, namely not, grasped [?], hours; but reckon it for him. We find in several accurate books shoulder (KTF), book, but GL; what is written is according to Galante's interpretation” [?]. [TN100070] Since the author interprets mahol as forgiveness, so too, in this manner, according to Galante's interpretation of “In the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel left Egypt,” “Then two prostitute women came to the king.” His explanation is that Lilith numerically equals 480, the number of her troops [?], and the second is Mahalath, numerically 478, the number of her troops. Over those two additional camps there is war between them in towns, and “HZ” did not draw near until the Day of Atonement [?]. On that day they come together and fight. Consequently Israel's prayers ascend without accusation, and the Holy One forgives sins, for Satan has no dominion that day.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

As the sages explained, ha-satan has numerical value 364: there are 365 days in the year, and he governs 364 but has no dominion on the Day of Atonement. All the time Israel was in Egypt they had dominion, until Solomon came after 480 years and built the Temple; then they had no dominion. This too is the mystery of “Miriam the prophetess took the drum in her hand,” where ha-tof is written defectively, hinting at 480 shells. Thus “Praise Him with drum and dance” means that when Lilith, whose value is 480, comes to Mahalath, the Holy One forgives sins. U-mahol likewise hints at Mahalath. Thus far, “KL Moses” [?]. [TN100071]

I heard in the name of Maharal, “TZQ” [?], that this hints at Abraham, who belongs to the masculine world. There the Torah's twenty-six letters, including the doubled ones, sparkle and shine, like nine attributes shining and bestowing upon the tenth, Malkhut. Nine times twenty-six is 243, the value of Abram when the he is removed from his name [?]. Isaac belongs to the feminine world; therefore he had to be bound on the altar and his soul departed, as those knowing hidden wisdom know. There the Torah's twenty-two letters shine; nine times twenty-two is 198, and Isaac without the yod of the Name is 198. [TN100072]

Jacob comprises both, being mercy, as is known: twenty-two and twenty-six, together forty-nine [?],

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

so that, Heaven forbid, the righteous shall not totter before the wicked. Nine times forty-nine amounts to emet, “truth”: hence “Give truth to Jacob.” Jacob also rectified the feminine world with the five doubled letters. Nine times five is 45, and with “AḤM they are called adam”: emet and 45 total 486 [?]. Jacob also illuminated the feminine world: “twenty-six, twice twenty-six, twenty-four,” in the mystery of “unto the prayer of the destitute,” ha-ar'ar, numerically Israel, with the alef including them. Deduct twice twenty-six, since you count only the rectification, not what was already there; 486 remains, numerically adam atem [?]. Separate atem by itself, for it is the rectification of twenty-six and twenty-two; adam is what was added in the feminine world, nine times five, numerically 45. This is “Who gave man a mouth?” after the manner of “Give truth to Jacob”: nine times adam, the Name's four letters and emet have the value titten, “give” [?]. [TN100073]

This is the numerical value of YHWH spelled in full with the Holy One's seal, emet: YOD–alef, HE–mem, VIV–tav, HE [?]. The tithe of emet is adam, in Tiqqunei Bereshit, folio 29: the tithe of mem is dalet, of tav is mem, and alef remains as it is—thus adam. [TN100074] “From creation's beginning”: from the twenty-fifth of Elul to Hosha'na Rabbah are twenty-six days, the value of YHWH in the unpronounced Name.

“By joining”: the willow joined to the lulav every day; “a rectification of things in this” [?], for the lulav's leaves belong to holiness, while these belong to judgments and impurity. Therefore one strikes them to the earth. [TN100075] “The roots' attachment to holiness”: willow indicates the shells, which have life only through an attachment and root in supreme holiness. Willow is a prophets' custom because their root is in the two thighs of truth, Netzah and Hod; they are called prophets of truth, and hence it is a prophets' custom. Moses, who looked through the luminous speculum, was in Tiferet above them.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Whatever is rooted in it”: the root of holiness within impurity cannot be described as annulled or brought to cessation. Rather, impurity itself breaches the boundary. One beats the willow on the ground to bring these to cessation, “and it shall be trampled.” “Remnants shall have no remnants”: Samael will have no remnants, being entirely annulled in the future. “The wielders of the scourge” are the accusing shells, which will be annulled, whereas holy judgment itself lives, endures and saves.

“For the act does not signify agreement”: which would require the three Names El, Elohim, YHWH; it signifies cessation itself for that which undergoes it. “Similarly”: likewise “there is no precision concerning the willow: initially three, and afterward, if two remain, it is valid” [?]. [TN100076] “Its stumps”: remnants of remnants, even any amount, indicate the cessation of judgment and the shell.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 24

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 25 (כה)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Rav Hai Gaon”: at the preceding chapter's end. The master intends to show that Rav Hai Gaon's words have support in the Gemara. “Lest one appear

Rema of Fano

Rav Hai Gaon said that, although the conclusion is indeed as we said—even one leaf on one branch—this is unsatisfactory for the choicest fulfillment of the commandment, lest to despise it”: Tur, Orah Hayyim 664, likewise quotes him: one leaf on one branch is unseemly.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Certainly”: the master

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

explains in his customary way that the Gemara's first wording, “one leaf and one branch,” is also true. It does not mean a leaf without a branch and a branch without a leaf; that certainly is inconceivable. It means we require two leaves and two branches: one leaf on one branch, and one branch with one leaf, for the choicest performance. It does not explicitly say “two leaves and two branches” because only one complete leaf and one complete branch are required, not two complete leaves and two complete branches. Thus there are two things, each with any amount: a complete leaf needs any amount of branch, and a complete branch needs any amount of leaf.

“This is why it says”: in the Gemara, “he beat, he beat,” twice: he beat with each, for the choicest performance. “We learn”: also from this wording, that the two things should be separate, not joined; the shells must not be connected and bundled. “The hint”: “Do not call it a conspiracy.” The sages say: a conspiracy of the wicked does not count. “Since he formulated”: because he wished to indicate the rule of diminution and “any amount” by saying “one leaf and one branch,” instead of explicitly stating it, we infer that he means the choicest performance.

Rema of Fano - continued

one appear to despise it. He spoke well, for the Gemara's wording is “even one leaf and one branch.” It then asks: One leaf and one branch—could that be? Rather, say even one leaf on one branch. Certainly one leaf alone and one empty branch are inconceivable. The first wording intends the choicest fulfillment: two things, each containing any amount. This is why it says “he beat, he beat,” implying with this and with that. We learn that they should not be tied together at all. The hint is “Do not call it a conspiracy,” which does not count, as will be explained. Since he formulated his initial statement in this manner of diminution, we infer that even one leaf on one branch is the indispensable minimum, for less is impossible.

It is indeed right that there should be two willow branches, after “his two brothers outside,” said of Ham, who saw, told and drew his father's nakedness toward them to strengthen the left power. But Shem and Japheth overcame their counterparts and covered their father's nakedness, their faces backward, to sanctify the attribute of the backs. These too are for the wise: “two men, spies.” They are the two external males of whom we spoke, like an ape before a human, going bound on Joshua's mission to conquer Canaan's land—Canaan, Ham's son—before Phinehas and Caleb. Of them it says heresh: whether read with sin, meaning their breaking purifies them like earthenware, or with shin, meaning they will become mute and deaf. They are remnants of the other two branches in the lulav; from then onward the

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Had it been indispensable, he should have said so explicitly. We learn that at least one complete leaf and one complete branch are necessary: one leaf on one branch is indispensable. Less, such as a complete leaf with any amount of branch or the reverse, is insufficient.

“It is indeed right”: the master explains the choicest performance. Hosha'na's willow, hinting at the shell, appropriately has two branches corresponding to the two external males of whom Scripture says concerning Ham: “Ham, father of Canaan, saw his father's nakedness and told his two brothers outside.” This does not mean his brothers Shem and Japheth; otherwise why mention that they were outside? It means the two external males: his brothers outside, in impurity.

“Drew”: Bereshit Rabbah says, “Ham saw and told”—he told them and drew them: he said, Adam had two sons, and so forth. It expounds va-yagged as drawing, since “they drew” is translated u-negid, meaning he drew them with words, as Yefeh To'ar writes. The master expounds that Ham wished to draw the power of his father Noah's nakedness outside holiness toward his external brothers, meaning outside

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yesod, thereby strengthening the left power, the harsh shell. But they overcame them, and so forth. “To sanctify”: Bereshit Rabbah asks, From “they covered their father's nakedness,” do I not know their faces were backward? Rather, it teaches…, and so forth. The master expounds that their thoughts and actions faced backward to sanctify the attribute of the backs, two levels of the Shekhinah called “backs.”

“These too”: the Zohar, Bereshit, page 24, on “The sons of God saw the daughters of man”: this is “two men, spies, secretly, saying.” “The daughters of man”: “Then two prostitutes came to the king.” Concerning them it says, “For they saw that God's wisdom was within him.” “Then they came,” not previously. Further there, page 85: “The Nephilim were on earth in those days,” not after that time, until Joshua came. The sons of God were kept until Solomon came, and the daughters of man were included: “the delights of the sons of man.” The Zohar, Aharei, pages 18 and 118, calls these two males the spies of the land; see there.

The sage Galante explains in his teacher's name: Joshua's two spies were two external males who submitted to him

Rema of Fano - continued

remnants have no remnants, as stated.

Our explanation makes intelligible “Ham, father of Canaan, saw his father's nakedness”: he needed to join his son's power to his own to draw from both outward. Whoever has only one leaf on one branch also beats it without a blessing. This accords with our approach, corresponding to the levirate widow's son whom Solomon kept alive after the provocation, “Bring me a sword.” This is learned from its context: the two young spies who took Rahab out of the overthrow were brothers, husbands of the two prostitutes. No male remained of them except the living child, prepared for rectification, for existence will not be entirely annihilated.

Therefore, at the time of corruption, “Cursed be Canaan” was said of one doing Canaan's deeds, “in whose hand are deceitful balances,” excluding Tabi, Rabban Gamaliel's slave, and his like. “No Canaanite shall any longer be in the house of the LORD of hosts”: this is a designation; when purified of it, he will be favorably received. One accustomed to aggadah, gathering its scattered teachings with wisdom, understanding and knowledge, will greatly rejoice and exult in the sages' words and riddles.

Those who investigate out of love for the commandments, however, say that when the husk is removed from the willow's kernels, something like a serpent's body appears, stripped of skin and without a head. This indicates the concealment of that stature's head, in the sense of “Cruel venom of asps—is it not stored away immediately upon his entering the land, saying, We are your servants. Joshua sent them to spy out the land; Phinehas and Caleb went with them and clothed themselves in them. These two spies of the land cast fear upon all its inhabitants, as Joshua had stipulated, so the land would be readily conquered. Therefore all its inhabitants melted away and no spirit remained in them as soon as the spies came to search the land, although they returned without searching it: those two spies had done their assigned work. Their wives, however, those two fires of lewdness, Lilith and Mahalath, had not yet submitted, being the harsh, fierce, impure attribute of judgment. Only when King Solomon came, ruling demons and “the delights of the sons of man, male and female demons,” did they too submit and fall on their faces before him. Thus “Then two prostitutes came to the king”: then, not previously. See there, folios 93b and 101.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Like an ape before a human”: the external powers are so called because they resemble an ape imitating a human. Thus their two levels imitate adam, whose value is 45, as Galante writes, folio 95. The master calls them this because they were bound before Joshua; qof interchanges with kaf, both belonging to the letters gimel, yod, kaf, qof. “Ham's son”: their brother outside. “Of them it says”: “Joshua sent two men, spies, secretly”—heresh. The midrash differs: one reads heres, earthenware, for they made themselves potters; another reads heresh literally, as deaf people. Accordingly, these external powers too are like earthenware vessels, whose breaking purifies them and removes their impurity. The external with Me?” according to our exposition. The stripping of the skin is the cessation of its activity, as is known; beating it on the ground corresponds to “The wicked are shaken out of it.” This is a pleasing reason for the prophets' custom mentioned above. What we learned, however—that its commandment throughout all seven days is to stand it at the altar's sides, its tops bent over the altar—is a law given to Moses at Sinai. Even in the Temple, its handling overrides the Sabbath only on the seventh day; with the four species, only on the first day, under Torah law. Let the wise hear and increase learning.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

powers' breaking brings their cessation and purification. In the comprehensive rectification they too will be rectified. Heresh literally means they will become mute, unable to open their mouths in impurity, and deaf, not listening to their counsel.

“They”: those two external powers, corresponding to the two willow branches hinting at the shell, are remnants of the lulav's two branches, which correspond to holy judgments, Netzah and Hod. Hence any amount suffices for this willow, unlike the willow in the lulav. From these onward there are no remnants, only cessation and annulment.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The verse becomes intelligible”: “father of Canaan” seems unexplained: why identify him here by his son? Bereshit Rabbah says Canaan saw and told. Ran writes that “father of Canaan” hints that he participated in the transgression. The master expounds that he needed his son's power to join his evil intention. “Whoever”: the master also explains why one leaf on one branch is indispensable: it corresponds to the one child remaining to the two external males.

“The levirate widow's son”: Midrash Shoher Tov says of the two prostitutes: Rav says they were spirits; Samuel says actual prostitutes; the sages say levirate widows. All their words are true: they were spirits and female shells, lewd women married to the two male shells, the spies of the land. “After the provocation”: Solomon provoked them by saying “Bring me a sword,” then permitted him, since he was prepared for rectification, as concluded shortly. “Learned from its context”: the correspondence of one leaf on one branch to the living child follows from the two branches corresponding to the two external males, fathers of the prostitutes' two sons.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The two young spies”: called “two sons” in the Zohar, Aharei. “Who took Rahab out”: the master teaches us that they took Rahab out on Joshua's mission.

“Prepared for rectification”: Solomon hinted this in his provocation, “Bring me a sword… Divide the living child,” indicating his death, his breaking purifying him. Then he kept him alive, rectified, and did not kill him, because existence will not be annihilated but rectified at the end of days. “Therefore”: because existence will not be annihilated and that child was prepared for rectification, Scripture likewise says “Cursed be Canaan.” Bereshit Rabbah asks: Ham sinned and Canaan was cursed—astonishing! Rabbi Nehemiah says: Canaan saw and told; attach corruption to the corrupt. This is the Yalqut's reading. The master explains that Canaan is inherently corrupt by nature: “Canaan, in his hand are deceitful balances” (Hosea 12). “Cursed be Canaan” hints that his deeds caused it; rectifying his deeds will rectify him too, as with Tabi, Rabban Gamaliel's slave. Likewise, “No Canaanite shall any longer be…” (Zechariah 14) uses the designation “Canaanite,” not “Canaan,” showing that the designation will cease but the person will remain. When purified of this designation he will be favorably received.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“However”: the master gives another reason for the willow. “The concealment of the head”: of the shell's stature. Its root and head are hidden, stored and rooted in holiness, “like the hand of the skull” [?], as explained in Galante on “They sit on the ground.” [TN100077] “According to our exposition”: our explanation of this verse, as below, Part V chapter 8, and in Galante there: “It is known that when the shell's foot rises and its stature is annulled, all its limbs and branches are absorbed in their root, the stored head. In this mystery he fittingly explained, ‘Cruel venom of asps—is it not stored away with Me, sealed in My treasuries?’ Akhzar, ‘cruel,’ is construed as akh zar, ‘only foreign,’ diminishing cruelty in its concealed place: there it is included in good and acknowledges the Head of all heads. It can therefore be counted in ‘My treasuries,’ for this asps' head is among the sealed treasures that will no longer spread outward. Its concealment there endures forever, for existence will not be entirely annihilated. It testifies that His kingship rules all, sanctifying everything through His holiness.” See below, where I quote more of his words.

“Corresponds to”: “The wicked are shaken out of it” (Job 38). “This is”: refers back to the preceding chapter's “The prophets' custom,” because prophecy derives from Netzah and Hod. The Temple's willow commandment—standing it beside the altar all seven days—is itself a law given to Moses at Sinai for this reason. The Zohar, Bereshit, page 71, says: “Therefore this Oral Torah commanded Moses concerning those ten saplings and willows encircling this altar, those brook willows corresponding to the two levels surrounding above, Netzah and Hod.”

“Even in the Temple”: the willow commandment overrode the Sabbath there only when the seventh day fell on the Sabbath. Likewise, the willow in the lulav, required by Torah law, is based on the two levels Netzah and Hod, as in the Zohar, Emor, yet is taken under Torah law only on the first day. All this has a mystery: “Let the wise hear and increase learning.”

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Two things, each with any amount”: even the initial wording, “one leaf and one branch,” likewise means one leaf on one branch, “and one branch, and indeed one leaf” [?]; see there. [TN100078] “His two brothers outside”: in impurity there are two male shells and two female shells, the two prostitutes who came in Solomon's days. Female shells are stronger than male; see the book Vavei Ammudi [?]. [TN100079]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Corresponding to them are their two husbands, male shells, as there is, and there is, in holiness: in Yesod, uniting with the holy covenant, as is known. Ham wished to draw into impurity, called nakedness. “Told,” in “He told his brothers outside,” means drawing toward the shells, his impure brothers like himself, outside. Precisely “outside,” for “they are the five windows,” and they overcame him [?]. The premise is known—distinguishing a thousand distinctions—“From my flesh I behold hanging” [?]: there are two apertures in the organ of the covenant, one for urine, one for semen; in the world of Asiyah, two conduits, one for judgment and one for mercy. When Israel sins, Heaven forbid, it draws toward the left. See the Zohar, Aharei Mot, “ʿQW,” Pardes, Gate of the Conduits, and Galante on “They ravished women in Zion.” [TN100080]

“Shem and Japheth”: “Taking[?] the backs”—impurity behind holiness, “the one opposite the other,” and so forth. Likewise, the spies are called “two men, spies,” hinting at those two male shells, who went before Phinehas and Caleb and obeyed them. Through them they subdued the subsequent bands of impurity, to conquer Canaan, Ham's son, impure like him. They went unwillingly, against their preference, at the divine utterance.

“Their breaking”: the shells' annulment is their purification in the future. This hints at the two willow branches in the lulav that are beaten, indicating their annulment with no remnant. “Ham saw”: “these among the shells are called NS, in their kind of multiplication. This is the mystery of the haftarah: six verses beginning with them, five, the word KN, ḤWTY T, Shem, Ham, Japheth. ‘Neither mine nor yours shall he be’: this is nothing but an evil heart. ‘For this too is a son to you’; therefore I shall not come to me, ‘For a hand upon the throne of YH,’ ʿL, further interpretation; in the future it will be rectified, and nothing, one of them, will remain” [?]. [TN100081] superfluous; once it says Ham, do I not know he is Canaan's father? Rather, he needed to join his son's power to draw from holiness to impurity toward his two brothers outside, as above.

“Father of Canaan”: these words are entirely

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“After the ban”: according to the Gemara, the Men of the Great Assembly annulled the inclination to idolatry, but could not annul the inclination to sexual transgression, for He formed it to be inhabited, not desolate; not even an egg could be found in Nehardea. This was the ban by which Solomon provoked the day-old son, the evil inclination, the shell. Upon that grasshopper [?] was written the great Name, namely the known one, “which are from his father” [?]; see our explanation above, Part I chapter 12. Therefore it says, “And I swear by KH, and said, If I put you to death by the sword” [?], I Kings 20. The oath was by the sword, by the Name upon it, that he would not kill him. With that sword came the provocation: to paint the inclination's eyes; it helped so that it would not be aroused toward relatives. [TN100082]

One leaf on one branch hints at this inclination. His two brothers, the spies, were brothers and husbands of the two prostitutes, as above. The Men of the Great Assembly annulled them, leaving only one inclination, the living child prepared for rectification. Entire annulment is impossible, lest the world's existence be absent or diminished, as above. One of them, the evil inclination to idolatry, was subdued. As for illicit relations, “AḤ, only” [?] painting its eyes: this is Solomon “HMKH” provoking it with a sword to gouge out its eyes. This is “uproot”: to uproot the shells after it; “break”: the evil inclination; “cast down”: bloodshed, which is needed by the Sanhedrin; “subdue”: evil speech, the nogah shell, for death and life are in the tongue's power, and it is subdued to holiness. Examine this closely, “ḤV” [?]. [TN100083]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“YQQ, power of what” [?]: that is, Hokhmah of that stature, meaning the shell and impurity mentioned above. “Cruel venom of asps” is the shell, akh zar, a little foreignness for rectification. “Is it not stored away with Me?” accords with the mystery of Esau's head in Isaac's bosom, “and the words, and stored, KS” [?]. [TN100084] “Increase learning”: in the Zohar, Bereshit 71, a law given to Moses at Sinai, “from this, errs from it” [?]; and Emor, page 201, see there. A prophets' custom: Netzah and Hod are called prophets of truth. [TN100085] [TN140001]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 25

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 26 (כו)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Concerning the time of sealing”: incidentally the master explains the Zohar's statement in Va-Yehi in the small-format printing, corresponding to Emor, page 199, in the large-format printing. It concerns sealing after the Day of Atonement and explains what seems strange and astonishing: that its time appears to be

Rema of Fano

Concerning the time of sealing mentioned in the preceding chapter, the Zohar contains statements astonishing at first consideration. In the books before us, Va-Yehi, folio 220, it says that on New Year the slips are written. These are what Rabbi Kruspedai meant when saying the wicked's book is written and sealed for death. It adds that repentance can nevertheless annul them until the Day of Atonement. If the person has not

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Shemini Atzeret. It reads:

“Come and see: on the day when judgment awakens in the world and the Holy One sits upon the throne of judgment to judge the world, a person must stir himself to repentance and turn from his sins. For on that day slips are written, all found in the bag, already written. If a person merits returning before his Master, the slips against him are torn up. Afterward the Holy One appoints a day for the person, the Day of Atonement, a day of repentance. If he turns from his sins, well; otherwise the King commands the slips to be sealed. Woe, for repentance is about to depart from him. If he merits complete repentance as is fitting, they suspend his case until that last day of Atzeret, the festival's eighth day. If he performs complete repentance before his Master, they are torn up or delayed. If he does not merit it, slips leave the King's house and are delivered into the officer's hand. Once delivered to him, judgment is certainly executed, and the slips do not return to the King's house. Then the images depart from him and are no longer with him. Once they depart, the King's sentence certainly passes over him and he tastes death. On that night of the last festival the officers stand ready and take the slips. After they take them, the images depart and are not found among them; lesser judgments, or judgment and illnesses, will pass over him through their deficiency [?]. We have established and explained this." End of quotation. [TN100086] repented in the interval, the slips are sealed on the Day of Atonement. This is the correct reading, and the point we stated, over which no one ever disagreed, as explained in chapter 1.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Once the sentence is written and sealed, it is difficult to reverse even through repentance, unless the person strengthens himself greatly in it; then nothing stands in his way. Therefore, once the slips have been sealed, it says there: "Woe to him, for repentance is about to depart from him. If he merits complete repentance as is fitting, well." Once the Day of Atonement has passed, they do not afford him the opportunity—meaning they do not assist him—to repent. Nevertheless, if he strengthens himself unaided in complete repentance with all its conditions, as mentioned in Part I, it avails him.

"If not, they suspend his case until that last day of Atzeret, which is the eighth. If he performs complete repentance before his Master, they are torn up. If he does not merit it, those slips leave the King's house and are delivered into the officer's hands. Judgment is executed, and the slips do not return to the King's house, since the images have departed from him… On that night of the last festival, the officers are ready." It says that after the Day of Atonement's sealing, his case is suspended to see whether he will strengthen himself in complete repentance, as stated, "until that last day."

If we interpret "the last day" as Atzeret, which is the eighth, this is the

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"It says that on New Year the slips are written": "On the day of judgment… on that day slips are written." "These": the wicked's books which Rabbi Kruspedai said are written on New Year for death; see chapter 11 above. "It adds": the Zohar's "If a person merits returning before his Master, the slips are torn up." "Over which no one ever disagreed": all tannaim and amoraim hold that the sentence comes on the Day of Atonement.

"Meaning they do not assist him": from above, in repentance, as with others who come to purify themselves. Nevertheless, if he strengthens himself without help and opens for himself a fitting opening of repentance, nothing stands before repentance, as explained in Part I chapter 20; see there. This is "If he merits complete repentance as is fitting, well."

"If not, they suspend his case": the master's reading is "If he merits complete repentance as is fitting, well; if not, they suspend his case until that last day." This means that complete repentance before that last day avails him immediately regarding the sealing: the slips sealed on the Day of Atonement are torn up before the last day. Thus repentance avails regarding writing, tearing up the slips after New Year before the Day of Atonement. If he does not perform complete repentance, they nevertheless suspend his case until the last day to see whether he will strengthen himself unaided in complete repentance.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Our reading, however, is

Rema of Fano - continued

astonishing statement we mentioned. It can be reconciled only with great strain, intolerable to one walking uprightly. We cannot believe that the Zohar in any way disagrees with the tradition of truth transmitted to the many, supported by well-known experience. Therefore, people of understanding, hear me: how well ordered are that holy book's ways, and how mighty its chapter headings! Ponder its sayings, for they are pleasant.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“If he merits complete repentance as is fitting, they suspend his case,” and so forth. According to this, even if he repents completely unaided after the Day of Atonement, the sealed slips are not torn up until the last day. Sealing differs from writing: the slips are torn up before the Day of Atonement through repentance because they are merely written.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Until that last day of Atzeret, which is the eighth”: the Zohar's wording certainly means literally the last day, Shemini Atzeret. This would be extremely astonishing, as he concludes, since the final sealing is known to occur on Hosha'na Rabbah. “Which we mentioned”: at the chapter's beginning, that the Zohar's statement contains astonishing things. “Only with great strain”: one would have to say “until the last day” excludes that day itself, which is very strained. “We cannot believe”: the astonishment comes from not believing that the Zohar disagrees with the tradition transmitted to the many from ancient times, that Hosha'na Rabbah is the time of sealing. The well-known experience of the moon's shadow on Hosha'na Rabbah's night also supports and proves this.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Until that last day”: if we interpret the Zohar's words above to mean that the last day is Shemini Atzeret, this is “one of four” [?] astonishing matters we mentioned. [TN100087] We cannot interpret the Zohar as disagreeing with the tradition of truth transmitted to the many, that judgment is concluded on Hosha'na Rabbah's night, not Shemini Atzeret. The well-known experience, “appointed” [?] in the moon's shadow specifically at that time, supports the many, contrary to the Zohar's apparent meaning. [TN100088]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 26

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 27 (כז)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“In Emor”: continuing the preceding section's end. The master interprets the Zohar's “last day” as Hosha'na Rabbah, and therefore first establishes that the Zohar statement comes from Emor. “Which are its subject”: there the

Rema of Fano

In Emor, folio 104, “You shall take for yourselves on the first day,” and so forth: there, without doubt, is the beginning of the discourse we are explaining. Although printed in Va-Yehi, these teachings certainly were stated together. The printers already noticed this and supplied a reminder in Emor. What

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Zohar discusses sukkah and lulav, and the sealing concerns them. This is known by joining Va-Yehi and Emor, where the discourse begins at “You shall take for yourselves.” “There too”: apart from this, the subject in Va-Yehi itself indicates the same.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“According to the law”: following the anonymous Mishnah, “Water libation, seven days,” excluding Rabbi Yehudah's statement in Lulav va-Aravah, folio 48b, that he poured one log throughout all eight days. “Lest”: the Zohar next says “Atzeret is eighth” to forestall an objection: why call Hosha'na Rabbah last when Shemini Atzeret is the last day? It answers: Atzeret is eighth, not the festival's last, because it is an independent festival. The last day is Hosha'na Rabbah. “Therefore”: it hints at the law explained in the Gemara. “On the day, without a connecting vav”: the festival's other days in the sacrifices passage say “and on the day,” with an added vav. Shemini Atzeret says “on the eighth day,” without “and,” because it is an independent festival.

“Just as Atzeret”: the midrash says that, just as Passover's Atzeret is fifty days distant, this one too should have been fifty days distant. Why is it adjoining the festival? Rabbi Yehoshua ben Levi said: a parable of a king..., and so forth.

“To indicate”: the seven weeks of the world's days are known from the Zohar: “Fifty years of Jubilee: fifty thousand generations for which the Holy One will appears to us to be this Torah teaching's truth is that the Zohar calls Hosha'na Rabbah “the last day” because it is the last for sukkah and lulav, which are its subject when the two passages are joined. There in Va-Yehi too, the entire teaching concerns sukkah and lulav. Thus Hosha'na Rabbah is fittingly “last.” It is also the last for the water libation according to the law, following the anonymous Mishnah at the beginning of Lulav va-Aravah.

Rema of Fano - continued

Lest one object that the eighth day is last, it says this is not so: Atzeret is eighth, and constitutes a festival in its own right for several major laws, whose mnemonic is PZRKShB. [TN100089] Therefore in Pinehas it alone says “on the day,” without a connecting vav. Just as the first Atzeret is separated from Passover, this Atzeret too deserves to be counted by itself, as if separated from Sukkot, although adjoining it, to indicate the LORD's appointed times. All were equated with the first festival day in being festivals, while on the final festival day we ascend in holiness. We have a parallel in the sabbatical years, separated from one another and distant from the Jubilee; yet the seventh year and the fiftieth are adjacent.

Because it interrupted its statement, it returns to “If he performs repentance,” and so forth. It already said this once generally, but shortened it and broke off to explain the teaching so that we should not object; afterward it returns to the first subject's details. Furthermore, it subsequently specifies “on that night of the last festival,” certainly meaning restore the spirit to it and cause it to dwell.” Nahmanides, Recanati, Bahya, Tziyoni and other great authors discuss this in Emor and Be-Har. The world lasts six thousand years and is desolate for one, as the sages say in Heleq. The six creation days hint at this, “which the Holy One rules [?], a thousand [gap]”; the seventh holy Sabbath day is the seventh millennium, entirely Sabbath and rest for the Life of the worlds. [TN100090]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The world will not remain desolate. After the seventh millennium the Holy One renews His world; that world's days again last six thousand years and one of desolation. This continues seven times, forty-nine thousand years, corresponding to seven sabbatical cycles. Each time the seventh millennium is holy: seven Sabbaths, the sabbatical years. In the fiftieth year the great Jubilee is most holy to the LORD, when the field returns to Him who acquired it. This is the mystery of sabbatical cycles and Jubilee. Rav Qatina therefore says in the Gemara: just as the seventh year releases one year in seven, so the world releases one millennium in seven thousand. This wording indicates release more than once.

Bahya writes that la-asot,

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"to do," at the end of Va-Yekhullu hints that the Holy One will renew the world after the seventh millennium: "For in it the LORD rested," in the seventh millennium, "to do"—to make the world again afterward. Thus the festival's seven days correspond to seven sabbatical years, the seven sanctified years, and Shemini Atzeret to the year of the great Jubilee; see there. The master says this is why Shemini Atzeret is counted separately: to indicate the LORD's appointed times. The seven days, all festivals, correspond to the seven Sabbaths of the sabbatical cycles; this final festival day corresponds to the most holy great Jubilee. Thus we ascend in holiness on it and count it separately.

"We have a parallel": do not wonder why this Atzeret is not distant. In the sabbatical years, themselves the mystery of the world's sabbatical cycles, the forty-ninth and fiftieth years are adjacent. "Because it interrupted": the Zohar afterward says, "If he performs repentance before his Master, they are torn up," though already saying, "If he merits

Rema of Fano - continued

Hosha'na Rabbah. In a Zohar brought from the Land of Israel—may she soon receive compassion—a statement clearly agreeing with our explanation was found. The sage copied it in Or Yaqar, Part II of his commentaries on the Zohar's Bereshit, gate 5, section 3, saying it came from the Tiqqunim.

Hear my words, wise men: "Festival of Unleavened Bread" is not called a festival without qualification except for its first and seventh festival days. In Chronicles, concerning Hezekiah and Josiah, "the Festival of Unleavened Bread seven days" refers only to the congregation's rejoicing. Concerning Sukkot, however, the Torah explicitly says "A festival to the LORD seven days." Shemini Atzeret is not called a festival anywhere in the Torah or the received Scriptures. This is its excellence: all the others circle and revolve around the central point, its place. It hints at the completion and attainment of the goal of all the Torah's and prophets' promises, in heaven above and on earth below, before all Israel's eyes. On it death is swallowed up forever and ever. Here, silence is a fence for wisdom.

Therefore the Zohar in Emor, after finishing its account of judgment's sealing, says: "'On the eighth day you shall have an assembly': this day belongs to the King alone, His rejoicing in them, in Israel."

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

complete repentance as is fitting, well." It interrupted itself concerning Atzeret to explain that it is eighth, not last, and therefore afterward returns to explain the first subject. In this, nevertheless, "the Talmud" [?] was needed for his amended reading "If not, they suspend his case," as in the preceding chapter. According to the reading in our books, it works well without this. [TN100091]

"Certainly": the experience of the moon's shadow proves it, as in the preceding chapter. "Hear my words, wise men": the master expands incidentally upon the mystery of the festival's seven days and Shemini Atzeret. "Festival of Unleavened Bread" does not mean that all seven days of unleavened bread are individually called festivals. Only the first and seventh days are so called, each specifically receiving that designation because work is prohibited. The intervening days are not called a festival except when Scripture includes them with the first and seventh because of their unleavened-bread observance, as in "Keep the Festival of Unleavened Bread." Then they are called festival collectively and inclusively, not unqualifiedly and specifically.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Therefore nowhere does Scripture explicitly say

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Festival of Unleavened Bread seven days." Where Chronicles says this of Hezekiah and Josiah, in chapter 35, it refers to the congregation's great rejoicing throughout the seven days, explicitly stated for Hezekiah; Josiah too says, “No Passover like it had been celebrated.” Because of this rejoicing, Scripture calls all the days a festival. The reason is that Passover's seven days do not hint at the seven Sabbaths of the sabbatical years, but at the seven weeks collectively. Afterward the number of the world's years is hinted at by counting forty-nine, and Passover's Atzeret hints at the fiftieth year.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Sukkot, however”: its seven days hint at the seven holy sabbatical years. Therefore Torah says “A festival to the LORD seven days”: all seven are festivals belonging to the LORD. “Shemini Atzeret is not called a festival”: it should therefore not be counted with the festival's days, because of its greater excellence, not inferiority. “All circle”: he interprets hag from hug, circle, as also expounded in Tiqqunim, tiqqun 13. As the circumference circles its center, the seven festival days, hinting at the seven Sabbaths of the sabbatical cycles, circle the eighth day, the great Jubilee.

“It hints at their completion”: in the great Jubilee all good promises in Torah and prophets to Israel are fulfilled, physical on earth and spiritual in heaven above. Then the world is annulled altogether: even “the heavens dissolve like smoke and the earth wears out like a garment,” and will exist no more. During the seven Sabbaths of the sabbatical cycles, however, there is only desolation, not annulment of the world. Recanati writes that heaven and earth do not cease in those years. Only creatures composed of four elements are annulled; after the sabbatical years are fulfilled, they return as initially through a new creation. Thus the upper beings do not change their goal throughout those many years.

“Forever and ever”: unlike the sabbatical years, where it is only “forever,” since after the sabbatical cycle things return to corruption and dust returns to the earth as before. “Here, silence is a fence for wisdom”: concerning the great Jubilee the sages said not to ask what is above, and so forth, or what comes after. From that day onward is considered “after,” unlike the sabbatical years.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Supplied a reminder in Emor”: they made a marker indicating something is missing from the discourse. This is what he wrote “in three days, 72/

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

b-side” [?], quoted above in chapter 26. [TN100092] “Lest”: the Zohar's “Atzeret is eighth” is an independent matter, incidentally answering another objection within its discussion: why call Hosha'na Rabbah last when the eighth is last? Therefore it is not so: Atzeret is an independent festival, unconnected with the earlier days. Hence “on the eighth day” lacks a vav. Similarly, as Atzeret, the Festival of Weeks, is separated from Passover, this Atzeret, Shemini Atzeret, is separate, counted alone to indicate the excellence of the LORD's appointed times. Even the intermediate festival days are equated with the first festival day, and certainly on the last we ascend in holiness.

“Separated from one another”: every seventh, sabbatical year is separated from another by six ordinary years. But the forty-ninth and fiftieth, Jubilee, are adjacent. In Pardes, Gate of the Paths, Ma'arekhet Elohut, folio 92, Recanati on Be-Har and Bahya there: in general, Sukkot's days hint at Abraham's sabbatical cycle, the second at Isaac's, and so forth. The forty-nine counted days include seven sabbatical cycles: each day indicates one millennium, each week one cycle. Therefore it is a commandment to count days and weeks.

Passover's days, however, indicate absolutely seven sabbatical cycles: the first indicates one cycle, the millennium of desolation in the first seven thousand years; the second, the second millennium of desolation, beginning from the first day [?]. Thus it is not unqualifiedly called a festival; it merely hints at seven sabbatical cycles through counting. Sukkot is actually called “to the LORD,” hinting at these seven cycles; Shemini Atzeret is the Jubilee, like Weeks in the counting of days. [TN100093]

“Thus all circle”: each sabbatical cycle has six surrounding it, the six thousand years, for circling indicates six extremities. All seven sabbatical cycles circle the Jubilee, when all Torah's promises are fulfilled. The seven cycles are Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Aaron and David; hence these are the seven guests in the sukkah, in the Zohar, page 69. In Abraham's millennium the shells are subdued, and likewise all, as is known. The verse's interpretation is “in vain, I and the lad shall go thus far”: the shell ʿL and ʿL; examine closely [?]. [TN100094]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Because it interrupted”: refers above. The Zohar interrupted itself to explain “the last day,” then returned to “If he performs,” completing its words and returning to its initial subject's details. “Called a festival without qualification”: fixedly and continually, only the first festival day. Although it says “Festival of Unleavened Bread seven,” it is called so only for the congregation's rejoicing, for no other reason.

“Sukkot, however”: its seven days are called a festival, except Shemini Atzeret, never called a festival, because of its excellence. It is known that Passover's seven days hint at the millennium of desolation after six thousand years, when the world lies waste until the great Jubilee, the fiftieth millennium, when our Messiah will come. Those seven cycles correspond to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Aaron and David. We are now in Isaac's cycle, who governs this conduct in exile under his son Esau, as we wrote above. After that great Jubilee no creature is permitted to ask what is before; rather, silence is a fence for wisdom.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 27

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Therefore the eighth day, hinting at the great Jubilee whose holiness is far, far above the festival's, is not called [a festival], after the manner of “Greater than Rabban is his name,” the essential name, as explained above in chapter 19 concerning “And Simeon.” By nature the holy center in every circle is like “ShK, central to the ordinary days” [?]. Thus the seventh year is the center of all seven surrounding years, and the great Jubilee the center and midpoint of all surrounding years. [TN100095]

This belongs above at “shells”: therefore seventy bulls were offered during the festival, corresponding to seventy shells, decreasing successively. On the first day, corresponding to Abraham's cycle, thirteen bulls; on the second, corresponding to Isaac's cycle, twelve; and likewise all. Abraham and Isaac thus rectified and sweetened twenty-five shells. This is hinted by “I and the lad shall go thus far,” ad koh: twenty-five shells.

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 28 (כח)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Rabbi Aqiva's teaching”: as in Tosefta chapter 2. It follows Rabbi Aqiva's own opinion concerning “BNM” and years [?], as explained below. [TN100097] “Five names”: the soul has five levels, named from below upward nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, yehidah, nefesh being lowest. They correspond to the four letters of [gap], as explained in the Zohar: nefesh to the final he, Malkhut, the Matron; ruah

Rema of Fano

We learned there in the Select Tractate: “A father merits for his son beauty, strength, wealth, wisdom and years. As for the number of generations, the appointed end is before Him, as it says, ‘Calling the generations from the beginning.’ Although four hundred years were stated, it also says, ‘The fourth generation shall return here.’” This is Rabbi Aqiva's teaching, instructing us in five good qualities corresponding to the five names of the father's soul, from the later to the earlier, to bequeath to his

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

to vav, Tiferet, her husband; neshamah to the first he, Binah; hayyah to yod, Hokhmah; yehidah to yod's tip, supreme Keter.

The master says the tanna teaches that the father merits these five things for his son, corresponding to his soul's five levels. He begins at the lowest: beauty corresponds to nefesh and its adornment, the Matron adorning herself beautifully for her husband. Strength corresponds to ruah, Tiferet, called “the LORD's strength.” Wealth corresponds to neshamah from Binah, whence wealth comes, in the mystery “Whoever wishes to grow wealthy should turn north.” Wisdom corresponds to hayyah, Hokhmah. Years correspond to yehidah, the supreme mazal of which it says children, life and sustenance depend on mazal, as explained in the Zohar. He bequeaths these five things to his children after him, resembling the pattern above, the holy sefirot corresponding to his soul's five levels.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“It says ‘merits’”: not “the father transfers merit to his son,” because “merits” implies for himself. This teaches that a father does not transfer merit to a son, as Heleq says: a son transfers merit to his father; a father does not transfer merit to his son. The son attains through his father's merit while lacking merit of his own. The father loses nothing thereby, but remains in possession and acquires that merit. He does not transfer it to his son so that it entirely leaves his own possession for as long as the son has not attained his own perfection.

“Conversely”: when the father attains something through his son's merit, the children after him, resembling the pattern above. “Merits” teaches that the worthy father remains in possession of what his son attains through his merit. But a father does not transfer merit to his son until the son attains perfection himself. Conversely, a son transfers merit to his father but does not retain the merit himself.

Rema of Fano - continued

Know that even where the sages said “The dead inherit the living,” the teaching precisely indicates that the living never acquired it until their inheritance returned to them from their fathers. Of these it says, “I praised the dead,” who are greater in death than in life. This explains the verse in Mas'ei naming the men “who will inherit the land for us”; it should have said “cause us to inherit.” Rather, they first inherit in all the tribes' name, acting as the patriarchs' agents. Wherever that passage says “for the tribe of so-and-so” without “children,” its prince was among those who left Egypt, like Caleb, who was not included in the decree. Elidad may have been over sixty at the time of the spies. Wherever it says “for the tribe of the children of so-and-so,” its prince belonged to the second generation, those entering the land.

Since Caleb was Joshua's companion, it was unfitting to call him prince of only one tribe; hence simply “Caleb.” Perhaps another man was prince of the tribe, relieving the elderly Caleb of the other burdens of leadership. Since Simeon and Benjamin bordered Judah's inheritance and were buried beside Caleb [?], their two heads are not called prince.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

son transfers that merit to him and it entirely leaves the son's possession. He does not “merit” in such a way that the son too retains possession of that inheritance of merit.

“Know”: Yesh Nohalin says concerning inheritance of the Land of Israel: this inheritance differs from all others. Elsewhere the living inherit the dead; here the dead inherit the living. Rabbi said: I shall give a parable. Two priestly brothers lived in one town; one had one son, the other two. They went to the threshing floor. The one with one son takes one share, the one with two takes two shares. They bring them back to their fathers, who divide equally again. “The dead inherit the living” seems to imply that the living first acquired the inheritance and the dead inherit it. Yet the teaching there indicates that the living acquired it only after it returned to them from their dead fathers, because a father does not transfer merit to his son.

“More than in life”: while alive they did not inherit the Land of Israel; after death they inherited and bequeathed it. “This explains”: Mas'ei says, “These are the names of the men who will inherit the land for you: Eleazar the priest and Joshua son of Nun. Take one prince, one prince, from each tribe to inherit the land. These are the names… for Judah's tribe," and so forth. Rashi explains "for you" as "on your behalf": each prince is his tribe's guardian, dividing its inheritance among families and individuals, choosing a suitable portion for each. What they do is effective as though appointed agents. "For you" cannot mean what it ordinarily means in Scripture, for then it should say "cause you to inherit." "Inherit" means they inherit for you, on your behalf and in your place, like "The LORD shall fight for you." End of quotation.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The explanation of his explanation: the princes divide each tribe's inheritance among families and individuals, as in Ha-Ish Meqaddesh, folio 42. Rava bar Rav Huna says in Rav Giddel's name, in Rav's name: how do we know that when orphans come to divide their father's property, the court appoints a guardian for them? From "Take one prince from each tribe." Accordingly it should use the transitive "cause to inherit." Since it uses the intransitive "inherit," "for you" necessarily means "on your behalf": they inherit as your agents so each can divide his tribe's inheritance as he sees fit. Since they are the inheritors, they also divide [TN100096] Scripture relies on the two initial occurrences of "one prince, one prince, from a tribe": apply them to these two. This appropriately explains the passage's arrangement.

Rema of Fano - continued

Scripture calls an inheritance continuing in a straight line, like a stream of water, "according to their families, their fathers' houses," nahalah. Its first acquirer, for himself and his generations, is called mitnahel: he makes himself a flowing stream to confer entitlement on his descendants, or on those preceding him, to bequeath to their children in a straight line. For inheritance traces backward as far as Reuben. This is "The dead inherit the living," and explains "According to your ancestral tribes you shall constitute yourselves inheritors," said of the land's division. Likewise, "You shall take them as a hereditary possession for your children" concerns slaves, likened to land.

Succession, yerushah, comes from elsewhere: a son from his mother or a husband from his wife. "Every daughter succeeding to a lineal inheritance": for her it is nahalah, but for those claiming through her merely yerushah. Scripture warns us not to rely on ancestral merit to inherit the land by nature and inherent property. Rather, "Justice, justice shall you pursue, that you may live and succeed to the land": acquired through our own merit, as though coming from elsewhere. The Torah too says "a succession of Jacob's congregation": scholars do not bequeath their crowns to their sons. Rather, as the inheritances.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

This adjusts the wording to its intention, but the difficulty remains: why not write "cause to inherit," in its plain sense? The master therefore expounds that the intransitive "inherit" teaches they cannot bequeath and divide the land to Israel as its agents unless they first inherit it themselves as agents of the earlier ones, the holy dead in the land, from whom the inheritance returns to their children.

"Know": while discussing the twelve princes whom the LORD commanded to allocate the land, the master explains Scripture's variations. It says "children" for tribes and "prince" for the men: "For the tribe of Dan's children, Prince Buqqi son of Yogli"; "For Joseph's children, for the tribe of Manasseh's children, Prince Hanniel son of Ephod"; likewise all, except Judah and Benjamin: "For Judah's tribe, Caleb son of Jephunneh"; "For Benjamin's tribe, Elidad son of Chislon," without "children" or "prince." For Simeon it says "For the tribe of Simeon's children, Samuel son of Ammihud": "children," but not "prince."

The master says Judah and Benjamin lack "children" because their princes belonged to the first generation itself, those leaving Egypt, not their children. Caleb was excluded from the spies' decree, as is known. Elidad must have been over sixty at that decree, for these were not included. Yesh Nohalin says in Rav Aha bar Ya'aqov's name: the decree applied neither below twenty nor above sixty. “The second generation”: the children of those leaving Egypt; hence “children.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Since”: see Bahya on why Scripture omits “prince” for Judah, Simeon and Benjamin. The master gives another reason throughout. Judah lacks “prince” out of respect for Caleb: calling him prince of one tribe alone would appear disparaging, since he was Joshua's companion in the spies' affair and Joshua was prince and leader of all tribes. Therefore Torah deemed it good [?] to omit the title. [TN100098]

“Perhaps”: possibly Judah's prince was another man because Caleb was elderly, seventy-eight, as in Parat Hattat, folio 118 [?]. They relieved him of public affairs, leaving him occupied only with the land's allocation, and therefore did not call him prince. To me, however, appointing another prince because of Caleb's age seems unlikely. At the conquest he was eighty-

Rema of Fano - continued

Aqavya told his son, “Your deeds will bring you near.” We already mentioned this in chapter 19.

Were it not written, one could not say it: “Behold, the LORD's inheritance is children,” after the manner of Moses' “Take us as Your inheritance.” “You are children of the LORD your God.” Before His works of old He merited for us the two crowns of “We shall do” and “We shall hear,” through His two crowns mentioned in the Zohar: “For in YH, the LORD, is the Rock of worlds.” All the more now, He will reign over us with a strong hand, lest—what would He do for His great Name? They truly call it the essential Name: the name of the very essence of will, which greatly desires our commandments. Those wise of heart will thereby understand why “If you walk in My statutes” adjoins the preceding passage.

“Years” follows his own opinion in the baraita in Ha-Holetz: “‘I shall fulfill the number of your days’: these are the years of generations. If he merits, they complete them for him; if not, they diminish them”—Rabbi Aqiva's words. He holds that Hezekiah's additional fifteen years came from his own allotment, which had been decreed diminished according to Isaiah's warning. The sages disagree: if he merits, they add; if not, they diminish. Tosafot already observed against them that life is among the three matters dependent on mazal, not merit—meaning merit to add to them.

Thus mazal does its own work, joined by

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

five and said, “I am still as strong today as when Moses sent me; as my strength then, so now, for battle, going out and coming in,” as Scripture records (Joshua 14). The first explanation is therefore preferable. [TN100099]

“Since Simeon”: Simeon and Benjamin lack “prince” because their inheritances adjoined Judah's. Benjamin's tribe: “Their allotted boundary lay between Judah's children and Joseph's children” (Joshua 18). Simeon: “Their inheritance lay within Judah's children's inheritance” (Joshua 19). Here in Torah too they are mentioned beside Caleb, so Scripture likewise omits their title, as with Caleb. “Scripture intended”: their princes suffer no diminution, for Scripture intended them in the initial repetition “one prince, one prince.” Since all other tribes' princes are already called princes, apply the repetition to these two tribes whose princes are not so named.

“Scripture calls”: the master incidentally explains nahalah from nahal, a stream. The first acquirer is a flowing stream from which the inheritance flows to his descendants like streams of water. “Called mitnahel”: the reflexive form means the inheritor makes himself a stream. “Or those preceding him”: if he has no children, the inheritance traces backward. “Stream” still applies: although the inheritance goes backward, its purpose is to bequeath to the predecessors' children in a straight line. “For inheritance”: as in Yesh Nohalin. “This is”: the dead inherit the living, and the living constitute themselves inheritors for the dead. “This explains”: “According to your ancestral tribes you shall constitute yourselves inheritors,” using the reflexive form, means for their dead fathers. Likewise “Take them as a hereditary possession” regarding slaves (Leviticus 25), since slaves are likened to land, as in Qiddushin.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Succession”: yerushah

Rema of Fano - continued

New Year's judgment: diminishing the allotment for one judged wicked, fulfilling mazal's indication for the righteous in quiet and rest, and treating intermediates appropriately. The reward for commandments does not exist in this world to add children, life and sustenance on their account: these are principal, remaining for the world to come, as will be explained. A person certainly eats fruits in this world: sustenance allotted from New Year to New Year, supplied generously, and additions for honoring Sabbaths and festivals and raising children in Torah, “for they shall eat the fruit of their deeds.” Sustenance dependent on mazal means ordinary sustenance decreed sufficient for us day by day. This is principal preserved for us now from prior merit. Present merit can sweeten this sufficiency and bring it from afar without toil or exertion. This is Rabbi Aqiva's opinion, “They complete,” concerning life, and the same applies to the rest.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

does not apply to something coming straight along the family chain, but from elsewhere. A husband inherits his wife outside the sequence of generations. A son inherits his mother along a straight line, being her offspring; nevertheless, because this is not according to his paternal family, it is as though from elsewhere. “Every daughter succeeding to a lineal inheritance”: Scripture uses both terms. For her, inheriting her father, it is like the sons; for those claiming through and inheriting her, it becomes yerushah, coming from elsewhere.

“Scripture warns”: it uses yerushah in “Justice, justice shall you pursue, that you may live and succeed to the land,” not nahalah. We must not expect to inherit the land from our fathers in the usual way, trusting in ancestral merit. Rather, pursue justice, and through your own merit succeed to the land: that succession comes from this merit. The Torah likewise uses yerushah, “a succession of Jacob's congregation.” Heleq says it is an inheritance from our fathers, yet it does not use nahalah, since it does not pass directly from father to son. Scholars do not bequeath Torah's crown and authority to their children as with other offices, as explained in chapter 19.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Rather, the crown of leadership depends on merit and deeds and comes through them by succession. At the end of Eduyot chapter 5, Aqavya ben Mahalalel's son says at his father's death: Father, commend me to your colleagues. He answers: I will not. Have you found a fault in me? No; your deeds will bring you near and your deeds will distance you.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Were it not written”: the master returns to nahalah. In a construct phrase it has two meanings. “House and wealth are an inheritance of fathers” means what fathers bequeath. “This is the inheritance of the tribe of Benjamin's children” means what they inherited. Thus the master interprets “The LORD's inheritance is children” (Psalm 127). Israel's commandments are the feminine waters producing arousal above, as is known. This is what the blessed LORD, as it were, inherits when Israel does the Omnipresent's will and is designated His children.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"After the manner": Moses said, "Forgive our iniquity and sin, and take us as Your inheritance," meaning that You inherit us, as Rashi explains. See the quotation from Yonat Elem below. "You are children": Moses tells Israel that the LORD granted them the merit of being children and, as it were, inherits. Previously He merited two crowns for us through our "We shall do" and "We shall hear"; all the more now, after they received the whole Torah.

"Through two crowns": inherited by Father and Mother, namely YH, yod and he. The master writes in Yonat Elem chapter 66: "Father and Mother bequeath two crowns to the Lesser Countenance; corresponding to them each Israelite merited two crowns at Sinai. 'Bequeath' has the sense of 'A father merits for his son,' and likewise 'These are the names of the men who will inherit the land for you': it does not say 'cause to inherit.' Likewise, 'Forgive our iniquity and sin, and take us as Your inheritance,' as explained in its place." See there; he means his explanation here.

"The name of the essence of will": His blessed Name is His will. "The preceding passage": the preceding section ends "I am the LORD." Its adjacency means: I, whose Name is YHWH, "if you walk in My statutes." Then the Name, My will which desires and inherits Israel's commandments, is complete.

"Years": returning to the Mishnah, "A father merits for his son." Rabbi Aqiva's "years" follows his view that, if deserving, they complete but do not add, because it depends on mazal. The father's merit becomes his children's mazal, as will be explained. According to the sages, who say merit brings additions and the matter depends on one's own merit, "A father does not transfer merit to a son" would be difficult.

"Tosafot": they ask from Mo'ed Qatan, where children, life and sustenance depend on mazal rather than merit. Although they answer that great merit clearly avails, as Shabbat says "Israel has no mazal," this answer is strained: "If he merits, they add" does not imply great merit. They themselves conclude that change of mazal is uncommon. "Does its own work": sin causes diminution. "Joined by New Year's judgment": this too is that judgment: the wicked are inscribed for death and lose part of mazal's decree, the righteous for life and fulfillment of mazal's indication. Likewise intermediates, if they merit before the Day of Atonement, as in section 3 above. For the wholly righteous it is fulfilled without toil or vexation, in quiet and rest. For intermediates it is fulfilled according to each one's deeds; some live long with much distress, illness and anger. See chapter 20.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The reward for commandments": Qiddushin's first chapter interprets "Whoever performs one commandment is treated well" as one commandment additional to his merits. He receives the fruits' reward while principal also remains. The Gemara objects from a baraita: whoever has more merits than sins is treated badly and resembles one who burned the entire Torah. Rava assigns that baraita to Rabbi Eliezer ben Ya'aqov, who says commandments' reward is not in this world. See Rashi. Apparently "Children, life and sustenance do not depend on merit" conflicts with the Mishnah; Rabbi Eliezer ben Ya'aqov also seems to disagree with the sages' rule for Sabbath and festival expenses: if he reduces, they reduce; if he increases, they increase. To avoid multiplying disputes, the master explains that the Mishnah and Rabbi Eliezer ben Ya'aqov agree. The latter and the baraita about being treated badly concern principal; the baraita about being treated well concerns fruits. This will be explained below.

"Certainly": the law does not follow the sages; rather, one eats fruits through present merit. "Additions": Festival chapter 2 says all a person's sustenance is allotted from New Year to the Day of Atonement, except Sabbath and festival expenses and his children's Torah education: if he reduces, they reduce; if he increases, they increase. This concerns fruits; sustenance depending on mazal concerns principal, ordinary sustenance narrowly sufficient. "This is principal": the principal set apart from the father's merit becomes the son's mazal, as the next chapter explains. "This sufficiency": "If he merits, they complete" means that through present merit they complete it generously; see the next chapter.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Although it says": although four hundred years are stated, the reckoning runs from Isaac's birth. This is "Calling the generations from the beginning," explained by the other verse, “The fourth generation shall return here”: three generations are 210 years, seventy per generation; when the fourth begins they return. Thus far from the mouth of the Gaon, my master and teacher, “RL” [?]. [TN100100]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Five names”: nefesh, ruah, neshamah, yehidah, hayyah. “From the later to the earlier”: beauty, as explained in Yonat Elem chapter 35: “Like a tree that gives it repose, in himself, his wife, his son and his daughter” [?], corresponding to the Name's four letters, through which the person is completed. [TN100101] Nefesh, from Asiyah, corresponds to the final he, Malkhut; ruah, from Yetzirah, to vav, Tiferet, comprising six extremities; neshamah, from Beriah, to the first he, Binah; hayyah, from Atzilut, to yod and Hokhmah, “power of what.” There one does not sit in the courtyard, but stands: “Those who had strength to stand in the king's palace.” Below it, sitting applies. This is the Gemara's meaning: “I saw Akhatriel YH, the LORD of hosts, sitting on a high and exalted throne.” Angels belong to Yetzirah, where sitting applies.

Yehidah is still lacking, corresponding to Keter, the Long Countenance. Through the Shekhinah's radiance He completes the Long Countenance's radiance in the righteous people's faces. Thus Yonat Elem explains: “He inherits for it NY, Keter” [?]. This correctly explains the author's words: the father's meriting beauty for his son corresponds to Keter. “I have seen those who ascend”: ascent hints at Keter, above YH, the tip of yod. “They are few”: very rarely is someone's soul from that level, which the Holy One completes from the Shekhinah's radiance. Thus “When he departed the city, its radiance departed, its splendor departed.” I wrote above, chapter 14; see the mystery there. [TN100102]

“Strength”: hayyah, yod, Hokhmah, “power of what,” and “glory, those having strength to stand in the king's palace,” as above, in Atzilut's Hokhmah. “Wealth”: neshamah, from Binah, on the north side. “From the north gold comes” hints at wealth. See the Zohar, Be-Midbar, page 229, expounding “Honor your wives so that you may grow wealthy”; a beautiful wife indicates neshamah. “Wisdom”: ruah, “which is the seventh” [?]; “whom I filled with the spirit of wisdom.” [TN100103] “Years”: nefesh, the final he, Malkhut, corresponding to Asiyah, where each person's years are numbered, as is known. See the Zohar, Bereshit, and the Book of Intentions. This seems to me the explanation of “from the later to the earlier”; examine closely. Thus Maharal “BQ” explained; may his lips be kissed. [TN100104]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“It says ‘merits’”: “not from the power”—the father remains in possession, and so forth [?]. When the father transfers merit, immediately upon his intention to merit, a holy soul descends according to his attainment. That soul is “the owner of a deposit, AYW” [?] until his son is ready; then he gives him the deposits. In truth he loses nothing, like lighting one lamp from another. This is the Zohar's “he inherits for it, and thus for it” [?]: even when he inherits, it is not given until he merits. This resembles “taking the reward of them all,” above, chapter 14, “SH” [?]. All things of holiness are like lighting a lamp: the first loses nothing. “Until he attains perfection himself”: the son, or he merits that soul through his father's merit. [TN100105]

“Conversely, a son transfers merit to his father”: he does not merit for himself, but loses it, like inheritance of the Land of Israel, where the dead inherit the living. The living acquire only after their inheritance returns from the fathers. The Land was divided into twelve portions corresponding to the twelve diagonal boundaries in the Land above, the twelve permutations of YHWH. Jacob had twelve sons and sixty-five families, as Rashi explains “The LORD… fewer”: five fewer than all the nations' families. The nations are seventy, Israel sixty-five, corresponding to the pronounced Name Adonai; hekhal, “palace,” is also 65.

Thus they inherited the Land from the dead. Their inheritance is reckoned from the dead's inheriting the Land above, for the living acquire from the dead. Twelve portions correspond to twelve YHWH permutations; Adonai in full spelling likewise has twelve letters. “This is Jacob, QVV from THA; QVV numerically hekhal; Jacob QVV numerically MHA [?], initials YQM, the flock, and so forth [?]; and HY is the four banners of Israel's princes, initials Adonai” [?]. [TN100106] When they inherited the Land below and it was divided among tribes, the tribes above acquired twelve YHWH permutations and twelve diagonal boundaries. When they began dividing below potentially, the inheritance returned to the fathers; there the twelve upper territories were divided actually. Then the inheritance returned actually to the sons. What was actual for the fathers was potential for the sons: this is “A son transfers merit to his father.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Who will inherit”: Eleazar the priest and the princes first took through the fathers' power, acting as their agents; afterward they caused Israel to inherit. “Like Caleb”: for Judah, Benjamin and Simeon it says “for the tribe,” while for the other tribes “for the tribe of the children” [?]. Since Caleb of Judah himself left Egypt, it does not say “children” of him. [TN100107] Elidad too is Eldad; he himself entered the land, having left Egypt. He was over sixty when the decree was issued, and it did not apply below twenty or above sixty. Where the prince belonged to those entering the land, it says “children, children of so-and-so.”

“Joshua's companion”: Joshua was prince over all tribes; calling Caleb prince of just one was unfitting. This resolves the difficulty that Judah, Simeon and Benjamin lack “prince,” unlike the others. Alternatively, Judah had another prince because Caleb was elderly, to lighten his burden; therefore it did not say “tribe” [?]. Benjamin and Simeon lack “prince” because they adjoined Judah. It relies also on the two initial occurrences, “one prince, a prince from a tribe, beneath him to inherit” [?]: one applies to Benjamin, the other to Simeon. [TN100108]

“Inheritance continues straight”: from one's father it is nahalah, from a flowing stream, by nature. The first, the father acquiring it, is called mitnahel, making himself a watercourse to confer entitlement on his descendants. “Or those preceding him”: if he has no children, his inheritance traces backward to Reuben, and the fathers bequeath to their children. “Succession comes from elsewhere”: what comes from someone other than the father is yerushah, not nahalah, such as a son inheriting his mother or a husband his wife. “Succeeding to a lineal inheritance”: both terms apply. For her, inheriting her mother [?], it is nahalah; for those inheriting from her, yerushah, coming from the side. [TN100109]

“The LORD's inheritance is children”: the Holy One's

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

children, as it were, are feminine waters below. Arousal below produces arousal above. This is “Take us as Your inheritance,” that we should inherit from Him. “For in YH is the Rock of worlds”: the two crowns are Hesed and Gevurah. Five mercies come from yod and five severities from he, as is known in the Zohar, Naso. This is “For in YH He forms worlds.”

“What would He do for His great Name?”: the essential Name is YHWH, the name of the essence of will, for ratzon, “will,” equals shemo, “His name,” as above, chapter 1. Feminine waters below cause arousal above and make the Name YHWH full. Because arousal above arises from arousal below, “What will we do for Your great Name?” is resolved: it means YHWH, not, as some explain, “Israel,” in which El is shared. YHWH too produces arousal above; see there. “The passages' adjacency”: the preceding section ends “I am the LORD,” followed by “If you walk in My statutes.” When am I the LORD, the great essential Name? When you walk in My statutes, producing arousal below.

“Years”: refers back to “A father merits for his son,” through “years.” “Joined by”: the father's merit, when he sanctifies himself during intercourse, becomes mazal for his son. The son is born under that mazal, indicating every good, and receives that holy soul by reincarnation, a pure soul. Conversely, if the father is wicked, his wickedness becomes his son's mazal. The son is born under bad mazal and receives an impure soul from some wickedness/ wicked person [?]. Thus merit, mazal and reincarnation are all one, and so forth. [TN100110]

Even when his mazal is good, New Year's judgment joins it: either fulfilling its good indication if he perfected his deeds or diminishing it if he is judged wicked. Thus, when the son merits for himself, principal remains for his children. He merits the fruits of his deeds for himself, so that this principal, also remaining to him from his father, comes with ease, not distress. “For the world to come, as will be explained”: for the generations coming after him. “Children, life”: likewise the rest, sustenance and so forth.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 28

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 29 (כט)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“We conclude”: from the preceding chapter. “Its plain sense”: the father's merit becomes the mazal of his actual son, as “A father merits for his son.” “Its expository sense”: his son through reincarnation. “Whoever understands”: whoever understands that the father's merit becomes his son's mazal will acknowledge this, because through the continuation of this discourse we also know and understand the faithfulness of “Visiting fathers' iniquity,” as explained below.

“In the ordinary course”: each begets his like; if the father is wicked, the son is presumably like him. “It then says”: the worthy father merits for his righteous son. “The two depend”: if this holds for punishment, all the more for the favorable measure. Moreover, the latter is greater, benefiting even those already born before he performed righteous deeds. “If the father attains it”: the father who sinned can benefit those born even before the sin, because deliberate sins become merits. “Moreover”: know that this is so. “In between”:

Rema of Fano

We conclude that in every generation people consume their allotted portion from earlier principal and present fruits, for the enduring merit of the first generation becomes mazal for those following it. This applies from fathers to sons in its plain and its expository sense. Whoever understands this will give thanks for what the continuation of our discourse teaches: the truth and uprightness of the attribute stated among the attributes of mercy, “Visiting fathers' iniquity upon children.” This applies specifically to those born after the transgression, before the father repents of it. In the ordinary course of the world, these maintain their fathers' deeds. It then says, “Showing kindness to thousands, to those who love Me and keep My commandments,” for the two depend on one another. The favorable measure, however, is greater, benefiting also those already born, as justice requires.

Great is the power of the superior repentance mentioned in Part I chapter 14. If the father attains it, deliberate sins, which harmed only those born afterward, now become merits, bringing understanding and benefit even to those born previously, for they are his offspring. This approach is true and clear. Moreover, otherwise, what becomes of those born in between? They between sin and repentance. “Certainly”: the father's merit and repentance benefit those born before the repentance, all the more those born before the sin, as stated. “Sweetens”: for the children, like their own merit, generously fulfilling what was decreed as narrowly sufficient, as in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Wherever”: the discourse's conclusion. “Ancestral covenant”: which never ends, as the sages say. “No additions necessary”: no need to say “If he merits, they add,” for merit suffices to fulfill mazal's decree. “The difficulty”: as Tosafot objected, in the preceding chapter. “Hagigah”: concerning Miriam, the women's hairdresser. Tosafot object from this to Rabbi Aqiva, who rejects “If he merits, they add.” “Tosafot answer”: there in Hagigah they wrote nothing of this, but left the question requiring investigation.

“For us”: we interpret “If he merits” as referring to his fellow through reincarnation. “Of whom it says”: “He devises plans so that no banished one be banished from Him" (II Samuel 14). According to the truth, this concerns reincarnation. "Devises," hoshev, comes from "a weaver's work," ma'aseh hoshev, which means weaving on two sides, as Rashi explains. "Here it is even more satisfactory": the days of the one swept away without judgment are added to a rabbinic scholar who is his reincarnation. He merits this by overlooking offenses. The years were initially decreed conditionally, either for the first or the second. There is therefore no objection to Rabbi Aqiva, who rejects additions through merit: here the addition comes from his own, as originally decreed. This resembles the Gemara's answer in Yevamot on his behalf concerning Hezekiah: they added from his own.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

"From fathers to sons in its plain sense": the father's merit becomes the children's mazal. "Its expository sense": through reincarnation, the soul from another man within him is also called his son. "Through merit that was robbed" [?]: if the father is wicked and a son is born before his repentance, the son presumably follows the father's deeds by nature. This is "A wicked person for whom things go badly": a wicked son of a wicked father. [TN100111] were potentially with their father during the corruption but did not repent with him. Certainly, then, as we said, the father's merit sweetens the children's mazal.

Rema of Fano - continued

Wherever you find ancestral merit, its principal remains theirs forever: this is truly the ancestral covenant. But what is set apart from them to benefit later generations, the children's mazal, may be exhausted through the son's sin. Thus the sages say, "Ancestral merit has ended": for him, at least, the principal is consumed. All this holds true according to Rabbi Aqiva, who assigns each son according to his mazal all he properly deserves, generously. No additions are then necessary. According to the sages, however, the difficulty is: if merit, why mazal; if mazal, why merit?

Their statement also presents a difficulty: its latter clause conflicts with the inference from its first, and its first with the inference from its latter. "If he merits, they add" implies that if he does not merit, they do not add, but never diminish unless he incurs guilt. If the latter clause is exact—"If he does not merit, they diminish"—it is enough for merit to prevent diminution, making the first clause itself difficult. Rabbi Aqiva's view is therefore preferable, and our discussion follows him.

Hagigah's first chapter says that if someone is swept away without judgment, his days are added to a rabbinic scholar who overlooks offenses against him. Tosafot answer in Rabbenu Isaac's name that what was decreed for

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Benefiting those already born": if he repented between transgression and birth, what becomes of her? That soul participated in the transgression but was not born then; afterward the son was born. Principal remaining for the world to come is called the ancestral covenant. Part of it comes to the person to benefit subsequent generations, becoming his son's mazal, as above; it may be exhausted through the son's sin.

"No addition is necessary": adding to his days, according to the sages, who hold, "If he merits, they add; if he does not, they complete for him" [?] the principal remaining from his father. [TN100112] "His days are added to a scholar": implies additions through merit, according to the sages.

"For us it is clear": the author clearly understands "If he merits, he takes his own share and his fellow's" as his fellow in the origin of their souls, a reincarnation whereby his fellow's soul is reincarnated in him. "A reincarnation turning from the opposite" [?], of which it says "to devise plans," like "a weaver's work," a woven lion on one side and eagle on the other. This hints at four reincarnations: the first called the chariot's lion; the second eagle; the third ox; the fourth man. Then “For four I shall not turn it back.” [TN100113]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Adam and David”: reincarnated one in the other. “Here it is even more satisfactory”: years of life were initially decreed conditionally for one, but he did not merit further, died prematurely and was reincarnated in another. Those years shortened for his fellow are added to him. Thus it one and diminished through his sin is not called an addition for the other, since it is a period appropriate to a human lifespan generally. For us, however, “If he merits, he takes his own share and his fellow's” clearly means his fellow in the soul's origin, among those of whom it says “He devises plans,” as in “a weaver's work.” We explained this in the Treatise on the Soul: “So that no banished one be banished from Him,” whose numerical value is “and from his fellow's soul”—as with Adam and David and their like. Here it is even more satisfactory: those years were initially aptly says “They added from his own”—literally his own, since the first soul is now in this one, of whom it can be said, “This is he.” This is “Fear of the LORD adds days”: the righteous called those fearing the LORD receive an addition. Through what? Through “the years of the wicked”: years shortened from the wicked are given to the righteous; see there.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

decreed conditionally for one of them. When the other merits and takes them, we aptly say: they added to him from his own.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 29

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 30 (ל)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Further examine”: the master expands the preceding chapters' explanation that the father's merit becomes the children's mazal. “The baraita”: Rabbi Meir says a person should always teach his son a clean trade, and so forth, for poverty and wealth do not arise from the trade: everything follows his merit. “They interpret”: Tosafot take “merit” as inexact, meaning mazal. “We too say”: according to their

Rema of Fano

Tosafot further examine the baraita at Qiddushin's end, “Everything follows a person's merit”: sustenance depends on mazal, not merit, so they interpret it as “according to his mazal.” We too say that the tanna certainly spoke precisely, for the mazal of his hour follows earlier merit, even from creation's six days, in the sense of Adam's well-known “measure” in Shemot Rabbah, as hinted in the preceding chapter. This merit feeds its owner fruits at his time in every generation, preserving the principal for himself. That merit becomes the approach, “merit” nevertheless remains precise, since mazal derives from earlier merit. It follows not only merit in his own generation or near it, but even merit from creation's six days.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

This follows the sages' exposition in Shemot Rabbah of “Where were you when I founded the earth?”—eifoh—as Adam's measure, eifah. All future souls were suspended within him. Since all incurred guilt through Adam's sin, each according to its enjoyment of that eating, according to how near its attachment was to the mouth that ate or how far away, so Adam's merits too were reckoned for all the souls emerging and his children [?]. According to that soul's measure of merit is the mazal of the body prepared for it after many generations. [TN100114]

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“At his time”: whenever they come into this world. “For himself”: for the world to come. “The children's future mazal”: for them these are principal. “It brings him to birth”: through reincarnation. “Under a heavenly aspect”: the constellations' aspect toward one another inclines the newborn to various qualities—bloodshed, sexual indulgence, coveting wealth and the like. Thus the sages say one born under Mars will shed blood. “So that he may overcome”: the righteous person born under this bad mazal overcomes his inclination.

“This is the mystery of trials”: the blessed LORD sets a person's birth under mazal indicating bad qualities, testing whether he will follow His Torah with greater strength against mazal, to receive good reward, or, Heaven children's future mazal.

Rema of Fano - continued

This mazal tests the righteous: it brings him to birth repeatedly under a heavenly aspect inclining his nature toward various qualities contrary to our Torah, so that he may overcome and defeat his inclination. This is the mystery of trials, of which it says, “To benefit you in your latter end.” It is also possible that a person already merited withstanding one trial, then returns to youthful days to be tested in a second, according to the indication of his birth-hour's mazal. This is “A son transfers merit to his father” when he withstands this new test, but not the converse. Abaye says in Tefillat Ha-Shahar, “We have a tradition: the good does not become bad.” Rava, however, does not agree. Even according to Abaye: you heard this of one matter; did he say it of two?

Through the final merit, however, the principal remains for the supreme mazal, which contains no test but is prepared for ultimate good. From it come children taught by the LORD, sitting forever upon His throne, living in the light of the King's face and nourished by the Shekhinah's radiance. We learn concerning the intervening generations that present merit cannot overturn mazal except with a strong hand. This was Abraham's power: Jupiter stood for him in the west and was set in the east.

Even here the discerning person should consider the condition made at creation to return all alterations of nature to their original condition. Perhaps Jupiter in the west was itself an alteration of nature forbid, follow mazal. “Withstanding one trial”: against the bad quality flowing from his previous birth's mazal. “Returns to youthful days”: reincarnates again under another bad mazal indicating another bad quality, to be tested again. “This is”: the second incarnation, called “son,” withstands that trial and transfers merit to the first incarnation, which withstood its own test long ago. The “father,” however, withstanding the first incarnation's test, does not transfer merit to the “son,” who may fail the new trial.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Abaye”: concerning Samuel the Small, whom they did not remove during the blessing against sectarians. “Rava does not agree”: he holds that even someone initially righteous may have reverted. Thus our statement that the father does not transfer merit to the son follows Rava, whose rulings prevail against Abaye except in Y'L QGM. [TN100115] “Two matters”: as in our case. Perhaps Abaye too agrees here that someone good may become bad.

“Through the final merit”: after explaining ancestral merit enduring for the first generation, even from creation, becoming mazal for physical offspring and children through reincarnation, the master adds that the final incarnation's merit, or that of the final generation at resurrection, likewise becomes mazal for children, life and sustenance. That principal remains for supreme Keter, called mazal. Of it "Children, life and sustenance depend on mazal" is said, as in "ḤKḤ," Part III sections 1–2 [?]. [TN100116] This final merit strengthens supreme Keter regarding these three: children taught by the LORD, life in the King's countenance's light, and sustenance from the Shekhinah's radiance.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"The intervening generations": from the first at creation to the last, or between first and final incarnations. "With a strong hand": great merit, as Tosafot in Yevamot say great merit certainly avails. "Abraham's power": the Holy One said, Leave your astrology, for Israel has no mazal. What do you think—that Jupiter is in the west? I will turn it and place it in the east. His great merit achieved this.

"The discerning person should consider": whether placing it in the east overturned mazal. The sages in Bereshit Rabbah expound "The sea returned to its strength" as returning to the condition required for the trial, and its return east was its original condition. Alternatively, the condition may have applied only to universal creations, such as the sea splitting and returning to its strength, and the sun standing still for Joshua and resuming its circuit.

Rema of Fano - continued

If we suppose that Abraham's Jupiter was originally in the west, we say that, without the merit of his offspring after him, which never ceases, mazal would already have returned to its original condition, making Abraham childless. This threatens us in every generation, but abundant kindness precedes it, remembering for the children all the patriarchs' merit, like a threefold cord not quickly broken. Their children too will forever add merits for those following them. No generation lacks someone like Abraham, and the world never has fewer than thirty-six righteous people outside the Land and as many within it, as aggadah states. Gid Ha-Nasheh has another reckoning concerning Hosea's homer and lethekh of barley.

Thus the sages' statement is understood literally: "Children, life and sustenance depend not on merit"—present merit—"but on mazal," the hour of birth, which itself depends on earlier merit, as stated. "The LORD's judgments are true, altogether righteous." We have further discussion in Em Kol Hay, Part I section 6 and the beginning of Part III; consult there.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

the Holy One stipulated. When, then, did Jupiter return west? "Perhaps": it was originally east, moved west through an alteration of nature to indicate Abraham would have no offspring, as required for his trial. "Alternatively": Jupiter was originally west, as now, but the question of returning to its original condition does not arise, because the stipulated conditions concerned universal creations, not such an individual matter.

"If we suppose": another solution is that mazal did not return to its original western position because of his offspring's merit. "This threatens us": returning, Heaven forbid, to its condition [gap] and destroying Israel's enemies. "Like a cord": Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. "As aggadah states": in Tiqqunim, tiqqun 20, on "Happy are all who wait for Him." In Gid Ha-Nasheh, folio 92, the other reckoning divides the world among forty-five righteous people, thirty in the Land and fifteen outside; see there. "Thus it is understood": through what we said in these chapters. "Section 6": concerning whether Israel has mazal or no mazal; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Everything follows his merit”: concerns sustenance. Tosafot there say it depends on mazal, not merit, so the intention is really mazal. The author explains that “merit” is exact, for merit becomes mazal, as in the preceding chapter: the mazal of his hour follows earlier merit.

“It brings him to birth repeatedly”: he reincarnates repeatedly under a heavenly aspect inclining his nature through the evil inclination contrary to our Torah, so that he may overcome it and be tested: “The LORD tests the righteous.” The mystery of trial is like Rabbi Aqiva and his colleague, and Resh Laqish. This is the rabbinic scholar who overlooks offenses. “Not because this one is greater, but because he overlooks offenses.” Therefore Rabbi Aqiva said “Our Father, our King,” in the sense of “Whether as children or as servants”: children from Atzilut, servants from Beriah. Hence he said “We have sinned before You,” unlike Rabbi Eliezer, who is entirely good. See chapter 9 above.

“Withstanding one trial”: in one incarnation, then reincarnating a second time, returning to youthful days to be tested in a second trial. “A son transfers merit to his father”: the second incarnation is called son relative to the first when it withstands the second trial. The converse does not hold: if he failed the second trial, success in the first does not repair the failed second one. Thus a father does not transfer merit to a son. Although Abaye says the good does not become bad, Rava disagrees. Even Abaye may mean one matter: someone doing good does not spontaneously do evil by transgressing that very matter; in another matter he may become bad.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 30

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Through the final merit”: referring above, the father's merit becomes the later son's mazal. At the end, “it became obligatory” [?] that all souls in the Body be exhausted: what becomes of the final merit in Israel, after which no person is born? [TN100117] He answers: its principal remains for the supreme mazal, prepared for ultimate good, likewise concerning children, life and sustenance. Children are the righteous taught by the LORD, “a servant shall sit upon His throne” [?]; life, in the King's countenance's light; sustenance, enjoying the Shekhinah's radiance. [TN100118]

“The intervening generations”: from Adam until rectification. Merit cannot overturn mazal except through great merit and a strong hand. This is Abraham's power. Perhaps an advance condition was made in creation's six days: Jupiter was initially created east, but “through Abraham's power mazal is overturned” [?] so that he would be tested; when he withstood the trial, it returned to its created eastern position. [TN100119] Alternatively, a condition of return applies only to universal creations such as sea and sun, not to an individual like Abraham.

“If”: so that it would not return to the original condition. Without their merit, the original western mazal would already have returned, making them childless. This threatens us in every generation: if we fail to do His will, He will return mazal west, making it “a head for the childless” [?], to destroy Israel, Heaven forbid. [TN100120]

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 31 (לא)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“We further examine”: the master returns to the Eduyot Mishnah begun above, section 28. “They already explained”: “In its time I shall hasten it”: without merit, in its time; with merit, I shall hasten it. “It will be in its time”: meriting does not mean hastening it outside its time. Rather, without merit salvation is merely in its time; with merit, “in its time I shall hasten it,” as explained shortly.

“Lamentations' midrash”: Rav Uqva said: on the night Abraham entered the Holy of Holies, the Holy One took him by the hand and walked with him along long and short paths. The Holy One said, What is My beloved doing in My house? He answered: Master of the world, where are my children? He replied: They sinned and I exiled them among the nations. The master interprets “long and short” as redemption: very long, after a time, times and half a time, without merit; short, with merit.

“Qohelet's midrash”: when Rabbi Bun son of Rabbi Hiyya died, Rabbi Zeira entered and expounded in his eulogy “Sweet is the worker's sleep.” Rabbi Bun resembled a king's worker.

Rema of Fano

We further examine the Mishnah's latter clause: “As for the number of generations, the appointed end is before Him.” It adduces proof from Egypt's redemption. Concerning salvation soon to come, they already explained: if they merit, “I shall hasten it,” and it will be “in its time.” These are the “long and short” paths in the midrash on Lamentations, “She became tributary,” where the Holy One walked with Abraham in the ruined Temple, and in Qohelet's midrash on “Sweet is the worker's sleep.” Both passages hint at the world's rectification through the third Temple's building, upon which resurrection depends. Its time is not fixed: without merit, long; with merit, short—“I shall hasten it.”

How can those very long periods become short, combining “in its time” with “I shall hasten it”? The verse's beginning explains: “The smallest shall become a thousand.” They will multiply exceedingly, quickly exhausting the souls in the Body—this is Tiferet, as the Ari explained. Then pollution ceases from all creation, encompassed in a thousand generations: sixty thousand myriads counted by their heads, even if all exist at once. Moses asked this: “May the LORD add to you a thousand times yourselves.” Its explanation will come in the next chapter. He then says, “And bless you,” beyond all reckoning, “as He spoke to you.”

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The king owned a vineyard and hired many laborers; one accomplished far more than the proper amount. The king took his hand and walked with him along long and short paths. At evening the workers came for wages, and that worker came with them and received full pay. The others complained: we toiled all day; he toiled two hours and received full pay! The king said: why complain? In two hours he worked properly more than you did all day. Thus Rabbi Bun son of Rabbi Hiyya learned in twenty-eight years what a seasoned student cannot learn in a hundred.

At resurrection Rabbi Bun's reward will be exceedingly great, as though he had lived and studied a hundred years. The master explains that the parable's “long and short paths” is not redundant: the Holy One likewise walks with Rabbi Bun concerning resurrection's timing, which can be long, after a lengthy interval, or short, when he merits. “The Temple's building”: Lamentations concerns the building, Qohelet resurrection.

“How”: he explains “If they

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

merit, I shall hasten it in its time" through the sages' statement that David's son comes only when the souls in the Body are exhausted. "The smallest shall become a thousand… I, the LORD, in its time shall hasten it" (Isaiah 60): if they merit, the souls in the Body are quickly exhausted, and it is in its time. "This is Tiferet": incidentally the master cites the Ari's interpretation: Tiferet is called the Body, as is known.

"A thousand generations": the Zohar, Bereshit, page 161: "The whole earth will be renewed through Moses at the end of days, in the last generation, fulfilling 'What was is what shall be.' Of him, 'From His dwelling place He looked…'; of him, 'A generation goes and a generation comes,' and no generation is fewer than six hundred thousand. Of him, 'The word He commanded for a thousand,'" and so forth; see there. This is a thousand times six hundred thousand.

"As Moses asked": after asking for a thousand times as many as the six hundred thousand, he said "And bless you," hinting at pollution's cessation. "Always": incidentally the master explains Israel's number. Though reckoned six hundred thousand, they exceeded it: "Six

Rema of Fano - continued

There was always an additional amount above six hundred thousand, indicating emergence beyond numerical bounds. Thus "Let his men be number": he prayed that they themselves should be the number, increasing endlessly, rather than number defining them, as at their first growth. Jacob said of himself, "I am men of number." He did not say metai with patah, but metei with tzere, bound to the number and subordinate to it. Those leaving Egypt were not bounded by their number: they have a lower measure but no upper measure. Therefore they were always more than six hundred thousand. In the first census they numbered six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty.

We have a gematria for this, learned from its context—certainly delicacies accompanying wisdom. The sages commonly say Moses equals all Israel. His name's letters, with the Shekhinah's yod that always shone in him, yield six hundred thousand. How? Mem times shin: 40 × 300 = 12,000; all multiplied by five = 60,000; all multiplied by ten = 600,000. The letters of Sinai, reckoned likewise, amount to 300,000. There is a Sinai above corresponding to Sinai below, hinted in Sinai's letters, whose fill is a second Sinai: together 600,000.

The great Name's letters, reckoned in this way, yield 1,500, the numerical value of melekh shalem, "king of Salem," in the large reckoning of the final letters mem, nun, tzadi, pe, kaf. The letters double in their full spellings, as is known: he doubles through another he. Double them: re'eh, "see," and aseh, hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty." If exactly six hundred thousand, one might think number defined, limited and fenced them against increase, Heaven forbid. To show the reverse—that they define and limit number and may increase without limit—their number exceeded exactly six hundred thousand.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"Thus": in "Let his men be number," Moses prayed that they themselves should be the number. "At their first growth": number then bounded them. Jacob therefore did not say metai with patah, separate from "number," which would mean "my men are the number." To diminish himself, he bound metei to "number," subordinating his men to the number that limited them. "A lower measure": not fewer than three hundred thousand [?]. [TN100122] "We have": a fitting explanation of this number through gematrias, delicacies accompanying wisdom. "The Shekhinah's yod": the Shekhinah does not descend to fewer than ten, as in Tiqqunim, tiqqun 26. "Multiplied by five": Moses' he. "Multiplied by ten": the Shekhinah's yod shining in him.

"Reckoned likewise": samekh times yod yields 600, multiplied by nun

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

gives 30,000; multiplied by ten, “a myriad” [?]. [TN100123] “Its fill is a second Sinai”: samekh's fill is mem-kaf, totaling sixty; yod's is vav-dalet, totaling ten; nun's is vav-nun, and yod's fill ten. Twice Sinai yields 600,000 [?]. [TN100124]

“The great Name”: Israel's 600,000 is hinted by Moses and Sinai; the 3,000 is hinted by YHWH. “Reckoned in this way”: yod times he is fifty; vav

Rema of Fano - continued

“do,” whose vowel points to a visible quiescent letter; likewise double the letters, yielding 3,000. [TN100121] The best-known indication of this filling of the essential Name, consisting of the letters themselves, concerns the future, when the Name will be read as written.

Regarding the unification and equalization of the two upper luminaries, hinted in the Name's last two letters, we reckon another gematria: yod times he is fifty; fifty times vav-he gives 550.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

times fifty is 300; he times 300 is 1,500. Melekh shalem also equals 1,500 under final-letter reckoning: final kaf follows tav, counting as 500, and final mem as 600. “Letters double in full spelling”: YOD, HH, VV, HH. “He doubles through another he”: although the great Name has other fillings—with alefs, yods or hes, as is known—its simple filling is this, because he with tzere draws another he, as is the rule for every tzere.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Double them”: in the pattern of re'eh, “see,” and aseh, “do,” where tzere under alef and shin draws he after it. “The vowel points to a visible quiescent letter”: he is quiescent in pronunciation but visible in writing. “Likewise double the letters”: he doubles with he, vav with vav, and yod doubles through its fill vav-dalet. The full spelling thus doubles the Name, adding another 1,500 under the stated method, totaling 3,000. “The indication”: the proof that this filling is simplest is its indication that the holy Name will in the future be read by its letters as written. Therefore it is doubled: one for writing, one for reading its letters, speedily in our days.

“Regarding”: the additional 550 is also hinted by another gematria in the Name. The two great luminaries' unification, “The LORD is God,” is hinted by vav-he: vav is Tiferet, hinting at YHWH; the final he is Malkhut, hinting at Adonai. They should be reckoned as one letter. For the two “languages” [?], yod times he is fifty; fifty times eleven, the value of vav-he, is 550. [TN100125]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Concerning salvation”: the appointed end refers to the future end. “If they merit, I shall hasten it, and it will be in its time”: as explained below, they multiply greatly and all souls in the Body are quickly exhausted. Then it is in its time, once the souls are exhausted, and “I shall hasten it” is fulfilled. “Long and short”: His walking with

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Abraham means a long or short end, as above: with merit, hastened and short; without merit, long. “Encompassed in a thousand generations”: there in the Body are a thousand generations, “and in their reincarnation” sixty thousand myriads. Therefore Moses said a thousand times: sixty thousand myriads.

“More than sixty”: “Six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty,” showing “ShK, servants of number” [?]. Number must not fence and limit them against increase; it must be subordinate to them, without bounds. They have a lower measure, not fewer than six hundred thousand, but no upper measure: they increase beyond it and therefore were always more. [TN100126] “Multiplied by ten”: for the Shekhinah's yod always shining in him.

“Reckoned likewise”: samekh times yod is 600; twice 600 is 4,000; ten times 3,000 is 300,000 [?]. Sinai above gives another 300,000, totaling 600,000. This is “God's chariots are twice ten thousand”: at the giving of Torah they were 600,000, “and remembrances, the LORD among them, Sinai in holiness” [?], meaning Sinai below and above; examine closely. [TN100127]

“The great Name's letters”: ten times five is fifty; six times fifty is 300; five times 300 is 1,500. “Large reckoning”: final kaf in melekh is 500, and “tav in shalem” is 600 [?]; the remaining letters have their ordinary values, totaling 1,500. [TN100128] “Letters double in their full spellings”: yod's fill is likewise yod, as with HH, VV, HH.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Double them, see and do; the pointing is combined with ‘also visible’” [?]: before us YHWH is written, while we read Adonai with YHWH's vowels. Thus YHWH's pointing implies another YHWH. Twice YHWH is the 3,000 remaining beyond the 600,000. This hints that the Name will in future be read as written, so the hidden part of YHWH is also YHWH. [TN100129]

I further heard from the Gaon Maharal, my master and teacher from Lviv: the sheva beneath the Name's yod consists of two yods. The holam above the first he is also a yod, making two hes. The qamatz beneath vav is patah and hiriq; patah is vav, making two vavs. The hiriq is yod: place it under the final he, making two hes. Thus the vowels indicate YHWH doubled. Thus I heard.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Hinted by the Name's last two letters”: vav-he. We reckon another gematria: twenty times vav-he, eleven, yields 550 [?], “the HYQ” added to the 600,000. Thus Israel's number is precisely indicated: 600,000 corresponding to Moses and Sinai; 3,000 to YHWH; and the last two letters, reckoned twenty times vav-he, yield 550 [?]. This is “God's chariots are twice ten thousand,” the 600,000. Why “the LORD among them”? It is YHWH, yielding 3,000 and 550 in the manner described. Also “Sinai in holiness”: Sinai below together with Sinai above number 600,000. [TN100130]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 31

Heqor Din - Part II (ב) - Chapter 32 (לב)

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - 1

“The standards”: after explaining Israel's number through the gematria of His Name's letters, the master says the standards likewise corresponded to the Holy One's Names. “Squares”: yod × yod = 100; he × he = 25; vav × vav = 36; he × he = 25; total 186. “Each separately”: not multiplied with another letter as in the previous chapter. “The designation Maqom”: the blessed LORD is called Place because this square, 186, equals maqom, as in Tiqqunim, tiqqun 42; see there.

“Four full spellings”: with alefs, YOD HA VAV = 39;

Rema of Fano

All the standards our ancestors had in the wilderness were likewise sealed with His blessed Names. Judah's camp-standard stood east, numbering 186,400. The thousands are the squares of the Name's letters, each separately, as known through the designation Maqom, “Place.” They are also four different full spellings of YHW, and the fill of EHYEH, 140, together with YHWH's fill, 46, both with yods. The hundreds correspond to the substitute Name's four letters.

Reuben's camp-standard stood south, numbering 151,450. The thousands are the squares of EHYEH's letters in the stated manner. This is also its full spelling with hes, as above. The

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

another alef filling, YOD HA VIV = 48; a he filling, YOD HH VV = 42; a yod filling, YOD HY VIV = 57; total 186. “EHYEH's fill”: its hidden part, LF from ALF, Y from HY, VD from YOD, Y from HY, totals 140. “YHWH's fill”: likewise its hidden part, VD from YOD, Y from HY, YV from VIV, Y from HY, totals 46. Together 140 and 46 total 186. “Both”: EHYEH and YHWH filled with yods, as stated. “The hundreds”: the 400 beyond Judah's 186,000 correspond to Adonai's four letters.

“In the stated manner”: alef × alef = 1; he × he = 25;

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

yod × yod = 100; he × he = 25; total 151. “With hes”: ALF HH YOD HH = 151. “As above”: in the previous chapter, he doubles with he. “The additional amount”: Reuben's extra 450 hints at YHWH filled with alefs, YOD HA VAV HA, totaling 45. Multiplied by its ten letters, ten times 45 is 450.

“MTz–PTz”: YHWH's letters under atbash are MTzPTz. See the Zohar, Bereshit, page 125, and below, Part IV chapter 9. In final-letter reckoning after tav, tzadi, the last letter, counts as 900. Multiplying the letters within each half, the first is mem times 900 = 36,000; the second pe times 900 = 72,000; total 108,000. “The same division”: each of the Name's two halves. “Enoch's reduced reckoning”: mem counts four, tzadi nine: 4 × 9 = 36. Pe counts eight, tzadi nine: 8 × 9 = 72. Total 108. “The additional amount”: the hundred beyond the thousands hints at Malkhut's hundred gates. It comprises ten, each itself comprising ten: a hundred. Therefore it is called the LORD's gate.

“Which is in the north”: judgment's place, on the left, hinted by this standard's location. “YH male”: these are Elohim's letters. “Combine male with yod”: 81; with he: 76; total 157. Also Elohim is 86 and its two sources total additional amount hints at “What is His Name?”—MAH, forty-five—multiplied by its ten letters, yielding 450.

Rema of Fano - continued

Ephraim's camp-standard stood west, numbering 108,100. The thousands hint at MTz–PTz, multiplying the letters in each half of the Name together, each flock separately. We count tzadi in both using the large final-letter values. Multiplying these letters in the same division according to Enoch's reduced reckoning also yields 108, the number of thousands. The additional amount teaches that this “gate of the LORD” has a hundred gates, as is known.

Dan's camp-standard stood north, numbering 157,600. The thousands hint at Elohim, which is in the north; its mystery is YH male, “full.” Combining the letters of male with yod separately and with he separately yields that number. Also Elohim and its two sources —the four-letter Name simple and filled with alefs—total 157. The additional amount is YH in the comprehensiveness of ten surrounding its full spelling from four directions. Alternatively, Elohim simple, squared and fully spelled, with the fill's letters and one for the whole Name, totals exactly 600, no more or less. All together precisely match Israel's number when first counted in Sinai's wilderness.

These were permitted to receive exposition from one master, Moses, and from Aaron after Moses withdrew, since the two were equal, Aaron repeating their lesson. Jesse, David's father, too was said to enter among a multitude and 71, together 157. These sources are simple YHWH, 26, and filled with alefs, 45: total 71, the value of alef-lamed-mem in Elohim. Yod-he remain, corresponding to this standard's additional 600.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The full spelling of YH is multiplied in the comprehensiveness of ten four times to reach 600. How? Double yod with yod and he with he, as in the preceding chapter. The first yod combines with the second yod and first he: ten times YH = 150. The second yod combines with the first yod and first he: ten times YH = 150. The first yod combines with the second yod and second he: ten times YH = 150. The second yod combines with the first yod and second he: ten times YH = 150. Total 600. Thus ten comprehensively surrounds YH's full spelling from four directions.

“Alternatively”: simple Elohim = 86; squared as A, AL, ALH, ALHY, ALHYM = 200; fully spelled ALF LMD HY YOD MM = 300. This full spelling has thirteen letters; the whole Name counts one. Thus 86 + 200 + 300 + 13 + 1 = 600.

“These”: incidentally the master explains the order of instruction described in Keitzad Me'abberin. Moses learned from the Almighty. Aaron entered and Moses repeated his lesson; Aaron moved aside. His sons entered and Moses repeated theirs; they moved aside. The elders entered and Moses repeated theirs; they moved aside. All the people entered and he repeated theirs. Moses departed; Aaron repeated their lesson. Aaron departed; his sons repeated it. They departed; the elders repeated it.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

The Gemara asks: why did they not all enter and learn from Moses? To honor Aaron, his sons and the elders. Why not let Aaron learn from Moses, his sons from Aaron, the elders from his sons, and all Israel from the elders? Since Moses learned from the Almighty, his teaching received assistance. The master adds that Moses taught because he equaled them all, as did Aaron, Moses' equal. No one else was entitled to teach them. His sons' teaching was like two interpreters, a model for future generations, and the elders likewise a model for proclaimers whom a sage appoints for a lecture.

“Entered among a multitude”: the master interprets this as expounding to all Israel, a multitude being 600,000. “Adding the Levites”: their count was 22,000. “The elders”: they too entered the order of instruction, making approximately depart among a multitude. In Ha-Ro'eh we hold that a multitude is no fewer than 600,000. Eleazar and Ithamar had two interpreters, with seventy elders as proclaimers beneath them. Adding the Levites to Israel's counted men—they certainly also entered the order of instruction—and those older than sixty, although their understanding resembled erased paper, it is reasonable to permit one proclaimer for 700,000.

Rema of Fano - continued

The excellence of the generation of knowledge is known: each equaled a thousand men. “The word He commanded for a thousand generations” teaches that the Torah's recipients equaled a thousand generations. “One man among a thousand I found”: Moses, equal to them all. “But a woman among all these I did not find”: he found his spouse only in Midian. Aggadah says of him: “‘May He add to you a thousand times yourselves’: this is from my own.” It also says that before the calf his face shone a thousand times more brightly than the rays of splendor, and they needed no veil.

Of him it says, “As in the days of your going out of Egypt,” addressed to Moses. Before it, “Shepherd Your people with Your rod”; “I shall show him wonders” refers to the collective people already mentioned. It indicates the comprehensive equivalence we stated. See Part III, end of chapter 6.

From this the wise may understand “I shall leave seven thousand in Israel.” Its transmission preceded from Sinai, from their presence there, as explained in Em 700,000. It is proper to permit one proclaimer for 700,000 in later generations. “Like erased paper”: as the sages say.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“The excellence is known”: the master also explains incidentally that Moses equaled not merely 600,000 but sixty thousand myriads. Each member of the generation of knowledge equaled a thousand, as the Zohar quoted in the preceding chapter says. “Only in Midian”: see Part III chapter 6 below. “Aggadah says”: this explains “This is from my own.” As you potentially number a thousand times 600,000, may the LORD increase you to actually number sixty thousand myriads. This blessing is from my own, for I too, among you, count as sixty thousand myriads.

“It also says”: in the Zohar, “section 2” [?]: “Once Israel sinned below, the Holy One took five thousand portions from that radiance.” [TN100131] For this reason too, before the calf the generation of knowledge had such great power that each counted as a thousand, able to bear Moses' face shining a thousandfold brighter. After the deed Israel lost that thousandfold greatness; along with the thorn the cabbage was struck. Moses' radiance, equaling theirs, necessarily diminished a thousand portions from its former measure. Despite this, sin made his face require a veil.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

It also seems possible to explain Moses' blessing accordingly: “May the LORD add to you a thousand times yourselves,” so that you count as sixty thousand myriads as before the sin. “This is from my own”: like one praying for others while needing the same himself. “Of him it says”:

Rema of Fano - continued

Kol Hay, until Elijah prophesied it at Horeb. Its essential interpretation concerns ultimate good, to be fulfilled before the fiftieth year's sanctification; from then onward even thought is forbidden. Whoever has not been blemished by a trace of foreign worship is assured of being counted among them. The verse's plain meaning, however, concerns the men of valor of that generation. Those dwelling in their towns were never fewer than 600,000 and never will be.

End of Part II.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“Shepherd Your people with Your rod, the flock… as in days of old. As in the days of your going out of Egypt, I shall show him wonders” (Micah 7). The prophet addresses Moses: shepherd Your people in the future as in days of old. “Your going out” refers to Moses; “I shall show him” to the people already mentioned, indicating their equivalence.

“From this”: Israel's number is at least 600,000. The wise may therefore understand Elijah's verse, “I shall leave seven thousand in Israel who have not bowed to Baal” (I Kings 19). It does not mean they diminish from 600,000 to only 7,000. This prophecy was already entrusted potentially at Sinai, as explained in Em Kol Hay, Part II sections 3 and 5. At Sinai it concerned the seven thousand holy sabbatical years from the world's seven cycles, before the great Jubilee. As chapter 27 explained, the good promises will certainly be fulfilled in those seven thousand years.

The prophecy delivered at Sinai thus says: I shall leave for Israel, those who have not bowed to Baal, those seven thousand sabbatical years, in which they will merit being counted among the other righteous recipients of good reward, “which no eye has seen,” and so forth. “Even thought is forbidden”: as at the end of chapter 27. “The plain meaning”: likewise does not mean all Israel will contain only 7,000; the prophecy concerns the men of valor alone. All Israel will not fall below their number. May the LORD increase them, and may Israel's number be like the sea's sand. Amen.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The thousands are the Name's squared letters”: 10 × 10 = 100; 5 × 5 = 25; 6 × 6 = 36; 5 × 5 = 25; total 186. Maqom likewise equals 186. “Four different fillings of YHW”: first, with yods, YOD HY VIV = 57; he filled with alef, YOD HA VV = 42 [?]; another filling with two alefs, YOD HA VAV = 39; with hes, YOD HH VV = 42; total 186 [?]. [TN100132]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“EHYEH's fill”: LF from ALF, “YOD from HY,” and so forth, total 140 [?]. The hidden part without the root totals 140. [TN100133] YHWH filled with yods totals 72. Remove the root, 26, leaving 46. 140 + 46 = 186, hinting at Judah's 186,000. The remaining 400 correspond to the substitute Name Adonai's four letters.

“Reuben's camp, 151,000”: the thousands correspond to EHYEH's squared letters, alef times alef, he times he, yod times yod, he times he, totaling 151. “In the manner” [?] of its full spelling with hes, ALF HH YOD HH, likewise 151. [TN100134] Reuben's additional 450 hints at YHWH's full spelling, value 45, as above, chapter 1. Its ten letters hint at ten times 45 = 450.

“The thousands hint at MTzPTz”: YHWH under atbash. “Its two halves”: MTz separately and PTz separately. Under the large final-letter values tzadi is 900. Forty times 900 = 36,000; eighty times 900 = 72,000. Together 108,000. “Enoch's reduced reckoning”: mem is four, tzadi nine: 4 × 9 = 36. Likewise PTz, pe times nine—pe is eight in reduced value, so 8 × 9 = 72. Total 108, the number of thousands. Ephraim's additional hundred hints at a hundred gates.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

I likewise heard from “RL BQ” [?]: this is the Gemara's dispute, one saying there were thirty-six pomegranates on the robe, another seventy-two. The former holds that the robe atones for evil speech, “and GH” [?] damages the first half of the Name, MTz, whose number is thirty-six pomegranates. The other says it damages the second half, PTz, seventy-two in reduced reckoning, requiring seventy-two pomegranates. Likewise the appearances of skin lesions are disputed, one saying thirty-six, another seventy-two. All share one intention, for lesions come through evil speech. [TN100135]

YHWH under atbash equals 300; Elohim's full spelling likewise equals 300. The righteous cause Elohim, judgment, to turn to “MDH” [?], or conversely YHWH's 300 to Elohim. This also concerns lashon, “tongue,” numerically 386, the value of Elohim simple and full. The wicked turn the tongue to evil, evil speech; the righteous reverse it, “the eighty-six to the three hundred of YHWH” [?]. Examine closely. [TN100136]

“Dan's camp, 157,000”: the thousands hint at Elohim, on the left, north. Its mystery, YH MLA, consists of Elohim's letters. Combining MLA with yod, MLA Y, gives “GA,” four [?]; MLA with he alone is another 157 [?]. [TN100137] Also Elohim and its two sources: one source is the four-letter Name, for kaf-vav, the hidden part of its numerical designation, is 86, Elohim's value; also the simple 26, and the second four-letter Name's full spelling, 45. Thus 45 + 86 + 26 = 157. [TN100138]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - II - Chapter 32

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“The additional 600”: YH comprehensively multiplied by ten: ten times YH is 150, four times 150 is 600. Alternatively, simple Elohim is 86; squared as A, AL, ALH, ALHY, ALHYM is 200; full, ALF LMD HY YOD MM, is 300. The inclusive Name in its fill means the letters of the full spelling, ALF LMD HY YOD MM, which are fourteen letters [?]: total exactly 600, neither more nor less. [TN100139]

“One proclaimer”: seventy elders correspond to seventy proclaimers. Israel with the Levites and elders above sixty totals 700,000, giving 10,000 for each proclaimer. “This is from my own”: precisely his own, since he equaled them all.

“Before the Sabbath's sanctification”: the last sabbatical cycle before the great Jubilee, six thousand years and the final millennium of desolation. After that Jubilee even thought is forbidden, as above, “Silence is a fence for wisdom.” Throughout this there is ultimate good for those who did not bow to Baal, in that sabbatical cycle. “I shall leave seven thousand in Israel”: those who did not bow to Baal. The plain meaning concerns that generation's men of valor, of whom only 7,000 will remain; the rest of Israel will not fall below 600,000.

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 1 (א)

Yad Yehudah: כה · כד · כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“Thus far,” etc.: after explaining in the two preceding parts the matters of judgment on Rosh Hashanah and the developments attending it, the author now explains the judgment of the world

Rema of Fano

Thus far the Lord has helped us investigate the judgments of this world, considering what we thought useful to one who has seen and knows the sages' words as firmly planted nails, so as to grasp their meaning truly and uprightly. But on the day of death, which the early of souls after death. This is the second judgment mentioned at the beginning of the treatise.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

“The early rabbis”: in the Zohar, Vayeḥi, page 477: “That day on which a person departs from this world—that day is the day of great judgment," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

"For each person on his own day": this judgment is unlike the judgment of this world, which takes place on Rosh Hashanah at one time for all the living. Rather, this judgment is sealed for each individual on the day of his visitation, when he departs from this world.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"And rest": without needing to undergo reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"To return": through reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Concerning this": concerning this day of judgment Qohelet said, "Before the evil days come." In Qohelet's words "The wheel is broken," the mystery of reincarnation is hinted at, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Our sages," etc.: in the Jerusalem Talmud, Sotah, the chapter Hayah mevi: Why are water, earth, and writing brought in the case of the sotah? Water: from the place from which she came. Earth: to the place to which she is going. Writing: before whom she will give judgment and account. There we learned: Aqavyah ben Mahalalel says, "Consider three things, and you will not come into the power of rabbis call, for each person on his own day, "the day of great judgment," the God of judgment will judge the soul's recompense: whether it will enter the Garden of Eden or Gehinnom, how it will be punished, and in what it will delight. Likewise, whether it will go to the end and rest, or whether it must return along this road again. Concerning this, Qohelet explicitly says, "Remember your Creator, before the evil days come" (Ecclesiastes 12:1), and "The wheel is broken at the pit" (Ecclesiastes 12:6). Our sages expounded it as "your well, your pit, your Creator," in accordance with what we learned: "Know from where you came, where you are going, and before whom you will give judgment and account" (Vayiqra Rabbah 18). Corresponding to these, in the sotah rite, are water, earth, and writing.

Rema of Fano - continued

One of the commentators noticed the repetition that follows in the tanna's words. He was not content to say that the tanna first states the teaching and then explains it. Rather, in the first clause he gives weight to the soul's quarry, from which it came beneath the Throne of Glory, and to which it returns, according to the well-known teaching. He warns against treating it lightly, for she is a king's daughter. In the concluding clause he warns him concerning the body's lowliness and its vicissitudes. This is sound. Yet we must still consider the third clause, "Before whom you will give judgment and account," for he did not explain the reason for its repetition. According to his approach, one may say that the first clause concerns the judgment one will give concerning "do good": whether he transgression: know from where you came," etc. Rabbi Yehoshua of Sikhnin said in Rabbi Levi's name: Aqavyah expounded all three in one verse, "Remember your Creator": your well, your pit, your Creator. Your well: from the place from which you came. Your pit: to the place to which you are going. Your Creator: before whom you are going. The explanation is: "your well"—a fetid drop, semen; the water in the sotah rite alludes to it. "Your pit"—earth. "Your Creator"—in its plain sense; therefore in the sotah rite the passage containing the Name is written. The author brings this statement in passing in order to proceed from it to explain the Mishnah of Aqavyah ben Mahalalel.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

"One of the commentators" on tractate Avot finds the repetition in this Mishnah difficult. At first the tanna says, "Know from where you came, where you are going, and before whom you will give judgment and account"; afterward he repeats these three things, "From where you came," etc. This is unnecessary length and repetition. He should have said at the outset: Know from where you came—from a fetid drop; where you are going—to a place of earth, maggots, and worms; and before whom you will give judgment and account—before the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

“He was not content”: that commentator was not content to say that the tanna first states the teaching without particulars and afterward explains it, as they say in many places in the Talmud.

Yad Yehudah - י

Rather, the commentator's view is to resolve the repetition as follows: in the first clause the tanna speaks from the standpoint of the human being's soul, the importance of its quarry and its place. Therefore he teaches the person to know “from where you came,” so that he will always remember the quarry of his soul beneath the Throne of Glory. “Where you are going” concerns the preciousness of returning [?]: the soul too returns after death to the place where its tent was at first. The tanna's intention is that a person contemplate has fulfilled the soul's prescribed duties. In the concluding clause he warns concerning “turn from evil,” so that the account will not come to discuss the body's filth and desires.

Rema of Fano - continued

But what appears to us straightforward in the tanna's intention is this: when one who has kept his soul pure gives judgment and account, the Holy One, blessed be He, praises him before His entire retinue, as it is written, “Israel, in whom I shall be glorified.” He calls the fathers of the world, together with their children, and says, “Happy are you that this one came forth from your loins!” Therefore the tanna leaves the first clause unspecified, saying only “before whom,” and no more, for it is known that all the worlds rejoice with him. At the death of a wicked person it is not so: the Holy One, blessed be He, alone examines his judgment, for He knows hidden and manifest things. How much disgrace befalls the one who causes a great King over all gods to attend to a vessel full of shame and humiliation! Therefore he expands the titles only in the concluding clause; for if they were merely for their own sake, would that need to be said?

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

the importance of his soul's place and refrain from degrading it with the filth of transgressions. [TN110001]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“For she is a king's daughter”: a portion of God from above. Afterward:

Yad Yehudah - יב

“In the concluding clause” the tanna repeats “From where you came,” etc., concerning the bodily part. In contrast to the soul's importance, he mentions the body's baseness and lowliness: it comes from a fetid drop, and its end is earth, maggots, and worms. His intention is to warn a person to cleanse his heart, guard his soul, and not occupy himself [with the body]; for, since his body is low and base and its vicissitudes are sharp and slight [?], he can easily lose it.[TN110002]

Yad Yehudah - יג

Thus this interpretation accounts for the repetition.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“He did not explain”: the commentator remained silent concerning the third clause, “Before whom you will give judgment and account.”

Yad Yehudah - טו

“According to his approach”: that of the commentator who holds that the first clause concerns the soul and the concluding clause the body.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“One may say” this also concerning the reason for the third clause's repetition, namely what he teaches:

Yad Yehudah - יז

“In the first clause”: “Before whom you will give judgment and account.”

Yad Yehudah - יח

The tanna intended the judgment a person must give concerning positive commandments. If he sits idle and neglects one of them, and his soul has already undergone the appropriate number of reincarnations, so that it will not be reincarnated again, this will be a crookedness that cannot be repaired. Therefore in the first clause, which concerns the soul, the tanna warns about observing positive commandments, for these too are reckoned from the standpoint of the soul.

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Whether he has fulfilled the soul's prescribed duties”: namely, when it has already been reincarnated the appropriate number of times. If it still needs reincarnation, he can repair the neglect of the commandment in a subsequent reincarnation; for one of the reasons [?] for reincarnation is that a person may fulfill all the commandments. It is not so when his soul will not come into reincarnation again.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“In the concluding clause,” where the tanna again repeats “Before whom you will,” etc., his intention is to warn and admonish concerning negative commandments, which are reckoned from the standpoint of the body.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“But,” etc.: the author gives another, more straightforward reason for the repetition of the third clause. The first clause warns a person to remember the praise, honor, and greatness that will come to him when he gives judgment and account and is found to have kept his soul pure, without sin. Then the Holy One, blessed be He, and His entire retinue praise him, as stated in the Zohar. In the concluding clause the tanna repeats this clause and warns a person also to remember the opposite: the disgrace and lowliness that will come to him if he is found guilty in judgment. There is no greater disgrace than causing the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, to attend to him. Thus, in the first part this clause resembles the first two clauses, which likewise mention the soul's importance; in the concluding part it likewise resembles those two clauses concerning the body's lowliness.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Therefore”: to indicate the reason for the repetition, the tanna leaves the first clause here unspecified and does not explain, “Before the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He.” For [gap], by leaving it unspecified he includes everyone with Him: all the worlds rejoice with him, “as mentioned” [?]. It is otherwise in the concluding clause, where he specifies and says, “Before the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He,” for He alone, blessed be He, examines a wicked

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

person's judgment.[TN110003]

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Therefore he expands” the titles too, saying, “Before the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He.”

Yad Yehudah - כד

“For if they were merely for their own sake”: if he mentions these titles only to indicate before whom one stands, the question arises: why elaborate the titles? Do we not know that the blessed Name is King of the kings of kings? This is what the author added, following the commentator's approach, concerning the reason for the third clause's repetition.

Yad Yehudah - כה

To me, according to the commentator's approach, it seems more straightforward that by repeating the clause the tanna indicated that both soul and body must give judgment and account in the future, as stated in the chapter Ḥeleq concerning Rabbi and Antoninus.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“What we thought useful,” etc.: that is, what we thought useful to one who has seen, etc. “The day of great judgment,” etc., is the second judgment, after death, of the two judgments we mentioned above at the beginning of the book. In the Zohar, Vayeḥi, page 472: “That day on which a person departs from the world—that day is the day of great judgment.” See Zohar, page 248, “times that pass”; see there. “Or whether it must return”: that is, undergo reincarnation.

“From where you came” corresponds to “your well,” which is a fetid drop; “where you are going” corresponds to “your pit,” a place of earth, the pit; and “before whom,” etc., corresponds to “your Creator.” “The repetition,” etc.: at first he said, “Know from where you came,” etc., and explained nothing; afterward he returns and explains, “From where you came,” etc. He should have said at once, “From where you came—from a fetid drop,” and likewise throughout. That commentator was not content to resolve this by saying that he states the teaching and then explains it. Rather, the first clause concerns the soul's quarry: know from where the soul came—from beneath the Throne of Glory; and where the soul is going—to its first place beneath the Throne of Glory. See that you do not treat it lightly or spoil it. In the concluding clause, when he explains “From where you came—from a fetid drop,” he concerns himself with the body. Thus that commentator explained it, and it is sound. One who examines Zohar Ḥadash, Song of Songs, folio 72, will see that the Zohar explains it in this way. Its words are: “When he comes to know his body, then he begins to know his soul.” See there at length.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

But concerning the third clause, “Before whom,” etc., he explained nothing. One may explain that at first he says, “Before whom will you give judgment and account—before the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He”; he voices a complaint concerning “turn from evil,” so that He will not bring them to account for their iniquities from the body's filth and desires.[TN110004]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 1

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Only ‘before whom,’ and no more,” etc.: that is, he did not state His titles, “King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He,” because all the worlds rejoice with him, not the Holy One, blessed be He, alone. It is otherwise in the concluding clause, which concerns the wicked: the Holy One, blessed be He, alone examines his judgment, and great disgrace befalls one who causes the great King, the King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, to attend to a vessel full of shame. Therefore he expands the titles, “King of the kings of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He.” For if these were needed merely for their own sake, the difficulty is: would that need to be said?

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 2 (ב)

Yad Yehudah: כח · כז · כו · כה · כד · כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“We understand”: although the objection is raised, “Could you suppose everyone?”, the actual truth is nevertheless that everyone, even the righteous and intermediate, descends to Gehinnom. The objection “Could you suppose?” arose because the questioner thought Rabbi Ḥanina meant that everyone descends and does not ascend. Against this he objects, and the answer is that he meant everyone descends and ascends. See below, chapter 8.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“To rescue another”: that is, to save someone else. The righteous person

Rema of Fano

We read in the chapter Ha-zahav (Bava Metzia 58b): Rabbi Ḥanina said: Everyone descends to Gehinnom except three. Could you really suppose that everyone descends? Rather, all who descend ascend, except one who has intercourse with his neighbor's wife, one who publicly humiliates his fellow, and one who gives him a disparaging name, even though he is accustomed to it.

We understand this “everyone” to include the righteous and the intermediate. Some descend to rescue another, as will be explained concerning our father Abraham, peace be upon him, in chapter 17. Some descend for purification, to see how great is His goodness, blessed be He, in delivering them from the lowest Sheol—all the more in light of what we shall add in descends to Gehinnom and passes through it to bring up some wicked people with him, as explained in the Zohar, Pinḥas, page 405, on the verse “For there is no action or reckoning in Sheol, where you are going.” Its words are: “‘Where you are going’—do all people of the world go to Sheol? Yes, but they ascend immediately, as it is written, ‘He brings down to Sheol and brings up,’ except those sinners who never entertained repentance, who descend and do not ascend. Even the wholly righteous descend before Him, and [revive?] openings, drawing some sinners out from there and bringing them up above; there they cause them to entertain repentance," etc. [TN110006]

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

Some of the righteous descend "for purification," to purge some slight iniquity. Although judgment does not require descent to Gehinnom on its account, a person nevertheless descends to see how great is His goodness, blessed be He, in rescuing him and exempting him from Gehinnom's punishment. Meanwhile that iniquity is purged, and afterward he ascends.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"All the more": one may say that the righteous too descend for purification according to what will be explained below in chapter 16: the blessed Name decrees that righteous people who entertained transgression descend to Gehinnom to take with them wicked people who entertained repentance. See there.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"To see its cavity," etc.: as the sages said in the first chapter of Taʿanit: The world is one sixtieth of the Garden; the Garden one sixtieth of Eden; and Eden one sixtieth of Gehinnom. Thus the whole world is like a pot's lid in relation to Gehinnom. Since Gehinnom is a road to the Garden of Eden's gates, a righteous person follows

Rema of Fano - continued

chapter 16. Some descend to see its cavity, in relation to which the whole world is like the lid of a pot. It is a road to the gates of the Garden of Eden, like the wilderness of the peoples for those entering the Land; it will in the future be sanctified with the Garden's sanctity, as will be explained. We mentioned this in the treatise Ha-nefesh; see there. Concerning this, certainly, Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai wept when he said, "I do not know by which road they are leading me." For even merely passing through it to go from there to the Garden of Eden is exceedingly terrifying. In addition, the perfected man's words contain an admonition to others by an a fortiori inference.

These two straightforward approaches will suit our explanation of our master Moses' words, peace be upon him: "Give ear, heavens," and "Let the earth hear," according to what they expounded: I do not know where my soul is going. It is written, "Who knows the spirit of human beings, whether it ascends upward, and the spirit of the beast, whether it descends downward to the earth?" I entrust it to both of them: wherever it goes, let it be well placed. This is an exceedingly astonishing statement for a man such as he, even if we suppose that he spoke only of the vital soul. Rather, it is as we have said. In Part IV, chapter 2, we shall hint at another way of understanding these words.

Or he may intend what King David said, peace be upon him (Psalm 141:10): "Let the wicked fall into his nets; together am I." That is, I willingly share their distress; far be it from him to fall. Rather, "until I

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

his road, going from there to the Garden of Eden, although there are other roads to it. The reason is to see the "curse" of Gehinnom [?], which will in the future become holy with the Garden's sanctity. This is no degradation for the righteous person; on the contrary, by passing through there he weakens impurity's power and gives strength for it to become holy in the future. Likewise the wilderness was Israel's road for entering the Land of Israel. The Zohar, Terumah, page 250, explains that the Other Side rules in that wilderness, and Israel traversed it against its will and broke its strength for forty years.[TN110007]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"As will be explained": below, Part V, chapter 1; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Concerning this": certainly Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai wept over this road, as stated in the first chapter of Berakhot. When Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai became ill, his disciples came to visit him. When he saw them he began to weep. They said to him, etc., "Why are you weeping?" He said to them, etc., "Moreover, there are two roads before me, one to Gehinnom and one to the Garden of Eden, and I do not know along which they are leading me. Shall I not weep?" The author explains that this perfected man, Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai, of whom they said that he left unstudied neither a small matter nor a great one, etc., was certainly assured that they would not lead him to Gehinnom. Rather, he feared lest they lead him to the Garden of Eden by way of Gehinnom, which is awesome, exceedingly alarming and terrifying. Thus he said there were two roads before him for going to the Garden of Eden: one by way of Gehinnom, and one to the Garden of Eden without passing through Gehinnom.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

"In addition," etc.: Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai's words, which in their plain sense suggest that he feared being led to Gehinnom, serve as an open admonition to others, so that they will fear Gehinnom by an a fortiori inference. If Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai fears it, how much more should someone who has not attained his rank be afraid.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"These two straightforward roads" to the Garden of Eden, which we gave as the plain explanation of Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai's words, will also suit the interpretation of what our sages expounded in Midrash Rabbah, Haʾazinu. Its words are: Another pass through," in the manner of "those passing through the valley of weeping," which we shall mention again. It is possible to explain "together am I" with reference to the upper David that the Holy One, blessed be He, has. He sits and teaches: "My son Meir says: When a person suffers, what expression does the Shekhinah use? 'Qallani from my head; qallani from my arm.'" This accords with the comprehensive stature given to Adam the first, which they expounded in Shemot Rabbah, chapter 40, on the verse "Where were you when I founded the earth?" Qallani will be a euphemism for its opposite, as Abaye explains there in the chapter Gemar ha-din. Rashi explains that he expounds qilelat Elohim as qal leit, "not light." He says that He suffers from the heaviness of the head and arm over the creation of a person suffering for his iniquity. On this interpretation, the head suffers over the thought of creating him and the arm over the deed.

Rema of Fano - continued

Alternatively, this heaviness may be explained through the sweat of the living creatures when the Throne of Glory weighs upon them in an evil time. In a time of favor, it bears those who bear it, and the living creatures have neither labor nor toil. Therefore the river of fire flowing from their sweat falls upon the heads of the wicked who cause this to them. Or the expression may derive from "Your brother will be degraded"; or from "The world is light for me," as Rava explains there, intending anguish, as Scripture explicitly says, "My soul grew short through Israel's toil." Or it may derive from "whom the king of Babylon roasted," in interpretation: Why to heaven and earth? Rabbi Ḥ. said: To what may this be compared? etc. Likewise they said to Moses, "Why do you charge heaven and earth?" He said to them, "I am destined to die and do not know where my soul is going, whether to heaven or to earth" [gap], etc. [TN110008]

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

"This is an astonishing statement": that Moses, the choicest of the human species, should say, "I do not know where my soul is going."

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Even if we suppose" and explain that Moses' words "I do not know," etc., concerned not his higher soul but only his vital soul, the astonishment nevertheless remains. At his exceedingly great rank, he would not be uncertain about his vital soul either. Rather, it is certainly as we said: the uncertainty was only lest he enter the Garden of Eden by way of Gehinnom.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Or he may intend": Moses said, "I do not know where my soul is going," because my soul might go willingly, for good, to share with those descending to Gehinnom and be distressed in their distress, so as to rescue them. Thus the expression "my soul is going" is fitting, suggesting that it goes of itself, unlike

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai, who said, “They are leading me.” This follows King David's statement, peace be upon him: “Let the wicked fall into his nets; together am I, until I pass” (Psalm 141).

Yad Yehudah - יג

The meaning of “together am I” is: I too shall be there, but only to share in their distress.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Far be it from him to fall”: sharing with them does not include sharing their fall. The words “together am I” are not connected with “let them fall”; rather, they mean that I shall go together with them and share their distress, but only “until I pass” there to rescue them. [Gap.] “Those passing through the valley of weeping”: below, Part V, chapter 6.

Rema of Fano - continued

the manner of “The Lord is judged in fire,” which we mentioned in Part I, chapter 13. Likewise it is written, “I shall bear and deliver.”[TN110005]

Therefore David said, “Together am I, until I pass through” the way of the tree of life, when the guarding cherubim and the flame of the sword are removed from the gates of the Garden of Eden. For then the spirit of impurity will pass from the earth: it is what prevents the Shekhinah from dwelling below. The hint is in the Masorah: aʿavor occurs three times in full spelling. One is in the haftarah Shimʿu: “You said, ‘I will not serve,’ for upon every hill.” It is written with dalet and read with resh. Thus foreign worship obstructs, and Tyre was filled only through Jerusalem's destruction. “He has fenced off my path, and I cannot pass”: throughout the days of purification He too is a God who conceals Himself. “Together am I, until I pass”: this is the hoped-for repair, when the glory of the Lord will fill the Tabernacle, as we have said.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“It is possible to explain,” etc.: since this verse has come to hand, he explains it in further ways.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“With reference to the upper David”: in the Zohar, Qedoshim, page 152: “‘Turn to me and be gracious to me’—did the Holy One, blessed be He, have no one in the world as beautiful as David, that he says, ‘Turn to me and be gracious to me’? Rather, thus we learned: the Holy One, blessed be He, has a place called David, appointed over many supernal multitudes and camps. When the Holy One, blessed be He, desires to have mercy on the world, He looks upon it and shines His face upon it,” etc. “Because that upper David seeks the Holy One's mercy to cleave to Him, David said, ‘Turn to me and be gracious to me.’” Thus far. The intention is Malkhut, called David because it is his attribute, as is known. The author explains that David said “together am I” with reference to the Shekhinah, as though the Shekhinah were saying it, as he shortly concludes.

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז

“He”—the Holy One, blessed be He—“sits and teaches,” as stated in the second chapter of Ḥagigah (15b). Rabbah bar Shila encountered Elijah and said to him, “What is the Holy One, blessed be He, doing?” He answered, “He is reciting teachings from the mouths of all the rabbis,” etc. He said to him, “Now He is saying: My son Meir says: When a person suffers, what expression does the Shekhinah use? ‘Qallani from my head; qallani from my arm,’” etc. This saying is in the Mishnah, in the chapter Nigmar ha-din (folio 46), on “For a hanged one is a curse of God”: Rabbi Meir said, “When a person suffers,” etc. Rashi explained “a person suffers”: punishment comes upon him for his iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

In the Gemara there: How is this implied? Abaye said: Like one who says qal leit, “not light.” Rava said to him: If so, it should say, “My head is heavy upon me; my arm is heavy upon me.” Rather, Rava said: Like one who says, “The world is light for me.” But this [word] is needed for its own subject! If so, Scripture should say meqallel, “one who curses”; why qilelat, “curse of”? Say instead that it comes entirely for this purpose! If so, Scripture should say qallat; why qilelat? Infer both meanings. Rashi explained: Qal leit—“I am not light.” If so, the Mishnah's qallani is not a euphemism, but “light I am not”; it should say, “I am heavy.” “The world is light for me”: he uses a euphemism and does not wish to mention heaviness in himself. Thus far. [TN110009]

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

“In accordance with the comprehensive stature” mentioned in Shemot Rabbah. Its words are: While Adam the first lay as an unformed body, the Holy One, blessed be He, showed him every righteous person destined to arise from him. One was suspended in Adam's head, another in his hair, another in his forehead, another in his eyes, etc. Know this: when Job wished to dispute with the Holy One, blessed be He, etc., the Holy One, blessed be He, answered him: “You seek to dispute with Me? Where were you when I founded the earth?” What is eifo, “where”? Rabbi Shimon ben Laqish said: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him, “Job, tell Me: in which place was your eifah suspended—in his head or in his forehead?” etc. With reference to this stature the author explains “Qallani from my head; qallani from my arm,” as he concludes.[TN110010]

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Qallani will be a euphemism for its opposite”: the intention is “I am heavy.”

Yad Yehudah - כ

“He says that He suffers,” etc.: the intention of the Shekhinah's saying “Qallani from my head” is that she, as it were, suffers over the wicked person's existence, since his eifah is suspended within the comprehensive stature. She suffers from the heaviness and pain in the stature's head and arm caused by the iniquity.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“On this interpretation,” etc.: he specifies head and arm, even though that wicked person's eifah might have been in another of the stature's limbs, because head and arm are its principal components. The head is the place of thought, and the arm the instrument of action. The Shekhinah, as it were, suffers and regrets the wicked person's creation in thought and deed.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Alternatively, this heaviness may be explained”: the Shekhinah suffers from the heaviness of the comprehensive stature's head and arm because, through a person's iniquity, the head and arm weigh upon the entire stature.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“In the manner” found concerning the holy living creatures' sweat: the cause of the sweat is the iniquities of the wicked, which cause the throne to weigh upon the living creatures. In a time of favor, when Israel does the will of the Omnipresent, blessed be He, the living creatures have neither toil nor sweat; rather, the throne bears them.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“Therefore,” etc.: in the second chapter of Ḥagigah (13b), on the verse “A river of fire flowed and came forth from before Him,” etc.: From where does it come? Rav Yirmeyah bar Abba said in Rav's name: From the sweat of the living creatures. Where does it pour? Rav Zutra bar Tuvyah said in Rav's name: Upon the heads of the wicked in Gehinnom, as it is said, “Behold, the Lord's storm has gone forth in wrath, a whirling storm; it falls upon the heads of the wicked.” The author says that this is why the wicked are judged in the river of fire: they themselves are its effective cause, through causing the living creatures to sweat. This is their recompense.

Yad Yehudah - כה

Or “qallani from my head” may express degradation, as in “Your brother will be degraded.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

Or it derives from “whom he roasted,” meaning burned. The intention here follows what is written, “The Lord is judged in fire,” which they expounded in the Talmud: in the future He, blessed be He, will, as it were, descend with Israel's transgressors into Gehinnom to rescue them, as stated above, Part I, chapter 13. Thus the expression says, “Qallani from my head”: as it were, to descend with him at last into Gehinnom.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“Likewise”: this is also the meaning of Scripture (Isaiah 46), “I shall bear”—namely in Gehinnom —“and deliver” through this the transgressors within it.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“Therefore,” etc.: the author completes his explanation of the verse “together am I,” which David said in the Shekhinah's name, as though she were speaking: “Let the wicked fall into his nets,” in Gehinnom; “together am I”—I too, for I shall be there “until I pass,” to bring them into the Garden of Eden when the cherubim and the flame of the sword are removed from there.

Yad Yehudah - כח - continued

The hint to this interpretation of “until I pass” is the Masorah's enumeration of three occurrences of aʿavor in full spelling: “You said, ‘I will not pass’” (Jeremiah 2); “He has fenced off my path, and I cannot pass” (Job 19); “Together am I, until I pass.” The intention in the first, where aʿavod is written with dalet but read with resh, is: I shall not pass to the gates of the Garden of Eden, but shall serve idolatry, “for upon every high hill,” etc. This is what prevents the Shekhinah from dwelling below, since the Shekhinah's presence below annuls impurity. Therefore our sages said, “Tyre was filled only,” etc.

In the second, as it is written, “He has fenced off my path, and I cannot pass,” the intention is: Although my heart is steadfast with God and I no longer have any share or inheritance in idolatry, nevertheless I cannot pass, for He has fenced off my path through [?] the sufferings and purification I bear for the iniquity of our fathers, who are no more. In this condition He, blessed be He, conceals Himself and the spirit of impurity rules until His indignation passes. But in the future, in the comprehensive repair, “I shall remove the spirit of impurity from the earth”; then, “Together am I, until I pass.”[TN110011]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“To rescue another”: that is, some wicked person has descended there, and the righteous person descends there; as he passes through Gehinnom, he takes that person with him. Concerning this King David, peace be upon him, said, “You will not abandon my soul to Sheol”—to descend to Gehinnom for my iniquity; “not … teach me to give Your faithful one to see corruption” [?]—to descend there to rescue him. This is “What man shall live,” like Abraham, “and not see death,” namely Gehinnom? Everyone must see it, in order to deliver the wicked person's soul from the hand of Sheol, Selah. Therefore Jacob said, “I shall descend to my

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 2

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

son mourning, to Sheol.” That is, because of my son who was lost “from my company” [?] and is wicked, I must descend to Sheol, to Gehinnom, to bring him up from there.[TN110012]

“An admonition to others by an a fortiori inference”: if Rabban Yoḥanan ben Zakkai feared Gehinnom, how much more should we! “For a man such as he,” etc.: how could someone like Moses be uncertain whether his soul would ascend above? “Even if we bite [?]”: that is, if we interpret it concerning the vital soul, so that he did not speak of the soul in the full sense, it is nevertheless astonishing for a man such as he. Rather, it is as we say: he would descend to Gehinnom to rescue another.[TN110013]

The wording “together am I,” etc.: in the Zohar, Qedoshim, page 152: “Rather, thus we learned: David said to the Holy One, blessed be He,” [?]. [TN110014] “Far be it from him to fall,” etc.: that is, falling into Gehinnom to remain there for judgment. Rather, “until I pass,” to rescue other people, the intermediate, from their distress, as it is said, “Those passing through the valley of weeping,” etc. “Qallani will be a euphemism for its opposite”: qallani expresses heaviness, in the manner of calling a blind person “abundant in light.”

“For throughout the days of purification,” etc., “and Aram vowed [?]”: this follows what was said in Part II, chapter 25, that in the holy covenant there are two channels, one right and one left. When Israel merits, the right prevails and bestows influx; in the opposite case, the opposite occurs.[TN110015] “Qal leit”: that is, it is not light but heavy. “At a time of dripping” [?]: that is, when they do His will, blessed be He, the throne weighs upon them, and from that sweat the river of fire is made, to judge the wicked in it. This is their Gehinnom.[TN110016]

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 3 (ג)

Yad Yehudah: יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“Or it may be explained,” etc.: in the preceding section the author explained the midrash on “Give ear, heavens,” etc., in which Moses said, “I do not know where my soul is going,” etc., in an unfavorable direction: Moses feared lest he enter the Garden of Eden by way of Gehinnom. Now the author proceeds to explain it favorably. The expositor's intention is that Moses' excellence was so great that he was not concerned to receive the reward of his deeds. Even if his soul descended below to the earth without reward, like the beast's spirit, he was content. Therefore he charged heaven and earth concerning it and said, “I entrust it to you both,” as one uncertain where it would go: even if it went to the earth like a beast, let it be well placed. See the conclusion below at the end of chapter 7.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“He grasped the face of the Throne”: as our sages said in the ninth chapter of Shabbat.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“In the description of himself”: as it is written, “The man Moses was humble.” The vav of ʿanav is small and broken,

Rema of Fano

Or the statement “Give ear, heavens” may be explained according to the excellence of the one who said it: every created being above and below resembled him only in beauty. Even during his lifetime he grasped the face of the Throne, with what is above it [or: above him].[TN110017] He spoke thus because the spirit of human beings that ascends upward does so to receive reward, whereas the spirit of the beast descends below to the earth, since it does not belong to those receiving recompense, and returns to its element. But “the man Moses was very humble”: he did not expect payment of recompense and did not serve the Omnipresent on that condition. Moreover, in the written text he diminished the description of himself and gave it a broken vav, allowing it to be expounded as “very poor,” for he considered himself of no account. Therefore he said, “Wherever my soul goes, let it be well placed.” For wherever he turns, the will of Him who dwells in the bush prevails: His counsel will stand, and He will fulfill His desire.

Yet the Most High's intention agreed with that of our master Moses, peace be upon him, in the writing of the small vav we mentioned, because his world is not his place: it is too small to contain his reward. Of him it is said, “Sweet is the sleep of the laborer,” whose initial letters form MShH, Moses. Even in the grave he continually makes the lips of sleepers speak. “Whether he eats little or much”:

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

allowing it to be expounded as if ʿani, poor, were written with a yod.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Yet the intention agreed,” etc.: do not object to what we said—that ʿanav is written with a small vav to indicate that he was poor in the granting of reward. Granted that this was Moses' view, since he did not consider himself or his reward; but the Torah should not testify that he was truly poor in this respect, which would seem, Heaven forbid, as though he had no reward. The author therefore says that, on the contrary, it is truly so: his reward is exceedingly great, so that the world is too small to contain it. Even with the abundant goodness stored up for him, he is poor in comparison with the immense reward he truly deserves. The blessed Name's intention agreed with Moses' intention in calling him poor with respect to his reward, but with the opposite meaning. Moses meant that he did not insist upon reward and considered himself poor in it, having none. The blessed Name meant that all the reward is insufficient: even with the great reward, he is poor.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“His world is not his place”: he did not come into this world for his own need, to receive reward like other human beings, since the world is too small to contain that reward. His coming was for the world's need, to sweeten judgment, as will be explained in the following section.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Of him it is said”: “Sweet is the sleep of the laborer, whether he eats little or much; but the rich man's satiety does not let him sleep” (Ecclesiastes 5). The initial letters of metuqah shenat ha-ʿoved form Moses. His sleep in the grave is sweet, for there his lips continually move when we occupy ourselves with his Torah, as our sages said: Whoever states a halakhic teaching in its speaker's name causes his lips to move in the grave.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Whether little,” etc.: he served the Lord without the condition of receiving a reward. Even concerning the reward that came of itself, he did not claim credit for himself. As our sages said in the first chapter of Berakhot (10b): Whoever attributes a matter to his own merit, they attribute it for him to others' merit; whoever attributes it to others' merit, they attribute it for him to his own. Moses attributed it to others' merit, saying, “Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel,

Rema of Fano - continued

he does not claim credit for himself, but attributes it to others' merit. “But the rich man's satiety”—as with Hezekiah, who was rich in Torah and commandments, but satisfied himself and attributed things to his own merit —“does not let him sleep,” for they attributed it to others' merit.

The well-known opposite statement should not pose a difficulty for “very poor”: they said the Shekhinah rests only upon one who is wise, mighty, wealthy, and of stature, all learned from Moses. He became wealthy only from the tablets' offcuts. Let the hearing ear examine words: this wealth is not of the sort available to every person upon the earth. For all his salvation and desire lay in his mission concerning the ten things created on Sabbath eve at twilight. They were all miracles, prepared by divine lovingkindness, each to repair in its time the damage to the upright nature created through ten utterances: what the human being, who “does not remain overnight in honor,” had made crooked.

None of these was newly brought forth, “yielding its fruit in its season,” from potentiality into actuality, except through our master Moses, peace be upon him, and by his merit. All of them are matters that a schoolchild can read in Scripture, except the rainbow and the shamir, for which we need aggadic teachings. They have already expounded, “Be-shaggam—this is Moses”: his merit protected Noah and his sons, the parties to the rainbow's covenant. The shamir also served in his days, to engrave the names of the children of Israel upon the ephod stones.

To complete ten things expressly stated

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Your servants”; therefore they attributed it to his own merit, as it is said, “He said He would destroy them, had not Moses His chosen one,” etc. Hezekiah attributed it to his own merit, as it is said, “Please remember how I have walked before You”; therefore they attributed it to others' merit, as it is said, “I will defend this city for My sake and for the sake of David My servant.” Therefore the verse concludes, “But the rich man's satiety,” etc., referring to Hezekiah, who satisfied himself and attributed it to his own merit.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Should not pose a difficulty” for our statement about the broken vav of “very humble,” as though “very poor” were written. Was not our master Moses, peace be upon him, wealthy, as is well known from the sages' statement that the Shekhinah rests only, etc.? Granted that according to our exposition this concerns his reward, as stated, we must nevertheless also resolve it according to its plain sense. “For there is no wise person, and one will precede [?]”. It will also be true here to say that if Moses paid no attention to wealth, the description poor truly applies to him. He became wealthy only from the tablets' offcuts, as they derive there: Wealthy—for it is written, “Hew for yourself”; their offcuts are yours. Of this wealth it is fitting to say that he was unconcerned with it, for it was not like the other kinds of wealth available to other human beings. Rather, all Moses' salvation and all his desire lay in His blessed Name's mission concerning the ten things created on Sabbath eve at twilight: to bring them from potentiality into actuality. In this way he became wealthy through the tablets, one of those ten things—by bringing them from potentiality into actuality. This was truly reckoned as wealth for him; the apparent wealth he also attained from them he considered nothing. [TN110018] in Scripture concerning this governance entrusted to him alone, the “some say” in the Mishnah of Avot added Moses' grave to the count. In the baraita in the chapter Maqom she-nahagu they added the cave in which Moses and Elijah stood. Even our father Abraham's ram, they said, served at Mount Sinai: He sounded its left horn, and in the future He will sound its right. And “tongs made with tongs”—for the work of the Tabernacle.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Each to repair in its time,” etc.: before Adam the first sinned, these ten things were embedded in upright nature. After upright nature was damaged through Adam's sin, divine lovingkindness needed to repair them. Therefore He created them on Sabbath eve at twilight, only in potentiality, so that afterward each would come into actuality at its proper time. Thus the commentators explained, and so too it is in the Zohar, Vayera, page 293.

Yad Yehudah - י

“Through ten utterances”: through them the world was created in upright nature. Therefore these created things too came in the number ten.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“None was newly brought forth,” etc.: that is, they were repaired only through our master Moses, by whose merit alone each of them came into actual repair.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“All of them”: the earth's mouth, the well's mouth, the donkey's mouth, the manna, the staff, the script, the inscription, and the tablets. That they came about because of Moses and by his merit is something a schoolchild can read in Scripture.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Except the rainbow and the shamir,” which were not in Moses' days. Therefore we need aggadic teachings to explain that they too came through Moses. Concerning the rainbow, the sign of the covenant for Noah, our sages already expounded “Be-shaggam he is flesh,” etc.: “Be-shaggam—this is Moses,” who protected Noah and his sons. Thus

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Moses, peace be upon him, was the cause of the rainbow. Concerning the shamir, they said in the chapter ʿEglah ʿarufah (48b): The rabbis taught: The ephod stones—one does not write upon these stones with ink, because it says “engraved like a seal”; nor does one cut them with a chisel, because it says “in their fullness.” How is it done? One writes upon them with ink, brings the shamir, and shows it to them from outside; they split of themselves, etc. Thus the shamir existed in Moses' days.[TN110019]

Yad Yehudah - יד

“To complete,” etc.: if you are more satisfied with what Scripture states explicitly, we find two other things created on Sabbath eve at twilight corresponding to the rainbow and the shamir, and it is written that they were in Moses' days: Moses' grave and the cave in which he stood. This is what is stated above in the fifth chapter, in the Mishnah there, and in the chapter Maqom she-nahagu. In this way we can complete the count of ten things explicitly stated in Scripture.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“Concerning this preparation”: the repair of the damaged upright nature, entrusted to Moses alone.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“Even our father Abraham's ram,” which they added there in the Mishnah, was in Moses' days, as they said of it in Pirqei Rabbi Eliezer: it served at Mount Sinai.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“And tongs”: the tongs taught there also existed in Moses' days, in the work of the Tabernacle.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The one who said it” is Moses our master, peace be upon him. “He gave it a broken vav”: in the verse “The man Moses was very humble,” a broken vav is written; that is, ʿani, poor.

“Wherever he turns,” etc.: it is known that when a righteous person who has not blemished his soul dies, it returns to its source, the place from which it was taken. If he is an exceptionally great righteous person, his soul ascends above the place from which it was taken. Therefore Solomon said, “Who knows the spirit of human beings, whether it ascends upward?”—that is, above the place from which it fell. Or is it like the beast's spirit, which descends below to its source? In that way his soul ascends and returns to its first source, without any additional elevation. Therefore Moses said, “Wherever it turns, let it be well placed.” That is, if His will is that my soul should now attain no more, but simply return to its root, I am content with that too.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“All of them are matters a schoolchild can read in Scripture”: that is, all ten things created on Sabbath eve were therein sanctified and repaired through Moses, for he is Adam's repair. The ten things created on Sabbath eve were in potentiality, not actuality; each emerged at its own time and through Moses, for he was not of the commonly found multitude.[TN110020] See the Zohar, Vayera, on the verse “Behold, another ram was caught,” etc., where it says, “All those things that were created on Sabbath eve,” except the rainbow, which was in Noah's days, and the shamir, in Solomon's days. He answers: “Be-shaggam—this is Moses,” for his merit protected Noah and his sons, and then there was the rainbow. The shamir too existed in his days, for the ephod stones.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 3

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 4 (ד)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד · נה · נו · נז · נח · נט; ס · סא · סב · סג · סד · סה · סו · סז · סח · סט · ע · עא · עב · עג · עד · עה · עו · עז · עח · עט · פ · פא · פב · פג · פד · פה

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“The foundation of this exposition”: concerning the statement “I do not know where my soul is going,” explained in the preceding section. Moses said this because he was unconcerned with receiving reward. Indeed, all the great reward prepared for him is as nothing compared with the reward fitting for him, for the world is too small to contain it.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“And Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, in a simple mystery” [?]: as

Rema of Fano

The foundation of this exposition, which we are explaining, is that the world was created through judgment, but Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, through unalloyed lovingkindness. He was not embodied for his own sake, but only to draw the world out so that it would not perish, as already hinted in the verse “For I drew him out of the water.” Therefore he was cast into the Nile to bring its waters into contact with his and purify them. The well too returned through his merit after Miriam died. Throughout the time when she was leprous, he, who was drawn from the upper waters, brought the well into stated in the Zohar, Shemot, page 36, on “The LORD appeared to him in a flame of fire.” Rabbi Abba said: “This matter of Moses must not be contemplated as an upper beginning [?]. It is written, ‘For I drew him out of the water.’ One drawn from the waters of upper power does not fear fire,” etc. See the explanation I wrote on this in Part II, chapter 13. [TN110022]

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

“He was not embodied for his own sake”: his soul did not come into this world

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

for its own need.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"But only" for the preservation and drawing out of the world, which was created through judgment, so that it would not perish. For His blessed wisdom saw that the world could not endure through judgment unless Moses' mercy participated with it. This is what they said: 'In the beginning God created'—through the merit of Moses, who is called 'beginning,' etc. and Recanati's interpretation [?]; see above, chapter 3. Thus far.[TN110023]

Yad Yehudah - ה

He emanated and drew Moses from the upper waters. Therefore Moses was cast into the Nile, which was Pharaoh's object of worship, as is known, in order to bring the Nile's waters and its qelippah above into contact with his holy waters and purify them, extracting from them through holy intentions.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"The well too" returned through Moses' merit for this reason, as explained in the Zohar, Emor, page 126. Its words are: 'Miriam died; the well departed, as it is written, "There was no water for the congregation." At that [time], another well that was present with Israel wished to depart. When it saw six clouds that were bound over it, it bound contact with them, so that Israel should not drink from "a trampled spring and a corrupted source," heaven forbid. This is the reason for "God, please, heal her, please." He made counsel wondrous and wisdom great through this short prayer. My teacher, the honored Rabbi Ezra, may his light shine, explained it at length through the Torah's mysteries. For our purpose in this treatise at this point, it is enough to explain that he prayed for her healing immediately, for Israel's need, as stated. Furthermore, these words have the numerical value of "Heal Your children, God," in the manner of "the LORD your healer," said concerning the waters of Marah, and Elisha's "I have healed these waters" at Jericho. In addition, he foresaw that they would speak against God and Moses. He sought forgiveness for Miriam, who had spoken only against Moses, lest an a fortiori inference be drawn to increase the punishment of these others, heaven forbid. His prayer succeeded in having her judged only through an a fortiori inference, so that we might apply: "It is sufficient for what is inferred to be like that from which it is inferred." Therefore Miriam was not definitively declared impure; rather, she became pure after confinement. See the beginning of the treatise Ha-middot.

Rema of Fano - continued

Let us return to Moses. Indeed, the Holy One, blessed be He, joined him to the whole creation, which would not have endured without him. No vacuum exists in the world, and no person touches what is allotted to his fellow. Therefore Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, had no portion or inheritance with his brothers in the world as a whole or in its itself to them. Aaron died; those clouds departed, and the cloud of the well departed with them. Moses came to restore them. Thus it is written: "You ascended on high; you took captives; you received gifts among men." "You received gifts," indeed—those gifts that were there at first: the well and the clouds.'[TN110024]

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Yad Yehudah - ז

It appears that this resolves the difficulty Bahya wrote about what Israel sent to Sihon, king of the Amorites: "We shall not drink well-water," as Scripture says in Ḥuqqat. Certainly the intention is that we shall not drink water from his well, but "you shall give me water for money, and I shall drink," as the verse in Devarim explains. Rashi likewise explains "We shall not drink well-water," said concerning the king of Edom. One cannot say the intention is, "We shall not drink water from your well for nothing": all the more, it should have said "water from wells," as Rashi asks there concerning the king of Edom, "Was it not from their wells," etc. Moreover, this is not the sense of "we shall not drink," which means we shall not drink at all. Then the difficulty is: whence did Israel have the well? For [gap]. This message to Sihon was after Miriam's death and the Jordan [?], as the verses explain. Jonathan translates, “We shall not possess [?] cistern-water.” But the matter is “from our journey, for nothing” [?]. According to the Zohar's statement that Moses restored the well, the matter is properly resolved according to its plain meaning.[TN110025]

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Throughout” her affliction, Moses brought Israel into contact with it for this same reason, namely that he came from the upper waters. For this “brother-well” [?] likewise corresponds to the well above, as explained in the Zohar, in the section ... .[TN110026]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“So that Israel should not drink,” through Miriam's merit, from a trampled spring, God forbid, etc.; for the influx coming here from above into the water had ceased.[TN110027]

Yad Yehudah - י

This is why Moses prayed a short prayer. For Israel's need, so that the influx of water should not cease from them, as is known, he did not prolong his prayer, so that he might merit her healing immediately.

Yad Yehudah - יא

Furthermore, these words, “God, please, heal her, please,” have the numerical value of “Heal, God.” This hints that through his merit, this prayer was also for Israel, so that they might drink governance. His father was a perfectly righteous man: he was called Amram, from “pure wool,” and died through the serpent's counsel. His wife, who was his aunt—a relationship contrary to our Torah after the law was newly established—was also born in a manner unlike the world's custom: in a place belonging neither to the land of Egypt nor to the land of Israel, but between the walls. Since Egypt adjoins it, above and below, the place between the walls can already be counted within the Land's borders. She completed the number of seventy persons who descended to Egypt, together with the glory of the Shekhinah. Her name was Yokheved: do not read Yokheved but kevodi, “My glory,” whose numerical value is 42. A hint suffices for one who understands; how greatly a wise heart will rejoice!

Rema of Fano - continued

His mother conceived Moses only after hope had been abandoned, in her old age. This occurred on the sixth of Sivan, when the Torah was given to Israel through him. It is called by his name: “Remember the Torah of Moses My servant.” His soul's quarry brings this about, for it and the Torah are twins; the month's zodiacal sign is an indication. Since Yokheved's pregnancy was not recognizable and her husband had no thought of it, he took precautions lest she conceive. Fearing the decree concerning the Nile, he sent her from his house for Tammuz and Av. This consequently provided atonement for the disruption we caused in the upper realms, in the sense of “I shall descend with you to Egypt.” Its initial letters have the numerical value YBQ, and its final letters yod-he-vav, spelled out.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

from the well as at first.[TN110028]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“In the manner of ‘the LORD your healer,’” etc.: that is, we likewise find the language of healing concerning water, at Marah through Elisha, and so here.[TN110029]

Yad Yehudah - יג

Besides, there is another reason: Moses needed to pray here for Israel too, to lighten their future punishment when they would speak against God and Moses.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Lest they infer a fortiori” from Miriam: if she spoke not about Moses alone and was punished, how much more Israel, who spoke against God too! Therefore he prayed and sought forgiveness for Miriam.[TN110030]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“His prayer succeeded” in this matter: Miriam was judged only by “the law of measures” [?], as the sages said: “If her father had spat in her face, would she not be ashamed for seven days?” A fortiori, for the Shekhinah, fourteen days. Yet “it is sufficient for what is inferred to be like that from which it is inferred.” Thus, even if Israel should err in the future, great benefit would come from this to them—to increase their punishment [?] through an a fortiori inference from Miriam,

Yad Yehudah - טו - continued

because of “it is sufficient.”[TN110031]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“Therefore”: since her judgment concerns Israel, Miriam did not become impure through her leprosy. Rather, her status was that of a leper under confinement, and it was stated concerning her that she would become pure after seven days. This too lightens her punishment: the designation “impurity” should not apply to her. It is for Israel's sake, so that judgments upon her should not be made more severe.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“To the whole” creation of the world, which would not endure without him. For this purpose he came into the world, not for his own need.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“No vacuum exists in the world”: language borrowed from books of natural philosophy. The intention here is that nothing in the world is empty, for nothing is without its boundary. Therefore the land was divided among the tribes, apart from Moses, who has no portion in the land because he did not come into the world for his own need. No person touches what is prepared for his fellow, and he could not take a portion in the land in any manner.

Rema of Fano - continued

Furthermore, the initial letters of “I shall descend with you” have the value 72. Anokhi, “I,” has the value of kisse, “throne”; ered, “I shall descend,” has the value 200, the progressive expansion of Elohim, plus five letters. ʿImmekha, “with you,” has the value 130, the progressive expansion of the Tetragrammaton filled with alephs. Mitsraymah, “to Egypt,” has the value of Shekhinah. Thus all these holy names descended with them to Egypt. [TN110021]

At the same time he separated from her during the first months, when intercourse is harmful to the fetus. When they thought the decree concerning the Nile had ceased, he took her back in Elul, the season of love, whose initials are “I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine.” In that month reconciliation begins, to atone for iniquity. Its sign is the Virgin, kept for her husband, for she returned to the days of her youth. Although several months of her pregnancy had passed, they did not recognize it, like a virgin whose womb is narrow: the substance of that fetus within her was from the light above, as the sages said concerning “She saw that he was good.” Her pregnancy was not recognizable because its place was not subject to measurement. She gave birth on the seventh of Adar, at the beginning of the tenth month, for he was perfected in ten degrees. Everyone supposed she had given birth before the full term. In truth, Tevet was the eighth month of his gestation, in which everyone is endangered. Its name derives from u-vat tevath, for equivalence in pronunciation permits “His father,” etc.: incidentally, the author mentions Moses' lineage and birth, to explain his great eminence and expound everything belonging to this matter.

Yad Yehudah - יט

Yad Yehudah - כ

“He died through the serpent's counsel”: as stated in the chapter Bammeh behemah.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“After the law was sanctified”: before the giving of the Torah, marriage to one's aunt was permitted, as stated in the chapter Arbaʿ mitot. This law prohibiting one's aunt was newly established when the Torah was given.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Also unlike the world's custom”: the nations too practiced this prohibition, although they were not commanded concerning it.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“She was born in a place,” etc.: in the chapter Yesh noḥalin, page 123, Abba Ḥalifa of Qeruya asked Rabbi Ḥiyya bar Abba: “In their total you find seventy, but in their individual enumeration you find seventy less one,” etc. Rabbi Ḥama bar Ḥanina said: “This was Yokheved, conceived on the journey and born between the walls, as it is said, ‘Whom she bore to Levi in Egypt’: her birth was in Egypt, but her conception was not in Egypt.” Rashi explains:

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

"This was Yokheved," and therefore she was not individually specified, since she had not yet emerged into the air of the world; she was a fetus in her mother's womb when she entered Egypt. Thus far. He, of blessed memory, holds that her birth between the walls resolves the difficulty "in their individual enumeration you find," etc. But the difficulty is resolved by her conception—her conception on the journey alone. Rashi likewise wrote there, page 104: "She is not explicitly counted because she came to Egypt only in her mother's womb. Her birth was between the walls, that is, within Egypt. Because he said 'on the journey' concerning her conception, he also said 'between the walls' concerning her birth." One may add, following his approach, that "between the walls" is exact. He needed to conclude with her birth between the walls only because this is the truth and this is the tradition he received.

Yad Yehudah - כד

Etc.: Rashi explains "between the walls" as "within Egypt," because this is what the plain wording of the verse indicates: "Whom she bore to Levi in Egypt." See Vayyiggash. According to the author's proposal, the conclusion "her birth was between the walls" is needed to resolve the interchange of letters, and its meaning is affliction of the soul. Or it is a compound, tav bat: as though goodness had ceased and stopped giving birth. All the more so amid the severity of slavery, when the prosecution against Israel's savior was growing strong.

Rema of Fano - continued

The Shekhinah "hid him for three months": Tammuz, Av, and Tevet, in which, as we said, the attribute of judgment is stretched over the world, according to the Zohar. Thus his merit would not protect against the Temple's destruction and delay it, so that He might pour out His burning anger upon wood and stones. When he was born, the house filled with light, as stated. The hint is be-shaggam, as we recalled in the preceding chapter. Here the bet is a prefix; the remainder is explained in Jonathan's Targum in three places: at the end of Deborah's song, in David's last words, and at the verse "The light of the sun shall be sevenfold." From the day of his birth, forty-nine gates of understanding shone, hinted at in "sevenfold": sevens multiplied by one another. These were closed to Abel on the fiftieth day after his birth, when he died, for he came as breath, without embodiment, as stated. At the end of 130 years it is written, "God has appointed for me another seed in place of Abel." He had to become embodied in actuality, by an act of placing, through complete lovingkindness, beyond the nature of his quarry. Since waters congeal only in the north, the place of the powers of severity, Elohim is mentioned here; and five Tetragrammatons for five powers of severity have the numerical value of 130 years.

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

question. Had she actually been born in Egypt, Scripture would not have left the sum and total count at seventy merely because she was a fetus in her mother's womb before they came to Egypt. It would have been more appropriate to follow the birth, which was in Egypt. But since her birth too was not actually in Egypt, but on the border, in a place that is neither the Land of Israel nor Egypt itself, Scripture saw fit to include her in the count of seventy because of her conception. She cannot be counted among those born in Egypt, since her birth was not actually in Egypt. Nevertheless, since she also cannot be counted among those born in the Land of Israel, Scripture did not enumerate her individually. Accordingly, it appears to me that Scripture's "Whom she bore to Levi in Egypt" means on Egypt's border, not actually in Egypt.

Yad Yehudah - כה

"Since Egypt," etc.: that is, it is certainly so, that the border of the Land of Israel reaches Egypt. The name Mitsrayim indicates this, expressing adjacency, for it is second to the Land of Israel above and below. As Ha-Tsiyyoni wrote in Toledot: "The Land of Israel is the Holy One's portion and His people's portion out of the forty [?]; the land of Egypt is second to it. By this one understands concerning it that its name expresses borders. Egypt's prince is likewise second in the chariot of the Dweller in the bush, as it is said, 'He had him ride in the second chariot.'" See there. Since this is so, the place between the walls is reckoned as the boundary and border of the Land of Israel, and it is what bounds the Land of Israel and the land of Egypt. [TN110032]

Yad Yehudah - כה - continued

Yad Yehudah - כו

"Together with the glory of the Shekhinah": in Bereshit Rabbah, in section R.Ḥ. [?], it is stated that the blessed Name completed the count. The author said that this does not disagree with the Gemara, for it is possible ... .[TN110033]

Yad Yehudah - כז

"Yokheved": its letters are the seal of kavod, "glory," a designation of the Shekhinah. The name Yokheved also has the numerical value 42: the glory of the forty-two-letter name explained in Tiqqunim, from which flows the forty-two-letter name of seven words in which the Shekhinah is comprised. Therefore she is called Bathsheba, "daughter of seven," as is known from the kabbalists' books. It is consequently understood that the repair was complete.

Rema of Fano - continued

He was called Seth when the fiftieth gate became embodied and extended. That gate itself is the name Ehyeh, which completes the forty-nine aspects of Torah to seventy. Moreover, in the small reckoning there are forty-nine aspects of purity and forty-nine aspects of impurity; in the large reckoning it is entirely pure. From them extended the seven hundred orders of Mishnah taught in the days of Rabbi Yehudah ben Beterah, in the chapter Ein dorshin, corresponding to the numerical value of Seth. We shall discuss them below in chapter 9. There too, some teach six hundred: Abel twice, namely, five times two is ten, and then ten times thirty is three hundred, as above at the end of Part II concerning Moses, who is second to Abel. For Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, that embodied seed was refined into something resembling the light above, so that he would be prepared for the hidden treasure and the need for food to replace what is dissipated would not trouble him. We shall discuss this below in chapter 9. Fifty gates of understanding less one were opened to him during his life, like the light of the seven days of creation gathered together; seven times forty-nine is 343.

Furthermore, "he was good": he was born circumcised. On the fourteenth of Adar they drew covenantal blood from him, to still the enemy in the days of Mordecai and Esther, just as his merit protected the Flood's generation for the number of years of his life. Throughout those years Noah occupied himself with building the ark. The Shekhinah called his name Moses, for he draws up and

Yad Yehudah - כח

"Only after hope had been abandoned": he had despaired of her bearing any more, since she was 130 years old.

Yad Yehudah - כט

"This occurred": she conceived on the ninth of Sivan. From then until the seventh of Adar, when Moses was born, are nine full months. He was born on the seventh day of the tenth month, as will be explained shortly. [TN110034]

Yad Yehudah - ל

"For the source of his soul is the cause": his soul has its root in Yesod of Abba in Zeʿir; hence his soul and the Torah were twins. As the author says at the beginning of Yonat Elem, chapter 6, Moses is therefore called "the man of God": from his middle downward, man; from his middle upward, God. For there is the Torah's principal place, as it is written, "Moses ascended to God"; he also merited the Torah. See there, and above, Part II, P.ʿZ. [?]. [TN110035]

Yad Yehudah - לא

"And the sign" of the month of Sivan is the Twins.

Yad Yehudah - לב

"Since," etc.: in the Gemara, Sotah, page 12: "'A man of the house of Levi went'—where did he go? Rav Yehudah bar Zevina said: He followed his daughter's counsel. It was taught: Amram was the greatest man of the generation. When he saw that wicked Pharaoh had said, 'Every newborn son you shall cast into the Nile,' he said, 'We are laboring in vain.' He arose and divorced his wife," etc. This was because her pregnancy was not recognizable and her husband did not imagine she was pregnant. Otherwise he would not have sent her away. Nevertheless, he thought she might conceive afterward, and our labor would be in vain.

Yad Yehudah - לב - continued

Yad Yehudah - לג

"It was elevated" [?]: through this divorce, atonement would be found for the fact that the upper descending ones [?] had to become heavy and descend below.[TN110036]

Yad Yehudah - לד

"The disturbance": its meaning is shaking, as in be-tamuzo, Moʿed, page 19; see the Arukh. That is, this is hinted at in the name of the month Tammuz. [TN110037]

Yad Yehudah - לה

"In the sense of 'I shall descend with you to Egypt'": concerning this draws out Israel and the whole world from many waters. He annulled the decree concerning the Nile, which was fulfilled in him on the day of his birth. Some say he was cast there on the twenty-first of Nisan, after forty-four days. Therefore the Nile's waters turned to blood at his command, and on that very day, eighty years later, Israel was saved at the sea.

Rema of Fano - continued

He too was punished only on account of water, because he sinned against the law of his own essence. So Saul sinned against the law of kingship according to the plain meaning, or against the law of his tribe according to the masters of aggadah: the eradication of Amalek was entrusted only to Benjamin, who had not bowed to Esau like his other brothers. He had not yet been born when "he passed before them," and Jacob bowed, together with all his wives, they and their children. Although they all bowed only to the Shekhinah, as the Zohar explains by expounding "He passed before them" in the manner of what we learned, "I and He, save, please," and then "they bowed"—all of them acting like him—nevertheless there is a matter of outward appearance here, like the rule concerning images that pour out water: one must not bend down and drink. The Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting with the righteous to a hair's breadth.

Yad Yehudah - לה - continued

they said in the Zohar, Shemot, page 6, that all the upper and lower holy ones and the chariots descended with Jacob. The author wrote about this verse by way of accompaniments to wisdom, for … .[TN110038]

Yad Yehudah - לו

Its initials are YBQ, whose mystery is known, as explained above in Part II, chapter 3.[TN110039]

Yad Yehudah - לז

Furthermore, the initial letters of "I shall descend with you" have the numerical value 72. This hints at the Tetragrammaton filled with four yods: yod-vav-dalet, he-yod, vav-yod-vav, he-yod, which totals 72, as explained in the Zohar, Vayyiqra, page 308, on "Behold, the LORD rides upon a swift cloud," etc.—a hint to His holy name with the aforementioned filling. Anokhi has the numerical value of "throne"; ered has the value 205. This is the progressive expansion of the name Elohim: א, אל, אלה, אלהי, אלהים, which together total 200; with the five letters of the name Elohim, they are 205. [TN110040]

Yad Yehudah - לח

"With the numerical value 130": this is the numerical value of the progressive expansion of the Tetragrammaton filled with alephs, the name of 45: יו"ד; יו"ד ה"א; יו"ד ה"א ואי"ו; יו"ד ה"א ואי"ו ה"א. It totals 130, as explained in the Zohar there.

Yad Yehudah - לט

"And with this": when he sent her away from his house for fear that she might become pregnant, it came about that he thereby separated from his wife for the first three months, when intercourse is harmful to the fetus, as the sages said in Niddah. [TN110041]

Yad Yehudah - מ

“When they thought that in the book” [?], etc.: the Gemara says he followed his daughter's counsel. When he removed them [?], they all arose and divorced their wives. His daughter said to him: “Father, your decree is harsher than Pharaoh's, for Pharaoh decreed only against the males,” etc. He arose and took his wife back; they all arose and took their wives back. Nevertheless, the author understands that the main reason was that he thought the decree had ceased.[TN110042]

Yad Yehudah - מא

“In Elul”: as is known from the Gemara there, that she could return three months into her pregnancy.

Yad Yehudah - מב

“And with the acceptance of reconciliation” [?]: each year Israel placates and seeks favor from the Holy One, blessed be He, our Father in heaven, and speaks in prayer and supplication to atone for iniquity.[TN110043]

Yad Yehudah - מג

“Its sign is the Virgin”: this indicates and hints concerning her that she returned to the days of her youth, in that they did not recognize her pregnancy, like a sealed virgin. The reason they did not recognize her fetus is that, furthermore …

Yad Yehudah - מד

“His substance” was from the light above, as stated in the Zohar, Shemot, page “L.K.Ḥ” b [?]: “Rabbi Yitsḥaq said: With Aaron and Miriam, their father's union is not written in the Torah. With Moses it is written, ‘He took the daughter of Levi,’ to teach that the Shekhinah is called by Levi's name. Amram was not fit to beget Moses until he took a share in the Shekhinah and begot Moses. Thus it is written, ‘He took the daughter of Levi.’ Therefore it is written, ‘She saw that he was good,’” etc. This means that even in respect of Moses' substance, He joined the Shekhinah with him. This is what the sages expounded concerning “She saw that he was good”: the whole house filled with light.[TN110044]

Yad Yehudah - מה

“The fetus was not recognizable,” as above: this was because its source was not from the woman, since the Shekhinah too had a share in the substance. See the end of Shelaḥ.[TN110045]

Yad Yehudah - מו

“She gave birth on the seventh of Adar”: the reason is that in Adar the nine months of gestation were completed, as above. The seventh day was at the beginning of the tenth month, to hint that he was perfected through all ten sefirot. As stated in the Zohar, Shemot, page 37, “Ḥ.R.” [?]: “He was perfected in ten degrees, as it is written, ‘In all My house he is faithful,’ not ‘the faithful one of My house.’ Happy is the portion of a person who merits having such things held concerning him.”[TN110046]

Yad Yehudah - מו - continued

Yad Yehudah - מז

“Everyone supposed,” etc.: Rashi, of blessed memory, wrote in his Torah commentary on “She could no longer hide him”: “The Egyptians counted from the day he took her back, whereas she gave birth to him after six months and one day, for a woman who gives birth in the seventh month gives birth before it is complete. They inspected her at the end of nine months.” Yet the Gemara there says the Egyptians counted only from when he took her back, whereas she had already been pregnant for three months. R. Eliyahu Mizraḥi wondered about Rashi and wrote that Tosafot resolved it: the aggadic book Divrei ha-yamim states what Rashi says and differs from our Talmud. The author follows the Gemara. Because of what is written in Divrei ha-yamim, he holds that not only the Egyptians but everyone supposed she had given birth before the full term.

Yad Yehudah - מח

“In truth” it was not so: he was born after nine full months. Tevet, a month in which danger is common, as will be explained shortly, was the eighth month of his gestation. All fetuses in the pregnant womb are endangered then, since their strength is weak in the eighth month, as explained in medical books. The sages likewise said this, as above. Because of the double danger, the Shekhinah needed to hide him in this month, as he concludes shortly.

Yad Yehudah - מט

“It derives from u-vat tevath”: that is, the name Tevet indicates dangers, being like tevath, which means suffering and affliction, as in “u-vat tevath” (Daniel 6), meaning “he spent the night fasting.”

Yad Yehudah - נ

“For the two letters”: since they are alike in pronunciation and place of articulation, it permits the change and interchange. Therefore bet and vav interchange with one another.

Yad Yehudah - נא

“Tav bat”: that is, goodness ceased. Because of the month's danger, it is as though she stopped giving birth and would not give birth to Moses.

Yad Yehudah - נב

“All the more”: there was great danger because of the prosecution growing strong from Egypt's prince above during the gestation, against Israel's savior. Therefore, because of these great and mighty powers, “the Shekhinah hid him,” spreading her wings over him to protect him. This is explained in Shelaḥ lekha, page 330, in these words: “‘She hid him for three months’: these are three months when harsh judgments dwell in the world. Which are they? Tammuz, Av, and Tevet. What does this teach concerning him? For before Moses came into the world, he was present in the world [?]. Therefore the Shekhinah was appointed in him from the day he was born,” etc. It explains “She hid him for three months” as neither consecutive nor after the birth, as in the plain sense, but separate and before the birth.[TN110047]

Yad Yehudah - נג

“So that his merit would not protect”: that is, do not say Moses' merit was sufficient to protect against the attribute of judgment and the dangers occurring in these months. On the contrary, that very fact required the Shekhinah to conceal him and his merit, lest his merit later prevent the Temple's destruction, which occurred in these months. The destruction was for Israel's benefit, so that burning anger might be poured upon wood and stones, as the sages said on “The LORD has exhausted His wrath and kindled a fire in Zion.”

Yad Yehudah - נד

The hint to this Zohar passage is in the verse, “In that he is flesh.”[TN110048]

Yad Yehudah - נה

“Here the bet is a prefix”: in the preceding chapter he hinted at Moses through the letters be-shaggam, whose numerical value is Moses. Here in our exposition the hint is in the letters shin-gimel-mem alone; the bet is not a root letter but a prefix, and therefore it is not counted. That is, there shone in him the light of the seven days, which was 343 times as great, as will be explained shortly. This matter appears in the Zohar, Pineḥas, page 326: “In that he is flesh”—be-shaggam is Moses. “Why does he call him be-shaggam? Rather, Kohelet omitted bet from

Yad Yehudah - נה - continued

be-shaggam to conceal the matter. He said: ‘I said that this too is vanity [hevel].’” Etc. The intention concerns this matter; Sefer Ha-Peli’ah likewise explains it.[TN110049]

Yad Yehudah - נו; נה

“The remaining” letters of the name itself are explained in Jonathan's Targum. He translates at the end of Deborah's song, on “Those who love Him are like the sun going forth in its might”: “The righteous who love Him are destined to shine like glorious radiance, 343 times as much, like the sun going forth in its might.” He translates similarly in David's last words, on “Like morning light when the sun rises” (2 Samuel 23), and on “The light of the sun shall be sevenfold, like the light of the seven days” (Isaiah 30). See the treatise ḤKM, Part II, section “D.H.” [?]. The number 343 indicates that it belongs to Moses.

For from the day of his birth, forty-nine gates of understanding shone, as the sages said on “You made him a little less than God”: fifty gates of understanding, except one, were handed to Moses. They are hinted at in “The light of the sun shall be sevenfold,” for Moses' face is like the sun's face. His light is “sevenfold,” meaning seven times seven, which is forty-nine. The end of the verse, “like the light of the seven days,” means seven times forty-nine, totaling 343, as he concludes shortly. See the treatise ḤKM there.[TN110050]

Yad Yehudah - נז

“They were closed to Abel”: this is “shaggam—this is Abel,” for Moses was a reincarnation of Abel and Seth, hinted at in the initials of Moshe, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - נח

“When he died”: as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, “Abel was” [?]—Abel spent no more than fifty days in the world. This corresponds to the fifty gates of understanding; when he entered the fiftieth, he died.[TN110051]

Yad Yehudah - נט; ס

“Without embodiment”; and he was sweetened, for he was born from the aspect of light.

“By way of conversation” [?]: we expound “et” [?] as expressing firmness and strength. The nature of the quarry of Seth's soul, which had been Abel, could not be sweetened, as explained. But He who desires lovingkindness for the world, and seeks its benefit, brought Seth into the world in Abel's place, and his soul was sweetened: that is, it descended through the openings of lovingkindness for the world's need. This is “God has appointed for me another seed,” unlike Abel's nature, “by way of conversation” [?] in his place.[TN110052]

Yad Yehudah - נט; ס - continued

Yad Yehudah - ס

“Since,” etc.: the Zohar's wording in Bereshit, page 13, is: “For from the north side the waters congealed.” That is, lovingkindness became judgment in the north. At the end the analogy is still more similar. Although this lovingkindness is great and abundant for the world, in that He brought Seth into the world, nevertheless for Seth himself and for his soul's quarry it is judgment, in that the waters congealed and the lovingkindnesses became material in him.

Yad Yehudah - סא

“Five Tetragrammatons”: that is, there were lovingkindness and judgment in this. It is known that the lovingkindnesses are five and the powers of severity five. Thus the five Tetragrammatons, which are lovingkindnesses, each totaling 26, the numerical value of the Tetragrammaton, total 130. This hints that after 130 years the lovingkindnesses increased and Seth became embodied.

Yad Yehudah - סב

“He was called Seth” for another reason too: to hint at “three orders of Mishnah above” [?], corresponding to the numerical value of Seth, which extends from him.[TN110053]

Yad Yehudah - סג

“The fiftieth gate”: it was upon entering this that he died.

Yad Yehudah - סד

“The name Ehyeh” has the numerical value 21; with the forty-nine gates preceding it, the total is seventy, namely the seventy aspects of Torah. “Moreover”: not only does it raise the forty-nine aspects to the number seventy; those forty-nine aspects included in it also ascend to become entirely pure. In the small count, forty-nine, there are forty-nine aspects of purity and, corresponding to them, forty-nine aspects of impurity. When they rise to seventy through the fiftieth gate, they are all pure, for among the seventy aspects there is no impure aspect corresponding to them.

Yad Yehudah - סה

“Six hundred orders of Mishnah”: namely, six orders for each aspect, as will be explained below in chapter 9, section 52. In the chapter Ein dorshin, page 14, concerning the eighteen curses Isaiah pronounced against Israel: “‘Support’ means masters of Scripture, and ‘sustenance’ means masters of Mishnah, such as Rabbi Yehudah ben Beterah and his companions.” Rav Pappa and the rabbis differ about this: one says six hundred orders of Mishnah, and one says seven hundred.[TN110054]

Yad Yehudah - סו

“Abel twice”: Abel totals three hundred, and twice that is six hundred. They hint at Moses, who is second to Abel, and from him the six hundred orders were sanctified.

Yad Yehudah - סז

“Concerning Moses”: his name totals six hundred thousand by this method.

Yad Yehudah - סח

“Who is second to Abel” refers back to what was said above, “Abel twice.”

Yad Yehudah - סט

“For Moses our teacher, peace be upon him”: for this reason too, so that he would be prepared for the Torah and the extension of six hundred orders of Mishnah, Adam the first, embodied through Seth, was needed for him, as stated.[TN110055]

Yad Yehudah - ע

“Fifty,” etc., from the day he was born: this is as stated above, “From the day of his birth, forty-nine gates of understanding shone.”

Yad Yehudah - עא

“Like the light of the seven days”: “M.Sh.Ḥ.” [?] of the verse “The light of the sun shall be sevenfold.” The word “sevenfold” means sevens multiplied by one another, hinting at forty-nine. These are “like the light of the seven days” together: we expound seven times forty-nine, which is 343, “in my recognition” [?] in the word be-shem; the bet is a prefix, as above.[TN110056]

Yad Yehudah - עב

“Furthermore,” the sages said there in the Gemara concerning “She saw that he was good,” that he was born circumcised. Consequently, his day of circumcision was the fourteenth of Adar. This is what stood for Israel on that day [?] in the days of

Yad Yehudah - עב - continued

Mordecai and Esther.[TN110057]

Yad Yehudah - עג

“Just as his merit protected,” at first, the Flood's generation for 120 years. As the sages expounded on “Be-shaggam he is flesh, and his days shall be 120 years”: this is Moses. The sages also expounded “his days shall be 120 years” concerning the Flood's generation: the Holy One, blessed be He, gave them 120 years while Noah occupied himself with building the ark, in case they should repent. Both expositions are true: Moses' merit caused the blessed Lord to grant the Flood's generation a delay equal to the number of years of his life.

Yad Yehudah - עד

“She called,” etc.: the intention also concerns the Shekhinah, who called his name Moses because he draws up and draws out Israel and the whole world from the upper waters of lovingkindness. This is “For I drew him out of the water,” for the sake of the whole world, as above.

Yad Yehudah - עה

“He annulled the decree concerning the Nile”: as stated in Pirqei Rabbi Eliʿezer, the magicians told Pharaoh that a man would be born who would bring Israel out of Egypt. Pharaoh answered: “Cast them into the Nile for three years.” “And also thus” [?] they cast them into the Nile until Moses was born. Once he was born, they said to him: “He has been born and is hidden among you.” He told them: “Since he has been born, from now on do not cast the children in,” etc. This accords with the Zohar's view that we mentioned: “She hid him for three months” was before the birth, whereas according to the plain sense he was not cast in until after three months.[TN110058]

Yad Yehudah - עו

“Some say,” etc.: there in the Gemara, from Rabbi Pappa [?]: “That day was the twenty-first of Nisan.” The ministering angels said before the Holy One, blessed be He: “Master of the world, shall one destined to sing before You at the sea on this day be stricken on this day?”[TN110059]

Yad Yehudah - עז

“After forty-four days”: the Talmud says: “Rabbi Aḥa bar Ḥanina said: That day was the sixth of Sivan,” etc. Granted, according to the one who says the sixth of Sivan, three months are found, for the master said Moses was born on the seventh of Adar, etc.;

Yad Yehudah - עז - continued from the seventh of Adar until the sixth of Sivan are three months. But according to the one who says the twenty-first of Nisan, how are they found? That year was a leap year: most of the first month, most of the last, and the entire middle month. Thus according to everyone there were seventy-two days from the birth until the twenty-first of Nisan. Yet according to the author's exposition, it appears to me that the Gemara's need …[TN110060]

Yad Yehudah - עח

… to say that that year was a leap year follows their explanation that “She hid him for three months” was after the birth. According to the Zohar's view, which explains concealment before the birth, there is no difficulty. One may say Rabbi Ḥanina bar Pappa agrees with the Zohar, and there is no need to force the explanation and place it in a leap year. Accordingly, only forty-four days separate his birth from the day he was cast into the Nile: twenty-three of Adar and twenty-one of Nisan.

Yad Yehudah - עט

“To blood,” whose letters are mem-dalet.[TN110061]

Yad Yehudah - פ

“He too”: for this same reason that we stated, that Moses was from the upper waters, the hidden lovingkindnesses. He was therefore stricken on account of water at the waters of Meribah. He should have been especially careful in the matter of water, since his essence came from the upper waters. He did not do so, but sinned against the law of his own essence, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - פא

“Like Saul”: in Samuel, concerning this [?], the blessed Lord said to him, “I regret having made Saul king.” The sages said: “Saul sinned once, and it cost him; David twice, and it did not cost him.” In my view, this is because Saul's sin touched the law of kingship: his kingship's principal purpose was to cut off and strike out Amalek's memory. Therefore it cost him. This is according to the plain sense, as the author of Ha-ʿIqqarim and “MHR.A.” [?] wrote. They compared it to two of the king's attendants. One committed a breach by writing a forged document; the other sinned in a matter of “a stranger's nakedness” [?]. The king decreed that the first be removed from his rule, since he had acted falsely in it; he left the second in place, for although he had committed a transgression, he was trustworthy in judgment. Likewise Saul sinned in the matter of kingship, the very matter for which he was anointed king, and the blessed Lord said, “I regret,” etc. David was different: he sinned in another matter that did not touch kingship.[TN110062]

Yad Yehudah - פא - continued

Yad Yehudah - פב

“Or from Samuel” [?]: since it was the law of his tribe Benjamin, according to the Torah, as the sages said: “We possess an aggadic tradition that this nation falls only by the hand of Rachel's children, who will not become entangled in flocks of sheep” [?]. The sages said in the Midrash concerning “Mordecai would not bow or prostrate himself” that it was because he came from Benjamin, who had not bowed to Esau: “he and his seed, he will destroy for his children” [?]. Benjamin alone was to erase the memory of Amalek, descended from Esau, to whom they had not bowed. As stated in the Zohar, Vayyishlaḥ, page 352, on “He passed before them and bowed to the earth,” etc.: “Rabbi Elʿazar opened: ‘You shall not bow to another god.’ Could Jacob, the perfection of holiness, chosen as the Holy One's perfect portion, bow and approach him still further? How could he bow to that wicked Esau, who is from the side of another god? Whoever bows to him bows to another god,” etc., to the end of the passage: “‘He passed before them’—what is ‘He’? This is the Shekhinah. When she went before him, he knelt,” etc.[TN110063]

Yad Yehudah - פג

He expounds the word “and He” in the manner of what we learned in Sukkah, “I and He,” etc., which hints at the Shekhinah.

Yad Yehudah - פד

“All of them”: Jacob's entire household, his wives and sons who bowed, did not bow to Esau but to the Shekhinah, like Jacob. If so, what was Benjamin's particular distinction?

Yad Yehudah - פה

“Nevertheless”: although all their bowing was to the Shekhinah alone and even the tribes did not truly sin in this, there is nevertheless a prohibition because of outward appearance. As we say in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah: “A spring flowing before an idol—one must not bend down and drink, because he appears to bow to the idol.” “Granted, if it pours water” [?], one must not place one's mouth upon their mouths and drink, because he appears to bow to an idol. Since their bowing involved outward appearance, and the Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting with the righteous, the eradication of Amalek's seed was entrusted to Benjamin alone.[TN110064]

Yad Yehudah - פה - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“To bring its waters into contact,” etc.: for it was [?] Pharaoh's object of worship. This is “to bathe at the Nile”: she went to wash away the idols of her father's house. Thus “at the Nile,” which was her father's idol. “And ʿal,” etc.: he annulled its will [?], to extract sparks of holiness swallowed by the qelippot. ʿAl yam has the numerical value of Yosef, for Joseph too subdued the Nile's impurity. “God, please, heal, please,” in numerical value … . “So that Israel should not drink from a muddy spring,” etc., while she was leprous.[TN110065]

“They would speak,” etc.: Israel would speak against God and Moses. Lest an a fortiori inference be made from Miriam, who spoke only against Moses and became leprous—how much more Israel, who spoke against God and Moses!—he prayed for Miriam. His prayer succeeded in having her judged only through an a fortiori inference, as Rashi says: “‘If her father had spat in her face,’ etc.—a fortiori, for the Shekhinah, fourteen”; for “it is sufficient,” etc. Therefore Miriam was not definitively declared impure, with six for confinement and six for definitive impurity and then purification; rather, she became pure after confinement.[TN110066]

“No person touches what is allotted,” etc.: he teaches us something incidentally. The letters of be-mukhan are the letters following those of the name Elohim. “He was called Amram,” etc.: he had the entire drawing [?] of light from “pure wool.” “Contrary to our Torah,” etc.: at that time it was the cycle of “lovingkindness to Abraham,” and they were like angels; therefore those relations were not forbidden. It is stated in a manuscript that from the beginning of creation the world ought to have been founded upon Cain, for he was in the mystery of the point, namely inner light, whereas Abel was in the mystery of encompassing light, namely illumination. Therefore Cain, being inner light enclosed within a vessel more than Abel, was fit for “the repair of ʿ.H.O.” [?]. After Cain sinned, Abel came in his place. Moses includes both, and therefore he is called “man of God”: man from Seth's aspect and God from Abel's. This is also why his facial features resembled Abraham's, the cycle of lovingkindness, in the manner of the sages' statement, “Cain married his sister; it is lovingkindness.” In his cycle, forbidden sexuality had no dominion and there was no prohibition of such relations. See there. I heard in the name of my teacher and father-in-law from the holy community of “Prisk” [?], peace be upon him, concerning the Gemara's intention in the sages' statement: “Cain married his sister—‘The world shall be built through lovingkindness.’” What does this resolve? According to the foregoing premise, it is well explained: at first the world was in the cycle of lovingkindness, the Torah had not been given, and there was no need for Torah, etc.; see there. [TN110067]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Adjoins it”: Egypt above, on the side of the qelippah Nogah, adjoins the border of the holy Land of Israel above; so too below. “The month's sign”: the sign of Sivan is the Twins. “He sent her from his house for Tammuz and Av”: these are the two months when He hid him—Sivan, Tammuz, Av.[TN110068] “The disruption we caused,” etc.: Tammuz expresses disruption; we caused the Shekhinah's exile to Egypt, and separation occurred above when the Shekhinah descended to Egypt.

“The 200 of Elohim's progressive expansion,” etc.: Elohim progressively expanded is א, אל, אלה, אלהי, אלהים, with the numerical value 200. This is the resh in ered, with five more corresponding to the five letters of Elohim. The Tetragrammaton's progressive expansion is thus: י, יה, יהו, יהוד [?]; filled with alephs, its numerical value is 130.[TN110069]

“On the seventh of Adar, at the beginning of the tenth month”: that is, the first day, for she conceived on the sixth of Sivan, and on the seventh of Adar nine months were completed for him. Thus the seventh of Adar begins the tenth month. “He was perfected in ten degrees”: the Zohar, Shemot, says that ten degrees were perfected in him, as it is written, “In all My house he is faithful.” “In which everyone is endangered,” etc.: this means sheltering [?] at the turning of Tevet, when the body enjoys the body. It seems more likely that it expresses danger, as stated in the Zohar which he cites afterward —“marginal note” [?]. “It derives from,” etc.: from tabbaʿat, “ring” [?], from u-vat tevath, for vav and tet interchange in one pronunciation.[TN110070]

“The bet is a prefix”: the bet of be-shaggam is only an operation; the root of the word is shaggam. Concerning this King Solomon, peace be upon him, said, “This too is vanity,” hinting at Moses, a reincarnation of Abel. Moses' face shone like the light of the seven days, which is 343 lights, as below: seven times seven is forty-nine, and seven times forty-nine is 343. When Abel entered the fiftieth of the gates of understanding, he died; therefore he died on the fiftieth day after his birth. See the Zohar, Pineḥas, page 356, at the end: “‘Be-shaggam’—this is Moses. Why does he call him be-shaggam? Qohelet removes the bet from be-shaggam to conceal the matter: ‘I said that this too is vanity.’” Thus far. There was light within and encompassing light outside as well. Cain, by contrast, had inner light. Moses was a reincarnation of Seth, who was in Abel's place; however, Seth was inner light. Moses was a reincarnation of Seth, and from the aspect of his encompassing light he was a reincarnation of Abel. This is “With Abel he was without embodiment”: encompassing light is called without embodiment, whereas Seth had to become concealed and was only inward.[TN110071]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Beyond the nature of the quarry”: Seth's quarry, in Abel's place, although he was inner light, was unlike Abel, who was encompassing light. “Since the waters,” etc.: waters designated by lovingkindness, Moses' attribute, congeal and become frost and hail only through the north wind, the place of judgment and severity. Therefore he said, “God has appointed for me”: Elohim is judgment; five Tetragrammatons have the numerical value 130, five times 26.

“The fiftieth gate extended”: the fiftieth gate includes twenty-one, the numerical value of Ehyeh. Thus the forty-nine gates, together with the fiftieth gate, become seventy. Therefore it was said of Moses, “You made him a little less than God”: this is the fiftieth gate, which Moses did not attain. The ʿayin of meʿat is suspended, hinting that forty-nine becomes seventy. Impurity, by contrast, has only forty-nine aspects of impurity, from the aspect of Malkhut, in the mystery of “one wheel upon the earth.” This is “a righteous person, M.T., before the wicked”: impurity is called wicked.[TN110072]

“Therefore, in the small reckoning,” etc.: forty-nine aspects of purity also entail forty-nine corresponding aspects of impurity. In the large reckoning, however, when the fiftieth gate shines and is revealed, there are seventy aspects to Torah, as above. Corresponding to Torah's seventy aspects, seventy aspects of impurity are not stated, for impurity's qelippah has no place there.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“On the fourteenth of Adar they drew,” etc.: therefore I heard an exposition of the sages' words, “‘The Jews had light’—this is Torah; ‘joy’—this is circumcision,” for Moses' circumcision was on the fourteenth of Adar. “‘Honor’—this is tefillin,” as it is said, “You shall see My back,” which the sages expounded as the knot of tefillin. “His eye saw every precious thing,” etc.—this is Rabbi Aqiva.

“Which was fulfilled in him,” etc.: Moses comprised all Israel; therefore the decree concerning the Nile was annulled, for he corresponded to them all. “He sinned against the law of his own essence”: Moses' essence came from water, from lovingkindness—“For I drew him out of the water,” as above—and he sinned at the waters of Meribah. So Saul sinned against the law of kingship, for he struck [?] the priests' city too. As for “Saul sinned once, and it cost him; David twice, and it did not cost him”: he did not sin in a matter belonging to kingship, but in the law of the tribe, for he was of Benjamin. The eradication of Amalek was entrusted to him because he did not bow to Esau, Jacob's brother, when Jacob left Haran.[TN110073]

This is the intention of the verse, “There was a Jewish man in Shushan the capital,” etc., “a Benjaminite.” There is a difficulty: if lineage was needed, it should have been traced to Jacob; if lineage was not intended, it should not have been traced as far as Benjamin. Rather, the intention follows this premise: because [?] Jacob did not bow with all twelve of his sons—that is, Benjamin had not been born when he bowed to Esau. As stated in “K.N.L.A.N.T.” [?], had Benjamin been born when he bowed to Esau, no standing would have remained, heaven forbid, for “Israel's enemies.” Therefore Mordecai did not wish to bow to Haman: Haman

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 4

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

was from Amalek, who was from Esau, and Mordecai was from Benjamin. Therefore Saul sinned, and it was reckoned as a sin for him, when he spared Agag, who was from Amalek; see “K.N.L.A.N.T.” [?]. Mordecai's lineage is therefore traced here to Benjamin, to make known that he did not bow because [?] he came from Benjamin, who did not bow to Esau. Thus redemption came through him, and he was Saul's repair; therefore he would not kneel or bow to Haman.[TN110074]

Concerning Saul, the Gaon said about “small of stature” [?], in connection with Saul's being “from his shoulders upward taller than all the people”: bowing involves the portion of a person's body from the shoulders upward. Through that distinction—that his ancestors did not bow to Esau—he merited kingship and was taller than all the people. “To the Shekhinah, as the Zohar says,” etc.: in the Zohar, Vayyishlaḥ, page 92. The seven bowings subdued the serpent's seven heads; see Zohar Ḥadash, Ki Tissa, page 89.[TN110075]

This belongs above, at the fiftieth gate: therefore afterward “son of Manasseh” is written with a suspended nun. Since his grandson was wicked, the fiftieth gate was not revealed to him during his life; examine this carefully. Through this is resolved what the kabbalists ask: is not nun mentioned more in the Torah, more than twenty times more? The answer is that when the forty-nine gates of understanding were revealed, forty-nine qelippot were subdued. When the fiftieth gate is revealed, “its name” [?] is subdued: eleven appearances of lesions, which are eleven qelippot. This is “I—eleven,” in which is “I—eleven” [?].[TN110076]

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 5 (ה)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“She opened,” etc.: the author interprets the latter part of the verse too as referring to the Shekhinah, as in the preceding section.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“She saw him,” etc.: concerning “She saw him, the child, and behold, a youth was weeping,” the Gemara asks: It should have said “child,” etc., since it calls him both youth and child. Besides this, “the child” also appears redundant: it would have sufficed to say, “She saw, and behold, a youth was weeping.” The author prefers to interpret each expression as a separate matter. “She saw him” refers to Moses, in its plain sense. “Et ha-yeled” means “with the child”; “there” [?], “child” is a collective term for all the newborn children. She saw Moses suffering with all Israel's newborn children, equaling them all and distressed by their distress. “Behold, a youth” refers to Metatron, the youth above, the prince of the world, as is known, weeping with Moses over all the newborn children. The Shekhinah had compassion upon Israel for Moses' sake, for the entire world is saved and sustained through his merit: for this purpose he

Rema of Fano

The Shekhinah opened the ark's confinement, “and saw him with the child”: she saw him suffering with all the newborn children, equal in weight to them all and distressed by their distress. “Behold, a youth”: the known one, the prince of the world, was weeping with him over them. Immediately “she had compassion,” for his sake, for the whole world is saved and sustained through his merit. Yet even his mother's milk came through the wages paid by Pharaoh's daughter, just as his portion was supplied from Pharaoh's house, outside what was allotted, and from the land of Cush. As mentioned in the aggadah, he reigned there for forty years, in the middle of his life. Although he did not forget his God's covenant, nevertheless, since throughout that time he did not occupy himself with Israel's needs, the middle forty days he spent on the mountain were in anger. This resembles Jacob, who was punished for the twenty-two years in which he did not occupy himself with honoring his parents, although he had their permission. Likewise, afterward he needed to eat bread from Reuel's daughters. The little he suckled without payment, according to either master's view, was for his mother's need, for her healing, as is known concerning the benefit of nursing for women generally in the first months. When he came to marry, he found no daughter of Israel without a mate, as also happened to Joshua son of Nun, came into the world, as mentioned in the preceding section. [TN110078]

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Yet he” was not sustained for his own sake; even his mother's milk came for wages. This is because he did not come into the world for his own sake. The same is the reason for the other cases the author goes on to enumerate.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“As mentioned in the aggadah”: in the chronicle of Moses.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“In the middle of his life”: he was twenty-seven years old when he became king over Cush, and reigned there for forty years. At the total of sixty-seven, he was expelled from his kingdom.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“He did not forget”: as mentioned there, he did not approach the Cushite woman, the queen, wife of Qoqenos, whom he had taken as wife. He feared the LORD his God, saying, “From the way in which Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob walked” [?]; see there. [TN110079]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Therefore”: for this reason the forty days were,

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

etc.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Likewise”: for the reason we stated, that he had nothing in this world for himself, he needed the bread of Reuel's children. Even the little he suckled from his mother before Pharaoh's daughter came was not for his sake but for his mother's need, for her healing.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“According to either master”: according to the Gemara's approach, which holds that “She hid him for three months” was after the birth, in the plain sense, Moses suckled without payment throughout those three months. According to the Zohar's approach, mentioned in the preceding section, the three months were before the birth; nevertheless, he certainly suckled a little before he was cast into the Nile and before Pharaoh's daughter came.

Yad Yehudah - י

“As is known” from medical knowledge: nursing, besides being for the infant's need, is also healing for the woman during the first months after birth.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“When he came to marry”: for this same reason he needed to marry one of Jethro's daughters, because he found no mate among Israel's daughters, being though not for the same reason. Therefore Moses said, “I have been a stranger,” throughout all the days of my service, and now, in Jethro's house, “in a foreign land.” It is written, “Moses, the man of God—his sons shall be named after the tribe of Levi,” in the manner of what is written concerning the laws of converts in the future: “Whoever sojourns with you”—that is, in your poverty—“shall fall to you.” It is written, “In the tribe with which the stranger sojourns, there you shall give his inheritance.” When he came to sustain Israel in the wilderness, he fed them from what was his, the grain of heaven. In the Land, he had nothing with which to support them.

Rema of Fano - continued

Just as his tent was outside the camp, so his grave is in the land of Moab—from his Father in heaven—in the sense of the “one desolate period” that preceded the world, according to the Ari, of righteous and holy memory. See the treatise Em Kol Hai, Part III, section 11. It is not from the earth that He gave to human beings. It is “opposite Beth Peor,” in the manner of “No prophet arose again in Israel like Moses,” but among the nations one did arise—and who was he? Balaam. The Zohar explains that he alone equaled all seventy nations, surpassing all masters of divination, just as Moses surpassed all the LORD's prophets.[TN110077]

From this the verse “Flee to your place,” which Balak said to Balaam, will be fully understood. Masters of the Torah's mysteries expound it exceedingly high above, in the mystery of “running and returning,” for it is great. The relation of the holy living creatures to the hidden root is the relation among the qelippot of deprived of a portion in this world, as above in the preceding chapter concerning inheritance in the Land of Israel.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Joshua son of Nun”: he needed to marry Rahab because he too found no mate among Israel's daughters. Yet it was “not for the same reason”: Joshua found no mate because he was from the feminine world. The sages hinted at this by saying, “Joshua's face is like the face of the moon.”

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Therefore Moses said, ‘I have been a stranger in a foreign land’”: I have been a stranger throughout my days in the world, not a resident, because I have no hereditary possession in this world. For this reason I am now in a foreign land, in Jethro's house, to marry his daughter.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“It is written” (1 Chronicles 23), “Moses,” etc.: Moses is the man of God; in this world he is only a stranger in the land. Therefore his sons shall be named after the tribe of Levi, to take a portion with them in the division of the Land, namely in the manner ...

Yad Yehudah - טו

... “of what is written concerning converts: ‘Whoever sojourns with you shall fall to you’” (Isaiah 54). The sages expounded in the second chapter of Yevamot, page 24 b, that converts are not accepted in the future: one who sojourns with you in your poverty is the one who shall fall to you, but not the others. So too Moses is a stranger in the land in his poverty and within his tribe. Therefore his sons shall fall to them and take their inheritance with them.

Yad Yehudah - טו - continued

Yad Yehudah - טז

“As it is written” also concerning the future division of the Land: “In the tribe where he sojourns,” etc. (Ezekiel 47).

Yad Yehudah - יז

“He fed them from what was his”: as stated in the Zohar, Behaʿalotekha, page 296; see there. In the Land of Israel, a land flowing with milk and honey, he could not support them, and he did not cross over with them. All this is because this world is not his place, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Just as,” etc.: the same applies to his burial. Scripture says, “He buried him,” etc., “in the land of Moab, opposite Beth Peor”: in the upper land, from his Father in heaven, not in the lower land which He gave to human beings, according to the plain meaning, for Moses has no

Rema of Fano - continued

Balak, master of deed, to Balaam, whose strength is in his mouth and who equals all the possessors of the lower crowns. All the more wondrous was his eminence in Balak's eyes after he drew near to holiness, so as to bless Israel these three times. At that moment the LORD withheld from him the imaginary honor revealed to masters of divination, those who listen to soothsayers and diviners. Balak did not comprehend how high Balaam had ascended; therefore he was terrified on hearing and hid his face from him, like Israel's fear of the rays of Moses' splendor. See the treatise Ha-nefesh, chapters 8 and 16.

Thus at this point it is understood that Beth Peor is the utmost pollution, its center, where Af and Ḥemah were bound, as the sages said. Moses' grave is the utmost purity, before which Peor and those two sink down. It is Mount Abarim, to which all holiness's turnings and all its sides return. It is called Mount Nebo, from which all the prophets receive their influx, as they expounded in Sifrei, and in the sense of “all of them from Moses,” which we recalled in chapter 3. According to our approach, it may be explained from “hollow boards”: it was hollow beneath him, suspended upon nothing. Likewise the Ark of the Covenant, made in his name, as it is written, “Make for yourself an ark of wood”: its place is not subject to measurement, but it stood miraculously, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

portion in that land. For this reason his tent too was outside the camp. The intention in these two matters …

Yad Yehudah - יט

… is “in the sense of the one desolate period,” etc. He was from the preceding cycle, among the thousand generations, the one desolate period that preceded the world in the mystery of chaos. Thus it is written, “Moses was a shepherd.” Anyone of whom “was” is said comes only from this one desolate period, as stated in “AH L, ḤKḤ” [?], Part III, section 11. This is hinted at by his tent's being outside the camp: the intention is to place his tent in an inheritance [?] outside this cycle. There he returned and was buried, in the land from his Father in heaven alone.[TN110080]

Yad Yehudah - כ

“It will be,” according to this, that Scripture's “opposite Beth Peor” too is not according to its plain sense. Rather, “He buried him in the land of Moab” means in the place of utmost purity, which corresponds to and stands opposite Beth Peor, the utmost impurity. This is …

Yad Yehudah - כא

… “in the manner” of the sages' statement concerning “No prophet arose again in Israel like Moses”: among the nations one arose—and who was he? Balaam. The Zohar, Shemot, page 37,

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

explains: “Moses employed the King's holy crown above, and Balaam employed unholy crowns below,” etc. “Just as Moses was distinguished from all prophets in upper holy prophecy, so Balaam was distinguished from the other prophets in lower unholy prophecy.” The intention is to relate Moses' eminence on holiness's side and Balaam's eminence on impurity's side to one another. Likewise here, Scripture relates the land of Moab in heaven, utmost purity, to Beth Peor opposite it, utmost impurity, as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

Yad Yehudah - כב

“He equaled all seventy nations”: like Moses, who equaled all Israel.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“From this it will be fully understood,” etc.: in the Idra Zuta, Haʾazinu, page 588, concerning the Head that is not a head, it says: “Therefore it is called ‘Flee to your place’; ‘the living creatures run and return.’” Thus far. The author wrote concerning this in the treatise Yonat Elem, chapter 29: “Balak spoke this verse to Balaam, but the entire Torah consists of the Holy One's names. We learn how great was wicked Balaam's power among the lower impure crowns: he was intimate with his she-ass, corresponding to Zeʿir and Nuqba of the qelippah,” etc. “We hold that this wicked man, the central bar of the qelippot, apprehended their hidden root in their place, so that all the world's sorcerers could not prevail against him. Therefore the verse's initial letters are Balaam's letters, with aleph replacing ʿayin, for the seventy impure crowns were included with him in one root. This is what he said of himself, ‘One who hears the utterances of El’—of whom it is said, ‘You shall not bow to another god’—‘and knows the knowledge of the Most High’: the source exalted above that god of his. In holiness, however, no prophet or seer knows the knowledge of the Most High except one. The small living creatures of the chariot, together with the great ones in Emanation, all run and return before this root.” Thus far.

The author's difficulty was: how can this verse, “Flee to your place,” be expounded concerning the Head that is not a head, when it is Balak's statement to Balaam? Therefore he said there is no cause for wonder, since the entire Torah consists of the Holy One's names. Furthermore, he said that nevertheless this exposition also teaches that Balak intended the head and root on impurity's side, Balaam's place. This is the author's “We learn how great was his power,” etc. These are his words [?] here too: the masters of the Torah's mysteries in the Idra Zuta expounded this verse exceedingly high above, concerning the Head that is not a head and the mystery of “the living creatures run and return.” It is wondrous to expound the verse Balak spoke to Balaam concerning a place higher than high in holiness. Yet through our statement that Balaam's degree on impurity's side was like Moses' on holiness's side, the matter is fully and amply resolved [?]: Scripture incidentally shows how great was wicked Balaam's power on impurity's side, as stated.[TN110081]

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

Yad Yehudah - כד

“For the relation,” etc.: that is, the Idra fittingly expounds the matter through the mystery of “the living creatures run and return.” In holiness, the four living creatures of the chariot, called the small living creatures, and the sefirot in Emanation, called the great living creatures, run and return before the root of the Head that is not a head. Likewise, on impurity's side, all the lower crowns stand before their root and Balaam's place, which is their god.

Yad Yehudah - כה

“Of Balak, master of deed, to Balaam, whose strength is in his mouth”: as stated in Zohar Ḥadash, Balaq: “Balak's wisdom was stronger and greater than Balaam's wisdom. Balaam's wisdom was for a single moment; Balak's wisdom was at every time. But the keys to them all were in Balaam's hands, because he completed it with his mouth. Balak knew how to perform his sorceries but did not know how to complete them with his mouth.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

“After he drew near to holiness”: the LORD placed a word in his mouth, and he prophesied through the attribute of mercy three times, so that he would bless Israel from the mouth of the Most High, the source of blessings, as Ha-Tsiyyoni, Recanati, and Bahya wrote. Concerning this Balak said: “I called you to curse my enemies,” since you know how to complete sorcery with your mouth, “and behold, you have blessed”—the reverse, from holiness's side —“these three times.” Now, “Flee” from holiness “to your place” on the Other Side.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“At that moment,” etc.: this is what Balak concludes, “I said I would honor you greatly, but behold, the LORD has withheld honor from you”: honor on impurity's side, which is imaginary honor.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“How high Balaam had ascended”: in holiness.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“Therefore he was terrified on hearing”: as it is written, “He struck his hands together.”

Yad Yehudah - ל

“He hid his face from him” and told him, “Flee,” because he feared him.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Like Israel's fear,” etc.: as Scripture says, “They were afraid to approach him.”

Yad Yehudah - לב

“Thus at this point it is understood”: the intention of that clause, “opposite Beth Peor,” is to relate Moses' grave, utmost purity, to Beth Peor opposite it, utmost pollution, etc.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“Where Af and Ḥemah were bound”: Moses concealed them there, as stated in Pirqei Rabbi Eliʿezer.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“And they,” Af and Ḥemah, “sink down before him”: as stated there, when they emerge to rise and see Moses' grave, they turn back.

Yad Yehudah - לה

“It is”: Moses' grave is for this reason also called Mount Abarim, expressing a side or direction, since all holiness's sides return to it. See the Zohar, Terumah, page 38: the Other Side has no dominion even over Mount Abarim below; see there.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“In the sense” of the sages' statement concerning “The Shekhinah rests only upon one who is wise,” etc., “and all of them from Moses.” Its intention is that the prophets' influx of prophecy must be from Moses at Sinai. See the treatise ḤKḤ, section 3. [TN110082]

Yad Yehudah - לז

“According to our approach”: Moses had no possession whatsoever in this world, so that even his burial was in the land of Moab in heaven. Nebo may be explained from navuv, “hollow,” to hint that his burial was not in the land below but above, suspended upon nothing, with a hollow beneath him.

Yad Yehudah - לח

“Likewise”: the same applies to the Ark of the Covenant, which stood miraculously, as the sages said. It is for this reason: just as Moses' place in this world is not subject to measurement, as stated above in the preceding chapter, so the ark made in his name has a place not subject to measurement.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“She saw him with the child,” with qamats, which refers to “D.” [?], the whole body of newborn children. She saw Moses suffering with them all; the word means “with.” “Behold, a youth”: this is Metatron, called youth in the manner of “I was a youth”; the prince of the world said it, as Rashi explains in the Gemara. From the remainder of Metatron, “prince,” they are M.T. [?].[TN110083]

“The world is sustained through his merit,” etc.: all sustenance is from “the duke” [?], as the sages said, etc., “the entire world is sustained,” etc. Yet even his mother's milk came for wages. See Zohar Ḥadash on “One who goes to the nut garden,” in Zohar Ḥadash, Song of Songs, page 71: “They weep, and they weep from these melodies,” in the manner of “You fed them bread of tears.” As reward for their blood [?], He fed them bread; through the power of that weeping too they are sustained for his sake. [TN110084]

“He did not find,” etc., one who had no mate. Indeed, why? Because he had no connection with this world, as above in the preceding chapter. “Not for the same reason,” etc.: Joshua was from the feminine world, and therefore found no mate; Moses, however, found no mate for the foregoing reason, that he had no connection with this world. “I have been a stranger,” etc.: in this world he was a stranger throughout his life; this is “my service.” Now, with Jethro, he was also a stranger in a foreign land. “There you shall give his inheritance,” etc.: therefore Moses' sons too would be named after Levi's tribe concerning inheritance. Moses himself, however, is the man of God and has no portion or inheritance in this world.

“In the Land he had nothing,” etc.: in an uninhabited place, namely the wilderness, he fed them from what was his. In a place where the world is settled, however, Moses' place is not there: namely in the settlement of “Ḥ.Y.” [?]. He had nothing with which to support them, since he has no connection there. “From his Father in heaven”: he expounds the word Moab as “from the Father” in heaven, in the sense of the one desolate period preceding this cycle. Moses belonged there, and his soul was hidden there, not from the lower earth which He gave to human beings.[TN110085]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“In the mystery of running and returning,” etc.: the angels draw near to the Shekhinah, cannot bear the great light, and retreat. This is “running and returning.” “For the relation of the holy living creatures,” etc., “is the relation among the qelippot,” etc.: “God made this corresponding to that,” qelippot corresponding to the holy living creatures in holiness, corresponding to all Israel. He equaled in impurity all possessors of the lower crowns, namely the qelippot and the princes of the external powers, just as Moses equaled all Israel in holiness. When Balaam then drew near to holiness too, at that moment He withheld from him imaginary honor: his eminence in impurity, revealed to masters of divination. He only drew somewhat nearer to nourishment from holiness. Therefore he told him, “Flee to your place” in impurity. Its initial letters hint at BLAM, with aleph replacing ʿayin, to hint that Balaam's eminence was above the seventy external princes.

This is in the manner of “One who knows the knowledge of the Most High,” for there is knowledge in impurity. There is a point of nourishment, in the mystery of “Now He gives life to them all” [?], from the knowledge that is holiness, and from there Balaam draws nourishment, for there is knowledge in impurity, etc. Just as the holy living creatures run and return to draw nourishment from holy light, so he went from Balaam [?]. “These three occasions”: its final letters are Moshe, for Moses is the mystery of knowledge, comprising Tif'eret. Therefore he answered Amen, in the manner of “Satan also came,” whose final letters are Amen. Satan and Peninnah intended their acts for the sake of heaven.[TN110086]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Therefore Balak was terrified of him when he drew near to holiness and reached this degree, like Israel's fear of the rays of splendor. “Thus it is understood,” etc., refers back to “It is opposite Beth Peor,” etc. “Peor and they”: Af and Ḥemah. “It is Mount Abarim,” etc.: for this reason the mountain is called Mount Abarim, to which all the turnings, etc. “It is called Mount Nebo,” etc.: know that the writings state: Mount Nebo is Moses, in the mystery of the five lovingkindnesses in Ḥokhmah; Mount Hor is Aaron, the five powers of severity in Binah, in the manner of “Many daughters have acted valiantly,” etc.—“Malkhut, around” [?]. Nebo derives from navuv, “hollow,” for the place of his burial is not subject to measurement, like the ark, which stood miraculously.[TN110087]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 5

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 6 (ו)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“He buried him in the valley,” etc.: the author concludes the exposition concerning Moses' grave from the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Therefore those above,” etc.: in the first chapter of Sotah, concerning “No man knew his burial place”:

Rema of Fano

“He buried him in the valley.” Therefore those above see him below, according to the plain meaning. Its numerical value is govhah, “height”; in Atbash, be-ram, “on high.” Therefore those below see him above. In truth, he is exalted above all, far beyond what they see, without measure. For in the Torah's mysteries we translate: “He buried him in the thirteen

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

“The government once sent to the garrison at Beth Peor: ‘Show us where Moses is buried.’ They stood above, and it appeared to them below; below, and it appeared to them above,” etc. The matter has its plain meaning. Nevertheless, the author holds that the second clause hints at the truth: his grave is indeed very high above, exalted over all, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Its": the word be-gai has the numerical value of govhah, "height." Likewise the letters gimel-yod become resh-mem in Atbash, hinting that his burial was at the height and elevation of the upper world, "as we translate," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"No man knew," etc.: this is the conclusion there in the Gemara: Rabbi Ḥama bar Ḥanina said, "Even Moses our teacher does not know where he is buried. Here it is written, 'No man knew,' and there, 'This is the blessing with which Moses, the man,'" etc. It is because of the immensity of his holiness.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"If 'until' is explained" as not inclusive, so that it cannot be interpreted concerning Moses, we too may say that "No man knew" refers to the Holy One, blessed be He, called the Man of War. "He did not know" means the blessed Lord did not attend or give heed to Moses' burial, which had been potential since the six days of creation, to bring it into actuality until this day. The intention is that this realization was not completed until this day.

Rema of Fano - continued

measures of mercy." "No man knew"—even "this man Moses"—"his burial place, until this day," including this day. [TN110088]

If "until" is explained as excluding the day itself, we too may say: the Man of War, who puts to death and brings to life, had not attended to his burial place. Although it was created potentially at twilight, "He did not know" means its realization was not completed until this day. "He did not know" is precise, in the manner of "Now I know," said at the Binding: then the knowledge extended into actuality, hinted at by "now." Concerning this Qohelet said, "For everything, a season": its actual appointment, emerging from the potentiality of the submerged existence it had in the order of times, concerning which it is said, "And a time for every purpose." One who knows the difference between leil and laylah, and between naʿar and naʿarah, as explained in the Zohar, will explain by their approach the difference between ʿet and ʿattah. [TN110114]

Or it may mean: what you chose now is what I knew already, as we shall explain in the treatise Ha-middot and in Part IV of this treatise. Knowledge concerning human affairs concerns what they will choose; therefore His knowledge does not compel. Here too, he chose to slaughter but did not slaughter, and this is what was manifest before Him, blessed be He. Knowledge is needed only where choice exists. Otherwise, there is no praise in knowing the future: even the lowliest person knows what he wishes to do among all things within his power, even through an emissary, if it

Yad Yehudah - ו

"'He did not know' is precise": Scripture's expression "did not know" is exact, since the language of knowledge also applies to something now extending into actuality. Thus "Now I know that you fear God" does not mean the blessed Lord previously did not know his righteousness, heaven forbid. Even before He tested Abraham, He knew Abraham would withstand the trial, but the knowledge was potential alone; now it extended into present existence by coming into actuality.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Hinted at by the word ʿattah," which expresses ʿet, "time." Qohelet said of it, "For everything, a season, and a time for every purpose under heaven." "For everything, a season" means when the thing is appointed in actual present existence; "a time for every purpose," when it was potential, as a purpose submerged under heaven in the order of times that already existed.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"One who knows," etc.: do not wonder at the added he in ʿattah. It is like leil/laylah and naʿar/naʿarah, explained in many places in the Zohar: at a time of favor, at the hour of the union [?] above, it is called laylah or naʿarah, with an added he. Here too, concerning the time of favor, he says ʿattah.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

[TN110091]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Or it may mean,” etc.: incidentally, the author explains the statement “Now I know” in further ways.

Yad Yehudah - י

“What you chose now”: although it occurred through your choice, nevertheless I knew already. Choice does not contradict knowledge, as the philosophers supposed.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Therefore”: knowledge also includes choice, in such a manner that knowledge does not compel. Otherwise two opposites would exist in one subject, as the Rivash wrote in a responsum. I copied his words there in the treatise Ha-middot and in the treatise ḤKḤ, Part II, section 35.[TN110092]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Knowledge is needed only,” etc.: know that this is the truth, for the blessed Lord's praise in knowledge arises only together with choice: He knows the way a person will choose. Apart from this there is no need for praise in knowing. What distinction is there in His knowing what He wishes to do Himself or through His emissary? Every man ruling his own house knows what he wishes to do among things within his power and reach. Even if a person does something through an does not depend on another's judgment. These are straightforward matters in which those perfected in contemplation and upright in heart will rejoice and be glad.

Rema of Fano - continued

We have another explanation according to the verse's plain meaning: Uriel, the angel speaking to him, is the one who says, “Now I know.” The words “from me” are also precise, for he is the master of the fire crouching like a lion upon the altar in a time of favor. Opposite him outside is Baladan, with a dog's face. Its meaning is “no lords”: “There is no God” in all his schemes. Therefore a dog's price was forbidden for the altar. He is the village dog, the prince of Babylon's kingdom, who, through our iniquities, forcibly mounted the lioness in the forests. Therefore a harlot's fee was forbidden. Yet when a dog mounted a young woman from behind, in the chapter Ha-ba ʿal yevimto, they declared her eligible for the priesthood and said, “Intercourse with a beast does not constitute harlotry”—meaning within humankind. The corresponding image above is that only the Matron's maiden is profaned; nevertheless, it is reckoned as though, etc. Enough of this.[TN110089]

It is known that from the dog and the lioness the leopard is born. This is what the prophet said, “I was to them like a lion”—in the First Temple—“like a leopard by the road I shall watch,” in the Second Temple, where the fire crouched like a dog. Concerning it Qohelet said, “A living dog is better than a dead lion”: meaning that he was removed from his office. There is also a leopard born from the lioness forcibly mounted by the forest boar, under the rule of the terrible emissary, when that emissary is compelled to do it, there is no praise in the sender's knowing the end from the beginning—heaven forbid, as we said. The Master of the world's praise is that He knows what a person will choose in its time, willingly, without any compulsion.

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג

“We have another explanation according to the verse's plain meaning”: the angel said “Now I know,” not the blessed Lord. He speaks in his own voice, as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“It is also precise” that he says, “You did not withhold your son, your only one, from me.” If the speech were from the blessed Lord, “from me” would be superfluous. Since the angel speaks for himself, however, “from me” is fitting, for he is Uriel, appointed over sacrifices.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“For he is the master of the fire”: as is known, and as stated in the Zohar, Tsav, page 25, on “Fire went forth,” etc.: “This is Uriel, who descends in a lion's form in flame until he descends to the altar to receive the gift. He appears as a great lion crouching upon the sacrifice,” etc. On page 27 it concludes: “Then there was joy in all, for it was accepted with favor,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“Opposite him outside,” etc.: since he mentioned Uriel, master of the fire consuming sacrifices, he also mentions what stands opposite him outside, in impurity, and explains what belongs to this subject. It is from the Zohar, Bereshit, and I saw fit to copy it. These are its words there, page 28, on “He struck the lion within the pit on a snowy day”: “In earlier times, when this river drew its waters downward, Israel stood in perfection, slaughtering sacrifices and bringing offerings to atone for their souls. Then the form of a lion descended from above; they saw it upon the altar, crouching over its prey, consuming offerings like a mighty man. All dogs hid before it and did not emerge outside. When sins brought it about, he descended into the degrees below and killed that lion, for he did not wish to give it its prey as at first. As it were, he killed it: ‘He struck the lion,’ indeed, ‘within the pit,’ before their eyes, of the evil Other Side [?]. When that side saw this, it grew strong and sent a dog to consume offerings. What is that lion's name? Uriel, whose face is a lion's face. What is that dog's name? Baladan is its name, for it is not within humankind but is a female dog, with a dog's face. ‘On a snowy day’: on the day when sins caused beast. A boar's price was not forbidden, either because it is destined to return or because sacrifices ceased altogether under its kingdom, and the greater liability applies to it. In his dream Daniel saw the third beast like a leopard. King Solomon, peace be upon him, equated all four beasts under this description in the verse “With me from Lebanon, bride.” He proclaims that she will ascend with him “from lions' dens,” the host on high, and “from leopards' mountains,” upon the earth, because she was bold as a leopard amid the exiles to do the will of our Father in heaven. Thus he turns the curse into a blessing.

Rema of Fano - continued

Just as there are a lion's face and a dog's face, in a time of war and a time of peace, at the acceptance of a sacrifice, so they exist at the reception of souls as they leave the world. Here Uriel says, “Now I know,” when Isaac's soul departed, as we mentioned above in Part II, chapter 8. He was ready to offer the burnt offering from our father Abraham's ram. He also served at the covenant between the pieces; through him Abraham's chariot was completed, together with the three men at the terebinths of Mamre. We have another approach to this in the treatise Ha-nefesh. But in the verse “By Myself I swear,” “from me” is not said, for it proves nothing.

Furthermore, “Now I know that you fear God” is like “Now I know that the LORD has saved His anointed.” That entire verse is spoken by the “day of trouble” mentioned at the psalm's beginning. Of it is written, “If you slacken on a day of trouble,” concerning one who does not prevail over his inclination and this and judgment was judged above by the upper court.”[TN110093]

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Therefore a dog's price was forbidden for the altar”: so as not to give the qelippah of the dog strength to rule over the sacrifice.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“He is”: the aforesaid Baladan is the village dog who was prince of Babylon's kingdom.

Yad Yehudah - יט

Etc.: for this Baladan, king of Babylon, was punished, as the sages said in the chapter Ḥeleq concerning Merodach-baladan son of Baladan: “They said: Baladan was a king; his face changed and became like a dog's.” Because of his attachment [?] to his prince above in impurity, his name was changed to Baladan, the prince's name. He was punished measure for measure, and his face changed to a dog's. The sages' statement concerning Nebuchadnezzar's name, that he barked like a dog, also indicates this matter. [TN110094]

Yad Yehudah - כ

“Mounted the lioness”: Malkhut of Creation, as will be explained shortly. He overpowered her against her will in the forest of Lebanon, the Temple, through Nebuchadnezzar, “that we may understand” [?].

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

[TN110095]

Yad Yehudah - כא

“Therefore” the blessed Lord forbade a harlot's fee for the altar. One must not think that because the Torah forbade the fee for this reason, it is as though the Matron, Malkhut of Emanation, were profaned, heaven forbid. On the contrary, from this very verse the Gemara in Ha-ba ʿal yevimto derives that intercourse with a beast does not constitute harlotry. There, page 59 b: “A woman penetrated by a beast is not subject to the status of a harlot. A young woman was sweeping the house, and a village dog mounted her from behind; Rabbi declared her eligible for the priesthood,” etc. Rava of Parzaqya said to Rav Ashi: “Whence the rabbis' statement that intercourse with a beast does not constitute harlotry? For it is written, ‘You shall not bring a harlot's fee or a dog's price’; but a dog's fee and a harlot's price are permitted, since it says, ‘both of them’—two, not four.” Likewise here, concerning the likeness within the Human of Emanation, blemish and profanation have no place in her, heaven forbid.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Yet”: the matter is as stated in the Zohar, Ki Tetse, page 536: “Opposite this Malkhut of Emanation there is Malkhut of strengthen himself in Torah and good deeds, “your strength is constrained”: this is the Shekhinah. Moreover, this verse is expounded from its end to its beginning: “Your strength, an adversary; trouble, on the day you slacken.” The external powers draw strength from her, and it is bitter for her. Through repentance and prayer, “May the LORD answer you” by means of him, compelling him to become an advocate. The letters of the Name are Torah, repentance, prayer, and good deeds, which tractate Berakhot says are four things requiring strengthening. What does the evil angel say against his will? “May the name of the God of Jacob exalt you”: this is “your strength,” which we mentioned.[TN110090]

Rema of Fano - continued

Here too, “after these things”—the accuser mentioned at the section's beginning in the Zohar's words—became an angel of the LORD and acknowledged to Abraham that there was no room to question his trial. In conclusion, Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, was uncertain where his soul was going, because from the outset he had come only for Israel's need, as we mentioned in chapter 4. Know that when he prayed for them, his prayer never returned empty; for himself, even once it did not succeed. Therefore he repeated to himself, “Those who go out to rescue return to their place,” and no more, to diminish the reward of his commandments and not take credit for himself, as we mentioned at the beginning of chapter 3.

The Holy One, blessed be He, said to him: “Moses, do you not know that rulings are not issued directly from a

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Creation. She is the kingdom of Creation's angels and the Matron's maiden on her side. She is the image of her ‘revelation’ [?], comprised of ten. Through Israel's sins, this one can be profaned among the world's nations. But of the Holy One's Malkhut of Emanation it is said, ‘I am the LORD; that is My name, and My glory I shall not give to another,’ etc. Nevertheless, one who profanes the King's maiden is reckoned as though he profanes His Matron,” etc.; see there. From this the author copied the wording here, to say that what we depict through the village dog's mounting concerns only the Matron's maiden. Although a dog's fee is permitted, the Torah nevertheless forbade a harlot's fee because of this dog's mounting, since the profanation is so great that it is reckoned as though he profanes the Matron. [TN110096]

Yad Yehudah - כג

“It is known,” etc.: as the prophet says (Hosea 13), “I was to them like a lion; like a leopard by the road I shall watch.” He says “like a lion” concerning the First Temple, where the fire crouched upon the altar like a lion; concerning the Second Temple, where it crouched like a dog, as the sages said—that is, the Other Side grew strong to rule over the lion, “K.O.” [?]—he says “like a leopard,” which comes from lion and dog. “By the road I shall watch”: then above it is the village dog. [TN110097]

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

Yad Yehudah - כד

“There is” also another kind of leopard, born from the forest boar and the lioness. The author holds that this is the fourth beast Daniel saw, as it is written: “After this I was watching in the night visions, and behold, a fourth beast, terrifying, dreadful, and exceedingly strong,” etc. (there, chapter 7). He did not mention the animal's name because it too was a leopard, already mentioned in the third vision; therefore he gave it no other name. The difference is that the third beast was a leopard born from lioness and dog, and the fourth a leopard born from lioness and boar, as Scripture says, “The boar from the forest ravages it.”

Yad Yehudah - כה

“If” a boar's price was not likewise forbidden for this reason, to diminish that

Rema of Fano - continued

Mishnah? The Gemara says concerning it, ‘With their weapons upon them.’” Their weapons are none other than their ornaments, as in the Targum; these are unquestionably the reward of a commandment. Concerning the granting of his reward it is said, “I shall favor that which I shall favor.” It does not say “the one whom I shall favor,” but the reward that I shall favor. For all other righteous people's reward has been prepared since the six days of creation, whereas the treasury of favor destined to open before Moses is one to which the Holy One, blessed be He, adds favor every day. This is in the sense of “Before all your people I shall perform wonders”: he will receive the reward of all generations—or say, a reward corresponding to all generations. So it is written, “Which I am doing with you”: continuously doing, in the sense of the Zohar's “New heavens and a new earth, which I am making.” See above, at the end of the exposition of Part II. He said, “I shall have mercy upon that upon which I shall have mercy,” to provide him a vessel containing His blessed favor, “in the holy mountains, from the womb before dawn,” in the manner we mentioned. It is in the sense of “In wrath remember mercy.”

Yad Yehudah - כה - continued

upper prince's power, the reason is either that it is destined to return to permissibility, as stated above in Part II, chapter 16—the hint also concerns the prince, destined to return to good—or that the greater liability applies to it, because through it sacrifices were abolished altogether.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“In the verse ‘With me from Lebanon, bride; with me from Lebanon you shall come. Look from the summit of Amanah, from the summit of Senir and Hermon, from lions' dens, from leopards' mountains.’” Having mentioned the end of the exiles of the four kingdoms in “With me from Lebanon,” etc., he adds “from lions' dens,” for then the host on high, the seventy princes, will also come, and afterward the kings of the earth upon the earth. This is “from leopards' mountains”: they were bold as a leopard in executing judgments upon us, through our iniquities, by our Father in heaven's decree.

Yad Yehudah - כו - continued

Yad Yehudah - כז

“Thus” Solomon turns “leopard” from a curse into a blessing, expounding it for good.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“So they exist,” etc.: as stated in the Zohar, Pineḥas, page 471, in Raʿya Mehemna. After mentioning the lion's form and the dog's form concerning these sacrifices, it says: “Likewise, when a person dies, if he merits, a lion's form descends to receive his soul; otherwise, a dog's form, of which David said, ‘Deliver my soul from the sword, my only one from the dog's hand.’”

Yad Yehudah - כח - continued

Yad Yehudah - כט

“Here,” etc.: this concludes the matter. We said Uriel was the angel speaking “Now I know” because these are his two functions: to receive Isaac's soul, which flew from him at the Binding, as explained above in Part II, chapter 8, and to offer the ram prepared since the six days of creation.

Yad Yehudah - כט - continued

Yad Yehudah - ל

“He also served,” etc.: “Now I know” means that this angel had already been with him twice: at the covenant between the pieces, over the sacrificial service, and he was also “among” [?] the three men at the terebinths of Mamre, who were Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael, etc. He too was with them, as stated in the Zohar, Vayyera, page 48, to complete the chariot.[TN110098]

Yad Yehudah - לא

“But in the verse ‘For I swear’”: there it says, “You did not withhold your son, your only one,” without saying “from me.” The reason is that it is not probative: it indicates nothing, unlike the first time, when “from me” was needed to show that Uriel was speaking to him.[TN110099]

Yad Yehudah - לב

“Furthermore”: one may say that the verse “Now I know” is like “Now I know,” etc., mentioned in the psalm “May the LORD answer you on a day of trouble.” There it concerns the accuser, who against his will becomes an advocate and says, “Now I know that the LORD has saved His anointed,” etc. So too here, as will be explained below.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“Spoken by the ‘day of trouble’” mentioned at the psalm's beginning: this designates the accuser. The verse “Now I know” is spoken by the accuser.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“It is written” (Proverbs 24), “If you slacken on a day of trouble, your strength is constrained.” They expounded this concerning the evil inclination in the Zohar, Vayyishlaḥ, page 397: “When a person slackens from Torah, as it were he presses the Holy One, blessed be He, together with that evil inclination, which becomes an accuser. ‘Your strength is constrained’: the strength of Koh is constrained, because it draws near before Him to accuse, and His strength is weakened.”

Yad Yehudah - לה

“Concerning one who does not prevail” and does not strengthen himself in Torah.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“Koh”: the Shekhinah is called Koh, as is known. This is koaḥ Koh, “the strength of Koh.”

Yad Yehudah - לז

“Moreover,” etc.: the matter becomes still clearer in another way when the verse is expounded from its end to its beginning: “The strength of Koh is constrained” because of “trouble,” on the day of the evil inclination, which takes the strength on the day they slacken from Torah.

Yad Yehudah - לח

“Through repentance,” etc.: “If you slacken on a day of trouble” concerns one who does not strengthen himself in Torah and good deeds. Here, “May the LORD answer you on a day of trouble,” concerns the opposite: someone who occupies himself with Torah, repentance, prayer, and good deeds. The intention is that through this, “May the LORD answer you” by means of the accuser, compelling him to become your advocate. Thus they are hinted at in his saying [?], “May the name of the God of Jacob exalt you”: he speaks here of one occupied with Torah, repentance, and the like, for these are … [TN110100]

Yad Yehudah - לט

… the four letters of the Tetragrammaton, roots of four divine activities. Yod is the wisdom of Torah, as explained in the Zohar, Qedoshim, page “Q.D.V.” [?]: “Torah is found in the upper thought; it stood” [?]; see there. He is Binah, the place of repentance, as is known. Vav is the middle pillar, the source of prayer; see the Zohar, Mishpatim, Raʿya Mehemna, page 205. The last he is Malkhut; all good deeds come and gather there, and from them her garment is made. This is “May the Name exalt you”: the Tetragrammaton's four letters will give you might and strength for these four good activities. “Exalt you” is said because Torah and the like require strengthening, as stated in Berakhot, in the chapter Ein ʿomdin, page 32 b, and they derive it from Scripture.[TN110101]

Yad Yehudah - מ

“May He exalt you,” etc.: against his will he will become the person's advocate and strengthen him in these four things.

Yad Yehudah - מא

“This is ‘your strength’”: the Shekhinah, which we mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - מב

“Here too”: we return to the verse “Now I know that you fear God.” These are the words of the accuser mentioned at the section's beginning: “After these things, God tested Abraham," etc. The Zohar, Vayyera, page 292, expounds "after these things" as a designation of the evil inclination: "'It was after': the lowest degree of all upper degrees. Who is it? 'Things,' as it is said, 'I am not a man of words.' Who is this after this degree? 'God tested Abraham': the evil inclination came to accuse before the Holy One, blessed be He," etc.; see there. The author says this was the angel who afterward called to Abraham from heaven and said, "Now I know." He became an advocate and acknowledged to Abraham that he should not be questioned further.

Yad Yehudah - מב - continued

Yad Yehudah - מג

"In conclusion," etc.: the author returns to Moses' statement, "I do not know where my soul is going," according to his explanation mentioned in chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - מד

"Know" that it is so, that he came into the world only for Israel's need, not his own. Every time he prayed for Israel, his prayer did not return empty. When he once prayed for himself, to enter the Land of Israel, his prayer was not accepted, because this had been the nature of his coming into this world from the outset.

Yad Yehudah - מה

"Therefore he repeated," etc.: the Mishnah in the fourth chapter of Eruvin says, "All who go out to rescue return to their place." The Gemara establishes that they return with their weapons. The author says this applied to Moses, who was uncertain where his soul was going and repeated the Mishnah's wording: "All who go out to rescue return to their district." He had left his upper world for this world to rescue Israel, and returns to his place.

Yad Yehudah - מו

"And no more": he curtailed the Gemara's "They return with their weapons." This was because of his humility: he was unconcerned whether his height would rise to heaven in a greater degree to receive reward. But the Holy One, blessed be He, answered him with the Gemara's wording, that they return with their weapons. So he would return and ascend to his place with his weapons and his ornaments, the reward of his commandments, for it is great.

Yad Yehudah - מז

"As in its Targum": "armed" [?], as the translator says on "They stripped themselves of their ornaments."[TN110102]

Yad Yehudah - מח

"Concerning the granting of his reward it is said," etc.: incidentally, the author explains "I shall favor," etc. He says it was spoken concerning Moses himself when he asked about the granting of the righteous people's reward. Therefore it does not say, "I shall favor the one whom I shall favor," but "that which I shall favor": Moses' reward, for the LORD will favor that treasury of reward and favor, adding favor to it every day.

Yad Yehudah - מט

"In the sense of 'Before all your people I shall perform wonders'": I shall perform wonders; I shall grant you to receive reward corresponding to all your people and all generations.

Yad Yehudah - נ

"Or say": as we say in the Gemara concerning one counted among the first ten in the synagogue, explained above in Part II, chapter 14; see there.

Yad Yehudah - נא

"So it is written," etc.: for this reason the verse concludes, "Which I am doing with you." It should also have said "I shall do," in the future tense. Rather, the intention is: I am continually doing with you, each day adding favor to your reward.

Yad Yehudah - נב

"In the sense" of the verse "For as the new heavens and the new earth which I am making": "from the saying" [?], that He continually makes them from those new Torah insights, as stated above in Part II, chapter 14; see there.[TN110103]

Yad Yehudah - נג

"He said, 'I shall have mercy upon that upon which I shall have mercy,'" although He already said, "I shall favor that which I shall favor." This does not repeat the matter in different words. Since "I shall favor" means He will add favor day by day, this blessing too was needed: the blessed Lord would provide him a vessel containing all these favors without limit. Thus "I shall have mercy" expresses a womb and a receptacle, as stated above in Part II, chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - נד

“In the sense of ‘In wrath remember mercy’”: remember a vessel to contain the wrath, for they cannot receive an excess of calamity, as is known.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“According to the plain meaning,” etc.: he was buried in an actual valley, and therefore they see him below. “A miracle in the valley” [?], with the numerical value B.H.; B.H., initials N., “their reward,” the expression N.B.H. [?]. “In thirteen measures of mercy”: the thirteen attributes. Therefore “No man knew his burial place”: even this Moses did not know the immensity of his burial's eminence. “Until this day,” including the day itself: in its mystery it is concealed above, and he cannot comprehend the immensity of his perfection and his illumination within the light in which he was included there.[TN110104]

“The Man had not attended”: “did not know” is like “had not attended.” “The Man of War” is the blessed Lord. The realization of his burial, which had existed potentially alone, created at twilight, had not been completed; now it was completed in actuality. This is like “Now you knew” at the Binding, when knowledge extended into actuality, hinted at by ʿattah, “now.” For ʿattah expresses potentiality, not yet actualized, and when it is actualized it is called ʿattah. “The submerged existence it had”: already existing potentially alone. This is “A time for every purpose”: He purposes to act but has not yet acted. “For everything, a season” is when what had until now been ʿet, time in potentiality alone, for every purpose, is completed in actuality. It is in the manner of the commentators' statement that in Nisan the world was created potentially and in Tishri actually. This is the order stated earlier. Thus “Now I know”: what existed potentially in knowledge has now become actual.[TN110105]

“One who knows the difference between laylah and laylah,” etc.: the Zohar explains that until midnight, when there is no union, it is called leil; from then onward, when there is union, it is called laylah. Likewise naʿar: before she receives a male upon herself she is called naʿar; afterward she is called naʿarah. He has three lines: Ḥ.D.R., lovingkindness, judgment, mercy, corresponding to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Therefore the sages said: [gap] “and take good,” only for one who makes her an empty vessel. Priest, Levite, Israelite: priest is lovingkindness, Levite is judgment, Israelite is mercy. All this, when it emerges from potentiality to actuality, is called “with he” [?]. This is the difference between ʿet and ʿattah, as above.[TN110106]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“What you chose now”: Abraham chose to slaughter Isaac, and I already knew that you would choose it. For knowledge compels a person to act; rather, knowledge concerns what a person will ultimately choose. This removes the philosophers' perplexity: if it is knowledge, there is no choice. For if He merely knows what a person will ultimately do, there is no praise in knowing, since even the lowliest person knows, etc. Rather, knowledge concerns what the person will ultimately choose, evil or good. A lowly person cannot know this concerning his fellow, what he will choose in the future.[TN110107]

“Speaking,” etc.: to Abraham he said, “Now I know,” because concerning the blessed Lord one cannot say “now He knows”: it was already known to Him. “Like a lion upon the altar,” etc.: there, Kanfei Yonah explains that aryeh, lion, has the value 216. At each corner of the altar shines the light of the name BN, joined between two directions. The name BN is two Tetragrammatons: twice 26 is 52, and in them are eight letters, making 216. Therefore the fire crouched like a lion. At each corner BN is the numerical value of “all” [?], when He brings it from impurity into holiness at a time of favor. Outside, in impurity, when it is not a time of favor, Baladan has a dog's face: one name BN from the north side. As stated in the Zohar, “companions and mules” [?] raise smoke northward; they are the dogs of fierce appetite. As above, “there is no,” like “no lords.” Therefore a dog's price is forbidden for the altar, for it is in impurity.[TN110108]

It is known that the seventy princes are close to holiness, in the mystery of the lion's Malkhut, like the peel surrounding food. They correspond to the number of four letters. But through our many iniquities “they multiplied, working in clay” [?]: Babylon's kingdom ruled in the mystery of the qelippah Nogah because of our iniquities, and drew holiness toward itself. “The permission removes the” [?], etc. Therefore the sages said, “Nabal in evil, three” [?], which are the letters of “evil dog”: it changed from lion to dog, the illumination of Babylon's kingdom, called lion, when it takes a root from the letters. This is the village dog that mounted the lioness, the Shekhinah, as it were: drawing holiness toward itself is called mounting. Therefore

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“a harlot's fee” is said corresponding to this harlotry.[TN110109]

“It is reckoned as though” he mounted her, as it were. “Like a lion”: the lion in the First Temple. “Like a leopard,” etc.: in the Second Temple it crouched like a dog; this is the leopard that comes from a dog. “He was removed from his office”: Uriel was removed from his office because of our iniquities, and the crouching fire became like a dog. This is the lion that died, that departed. The reason concerning Media: in its time there was the qelippah Nogah; then it drew near to holiness and drew it toward itself. Thus Esther said, “Deliver my soul from the sword”: its initial letters are Haman. “From the dog's hand”: the letters of mi-yad are those of Media; the lion became a dog. There is also a leopard born from a boar and a lioness. Then the difficulty is: why was a boar's price not mentioned? He answers: either because it is destined to return to its original permissibility, or because Edom's kingdom, compared to a forest boar, is subject to the greater liability, since it abolished sacrifices altogether. “Its designation” [?].[TN110110]

“The Matron's maiden,” etc.: the Zohar, Ki Tetse, says that the maiden is revealed “to the thinness of the backs” [?], in the mystery of the qelippot Nogah. “Thus he turns,” etc.: from dog to lion, “and it was, and he cursed,” into blessing [?]. Another explanation: “A living dog,” etc., is the lion, “from twenty-six he praises, also draws nourishment, and dog to lion” [?].[TN110111]

“At the reception of souls”: the offerings on the upper altar, and Uriel receives them. “Here Uriel,” etc.: at the Binding, “the LORD appeared” [?], “You did not withhold,” etc., “from me,” for he receives Isaac's soul when it flies out. Therefore he said,

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 6

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Now I know,” when his soul departed, etc. “He also served,” etc.: Uriel served at the covenant between the pieces, and afterward there were the three men at the terebinths of Mamre. Thus the chariot was completed with four legs. Zohar, Terumah: at the terebinths of Mamre there were Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael. Concerning Uriel, “from me” is not said there at “By Myself I swear,” for it is not probative, meaning it teaches nothing. Therefore “from me” is not said, unlike “You did not withhold,” as above.[TN110112]

“Spoken by the day of trouble,” etc.: “day of trouble” is the accuser. The LORD will answer you through the accuser, who against his will will say, “May He exalt you,” etc., as below. “This is the Shekhinah,” called Koh; this is koaḥ-koh. “The external powers draw strength,” etc.: this is “your strength, an adversary,” for the adversary, the external powers, draw from the Shekhinah's strength. It is bitter for her, the Shekhinah: this is tsarah, trouble, for she is distressed by it. “It is the accuser,” etc.: “after these things” expresses the backs, and is the accuser.

“In conclusion,” etc., refers back to “B.K.Z., N.” [?], where Moses said, “Wherever my soul goes,” etc. “Those who go out to rescue”: Moses left his world to rescue Israel, as above; his soul returns to its first place, not to a higher degree. Moses was humble and did not take credit for himself, but the Holy One, blessed be He, told him he would merit a greater eminence. “A vessel containing His favor”: “I shall have mercy” expresses a womb and a receptacle, as above in Part II, chapter 11. [TN110113]

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 7 (ז)

Yad Yehudah: כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"Moses was further uncertain," etc.: the author returns to Moses' statement "I do not know where my soul is going," begun in chapter 2, to explain it in another way. Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, greatly desired to draw Israel near to their Father in heaven, [gap] three iniquities. He was uncertain which of these two ways would be needed for repair, and asked: "Who knows the human spirit that ascends above?" Who knows whether the repair will require that he offer himself as a sacrifice, thereby raising his soul higher and higher? "The beast's spirit that descends below to the earth": or whether the repair at that time will also require the spirit of the holy beast. She is the Shekhinah, Malkhut of Emanation, the mother and soul of all living, as an additional soul for the flock of His pasture, as is known. She descends below to the world of Creation to receive souls, as stated in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 54, which we shall copy below in chapter 10, section 2. Its words are: "In several places in the Zohar it is said: There is a beast that consumes a beast," a designation of Malkhut,

Rema of Fano

Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, was further uncertain whether he might still be needed, as there is need for the spirit of the holy beast, the mother of all living, for the holy flock. Of her it is said, "A beast consumes a beast." She descends below to the earth to fulfill the intention of "From the eater came food," which we mentioned above. Or perhaps he was needed as a sacrifice, like Isaac son of Abraham, or like Aaron and his sons, whom Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, offered to the Omnipresent. Afterward it is written, "He descended from performing the sin offering," in the manner of what was said concerning Abraham when he bound his son and brought him up: "You brought him up; bring him down." This is what Aaron foresaw through the holy spirit, concerning which the Torah testified beforehand, "He will see you and rejoice in his heart."

We find that Abel first opened the way to prepare himself as a sacrifice, as it is written, "Abel brought, he too," including his desire to offer his soul to heaven in its five known degrees. These are hinted to us in the verse "A burnt offering, it is, a fire offering, an aroma, pleasing," all of them "to the LORD." The letters of mitsvah occur among these initial letters: hu, mi-bekhorot, tsono, u-me-ḥelvehen—"he, from the firstlings of his flock and from their fat." This is in the sense of "the reward of a commandment," for this excellent intention is the true commandment, the who consumes the souls of Israel's children. Moses would act likewise after his death: his soul would descend to the world of Creation to receive souls. Therefore, when his soul was departing, he said: "Wherever my soul goes"—whichever of these two ways of repair—I consent; let it be well placed for Israel's good, as the author concludes at the chapter's end.

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

"To fulfill the intention" of the verse "From the eater came food" (Judges 14), explained above in Part II, chapter 16, concerning human beings and beasts in the literal sense; see there. Here the intention is fulfilled by expounding it thus according to the mystery: "From the eater," the Shekhinah who consumes souls, "came food," the souls themselves.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Like Aaron and his sons": concerning them it is written, "Aaron and his sons you shall bring near." For this reason it is also written concerning him, "He descended from performing the sin offering," meaning the sin offering of himself.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“You brought him up; bring him down”: as stated in Bereshit Rabbah.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“This” is what Aaron foresaw. He desired to be a sacrifice to the Omnipresent, and therefore remained silent.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“It is written, ‘Abel brought, he too, from the firstlings of his flock and from their fat’”: “too” includes his offering himself as well, [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ז

“All its degrees”: nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, yehidah, hinted at in the verse “A burnt offering, it is, a fire offering to the LORD.” The author likewise states this in Sod Neshamah Yeterah, printed at the end of Sefer Avodat Yom Kippur by the Gaon, our teacher Rabbi Moshe Cordovero, of righteous and holy memory. “A burnt offering” corresponds to nefesh, the last he of the Name, Malkhut, which ascends above, as is known.[TN110117]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“It” corresponds to ruah, the vav of the Name, Tif’eret. “A fire offering” corresponds to neshamah from Binah, the upper he: this is esh-he, “fire of he.” “Aroma” corresponds to hayyah from Ḥokhmah, from which comes the additional soul on the Sabbath for every Israelite;

Rema of Fano - continued

reward of all commandments. Furthermore, he is exchanged with ʿayin in the Albam alphabet, which is exceedingly praiseworthy, ascending without descending, like AḤS, BTʿ. These initial letters, which are the essence of sacrifice, can then be expounded again: “Abel brought himself too.”[TN110115]

Our first father too, when he offered to heaven “an ox, a bull, horned and hoofed,” made it an image of himself: its horns preceded its hooves. Therefore he called it ox first and then bull. In doing so he acknowledged the justice of his own sentence, for his stature had been diminished and the horns of the living creatures bearing the throne had become hidden from him. But Cain did not set his heart upon this intention and was rejected. “Abel brought, he too”: this also includes his completing Cain's deficiency through his intention, desiring to make him fit for heaven. When Cain fell defeated before him, at first Abel did not wish to kill him by piercing his throat in the open field, lest his service become alien. Cain arose, kicked him, and repaid him evil for good, until after several generations the Holy One, blessed be He, joined Abel's intention to a deed. We shall return to discuss this.

In the act of sacrifice there is indeed the human spirit, ascending through its favorable intention, and the beast's spirit, descending through receiving and sprinkling the blood, the accepted deed. The service at the Binding of Isaac son of Abraham was not completed by his soul's departure—the human spirit ascending above—until the deed was completed in the ram's body. Enough has

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

this is “from it, dwellers in heaven” [?], as stated. “Pleasing” corresponds to yehidah from the tip of yod. All are “to the Tetragrammaton,” as stated.[TN110118]

Yad Yehudah - ט

Furthermore, one may say that these initial letters hint at the word “himself” [?], since the he of hu counts as ʿayin in Albam, as he teaches us. That alphabet is exceedingly praiseworthy, as explained in the Zohar, Terumah, page 234: “Therefore Atbash,” etc., “the first letters ascend in number, and the latter letters descend in number,” etc. “Atbash ascends as stated; Albam ascends and does not descend.” That is, Atbash's first letters ascend in their order, while the second descend in reverse, in the order tav-shin-resh-qof. In “Albas” [?], however, the first and second letters ascend in order. Likewise in the alphabet AḤS, BTʿ, all three ascend from below upward in order. [TN110119]

Yad Yehudah - י

“An image of himself”: he was initially complete in himself.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Therefore he said ‘an ox, a bull’”: first he called it ox, whose horns are complete. He placed the horns first in order ...

Yad Yehudah - יב

… “to acknowledge the justice of his sentence,” in that the horns of the holy living creatures became hidden from him because of his sin. Before the sin his height extended from the earth to the firmament. Although the sages said in the second chapter of Ḥagigah, page 13: “From the earth to the firmament is a journey of five hundred years; the firmament's thickness is a journey of five hundred years, and likewise between each firmament and the next. Above them are the holy living creatures. The creatures'

Rema of Fano - continued

already been explained about this in Part II, chapter 8. Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, did not desire merely to offer himself as a burnt offering, but to act in whatever manner would help reconcile Israel with their Father in heaven. He sought only to be their atonement. “Happy is the people for whom it is thus”—she-kakhah: this is Moshe. The perplexity of inquiry concerning the judgment of death, about which Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, was uncertain for himself, has now come to rest through this exceedingly weighty statement. It is a word fitly spoken, which would not be fitting for another, in light of what has been explained.[TN110116] feet correspond to them all; the creatures' thighs correspond to them all; the creatures' horns correspond to them all. Above them is the Throne of Glory,” etc.—accordingly, the height from the earth to the creatures' horns, excluding them, would total 3,484 times a five-hundred-year journey; including the horns, which correspond to them all, their height would be 6,168 times five hundred years. Nevertheless, when Adam's height reached heaven, he had some relation to them and was included within that height. Not so after he sinned, when the Holy One, blessed be He, placed His hand upon him and diminished him. Then, “As the heavens are high above the earth”: they have no relation to one another whatsoever, since the heavens are high and the earth deep, not included in the category of elevation and height. Thus Adam's share in the heights above was taken from him, until the creatures' horns became entirely hidden from him, in utter concealment, with no relation in any respect.[TN110120]

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Upon this intention”: to offer himself to heaven. Therefore Cain was rejected, and He did not regard his offering.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Abel brought, he too”: “too” can include something further. His intention to offer his soul to heaven concerned not himself alone; he desired this also for his brother Cain. Therefore when Cain fell beneath Abel, as the sages said in Bereshit Rabbah, expounding “arose” in “Cain arose against Abel his brother”—“arose” is unnecessary, but teaches that he was lying beneath him, etc.—Abel had compassion on him and did not kill him, lest his service become alien. Such a sacrifice would not be accepted, being in the open field and not upon the altar. Cain repaid him evil and killed him upon the ground, not in a manner fit for sacrifice. Abel died without even half his desire in his hand, his desire to be a sacrifice before the LORD. It is written in the commentary of Yoel Moshe that this is what the blessed Lord hinted to Cain by saying, “The voice of your brother's blood cries to Me from the ground”: that is, not from the altar. He interpreted it well.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

“Until after several generations”: in the days of Moses and Aaron, who were reincarnations of Abel and Cain, as is known. The Holy One, blessed be He, joined Abel's intention, his desire to offer himself and his brother to heaven, to a deed: Moses offered Aaron and his sons.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“We shall discuss this again”: concerning Nadab and Abihu, below in Part IV, chapter 14.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“There is indeed,” etc.: besides what we said concerning the verse “Who knows the human spirit,” etc., one may further say that it concerns the deed and thought needed for a sacrifice. The offering person's thought is that he should imagine his own body burned and his ashes heaped upon the altar. This is the human spirit and its thought ascending above. The deed of sacrifice itself is the spirit of the slaughtered beast, descending below upon the altar in actuality through all the forms of service. All this occurred at Isaac's Binding: besides his proper intention, a deed was also needed. Therefore his spirit actually ascended above until afterward the deed was completed in the ram prepared for him since the six days of creation; then his soul returned to him. Moses, all of whose salvation and desire lay ...

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

... "in being Israel's atonement," said, "Who knows the human spirit," etc.: who knows which of them alone would suffice? Therefore I distinguish the two, for I consent to both, to complete the service in every manner of perfection and to be a sacrifice for Israel in actuality too.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Happy is the people," etc.: the wording of R.Ḥ. in several places.[TN110121]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Through an exceedingly weighty statement": "I do not know where my soul is going."

Yad Yehudah - כא

"Which would not be fitting for another": according to its plain sense, it appears arrogant for anyone except Moses; according to our explanation, the opposite is more reasonable.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"The spirit of the holy beast": Malkhut of Emanation, in the mystery of "one wheel upon the earth." She is the Shekhinah descending to the world of Creation, where she receives all the souls from below each night. She is called the beast crouching upon a thousand mountains, as stated in Part I, chapter 21, concerning Moses' blessing, "May the LORD add to you." This is "new every morning": each morning she returns the souls deposited there each night. This is the holy flock; the mother of all living is the Shekhinah descending below to the earth, to the world of Creation. This is "From the eater came food": she consumes the souls and then returns them; this is readily understood. See there, "Moses" [?], "Who knows the spirit," etc. Moses likewise comprised six hundred thousand souls. Therefore he was uncertain whether he would descend, as though to repair his soul: this is the

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

beast's spirit. "The beast's spirit that descends below" is the spirit of the human face, MH of Emanation. This is "Human and beast You save, LORD." See the manuscript, Part III, section 11, and "in the ʿayin, five thousand" [?], final letters. [TN110122]

"The engraving, like Isaac" [?], etc.: "Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, offered them to heaven," etc. By waving the Levites, Aaron, and his sons, Moses repaired them as though he offered them to heaven, as below. "It is written, 'He descended from performing,'" etc.: as said concerning Abraham, "You brought him up; bring him down," so Aaron ascended and afterward descended, as with Isaac. "He will see you and rejoice in his heart": Aaron will rejoice upon seeing Moses wave him and repair him as a sacrifice, as below.[TN110123]

"Burnt offering, it, fire offering, aroma, pleasing, to the LORD": five expressions corresponding to five soul degrees. "It" repaired spirit, soul, and he in the Name [?]. Therefore hu, "he," is written and hi, "she," is read: female and male. The first he is fire: this is isheh, fire offering. "Aroma" is hayyah, yod of the Name; "pleasing" is yehidah, the tip of yod. All are to the LORD: "all my souls ascend in the Name" [?].[TN110124]

"These initial letters are the essence," etc.: in the verse "Abel brought, he too, from the firstlings of his flock and from their fat," the initial letters are ʿG, MḤ, "radrim" [?]. That is, he brought himself, for ʿG, MḤ interchange through Atbash.[TN110125]

"Therefore he called it": it immediately had horns, and afterward was a bull. So he made it an image of himself: at first he had horns, and afterward his stature diminished. This is the intention of the Gemara: Cain saw where his father slaughtered the bull. The plain sense of this statement is that Cain did not know where to slaughter so that the soul would depart, until he saw his father slaughter at the neck. This is its plain sense, together with all this: Cain saw where he slaughtered, as above, that its horns came first. His intention was to offer himself, and afterward he saw him slaughter a bull, as stated.

"The horns of the living creatures became hidden from him," etc.: in the Ari's teachings it is stated that the upper chariot contains lion, ox, eagle, and human. The lion is Abba on the right, including five powers of severity within five lovingkindnesses.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

The five lovingkindnesses' number rises to five hundred lights, as is known to the masters of truth, in the inclusions of yod, ten, in the mystery of “ten, ten, the spoon.” Likewise the ox on the left, upper Imma, is five lovingkindnesses, five hundred. The human and eagle likewise have five hundred lights each. The entire chariot totals two thousand, in the mystery of the two thousand cubits of the Sabbath boundary. This is the mystery of “The world exists for six thousand years”: two thousand in the world of Making, called two thousand of chaos; in the world of Formation, two thousand of Torah; and two thousand of the Messiah in the world of Creation, for redemption is revealed in Creation. In each of the two worlds the whole is a complete chariot; in the world of Emanation is the rider upon the throne.

Adam was the world's heave offering, and a heave offering is two out of a hundred; from two thousand it yields forty. Thus from three times two thousand, three times forty totals 150. He includes all the chariots, “from being” [?], in Adam's original stature, until He diminished him and twenty cubits were subtracted from his stature. “He sits upon his palms,” from kaf, “palm”: his stature was diminished from the third chariot, “which is a heave offering, these mem” [?]. The creatures' horns became hidden from him. This is the image of those bearing the throne, in the twenty by which his stature diminished. Moses repaired this; therefore 150 is written, including what was from the three upper chariots, not from the three lower ones, which are dropped. Two upper five hundreds were subtracted from him because of our iniquities, as above, unlike Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, who merited two shoulders: twice katef, twice five hundred. This is readily understood. From “MHRL NQ” [?].[TN110126]

“But Cain did not set his heart,” etc.: upon surrendering himself to death and sacrifice like Abel, and he was rejected. By this the sages' statement is properly understood. The sages said on

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 7

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

the verse “They were finished, a little” [?]: Rabbi Elʿazar said, “When the Temple stood, they offered sacrifices. Now, what is it to occupy oneself with them? Should we not occupy ourselves with them, since the deed is not completed?” See the Zohar, Terumah, concerning the rabbis' garment: through the deed of commandments a garment for the lower Garden of Eden is made, and through intention a garment for the upper Garden of Eden. Torah provides nourishment for the soul: the revealed teaching for the soul in the lower Garden of Eden, and the hidden teaching in the upper Garden of Eden.[TN110127]

Let us return above. “He completed through his intention Cain's deficiency”: Cain had not offered himself. Abel desired to make Cain fit for heaven as a sacrifice. When Cain fell beneath Abel, as expounded on “Cain arose against Abel”—implying he had initially been beneath him—Abel did not wish to pierce his throat in the open field, but only upon the altar, lest his service become alien. Cain repaid him evil for good and killed Abel in the open field. It appears to me that this is the mystery of “The voice of your brother's blood cries to Me from the ground”: he should have offered him upon an earthen altar, not in the open field. This is “See what he did to him in the field”—specifically the field.

“Until after several generations, He joined Abel's intention”: this is Moses, Abel's reincarnation, joining it to a deed. He waved Aaron, Cain's reincarnation, for the nun of Cain hinted at him, and he repaired him. “Ascending through its favorable intention”: when a person sins, his spirit, because of his iniquities, “raises holiness” [?], goes somewhat into impurity; “and almost” [?], the sacrifice restores the holiness of his soul to its place. The beast's spirit is impurity descending into the sea's depths, as above in Part I, chapter 2, concerning the sprinkling of blood.[TN110128]

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 8 (ח)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“Rav Ḥanina's statement” in the chapter Ha-zahav: “Everyone descends to Gehinnom except three,” etc., which we began in chapter 2.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“It is needed in its own right”: “Everyone descends” refers to sinners, meaning all sinners descend. The unqualified “everyone descends” also comes to include the righteous and the intermediate. For this, the Gemara's “All who descend ascend” is not needed.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“First of all,” etc.: the Gemara's “Could you really suppose that everyone descends? Rather, say: All who descend ascend, except three,” is explained as we regularly explain every similar instance where the Gemara challenges the first expression with “Could you really suppose?” and answers “Rather, say,” etc. The intention is not that the speaker initially erred in his wording and, realizing it through the objection, withdrew and gave another formulation. The first formulation is always true and contains no error; the second merely explains the first.

Rema of Fano

We now return to Rav Ḥanina's statement, presented in chapter 2. It is needed in its own right concerning sinners, after we have explained what “everyone” comes to include. First of all, “the wise heart instructs its mouth” concerning what we regularly explain here and in every similar case: the speaker did not err in his first statement, so as to need to withdraw and reverse it because of our objection. Rather, one comes to teach about the other, and the first always remains fundamental. This is as we recalled concerning those counted among the first ten in the synagogue, and as will be explained concerning a completely righteous person and one who is not completely righteous. Here he says: since these three, if they descend, will not ascend, as he concludes, therefore everyone descends except these.

This is a true and necessary way to understand the Gemara in all statements following this pattern, without exception. Take it and set your eyes upon it, for it is wondrous. One such statement is found in the chapter Yetsi’ot ha-Shabbat, recurring and stirring again two or three times; all the more has it increased our love for explaining this principle. We read there: “It was taught: Hands affected by a scroll also invalidate terumah, because of Rabbi Parnakh's statement in Rabbi Yoḥanan's name: One who holds a Torah scroll bare is buried bare. Could you really suppose bare? Rather, Rabbi Zeira said: Bare, without

Yad Yehudah - ד

“As we recalled”: above in Part II, chapter 14, concerning the Gemara's statement about those counted among the first ten: “He receives the reward of them all. Could you really suppose the reward of them all? Rather, say: reward corresponding to them all.”

Yad Yehudah - ה

“As will be explained” also below in chapter 5. [TN110129]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Here he says”: the statement “Could you really suppose everyone? Rather, say,” etc., is explained as follows. The questioner asks why these people's standing is better, so that they do not descend. Concerning this he says, “Could you really suppose?” The answer is, “Rather, say: All who descend ascend, except three.” They do not descend because all who descend ascend except them. Because of their iniquity's severity, justice requires that Gehinnom's fire consume them entirely. Since, if they descended, they would never ascend, He has compassion on them so that they will not descend [?]. Rather, He first devises for each of them [?] a means that none of them

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

be banished, in another manner, as will be explained below in chapter 15; see there. “As stated, in the heavens” [?], his “Rather, say” does not withdraw the first wording [?], for it is fundamental; the later wording explains it.[TN110130]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Necessary”: for one cannot say that the speaker initially failed to formulate his words precisely.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Two or three times”: there the second wording too is challenged with “Could you really suppose?” and from it the passage moves to the third.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“For it is written,” etc.: the Gemara's “because of Rabbi Parnakh's statement” means that they decreed that hands affected by a scroll invalidate terumah because of the priest who eats it. This priest, having held the scroll bare and transgressed Rabbi Parnakh's rule, no longer has the presumption of being a ḥaver fit to eat terumah. Terumah is given only to a priest who is a ḥaver, as we derive in the chapter Ḥeleq from “You shall give from it,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - י

“One who is,” etc.: the first expression, “is buried bare,” is certainly fundamental. He is buried commandments. Could you really suppose without commandments? Rather, say: Bare, without that commandment.”

Rema of Fano - continued

The intention is that the sages decreed that one who transgresses their words by touching a Torah scroll contemptuously should invalidate terumah. For it is written, “You shall give from it the LORD's terumah to Aaron the priest”: just as Aaron is a ḥaver, so his sons must be ḥaverim. One bare of commandments is entirely bare of those rabbinic garments known to those who fulfill commandments. Someone who dishonors a Torah scroll testifies against himself that he dishonors what is written in it. We consequently know that he performs commandments without their proper intention. Being bare of that particular commandment causes him to be bare of all commandments, since they are contemptible to him.[TN110132]

It follows that the anonymous Gemara, through the final expression, supplied an evidential demonstration for Rabbi Zeira's statement. Rabbi Zeira's statement itself supplies a causal demonstration for Rabbi Parnakh's statement, the root and foundation of the teaching, the most alarming and hyperbolic concerning one to whom commandments are contemptible. All three together are upright judgments and a Torah of truth. Once we explain in the following chapters the deepest of the statements cited in the Gemara in this manner—through a lack of understanding according to appearances, “until his fellow comes and examines him”—an exposition of great worth and much needed for the purpose bare of the clothing and rabbinic garments made from commandments, as stated in the Zohar, Terumah, Shelaḥ lekha, and other places. Since he held the Torah scroll bare, he despised the LORD's word, everything written in the scroll; he does not perform commandments for their own sake and remains bare of their garments. Rabbi Zeira's “Bare, without commandments” explains the first expression.

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Being bare,” etc.: Rabbi Zeira's first expression, “Bare, without commandments,” is also true. “Rather, say: Bare, without that commandment” explains the first expression. It means: since he is bare of that commandment of honoring a Torah scroll, by holding it bare, we consequently know he is also bare of all other commandments and that they are contemptible to him, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“It follows”: through the final expression, “Bare, without that commandment,” the anonymous Gemara supplies demonstration and evidence for Rabbi Zeira's “Bare, without commandments,” for this shows that commandments are contemptible to him.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Rabbi Zeira's statement,” “Bare, without commandments,” is the cause of his being buried

Rema of Fano - continued

we are explaining, no doubt about the truth of this principle will remain in our hearts, upholding all the sages' words.

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

bare of rabbinic garments.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“All three”: these three formulations.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“The statement”: at the end of Yoma, which will be presented at the beginning of the next chapter.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“In this manner”: they challenged the first formulation because they lacked understanding of it according to appearances and a cursory reading.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Until his fellow comes”: the second formulation, which examines and explains the first.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Upholding all the sages' words”: both formulations that occur in this manner.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“He changes his first expression,” etc.: the Gemara asks, “Could you really suppose that everyone descends?” Likewise, wherever the Gemara asks “Could you really suppose?” and answers in another way, it is not that he withdrew his first words and needed to retract them. Both are true, and the first explains the second. This is how “Everyone descends to Gehinnom,” above, is explained. [TN110131]

“If they descended, they would not ascend,” etc.: this implies that they are not yet repaired. If they descended, they would not ascend; therefore they do not descend, but the blessed Lord exacts payment from them through something else. See chapter 16. “In this pattern,” etc.: where it asks, “Could you really suppose?”—would he withdraw his words? “All the more has it increased in us,” etc.: it agrees with the explanations of this principle wherever it asks, “Could you really suppose?”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Just as Aaron is a ḥaver,” etc.: one who transgresses the sages' words, by contrast, is not called a ḥaver and invalidates terumah. “Through the final expression,” etc.: the answer “without that commandment” is a demonstration and evidence for Rabbi Zeira's statement that he is without commandments. As stated above, one who dishonors a Torah scroll testifies against himself, etc. Rabbi Zeira's words are true; they rise as a causal demonstration [?] and explanation of Rabbi Parnakh's statement that he is buried without commandments, entirely bare of rabbinic garments. This is the most alarming to a person in saying, “He is buried bare.” “Once they were repeated for the statement” [?]; thus he said two clauses and did not withdraw the preceding words each time. Rather, all are the words of the living God.[TN110133]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 8

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 9 (ט)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד · נה · נו · נז · נח · נט · ס · סא · סב · סג · סד · סה · סו · סז · סח · ע · עא · עב · עג · עד · עה · עו · עז · עח · עט · פ · פא · פב

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"At the end of Yoma we learned," etc.: this is the more profound teaching mentioned by the author at the end of the preceding chapter, as it was said concerning this too: "It became permitted to him." Does it enter your mind that it became permitted? Rather, say, etc. The author likewise explains that the first formulation is primary, and the second, "Rather, say," etc., explains it.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"The repetition": saying "I shall sin and repent" twice.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"The intention," etc.: to explain this teaching in the stated manner, the author sets out several expositions relevant to it. Further expositions develop from these in the following chapters, through chapter 14, where he concludes his explanation of this teaching.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"A commandment not for its own sake": his having intercourse by day caused it, for through this the evil inclination entered him, as will shortly be explained and in chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"But that itself is difficult": how did he come to

Rema of Fano

At the end of Yoma we learned: one who says, "I shall sin and repent; I shall sin and repent," is not afforded the opportunity to repent. We have already mentioned this in Part I, chapter 19. The Gemara explained the repetition in our Mishnah in accordance with Rav Huna, who said: once a person commits a transgression and repeats it, it becomes permitted to him. Does it enter your mind that it becomes permitted to him? Rather, say: it becomes to him as though permitted. The intention is that God made man upright, so that he would desire nothing evil. Here the earlier authorities asked: if so, how did the evil inclination enter him, leading him to eat the fruit against which he had been warned? Our answer is that a commandment performed not for its own sake caused this. But that itself is difficult! Rather, the moon's accusation preceded everything, and it was a commandment performed not for its own sake. We discussed the event's plain meaning at length at the beginning of Em Kol Hai. Any defect in which human hands have not intervened can easily be repaired. The Ari, of blessed memory, likewise said that, had Adam kept one commandment as prescribed, everything would have been repaired immediately.

Of this King David, peace be upon him, said, "In my haste, all man is false." This perform a commandment not for its own sake, when he had been created upright in his actions?

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו

Rather, its cause was certainly the moon, which accused the sun and said, "Two kings cannot," etc., as related in chapter A.T. This involved a commandment not for its own sake, as explained in Em Kol Hai, Part I. From this followed Adam's performing a commandment not for its own sake as well. However — [TN150003]

Yad Yehudah - ז

—the defect in the moon could easily be repaired, since human hands had not intervened. This is not so with the defect Adam caused by a commandment not for its own sake: it could not easily be repaired. On the contrary, he drew forth further iniquity, the evil inclination, with cords of vanity.

Yad Yehudah - ח

Had Adam kept the first commandment, procreation, as prescribed, without any aspect of its being not for its own sake, everything would have been repaired. This is as we have said: the evil inclination would not have entered him.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Concerning the affair of Bathsheba”: she had been destined for him since the six days of Creation, but he ate her while unripe, as the sages said. This was his haste.

Yad Yehudah - י

“Which came with pain,” as it says, A.V.V. [?], “And my pain is continually before me.” [TN150004]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Concerning his rashness”: that is, it is also an excellent confession concerning Adam's rashness, for David was his reincarnation. This is “all man is false,” meaning Adam.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“On a weekday”: also on the eve of the Sabbath; “when judgment intensifies,” at the afternoon hour; “publicly,” as related in Bereshit Rabbah concerning the serpent: because he saw them engaged in intercourse, he desired her. This caused—

Yad Yehudah - יג

—his begetting his foreskin, Cain. As the sages said in the chapter on the four judicial death penalties, Adam drew out his foreskin. The Zohar, Bereshit, page 109, explains that he clung to the foreskin, being enticed by the serpent's word. On page 113 it says of Cain that he was a son of

Rema of Fano - continued

is indeed an excellent confession concerning the affair of Bathsheba, which came with pain, and whom he ate while unripe; concerning Adam's rashness in the first commandment he received, “Be fruitful and multiply.” At the beginning of his intercourse he approached his wife on a weekday, in daytime, at the hour when judgment intensifies, and publicly. He begot “its foreskin”—this is Cain; “its fruit”—this is Abel. Concerning their analogue in the LORD's true judgments, we learned in Neziqin: “The dog and the kid that jumped from the roof”—they were born before their time and are premature births—“and broke the vessels.” That is, they damaged the soul's garments, explained in our discourse on the soul; consult it there. Strict law requires payment of full damages; therefore this one was killed and that one driven away.

We also learned there: “The dog that took a cake”—this is Abel's twin sister, certainly a free woman—“and went to the stack,” to raise a stack of descendants from her; “ate the cake,” as in “the bread which he eats”; “and set the stack alight,” becoming heated through transgression and impressing the evil inclination's fire upon his descendants. “For the cake it pays full damages,” as in “Call him, and let him eat bread.” For just as food came forth from the eater, so “she shall be called woman, for she was taken from man,” and to him she returns. This is the meaning of “Moses' father-in-law,” the first instance of this designation: he is a brother who gives a sister. A mnemonic is A-ni H-otenkha Y-itro, “I, your father-pollution. Still more was said in Pirqei Rabbi Eliezer: the serpent came to Eve, and she conceived Cain.

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Its fruit”: the author adopts the wording of the verse, “You shall regard its fruit as its foreskin,” written concerning the years of orlah.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“This is Abel”: he was holy fruit, praises to the LORD.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“Concerning their analogue,” etc.: incidentally, the author explains the matter according to law, for we learned there, in Neziqin chapter 2: “The dog and the kid that jumped from the roof and broke vessels pay full damages.” So too with Cain and Abel: he likened Cain to a dog and Abel to a kid. Both jumped from the roof, being born before their time through Adam's rashness, as stated. Through this they broke the vessels, the garments in which the soul clothes itself when entering this world. Their judgment is therefore to pay full damages, and they received their punishment: Abel was killed and Cain driven away.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“We also learned there”: in the concluding clause, “The dog that took a cake and went to a stack, ate the cake and set the stack alight: for the cake it pays full damages, and for the stack half damages.” This alludes to Cain's taking the cake, Abel's additional twin sister, over whom they disputed until Cain killed Abel, as related in Bereshit Rabbah.

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

“A free woman”: accordingly, he interprets ḥararah, “cake,” through ḥorin, “free.” Her soul was pure, clean, and free, and not subject to what the Zohar mentions in Mishpatim.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Ate the cake”: he had intercourse with her, as related in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 109. Its words are: “What is se'et? Se'et here is like what he did against him: ‘To your fellow's wife you shall not give your lying,’ etc.; for he came to his twin sister and afterward killed her husband. The mystery of the matter is ‘He turned this way and that.’ The ancients said: what is ‘He turned this way and that’? He saw what he had done in the house and what he had done in the field. ‘Field’ means a woman, as it says, ‘When they were in the field.’” See there. The expression “ate” denotes intercourse, as in “the bread which he eats,” concerning Potiphera's wife. [TN150005]

Yad Yehudah - כ

“For the cake he pays full damages”: Jethro, Cain's

Rema of Fano - continued

in-law Jethro”: the initials form aḥi, “my brother.” Likewise, his mother-in-law, ḥotanto, is “a sister-giver,” in the sense of “her brother and her mother,” which Scripture mentions concerning Rebecca. All of them are likewise so called because they give their daughters to one who is a brother in the generations of souls and truly their mate. A man's parents are called, in relation to the bride, her ḥam and ḥamot: that is, a brother was conceived, from “my mother conceived me.” They are the brother's progenitors; giving does not apply to them. The woman's progenitors give her to her mate, whereas these take them into their household to marry her to him. [TN150001]

We establish, then, that Cain stole Abel's twin sister. Jethro seated Moses and Zipporah in a bridal canopy and told him at Horeb, “Come out for your wife's sake.” Concerning the blood of his descendants he told him, “And her two sons with her”: they had been reserved for her since the six days of Creation, and you have merited them. This is what we learned in Asarah Yuḥasin: one need not bring proof concerning either the wife or the children. He handed over his flock, which had remained with Cain at Abel's death. Moses considered them Jethro's flock, for the sages are displeased with anyone who accepts from such people. Nevertheless, he did not feed it the fruit of the ground: they went forty days and tasted nothing, as Elijah, remembered for good, went while the food remained in his intestines. Here Moses too was sustained in this way through the perfection of his body, reincarnation, had to give his daughter Zipporah, the reincarnation of that additional twin, to Moses, Abel's reincarnation, as he concludes at the chapter's end. From this it becomes clear that, when Jethro was to give his daughter to Moses, he also expressed the matter in terms of eating, saying—

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

Yad Yehudah - כא

“Call him, and let him eat bread.” As they expounded at the beginning of Shemot: “Let him marry one of you” ⟦print recovery of the frozen gap⟧, for the eating of bread spoken of here means only a woman, as it says, “Except the bread,” etc. Certainly these marriages fittingly resemble eating bread. [TN150006]

Yad Yehudah - כב

“For just as food came forth from the eater himself”: sometimes a soul is found reincarnated in food, and through eating, the branch returns to its root and is repaired, as explained above, Part II, chapter 16. The very same thing occurred with Zipporah, Moses' wife: she had first been taken from the man Abel by Cain, and needed to return to him and be given to Moses.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“This is the meaning”: Jethro is called Moses' ḥoten, father-in-law, and this is the first designation in the verse mentioning

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

the term ḥoten in the Torah before Jethro [?]. The point is that ḥoten includes by notarikon these three words: brother, sister, and giver. All three certainly apply here to Jethro, who was Moses' brother and was giving him his sister Zipporah, Abel's twin. [TN150007]

Yad Yehudah - כד

“For his way,” etc., as also written in the book of the Ari's intentions, of blessed memory. [TN150008]

Yad Yehudah - כה

Likewise, the woman's mother is called his ḥotanto in relation to the husband, because she gives him his sister in the generations of souls. Every man and his wife are siblings and a single pair in the generations of their souls, as he shortly concludes. Zipporah and Moses, however, were siblings also through their reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“In the sense of ‘her brother and her mother,’” etc.: although the daughter is under her father's authority, not her mother's, for which reason she would be called his ḥotanto, “a sister-giver,” nevertheless, if the father dies, the mother gives her to her husband. We find this concerning Rebecca: Bethuel died, and therefore it is written, “Her brother and her mother said: Let the maiden remain,” etc. Hence the represented by Moses' flock. These are indeed “apples of gold in settings of silver”: both the parable and its referent are true. But on the mountain it was not so; rather, it was through the soul's perfection. He first needed to purge away food and drink in order to enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah.

Rema of Fano - continued

We consider that he did not eat on the seventeenth of Tammuz, since he was occupied with Israel's atonement; nor did he eat when he descended to hew the second tablets. There were therefore 120 consecutive days, and no further purging was necessary. Go and reckon that, from then on, throughout his life he merely appeared to eat, and nothing more, in the manner stated concerning the three men at the terebinths of Mamre: each successive portion disappeared. This applied to Moses even when eating consecrated food, such as the portion raised from the installation offerings of Aaron and his sons. Reuel's daughters too recognized him and called him “an Egyptian man,” for with respect to them he possessed the right of an adjoining proprietor. He said, “Call him, and let him eat bread,” conceding to him some of his share of the ground's fruit. Moses consented to dwell, not to eat. Through this the first damage was repaired, when he had said to him, “Fly through the air,” in the sense of the letters flying away when the tablets were broken. For the letters by which he had been formed remained unembodied, as at first. We have mentioned this in chapter 4. [TN150002]

He judged him as one whose path to his mother is called his ḥotanto.

Yad Yehudah - כו - continued

Yad Yehudah - כז

“All of them”: not only with Zipporah and Moses; everywhere the bride's father and mother are called ḥoten, since they give the bridegroom his sister in the generations of souls, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“A man's parents”: the bridegroom's father and mother are called, in relation to the bride, her ḥam and his ḥamot; she calls her husband's father ḥami and his mother ḥamoti. As it says concerning Tamar, “Behold, your father-in-law is going up,” and likewise, “Orpah kissed her mother-in-law.” The notarikon is “they are my brother” [?]: they are the progenitors of the bride's brother, her husband. [TN150009]

Yad Yehudah - כט

“From ‘conceived me’”: its sense is birth.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“Giving does not apply to them”: that they should be called ḥoten and totanet [?] after “a brother-giver,” as in the woman's case. [TN150010]

Yad Yehudah - לא

“For indeed”: this expression applies to the woman's progenitors because they give her to her mate; not so the husband's progenitors, who take the woman to marry her to him.

Yad Yehudah - לא - continued

Yad Yehudah - לב

For this reason Jethro too gave his daughter Zipporah to Moses.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“He said to him at Horeb,” etc., as the sages expounded concerning “Your wife and her two sons”: if you will not come out for my sake, come out for your wife's sake.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“Concerning the blood of his descendants”: Abel's descendants, whose blood he shed, as the sages said concerning “The voice of your brother's bloods.” He told him: come out for her two sons' sake, to repair them. He called them her sons, since they had been reserved for her from the time Abel was killed, and to indicate to Moses that he had merited them; therefore he should come out for her sake.

Yad Yehudah - לה

“This is what we learned,” etc.: this resembles what we learned in the chapter Asarah Yuḥasin: one went overseas with his wife and returned with his wife and children, saying, “This is the wife who went overseas with me, and these are her children.” He need not bring proof concerning either the wife or the children. The Gemara establishes this concerning children who cling to her. Here too, her children had been field had been lost. We learned: Admon says, “Let him take the shortest route”; the sages say, “Let him purchase a path for a hundred maneh, or fly through the air.” There is no doubt that Abel had lost the path to his field, for he came in vapor, unembodied. Moreover, he leapt forth and was born like a premature birth, as we explained; we shall add instruction in Part IV, chapter 5. From the moment he gazed at the supernal glory when his offering was accepted, he lost the little that had been before him in transient life. It was decreed that his blood and that of his descendants be shed. This is what Admon, the master of judgment, ruled concerning him: let him depart with shortened years; he specified nothing concerning his repair.

Rema of Fano - continued

Lovingkindness and mercy, however, said: “Let him purchase a path for a hundred maneh,” increasing his Torah and commandments so as to bring himself merit. This is the meaning of the seven hundred orders of Mishnah mentioned in chapter 4, alluded to in Seth's name: ten orders for each of the seventy aspects, each order containing ten tractates, each tractate ten chapters, and each chapter ten decided laws. These amount to a hundred maneh for each aspect of Torah, of which it is written, “Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.” “Or let him fly through the air”: let him endeavor to repair others, in the sense of “Moses ascended to God.” Cain, who said to him, “Fly through the air,” was forcing the end before its season. He subsequently became an executioner for Admon, who brings about liability reserved for her and had clung to her since the days of Creation.

Yad Yehudah - לה - continued

Yad Yehudah - לו

“He handed over”: for this reason Jethro also handed over his flock to Moses, as it is written, “Moses was tending Jethro's flock.” Abel likewise tended flocks, and when he divided the world with Cain he took the flock as his share, as related in Tanḥuma. When he was killed, the flock remained as stolen property with Cain, and now he returned the stolen property. Scripture calls them Jethro's flock, although they were Moses' flock when he returned them, because—

Yad Yehudah - לז

—Moses himself considered them Jethro's flock and would not receive them so as to reckon them as his own. As the sages said in the first Ha-Gozel chapter: when robbers and lenders at interest return what they took, it is not accepted from them; the sages are displeased with anyone who accepts from them.

Yad Yehudah - לח

“Nevertheless,” etc.: this also explains what Midrash Tanḥuma relates in the name of Rabbi Sh. ben Yose: Moses' flock went forty days and tasted nothing, just as Elijah, of blessed memory, went; as it is said, “He arose and went in the strength of that meal forty days and forty nights.” See there. Moses did not wish to feed them the ground's fruit, which was Cain's share. [TN150011]

Yad Yehudah - לח - continued

Yad Yehudah - לט

“The food remained in his intestines”: the midrash's “just as Elijah went” explains that the cause of their survival throughout those days without eating was the strength of the food they had already eaten. Throughout the stated period, the food remained within them and they did not hunger, as happened with Elijah, of blessed memory. Radak writes there: “‘He went in the strength of that meal’: this was not like the miracle of Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, of whom it says, ‘Forty days and forty nights he ate no bread and drank no water.’ It does not say that he endured through the strength of a meal. Concerning Elijah it says ‘in the strength of the meal’: the food remained in the stomach; the digestive faculty did not cook it, nor did the drawing faculty draw it away. The body was nourished by that food for forty days and forty nights.”

Yad Yehudah - מ

“Here,” concerning Jethro's flock, Moses himself likewise went forty days

Rema of Fano - continued

through one already liable. This itself is the beginning of repair, in the sense of “The LORD is righteous in all His ways and gracious in all His deeds.”

“He gave Zipporah his daughter to Moses”: truly a clean bird, fit for sacrifice, beautiful in her deeds, for she did not heed Cain and bound her opening, in the sense of “He had taken a Cushite woman.” She blackened and disfigured herself in relation to her captor. As for what we learned, “He ate the cake,” as above, it is possible that miracles were performed for her, as with Esther, concerning whom they expounded “I shall surely hide”: a she-demon was made ready in her place for Ahasuerus. If so, it became clear concerning Abel's twin sister that, from the beginning, her merit too helped his offering be accepted favorably. Thus, “The LORD turned to Abel and to his offering”: read it as “his resting-place.” Perhaps she is that maiden upon whom Shemhazai too set his eyes, as related in Midrash Avkir. She told him, “I shall not heed you until you teach me the Explicit Name.” He taught her; she uttered it and ascended to heaven without sin. Her name was Istahar. The Holy One, blessed be He, commanded that she be fixed among the seven stars, and they fixed her in Kimah. Thus far. Since through her righteousness her body escaped death, her soul was fit to return and clothe itself in a pure body. The robber himself restored a return to his brother. [TN150037] This is what we learned: “For the cake he pays full damages, and for the stack he pays half damages.” This is Tubal-cain and his offspring, who without eating, because the food remained in his intestines. This sufficed for him: abstention from eating here concerned only the body's perfection. Therefore he did not need first to purge away food and drink, as on the mountain.

Yad Yehudah - מ - continued

Yad Yehudah - מא

“Represented by Moses' flock”: our statement that Moses too did not eat throughout those forty days is also learned from the cited midrash, “Moses' flock went,” etc., for Moses' body is represented by his flock. Nevertheless, its plain sense too is true: his flock tasted nothing throughout those days. Thus both the parable and its referent are true; these are “apples of gold in settings of silver.”

Yad Yehudah - מב

“It was not so; rather,” [gap] abstention from eating there concerned his soul's perfection; he therefore needed first to purge away, etc. [TN150012]

Yad Yehudah - מג

“We consider,” etc.: having mentioned the forty days during which Moses did not eat on the mountain, the author explains Moses' days [?] from then onward. [TN150013]

Yad Yehudah - מד

“On the seventeenth of Tammuz”: the day Moses descended from the mountain and the forty days ended. Nevertheless, he did not eat, being occupied with Israel's atonement, praying to the LORD to forgive their sin were dissolved in the Flood; his sister Naamah, Noah's wife, survived to build the world. These two events were the basis of instruction for the Mishnah's laws, as we have said.

Yad Yehudah - מד - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - מד - continued

of the calf.

Yad Yehudah - מה

Nor did he eat on the twenty-ninth of Av, when

Yad Yehudah - מה - continued

the middle forty days ended and he descended to hew the second tablets, as the sages said. Thus, from the seventh of Sivan, when he first ascended, until the Day of Atonement, when he last descended, there were 122 consecutive days. The first day of ascent and the last day of descent are not counted, leaving 120 consecutive days in which he did not eat. From then onward his eating required no further purging.

Yad Yehudah - מו

“Go and reckon”: how many fasts these consecutive [days] amount to, with the measures[?] also combined.[TN150014]

Yad Yehudah - מז

“From then onward”: he no longer needed it; from that day onward he did not eat, but appeared to eat.

Yad Yehudah - מח

“Concerning the three men”: of whom “they ate” is written. The sages said that they appeared to eat; each successive portion disappeared.

Yad Yehudah - מט

“Such as the portion raised,” etc.: these portions belonged to Moses, as it is written, “Moses took the breast from the ram of installation that belonged to Aaron,” and “you shall wave it as a wave offering before the LORD,” etc., and “it became Moses' portion.” Nevertheless, he did not eat.

Yad Yehudah - נ

“Jethro's daughters too,” etc.: he returns to the first matter. [TN150015]

Yad Yehudah - נא

“Recognized him”: he was most ready, and from of old had found favor through his reincarnation. Therefore they told their father, “An Egyptian man saved us,” as an honorable designation, for he was prepared for them.

Yad Yehudah - נב

“He,” Jethro, answered for this reason, “Call him, and let him eat bread,” conceding to him some of Cain's portion, the ground's fruit.

Yad Yehudah - נג

“Not to eat”: he did not wish to benefit from his portion.

Yad Yehudah - נד

“Through this”: by consenting, at least, to dwell with Jethro, Cain's first damage was repaired, when he said to Abel, “Fly through the air.” Bereshit Rabbah and Tanḥuma relate that Cain divided the world with Abel: Cain took the land and Abel the movables. One said, “Take off what you are wearing”; the other said, “Fly.” Now, through Moses and Jethro dwelling together, the opposite of flying away, this distortion was repaired.

Yad Yehudah - נה

“In the sense of the letters flying away,” etc.: Cain's “Fly through the air” means, by way of the mystery, that the letters by which Abel was formed should fly into the heavens' air, to their source. Every person has particular letters that shine within him at his formation, and through them he is formed. This accords with what the sages said concerning the breaking of the tablets: the letters flew to heaven, for the letters are spiritual, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - נו

“For the letters remained,” etc.: Cain said this because those letters remained within Abel in their simple spirituality, as they had been before his formation. They had not attached themselves at all to his corporeality, as explained above in chapter 4. Cain therefore said of them, “Fly through the air.”

Yad Yehudah - נז

“He judged him”: Cain judged him in accordance with what we learned in the final chapter of Ketubbot: one went overseas and the path to his field was lost; Admon says, etc.

Yad Yehudah - נח

“There is no doubt,” etc.: apart from the plain, manifest meaning of Cain's claim, it is undoubtedly true according to the mystery. Abel had no hold upon this world, for he came unembodied: the letters through which he was formed had not become corporeal at all, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - נח - continued

Yad Yehudah - נט

Moreover, he came into the world through Q.D.H.R.'s rashness [?], leaping forth and being born before his time, as explained above. This was like the births of the nefilim, as will also be explained below in chapter 4; see there also that Cain and Abel were originally six-month children. [TN150016]

Yad Yehudah - ס

“He gazed,” etc.: although Cain and Abel were alike in this respect, both being born prematurely and both sending forth complete power [?], as above, the reason is that Cain lost only his future descendants and those issuing from him, as will shortly be explained. Abel, however, certainly came in vapor and lost the path to his field: even his transient life was lost to him and his family. This was for the sin of gazing at the Shekhinah. [TN150017]

Yad Yehudah - סא

“This is what he ruled,” etc.: the author explains Admon's dispute with the sages in this manner. Admon says, “Let him take the short way”: Abel, who had lost the path to his field, should depart from the world with shortened years.

Yad Yehudah - סב

“The master of judgment”: the name Admon demonstrates this through the term adom, red, denoting judgment. Thus the attribute of judgment says this, being unconcerned with his repair: as he came, so let him depart by the short way.

Yad Yehudah - סג

The sages, however, the attribute of lovingkindness and mercy, are wise in devising his repair. They said: let him acquire a path of Torah for a hundred maneh, namely ten thousand, since one maneh is a hundred, and a hundred maneh are ten thousand. Torah has seventy aspects, as is known, and of them it is written, “Her ways are ways of pleasantness.” Ten orders for each aspect, and ten tractates for each order, make a hundred; ten chapters for each tractate make a thousand; and ten decided laws in each chapter make ten thousand for each aspect of Torah's paths. They are like a hundred maneh with which to repair what he distorted.

Yad Yehudah - סד

“This is the meaning,” etc.: for this reason the seven hundred orders of Mishnah are also alluded to in Seth’s name. Seth was Abel’s reincarnation; therefore he increased Torah in order to repair him through all seventy aspects of Torah, ten orders in each aspect, making seven hundred. See below, chapter 4. Here, then, is one remedy for Abel mentioned by the Mishnah. [TN150018]

Yad Yehudah - סד - continued

Yad Yehudah - סה

“Or let him fly through the air,” etc.: that is, the latter clause indicates a second remedy, which came through Moses, who flew into the air of heaven, where he received the Torah and labored for Israel’s repair. ⟦Print recovery of frozen gap 1.⟧ Cain initially ruled concerning him in accordance with the sages, meaning, “Fly into the air,” to repair him immediately. He wished to force the end before its time, because the world was not yet fit to receive Torah. ⟦Print recovery of frozen gaps 2–3.⟧ From this he subsequently turned cruel and ruled like Admon: “Let him go by the short way,” etc., and killed him. [TN150019]

Yad Yehudah - סו

“Qostigar”: one who kills people.

Yad Yehudah - סז

“For Admon”: according to Admon’s view, liability is brought about through the guilty Abel, because he gazed upon the Shekhinah. ⟦Print recovery of the frozen gap.⟧ He has no concern for his merit and repair. One might therefore think that Admon does not desire— [TN150020]

Yad Yehudah - סח

—his repair, since the liability which he pronounced upon him would be pointless. “It itself was the beginning of repair”: by Abel’s departure from this world in few years, he received repair, which was completed afterward through Seth and Moses. ⟦Print recovery of the three frozen gaps.⟧ [TN150021]

Yad Yehudah - סט

“In the sense of ‘The LORD is righteous,’” and we shall say that the intention is that He, blessed be He, is righteous and gracious together. In judging a person, He performs righteous judgment and also acts graciously toward him, as stated in Part I, chapter 5. See there and understand the matter here.

Yad Yehudah - ע

“He gave Zipporah”: before the wording “Moses consented,” etc., he said “a virgin” [?]. In the midrash they expounded her name because she purified her father's entire household like a bird. The author adds that she herself was like a clean bird fit for sacrifice: that is, to convert and marry Moses. Baḥya likewise writes this. [TN150022]

Yad Yehudah - ע - continued

Yad Yehudah - עא

“Fair in her deeds”: in this, that when he enticed Abel’s twin, she did not listen to Cain. [TN150023]

Yad Yehudah - עב

“In the sense,” etc.: that is, this is why it is truly said of her that “he took a Cushite woman”: she made herself ugly in relation to Cain, her captor. [TN150024]

Yad Yehudah - עג

As for what we learned, “He ate the cake,” as above: that is, it is possible that miracles were performed for her and a female demon appeared in her place. ⟦Print recovery of the frozen gap.⟧ [TN150025]

Yad Yehudah - עד

“They expounded concerning her”: in the Zohar, Ki Tetze, page 553: “For this reason Esther is an expression of concealment, which was hidden for him concerning the woman [?], for she was hidden from Ahasuerus; He gave him a she-demon in her place, and she returned into Mordecai's arm.” [TN150026]

Yad Yehudah - עה

“Read it as ‘his resting-place’”: this is his twin sister, as in “Shall I not seek a resting-place for you?”

Yad Yehudah - עו

“In Midrash Avkir”: cited in Yalqut, Bereshit; see there.

Yad Yehudah - עז

“In a pure body”: Zipporah's body.

Yad Yehudah - עח

“The robber himself”: Cain, reincarnated as Jethro, restored a dwelling to his brother Abel, reincarnated as Moses.

Yad Yehudah - עט

“This is what we learned,” etc.: this concludes the matter.

Yad Yehudah - פ

“He pays full damages”: Jethro had to give his daughter to Moses.

Yad Yehudah - פא

“For the stack”: for having kindled the evil inclination's fire in his descendants, he pays half

Yad Yehudah - פא - continued

damages, namely half his offspring. At the end of seven generations, Tubal-cain and his sister Naamah issued from him. Tubal-cain and his offspring were erased from that world [gap]; Naamah survived to build the world, with a cause [?] also in the net [?] [gap]. [TN150027]

Yad Yehudah - פב

“These two events”: first, Jethro's giving his daughter Zipporah to Moses; second, Tubal-cain and his sister. Because of them, some basis in the revelation to Moses, as stated [?]. [TN150028]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“We mentioned, chapter 9,” etc.: his words will be explained below, at the end of chapter 14, according to the author's approach, which did not retract the beginning of his foregoing words. “A commandment not for its own sake,” etc.: he had intercourse at an evil hour, as below. “But that itself is difficult”: how did he come to a commandment not for its own sake, since He made him upright? Rather, the moon's accusation. “In which hands had not intervened”: such as the moon's accusation. “Concerning the affair of Bathsheba”: he was rash as water, taking her before her time, eating her while unripe; this is “in my haste.” “Or concerning Adam's rashness”: he was his reincarnation; he said, “In my haste,” etc. “Judgment intensifies”: at the afternoon hour. “Publicly”: before everyone's eyes, for which reason the serpent was jealous of them, as it says, “The serpent was crafty,” as Rashi explains. “The dog and the kid”: the kid alludes to Abel and the dog to Cain. Accordingly, Abel was killed and Cain driven away; these are the full damages they paid. [TN150029]

“He begot its foreskin,” etc.: its numerical value is S.M.A.L. H.R.Sh.A., “Samael the wicked”; likewise, “They set their mouths in the heavens,” and likewise “Seth, they set, toward the gate” [?]. “Its fruit”—this is Abel—has the numerical value of K.R.Y.T. M.Y.L.H., “cutting of circumcision.” [TN150030] “Just as food came forth from the eater,” etc.: the blessed LORD makes available to each person the sparks of holiness fitting for that person to repair, for nothing below lacks a mazal above, as explained above, Part I, chapter 21, and Part II, chapter 17. Sometimes sparks of holiness are made available to a person; so Jethro repaired Cain, and the additional twin sister is Zipporah.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“So she,” etc.; “the first instance of this designation”: the first time it is mentioned in the Torah that he called a woman, etc. The Holy One, blessed be He, provides for one's mate in the generations of souls, which descended male and female, as explained in the Zohar, Pequdei: the mystery of souls' generations, male and female together. Therefore he said, “Call him, and let him eat bread”: he likened mating to bread, as above. “He is a brother, a sister,” etc.: the word ḥoten is interpreted as designations [?], “brother, sister, giver.” He is Moses' brother through Cain and Abel's reincarnation; Moses was given his sister, his mate in the generations of his soul. “Likewise his mother-in-law”: likewise, a sister-giver; in the word ḥotanto, “brother, her daughter,” who is [?] his sister, his mate in the generations of his soul. [TN150031]

“A man's parents”: a woman bears a son who marries a woman; her daughter-in-law calls her ḥam and ḥamot, from aḥ yeḥam, “a brother was conceived,” that brother being her husband. They bore him, and giving does not apply there: they are not called ḥoten and ḥotanta, as above concerning the male, since they take a woman for their son rather than give, etc. “Represented by his flock”: Moses' body is represented by his flock, which tasted nothing, Z.Y.V.Z. [?]; Moses likewise tasted nothing, like them—them. Although it says, “Moses was on the mountain forty days,” etc., implying that he did not eat specifically on the mountain, here it implies that he did not eat even on earth, because he did not wish to benefit from the ground's fruit, his brother Cain's portion. He answers: on the mountain it was not so, but through the soul's perfection; on earth, by contrast, through the body's perfection. “To dwell, not to eat,” Y.K.V. [?]: he did not need to eat, as above. [TN150032]

“He shall fly through the air,” etc.; “unembodied,” etc.: through their sin they made the tablets an encompassing light [?], and the tablets lacked the power to receive the letters; therefore they broke. Likewise, Abel was the mystery of encompassing light, and the world could not sustain them. The image that joins soul to body, as stated in Part IV, chapter 14, lacked the power to join the portions of his soul's lights, whose light was exceedingly subtle. It therefore had to fly away, and he told him, “Fly through the air.” This is what Admon said: he lost the path to his field; he had no path on earth because he was unembodied, namely encompassing light. The vav, yod, and final nun of Q.Y.N. become final tsadi, and this is qets, the end: he anticipated the end; K.Y., sign 3, in the direction of 42 [?]. [TN150033] “Like the births of the nefilim”: as above concerning the Mishnah of the dog and kid that jumped, etc. “Admon, the master of judgment,” etc.: Admon derives from adom, red, which is judgment, Isaac's attribute.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Lovingkindness and mercy”: they agree upon repair and said, etc. “In Seth's name”: its numerical value is six hundred. [TN150034] “Her ways are ways of pleasantness,” etc.: this is “Let him acquire a path” of Torah “for a hundred maneh,” as above, namely ten thousand. A maneh is a hundred, and a hundred maneh amount to ten thousand for each aspect. Ten orders for each aspect, and ten tractates for each order, make a hundred tractates; ten chapters in each tractate make a thousand chapters; and ten laws in each chapter make ten thousand laws. This is a hundred maneh. “Or let him fly through the air, endeavoring,” etc.: this is Moses, his reincarnation, who ascended on high, like flying through the air, and there repairs Abel. Cain forced the end before its season, as stated above. “Vav and final nun are final tsadi”: that is, an extended nun with a yod above it; with qof, it is qets. He wished to repair him immediately and told him, “Fly through the air.” He became an executioner, one who kills people, because already, as Admon said, “Let him take the short way,” with shortened years, as above. [TN150035]

“The beginning of repair”: but repair's end occurred through Moses, who ascended on high. “The LORD is righteous”: although gracious in His deeds, He is nevertheless righteous, for all His ways are judgment. “What we learned, ‘He ate the cake,’” etc.: this implies that he came to her; it is possible that miracles, etc., were performed, and another was given to him in her place. “Read it as ‘his resting-place’”: this is his wife. “And the worthy one himself” [?]: he is Jethro, the reincarnation—the reincarnation of Cain. “His sister Naamah,” etc.: therefore it is half damages, since Tubal-cain was dissolved and his sister survived. [TN150036]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 9

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 10 (י)

Yad Yehudah: כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"Therefore," etc.: the author returns to what he said in the preceding chapter: David's "In my haste, all man is false" concerns the affair of Bathsheba, whom he ate while unripe, and Adam's rashness [gap]. David also says of himself, "Behold, in iniquity I was brought forth, and in sin my mother conceived me," something like this, resembling his begetting [?]. [TN150039]

Yad Yehudah - ב

"He said," etc., according to its plain sense. But its interpretation is: behold, since Adam's time, "in iniquity I was brought forth," and I produced descendants in the iniquity of haste. This also caused "my mother conceived me in sin," resembling children of substitution: I entered the world through my father's thinking that he was coming to his maidservant. This was measure for measure, to atone for Adam's rashness, as will be explained. David mentioned this in his confession: from the beginning, Adam, my father, and I too sinned through the sins of Bathsheba.

Rema of Fano

Therefore David said, "Behold, in iniquity I was brought forth." That is, from the time I produced descendants in iniquity; measure for measure has not ceased, for "in sin my mother conceived me." The aggadah relates that his father Jesse, in his old age, separated from his wife. We have no doubt that this arose from piety: perhaps the Torah's "An Ammonite or Moabite shall not enter" means a Moabite even when female. This law was indeed uncertain in that generation, until Jesse's son-in-law Jithra the Ishmaelite came, sharpened and girded his sword like an Ishmaelite, and planted it in the study house to establish the ruling "a male Moabite, but not a female Moabite," from the court of Samuel of Ramah. Righteous Jesse, to remove himself from doubt and fulfill "In the evening do not let your hand rest," sought to come to his maidservant.

It appears reasonable to us that this occurred after he had freed her conditionally: if the Torah said "a male Moabite, but not a female Moabite," you are free; but if it means a Moabite even when female, my words have no effect. For those whose disqualification is certain are permitted to one another, as we learned in Asarah Yuḥasin. Although a mamzer is permitted a female convert or freedwoman, and the same applies to a male Moabite, since the community of

Yad Yehudah - ג

"We have no doubt," etc.: having cited Jesse's actual deed, the author explains it as well.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Even a Moanite woman" [?]: he would thus be disqualified from entering the congregation, being the grandson of Ruth the Moabite, and therefore separated from his wife. Do not wonder how Jesse did not know the rule "a male Moabite, but not a female Moabite." We find that this law was uncertain in that generation, as related in Ha-Arel, folio 77, concerning Doeg's saying to Shaul about David: ask whether he is fit to enter the congregation or not, etc. [TN150040]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"To fulfill in himself": the sages' saying, "If he had sons in his youth, let him have sons in his old age," as it is said, "In the morning sow your seed, and in the evening do not let your hand rest," as related in Ha-Ba al Yevimto, folio 62b. Therefore, so as not to cease procreation, he wished to come to his maidservant.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"It appears reasonable to us," etc.: that is, only thus [?] did he first free his maidservant when he wished to come to her. Otherwise, just as he separated from his wife out of concern that "Moabite" includes a female, he should also have feared the opposite: perhaps it means a male Moabite but not a female, so that he is fit, and the maidservant is forbidden to him. It is also reasonable that he did not first free her in the manner, "If the law is a male Moabite but not a female, he is permitted to her" [?]. Rather, he freed her conditionally, if the law is a male Moabite but not a female, and said to her: if the Torah's intention includes a female Moabite and I am disqualified, my words of manumission shall have no effect, since I am permitted to you without manumission. All those disqualified from entering the congregation are permitted to one another when their disqualification is certain. [TN150041]

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Although," etc.: why do we establish this as conditional manumission, although he would be permitted to her even after unconditional manumission? A male Moabite is permitted a freedwoman, just as a mamzer is permitted a female convert, as converts and freed people is not called "the congregation," he preferred his sons to be slaves whom he could immediately free, so that they would not follow his disqualification. Had their mother been free, the children would have been like him, following the disqualified parent and forbidden to enter the congregation forever.

Rema of Fano - continued

The faithful maidservant knew that the accepted law permits the women of Ammon and Moab to enter the congregation. She therefore passed the identifying signs to Jesse's wife, who at that time was hated by her husband because of her excellence, as will be explained concerning Leah in chapter 18. David was born from that act, like Reuben's birth. In both cases, to outward appearance, there is reason to fear the category of children conceived through substitution. But the Righteous One of the world knows the judgment of the lowly: these souls needed to enter the world's air secretly. Gad, Zilpah's firstborn, was similar, as we shall mention there. David was to atone for the publicity of Adam's rashness. The Ari explained that Reuben repairs Cain, as the sages said. She therefore said "son," not "man," for he is only a branch of the root. This one would build what that one destroyed. He is the first son, the world's firstborn, destined for the birthright, priesthood, and kingship.

Further, read Reuben as or ben, "light, son," after the hidden light. Gad is the appearance of the backs in which the light was concealed, for concerning Leah it is written, "She ceased bearing."

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Maimonides rules in chapter 6 of Laws of Forbidden Relations. This comes from the Gemara in Asarah Yuḥasin, folio 72b: "A convert may marry a mamzeret"—Rabbi Yose's opinion. The Gemara concludes that this is because the community of converts is not called "the congregation." Certainly the same applies to a freedwoman, since converts and freed people have the same law. Nevertheless, it is reasonable that the manumission was conditional for the sake of the sons to be born to him. For them, if the Torah said that "Moabite" includes a female, the reason is that unconditional manumission does not help them: everywhere the child follows the disqualified parent, as is known. This is not so with conditional manumission: if the Torah includes a female Moabite, the manumission has no effect, so the child is a slave like her and he can free him. He preferred this to his sons' following his disqualification, being Moabites like him through unconditional manumission, for then, etc. [TN150042]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"The faithful maidservant," etc.: she told his wife and gave her the identifying signs because she possessed the received ruling "a male Moabite,

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

but not a female," so Jesse had no need to separate from his wife on that account.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Because of her greater excellence": greater than his, since he was under a suspicion of disqualification. [TN150043]

Yad Yehudah - י

"Like Reuben's birth": Rachel passed the identifying signs to Leah,

Rema of Fano - continued

Therefore the alef was concealed in the word begad. David's soul was already finding it difficult to come forth and clothe itself in the drop his father emitted while drinking from this cup with his heart set upon another cup. The Holy One, blessed be He, assured him that his father was wholly righteous and all his deeds for Heaven's sake. He reassured him concerning his mother's intention, for she had performed a transgression for its own sake. We explained this in its place. [TN150038]

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

as is known.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Children of substitution": he thinks he is coming to one woman and comes to another. See Rashi's commentary at the end of Nedarim, chapter 2.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"To outward appearance": in truth, however, this was from the LORD, so that their souls might emerge secretly, for "Indeed, He knows," etc. It also seems to me that this removes the surprise that this affair befell Jesse without need: according to the law, he had no need for it, and it is written, "No iniquity shall befall the righteous." Likewise with Jacob: God indeed brought it about for them intentionally and with wondrous providence. ⟦Print recovery of the three frozen gaps.⟧ [TN150044]

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג

"David was to atone," etc.: this concludes what he said at the chapter's beginning, that measure for measure has not ceased. David, Adam's reincarnation, needed his soul to emerge secretly to atone for Adam's coming to Eve publicly.

Yad Yehudah - יד

Reuben likewise, being Cain's reincarnation, who stole Abel's twin sister publicly, as in the preceding chapter, needed his soul to emerge secretly to atone for this.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"She therefore said, 'See, a son'": he is a branch of the root, Cain's soul, and not "a man," meaning that his soul is not the root itself.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"This one will build": he further interprets ben, son, through binyan, building, for he will build and repair what Cain destroyed.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"He is the first son": another interpretation of Reuben is "See, this is the first son." The book of the Ari's intentions likewise writes: "'Reuben, you are my firstborn,' etc.: Cain was Adam's firstborn. Jacob wished Reuben to take Jacob's birthright, in the mystery of 'If you do well, uplift,' as mentioned in the Zohar. This is 'His name was called Reuben': see that this is the first son created in the world, namely Cain son of Adam. When Reuben sinned, it departed from him and was given to Jethro, for Cain's soul was repaired in Jethro, as is known. Thus, 'Reuben, you are my firstborn,' but 'excellence of uplift' means Jethro, possessor of the birthright called se'et; had you merited it, you would have taken it." End of quotation. This is what he said from the verse "If you do well, uplift." The Zohar there, Bereshit, page 113, says: "What is se'et? As it is written, 'excellence of uplift,' for the firstborn has preeminence in everything, and it depends on his deeds. Therefore, 'If you do well, uplift.'"

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Destined," etc.: Reuben was prepared for these three had he not sinned, as the sages said concerning "excellence of uplift and excellence of strength."

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Further, read it," etc.: this too explains why Reuben's soul needed to come secretly and in concealment. He too is named after the light hidden and concealed since the six days of Creation, as related in the Sava, Mishpatim, page 105: "Reuben: or ben, 'light, son,' for it is written, 'God said: Let there be light.'" The intention concerns the supernal light in Atsilut, shining in its first point, Keter, which the blessed LORD emanated. Of it, "God said: Let there be light" is said. That light was hidden: the light of that point was diminished, and a degree of opacity arose in it until it became a vessel, as the author explains in Yonat Elem, chapter 5. The Sava says that Reuben corresponded to that light, for he was the first of Israel's sons, as that light was first in Atsilut. He is therefore called Reuben, or ben: the son corresponding to that light. It is known and explained in many places that the lower ordering of Jeshurun's tribes corresponded to the upper ordering in Atsilut's structure. This seems to me the interpretation of this teaching.

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

I have seen someone think that the intention is the name B.N., the name YHWH spelled out with he letters. I do not know why Reuben should be named for this spelling more than for the other known spellings of the Name. The verse “God said: Let there be light” includes all four spellings, S.G., A.B., M.H., B.N., whose sum is yehi or, “Let there be light.” [TN150045]

Yad Yehudah - כ

Gad's soul too needed to come in concealment, for the supernal light was hidden and concealed in him, since he is an appearance of the backs. All four sons of the maidservants issue outside the arms and outside the thighs, and in them stands the female point. Of them it is said, “All their backs were inward,” as explained: the light was concealed, having already ceased in Malkhut. Gad's soul emerged secretly on this account more than those of the maidservants' other sons because, had he not been among the maidservants' sons, his hour would have stood firm, as will shortly be explained. [TN150046]

Yad Yehudah - כא

“For concerning Leah it is written”: when Leah bore Judah, corresponding to Malkhut, the structure's end, it is written that she ceased bearing: the light ceased. This appears in the Sava there: “In the book of Duqna [?], ‘she ceased bearing’ was said not of Leah but of Rachel: this which is written concerning the congregation, this which participated in Judah.” [TN150047]

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Therefore the alef was concealed”: in the Zohar, Vayeḥi, page 570, Rabbi Isaac said: “Had Gad not been among the maidservants' sons, the hour would have stood in fullness; it departed from him. This is ‘My brothers have betrayed like a stream,’ for that river which flows withdrew at that hour,” etc. [TN150048]

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“From the time I produced,” etc.: David is Adam's reincarnation; Adam produced descendants in iniquity through his rashness, as above in chapter 9. Measure for measure has not ceased, so David too was born in iniquity: to outward appearance, he was like a child of substitution, as below, for his father thought that he was coming to his maidservant but came to his wife. “Even a female Moabite”: Jesse was Ruth's grandson and would be disqualified from entering the congregation. He therefore separated from his wife so that David would not be born disqualified. “To fulfill in himself,” etc.: he thought to fulfill both requirements, separating from his wife without ceasing procreation in old age, as it says, “In the evening do not let your hand rest.” “If a male Moabite,” etc.: it follows that I am fit to enter the congregation and you are free. “But if even a female Moabite” is forbidden, I am forbidden; my words have no effect, and you remain a maidservant, for he is certainly permitted to marry a maidservant. Although a Moabite is permitted to marry even a freedwoman, why did he say, “My words have no effect”? He acted like Rabbi Tarfon, who said in Asarah Yuḥasin: mamzerim can become purified. How? A mamzer marries a maidservant; the child is a slave like her, and when freed is fit for the congregation. Jesse did likewise. If she were free and he a disqualified Moabite, the child would follow him and be disqualified like him; he therefore said, “My words have no effect,” as above.

“The maidservant,” etc.: she knew the ruling “a male Moabite, but not a female,” permitting entry into the congregation. She therefore gave the signs to her mistress, Jesse's wife, so that he would come to his wife, not to her. “Because of her excellence”: he was disqualified from coming to her, being a Moabite. See below, chapter 18, concerning Leah. Likewise with Reuben: Leah was substituted for Rachel, and Reuben was born from the intercourse in which he thought she was Rachel, whereas she was Leah. “Children of substitution,” etc.: one of the nine categories, drinking from this cup while setting his eyes upon another; see the Zohar, Vayetse. “Gad too was similar”: he too was born secretly, for Leah did not first consult Jacob; rather, “She took her

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

maidservant and gave her to Jacob." See below, chapter 18. [TN150049]

"David was to atone," etc.: David needed to be born secretly to atone for the publicity, etc., of intercourse at an hour of judgment on Friday before everyone's eyes, as above in chapter 9. Reuben was the repair of Cain, who was born from public intercourse, as above. The branch is Reuben and its root Cain; he is the first son, hence "son," not "man." Reuben is also called ben because this one will build and repair what he destroyed. This is "What is the difference between my son and my father-in-law?" This is Esau; he too repaired and held fast to his first damage [?], as related in the Zohar: Jacob and Esau are Cain and Abel. [TN150050]

"Or ben," light-son, is Reuben, named for the hidden light, etc. The light created during the six days of Creation comprised A.B., S.G., M.H., the light of this world; the light of the world to come is the name B.N. The light of the world to come was hidden in this world's light. This is Reuben: light hidden in the name B.N.; and did not the Holy One, blessed be He, swear by His soul, in which He hid the light [?]? Soul is Malkhut. [TN150051]

"The appearance of the backs": for twelve tribes,

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 10

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

which it had [?], were upon twelve oxen, corresponding to the twelve tribes. It is written, "The face of an ox, for her, G.M., b-y-r-m" [?], alluding to the supernal completeness [?]. Three joints in each leg make "his legs pillars of six"; likewise, three joints in the right hand and three in the left make twelve. The appearance of the backs consists of the backs of his two hands projecting separately backward. Likewise, in the standards, four groups of three make four corresponding to four backs of the transparent ones [?]. Therefore light was concealed in the matter. After it descended, clean ones [?]: Q., "she drew out, gave" [?] to Jacob secretly. [TN150052]

"She ceased bearing": the influx and begetting ceased, and therefore the alef is concealed in the word Gad: B.G.D. is written. "To come forth and clothe itself," etc.: to descend from the upper world into David's drop, which his father emitted. "Upon another cup": upon his maidservant, as above; he thought he was coming to his maidservant, whereas she was his wife. "The Holy One, blessed be He, assured him": assured his soul that it should descend. "Concerning his mother's intention": David's mother. [TN150053]

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 11 (יא)

Yad Yehudah: יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"The first commandment": Adam was commanded by the saying "Be fruitful and multiply."

Yad Yehudah - ב

"We have mentioned": above, chapter 9, that Adam was rash in fulfilling this commandment, approaching his wife on a weekday, in daytime, etc.

Rema of Fano

The first commandment we have mentioned is a precedent for all commandments, which require great watchfulness and preparation, as King Solomon, peace be upon him, proclaimed: "One who watches over a commandment will know no evil thing." Go and learn from the eating of the Passover offering in Egypt, concerning which the haste of the Shekhinah is

Yad Yehudah - ג

"It is a precedent": from it we learn concerning all commandments that they require the watchfulness and deliberation appropriate to them.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Great preparation": they require much preparation to subdue the Other Side, as related in the Zohar, Devarim, page 466, concerning the invitation to the blessing after meals, on the verse “And I shall bless the LORD.” See there.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

“One who watches over a commandment”: shomer denotes waiting, as in “His father kept the matter.”

Yad Yehudah - ו

“One who watches the wind”: one who waits and performs the commandment as a commandment will know no evil thing through losing its reward.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Concerning which it is written”: “Thus shall you eat it: your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; you shall eat it in haste.” The sages disputed: one says the Shekhinah's haste, another Israel's haste. The author explains according to the one who says the Shekhinah's haste. To prevent the mistake of saying Israel's haste, the verse first places Sh.Sh. [?], these things: “your loins,” “your shoes,” “your staff,” etc., indicating that it is to be eaten with preparation and readiness, rather than haste. [TN150056]

Yad Yehudah - ח

The sages' saying in Nedarim is known: “A transgression for its own sake is greater than a commandment not for its own sake.” Although the saying has its plain meaning, as derived there written, for she was hastening to redeem her children. To warn against confusion and turmoil in fulfilling that commandment, teaching us that haste was stated only with this intention, Scripture first specified, “Thus shall you eat it,” with three kinds of preparation.

Rema of Fano - continued

The sages' saying is known: “A transgression for its own sake is greater than a commandment not for its own sake.” This is a saying of great counsel. The creation of harmful beings is a transgression for its own sake, and great is its necessity for upright governance, caused by the commandment not for its own sake that our first father had previously performed in haste, as above in chapter 9. It requires purging, to raise a horn for His people through purity of thought and refinement of intention. When the harmful beings were created on the eve of the Sabbath at twilight, at an hour resembling haste, measure for measure, Adam feared for himself and cried a great cry: “For behold, Your enemies, O LORD!” The Holy Spirit in his mouth is truth; she too answered, “For behold, Your enemies shall perish,” and “You have raised my horn like that of a wild ox.” [TN150054]

For this reason they were created with a deficient creation at that hour: not during the day, lest their creation be completed; not at night, since no creation occurs with the day's holiness; rather, precisely at twilight, in the blink of an eye. We shall explain it. From the familiar mnemonic for the planetary hours—Ḥ.L.M. K.Ts.N.Sh. for the beginnings of days, K.Ts.N.Sh. Ḥ.L.M. for from Scripture, the author incidentally explains it rhetorically: the first mem in mi-mitsvah is causal. The intention is that a transgression for its own sake is great, and its cause is the commandment not for its own sake. The matter concerns—

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

—the creation of harmful beings, considered, as it were, a transgression for its own sake. It was—

Yad Yehudah - י

—great for the benefit of the world [?], for they are the collectors who continually go about [?] exacting the appropriate deductions from sinners. This is “A transgression for its own sake is great,” meaning the creation of harmful beings. Its cause was Adam's prior commandment not for its own sake, when he was rash in its fulfillment and approached his wife publicly. This commandment not for its own sake required purging, “to raise”: so that He would raise Israel's horn through purity of thought, the opposite of the sin. The harmful beings were created for this purging; this is “because of a commandment not for its own sake.” [TN150057]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“When they were created,” etc.: the author incidentally explains Scripture's “For behold,

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Your enemies, O LORD; for behold, Your enemies shall perish; all workers of iniquity shall be scattered. You have raised my horn like that of a wild ox," etc., in "A psalm, a song for the Sabbath day," which Adam said, as is known. Adam spoke "For behold, Your enemies, O LORD" as a question and cry when the harmful beings were created. "For behold, Your enemies shall perish," etc., is the Holy Spirit's answer. This explains the repetition.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"We shall explain it": in chapter 13.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"From the mnemonic," etc.: we understand that Jupiter serves at the end of the sixth day.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"Because," etc.: at the end of Shabbat, concerning "He brought him outside," He told him: "Leave your astrology, for Israel is not under a mazal. What do you think—that Jupiter stands in the west? I shall turn it and station it in the east." This is "Who awakened from the east? Tsedek calls him to its foot." Rashi explains: "Jupiter stands"—it is your planet, cold and unsuited to begetting, etc.; thus I found in the Talmud of Rabbenu ha-Levi—"in the east," in a warm place. Thus far. The author prefers to explain this through setting and rising rather than cold and heat. Abraham was unfit to beget when Jupiter stood in the west because it was near setting, and the Holy One, blessed be He, stationed it in the east so that it would rise favorably. Jupiter stood in the west because the harmful beings were created under it and weakened its power. The blessed LORD, however, ordered the planet so that the harmful beings would submit to it.

Rema of Fano - continued

the beginnings of nights—we understand that the harmful beings were created at the very end of Jupiter's rule. This was so that they would submit to it, for it is Abraham our father's planet, as it is written, "Tsedek calls him to its foot." Because the harmful beings were created under it, it originally stood in the west, near setting, until His mercy, blessed be He, prevailed for us, and He stationed it in the east, rising, springing up, and ascending from the horizon. Their creation was interrupted at the beginning of Mars's rule, for their Master cursed them with destruction and death. [TN150055]

This is certainly the completion of the work of Creation: to prepare a slaughter-place for the harmful beings, so that they shall perish, while the day's holiness shall stand forever for those who keep the Sabbath and call it a delight. From these two ministrants, those who accompany us on Sabbath nights receive assistance in seeking mercy for us, that we may persevere in honoring the Sabbath and that nothing hinder us.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"From the horizon": an astronomers' term. It is the line passing straight over the earth's surface and reaching the heavens, at which rising and setting are seen.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Their creation was interrupted": the harmful beings' creation was not completed when the Sabbath entered, for there was not time to create their bodies. This occurred at the beginning of Mars's rule, which governs destruction and death. This is his saying that the Master of the harmful beings cursed them and brought destruction and death upon them.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"This is": interrupting their creation is no deficiency in the work of Creation. On the contrary, it completes His work, to prepare, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"From these two ministrants": Jupiter and Mars assist the two angels who accompany a person on Sabbath night and say, "May it be Your will that the next Sabbath be likewise." They are therefore called by their names: Tsadqiel, prince of Jupiter, and Samael, prince of Mars. These angels [gap], and these words which instruct or point upon us [?] [gap] Sabbath. [TN150058]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The first commandment,” etc.: “Be fruitful and multiply,” which Adam performed without preparation, as above in chapter 9. “It is a precedent for all commandments, which require watching”: waiting and deliberation, unlike the first Adam's haste. “One who watches over a commandment,” etc.: he should wait. “To warn against confusion”: he warned Israel concerning the commandment of eating the Passover offering that there should be no haste. Rather, “Your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand”: three kinds of readiness; the haste belongs to the Shekhinah.

“Creating harmful beings is a transgression for its own sake,” etc.: their creation is considered, as it were, a transgression because they harm a person; yet it was for its own sake, necessary for governance, as faithful agents of those who send them. This is upright governance. From where did such a transgression for its own sake arise? From a commandment not for its own sake: Adam hastened to come to his wife before his time, as above. Afterward he repented and remained in n-h-y-g-v-n [?], begetting spirits, demons and lilin for 130 years, as is known. This is “A transgression for its own sake is great,” arising from a commandment not for its own sake. That commandment requires repentance, purging and refinement of intention to make it for its own sake. [TN150059]

“For behold, Your enemies, O LORD,” etc.: concerning the harmful beings he saw, “For behold, Your enemies,” etc. The Holy Spirit answered him: do not fear, “For behold, Your enemies shall perish.” The matter is that in the 120 permutations of Elohim, sixty are on the right and sixty on the left. This is “For behold”: hinneh, hinneh, numerical value sixty. He feared the left-hand ones; He told him there are sixty other, right-hand ones. This is “For behold,” etc., and “Behold, Solomon's bed; sixty mighty men surround it.” This is what is said concerning Ahithophel: “In God, behold, behold, God is among those who support me”; “God, You taught me from my youth, and until now”; and concerning Elisha, “The waters were healed,” hinneh and hinneh. [TN150060]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 11

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“At the end of Jupiter's rule”: at the end of the sixth day's rule. “Which was folded” [?], in Jupiter—in Jupiter the harmful beings were created. “Ascending from the horizon,” etc.: a boundary is called ofeqa. “At the beginning of Mars's rule”: at the beginning of Sabbath night. “D-merarehon”: his bitterness; “la'ati”: he curses them. It seems to me that one should read d-marehon, meaning that the Holy One, blessed be He, brings destruction and death upon them: through Mars He brings destruction and death upon the harmful beings. At the moment of the Sabbath's beginning, this is certainly the completion of the work of Creation, for at this moment He prepared a response and destruction for the harmful beings created in the preceding moment under Jupiter. This is through Mars. [TN150061]

“The ministrants”: Jupiter and Mars. Two angels there accompany a person on Sabbath night, one good and one evil. One says, “May it be Your will that the next Sabbath be likewise,” and the second angel answers “Amen” against his will. The matter of Tsadqiel and Samael: together their numerical value is 366, the number of the solar year's days, 365 days and a quarter; part of a day suffices as a whole day. [TN150062]

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 12 (יב)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“God completed,” etc. This follows what was said in the preceding chapter: the conclusion of the work of Creation is to prepare a slaughtering place for the harmful beings. The master interprets the verse “He completed,” etc., accordingly.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“He entered it by a hair’s breadth.” The wording of Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 10: Rabbi asked Rabbi Ishmael son of Rabbi Yose: “Did you hear from your father what ‘God completed on the seventh day’ means? It is astonishing!” He replied: “Like someone striking with a hammer,” etc. Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai said: “Flesh and blood, who knows neither his times, nor his moments, nor his hours, adds from the profane to the holy. But the Holy One, blessed be He, who knows His moments, His times and His hours, entered it by a hair’s breadth.” End of quotation.

Yad Yehudah - ג

The explanation of “a hair’s breadth of the sphere’s width” is that the sphere delimits time, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Likewise, at the completion of the cessation.” That is, the

Rema of Fano

“God completed on the seventh day His work that He had made.” For, as He finished His work, He entered that day by a hair’s breadth of the sphere’s width. Likewise, at the completion of the cessation on the departure of the seventh day, it is written, “And He was refreshed”—vayyinaphash, whose numerical value is “death,” mavet. They expounded it: “Woe! The soul is lost.” The intention concerns the human soul, from which the additional soul has departed. Yet a verse does not depart from its plain meaning: “And He was refreshed” is written of the One who rested on that day, in the passive form. As it were, He clothed Himself in that ascending portion of the human soul, and asks it, “With what novelties of Torah did you occupy yourself?” Of this it is written, “Do not withhold good from its owners,” as is known. “Soul,” nefesh, is “good,” tov, through the Atbash substitution. This clothing must occur at the last instant of the cessation, before the weekdays take dominion; through it He adds strength to renew the work of Creation in the coming six days, during which the feet of governance descend to death. Similarly, on the eve of the Sabbath He was entirely stripped of weekday garments and entered holiness by a hair’s breadth. Of that infinitesimal interval it is written, “He completed,” in accordance with the words of the Sages, for this is the nullification of the nullifier, as we have mentioned. In it are the perfection of the whole work of entire matter concerns the eve of the Sabbath, as HWṚMŠ [unresolved abbreviation]; it will be explained below. [TN150064]

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

“The intention,” etc. The reverse[?] of what the master wrote concerning the departure of the additional soul: the intention here is not to say that the additional soul has fallen ill[?] with the body, but concerns what is mentioned of man’s soul when the additional soul departs from it. This is mentioned in the portion Vayaqhel, page 366, in these words: “It is written, ‘And He was refreshed,’ and they established: ‘Woe to the soul that has gone’; and it was fitting[?]. But if so, it should have said, ‘Woe to the body,’ from which the soul has been lost! Yet the secret of the matter is this: there is already a soul that takes and draws this additional spirit to itself. This spirit rests in the repose[?] of that soul and gives it fragrance[?] throughout the Sabbath. Then that soul is increased[?], as we said[?], and is raised higher than it had been. Therefore, again[?], all the souls of Israel are crowned on the Sabbath day; their crown is that this spirit dwells within them. Once the Sabbath departs—woe to the soul that has lost what it has lost: that crown, that kind[?] that had been within it. And this [gap], since this Sabbath has ascended above; afterward, the soul that has lost what it has lost."[TN150065]

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו

Nevertheless, we still need a great clarification: how, according to this exposition, the plain meaning of "And He was refreshed" refers to the Holy One, blessed be He. He therefore said that, in accordance with this, the plain meaning of "And He was refreshed" is that the Holy One, blessed be He, clothes Himself in the additional soul—that is, in the new teachings of Torah in which it is renewed. This is "And He was refreshed," an expression in the reflexive form. ⟦Print recovery of the frozen gap and damaged introductory clause.⟧ This matter is explained in the Zohar, Shelah Lekha, page 348 or 328[reading uncertain], as follows:

"Come and see: when the Sabbath enters, souls descend to rest upon the holy people, and the souls of the righteous ascend above. When the Sabbath departs, souls ascend—those which rested upon Israel—and souls descend: these are the souls of the righteous. When all the

Rema of Fano - continued

Creation and the delight of its days.

Lest we err, Scripture is precise, saying first, "There was evening and there was morning, the sixth day," and immediately, "The heavens were completed." The work of Creation lacked nothing, and completion was therefore attributed to them. This was not merely at the day's end: once man, the last of all creatures, had been created, Creation was complete. For the rest of the day the Unique One of the world prepared a Sabbath meal before him; for "No shrub of the field was yet on the earth, and no herb of the field had yet sprung up"—the formation of man and his placement in the Garden of Eden were required. It has already been explained in the aggadah that, when God, blessed be He, raises clouds on the Sabbath and causes rain to fall upon the earth, He does not carry from one domain to another: He is like a householder whose whole courtyard lies before him as four cubits; the air of a private domain extends to the firmament. All the more so on the sixth day, from midday onward, the time suited to completing the preparation of the six days' work, so that it would be arranged in honor of the Sabbath, and to preparing for man a bridal canopy and a shelter of peace. Nevertheless, we also read concerning it, "The sixth day—the heavens were completed": He stopped these preparations while it was still day, Himself and in His glory fulfilling the addition to the Sabbath, so as to prohibit labors forbidden by Torah law. Yet even the final instant at the end of twilight, when everything had already been finished, brought Him, blessed be He, no satisfaction; the completion of His works souls which rested upon Israel ascend, they ascend and stand in their form before the holy King. The Holy One, blessed be He, asks them all: 'What new teaching of Torah did you have in that world?' Fortunate is the one before whom it spoke a new teaching of Torah! How much joy the Holy One, blessed be He, makes: He assembles His retinue and says, 'Hear the new teaching of Torah which this soul of so-and-so spoke.' They all establish that teaching in two academies: they below, and the Holy One, blessed be He, above seals that teaching. Come and see: when a teaching is newly expounded in Torah, and the soul which descended on the Sabbath engages in those new teachings and ascends above, all the retinue above listens to that teaching," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

"How much honor upon honor and crown upon crown they place upon the father of that person there, when the Holy One, blessed be He, says, 'Gather to hear a new teaching and new words of Torah in the name of so-and-so, son of so-and-so!' How many are those who kiss his head," etc. See there. [TN150066]

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Of this it is written," etc. In the Sava, portion Mishpatim, page 195:

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

"Come and see: on the Sabbath day, when Israel sanctifies the day in the synagogue, souls issue from the Tree of Life and are breathed into the holy ones below, resting therein throughout the Sabbath day. After the Sabbath departs, all the souls ascend and are crowned with holy crowns above. When they are crowned with that good, these are indeed the owners of the good that he performed," etc.

"It is written, 'Do not withhold good from its owners while it is in your power to do it.' What is 'Do not withhold good from its owners'? It is the Holy One, blessed be He, and Knesset Israel who are here. For wherever words of Torah are spoken, the Holy One, blessed be He, and Knesset was not attributed to Him, although the creatures were in their proper condition, until the Sabbath came and rest came. Then it is written, "God completed," as they said: "The world lacked only the Sabbath." It is therefore fitting to say that He did not finish until He ceased—to put an enemy to rest, as stated. Matters of this kind were entrusted only to members of the covenant. Know this from the fact that they altered the wording for Ptolemy and did not explain it to him. Although they concealed the secret, they changed the expression only in accordance with the Torah of truth, as we have mentioned. Likewise, when they altered the beginning of the Torah to "God created Beginning," the intention was that supernal Elohim created the lower Beginning, of which it is written, "Solomon's wisdom increased," in the manner of the Jerusalem translator. So it is with all of them.[TN150063]

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Israel are there and listen to them. Then, as for that tree of good and evil, when they depart from there and listen to those words, that side of good grows strong and ascends above. The Holy One, blessed be He, and Knesset Israel are crowned with that good, and these are the owners of that good." ⟦Print recovery of the frozen gap.⟧ [TN150067]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"And this is nefesh": that is, there is a further interpretation here, as though it said, "Do not withhold a soul from its owners," for the word "good" is "soul" in Atbash, as is known. Pardes says likewise in the explanation of "Before"[?]. ⟦Print recovery of the two frozen gaps.⟧ [TN150068]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"This clothing," etc. This is the conclusion of the matter, explaining the eve of the Sabbath and the departure of the Sabbath in one manner.

Yad Yehudah - י

"At the last instant." To add strength to the work of Creation at the beginning of the weekdays; for through novelties of Torah the blessed Name continually makes new heavens and a new earth, as explained above, Part II, chapter 14, from the Zohar on Bereshit. See there.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"During which the feet of governance descend to death." During the six working days the feet of the Shekhinah, clothed in Metatron for the governance of the world, as is known, descend to the world of Asiyah. There are the side of impurity and the tree of death, as is known from many passages in the Zohar: on weekdays the qelippot and the Other Side rule. Therefore, corresponding to this, to weaken the power of the qelippot, He, as it were, adds strength through novelties of Torah to create new worlds.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Was entirely stripped." From the supernal governance, the weekday garments of the impure side, all of which are hidden and suspended in the cloud of the firmaments[?], in the hollow of the great abyss, as stated in the Zohar on Bereshit, page 169.[TN150069]

Yad Yehudah - יג

"In accordance with the words of the Sages." In the aforementioned Bereshit Rabbah.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"For this is the nullification of the nullifier." On the Sabbath the evil inclination and the harmful beings, which had prevented man from His service, blessed be He, are nullified. The expression "He completed," which is an expression of nullification, refers to the nullification of the harmful beings.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

“As we have mentioned.” In the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“In it is the perfection,” etc. For “He completed” is also an expression of perfection, as Onqelos translated “They were completed”: “They were perfected.” Through the nullification of the nullifier the work of Creation was perfected, together with the Sabbath, the delight of its days.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Lest we err”—by saying that “He completed” was said of the seventh day itself, according to the plain meaning of the verse—“Scripture is precise,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“In the aggadah.” In Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 11, concerning the wicked Turnus Rufus, who asked Rabbi Aqiva: “If the Holy One, blessed be He, honors the Sabbath, let Him not blow winds on it; let Him not send down rain on it,” etc. His answer was that the whole world is before Him, blessed be He, as four cubits. See there, and in Shemot Rabbah, chapter 30.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“All the more so”—that it is permitted on the sixth day, so that the blessed Name did not need to cease these preparations while it was still day.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“The preparation.” For Sabbath needs.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“He stopped,” etc. As stated in Bereshit Rabbah: “‘There was evening and there was morning, the sixth day.’ Rabbi Yudan said: ‘This is the additional hour that one adds from the profane to the holy; in it the work of the world was finished.’”

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Yet,” etc. That is, do not object: if He stopped while it was still day, what does “God completed on the seventh day” mean, which is at least the last instant of twilight, as mentioned? For, indeed, what we say, that He stopped while it was still day, concerns satisfaction, which He, blessed be He, did not have until the seventh day.[TN150070]

Yad Yehudah - כג

“As they, of blessed memory, said.” There in Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 10.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“It is fitting,” etc. That is, the reason He had no satisfaction until the Sabbath came is as above, in the preceding chapter: when the Sabbath entered, the Master put the harmful beings to rest. It is therefore fitting to attribute the completion of the work of Creation to the Sabbath, and to say that beforehand the blessed Name had not completed His work.

Yad Yehudah - כה

All secrets of this kind, truly spoken concerning the nullification of the impure side, were entrusted only to members of the covenant, who are from the side of holiness. Therefore the seventy-two sages altered this[?] for King Ptolemy and wrote: “He completed on the sixth, and rested on the seventh day,” as stated in the first chapter of Megillah.[TN150071]

Yad Yehudah - כו

“Only in accordance with the Torah of truth.” For the truth was that He finished on the sixth day.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“The intention was”—to conceal[?] that Elohim, Binah, emanated and created Malkhut. For bereshit means wisdom, as the Jerusalem translation renders it: “With wisdom.” That is, the lower wisdom, Malkhut, of which it is written, “Solomon’s wisdom increased,” for it was his attribute. This is “Elohim created Beginning”; with that Beginning He created the heavens, etc. So it is stated in the Zohar on Bereshit, page 79; see there.[TN150072]

Yad Yehudah - כח

“So it is with all of them.” In all the other things that the seventy-two elders altered for Ptolemy, the alteration was likewise true.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Concerning the human soul,” etc. In the manner explained by the Zohar, Vayaqhel, page 386[?]: why avdah, “has lost,” and not ne’evdah, “has been lost”? Because the soul that is continually in man every day has lost something of the additional soul that came to man on the Sabbath. “Do not withhold good,” etc. The explanation: Torah is called “good,” and the owner of the good is the soul, for nefesh in Atbash is tov. Do not withhold Torah from the soul on the Sabbath day. In the Zohar, Shelah: the Holy One, blessed be He, asks, “What holiness did you have in Torah?" "The feet of governance," etc. The explanation: on the six working days governance is through Metatron and Sandalphon. On weekdays their heads are in the world of Beriah, their bodies down to their feet are in the world of Yetsirah, and their feet are in the world of Asiyah. This is "My foot descends to death," for death pertains to the world of Asiyah; see above, Part I. On the Sabbath they wash their faces and ascend above into the world of Atsilut. This is what is said in the Gemara: they said of Rabbi Yehudah bar Ilai that he would wash his face, hands and feet on the eve of the Sabbath—his face corresponding to the head in Beriah, his hands to his body in Yetsirah, and his feet to her feet in Asiyah. He resembled an angel of the Lord of Hosts: this is Metatron then. Therefore, on the eve of the Sabbath they alluded to the secret of the two aforementioned angels. Maharal, N.Q.[TN150073] "For this is the nullification of the nullifier," etc. The explanation: at the instant the Sabbath began, the slaughtering place and destruction of the harmful beings were created. This is the nullification of the nullifier, as above. Lest we err, thinking that they did not finish, and He did not finish His work, until the Sabbath day itself, he therefore said "The sixth day," and immediately, "They were completed," etc. "A shelter of peace": this is Sabbath, Bride, Queen; she is the Shekhinah.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Only the Sabbath," etc. The explanation: the putting to rest of the harmful beings was what the world lacked. "It is therefore fitting to say," etc., as far as "To put an enemy to rest," etc., as above in the preceding chapter. "Matters of this kind." That is, this secret: at the first instant of the Sabbath of Creation, through creating the cessation of the harmful beings, He completed the work of heaven and earth. It was entrusted to be revealed only to members of the covenant. Know it from Ptolemy, for whom they altered the wording and wrote: "He completed on the sixth day." Nevertheless, they did not change the expressions so as to write a falsehood, for in truth He completed the work on the sixth day itself.

"Supernal Elohim," etc. The explanation: "Beginning" is Hokhmah; "Created Elohim" is Binah. They, who altered the wording and wrote "Elohim created Beginning," did not write falsely. For it was thus with direct light, as above; but with returning light, Elohim created the lower Beginning, which is Malkhut, likewise called Hokhmah, as it is written, "Solomon's wisdom increased." For Solomon is from the moon, which is Malkhut, and wisdom is written of him, in the manner of the Jerusalem translator, who translated bereshit: "With wisdom."[TN150074]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 12

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 13 (יג)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"In the dispute of the tannaim," etc. In the chapter Ba-meh Madliqin, folio 34b: "Our Rabbis taught: twilight is doubtfully part of the day, doubtfully part of the night," etc. "What is twilight? From sunset, and as long as the eastern face is reddened," etc. "Rabbi Yose says: 'Twilight is like

Rema of Fano

In the dispute of the tannaim over the duration of twilight, one master reckons the time of the creation of the ten things: from sunset and as long as the eastern face is reddened. Then one may tithe demai, for of each of them one may say, "What is this?"—din mai—for they did not know what it was until its day came for actualization, as above.[TN150075] One may establish courtyard eruvin, the blink of an eye: this enters and that departs, and it is impossible to determine it.'" The master concludes his exposition of the preceding chapter with this teaching of the tannaim, saying:

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

"One master"—the first tanna, who holds "From sunset." His reason is the ten things created at twilight, whose creation was only potential, not actual, as explained above, chapter 3. This labor, which is like acting in an unusual manner, was permitted even after sunset, as he concludes shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Then one may tithe demai." That is, for this reason we also say in the Mishnah: "If it is doubtful whether it is dark or not, one may tithe demai, establish an eruv, and insulate hot food." Each of the ten things was demai in name—"What is this?"—since what it was had not yet become known until it came into actuality at its proper time. Since this labor was originally permitted at twilight, therefore one may likewise tithe [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ד

"As above." Chapter 3.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"One may establish an eruv." That is, what we learned, "One may establish an eruv," which the Gemara explains as courtyard eruvin, is likewise for this reason. The reason for courtyard eruvin is the ways of peace, as stated in the Gemara. Solomon and his court decreed against carrying in courtyards because of carrying in the public domain, and permitted it through an eruv for the sake of peace, which were instituted only for the ways of peace; all ten things are likewise, as we have explained. And one may insulate hot food, in the sense of Moses' grave. The allusion is "Water—fire makes it boil": to enjoy on the Sabbath what was prepared on its eve. Insulation was permitted in a substance that does not add heat, for his death was voluntary, the fulfillment of a positive commandment, and he buried himself, as we mentioned in Part II, chapter 13. All these ten things were created only potentially, which is like acting in an unusual manner. The other master reckons only the creation of the harmful beings, in the sense of instructing a gentile, which was permitted even at that hour, like the blink of an eye, and he acts immediately. But on his own initiative and for his own need, it is written, "They shall not cease"; if he ceased, he is liable to death, whether on the Sabbath day or on any other day of the week.

Rema of Fano - continued

It is true that the ancient sages said that Enoch son of Jared, in his great wisdom and piety, devised religions and laws for all the ancient nations, according to what he knew of human constitutions and climates: food beneficial to one would not suit another. He forbade each of them foods harmful to the preservation of their bodily composition, kept them all away from the impurity of the dead and forbidden sexual relations, and taught them appropriate ways of conduct and sacrifices to the Master of all, blessed be He, as suited each country according to the needs of its place and its order, so that it would find favor before Him, blessed be He. This is a matter in so that householders could carry from their homes. Since the creation of the ten things was likewise for the ways of peace, as explained above, chapter 3, to repair what Adam had damaged in upright nature, and occurred at twilight, they therefore also permitted establishing courtyard eruvin at twilight.

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו

"As we have explained." Above, there.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"One may insulate hot food." Just as Moses' grave was created at twilight, according to the "Some say" in the Mishnah of Avot. This resembles insulating hot food on the eve of the Sabbath in order to enjoy it on the Sabbath, as explained above, Part II, chapter 13: Moses would warm himself from the eve of the Sabbath and tarried until the time of Minhah on the Sabbath. At that time of the favor of the Holy Ancient One, his soul departed and was crowned in Him. Thus he enjoyed on the Sabbath what he had prepared himself for, to be interred, from its eve.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"The allusion" to what we have said, that Moses' grave is the reason for permitting insulation, is in the verse "Water—fire makes it boil" (Isaiah 64), whose meaning is that fire boils the water. Fire is the agent and water the patient; it would have been proper to reverse the wording, placing fire first and water afterward, and to say, “Fire makes water boil,” as the commentators wrote. Therefore it alludes: “Water” is Moses, as it is written, “For I drew him out of the water,” as above, chapter 4. “Fire makes it boil,” for he is the reason for insulation with fire on the eve of the Sabbath at twilight. Thus it fittingly places water, the cause, before fire, the effect.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Insulation was permitted,” etc. That is, this is likewise why insulating was permitted only in a substance that does not add heat, not in a substance that does add heat, which is forbidden even while it is still day. For Moses’ death on the Sabbath was not an additional thing: he died voluntarily to fulfill a positive commandment when he was told, “Die on the mountain,” as written above, Part II, chapter 13. He began it from the eve of the Sabbath and completed it on the Sabbath. Likewise, the grave was not made in time, but [gap], toil and pursuit of wind, the vapor of desire. [TN150077]

Yad Yehudah - י

“All these,” etc. This concludes the matter. That is, those ten things were originally permitted after sunset because they are

Rema of Fano - continued

which someone other than us was not careful, as though he had strengthened the hands of transgressors to sacrifice to the gods of the lands—Heaven forbid. They said that he instituted festivals for them; this is what we are now discussing. Yet it is possible that his festivals were established for them only to rejoice in the service of Heaven, without the people ceasing from work, although there are many idlers in the marketplace. Such is still the law today among Qedar and Arabia, who will set no king over themselves unless he has learned a craft and the work of his hands is acceptable. At their festivals and Sabbaths they would celebrate and pursue their work. This is fitting for them, for they had cessation only in the supernal roots, which entered thought and were concealed. This is “Their prohibition is their death.”[TN150076] Yet with their expansion, they are born for toil. The toil of Torah, which is the reward of the Sabbath, was given only to members of the covenant. Although “They shall not cease” is not written until Noah, this does not mean that they were not previously commanded concerning it: all the commandments of the descendants of Noah are received tradition, and the Rabbis came and attached them to scriptural verses. Yet the righteous of all the generations undoubtedly kept the Sabbath. For them the Sabbath was a great commandment, after they had separated themselves to walk in Israel’s ways.

What we have said establishes that the creation of the harmful beings was a very inferior and deficient creation: He waited for it until the last instant, so that like labor performed in an unusual manner, since they were created only potentially. The Rabbis therefore hold that twilight begins at sunset.

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

Yad Yehudah - יא

“The other master”—Rabbi Yose, who holds that twilight is like the blink of an eye before sunset. His reason is that he reckons only the creation of the harmful beings, and follows the twilight in which they were created. Their creation was therefore not after sunset, but as this departed and that entered, like the blink of an eye. Their creation was permitted at that hour because there is no—

Yad Yehudah - יב

—prohibition in instructing a gentile on the Sabbath other than shevut, and there is no shevut at twilight. That is, all creatures were created by an utterance: the Lord spoke concerning them, and they came to be. When He said this to the harmful beings, the rule was like that of instructing a gentile. Accordingly, this could not have been after sunset, for then even instruction is forbidden. [TN150078]

Yad Yehudah - יג

“And he acts.” That is, when the gentile performs the labor before sunset.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“But on his own initiative,” etc. Incidentally, the master explains the matter of a gentile's cessation from work. Connecting it to this, he says: instructing a gentile, which is forbidden on the Sabbath, applies when the labor is for Israel's need. But when it is for the gentile's own need, there is no prohibition in instructing him; on the contrary, he performs a commandment. As they, of blessed memory, said in time barely sufficed to bring forth for them a minimal form, once, without repeating it, only like a blink of the eye—keheref ʿayin, from the expression "He withdrew from him," vayiref mimmennu. As it were, it was as though the supernal eye had withdrawn from showing mercy to the world. This is what the prophet said: "For a small moment I abandoned you"; and with the holiness of the day, in which there is a shelter of peace: "With great mercies I shall gather you."

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

the chapter Four Death Penalties: "A gentile who ceased from work is liable to death, for it is said, 'Day and night shall not cease.'" The master said: "Their prohibition is their death." Ravina said: "It was necessary only to include even Monday."

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Climates." The divisions of the inhabited world in which people dwell.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"This"—what we said, that he taught them sacrifices to the Master of all—"is a matter in which someone other than us was not careful." For there is someone who thought he taught them sacrifices so as to sacrifice to the gods of the lands, as though by this he had, Heaven forbid, strengthened the hands of transgressors. This is not so.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"This is what we are now discussing." For he instituted festivals for them, yet they are forbidden to cease from work!

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Although there are many idlers in the marketplace." Nevertheless, their idleness is not for the sake of cessation and festival.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Only as the supernal roots." For the root of the qelippot is rooted in holiness.[TN150079]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Which entered thought." For at first it arose in the thought of the Holy One, blessed be He, to create the world through the attribute of judgment, as is known. There, in supernal thought, they were concealed, for He, blessed be He, saw that the world would not endure. Therefore their cessation is there.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"This is their prohibition," etc. That is, of this it was said: "Their prohibition is their death." In supernal thought is their azharah, "prohibition," in the sense of zohar, "radiance"—their radiance and root—and likewise their death and nullification, for there they ceased raging.

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

Yad Yehudah - כב

"Yet with expansion." When the worlds expanded and the qelippot descended through the matter of the breakings, down to the world of Asiyah, "They are born for toil," to fulfill their mission; for they are the collectors who make the rounds. Therefore toil and labor are fitting for them as well. Although they are born for toil, it is nevertheless not the toil of Torah, as they, of blessed memory, likewise said there concerning a gentile who occupies himself with Torah. The reason is that Torah is the reward of the commandment of the Sabbath; since he is not included in the commandment, neither is he included in its reward.

Yad Yehudah - כג

"Although"—"Day and night shall not cease" is written concerning Noah, not before him, so apparently one could not derive from this a prohibition of Sabbath for a gentile—nevertheless, "This does not mean," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כד

"Attached them." That is, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the greatest of the righteous of the generations, kept the Sabbath, although before the giving of the Torah it was forbidden to the descendants of Noah. Their reason was that their status was that of Israel, since they had separated themselves to walk in Israel's ways. For this reason they likewise occupied themselves with Torah, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - כה

“What we have said.” The master returns to his exposition concerning the creation of the harmful beings.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“Barely,” etc. As is known from their saying, that He did not have time to create their bodies before the day became holy.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“Without repeating it”—to create a body for the form. Rather, the time was like the blink of an eye.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“From the expression,” etc. He explains “Like the blink of an eye”: the blessed Name withdrew the eye of mercy from the world in creating the harmful beings.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“This is what the prophet said: ‘For a small moment I abandoned you, and with great mercies I shall gather you’” (Isaiah 54). The intention is: in the small moment in which the harmful beings were created as an evil lash, “I abandoned you.” Yet time did not suffice to finish before “With great mercies I shall gather you,” through the holiness of the day, when the Shekhinah rests. As stated in the Zohar on Bereshit, page 129: “When the day is renewed on the eve of the Sabbath, the shelter of peace rests and spreads over the world. What is the shelter of peace? This is Sabbath. All spirits, whirlwinds and demons, and the whole impure side, are all hidden and enter the mill’s eye of the hollow of the great abyss,” etc. See there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“They did not know what,” etc. All ten things created on the eve of the Sabbath were created only potentially, not actually, until the time when each was completed at its proper time, as above, chapter 3 of this part. “Only for the ways of peace.” The explanation: the ten things are to repair an extra uprightness[?] from upright nature. A courtyard eruv is the vav of the Name, for Yesod and Tiferet are the cause[?] of the mediations of Jacob and Joseph; vav and the extension of vav we count as one. Tiferet, which is the vav of the Name, made a joining between the supernal Mother and the lower Mother. The vav in the Name is called “a covenant of peace.” Consequently, this courtyard eruv makes peace between the supernal Mother and the lower Mother. This is the secret of the Gemara: “The mother sent an eruv by the hand of the small son.” As stated, the son is Tiferet and Yesod; the mother is Malkhut.[TN150080] “In the sense of Moses’ grave,” etc. For Moses’ soul is from Yesod within Hokhmah, simple water; but for the governance of the world there was a participation of judgment, the element of fire. It resembles simple water heated by fire: so he is simple water, but for Israel’s sake, the element of fire. “The allusion is ‘Water—fire makes it boil.’” For Moses is “I drew him out of the water,” which is Hesed. This is the supernal image and likeness, which departs on the Sabbath. He also had a lower image and likeness, which is a covenant of fire from the side of judgment, as above, Part II, chapter 13; that image departed on the eve of the Sabbath. This is “To enjoy on the Sabbath”—from the supernal world—“what was prepared on its eve,” with the departure of the lower image. Mayim tivʿeh esh has the initials ʾemet, “truth”; and M.T., Moses, is the middle[?] of the letters ʿB.Y., which is Moses in Albas. This is the secret of “The covering[?] of water, clouds of the skies,” ʿavei shehaqim: in Albam, M.Š.H. is ʿB.Y. This is “water,” Moses’ attribute. Therefore, when three hundred thousand laws were forgotten after Moses’ death, Yaʿbets restored them: he is ʿB.Y., in Atbash, Moses; and thus in Atbash, Moses. For Albas is the secret of direct light and Atbash the secret of returning light; see page 1 in the Zohar.[TN150081] “And they were not created[?] for righteousness, they will be seized[?]”—for of him is written “righteous,” in Atbash, M.Ṭ.H.[TN150082] “Which does not add vapor.” The explanation: a staff[?] was not under punishment when the supernal KŠNBWRT [unresolved], his death[?]; rather, he died voluntarily.[TN150083] “The other master reckons,” etc. The explanation: the second opinion, the dispute of Rabban Shimon, says that it is like the blink of an eye, and in it is the creation of the harmful beings, in the sense of the sun[?]. Instructing a gentile—these are the harmful beings, and they were created through speech, as it is said, “By the word of the Lord the heavens were made.” Instructing a gentile is shevut, and there is no prohibition of shevut at twilight, unlike the Sabbath itself, when it is forbidden; specifically, at Israel’s direction. But concerning himself it is written, “They shall not cease,” and a gentile who ceased from work is liable to death.[TN150084] “In which someone other than us was not careful,” etc. One commentator explained that Enoch son of Jared strengthened the hands of transgressors to sacrifice, etc.—Heaven forbid. “This is what we are now discussing,” etc. The explanation: this requires examination—how did he establish festivals for them, when a gentile who ceased from work is liable to death? Yet it is possible that he established festivals for them only to rejoice, not to cease from work. “In the supernal roots”—where the qelippot have the place of their azharah, that is, their shining, above in holiness. Only below, with their expansion downward, are they born for toil, so that they should not cease. For at first it arose in His will to create the qelippot, but when He saw that they would destroy the world, they were therefore concealed and returned to their root. Thought is supernal Hokhmah; there they were concealed. But after the expansion of the worlds, the qelippot became thickened, and there they have power to carry out their acts. This is “Their prohibition”: their radiance is from thought, supernal Hokhmah; there is their death, their nullification. And what is the reason? The utterance concerning them, which depends on supernal thought—see the Zohar on Bereshit, page 15—is shevut. “Until Noah,” etc. The explanation: it implies that before this it was permitted to cease from work. “This does not mean,” etc. “All kept the Sabbath,” etc. For the patriarchs fulfilled the entire Torah, even an eruv of cooked foods. “For a small moment I abandoned you,” etc. The explanation: in[?] the moment of twilight, in the creation of the harmful beings; at the instant the Sabbath begins, “With great mercies,” with the holiness of the Sabbath day, in which there is a shelter of peace, namely the Shekhinah. “I shall gather you”: a slaughtering place was created for them, as above. “In which there is a shelter of peace,” etc. See[?] the Zohar on Bereshit, page 189: “Come and see: when the day is sanctified on the eve of the Sabbath, the shelter of peace rests.” See there.[TN150085]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 13

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 14 (יד)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“A great principle,” etc. After explaining the creation of the harmful beings, the master likewise concludes his exposition concerning a transgression for its own sake and a commandment not for its own sake. This follows from God’s deeds in creating the harmful beings, as he mentioned in chapter 9. Here he says that we too should act thus, being commanded to resemble Him, blessed be He, as they, of blessed memory, said concerning

Rema of Fano

The Torah stated a great principle: “You shall walk in His ways.” In the law of a borrower it is written: “Its owner is not with him”—that is, at the time of borrowing—“he shall surely repay,” even if he was with him at the time of the event. If its owner is with him at the time of borrowing, even if he was not with him at the time of the event, he shall not repay. The parallel is that every act done for its own sake, even if it is not desirable in itself, is called “Its owner is with him” in thought. It resembles the creation of the harmful beings, of which, as it were, it is said, “Its owner is not

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

“You shall walk in His ways.” In the course of this[?], he brings the laws of Heaven.[TN150089]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“In the law of a borrower.” It is written in the portion Mishpatim: “Its owner is not with him: he shall surely repay. If its owner is with him, he shall not repay.” In Bava Metzia we establish that this means at the time of borrowing, which is at the time of the work, not at the time it breaks or dies.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"At the time of the event." At the time it breaks or dies.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"The parallel." In the performance of commandments.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Even if it is not desirable." Being itself a transgression.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"In thought." Although not at the time of the act.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"It resembles the creation of the harmful beings." Which is a transgression for its own sake, as mentioned above, chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Of which, as it were, it is said"—that its owner is with him in thought, but not at the time of the act. Since it was undesirable, it was not completed, and the creation remained deficient and inferior, as above, in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Therefore." Likewise, one who commits a transgression for its own sake should walk in his Maker's ways and diminish the extent of the transgression as far as possible; he should not complete the transgression. For if he completes it, he does two things for the worse: he completes the transgression and nullifies the creation of the harmful with him" at the time of the act, since it is an inferior creation. Therefore he should not complete it, as it is written: "Do not say, 'I shall complete evil.'"[TN150086] From this we learn to save the pursued by means of one of the pursuer's limbs, wherever it is possible to choose the lesser evil. But every act not done for its own sake, even in the performance of commandments, has not its owner with him, for the beginning of thought is the end of action. Even though He is with him at the time of the act, since the commandment makes Him present to some degree, in the sense of its name, this commandment certainly requires a double repayment: a person must devote himself another time to fulfilling it for its own sake, in the sense of "From not for its own sake, he comes to for its own sake." Know this. If he did not do so, it would have been better for him not to have been created, or for his placenta to have turned over his face. Understand it, so that you will need neither the Tosafot's objections nor their answers. Now, the man who commits a transgression for its own sake, such as one who kills a pursuer in order to save a betrothed maiden, has a parallel for it in the ways of the Omnipresent. But for a commandment not done for its own sake there is no parallel at all in His deeds—far be it from God. If so, it is a grave transgression in the hand of the one who performs it. This is what people say: "Prayer without intention is like a body without a soul," which imparts severe impurity. Prayer without intention likewise arouses accusation, for the Shekhinah does not rest upon what is defective; consequently, beings, contrary to the intention. As stated in the Zohar, Miqqets, ʿWN[?] 445, on the verse "Do not say, 'I shall complete evil,'" in these words: "Come and see: therefore there is a good inclination and an evil inclination in Israel. They must strengthen the good inclination over the evil inclination through the direction of a person's deeds. If a person turns to the left, the evil inclination then gains strength over the good inclination. And whoever was deficient on this side, he consumed it[?] on this side; for this is not completed through that except through human sins. Therefore a person must take care that that evil inclination not become complete through his crookedness[?], and that he turn away[?] continually. For the good inclination must be continually brought to completeness, not the evil inclination. Therefore, 'Do not say, "I shall complete evil."'"[TN150090]

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

"From this we learn," etc. For saving the pursued through the pursuer's body is a transgression for its own sake. Wherever it is possible to save him by one of the pursuer's limbs, one must not say, "I shall complete evil."

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Even in the performance of commandments." It is called "Its owner is not with him," because of thought, which we follow, for it is the end of action.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

"The commandment makes present"—its owner.

Yad Yehudah - יג

It indicates this: that he is at the time of the commandment.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"In the sense of its name." The name mitzvah, "commandment."

Yad Yehudah - טו

"This commandment," etc. That is, although[?] such a commandment, not for its own sake, certainly requires repayment: he must complete the commandment on another occasion, so that the whole intention is for its own sake.[TN150091]

Yad Yehudah - טז

"In the sense"—of what our Sages, of blessed memory, said in the chapter The Place Where They Were Accustomed, folio 50b: "A person should always occupy himself with Torah and commandments, even not for their own sake; for from not for its own sake he comes to for its own sake." The intention is that, since he performed it not for its own sake, if that commandment did not come into his hand another time, he must reincarnate and come into this world to perform that commandment for its own sake.

Rema of Fano - continued

something impure has permission to rest there.

There is no doubt that Adam had intercourse and repeated it on the eve of the Sabbath, for a woman does not conceive from the first act of intercourse. Thus it is written, "The man knew Eve," and afterward, "She conceived," from the second intercourse. Through this, sexual desire was released for him. At first it had been bound by the cords of intellect, fettered by the bonds of upright nature, which causes a love of delights for our Father in Heaven. Once that desire was released from its bonds and its guard, it caused him to heed his wife's voice. So it is with the matter Rav Huna taught us, which we mentioned in chapter 9. All 365 prohibitions in the Torah guard those who guard them, and the evil inclination is bound within them by a permanent, double knot, in the sense of "My name," shemi, together with Y.H.: 365, besides what we mentioned from Rabbi Ibn Ezra's words in Part I, at the end of chapter 11. [TN150087] When a person committed one transgression, half the knot was loosened, on the side of matter, which was damaged by that act. Once he repeated it, the entire knot was immediately loosened, for the soul was weakened and the intellect corrupted. The masters of aggadah likened it to a vicious dog bound in fetters: the one who transgresses and repeats it releases it and sets it upon himself. His legal status is that he has not even grounds for complaint against the dog's owner.

Alternatively, Rav Huna means this: it has been released for him, and he will have to give an account for it. He himself

Yad Yehudah - יז

"If he did not do so"—in a second incarnation—"it would have been better for him not to have been created" on that occasion.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Or it would have been better for his placenta to have turned," etc. As stated in the Jerusalem Talmud, beginning of the first chapter, P.L.ʻ.[?]: "One who learns in order not to act—it would have been better for him not to have been created." Rabbi Yohanan said: "One who learns in order not to act—it would have been better for his placenta to have turned over his face, and for him not to have emerged into the air of the world." The master teaches us that "One who learns in order not to act" there means one who learns not for its own sake, unlike their explanation in the Tosafot there. See there. [TN150092]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Understand it, so that you will not need," etc. In the chapter He Was Reading we say that, if he acted not for its own sake, it would have been better for him not to have been created. The Tosafot objected from that passage in Pesahim in which R.L.[?] said: "A person should always occupy himself with Torah and commandments, even not for their own sake." They wrote that the former concerns someone who studies only to provoke,

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

whereas there in Pesahim it concerns someone who studies so that people will honor him. The master says there is no need to make this distinction: R.L. [?] in Pesahim teaches that, if he performed a commandment not for its own sake, he must reincarnate and repair it. The chapter He Was Reading concerns someone who, even in reincarnation, did not repair it: it would have been better for him not to have been created or to have come into the world, etc.[TN150093]

Yad Yehudah - כ

“Now, the man,” etc. That is, this is why our Sages, of blessed memory, said: “A transgression for its own sake is greater than a commandment not for its own sake.” A transgression for its own sake has a parallel in the ways of the Omnipresent, blessed be He, namely the creation of the harmful beings, as mentioned. This is not so applied this verse to him in the chapter These May Shave: “Weep bitterly for the one who goes away, for he shall never return and see the land of his birth.” Here is a great admonition to one who is content with lawlessness. This is what his companions said to Job: “If your children sinned against Him, He delivered them into the hand of their transgression.” Alternatively, it has been released for him so that he may be judged for an evil thought, which from now on is joined to his act. Alternatively, it has been released for him so that, even if on another occasion he sits and does not transgress it, he receives a reward only like one who is not commanded and acts, until he returns in complete repentance and accepts upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of Heaven. Henceforth, one who repeats his folly should be anxious all his days, since he has inclined himself toward that forbidden disposition as though it were entirely permitted. This is the second wording we mentioned from the Gemara, which comes as an adjunct to the first; both are true, altogether righteous.[TN150088] with a commandment not for its own sake, which has no parallel at all, Heaven forbid, in His ways, blessed be He.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

Yad Yehudah - כא

“This is what people say,” etc. For prayer without intention is a commandment not for its own sake.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Without intention,” etc. The reason for the comparison is that prayer without intention, like an actual dead body, causes impurity to rest there, since it arouses accusations, as explained in the Beit Yosef, in Orah Hayyim.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Something impure.” As explained in the Tiqqunim concerning invalid prayer, which returns to a dog—may the Merciful One deliver us.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“There is no doubt,” etc. Above, in chapter ʿ.[?], the master began explaining

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

Rav Huna’s saying: “Whoever commits a transgression and repeats it, it becomes released for him.” By way of introduction, he said there that Adam’s intercourse, which was a commandment not for its own sake, caused the evil inclination to enter him. Incidentally, he expounded at length concerning a commandment not for its own sake. Now he returns to explaining the aforementioned saying. He says that Adam stumbled and repeated it; both caused his upright nature to be corrupted. At first intercourse was in him only for the preservation of the species, not as bodily desire, for desire was bound by a permanent knot to his nature, which was intellectual. This caused supernal love and union, blessed be He. Now, when he repeated his intercourse not for its own sake, desire was released from the knot and became free, as a sign[?] of the powers toward the corporeal[?]. This was apparent from his heeding his wife’s voice in eating the fruit.[TN150094]

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

Yad Yehudah - כה

“So it is with the matter,” etc. That is, just as it was with Adam, whose knot was released through transgressing and repeating it, so Rav Huna’s statement applies to every person: “Whoever commits a transgression and repeats it, it becomes released for him.” The intention is that the knot by which the evil inclination is bound is released for him, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - כה - continued

Yad Yehudah - כו

“Which is double.” As stated concerning “One who bends[?] a permanent knot,” with regard to the Sabbath.[TN150095]

Yad Yehudah - כז

“In the sense of ‘My name’ together with Y.H.” It is double, for each one is the Name YHWH, numerically 325[?], as stated in the Zohar, Ki Tetse, page TQLM[?], in these words: “This verse: ‘This is My name’—Y.H.—‘forever, and this is My remembrance’—W.H. ‘My name,’ shemi, with Y.H. is 365; ‘My remembrance,’ zikhri, with W.H. is 248; all of them, 613.”[TN150096]

Yad Yehudah - כח

Etc. Besides what Rabbi Ibn Ezra wrote there: man has twice 365 sinews, the pulsating and the non-pulsating. Corresponding to these, according to what the master wrote above, Part I, chapter 18, the 365 prohibitions are likewise doubled: one in the aspect of “Turn away from evil,” in its plain sense, and the second with the intention of “Do good,” to remove the evil inclination. This is as here.[TN150097]

Yad Yehudah - כט

“When a person committed,” etc. That is why the matter depends on transgressing and repeating it: through one transgression he loosened half the knot, on the side of the body; when he repeated it, he loosened the other half, on the side of the intellect.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“To a vicious dog,” etc. The wording of the Raʿaya Mehemna, portion Pinehas, page 439, in these words: “The letter yod of Shaddai is a link of the chain upon the neck of the demon, shed, the evil inclination, so that it should not bite a person. Of it David said: ‘Deliver my soul from the sword, my only one from the power of a dog.’” See there.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“His legal status”—as in the Mishnah, chapter 2 of Bava Qamma: one who sets the dog upon himself, for whom the dog’s owner is exempt, as long as there is a grievance against him[?].[TN150098]

Yad Yehudah - לב

If so, “It has been released for him” can be interpreted in other ways: it has truly been released for him, since by repeating it he completely threw off the yoke of that transgression. Nevertheless, he will have to give an account for it. The objector who asked, “Could you think it has become permitted for him?” supposed that it had become wholly permitted, without punishment. The answer is: “It has become for him as though permitted,” for he is content with lawlessness, as though he had no punishment.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“He himself,” etc. That is, he extended the interpretation from what Rav Huna said in the Gemara, in the chapter These May Shave, folio 27b, on the verse “Weep bitterly for the one who goes away, for he shall never return.” Who is this? One who committed a transgression and repeated it. We say in the Gemara: “Rav Huna follows his own reasoning, for Rav Huna said: ‘Once he committed a transgression and repeated it,’” etc. Thus “It has been released for him” means that he is content with lawlessness and does not wish to return. There is no need for what the Ran wrote: “‘For he shall never return’—they do not instruct him in repentance.”

Yad Yehudah - לד

“Here is a great admonition.” For he made the punishment worse[?] for one who casts off the yoke.[TN150099]

Yad Yehudah - לה

“This is,” etc. For apparently there is a difficulty in this verse: it begins with sin and ends with transgression. But according to what we said, it means: if they sinned, and it was reckoned to them on the first occasion as inadvertent, nevertheless “He delivered them” afterward “into the hand of their transgression”—on the second occasion, which is reckoned as intentional.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“For an evil thought.” Ordinarily this is not joined to an act. But in this case, where he transgressed and repeated it, the transgression became released for him, and he removes awareness of it from his heart, as with a gentile, punishment applies even to thought, as stated in the first chapter of Qiddushin, from the Tosafot. We wrote of this above, Part II, chapter 23.

Yad Yehudah - לז

“Alternatively.” Ordinarily, anyone who sits and does not commit a transgression receives a reward as though he had performed a commandment. But in this case it has been released for him, as though he were not commanded, in the sense that he receives a reward for refraining from transgression only like one who is not commanded and performs a commandment.

Yad Yehudah - לח

“This is the second wording.” That if[?] twice, it becomes for him as though permitted.[TN150100]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Every act.” That is, a transgression for its own sake: even if it is not desirable in itself because it is a transgression, it is called “Its owner is with him” because of the thought for its own sake, for its own sake; it resembles the creation of the harmful beings. “Therefore he should not complete it”: he should not finish and actually perform the transgression, as with a pursuer—he should not kill him completely, but save him by one of his limbs, to diminish the transgression in every possible way. “To choose the lesser evil.” Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, created the harmful beings, which pursue the human soul, and created an inferior creation, without a body, which is a transgression for its own sake. For through the act of transgression the accuser’s body is made; its owner is with him at the time of thought. “But every act”—that is, a commandment not for its own sake—is called “Its owner is not with him,” even at the time of performing the commandment. “The commandment makes Him present.” That is, it makes its owner, the Holy One, blessed be He, present with him. Nevertheless, this is not called “Its owner is with him,” for the beginning of thought is the end of action, and it is not for its own sake. This is what he says[?]: he must complete, repair and fulfill the commandment for its own sake. This is double repayment. “From not for its own sake.” That is, he must reincarnate another time to fulfill it for its own sake. If he did not do so, and did not repair it in a second incarnation, it would have been better for him not to have been created. [TN150101] “Or for his placenta to have turned,” etc. In the manner of Midrash Rabbah, portion Reʾeh: the harmful beings have a covering[?] and a placenta over their faces, so that they will not harm Israel. If this person does not repair matters by fulfilling the commandment for its own sake, it would have been better for him, etc., to have become a transgression for its own sake; for a transgression for its own sake is greater than a commandment not for its own sake. This refers to the harmful beings, which are a transgression for its own sake, as above, and have a placenta over their faces. This is “It would have been better for his placenta to have turned over his face.” Maharal, N.Q. Concerning this secret he said, “Understand it.”[TN150102] “The Tosafot’s objections and answers,” etc. The explanation: they objected that on one occasion it says, “A person should always occupy himself with Torah, even not for its own sake, for from,” etc., and on another it says, “It would have been better for him not to have been created.” According to the author’s words there is no difficulty at all: at first he should occupy himself even not for its own sake, “For from,” etc.; but when he has reincarnated and does not repair matters by fulfilling it for its own sake, it would have been better for him not to have been created. “A parallel in the ways of the Omnipresent.” That is, He performed a transgression for its own sake, like the creation of the harmful beings. “By the cords of intellect,” etc. This is the soul. The explanation: although he had intercourse at first, it was not from sexual desire, but to fulfill the commandment. Afterward, when he performed a commandment not for its own sake, the knot was released. This is precisely: “He committed a transgression and repeated it: it has been released for him.” “Into the hand of their transgression.” That is, into the hand of the accuser himself. “Upright nature.” This is the body.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 14

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 15 (טו)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יח · יט

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“Known and established.” The statement of Resh Laqish in the second chapter of Eruvin and at the end of Hagigah: “The fire of Gehinnom does not rule over the transgressors of Israel, by an inference from the golden altar,” etc. The Tosafot wrote in these words: “It seems to me that this does not concern those who transgress with their bodies, for we say in Rosh Hashanah: ‘Those of Israel who transgress with their bodies—Gehinnom comes to an end, but they do not come to an end.’ Rather, it speaks of those who transgress to some extent.” The master does not distinguish between those who transgress with their bodies and other transgressors; rather, he holds that in all of them the fire of Gehinnom does not rule so as to consume them utterly—Heaven forbid. This is what they, of blessed memory, said: “They do not come to an end,” for they will be repaired in the future, as will be explained below, chapter 5, chapter 6[?]. Nevertheless, they all descend to Gehinnom: some for fright alone, and some are scorched. This is what they said in Rosh Hashanah concerning those who transgress with their bodies: “Their soul is burned”—not that it is burned utterly, but it is scorched and judged through severe afflictions according to the measure of the sin.[TN150105]

Rema of Fano

We return to those who descend to Gehinnom, with whom we began in chapter 2. It is known and established that the fire of Gehinnom does not rule over the transgressors of Israel so as to consume them—Heaven forbid. Rather, they descend for fright alone; some are scorched according to their acts and the evil of their deeds. Then Abraham descends, who fulfilled all the commandments and went down into the fire of the Chaldeans for the sanctification of the Name. Through his merit he brings them up, to fulfill what was promised at the covenant between the pieces: the Holy One, blessed be He, showed him Gehinnom and the kingdoms so that he would choose the exiles for his descendants. Adam was an example for him, for they did what was good for him: they sentenced him to being sent outside the Garden of Eden and driven from climate to climate. Our fathers, too, were sentenced to being sent outside the Land and driven away—from Pharaoh to Abimelech, and from Laban’s house to Egypt. The exiles of Jerusalem were likewise sent outside the Land and driven from Babylon to Elam, and so in the other exiles, in the sense of “For they took flight; they also wandered.” It was not enough that natsu—meaning they wandered far away, from the expression “The hawk takes wing”—but they also wandered from place to place. Or natsu may refer to those cast away, the ten tribes; “They also wandered,” to those dispersed

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Then Abraham descends.” As stated in the second chapter of Eruvin concerning the saying of Resh Laqish: “But what of that which is written, ‘Those passing through the valley of weeping’? These are those who are liable at that hour to Gehinnom, and our father Abraham comes and brings them up,” etc. The master says that our father Abraham’s merit in having descended into the fire of the Chaldeans is certainly sufficient to bring them up from the fire of Gehinnom, measure for measure, in addition to his having fulfilled the entire Torah, as they, of blessed memory, said.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“To fulfill,” etc. Therefore Abraham strove in this more than anyone else.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“So that he would choose,” etc. This accords with the one who says in Bereshit Rabbah, portion Lekh Lekha: “He chose the kingdoms for himself.” The master says that, from the outset, His intention, blessed be He, in showing him both was that Abraham should choose the kingdoms. For, since the Holy One, blessed be He, was an example for him, he would certainly learn from Him; and so he did.[TN150106]

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Driven from climate.” Therefore, after writing “He sent him away,” it further said, “He drove out the man.”

Yad Yehudah - ו

“In the sense”—of what Scripture says: “For they took flight,” etc. (Lamentations 4).

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Meaning, they wandered far away.” Natsu is an expression of flight, like “The hawk takes wing.”

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Or it may mean,” etc. Incidentally, the master explains the expression in other ways.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Because of strife,” etc. From the expression of quarreling, as in the Targum: “To the south[?], not to quarrel[?].”[TN150107]

Yad Yehudah - י

“In the sense”—of what Scripture says (Isaiah 40): “Doubles,” which are two doublings, namely four times.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“To four worlds.” A.B.Y.ʿ.

Rema of Fano - continued

through many displacements, Judah and Benjamin. Or it may be from the expression “Its blossom came up”: at the beginning of their sprouting they were moving and wandering, and the land vomited them out. Alternatively, they went into exile because of strife, as in the Targum.[TN150103] The exiles were four, as is known, in the sense of “Doubles for all her sins”: the first doubling is two simple units, and doubling the doubling makes four. This was “For all her sins,” for the rebellions reached four worlds, which are likewise counted two by two: Atsilut and Beriah separately, Yetsirah and Asiyah separately.

The Holy One, blessed be He, commanded our father Abraham, peace be upon him, to prepare for Him a symbolic act with the beautiful heifer, Egypt, and with the destroyers of the House on the first and second occasions. These were likened to small livestock, easily subdued; likewise, these are easily subdued for us, if we merit through the Torah that is now in exile with us. It was not so in Egypt. They came threefold because they resembled one another in evil thought. “He divided them in the middle,” for another broke the staff of the wicked.[TN150104] But the bird wandering from its nest he did not divide—the allusion is to Israel, who endure forever. They came under two names, “turtledove” and “young bird,” corresponding to Judah and Ephraim. “The bird of prey descended”: this is a company of ministering angels who sought to consume the pieces, namely the carcasses he mentioned, so that they would not enslave us—just as they “Two by two.” That is, two doublings. For this reason he also wrote the world of Atsilut, although sins do not damage it, as will be explained below, Part IV, chapter 14; nevertheless, they damage the first double.

Yad Yehudah - יב

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Likewise, to Abraham,” etc. Incidentally, the master interprets the account of the covenant between the pieces. He says that “Take for Me a heifer” corresponded to the exile of Egypt, “a beautiful heifer”; a goat and a ram corresponded to the nations that destroyed the first and second Houses. All this was a symbolic act. For this reason the allusion also came specifically through animals, so that they should be easily subdued.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Through the Torah revealed from him[?].” As stated in the holy Tiqqunim; see there.[TN150108]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“They came threefold.” A threefold heifer, a threefold goat, and a threefold ram: an allusion that in each one there is a resemblance to the other two things.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“Which is a collective noun.” The word “them” refers to “the bird of prey”: although it is singular, since it is a collective noun and a company, it is fitting to say “them” of it in the plural, as with the word “people” and the like. Thus there is no need for Rabbi Abraham Ibn Ezra’s correction, who wrote: “‘He drove away’—he sent away from the carcasses”; or he turned the carcasses to drive away the bird of prey.

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

“To prepare an aspect of sustenance.” That is, the allusion concerns those of whom they, of blessed memory, said in every case that they are judged for generations upon generations, whose minimum is four, as will be explained.

Rema of Fano - continued

accused Ishmael when he was parched with thirst. “Abram drove them away”: for the time being he made that bird of prey fly off. This is a collective noun, like “people,” “flock,” “bird,” and their like, for he wished to hear what the Lord would command concerning those carcasses. Then, between the evenings, He showed him “a dread, a great darkness, falling upon him,” as long as the carcasses existed. He made known to him the first exile, of four hundred years, bounded by the fourth generation, to prepare an aspect of repair even for those judged for generations upon generations—namely for four generations—and the rest from that point onward, so that they will be repaired.[TN150109]

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

“As he explained.” In Part V, chapter 8; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Because of strife,” etc. That is, the Targum of natsu is strife. “In the sense of ‘Doubles,’” etc. This implies two doublings, and each doubling is two: thus four. “According to all her sins,” etc. For these likewise reach the four worlds,

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

A.B.Y.ʿ., counted two by two: A.B.Y.ʿ.—Father and Mother, which are Y.H., namely Atsilut and Beriah; and Zeʿir and Nuqva, namely W.H., corresponding to Yetsirah and Asiyah. As the Zohar says: “Bare, bare”—evil, raʿ, between the attachments of Y.H. and between the attachments of W.H. These are four letters corresponding to the four A.B.Y.ʿ. [TN150110] “With the beautiful heifer,” etc. That is, at the covenant between the pieces: a threefold heifer, a threefold goat, a threefold ram, a turtledove and a young bird, etc. A calf corresponds to Egypt. In the Tiqqunim, New Tiqqunim, folio 12[?]: in Egypt they would occupy themselves not for its own sake, in these words: “There are those who do not occupy themselves with the Oral Torah for its own sake, and of them it is said: ‘They embittered their lives with hard labor’—this is a difficulty; ‘with mortar’—this is an inference from lesser to greater.” See there; end of quotation. [TN150111] The goat and ram, which are small livestock, correspond to the two kingdoms that destroyed the first and second Houses. They were likened to small livestock, easily subdued if we occupy ourselves with Torah, unlike in Egypt, where they had not yet received the Torah. “They came threefold,” etc. The explanation: he took threefold from each species because the three kingdoms resemble one another in evil thought, and each includes the other two. “God broke the staff of the wicked”: this is the allusion in his dividing them in the middle.[TN150112] “They came”—that is, Israel —“under two names, turtledove and young bird.” “For the time being he made it fly off.” For Abraham chose the kingdoms for himself, not Gehinnom; he therefore made them fly off. “The bird of prey” is a collective noun for a company of angels, like “people,” “flock,” and “bird.” Moreover, “The bird of prey descended,” vayered ha-ʿayit, has the numerical value of Metatron, who is Enoch son of Jared; this is vayered. “Whose minimum is four,” etc. The explanation: the minimum of d.r. is two; “generations” gives another two: thus four. [TN150113]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 15

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 16 (טז)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"He showed him," etc. This is "And behold, a smoking furnace and a flaming torch," an allusion to the two parts of Gehinnom: its cavity, created before the world, and its fire, created on the second day, as stated in chapter Maqom she-Nahagu.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"For it is written," etc. In the Gemara, chapter Osin Passin: "Gehinnom has three entrances," etc.; and the school of Rabbi Ishmael taught: "'Whose fire is in Zion'—this is Gehinnom; 'and whose furnace is in Jerusalem'—this is its entrance." The master interprets it of the fire and its cavity.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Which we explained": the intention is to heighten the astonishment that Satan should be able to prevail against his opposite in Jerusalem, the holy city; see there. Here too it says, "And whose furnace is in Jerusalem"—even in Jerusalem, the city of righteousness. The reason is that the Holy One, blessed be He, is thus exacting with the righteous to a hair's breadth, as our Rabbis expounded concerning "Around Him it storms exceedingly."

Rema of Fano

"And the sun had set": at the beginning of the night He showed him the judgment of Gehinnom, both its cavity, which is a smoking furnace, and its fire, which is a flaming torch. Of these it is written, "Whose fire is in Zion and whose furnace is in Jerusalem," in the sense of "He who chooses Jerusalem," which we explained in chapter 7 of Part II, for "around Him it storms exceedingly." From there it is destined to be purified, as will be explained. He passed a spark of Gehinnom between the pieces, to destroy them forever; in His abundant lovingkindness He intimated to the elder that it is better for us to serve Egypt than to descend into the pit and remain immersed there, Heaven forbid. Rather, all descend merely to be alarmed, as we mentioned.

All the more is this so in conjunction with the Ari's exposition, may the memory of the righteous be for a blessing, of the verse "He brings down to Sheol and raises up." He said that there are wholly righteous people who stumble through thoughts of transgression, which none but He, blessed be He, who examines kidneys and heart, recognizes in them. There are also wholly wicked people who entertain repentance in their hearts amid the crushing of the soul; the secrets of their hearts are revealed to none but the LORD alone. Now a cruel messenger is

Yad Yehudah - ד

"From there it is destined to be purified": that is, the intention also concerns the purification of Gehinnom, which will take place in Jerusalem, as will be explained below in Part V, chapter 5; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"He passed": the blessed Name.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Rather, all descend," etc. Having completed the exposition of the covenant between the pieces, the master returns to what he said above, at the beginning of the preceding chapter: "Rather, they descend merely for a fright."

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Amid the crushing of the soul": at the time of death.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Against the first people we mentioned": these are the righteous who stumbled through evil thoughts.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"He brings down to Sheol those righteous people": like what appears in the Zohar, portion Pinhas, page 405: "Even wholly righteous people descend there. Why do they descend there? Because they take several guilty people from there and bring them up above." See there, for it is close to this subject.

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

"Indeed," etc. The master now concludes what he began in chapter 2 and returned to in chapter 8. He says that these three—one who goes in to his neighbor's wife, one who publicly humiliates his fellow, and one who gives him a bad name—do not descend because, in view of the severity of their punishment, strict justice requires that if they descended they would not ascend [gap] of Gehinnom altogether. Therefore the One abundant in lovingkindness has dealt very generously with them, so that they do not descend. Instead, a band of evil angels is sent against them to exact payment from them. For although Gehinnom is suspended for them, its judgment is not suspended. [TN120001]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Tosafot there raised an objection." Their words are: "'Except for three who descend and do not ascend': this cannot mean that they do not ascend to the world to come, since shortly afterward we say that one who goes in to his neighbor's wife has a share in the world to come. Rather, this is its meaning: all who descend ascend immediately, and Gehinnom's fire does not rule over them, as stated in sent against them, to bring them down to the pit of destruction according to their deeds and the evil of their acts. Against the first people we mentioned, however, there is neither adversary nor evil occurrence. Yet the Rock's work is perfect: He brings down to Sheol those righteous people who harbored thoughts of iniquity; and, so as not to put them to shame, He decrees that they bring up from there those who entertained repentance in their hearts. There is no greater instance of judgment accompanied by righteousness than this.

Rema of Fano - continued

Indeed, all who descend ascend, apart from the three whom Rabbi Hanina specified and excluded from the general rule. Because of the gravity of their iniquity, it would be fitting for Gehinnom's fire to rule over them and consume them, from soul to flesh. But the One abundant in lovingkindness does not desire this. Therefore Gehinnom is suspended for them, though the judgment of Gehinnom is not suspended: the Holy One, blessed be He, carries out His commission through everything, for His camp is very great.

Tosafot there, in chapter Ha-Zahav, raised an objection from David's saying to those who hated his soul: "One who goes in to his neighbor's wife is put to death by strangulation and has a share in the world to come; one who publicly whitens his fellow's face has no share in the world to come." They answered in their own way. What emerges from their words is that the three do not ascend immediately, and in this they are alike; but some of them never ascend at all, chapter Osin Passin through an inference a fortiori from the golden altar—apart from three who do not ascend immediately. But some of them are judged forever, as in the case of one who publicly humiliates his fellow, of whom we say shortly afterward that he has no share in the world to come."

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Therefore they did not descend": this is not part of Tosafot's words. Rather, the master establishes it as a necessary consequence of Tosafot's view, according to his aforementioned approach: since, if they descended, they would not ascend, they therefore do not descend.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"On our account," etc.: there is no difficulty at all. "Apart from three" concerns the reason itself, whereas David is speaking in relation to repentance [gap] repents. If he dies by the court's sentence, he confesses and returns; if he does not die by the court's sentence, as when he sinned without witnesses and prior warning, he nevertheless regrets it and repents because of the severity of the prohibition. He therefore has a share in the world to come, since nothing stands before repentance. This is not so with one who publicly humiliates his fellow: he regards the prohibition lightly and does not repent. [TN120002]

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1

“In the sense of ‘the one remaining in Jerusalem,’” etc.: Zion alludes to T.T., those distinguished in halakhah; likewise Jerusalem, fear and peace. They descend a little into Gehinnom, for “around Him it storms exceedingly,” and the Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting with the righteous to a hair’s breadth. “They intimated to the elder”: this is Abraham. “To serve Egypt”: that is, the kingdoms, in preference to Gehinnom. Although they descend there, as above, it is merely to be alarmed. “Against the first people”: the wholly righteous, who entertained some thought of transgression, face neither adversary nor evil occurrence. But they are brought down because of the aforementioned thought; and, so as not to put them to shame, namely the one who humiliates and the one who gives a disparaging name. Therefore they did not descend; rather, their judgment is that they neither live in the world to come nor are judged in Gehinnom. In truth this is only an ad hoc answer, and we do not rely on it. You may know this because in chapter Homer ba-Qodesh they answered differently, in a way far removed from what we have stated in their name.

Rema of Fano - continued

On our account, however, the objection has no basis. David means this: one who goes in to his neighbor’s wife is put to death by strangulation, and all who are put to death confess and have a share in the world to come. Even without witnesses and prior warning, he knows for himself that this is his sentence, since it is something even a schoolchild can read. He applies it to himself and remembers to repent. But publicly humiliating one’s fellow incurs no judicial death penalty; therefore one who stumbles in it regards it as a light iniquity, does not repent, and is driven from the world to come. May the Merciful One deliver us.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“conversion” [גיור?], etc. [TN120003]

“And there is no greater instance of judgment,” etc.: see the Zohar, Pinhas: “Even wholly righteous people die … [תיין?], because they take from there several living ones and bring them up above; and there they move them toward contemplating repentance.” [TN120004] “Therefore Gehinnom is suspended for them,” etc.: they do not descend to Gehinnom for this reason, as above in chapter 9. Although they do not descend to Gehinnom, its judgment is not suspended, for the Holy One, blessed be He, carries out His commission through everything, to exact payment from him. “And he has a share in the world to come,” etc.: surely all descend apart from these three—one who goes in to a married woman, one who humiliates, etc.—yet the distinction [?] is that this one has a share in the world to come, and this one has none.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 16

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 17 (יז)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“On that day,” etc. Avot, chapter 5: “Ten generations from Adam to Noah,” etc.; “ten generations from Noah to Abraham, to make known how long-suffering He is, for all the generations continued provoking Him until our father Abraham came and took upon himself the reward of them all.” The master says this took place at the covenant between the pieces, as will necessarily follow below.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“It is known,” etc.: for the expression above, “the reward of them all,” is puzzling [gap]. [TN120006]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Which also embraces,” etc.: that is, included in what our father Abraham, peace be upon him, rectified are the reward and worthiness of all the generations coming after him.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Rather than ‘their reward’”: this shows that “all” comes to include the reward of the coming generations. It cannot mean to include his also taking upon himself the reward of the ten generations from Adam to Noah, since obviously these require no special inclusion. Certainly, if he

Rema of Fano

On that day when the LORD made a covenant with our father Abraham between the pieces, he took upon himself the reward of all the generations preceding him. It is known that “Children are the LORD’s inheritance; the fruit of the womb is a reward.” Thus, as regards all the worthy people destined to issue from the descendants of twenty generations, Abraham’s righteousness testified on his behalf, and he took upon himself their reward, which also embraces the reward of all the generations coming after him. The wording is precise: it teaches “the reward of them all,” rather than “their reward.” For if the intention were to include those from Adam to Noah, no additional expression would be necessary: obviously he had to rectify the earlier ones first, since Noah was not capable of this, but through his righteousness saved only his own soul and the souls of his household.

Abraham, however, God made “a father of a multitude of nations”; the initial letters give av ha-gan, “father of the garden.” This means a father to everyone destined to merit the Garden of Eden, after he had atoned for all who descend to Gehinnom by descending into the fire of the Chaldeans. [TN120005] In both cases the soul of the first Adam was entrusted to his keeping. This is what they said: “He had a daughter, and her name was Bakol.” She is also the precious stone that hung at rectified the ten generations after Noah, all the more did he rectify those before him.

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Yad Yehudah - ה

“He was not capable of this”: he was not sufficiently righteous to rectify others. It was enough for him to deliver himself and his household.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Abraham, however,” merited this, for ... [?] the blessed Name said to him, “For I have made you a father of a multitude of nations.” That is, to rectify as the rectified [?], and not also [gap]. [TN120007]

Yad Yehudah - ז

[gap] for Abraham to bring merit to all the generations at the covenant between the pieces [gap] the first Adam’s soul, with all [gap] the souls of all the generations, as is known. Therefore he also descended into the fire of the Chaldeans [gap]. [TN120008]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“In his flight to the fire of the Chaldeans”: measure for measure. [TN120009]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“In both cases”: the reason Abraham merited to bring merit to all the generations at the covenant between the pieces and in descending into the fire of the Chaldeans was that the first Adam's soul was with him, the mother of all living, embracing the souls of all generations, as is known. He therefore also descended into the fire of the Chaldeans, as will be explained.

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

Yad Yehudah - י

This is what our Rabbis said: "Our father Abraham had a daughter, and her name was Bakol." They allude to the first Adam's soul. She descended with him—all who descend to Gehinnom—and they were likened to the fire of the Chaldeans; and here [gap]. [TN120010]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Which we have already mentioned": in chapter 2.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Everyone sick," etc.: the first Adam's sin also involved a trace of idolatry, as mentioned and as the master also says in Part II, chapter 22. This is the principal pollution that the serpent imparted to him and his descendants, until it ceased at Mount Sinai. Abraham was [gap], for he cast himself into the fire of the Chaldeans and was saved [gap] was healed of his heat. [TN120011]

Yad Yehudah - יג

"For such is his judgment," etc. Their saying is known: "There is no Gehinnom in the future. Rather, the Holy One, blessed be He, brings the sun out of its sheath; his neck, which is her place in the comprehensive stature, the measure of Adam that we have already mentioned; see the discourse Em Kol Hai, Part III, section 27. Everyone sick in soul who sees her in her purity is immediately healed of the iniquity of alien worship, a trace of which he acquired through the serpent's incitement. When Abraham died, the Holy One, blessed be He, hung her in the sun's sphere. For such is the judgment of one sick in soul, as stated, and his healing remains suspended until that day when the Holy One, blessed be He, brings the sun out of its sheath. The wicked are judged by it: this is in exchange for their worship of it and their inflaming themselves through its power for all human sins—murder and adultery. The righteous are healed by it, for it testifies on their behalf to declare their uprightness.

Rema of Fano - continued

When our father Abraham, peace be upon him, sought mercy for Sodom, he said, "I am dust and ashes." "Dust" means from the first formation, which had joined him as stated; "ashes," from the fire of the Chaldeans, through which he fulfilled in his own person "You shall burn the carved images of their gods with fire." This was because all creatures had wished to bow down to the first Adam, although he did not accept it. Their error followed from their eating of the tree of knowledge, which made them rebel against Heaven. The serpent and its rider had already imagined that they could cause Adam to rebel like themselves, Heaven forbid, in the sense of "You shall be like gods," meaning like this rider. Through the force of his

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

the wicked are judged by it, and the righteous are healed by it." The master says this is what they mean: "When Abraham died, the Holy One, blessed be He, hung the precious stone, which heals the illnesses of souls, in the sun's sphere." That is, his judgment and healing remain suspended until that day when He brings the sun out of its sheath.

Yad Yehudah - יד

In opposition to their worship of the sun [gap] below, concerning this. [TN120012]

Yad Yehudah - טו

"And the whitening," etc. [gap] other transgressions. [TN120013]

Yad Yehudah - טז

"When our father Abraham," etc.: because the first Adam's soul was in him, he said, "I am dust"—from the first formation, which was from dust—"and ashes," from the fire of the Chaldeans, by which he rectified it. Therefore he mentioned this merit in his prayer for Sodom.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"He fulfilled in his own person," etc.: in order to rectify Adam's soul, which was with him, for they had damaged it through idolatry. As stated in Raaya Mehemna, portion Behar, page 276: "For on account of this sin of Adam, who transgressed 'The LORD commanded,' etc.—and they established that 'command' means only idolatry," etc. [gap] "He entered the fire to burn himself, to fulfill in himself 'You shall burn the carved images of their gods with fire.' Not only this, but 'to the sons of Terah' [?] he returned in repentance," etc. "Thus he was whitened like silver in a furnace, and the refiner went outside—Ishmael," etc. "Afterward Isaac came [gap] bloodshed. This caused Isaac's marking [?] with repentance, Adam exercised kingship over all those coming to bow down solely to restore them to goodness, and for no other purpose. He immediately commanded and urged them: "I and you —come, let us bow down and bend the knee; let us kneel before the LORD our Maker." Therefore the first Adam merited that throughout all the years of his life there was no alien worship in the world, and Enosh did not err after it during his lifetime. We have already mentioned this at the beginning of the discourse Ha-Nefesh; consult there.

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

the knife; through him he was separated, like one who separates food from refuse, and the refuse went outside—Esau, a shedder of blood. Afterward Jacob came, and He placed him within Laban, and he became a servant to him. This is what is written: 'I shall serve you seven years for Rachel' [gap]." See the following chapter. [TN120014]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"From what they rectified," etc.: the idolatry that Adam practiced was not actual idolatry [gap]; rather, it was a trace of idolatry in the tree of knowledge, as our Rabbis expounded on "She took" [gap] into error, and they enticed Adam. [TN120015]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"And its rider": Samael, as stated in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer: Samael rode the serpent as a rider rides a horse.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Adam," etc.: as stated in the aforementioned midrash, in Yalqut on Psalms, concerning the verse "The LORD reigns"; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"He took upon himself the reward," etc.: this is the wording of the Mishnah, "Ten generations," etc., "until Abraham came and took upon himself the reward of them all." "Reward" refers to the fruit of the womb: Abraham took upon himself the rectification of these sparks of holiness—all the holy souls that were fit to issue from the ten generations, and also all those coming after him. Therefore it says "all." "For if those from Adam," etc.: one cannot say that "all" means Abraham rectified the ten generations from Adam to Noah. That is obvious, since Noah was not capable of rectifying others. Rather, he certainly also rectified the generations coming after him; these are included by the additional word "all," as above.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"A father of a multitude of nations He made him": the initial letters give av ha-gan, for everyone destined to merit the Garden of Eden. This means all the worthy people he mentioned, since he endured Gehinnom in the fire of the Chaldeans for all of them. "In both cases," etc.: both in the Garden of Eden and in Gehinnom, the first Adam's soul was with him, for Abraham rectified the first Adam, as will be explained. "Abraham had a daughter," etc.: the first Adam's soul, named Bakol, since the first Adam encompassed all the souls destined to exist from his measure. "At his neck, which is its place," etc.: Abraham hung at the first Adam's neck, which is his place, as explained in the midrash: Job in his hair, etc., David in his heels, etc. Therefore this precious stone hung at Abraham's neck.

"For such is the judgment of one sick," etc.: as stated in the Gemara, "There is no Gehinnom in the future. Rather, the Holy One, blessed be He, brings the sun out of its sheath; the wicked are judged by it, and the righteous are healed by it." This is "He hung her in the sun's sphere." "Their worship of it," etc.: they worship the sun. "He fulfilled in his own person 'the carved images of their gods,'" etc.: they wished to say "Holy" before Adam, for ... [?] he was a god. Just as punishment is exacted from those who worship, etc., Abraham rectified this sin. See what is said above at the beginning of chapter 18; it belongs here. "The serpent and its rider," etc.: as explained in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer, Samael rode the serpent as a rider rides a horse, etc. The rider is Samael, and this is “You shall be like gods.” [TN120016]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 17

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 18 (יח)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“When Isaac was bound,” etc. In the preceding chapter the master explained that our father Abraham rectified the first Adam’s nefesh, “which was ... his sin [?],” from the iniquity of the idolatry he had committed. Here it is included that Isaac rectified his ruah from the iniquity of bloodshed, and Jacob rectified his neshamah from the iniquity of forbidden sexual relations. [TN120017]

Yad Yehudah - ב

As stated in Raaya Mehemna, which we copied there.

Yad Yehudah - ג

It resembles the bloodshed the first Adam committed through the serpent’s incitement, in causing death for himself and for the generations.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The iniquity of forbidden sexual relations”: Adam sinned in the commandment of procreation by hastening to unite with his wife on a weekday, in the daytime, at the hour of the binding,

Rema of Fano

When Isaac was bound upon the altar, Adam’s spirit was bound with him, and his covenant with death was annulled with respect to the iniquity of bloodshed included in the serpent’s incitement. As for the iniquity of forbidden sexual relations, we have already mentioned that it was given an enacted likeness in Adam’s haste to unite with his wife. From this another mishap followed for him: for 130 years he begot nocturnal demons, spirits, and demons, as our Rabbis said, before establishing offspring to lay the world’s foundations from Eve, mistress of the household. For “she was the mother of all living”: these are the righteous, who live forever, as you say, “Which a person shall do and live.”

That iniquity was rectified through Jacob’s beauty, which resembled the first Adam’s beauty. What was entrusted to him was Adam’s neshamah, which went into exile with him to Haran when he went out to seek his lost possession. There two sisters were permitted to him in holiness, with preparation and great deliberation, the opposite of haste. The elder was taken in secret, hated, and weary through her husband’s service, on account of her exalted degree; the

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

the time when judgment grows strong, and publicly. All this was enacted as a likeness in King David, peace be upon him, who also acted hastily in heat with Bathsheba, as all this was mentioned above in chapters 9 and 10; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“From this,” etc.: that is, Esau transgressed forbidden sexual relations by casting two drops into an alien place, among the shells, in the aforementioned Raaya Mehemna. That means he begot offspring from Lilith. This mishap also followed from his sin of haste, which caused idolatry, “cutting off amiqin” [?], as above in chapter 8. Without this, Lilith would not have come into the world at all. [TN120018]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“As our Rabbis said”: in chapter Osin Passin. There it concludes that this came from semen that escaped him involuntarily.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Before establishing offspring”: the mishap also

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

arose through precedence, in that he begot offspring from Lilith before establishing offspring from Eve for the world's foundation.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"These are the righteous": the master designates Eve by the expression "mother of all living," meaning the mother of all the righteous, who are called living.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"And there" [?], etc.: Jacob rectified this iniquity, as mentioned in Raaya Mehemna. The rectification was incumbent on him because the first Adam's neshamah had been entrusted to him; concerning it our Rabbis said, "Jacob's beauty resembled the first Adam's beauty." All this was when he married his wives, as the conclusion explains. [TN120019]

Yad Yehudah - י

"To seek his lost possession": to marry Leah.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"With preparation": and extensive preparation, through his service to Laban for them.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"And great deliberation": all those years he served; he was also eighty-four years old.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"The opposite of haste": the first Adam's haste, which was rectified through this.

Rema of Fano - continued

younger, openly, for she was fitting for him. From this one can understand Jeremiah's saying, "For I have been a father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn." Reuben was Jacob's firstborn in deed, and Joseph was the firstborn in relation to Heaven, because of the thought.

Likewise, "I am Esau your firstborn," which they interpreted as "I and Esau," just as "sun, moon." How so? The Sages explained it by a parable of a tube of reeds: Jacob entered first, and Esau opened the womb. Yet this is challenged by what is said in the Zohar at the end of the portion Metzora: Esau was the first drop, so that Isaac's seed might first be separated from the dross of gold. This seems supported by Abraham's first being refined through Ishmael's issuing from him when he was eighty-six years old, when judgment prevailed over him from the name Elohim, whose numerical value is the number of his years at that time. Nevertheless, the parable is true of the chain of lineage above: Jacob's soul was emanated first, and he is the firstborn in relation to Heaven, in the sense of "Israel is My son, My firstborn." In the corporeal realm Esau was Isaac's firstborn even in insemination, according to the Zohar, and he also opened the womb. Thus all the Sages' words stand.

Zilpah, Leah's maidservant, was likewise given to Jacob secretly, as it is written, "She took" and "she gave." Leah did not first consult Jacob as Sarah and Rachel did. This is the sense of bagad, which Leah said: the transmitted spelling is

Yad Yehudah - יד

"In secret": he did not know of her. Through this, the publicity of the first Adam's intercourse was rectified.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"And weary": he interprets Leah's name through weariness.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Through her husband's service": he served seven years before the marriage, unlike the case with Rachel. All this was on account of Leah's exalted degree, as stated in the Zohar, portion Vayetze, page 397: "'The LORD saw that Leah was hated': was she indeed hated? Surely the sons of a hated woman are not worthy sons; yet we see that all these worthy sons came from Leah, and you say 'Leah was hated'! Rather, Jubilee is always the concealed world; its matters are not revealed. Therefore all its workings were hidden from Jacob. Come and see: the lower world is revealed, and it is the beginning of everything in ascending through its degrees. Just as supernal Wisdom is the beginning of everything, so the lower world is wisdom and the beginning of everything. Therefore we call it 'You,' because it is heard [?] and revealed. The upper world, which is Jubilee, we call 'He,' because all its matters are concealed. The mystery of the matter is Leah, of whom it is written, 'He lay with her on that night'—hu, 'he.' Therefore it is written, 'The Levite shall serve—hu,' in order to draw blessings from it above. Hu is the upper world, always concealed. Jacob did not attach himself willingly to what is concealed, but to what is revealed. This is the mystery of 'Leah was hated': from here a person hates the nakedness of his mother and sister. A person may be alone with his mother anywhere without concern. It is all for concealment from the eye, for the upper world is not revealed at all."

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

The intention concerns Binah, which is Leah, the first he in the Name. Rachel, by contrast, is Malkhut, the final he: all her deeds are revealed. Through this Jacob rectified the two drops the first Adam cast into an alien place, mentioned above from Raaya Mehemna. The intention concerns the two letters he in the Name: "glory"—eryah and ervah; ra, "evil," between yod-he, and ra between vav-he. "And glory shall be clothed ... other ... the two letters he" [?], as stated in the Tiqqunim. For through his union with wicked Lilith there was separation of the union between the two letters he; Jacob rectified them. [TN120020] authoritative. Therefore Reuben and Gad did not merit a share in the land "which the LORD our God continually attends to," but only across the Jordan. A different measure applied to half the tribe of Manasseh, because his mother Asenath was Dinah's daughter by Shechem the Hivite; Potiphar merely raised her, and she was called by his name. Manasseh opened the womb, and half of him was blemished, for his mother traced her descent after her father, a Hivite, son of Hamor. The Torah had not been given in his days, and the ruling that your daughter's son by a Hivite is called your son had not yet been introduced.

Rema of Fano - continued

Even now, they said that the child is legitimate only by Torah law, while he is blemished by rabbinic law. We say to him, "Conceal yourself, or go into exile, or marry a woman of your own kind," as stated in chapter Ha-Holetz. If the child is a daughter and she marries a priest, we do not remove her from him, and her offspring is fit for the priesthood. Therefore only half of Manasseh was blemished. Since half of him was made fit, as regards Ephraim, at least, what had happened had happened. Those who expound hints made mnemonic signs for themselves in the verse "He made recesses for the house round about, outside": Manasseh, Gad, Reuben give the initials M.G.R. Because of the distortion in them, as stated, they remained outside the chosen land.

David too, because of what we mentioned in chapter 10, afterward said for that occasion, "They have driven me

Yad Yehudah - יז

"From this one can understand," etc. The master explains "Ephraim is My firstborn" (Jeremiah 31). Although he was not the firstborn, since Jacob thought, "I shall come in to Rachel," and afterward brought his thought from potentiality into actuality by marrying her, Joseph became the firstborn. From the beginning he had been the firstborn in relation to Heaven, which knows thoughts, as explicitly stated in the Zohar, Vayetze, page 348, and Vayishlah, page 400.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Likewise," etc.: so it is with Jacob and Esau, both of whom were firstborn—Jacob in relation to Heaven, Esau corporeally. This is Jacob's "I am Esau your firstborn": he means "I and Esau," and Jacob did not lie, Heaven forbid. On this account Rashi's resolution is unnecessary: he wrote, "'I' am the one bringing it to you, and Esau is your firstborn."

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Zilpah likewise," etc. [gap] to what was said above [gap] secretly, to rectify [gap]. He says that even Leah's maidservant was given to Jacob for this reason. [TN120021]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Yet this is challenged," etc. In the Zohar, Metzora, page 29, it says: "Of Esau it is written, 'The first emerged red.' If you say Jacob was the first drop, why is this

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

so? For it is written, 'The first emerged.' Rather, thus: 'and b' ... first' [?]; [it was required?] that Isaac come from the side of harsh judgment, so Esau emerged red, ruddy. But Jacob was the firstborn: how did that first drop emerge so red? Rather, it was the second drop, and therefore it did not emerge thus, since that drop was from the side of mercy, on this side and on that side. Esau's drop was not like Jacob's, for this one was strong and this one was not. At that moment Isaac intended the completion of harsh judgment, to bring it forth at his sides through pure engravings, as we know and have learned. Thus Esau was the away from joining the LORD's inheritance." And these initial letters give gam bi (גם בי), "with me also," in "The LORD was angry with me also," which Moses our master, peace be upon him, said concerning his being prevented from entering the land. His father had attained an exalted degree enabling him to establish offspring from his aunt. His conception and birth thus became hidden from the eyes of every living being until the time of its visitation. The entire generation of knowledge, like him, did not enter the land because of their exalted degree: they needed it only as a passage to the gates of the Garden of Eden, to remove from there the cherubim and the flame of the sword, in the sense of "Let me pass over, please," which we have explained.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

pollution melted from gold," etc.; see there. This wording certainly challenges the parable the earlier ones asked concerning the tube. [TN120022]

Yad Yehudah - כא

"The mention is fitting" [?]: that is, "I awakened" [?]—the matter is indeed as the Zohar says. Thus we find with Abraham, who was mentioned "from the tamei" [?], as stated in the aforementioned Raaya Mehemna: Ishmael first issued from him, and afterward he begot Isaac. The allusion is that Abraham was eighty-six when Hagar bore Ishmael. Judgment prevailed over him from the name Elohim, whose numerical value is eighty-six; therefore Ishmael issued from him at that time, and Abraham remained clean and refined of the admixture of judgment. [TN120023]

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

Yad Yehudah - כב

"Nevertheless": we shall resolve the aforementioned difficulty so that the Zohar and the tube parable do not contradict one another. We can only say that, even according to the Zohar, the parable is also true. Its meaning is not that Jacob was known first from the first drop, as Rashi wrote, but that the matter concerns the portion above. There are three partners in a person, and the blessed Name gives the soul. In respect of the soul, Jacob was the firstborn, since his soul was emanated first. This is the sense of Scripture's "Israel is My son, My firstborn," for the designation "son" concerns the soul, as is known, and as the Zohar says in several places about "You are children of the LORD your God": "of the offspring ..." [?]—this is what it says, "Jacob the firstborn"; "and his fat parts could also ... like him" [?]. [TN120024]

Yad Yehudah - כג

"Corporeally": from the corporeal aspect of semen, Esau was the firstborn.

Yad Yehudah - כד

"All the Sages' words stand": the Zohar and the aggadah using the aforementioned tube parable do not disagree.

Yad Yehudah - כה

"Zilpah likewise," etc.: he returns to what was said above, that Leah was taken secretly to rectify the publicity of the first Adam's intercourse. He says that even Leah's maidservant was given to Jacob for this reason.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"As it is written": "She took Zilpah her maidservant and gave her to Jacob as a wife." She did not first consult him as Sarah and Rachel did. Sarah said, "Behold now, the LORD has restrained me from bearing; come in, please, to my maidservant"; likewise Rachel: "Here is my maidservant Bilhah; come in to her," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“This is the sense of bagad”: as one word, which Leah said when Zilpah gave birth. Although it is read as two words, ba gad, the transmitted spelling is authoritative. It expresses betrayal, as Rashi wrote: “Why is it written as one word? As in ‘You betrayed me when you came in to my maidservant,’ like a man betraying the wife of his youth.” Yet this is difficult: why should she say this of her husband when she gave her to him voluntarily, without his asking? Therefore the master explains that she said it of herself, meaning, “I betrayed him by giving him my maidservant secretly.”

Yad Yehudah - כח

“Therefore”: because Leah and Zilpah were given to Jacob secretly, their sons Reuben and Gad did not merit a share in the land. This is measure for measure: just as they were conceived secretly, so they were to have no inherited share in the land “which the LORD our God attends to,” along with His attending to the upper land; this is its publicity.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“Half the tribe of Manasseh,” who did not take their share in the land: their reason [gap] in the matter, namely because of his mother Asenath. [TN120025]

Yad Yehudah - ל

“She was Dinah’s daughter”: as Jonathan the translator says in the portions Miqqetz and Vayiggash.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Manasseh opened the womb”: because he was the firstborn.

Yad Yehudah - לב

“Half of him was blemished”: through his mother Asenath, who traced her descent after her father.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“That your daughter’s son,” etc., as our Rabbis derived [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “from the verse, ‘For he will turn your son away.’”] [TN120026]

Yad Yehudah - לד

“Not from Torah law”: he is not a mamzer, but blemished by rabbinic law, as above in chapter Ha-Holetz (45): “When he came before Rav Judah, he said to him: Go, conceal yourself, or marry a woman of your own kind. When he came before Rava, he said to him: Either go into exile, [or] marry a woman of your own kind.” Rashi explains: “‘Go, conceal yourself’: go to a place where they do not recognize you, and ‘you shall sit ... a daughter of Israel’ [?]; ‘because they do not recognize you, they will not give you’ [?], etc. ‘A woman of your own kind’: like one disqualified by rabbinic law [gap], and he will entrust you with a legitimate daughter of Israel.” Thus far. This is because he is blemished for priesthood by rabbinic law, as we say there in the Gemara, “that all of them” [gap], “that the child is blemished” [gap], as in Rashi there. [TN120027]

Yad Yehudah - לד - continued

Yad Yehudah - לה

“We do not remove her,” etc.: this also appears to be Nahmanides’ view.

Yad Yehudah - לו

Because half of him was made fit, the remaining Ephraim, who came after him, was wholly fit.

Yad Yehudah - לז

In the verse “He made recesses” (1 Kings 6), the word migraot is an expression like M.G.R.–ʿWT, “M.G.R.–distortion.” M.G.R. consists of the initials of Manasseh, Gad and Reuben. Because of the distortion in them owing to the womb, therefore “He made [recesses] for the house outside.” [TN120028]

Yad Yehudah - לח

“David too”: he also was born secretly, according to the account before us, that he came to his maidservant. Therefore this was said, etc.

Yad Yehudah - לט

“And these initial letters”: the allusion to David’s becoming estranged because of his secret “blindness/skin” [?] consists of the initial letters of— [TN120029]

Yad Yehudah - מ

“They have driven me away from joining the LORD’s inheritance,” which David said: these are the letters G.M. [TN120030]

Yad Yehudah - מא

“With me”: an allusion [gap]. [TN120031]

Yad Yehudah - מב

“For he attained an exalted degree”: just as David’s mother and Leah were praised on account of their exalted degree, so it was with Amram, who took a degree appropriate to his elevation. This was told to him by a heavenly voice, as explained in the Zohar, Shemot.

Yad Yehudah - מג

“Hidden from the eyes of every living being”: they did not know of his conception and birth, as explained above in chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - מד

“The entire generation of knowledge,” etc.: as explained in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 100: “If you say it was by Moses’ wish, it was not so. Rather, when Israel went out of Egypt, it was from the side of Jubilee, and all these sixty Rabbis were from the upper world. In that likeness they went through the wilderness. Not one of them entered the land; only their sons, their offspring, were in the land, since they were from the place of the moon. All the acts of the land were rectifications of the moon. Moses served the moon while still in the body,” etc.; see there. [TN120032]

Yad Yehudah - מה

“Which we have explained”: in Part II, chapter 27; see there.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The first Adam’s spirit,” etc.: the parable concerns a king’s daughter who was liable to burning, but the king foresaw that a daughter fit for royalty would issue from her. Here too Jacob redeemed Abraham, for Abraham also became liable to burning on account of “the carved images of their gods,” etc., as above. Thus Abraham rectified the first Adam’s nefesh. The rectification did not take place until the sixty-six souls descended and were descending with Jacob, in the manner of “Abraham had a daughter,” which was the first Adam’s soul. He hung her in galgal, whose value is sixty-six. This too is “He hung her in the sun’s sphere”: galgal has the numerical value sixty-six, and the sun is Jacob, as it is said, “Behold, the sun and the moon,” etc. Therefore the Egyptian exile lasted 430 years, the numerical value of nefesh; Abraham and Jacob together also have the numerical value 430. Isaac rectified Adam’s ruah: Isaac has the numerical value 208, and through the binding a ruah came to him from the supernal Vayiqra.

Jacob rectified Adam’s neshamah, as in “He poured oil upon it”: shemen, “oil,” has the letters of neshamah. They did not rectify it until Moses and David came, in the mystery of M.Sh.H.—David; Moses merited “The voice is Jacob’s voice,” a doubled voice, the voice of Torah and the voice of prayer. The songs David instituted were likewise a rectification of Jacob and the first Adam, making one [whole?]. “He poured oil upon it,” upon its head: the final he, and it becomes neshamah. Examine this carefully. [TN120033]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“And great deliberation,” etc.: he was eighty-four and had never experienced a seminal emission—the opposite of the first Adam’s haste. “Hated”: “and all loves—the expression concerning Leah—is holy” [?]. “Through her husband’s service, on account of her exalted degree,” etc.: the first Adam’s two sins became eryah and, the other, ervah; Jacob rectified them. Leah corresponded to eryah, and Rachel to ervah. At the first he the shells have no hold, but only at the final he, in the sense of “Her feet descend to death,” as stated several times above. Thus Leah did not need so much rectification as Rachel; therefore she was hated because of her exalted degree. Rachel was different: there the shells have a hold, so she needed great rectification. “Z.” [?], Zohar, Behar: “To bring forth ... eye/ fountain ... drops,” etc., “into a created place,” and not forbidden sexual relations [?]; see there. For Adam sinned “in all drops, with fringes” [?], in the mystery of eryah and ervah. The sparks of the first he were rectified through Leah, and the second through Rachel. [TN120034]

“The true parable,” etc.: the parable of the tube, as mentioned below. Jacob’s soul was emanated first in the upper world, whereas corporeally Esau was born first. This is “my father [?] and Esau—we are both firstborn.” [TN120035] “The transmitted spelling is authoritative”: bagad expresses betrayal. “Reuben and Gad”: “in beds” [?], among children of substitution, as above, so as not to receive a share in the land. “Half the tribe of Manasseh”: they did not merit a share in the land of Israel because they came from Asenath, Dinah’s daughter by the Hivite, and half of him was blemished. “The Torah had not yet been given”: so that he would be called your son. Even now that the Torah has been given, they said the child is legitimate only by Torah law; by rabbinic law he is blemished.

Ephraim was wholly fit, for what had happened had happened. This is what is said of Jacob: “He crossed his hands, for Manasseh was the firstborn.” Since Manasseh was the firstborn, he crossed his hands, placing his right upon Ephraim, who had not been blemished at all, unlike Manasseh. Therefore he said, “I know, my son, I know; nevertheless his younger brother shall become greater than he.” “Because of the distortion,” etc.: to outward appearance they were children of substitution. “David too,” etc., “they have driven me away,” etc.:

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

his father intended to come in to his maidservant, and he became a child of substitution, as above in chapter 10. “To the gates of the Garden of Eden”: see above, Part II, chapter 16.

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 19 (יט)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“Behold Adam,” etc. The master returns to his exposition of the Mishnah’s wording, “Until our father Abraham came,” etc., which he began above in chapter 17.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Garments of light” [gap]. [TN120037]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“From one God”: light, or, with aleph, indicates this.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“He will complete his roots”: the souls of all the generations destined to come were included in him. [TN120038]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“He drew out the foreskin”: as our Rabbis said. This means that he came in to Lilith, as stated in the Zohar, page 117, and explained above in chapter 9.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“They became garments of skin”: for the skin benefited from them, as mentioned. The ayin also indicates the foreskin,

Rema of Fano

Behold Adam, the one father of us all, was clothed in garments of light in the Garden of Eden, with the intention expressed in “One God created us”: that the quarry of his soul should send out its roots, all holy, with one heart, to serve Him with one accord. From there the divination of rebellion scattered them, drawing out the foreskin, and they became garments of skin, in the sense of the suspended ayin in the verse “To grasp the corners of the earth, and the wicked are shaken from it.” For the impure was mixed with the pure. From the root of the serpent, who came in to Eve and imparted pollution to her, there issued a viper, a flying fiery serpent: wicked Cain, a nest of impurity. When supernal Lovingkindness saw that the world could not endure through him, it added to the offspring his brother, Abel. Cain arose and killed him, to the grief of the world’s soul over his blood and the blood of his descendants, until Seth was born in image and likeness, as we shall explain in Part IV.

From then on, the holy souls came in disguise through select individuals

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

orlah.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“In the sense of the suspended ayin” [gap]. [TN120039]

Yad Yehudah - ח

For then, when the first Adam drew out the foreskin, it became mixed, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“From the root of the serpent,” etc.: the wording of the Zohar, Bereshit, page 149.

Yad Yehudah - י

“And the foreskin,” etc.: this is explained in the aforementioned passage; see above, chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Sometimes they crouch,” etc.: holy sparks fell among the shells.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Until our father Abraham came”: he refined all the holy souls.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Of him it is said” [gap]. [TN120040]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"In Sefer ha-Bahir": these are its words concerning the verse "Because ..." [gap]. [TN120041]

Yad Yehudah - טו

"The first": that is, the first quality.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"This is 'gracious'": from the expression "a free gift."

Yad Yehudah - יז

"Even if they become liable," etc. [gap]. [TN120042]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"In the sense of 'without payment'" [gap]. [TN120043]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Ishmael was separated": as mentioned in Raaya Mehemna, which we copied above in chapter 18.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"The people of Sodom": their overthrow also occurred one year before Isaac was born [gap]. [TN120044]

Yad Yehudah - כא

"Of Zoar": it was settled one year later, as stated there, B.A.M. [?], concerning "Let me escape there, please": the numerical value is fifty-one, and Sodom's was fifty-two. The intention was to hasten Isaac's birth. [TN120045]

Yad Yehudah - כב

"Therefore": because Zoar's measure was not yet full.

Rema of Fano - continued

throughout all twenty generations. Sometimes "they crouch, bring forth their young, and deliver them" over the cobra's hole and over the viper's den, until our father Abraham came and took upon himself the reward of them all. Of him it is said, "Light dawned in darkness for the upright": these are the souls we mentioned, when his lamp shone upon them through three kinds of perfection, "gracious, compassionate, and righteous." These are the three good qualities attributed to him in Sefer ha-Bahir, all resembling the lovingkindness of God, which had no need to serve in his days, as also stated in the Jerusalem Talmud. The first is to bring merit to the world: this is "gracious," a free gift from him to them. The second is that even if they become liable, he acquits them, in the sense of "In wrath remember compassion." The third is that he turns them back and puts into their hearts the desire to do their Maker's will: this is "righteous," one who makes others righteous.

In his days the earth divided into seventy branches, and the LORD chose him to restore the garments of light to their unity. Ishmael was first separated, as an unfit offering from sacred things; and Isaac was not born until all the presumptuous and all workers of wickedness who rose against the Omnipresent's right hand had come to an end: the generation of Enosh, of the Flood, and of the Dispersion, and their bitter conclusion in the people of Sodom. For the LORD watched over the evil and brought it upon them one year before Zoar's measure was full. Therefore

Yad Yehudah - כג

"He advanced the argument": that the righteous should not die a degrading death.

Yad Yehudah - כד

"The blessed God informed him": incidentally, the master explains Sodom's judgment.

Yad Yehudah - כה

"Complete forgiveness": this is "I shall forgive the whole place."

Yad Yehudah - כו

"But through combining His Divine Presence": if forty-five are found there, nine in each city, they make ten through combining the Divine Presence, as Rashi says. This suffices only that He not destroy, as it says, "I shall not destroy"; their judgment, however, would involve sufferings.

Yad Yehudah - כז

"Likewise, for the majority of the cities": if forty or thirty righteous people are found, ten in each city, then, because they constitute the majority of the cities, He will do nothing to them, not even sufferings, as it says, "I shall not do," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כח

"Combination": if nine are found in each city, no explicit explanation was necessary, for the judgment is already written concerning forty-five. It implies that combining the Divine Presence protects against decreed annihilation, but they will be judged through sufferings.

Yad Yehudah - כח - continued

Yad Yehudah - כט

“For the minority, however”: if twenty or ten are found, they would require sufferings even without combination. Therefore Scripture also says of them, “I shall not destroy.” This differs from Rashi, who equates the judgment of twenty and ten in one or two cities with that of thirty and forty; see there. Jonathan ben Uzziel the translator also has a different approach; consult him.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“The change of verbs”: concerning forty and thirty He says, “I shall not do,” while in all the others He says, “I shall not destroy.”

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Nevertheless,” etc.: this is the conclusion. Although Zoar’s measure was not full, the LORD nevertheless watched over Sodom’s evil, for the time of love—Isaac’s birth—had come, and their sin was to be brought to an end before his arrival, so that the whole world might be purified through him.

Yad Yehudah - לב

“After the refuse had been separated from Isaac”: as explained in Raaya Mehemna, which we copied above in chapter 17. This is Esau, a hairy man, the mystery of the scapegoat, as explained in the Zohar, Aharei, page

Rema of Fano - continued

Abraham stood in prayer and sought mercy, so that the righteous should not die with the wicked. Although the judgment is true according to the majority, he nevertheless advanced the argument that the righteous should not be put to shame at the resurrection of the dead. For it is established that they rise with their blemishes and are healed. Why should they die through brimstone and salt, so that they must rise with burnt bodies? There is no greater humiliation. Therefore he repeated, “So that the righteous should be like the wicked—far be it from You!” As they expounded: the first refers to this world, and the second to the world to come, as we have said.

The blessed God informed him that if fifty righteous people were found there, they would deserve complete forgiveness. But through combining His Divine Presence with nine in each city, it would suffice that He not destroy them; He would instead bring sufferings upon them. Likewise, for the majority of the cities, four or three, with ten righteous people in each, He would do no evil at all. The possibility of combination in their case is understood of itself, protecting against decreed annihilation. For the minority, however, even without combination, He would not destroy but would chastise. The change of verbs in these verses accords with what we have explained with the utmost precision.

Nevertheless, a decree against them had already been issued. The time of love had come to visit Sarah, and the intention was to refine the whole dough

Yad Yehudah - לב - continued

129, and as will be stated in the discourse A.B.T., Part III, section 30. [TN120046]

Yad Yehudah - לג

“Supernal Justice desired”: although in our eyes this seems strange, such was the desire of supernal Justice, blessed be He, who desires the peace of His servant Jacob, so that the Holy One, blessed be He, should be justified—that he should bear the iniquity of the whole world.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“Like the righteous”: they suffer sufferings of love for the generation’s iniquity, as is known; and through their merit, our righteous Messiah. See measure 9 in the discourse Ha-Middot.

Yad Yehudah - לה

“Through this,” etc. The master interprets ve-nivrekhu, “shall be blessed,” in the manner of our Rabbis’ exposition: “I have two good shoots to layer from you,” etc. It refers to the layering performed with a tree’s branch. According to the master, the intention is that the whole world should greatly desire to layer from you, “beautiful in elevation, the joy of all the earth,” and join you: this is its fruit. This will be fulfilled through the sufferings borne by the holy seed, bringing it [?] to the ground as is done when layering a branch, from which its fruit is found. [TN120047]

Yoel Moshe - 1

"From one God," etc.: or, "light," with aleph, indicates this. "He sends out his roots," etc.: he included all the souls destined to issue from him. "The wicked are shaken": the ayin of reshaim, "wicked," is suspended, alluding to the seventy princes; these are the letters of reshaim. If they merit, the seventy become princes; if they do not merit, they have a hold on holiness, and the impure is mixed with the pure. "He took upon himself the reward of them all": all the holy souls, when Abraham's lamp shone upon them. This is "the soul they made in Haran," which Abraham and Sarah rectified. "Coming through select individuals," etc.: the heads of the generations were righteous, but the generations were wicked.

Rema of Fano - continued

through Isaac; therefore Sodom's judgment was completed first. After the scapegoat had been separated from Isaac and sent to another land, having no share in the promised rewards or in their toil, supernal Justice saw fit that Jacob's seed should suffer sufferings of love and be held accountable for the iniquity of all the generations, like the righteous in each generation and the Messiah himself: "He bore our illnesses, and carried our pains." Through this the saying would be fulfilled, "All the families of the earth shall be blessed through you and through your seed." For havrakhah, layering a branch, means lowering it to the dust of the earth, in the sense of "Let my soul be as dust to all," so that everyone may find contentment, produce a branch, and bear fruit by joining it. This holy seed is assured that it will put forth blossom and bud: the LORD's planting, in which to take glory. [TN120036]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Attributed": to Abraham, in Sefer ha-Bahir, in Avodat ha-Qodesh. Although his attribute was Lovingkindness, all the others also resemble Lovingkindness; only Lovingkindness had no need to serve in Abraham's days, since Abraham was Lovingkindness. "In his days": Abraham's; he was forty-eight when the earth divided among seventy princes. "Against the Omnipresent's right hand": Ishmael comes from the shells of the right, Esau from those of the left.

"Therefore he repeated": "Far be it" twice, for complete forgiveness. Therefore He said, "If I find fifty righteous people, I shall do nothing," not even sufferings. For forty-five, through combining the Divine Presence with each group, He said, "I shall not destroy," but I shall bring sufferings. Likewise for four cities and for three cities—thirty—which are the majority of five: "I shall not do" is also said, implying nothing at all, not even sufferings. He did not ask about combining the Divine Presence with four cities or with three, for that is understood of itself, since he had already asked through combination. "For the minority, however": twenty in two cities, the minority of five. Even though there are ten in each city without combination, He said, "I shall not destroy," but I shall bring sufferings, since most of them are harsh.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Therefore Sodom's judgment was completed," etc.: consequently the same angel who brought tidings to Sarah went to Sodom, as it is said, "The men arose from there and looked toward Sodom." Sarah's visitation depended specifically on its occurring after Sodom's overthrow, to refine through Isaac—through Isaac. "The scapegoat," etc.: Esau, a hairy man. "In the promised rewards": the reward of the world to come; "nor in their toil": subjection to the kingdoms.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 19

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 20 (כ)

Yad Yehudah: כה · כד · כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"It is clear," etc. The master returns to the Mishnah's wording, "Until our father Abraham came and took upon himself the reward of them all," which he mentioned in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"It is precise": as he says below concerning "upon himself."

Yad Yehudah - ג

"For good and for its opposite": for the reward and the burden bound up with it.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"In the sense of 'They shall return to you'": the intention is that in their latter end they will return to you so that you may rectify them; see Part I, chapter 18. Here likewise, he accepted the task of inclining them all toward merit, so that they might merit through him and he might rectify them.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"In the sense of 'Who delivered your adversaries'": Rashi explains asher miggen as "who handed over," likewise amaggenkha Yisrael. There is no need for this, since "freely" [?] in both can be interpreted through "shield, freely" [?]. The intention is that He made a shield for your

Rema of Fano

From this it is clear that the tanna of the Mishnah uses precise language. This is what it teaches: "He took upon himself the reward of them all," for good and for its opposite—specifically "upon himself," upon the shoulder he bent to bear the burden of refinement for them all. This is in the sense of "They shall return to you, but you shall not return to them," said to Jeremiah; and in the sense of "Who delivered your adversaries into your hand," for their being delivered into Abraham's hand is their shield and their salvation at the end of days. Likewise, "How shall I deliver you up, Israel?" The sufferings that come upon us from Him, blessed be He, are a refuge and shelter from Gehinnom's judgment. As it is written, "I shall appoint peace as your visitation," concerning the sufferings of a person's body, "and righteousness as your taskmasters," concerning his property. Hosea likewise said, "The days of visitation have come, the days of peace [or recompense] have come," for one person is struck and another pays.

The Sages have already said that all the taxes and levies the kingdoms collect from us are reckoned to us as great charity. He must give them recompense in this world, since something good is found in them, for all His ways are judgment. He has acted righteously toward us: through this He redeemed us from descending to the pit, finding a ransom. Moreover, He reckons it as adversaries by placing those adversaries under him, for through this they would be rectified. "I shall deliver you up, Israel" (Hosea 11) means that I shall deliver you to sufferings which will be a shield for you. [TN120049]

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו

"As it is written": "I shall appoint peace as your visitation, and righteousness as your taskmasters" (Isaiah 60).

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Concerning the sufferings": through them the blessed Name will be a shield for him.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"For one person is struck": corresponding to this [gap], "I shall appoint peace as your visitation." Another pays; concerning this He said, "And righteousness as your taskmasters," as the Sages said, etc. [TN120050]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"In ATBaSh": there is another aspect of charity, in which he is exchanged with dalet, and qof with gimel, and conversely. This alludes to the recipient also doing charity for the giver by bringing him the merit of this commandment. Here likewise, through the charity the Holy One,

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

blessed be He, does with him, redeeming his "fear" from the "blow" of Gehinnom [?], "they said, they also act with Him as recompense, N.H." [?], and conversely. [TN120051]

Yad Yehudah - י

"In the sense of": what Ruth said, "The man with whom I acted," as though she had done charity for him.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"In addition to": the allusion in tzedakah, "charity," in the Ari's intentions, that its numerical value is two hundred less one. This indicates that if he has two hundred zuz less one, he may receive, etc., as our Rabbis say in the Mishnah at the end of Peah.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"And a third" [?]: the giving of charity alludes to the name Havayah. The giver's arm alludes to vav; the five fingers of his hand to he; the little finger to yod; and the recipient's hand to the final he. In this order, "all —have compassion on us" [?], Havayah: "And the work of charity shall be peace." [TN120052]

Yad Yehudah - יג

"There, in the visions," etc.: the master returns to what he said above, to explain the covenant between the pieces in another way.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"Inauguration offerings are destined," etc.: as is demonstrated in Ezekiel.

Rema of Fano - continued

charity from us to Him, since He pays His debts with our money. This is one of the pleasing allusions in the doubling of tzedakah, "charity": in ATBaSh it is another tzedakah, and it does not return empty from the recipient to the giver, in the sense of "The man with whom I acted." This is in addition to the familiar numerical value: someone who has only two hundred zuz less one may receive charity, even a thousand zuz at once.

There is also a third aspect: combine the giver's arm and his outstretched hand with its five fingers, representing vav-he, and the issar coin, a small yod, to be placed into the poor person's hand. Then "And the work of charity shall be peace," ve-hayah: these are the four letters of the great Name. [TN120048]

There, in the visions between the pieces, the mystery of the sacrifices was intimated to our father Abraham, peace be upon him. At the redemption from Egypt, the priesthood was inaugurated through Aaron with the inauguration offerings. Those who returned from Babylon also offered inauguration offerings in Ezra's days; and inauguration offerings are destined to be offered at the dedication of the third House, speedily in our days, through the righteous priest whom our Rabbis mention in tractate Sukkah among the four craftsmen Zechariah saw. He is one of the priests descended from Aaron, like Ezra, although others did not interpret it this way. Priesthood always returns to its lodging. Ezra did not ascend from Babylon until he had traced his own lineage, and then ascended. Examine the

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Through the righteous priest" [gap]. [TN120053]

Yad Yehudah - טז

This is in Scripture: "Ezra, son of Seraiah," etc., "son of Abishua, son of Phinehas, son of Eleazar, son of Aaron the priest, H.R.M. [?]—this Ezra went up from Babylon," etc. A wise person perceives that Aaron the priest is Ezra himself, by reincarnation. [TN120054]

Yad Yehudah - יז

"The saying," etc.: incidentally, the master mentions Aaron's reincarnation in the prophet's soul.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Fulfilled in Samuel of Ramah": an Aaronic spark was in him, and also in Jeremiah, and not a priest. [TN120055]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"To establish two men": Ezra and the righteous priest who will come from Aaron's reincarnation. They are called "men" because they are high priests, since we find the expression ish concerning a high priest. See Megalleh Amuqot, approach 33.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"And which is the heifer," etc.: he returns above to the visions between the pieces.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"A reward which," etc.: as they said, "The reward of a commandment is a commandment."

Yad Yehudah - כב

"He broke them": to indicate their cessation, since the sacrifices will cease in the future. [TN120056]

Yad Yehudah - כג

"To save," etc.: incidentally, the master explains why they will cease in the future: "that ... my doors" [?], as stated [gap], "to him ... from trouble [?] ... indeed, to him" [?]. The sacrifices serve to save from Gehinnom; conversely, their cessation is brought about by the cessation of the cause. [TN120057]

Yad Yehudah - כד

"Apart from thanksgiving offerings": these do not come on account of sin [gap]. [TN120058]

Yad Yehudah - כה

"A reward which," etc.: as they said, "The reward of a commandment is a commandment."

Yoel Moshe - 1

"The burden of refinement": all the souls from the first Adam until the completion of all twenty generations. "They verses closely, join them and recite them, and you will find a pearl.

Rema of Fano - continued

Ben Parhi, the teacher and disciple of Rabbi Solomon Molkho, interpreted "Is not Aaron your brother, the Levite?" as fulfilled in Samuel of Ramah. On this account his mother's request was completed when she said, "Give Your handmaid seed of men": seed to establish two men, as in what we learned, "My lord, High Priest." The heifer, goat, and ram were each threefold, to make the intention and purpose alike in these inauguration offerings on these three occasions, when the LORD's glory would fill the LORD's House. "He divided them in the middle": the aim and end of all the sacrifices in this world is to save their offerer from Gehinnom's judgment. Just as there is no Gehinnom in the world to come, so all sacrifices will cease at that time, apart from thanksgiving offerings. We return to the iron furnace that our father Abraham, peace be upon him, accepted, to refine all the banished souls in it and himself alone receive the reward of a commandment—a reward which in truth consists of Torah and commandments, and nothing else.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

shall return to you," etc.: you will refine them, so that all the generations may be rectified through him, according to the mystery of impregnation; not the reverse, Heaven forbid. "For the one who needs," etc.: the Holy One, blessed be He, must give the wicked their reward in this world. Thus we discharge Y.H. [His obligation?] through the taxes we give the wicked. Since something good is found in the wicked, He gives them their reward in this world, and through this redeems us from descending to the pit. "Another charity": tzedakah in ATBaSh—M.Ts.P.Ts.—is likewise tzedakah. "It does not return empty," etc.: from the recipient to the giver. "Two hundred less one": tzedakah has the numerical value two hundred less one, as cited by the Ari in the name of A.L.Q.W.T. [TN120059]

The giver's outstretched arm is vav; the five fingers give he; the issar he gives

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

him gives yod; and the poor person's hand into which he places it, with five fingers, gives the second he. Thus there is the name Havayah. This is "And the work of charity shall be," etc. Therefore "Do not close your hand," but "You shall surely open it," so that your five fingers may be outstretched, alluding to he. Also stretch out your arm toward him, like a vav: "Lest he call against you to the LORD, and there be sin in you"—like "I and my son Solomon shall be offenders," an expression of deficiency, meaning N.Q. [TN120060]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Like Ezra": he was Aaron's reincarnation. "Examine the verses closely, join them and recite them," etc.: the juxtaposition, qerish [?], concludes just before this, "Son of Aaron the priest—this Ezra who ascended from Babylon": Ezra is Aaron the priest. This is "Join them and recite them together." See the end of Nishmat Adam. "Fulfilled in Samuel," etc.: he too was Aaron's reincarnation, and the writing "Levi" alludes to the prophet Samuel and his sons. "To establish two men": when Samuel's

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

sons sinned, their soul also departed, “as Nadab—the soul of Nadab and Abihu”—and they entered Samuel. [TN120061] “The heifer, goat, and ram”: an allusion to Aaron, for each one is equivalent to two

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 20

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

others, as above—Ezra and Samuel; therefore they are threefold.

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 21 (כא)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · מא · מ · לט · לח · לז · לו · לה

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“Jacob shall not now be ashamed,” etc.: this connects with the end of the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Which is Egyptian, as its name”: see above, chapter 2. The master mentioned this here to indicate that through this their rectification draws near. [TN120064]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“To make blossom,” etc.: the language of the Zohar, Ki Tissa, page 337, on the verse “Like a rose among the thorns.”

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The he”: the intention of holiness [?]. [TN120065]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“With a serpent in one basket”: that is, with the shells, which are the thorns.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Rolling”—upon the thorns. [TN120066]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Previously”: from the time of the passing of the nine hundred and seventy-

Rema of Fano

“Jacob shall not now be ashamed” when he sees his children exiled to Egypt, which borders the Land of Israel. For the Shekhinah descended with them, to make this rose—a complete household—blossom among the thorns, and to gather Israel’s banished ones to it. These are the sparks of holiness that had remained until then with a serpent in one basket. Through the iron furnace they attached themselves to the house of Jacob, from among those who had joined them previously, from those “who were snatched away before their time.” They were judged again with a double measure: first in the decree concerning the Nile, and in their scattering to make bricks, as we shall mention again. But in the Flood and the Dispersion their ember was extinguished without repentance, whereas here Pharaoh brought them near their Father in heaven. Whoever was there but was not worthy to be redeemed died in repentance and outcry, which avail until the soul’s final crushing. Likewise, during the days of darkness, when many of the transgressors among us died, it is written, “But all the children of Israel four generations, of whom he says, “Who were snatched away before their time.”

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

“They returned and were judged” in Egypt with a double measure, kla’ukhah [?], as they had been judged at first in the generation of the Flood and the Dispersion, in whom were the souls of the nine hundred and seventy-four generations. Therefore the furnace in Egypt: the decree concerning the Nile corresponded to the Flood, and the scattering [?] to make bricks corresponded to the Dispersion. [TN120067]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“We shall mention”: in the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - י

“But they were reincarnated,” etc., and had to come again into the iron furnace on account of repentance.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"The inclusive expression comes"—in his saying, "And all." [TN120068]

Yad Yehudah - יב

"They had light": the Shekhinah.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"And they beheld God ... and released," etc., as stated in chapter 2 of Avodah Zarah, folio 20b. [TN120069]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"Their particulars number thirty": incidentally the master explains the matter of the Noahides' thirty commandments.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"As stated in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh," folio 92: "They weighed out my wages, thirty pieces of silver." Ulla said: These are thirty commandments that the Noahides accepted, but they fulfill only three: they do not write marriage contracts for males; they do not weigh out flesh of the dead in butcher shops; and they honor the Torah. Rashi explains: "Thirty commandments"—they were not specified, and it is from here that we hold this. "They do not write marriage contracts for males"—although they are suspected of intercourse with males and set a male apart for themselves, they do not treat this commandment so lightly as to write them a marriage contract. "Flesh of the dead"—of a human being.

Rema of Fano - continued

had light in their dwellings." The inclusive expression teaches that even those unworthy to be redeemed, since they died in repentance, as we said, had light in their dwellings in the Garden of Eden; not one was missing. Alternatively, "in their dwellings" means that those worthy to become settled and to be redeemed had light. These are the six hundred thousand whom the Omnipresent brought before Mount Sinai. Then "He saw and released" all others from seven general commandments, whose particulars number thirty, as stated in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh. They are as follows. [TN120062]

First: idolatry. Associated with it are passing through fire, divination, soothsaying, interpreting omens, sorcery, casting spells, ov, yidoni, and consulting the dead, in accordance with Rabbi Yose, who said that a Noahide is admonished concerning everything stated in the passage about the sorcerer. These are ten commandments. Second: forbidden sexual relations. Associated with it are "Be fruitful"—one—and "multiply"—two positive commandments; the prohibition of intercourse with a male, even if one sets him apart through a marriage contract; interbreeding animals; castration; and grafting trees. These are seven; see below. Third: bloodshed, with slapping an Israelite's jaw associated with it. These are two. Fourth: "blessing the Name," with honoring the Torah associated with it, and also studying the Torah given to them, for a Noahide who studies it is like a High Priest. These are

Yad Yehudah - טז

"In butcher shops": publicly, for they do not eat it so publicly, even if they slaughtered him. "Flesh of the dead": flesh of an animal that died of itself. End of quotation. The master's view is that the thirty commandments of which Ulla speaks were specified in the amoraim's statements in the chapter Arba Mitot. For there, folio 56, they said: Our Rabbis taught, the Noahides were commanded seven commandments: courts, "blessing the Name," idolatry, forbidden sexual relations, bloodshed, theft, and a limb from a living animal. The amoraim disagree from this point, each adding to these seven. The master rules in accordance with all of them and with Ulla; together they reach the number thirty. The usual statement "the seven Noahide commandments" is because these are general categories, within which several particulars are included. [TN120070]

Yad Yehudah - יז

"First, idolatry" [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: "includes the ten commandments of which Rabbi Yose said there: 'A descendant of Noah is warned against everything stated in the passage of the sorcerer,' as it says, 'There shall not be found among you one who makes his son or his daughter pass through fire,' etc. He subsequently mentions the whole subject. This is because those things also involve an association with idolatry.”] [TN120071]

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Second: three among the general categories” [gap]. [TN120072]

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Be fruitful and multiply,” etc.: there Rabbi Hidqa says, “Also concerning castration” [gap]. In the Gemara, from the words “And you, be fruitful and multiply; swarm upon the earth,” etc. [gap], merely as a blessing. Thus according to Rabbi Hidqa, in accordance with whom the master rules below, Noahides are commanded to be fruitful and multiply. But R.M.H. is difficult [?], for according to the course of the Gemara there it appears that Noahides are not commanded to be fruitful and multiply. For there, folio 59, Rabbi Yose bar Hanina says: Every commandment stated to the Noahides and repeated at Sinai was stated to both; one stated to the Noahides and not repeated at Sinai was stated to Israel and not to the Noahides. We have only the sciatic nerve alone. The Gemara objects: But circumcision was stated to the Noahides, as it is written, “And you shall keep My covenant,” and repeated at Sinai, as it is written, “On the eighth day he shall be circumcised,” yet it was stated to Israel

Rema of Fano - continued

three. Fifth: theft, with the prohibition of studying the Torah bequeathed to us associated with it. These are two. Sixth: the administration of justice for the world’s habitation, with “they shall not cease” associated with it. These are two. Seventh: a limb from a living animal, with blood from a living animal, carrion, and flesh of the dead associated with it. These are four. Their total is thirty. [TN120063]

Although “Be fruitful and multiply” is one commandment for us in the enumeration of the six hundred and thirteen, it is no difficulty that it is divided into two here, for one does not derive the Torah of the Noahides from the Torah of Moses our teacher. Alternatively, “Be fruitful and multiply” is indeed reckoned as one for both us and them, and it is the commandment concerning courts that divides into two, a positive and a negative commandment, as stated in the Gemara and explained by Rashi: administer justice and do not commit injustice. Sacrifices for all the earliest generations were like the deeds of someone who acts without being commanded. This seems to me to uphold all the Sages’ words. All these are taught in the chapter Arba Mitot, apart from three found in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh. Our discussion accords with all the tannaim and all the amoraim: one stated one matter, another another, and they do not disagree. The three we mentioned are intercourse with a male, human flesh, and honoring Torah. There is also the flesh of carrion, explicitly taught in the Pesiqta from the words “Every creeping thing that is and not to the Noahides. That passage comes to permit it on the Sabbath: “on the day,” even on the Sabbath. But procreation was stated to the Noahides, as it is written, “And you, be fruitful and multiply,” and repeated at Sinai, as it is written, “Go, say to them: Return to your tents,” yet it was stated to Israel and not to the Noahides. That comes to teach that anything prohibited by a counted decision requires another counted decision to permit it [gap].

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

“And we have only the sciatic nerve alone”—these too were not repeated. This is what we say: “because, generally, they were not taught ... all ... fathers [?] ... fire [?] ... circumcision,” which was addressed to Abraham. For the Merciful One said to him, “And you shall keep My covenant, you and your seed throughout their generations”: you and your seed, yes; other people, no. See Rashi’s explanation. Tosafot wrote: “But procreation”—it is puzzling: how do you know that it was not stated to the Noahides? If because it was not taught among the seven commandments, did we not say above that affirmative duties are not counted? It may be answered that it also includes abstaining from an act, for whoever is commanded concerning procreation is commanded not to waste seed. End of quotation. [TN120073]

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Thus it is explicit that both the questioner, who objects "But procreation," etc., and the answerer take it for granted that procreation was stated to Israel and not to the Noahides. What seems to me to accord with the master's position is that he holds that procreation was repeated at Sinai, as it says, "Go, say to them: Return to your tents." This is also the plain implication of Rabbi Yose bar Hanina's language, "We have only the sciatic nerve alone." The master holds that all the answers the Gemara gives are answers to the immediate objections, not the essential matter. Consequently, once we have answered concerning circumcision, and since procreation was repeated at Sinai, we return to the rule that it was stated to both. The questioner's assumption that it was not stated to the Noahides is because it was not counted among the seven commandments, as Rashi wrote concerning circumcision and as alive," excluding carrion, namely an animal that died of itself. This is contrary to Tosafot in the chapter Arba Mitot, who said that such a case was permitted to the first Adam, from the words "You may surely eat," but not a limb from a living animal. All agree, at any rate, that he was not permitted to kill a domestic animal, wild animal, or bird in order to eat its flesh. It follows that he was permitted to kill for healing or to benefit from their skins, after which their flesh became permitted.

Rema of Fano - continued

As for what we say concerning "He saw and released," do not infer from it that we may lead a person into sin in this matter. For it was taught that a person must not hand a limb from a living animal to a Noahide; and the Torah explicitly said, "You shall throw it to the dog." Rather, they were released, yet are destined to be brought to judgment, like someone who transgressed and repeated the transgression, as we explained in chapter 14. Alternatively, they were released in the sense that even if they fulfill the commandments, they receive reward only as someone who acts without being commanded. For there are no longer banished souls on whose account He originally devised means not to leave them without Torah even for a single hour.

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Tosafot objected. But they have already also said that affirmative duties are not counted. As for Tosafot's statement that procreation too includes an obligation to abstain from an act, "there is no ... their consideration of this" [?], in order to resolve what the Gemara took for granted. In truth, however, we adopt Rabbi Yose bar Hanina's general rule. This seems to me the master's view, and it is correct. [TN120074]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Even if he designated him through a marriage contract": although the Gemara in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh and Rashi's explanation there imply that the prohibition is more severe when a marriage contract is involved, the master wrote "even." For although, after they were commanded concerning intercourse with a male, the prohibition is certainly greater when they treat it lightly in public by writing a marriage contract, nevertheless, before they were commanded, there was also greater permissibility through marriage and a marriage contract. [TN120075]

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

Yad Yehudah - כא

"And interbreeding animals": in accordance with R.E. there, who says, "Also concerning mixed kinds." Noahides are permitted to wear mixed fabrics and to sow mixed seeds; they are prohibited only from mating animals of different kinds and grafting trees.

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

[TN120076]

Yad Yehudah - כב

"And castration": in accordance with Rabbi Hidqa there, who says, "Also concerning castration."

Yad Yehudah - כג

"And slapping an Israelite's jaw": in accordance with Rabbi Hanina there, folio 58b, who said, "One who slaps an Israelite's jaw is as though he slapped," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

Yad Yehudah - כד

"And honoring the Torah": as stated in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh, etc. It seems to me that this accords with Maimonides, chapter 8 of Laws of Kings, as follows: "Anyone who accepts the seven commandments and takes care to perform them is among the righteous of the nations of the world and has a share in the world to come, provided that he accepts and performs them because the Holy One, blessed be He, commanded them in the Torah and informed us through Moses our teacher that the Noahides had previously been commanded concerning them. But if he performs them because of reason's determination, he is not a resident alien, nor among the righteous of the nations of the world, nor among their wise." End of quotation. The Kesef Mishneh wrote: "His statement 'provided that he accepts,' etc.—it seems to me that our master says this from his own reasoning, and it is correct." End of quotation. In my opinion, however, he derived it from what our Rabbis said in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh: they are commanded to honor our Torah. He explains that the reason is that through our Torah they will know in what respect they are commanded concerning their commandments, which were commanded in the Torah, whether explicitly or by allusion [?], and they will learn what [gap]. If they do not heed our Torah in this, they have no share or inheritance even in their own commandments, although they fulfill them by reason. [TN120077]

Yad Yehudah - כה

"And also studying the Torah given to them": there Rabbi Johanan said, "A gentile who studies Torah is liable," as it says, "Moses commanded us Torah, an inheritance": an inheritance for us, not for them. They objected: Rabbi Meir used to say, "Whence do we know that even a gentile who studies Torah is like a High Priest? Because it says, 'Which a human being shall do and live by them.' It does not say priests, Levites, or Israelites, but 'a human being.' Thus you learn that even a gentile who studies Torah is like a High Priest." That refers to their seven commandments.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"And not studying Torah": there it objects to Rabbi Johanan's statement, "Then count it among the seven commandments." According to the one who says morashah, "inheritance," he is stealing it from them; according to the one who says me'orasah, "betrothed," his judgment is that of a betrothed maiden, by stoning. R.Y. explains: "He is stealing"—and theft is already counted; likewise the betrothed maiden, since this is included in forbidden sexual relations. The master considers it preferable to count it with theft, "according to the reason for returning the Torah below, under forbidden sexual relations" [?] [gap]. [TN120078]

Yad Yehudah - כו - continued

Yad Yehudah - כז

"They shall not cease": from labor, for we say there that a gentile who ceases is liable, as it says, "Day and night shall not cease."

Yad Yehudah - כח

"Blood from a living animal": there Rabbi Hanina ben Gamaliel says, "Also blood from a living animal."

Yad Yehudah - כט

"And in all of it" [?]: it will be explained below. [TN120079]

Yad Yehudah - ל

"And multiply—one": we found this above, Part II, chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - לא

"As stated in the Gemara": there, concerning the statement, "What it counts are obligations to abstain from an act; affirmative duties are not counted." But courts are an affirmative duty, and it counts them! They comprise both an affirmative duty and an obligation to abstain. See Rashi's explanation.

Yad Yehudah - לב

"And the sacrifices": that is, we do not count sacrifices, and do not avoid the difficulty by saying that "Be fruitful and multiply" are two, or that courts are two, because Noahides were not commanded concerning sacrifices; they offered them of their own accord, such as peace offerings and birds. As for what we say at the end of the first chapter of Avodah Zarah, "Whence do we know that an animal missing a limb is prohibited for Noahides? Because it is written, 'Of every living thing, of all flesh, two of each': the Torah said, Bring an animal whose limb extremities are alive"—one must not infer from this that they were commanded concerning sacrifices. Rather, when they wished to bring a sacrifice, they were not to bring one missing a limb.

Yad Yehudah - לב - continued

You may object: why did the master not count an animal missing a limb within the number thirty? He would then not have to force the reckoning by counting "Be fruitful and multiply" as two, or courts as two. Even if he does not regard this as forced, the difficulty remains: there are thirty-one! One cannot say, as Tosafot wrote there, that an animal missing a limb is not counted among the Noahides' seven commandments because it is an affirmative duty—if he vowed an animal missing a limb, we tell him, "Get up and bring a whole sacrifice," and affirmative duties are not counted. For in the enumeration of thirty we do count affirmative duties. Nor can one say that the master holds that the rule concerning a missing limb is not the halakhah because it is not counted among the seven commandments, and that Tosafot's answer "as above ... not forced" [?], as the wording about the matter appears, "a negative commandment, of S.H." [?]. It is difficult that the master should decide this. Moreover, if so, "from the other ... from Joseph ... of K.H., as halakhah, because holy" [?] would be difficult; and in several places in the Talmud it is raised as an objection without qualification. [TN120080]

It would seem more likely that this matter of a missing limb did not escape the master. Since the rule concerning a missing limb is brought in several places, he held that it should be counted among the thirty, and correspondingly that "Be fruitful and multiply" should count as one, as it does for us, and courts likewise as one commandment. For "D.L.T.S., that they do not contain a positive and a negative commandment" [?]—nevertheless, they are courts alone. [TN120081]

Yad Yehudah - לג

"And our discussion accords": in the chapter [gap], thirty commandments in accordance with all the tannaim and amoraim of the chapter Arba Mitot.

Yad Yehudah - לד

"And there is also the flesh of carrion": that is, although we explain "flesh of the dead," etc., in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh as human flesh, according to Rashi's first explanation, there is nevertheless also the flesh of carrion, which likewise was not taught in the chapter Arba Mitot, since it is taught in the

Yad Yehudah - לד - continued

Pesiqta.

Yad Yehudah - לה

"Contrary to Tosafot": there, concerning "You may surely eat"—but not a limb from a living animal. What we say below, that flesh was not permitted to the first Adam for eating, means killing and eating it; but if it died of itself, it is permitted. This comes to exclude a limb from a living animal, which is prohibited even if it fell off by itself.

Yad Yehudah - לו

"All agree," etc.: that is, Tosafot's exposition from "You may surely eat" is no proof. For even according to them, the statement that flesh was not permitted to the first Adam for eating means killing and eating. But killing for commerce, "that if" [?] for healing, or in order to benefit from their skins and the like—"as ... it died afterward" [?]—also to eat [gap], if he did not originally intend it for this purpose. Since this is so, we apply "You may surely eat," "as the addition ... to an animal ... an animal, from its skin" [?], and the like, rather than to an animal that died of itself. [TN120082]

Yad Yehudah - לז

"And what we say," etc.: since the master discusses the seven Noahide commandments, he explains what pertains to them. In the first chapter of Avodah Zarah we say: Rav Joseph taught, "He stood and measured the earth; He saw and released the nations." What did He see? He saw the seven commandments that the Noahides had accepted but had not fulfilled. Since they did not fulfill them, He arose and released them. The master said that nevertheless one can infer from this that a person may cause them to stumble in their commandments, since He released them. For it was explicitly taught there, folio 6: Whence do we know that a person must not hand a limb from a living animal to a Noahide? Scripture says, "You shall not place a stumbling block before the blind." [TN120083] Rashi likewise wrote there: "Although we say that He arose and released them, they must nevertheless not transgress through you, for they are destined to be brought to judgment for not fulfilling them, even though they receive no reward if they fulfill them. Therefore an Israelite transgresses 'You shall not place a stumbling block before the blind.'"

Yad Yehudah - לח

“And explicitly,” etc.: that is, there is further proof, for the Torah said, “Flesh torn in the field you shall not eat; you shall throw it to the dog.” This is an admonition concerning flesh from a living animal, as mentioned in the chapter Gid ha-Nasheh and in Maimonides, chapter 4 of Laws of Forbidden Foods. The Torah did not permit giving it to a gentile, because of “You shall not place a stumbling block before the blind,” for he too is commanded concerning flesh from a living animal. This is explicitly mentioned in the verse “But flesh with its life, its blood, you shall not eat,” which the Rabbis bring there in the chapter Arba Mitot as an admonition concerning a limb from a living animal. “A limb from a living animal,” in relation to Noahides, is not exact: even mere flesh from a living animal is included in “S.H. in the Merciful One, which we derive through the reason M.T.” [?] [gap]. “Therefore, not to conceal” [?], since there is no objection to the Pesiqta and its position, which the master rules to be the halakhah, that even an animal that died of itself is prohibited to Noahides, whereas the Torah said, “You shall give it to the resident alien within your gates, and he shall eat it, or sell it to a foreigner.” [TN120084]

One may answer that the term “carrion” includes both an animal that died of itself and one that died through improper slaughter. The entire intention is only to teach that a person may benefit from carrion: by giving it to a resident alien or selling it to a foreigner where this is possible, as when it became carrion through slaughter. But with an animal that died of itself, “according to Tosafot ... a prohibition concerning all of it is absent” [?]; nevertheless it is prohibited because of “You shall not place a stumbling block before the blind.” Therefore Scripture concludes “and he shall eat it,” to say that it permits only a case in which the gentile is fit to eat it; where he is not, giving or selling it is also prohibited. [TN120085]

Yad Yehudah - לט

“Like someone who transgressed and repeated it”: of whom we say that it becomes as though permitted to him.

Yad Yehudah - מ

“Alternatively”: as the Gemara itself establishes it. There they objected concerning “He arose and released them”: Does he gain thereby? If so, we find that a sinner profits! Mar son of Ravina said: This means that even if they fulfill them, they receive no reward for them. But was it not taught: Rabbi Meir used to say, “Whence do we know that even a gentile who studies Torah is like a High Priest,” etc.? Rather, it tells you that they do not receive reward for them as someone who is commanded and acts, but as someone who acts without being commanded.

Yad Yehudah - מ - continued

Yad Yehudah - מא

“For there are no longer,” etc.: that is, the reason the Holy One, blessed be He, annulled their reward is that originally the LORD intended to rectify the souls that had fallen among the shells. At the standing at Mount Sinai they had all already been rectified; the cause departed and the effect ceased.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“With a serpent in one basket”: the Egyptians—that is, “with.” This is the Gemara’s expression, “A person cannot dwell with a serpent in one basket.” In the Zohar, Shemot, there is the excellence of the rose among the thorns. “And they attached themselves,” etc.: those sparks of holiness attached themselves to the house of Jacob. “From those who were snatched away”: this refers to the nine hundred and seventy-four generations; before, in the Egyptian exile, they rectified them. “To make bricks”: the Egyptians’ straw [?], as it is written, “The people scattered to gather stubble for straw.” This was to rectify the generation of the Dispersion through the building of the tower. “The inclusive expression”: the word “all” in “all the children of Israel.” “Released all others”: the Noahides; He released them from the seven commandments once Israel accepted the Torah. “And the sacrifices for all,” etc.: this is an objection, for Noahides also offered sacrifices, so that there are more than seven commandments. He answers that they were like one who is “not commanded—commanded—and acts.” [TN120086]

“But not a limb from a living animal,” etc.: this implies that if it died of itself it is permitted. Such is the implication of Tosafot, but his view is contrary to Tosafot. “For there are no longer souls”: sparks of holiness, on whose account He commanded them the seven Noahide commandments, so as not to leave them without Torah. For they all attached themselves to the house of Jacob: “They emptied Egypt.” Therefore He did not take the commandments away from them altogether, since they are still not dwelling among them, and at the time of the calf sparks fell anew. In any event, they are like someone who acts without being commanded. [TN120087]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 21

Historical index: Heqor Din - III - Chapter 21

Heqor Din - Part III (ג) - Chapter 22 (כב)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“When Israel went out,” etc.: the master returns to his exposition at the beginning of the preceding chapter concerning the totality of the holy elements rectified in the iron furnace. Incidentally he explains the journeys of the children of Israel.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Below, Shekhinah” [?]: as explained in the Zohar in several places. [TN120090]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“And it is written”: “The children of Israel journeyed according to all that the LORD commanded Moses; so they encamped by their banners, and so they journeyed.” The words “so they encamped,” etc., do not connect well with what precedes. The master’s view is that the reference is to the Shekhinah’s camp: just as the banners are above, so they encamped below by their banners; likewise, in their journeys they traveled forty-two stages

Rema of Fano

When Israel went out of Egypt, out of the iron furnace as stated, we immediately became a kingdom of priests and merited the banners, which are an actual likeness of the Shekhinah’s camp. It is written, “So they encamped by their banners, and so they journeyed.” For the journeys numbered forty-two, corresponding above to outlets of life for those entering the upper land and Jerusalem built on high. Of this it is said, “Moses wrote their departures according to their journeys, by the word of the LORD.” It says that the writing was essentially and primarily an explanation of their departures, which are the true cause of their journeys, in a wondrous correspondence. “And these are their journeys according to their departures”: they too directed their journeys toward those outlets and their likeness. Thus the repetition and reversal in this verse become both beautiful and pleasant. From it we infer concerning the whole Torah that it speaks essentially of the things above and alludes secondarily to the things below. Although Nahmanides did not write this in the portion Bereshit, corresponding to the forty-two-letter Name, as stated in the Zohar Hadash: “Come and see: when the Holy One, blessed be He, brought Israel out of the land of Egypt, He brought them out through the mystery of the Name of forty-two letters, in the manner in which He created heaven and earth through it. Therefore, when Israel went out of the land of Egypt, they traveled twelve stages until they reached Mount Sinai, as it is written, ‘On this day they came to the wilderness of Sinai.’ The Holy One, blessed be He, wished them to complete the other thirty stages in three days, as it is written, ‘They journeyed from the mountain of the LORD a journey of three days’: ten stages each day. Because they sinned, they caused these not to be traveled in conjunction with the first twelve. Therefore they did not enter the land until they had traveled another thirty stages, completing the mystery of the Name of forty-two letters, as in the work of creation." [TN120091]

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Corresponding above": the forty-two letters of the holy Name, which are outlets of life for the influxes that the sefirot impart and pour into Malkhut. It is "that of all, in the introduction of" [?] the upper land and Jerusalem, as is known. For the forty-two-letter Name consists of seven words, and the sefirot are included in them, as explained in the Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 4, "to Malkhut" [?]. The forty-two letters cause the outflow of the powers' influxes to the upper land; therefore the journeys to the Land of Israel, the lower land, were also of this number. [TN120092]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Of this it is said": in the portion Masei, "Moses wrote their departures according to their journeys, by the word of the LORD; and these are their journeys according to their departures." The repetition is difficult: after saying that Moses wrote their departures according to their journeys, what need is there to say again, "These are their journeys"? All the more so since it already began, "These are the journeys." Moreover, why does it first say "their departures according to

Rema of Fano - continued

since he followed the familiar dictum "The Torah spoke in human language," we too shall say, "Human beings spoke in the Torah's language." All is true to a listening ear. [TN120088]

It would have been fitting to accept no further converts at the departure from Egypt, fulfilling "The LORD alone will guide him." If they convert of their own accord—we conclude in tractate Yevamot that after the fact even a woman's immersion for her menstrual impurity or a man's immersion for his seminal emission is effective for someone who lacks only immersion, although initially we require immersion before three—we should arrange for a son of theirs to marry a daughter of the Nethinim and Solomon's servants. For in the days of David and Solomon, too, they did not accept converts, yet one hundred and fifty thousand converted of their own accord, and they decreed that these should not enter our congregation. So it will be in our Messiah's days if many of the peoples of the land become Jews. But Moses sought to sever the impurity from the mixed multitude that went up with us. He therefore accepted and circumcised them; most attached themselves to the tribe of Simeon. It was reckoned to him as righteousness, since the Torah had not yet been given. He also kept Micah alive, as we shall mention below. Because he brought distress through the sea, and, as it were, the bed was too short for two companions to rule upon it, Moses and the children of Israel were heavy of speech at the end of the Song at the Sea, when they said, "The LORD will reign for their journeys" and afterward change to "their journeys according to their departures"? The master says that the reference is to the forty-two holy letters, which are the outlets and the cause of Israel's journeys. The writing's primary purpose was to explain these outlets; afterward it writes likewise concerning what is below, so that their journeys were according to their departures.

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

Yad Yehudah - ו

"And the reversal": at first it says "their departures according to their journeys," whereas there it writes the reverse.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"And the inference," etc.: from this, where the Torah explicitly says that the writing's primary purpose concerned their outlets above, one may learn concerning the whole Torah, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Did not write this": his view is the reverse, that the Torah speaks of things below and alludes to things above.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"It would have been fitting," etc.: he returns to the matter that when Israel went out of Egypt we became a kingdom of priests, and it would also have been fitting not to accept converts.

Yad Yehudah - י

"And with this," etc.: incidentally, the master explains the arrangement for those who convert of their own accord.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"In tractate Yevamot," chapter Ha-Holets, folio 45b: A certain person was called "the son of an Aramean woman." Rav Assi said: Did she not immerse for her menstrual impurity? A certain person was called "the son of an Aramean man." Rabbi Joshua ben Levi said: Did he not immerse for his seminal emission? Rashi explains: "The son of an Aramean woman"—his mother had not immersed when she converted. "Did she not immerse for her menstrual impurity?"—that immersion counts for her conversion, since it is an immersion prescribed by Jewish law; "and since ... did not immerse for his seminal emission" [?]. End of quotation. "And what we have learned ... the force of the difficulty" [?]: what we say there in the Gemara, "Learn three things from this: a convert requires three; he is not a convert until he is circumcised and immerses; and one does not immerse a convert at night," applies initially. After the fact, however, even if she immersed at night without three, it is effective, for immersion from menstrual impurity occurs only at night and without three. This is also ever and ever," rather than "The LORD reigns." For a condition of true kingship is the destruction of every challenger and accuser, as will happen at the end of days.

Rema of Fano - continued

At that time, however, the matter did not succeed. On the contrary, these people attached themselves to us in a mixture until they led us into sin, and the accusation grew strong, for the idols became as though permitted. Measure for measure it was decreed to bring us to this place, tending vineyards in purity, until our Maker has mercy upon us. Come and see how much sin causes: had we not sinned with the calf, the kingdom of the house of David would not have divided, nor would we have strayed after Jeroboam's sins, on account of which we were exiled from our land and honor was taken from the house of our life. Here the son asks: Had this not occurred, how would the vision between the pieces have been fulfilled? For in it is written "terror, darkness, great, falling upon him," and the Sages expounded four kingdoms from these four words. Do not answer me that He, blessed be He, is "awesome in His dealings," for this does not suffice for those who understand knowledge. Rather, all was certainly said concerning the Egyptian exile. "Terror": in the refining of the generation of Enosh, for in his days the Ocean flooded a third of the world. "Darkness": in the generation of the Flood, when the luminaries did not function. "Great": the Dispersion, when rebellion grew great in the building of the tower. "Falling": the overthrow of Sodom. "Upon him": within the

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

the master's view. Some have another view, as explained by the legal decisors. [TN120093]

Yad Yehudah - יב

"But in the future," etc.: this refers back to the point that if they convert of their own accord in the future, by an enactment concerning their servants and their remainder [?], they are like the Nethinim, as stated in the chapter Asarah Yuhasin; in the future the enactment will likewise apply to their children. [TN120094]

Yad Yehudah - יג

"And the conversion—one hundred and fifty, these" [?]: as stated in the Gemara, chapter He-Arel, folio 79. [TN120095]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"But he took," etc.: this refers to what was said above, that it would have been fitting not to accept converts. Yet Moses accepted the mixed multitude in order to bring them under the Shekhinah's wings.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Because he brought": Micah brought distress through the sea, namely his idol, as stated in the chapter Heleq, folio 103b.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"As an eruption, these": the mixed multitude, "in our valuations, as the name" [?], until they led us into sin with the calf. [TN120096]

Yad Yehudah - יז

"To this place": he said this with reference to it.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Tenders of vineyards": he became a priest for Micah.

Yad Yehudah - יט

In the refining and rectification of the generation of Enosh [gap], so that the Ocean did not flood the whole world.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Had this not occurred": and we had not sinned with the calf.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"Causing a dealing": He brought it about thus to fulfill the decree of subjection to the kingdoms.

Yad Yehudah - כב

"For this does not suffice": because it is known that everyone has the freedom to choose good and reject evil, "and the way of holy ones to merit it" [?]. [TN120097]

Yad Yehudah - כג

"Had it not": although they alluded to four kingdoms in this vision, all was nevertheless stated concerning the Egyptian exile, so that even if Israel had not made the calf it would have been fulfilled in the Egyptian exile alone. This was to rectify the sin of the generation of Enosh, the Flood, the Dispersion, "and apart from Sodom" [?]. Corresponding to these four rectifications, he said concerning Egypt, "And he struck ... its Nile" [?], etc. [TN120098] boundary of his inheritance, since he was a great king of the Land of Israel. We bore their iniquities.

Rema of Fano - continued

For the earliest generations caused us the decree "You shall throw him into the Nile," fulfilled in Moses: "Every son that is born," for he is equivalent to all Israel. The confinement of the ark was darkness to him, as though sun and moon had grown dark, and as though he had been struck with blindness like the people of Sodom. His mother coated it with clay and pitch to purify the clay that the tower's builders had for mortar, and the pitch that fired the kilns to burn brick into stone. In place of their confounded language, Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, had to be heavy of mouth and heavy of tongue. The smallness of the Dispersion generation's punishment, in comparison with the greatness of their sin, is well known: they stretched their hands toward the upper habitation, but they were of one language, joined to idols; therefore He did not stretch His hand against their bodies. Their sin was also near in time: it was in our father Abraham's forty-eighth year, when his recognition of his Creator was completed, although he had begun investigating it through reflection at the age of three. Therefore their punishment weighed heavily upon us. We had to endure harsh labor on their account, in mortar and bricks, and some of us had to be crushed in the courses of building.

Micah, who was saved in Egypt from the judgment of the Dispersion to become pricks in our eyes and thorns in our

Yad Yehudah - כד

"In the refining and rectification of the generation of Enosh": "which was in their days, in his days" [?], so that the Ocean would not flood the whole world. [TN120099]

Yad Yehudah - כה

"For from his days," etc.: as is known from the Zohar, of blessed memory.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"Doubling bitterness" [?] refers to the overthrow of Sodom. Therefore it is written "upon him": "lost ... N.B. of his inheritance" [?], for Abraham was a great king of H.Y., and Sodom was one boundary. [TN120100]

Yad Yehudah - כז

"We bore their iniquities": those of these generations, in the Egyptian exile, to rectify them. This was through us and through Moses our teacher, peace be upon him.

Yad Yehudah - כח

"For the earliest generations": Enosh and the Flood.

Yad Yehudah - כט

"And darkness": there was great darkness, corresponding to the darkness of the Flood generation.

Yad Yehudah - ל

"To purify the clay," etc., and refine it like purification water: hofet [?], which fired the kilns. [TN120101]

Yad Yehudah - לא

"They were not so": as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, the portion Toledot.

Yad Yehudah - לב

"Against their bodies": they were not made liable to destruction by death.

Yad Yehudah - לג

Moreover, their punishment was lightened because A.Z. protected them, through his merit, and "a son, a son of forty-eight years," as stated in Seder Olam. Then he recognized his Creator, and this was what stood in their favor. [TN120102]

Yad Yehudah - לד

"And this is the completion," etc.: incidentally the master explains that all our Rabbis' words are true. The one who says that Abraham recognized his Creator at three and the one who says at forty-eight each states a different matter, and they do not disagree. At three he began, through reflection, to investigate his Creator; at forty-eight his recognition was completed, and he knew through wisdom that there is a God who judges on earth.

Yad Yehudah - לה

"Therefore": because the Dispersion generation's punishment was small in comparison with their sin, their rectification weighed heavily.

Rema of Fano - continued

sides, made a division in the kingdom of heaven and in the kingdom of the house of David. As our Rabbis said: It was taught, Micah, Nebat, and Sheba son of Bichri are one and the same. He caused scattering for us and our children, and concerning Egypt it is written, "The people scattered." Moses, who saved him, was punished by having his grandson stray into his company. His smoke mingled with the smoke of Shiloh, whose numerical value is Moses; and he has the numerical value of "other gods," to subdue them for us. This is haron af, "fierce anger," with the same number as Moses. For Moses' grave submerges Peor, whose numerical value is Moses plus the eleven shells that we mentioned in the treatise Ha-Nefesh. It also submerges Af and Hemah, which accompany him, according to our Rabbis' words. [TN120089]

This Levite, Micah's priest, was Gershom's son. His father had bound Gershom, by a condition of the marriage contract, to work that was foreign to him, as David explained it to Shebuel. For he foresaw that Jethro would convert first, and "the rod of wickedness shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous." Nevertheless, a covenant is made with the lips, and "around Him it storms exceedingly." Gershom was from the appearance of his loins upward. Therefore, when he turned outward he encountered other gods; when he returned and was rectified, the Shekhinah rested upon him. Eliezer was from the appearance of his loins downward. We have already alluded to this concerning both of them in Part I,

Yad Yehudah - לו

"And Micah," etc.: that is, know that it is so, for Micah too was crushed in the building—on this account his name was called Micah—and Moses brought him out through his prayer. The rebellion of the Dispersion reawakened in him. Therefore he now acted against the kingdom of heaven, by worshiping idols, and against the kingdom of the house of David, "as our Rabbis said," etc., there in the chapter Heleq, folio 101b.

Yad Yehudah - לז

"And with bricks," etc.: that is, the compulsion concerning bricks was to atone for the Dispersion's sin.

Yad Yehudah - לח

"His grandson": Jonathan son of Gershom, who was priest to Micah's idol.

Yad Yehudah - לט

"His smoke mingled," etc.: as stated in the chapter Heleq. This was Moses' punishment for saving him; they alluded to it in the letters of Shiloh, whose numerical value is Moses.

Yad Yehudah - מ

"And they were": Moses has the numerical value of "other gods," to bend and subdue them. They also alluded to this in the words qeren af, which likewise have the numerical value of Moses, indicating that he subdues fierce anger. [TN120103]

Yad Yehudah - מא

"Son of Gershom," etc.: as stated in the chapter of Bava Batra.

Yad Yehudah - מב

Peor has the numerical value of Moses plus eighteen: an allusion to Moses subduing Peor together with eighteen shells. [TN120104]

Yad Yehudah - מג

We went to Peor.

Yad Yehudah - מד

"This disclosure," etc.: the master explains here what pertains to his subject.

Yad Yehudah - מה

"Which we mentioned": concerning Gershom.

Rema of Fano - continued

chapter 23, and Part II, chapter 15.

We return to the refining of our fathers in Egypt. Because the people of Sodom were near in time and belonged to the border of our land, their hand weighed heavily upon us, and many of Israel's transgressors died during the three days of darkness. This is what is written, "falling upon him"—specifically upon him. So too the tanna of Avot is precise when he teaches, "He took upon himself the reward of them all": specifically "upon himself," as stated. Whoever did not understand this corrupted the reading. The truth is what we have explained.

End of Part Three.

Yad Yehudah - מו

"By a condition of the marriage contract, and work that was foreign to him": as stated in the Mekhilta midrash. When Moses said to Jethro, "Give me your daughter Zipporah as a wife," Jethro said to him, "Accept one thing that I shall tell you, and I will give her to you as a wife." Moses said, "What is it?" He said, "Your first son shall be for idolatry; from then onward, for the sake of Heaven." He accepted it, etc. The master explains that it is impossible that Moses should have consented to beget a son for idolatry. Moses' intention, however, differed from Jethro's: he did not intend actual idolatry, but work that was foreign to him. Moses bound his firstborn son to all his tasks, even stripping a carcass in the marketplace, in accordance with the intention of his words.

Yad Yehudah - מו - continued

Yad Yehudah - מז

"As he opened," etc.: that is, consequently the matter unfolded measure for measure, so that his grandson stumbled through this expression. As our Rabbis said in Bava Batra on the verse "They turned aside to him and said to him, 'Who brought you here?'": They said to him, "Do you not come from Moses?" etc. He said to them, "Thus have I received from my grandfather's house: A person should always hire himself out to avodah zarah and not depend on other people." He thought it meant actual idolatry, but it is not so; rather, work that is foreign to him. As Rav said to Rav Kahana, "Strip a carcass in the marketplace, and do not say, 'I am Kahana, I am a great man, and the matter is beneath me.'" When David saw that money was exceedingly dear to him, he appointed him over the treasuries, as it says, "Shebuel son of Gershom son of Moses was ruler over the treasuries." Was his name Shebuel? Was it not Jonathan? Rabbi Johanan said: It teaches that he returned to God with all his heart. End of quotation. The reason Moses did not fear that Jethro might force his son into actual idolatry, in accordance with Jethro's intention, is that Moses foresaw and knew that Jethro would convert first, before Gershom was born. [TN120105]

Yad Yehudah - מז - continued

Yad Yehudah - מח

Nevertheless, a covenant is made with the lips, and therefore his grandson came to this. Moreover, "around Him it storms exceedingly": the Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting with the righteous to a hair's breadth, all the more so concerning speech that is not light. There is also a third matter: Gershom was from the appearance of Moses' loins upward. For Moses is "the man of God": man from his middle downward, and God from his middle upward, as stated in the Midrash. The master has already explained this in the treatise Yonat Elem, chapter 24. Gershom was from his father's attribute, "and to pass from the stature of M.Sh." [?]. Therefore, when Jonathan son of Gershom strayed outward, he encountered other gods. [TN120106]

Yad Yehudah - מט

"And when he returned and was rectified": he came to the attribute of the holy God, and the Shekhinah rested upon him. For he was the prophet at Bethel, who afterward became a true prophet, as above, Part II, chapter 23.

Yad Yehudah - מט - continued

Yad Yehudah - נ

“For the people of Sodom”: although it was overthrown as in an instant, they were nevertheless not purified of their sin, “for like an impure woman, it ceased to be” [?]. From there it was still near to the aspect of Egypt. Moreover, they sinned, etc., in the King’s palace, as will be explained below, Part IV, chapter 5. Therefore their rectification weighed heavily upon us. [TN120107]

Yad Yehudah - נא

“Upon him”: pressing upon the burden of his inheritance [?], etc., etc.; “upon him”—upon his seed. [TN120108]

Yad Yehudah - נב

“So too it is precise”: in the word “upon himself” in the Mishnah’s language, as explained above, chapter 20.

Yad Yehudah - נג

“Corrupted the reading”: he did not retain the word “upon himself,” but “did not cut off, and the halakhah will make its way” [?], as we mentioned. The truth of the LORD is for ever. Amen and amen. [TN120109]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Corresponding above,” etc.: corresponding to the forty-two-letter Name. Just as the banners corresponded to the Shekhinah’s camp, as above, Part II, section 32, so the journeys correspond to the Shekhinah’s camp. This is “the mystery [?], our God, apart from You,” corresponding to the forty-two-letter Name. “Jerusalem built,” etc.: this is Malkhut above, and there are the forty-two journeys, “from when a person is below on earth, and he will flee in miracles, they were called; and according to the knowledge of their conquest, Israel below; and from their mouths, everything ... he gave understanding concerning them?” [?]. See Zohar Hadash, folios 118 and 112: “When the Holy One, blessed be He, brought Israel out of Egypt, He brought them out through the mystery of the Name of forty-two letters. Therefore they traveled twelve stages until they reached Mount Sinai.” Further: “They journeyed, tomorrow, thirteen days; a crown of stages [?] for each day”—thus forty-two. [TN120110]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“To explain their departures,” etc.: the Torah speaks first of the things above. These are their outlets on high, which are the cause and purpose of their journeys below. Therefore Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, wrote “their departures”; afterward he said, “These are their journeys” below, according to their outlets, the likeness above, “for they too directed,” etc. This resolves the repetition and variation in Scripture: at first “their departures” comes first, and afterward in the reverse order, “the laws” [?]. “Did not write this”: rather, he explains that the Torah speaks first of things below and alludes to things above; but the essential interpretation is as he explained. “At that time, however,” etc.: because Micah’s idol passed with them “on the day of distress.” [TN120111]

“Tending vineyards in purity”: as stated in the Gemara, Israelites outside the Land are idolaters in purity, etc. “Had this not occurred,” etc.: had they not sinned, how would the covenant between the pieces and subjection to the four kingdoms have been fulfilled? The answer is that all was said concerning the Egyptian exile. “Terror, darkness, great, falling”: as he explains, in Egypt they rectified the generation of the Flood and the Dispersion. “Within the boundary of his inheritance,” etc.: the king of Sodom was from the Land of Israel. Peor has the numerical value of Moses, with eleven left over, alluding to eleven shells. This is the mystery of the eleven steps on Mount Nebo, all of which Moses traversed in a single step, for Moses subdued them. “The rod of wickedness shall not rest,” etc.: if so, it must mean work that was foreign to him, not actual idolatry, as explained in the Gemara, Bava Batra, chapter Yesh Nohalin. “From the appearance of his loins,” etc.: those of Moses; whereas Eliezer issued from Moses’ loins from the appearance of his loins downward. See above, Part II, chapter 15, where it is explained, and examine it closely. “He corrupted the reading” and deleted the word “upon himself”: see the book Midrash Shemuel.

Return to chapter in contents

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 1 (א)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Upon the wholly righteous," etc.: corresponding to the image; penitents correspond to the likeness. Servants correspond to the likeness. Likewise, children correspond to the image, servants to the likeness. Likewise, strangers correspond to the likeness, settlers to the image. Likewise, the LORD corresponds to the image, God to the likeness. Likewise, knowledge corresponds to the image, free choice to the likeness. Likewise, study, which is contemplation, corresponds to the image, and action to the likeness. All will be explained below in the chapters marked before us, line upon line, command upon command. "Their degrees," etc.: those of penitents. "The truth of the matter," etc.: in truth their degree is higher than that of the wholly righteous, just as what is pure for sacred food is impure for the purification offering. We also find the reverse: the purification offering is less stringent concerning one who has immersed that day, etc. Certainly, then, the truth is that in one respect it is more stringent and in another less. Likewise

Rema of Fano

The image and the likeness are good degrees that the Omnipresent has bestowed upon us: upon the wholly righteous and upon penitents. Through them we have merited to be numbered before Him, whether as children or as servants. This is the meaning of "You are strangers and settlers with Me" (Leviticus 25:23), for "the LORD is God"; knowledge is free choice, and study is action. The Sages have already said: "In the place where penitents stand, the wholly righteous cannot stand." There is indeed a figurative expression in these words, to make their degree dear in their eyes. It accords with the truth of the matter, as in what we learned: "Purity for sacred food is like tread-impurity in relation to the purification offering." Although by Torah law someone who has immersed that day invalidates priestly gifts and sacred food, all the rites of the purification heifer were performed by a priest and with vessels that had immersed that day. [TN120112]

Likewise, peace from heaven comes first to the distant and afterward to the near. This is fitting judgment, in the sense of "I shall not enter the city" (Hosea 11:9), which they expounded to mean that He will not enter the upper Jerusalem first. The Shekhinah likewise may say to the Holy One, blessed be He, "I am not maintained above, since I do not effect here, penitents are higher in respect of turning away from evil, while the righteous are higher in respect of doing good, as he says at this chapter's end.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"In the sense of 'I shall not enter the city,'" etc.: see the Zohar, the portion Be-Shallah: "The praise that rises from this world, which is farther away, is more pleasing to the Holy One, blessed be He, than all." See there. Through awakening below there is awakening above, as explained in several places. Therefore He does not enter the upper Jerusalem until Israel enters the lower Jerusalem. The general point is that he brings proof that sometimes what is lower in degree is more important—sometimes. "I am not maintained," etc.: the influx does not come from above, "Sh." [?]; through the awakening of those below their good is brought about. [TN120115]

"The verb": "iniquity" is the noun, and the word "shall befall" is derived from iniquity. Thus "shall not befall" means that he will not come to a transgression. "With cattle dung," etc.: this is cattle excrement, which he accepted and acquiesced in, whereas he refused human excrement. What is the difference? His intention was that human excrement comes from the carrion and torn animals that people eat, and therefore he refused it. Although it is merely refuse, he kept away from ugliness and what resembles it. This excludes cattle dung, which comes from the green vegetation that the animals eat there. "For the serpent's instigation caused," etc.: for there is no righteous person on earth who does good and does not sin.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Concerning a righteous son of a righteous person," etc.: the Gemara answers that a righteous person who fares badly is a righteous son of a wicked person; a righteous person who fares well is a righteous son of a righteous person. The Gemara gives another answer: a righteous person who fares well is wholly righteous, etc. The author's view is that each of the two answers states a different matter, and they do not disagree: the son of a righteous person is wholly righteous. "Son of a righteous person" means in respect of reincarnation, for he is the reincarnation of a righteous person; therefore he fares well. This is unlike a righteous rectification below," when the generation is unworthy of it. Always the Shekhinah's principal dwelling is among those below, to settle those above in their tents. Nevertheless, this too belongs to the Torah's perfection and truth: all its figurative expressions are true in their plain meaning, as we explained above. The reason here is that penitents do not trust themselves until the day of their death, and guard their souls very carefully.

Rema of Fano - continued

It is true that concerning the wholly righteous it is written, "No iniquity shall befall the righteous" (Proverbs 12:21)—specifically this verb, derived from the noun. This is a great promise, that no transgression will come to his hand. For whence should it come, since he walks in his integrity? A righteous person will neither think nor dwell upon any evil thing. On the contrary, he separates himself and keeps far away even from the gates of what is permitted, so as not to touch so much as a hair's breadth of one of the gates of what is prohibited. So we find Ezekiel continually praising himself for not having eaten carrion or an animal torn to death. With this he sought exemption from His command, blessed be He, to bake a barley cake on human excrement. When He exchanged it for cattle dung, Ezekiel accepted and acquiesced. This was not from fastidiousness, but from keeping away from what resembles ugliness.

Thus Ezekiel said: Master of the universe, it is revealed and known before You that the people of my generation eat carrion, torn animals,

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

son of a wicked person in respect of reincarnation, who fares badly. This is the intention of the Midrash on the verse "Behold, Milcah too has borne sons," etc., "Uz," etc., which our Rabbis expounded: Abraham feared sufferings, and therefore He showed him Uz, who is Job. "To him he feared" [?] —rather, this is the matter we have discussed. Abraham supposed that because he was a righteous son of the wicked Terah, he would need to undergo sufferings. But as we said, the matter depends on reincarnation: one who was wicked at first and reincarnated to rectify his deeds, rather than an actual wicked father. Job was Terah's reincarnation, as is known to those versed in esoteric wisdom; he would endure the sufferings. So I heard. [TN120116]

"Which means now," etc.: hear now, immediately, as you are destined to hear. "In the rectification of his deeds": he rectified Ahaz's deeds. "By the term 'place'": they said, "In the place where penitents stand," as Rabbi Yoha indicated, "in the same place and with the same woman," etc. If so, the righteous person cannot stand there. [TN120117]

Yad Yehudah - א

"The image and the likeness," etc.: the Zohar, the portion Bereshit, page

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

13, says: “The ninth commandment is to show grace to the poor and give them sustenance, as it is written, ‘Let us make a human being in our image, according to our likeness.’ ‘Let us make a human being’—in partnership, comprising male and female. ‘In our image’—the rich; ‘according to our likeness’—the poor. The mystery of the poor is this: from the masculine side, the rich; from the feminine side, the poor. Just as they are in a single partnership and in lovingkindness, so this one gives to that one and bestows good upon it. Thus a human being below must have rich and poor in one partnership, each giving to the other and bestowing good upon the other,” etc. Thus image is a designation of the masculine, Tiferet; likeness of the feminine, Malkhut. These are good degrees for the wholly righteous, who possess the image, and for penitents, who complete the likeness.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Through which we have merited,” etc.: the designation “children” belongs to Tiferet, and “servants” to Malkhut, as stated in the Zohar, the portion Behar, page 215: “There are two degrees above with which a human being must be crowned. They are the mystery of faith, and they are one: one is the mystery of a servant, and one the detestable things, and creeping creatures, as stated in the chapter Heleq; and these become human excrement. Although their prohibition has lapsed and they are merely refuse, nevertheless, just as I have avoided an animal of which one cries “Slaughter, slaughter!” because it is close to becoming carrion, so shall I avoid dung that comes from carrion. He was glad of cattle dung, which comes from green vegetation. [TN120113] There is no doubt that the commandments performed through a man like him are in the utmost perfection, with integrity of heart and innocence of hands. He who examines hearts and kidneys alone observes and beholds their excellence, as we expound concerning them, “No eye has seen, O God, apart from You.” All the prophets prophesied only concerning penitents, for the serpent’s instigation caused even the perfected to be reckoned with them. It is plain that breath containing sin is not like breath containing no sin.

Rema of Fano - continued

The Sages have already drawn our attention, in the first chapter of Berakhot, to a righteous person who is the son of a righteous person, whom they call wholly righteous; and to a righteous person who is the son of a wicked person, who is not wholly righteous. This follows our accustomed approach, that any two formulations of this kind do not contradict one another. With this figurative expression, for someone who knows it and is accustomed to it, a splendid verse will delight our soul: what is said of King Josiah, “Before him there was no king mystery of a son. This servant is called ‘lord of all the earth,’” etc. See the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

“This is the meaning of ‘strangers and settlers’”: a stranger belongs to Malkhut and a settler to Tiferet. This likewise concerns the two holy Names.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The LORD is God”: comprising male and female. So too with knowledge and free choice, and study and action. All this will be explained in the coming chapters. Here he explains the first matter mentioned: the degree of the wholly righteous and penitents.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“The Sages have already said,” etc.: Rabbi Abbahu’s statement in the chapter Heleq, folio 99. He brings proof from the verse “Peace to the distant and to the near”: first the distant, afterward the near. What is “distant”? Distant originally. What is “near”? Near now. Rashi explains: “Cannot stand”—the power of penitents is so great that no creature can stand within their domain. “First the distant”—one who became distant from the Holy One, blessed be He, and afterward returned to Him in repentance; afterward, peace to one who was near from the beginning. [TN120118]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"A figurative expression": the matter is not literally as Rashi explained, for it is a hidden parable and figurative expression, intended to praise [?] their degree: in one degree they are greater than the wholly righteous, while in another the wholly righteous are greater than they, as will be explained at the chapter's end. The matter resembles purity for sacred food, which is like tread-impurity in relation to the purification offering because the latter's sanctity is more stringent. Yet in another respect the purification offering is less stringent than purity for sacred food: someone who has immersed that day, and likewise vessels that have immersed that day, are fit for the purification offering and unfit for sacred food.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Likewise": concerning the difficulty in Rabbi Abbahu's proof from "Peace to the distant," etc., that penitents are greater than the wholly righteous. Rather, the matter is as Galanti wrote on the verse "The ways of Zion": "'And she is embittered within like him who returned to the LORD." We do not know what his transgression or sin was that required this repentance. Rather, he was a righteous person who was the son of a wicked person—King Ahaz, to whom Isaiah said, "Hear now, house of David" (Isaiah 7:13). Since he said na, meaning "now," we learn that he would hear at a later time. Even at that time he was ashamed before his reprovers, as they supported from the verse "To the highway of the fuller's field": he pressed his face toward the ground before Isaiah. Iddo prophesied concerning the altar at Bethel, "Behold, a son shall be born to the house of David, Josiah by name," and speaks greatly of the rectification of his deeds, as is known. [TN120114]

Rema of Fano - continued

The general principle is that the wholly righteous are undoubtedly greater in doing good, while penitents are greater in turning away from evil. This is the division between Rabbi Abbahu and Rabbi Hiyya bar Abba in the chapter Heleq. It does not mean that one annuls his colleague's words, but accords with the rendering of "And the half was" as "And the division was": each stated half the matter, and both hold true. As for the designation of the penitents' excellence by the term "place," this accords with what Rav Judah indicated; we shall explain it.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

herself.' You already know that there are two kinds of influx. The first is to impart to those below. This is imparted to this attribute according to the deeds of those below: if they improve their ways, that influx will increase or diminish. The second is the influx imparted by Him, blessed be He, for their own sustenance as well. This does not depend on the deeds of those below, but always flows and issues from before Him and never ceases. Nevertheless, during exile Tiferet does not wish to receive that influx, so as to suffer in Israel's distress. This is 'In all their distress, He was distressed.' This is the Holy One's oath not to enter the upper Jerusalem, which is an upper union, to draw nourishment from the mystery of its splendor, until He enters the lower Jerusalem, Malkhut. Likewise, the influx of Malkhut, from what reaches it then: because of its exile it did not wish to receive it for itself. This is 'And she is embittered within herself': she willingly embitters herself on seeing the greatness of Israel's distress." End of quotation. Thus, in any event, she benefits only through transmission. He said that the Holy One, blessed be He, swore not to enter the house until He first enters her. So too with the wholly righteous person and the penitent, etc. [TN120119]

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Likewise": as the Sages said, a woman may say to her husband, "I am not maintained, and I do not work." According to the mystery, the Shekhinah, Malkhut, may likewise tell Tiferet that she does not wish to be maintained and receive the influx from above for herself, in order to suffer in Israel's distress, since she cannot impart it to them, as explained. Is it then from this that the Shekhinah is among those below for Israel's sake? In truth, its chief purpose is a need above. The matter is as our Rabbis said: the Shekhinah among those below is a need above, for through awakening below there is awakening above. So too here: the chief degree is that of the righteous.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Nevertheless": although the expression "In the place where penitents stand," etc., is merely figurative, it is nevertheless also true in its plain meaning. The penitent must rectify the place he damaged in the upper worlds. This is "In the place where penitents stand," not that they are greater than the wholly righteous, as Rashi explained. It will be explained at the end of the section.

Yad Yehudah - י

"Above": Part III, the end of chapter 13.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"The verb": it is "shall be acquitted" [?], which is derived from the noun; its meaning is that no transgression will come to his hand. [TN120120]

Yad Yehudah - יב

"So we find," etc.: incidentally the master explains Ezekiel's matter. The LORD, blessed be He, said, "You shall eat it as a barley cake, and you shall bake it on human excrement before their eyes," etc. Concerning this he said, "Alas, Lord GOD! Behold, my soul has not been defiled, and I have not eaten carrion or a torn animal from my youth," etc. The LORD, blessed be He, answered him, "See, I have given you cattle dung instead of human dung, and you shall make your bread upon it," etc. (Ezekiel 4). It requires explanation: what is his argument from carrion and torn animals to human dung, in which there is no prohibition at all? If his argument is an argument from disgust, "and what?" [?], heating with cattle dung would likewise be included. The master's view is that his argument concerned the prohibited foods from which the dung came, for his generation was accustomed to prohibited foods. Our Rabbis already expounded in chapter 2 of Hullin, folio 37b, concerning "I have not eaten carrion or a torn animal," that he had not eaten meat of "Slaughter, slaughter!" "And the force of this, he was answered?" [?]: "Behold, my soul has not been defiled"—I have not eaten meat from an animal in danger of dying, since it is close to carrion and torn-animal flesh is mingled in its meat. How, then, shall I eat from the dung of people who ate actual carrion and torn animals? Therefore He exchanged the dung for cattle dung, which contains nothing from carrion. [TN120121]

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

Yad Yehudah - יג

"And what is said," etc.: as stated there in the Gemara, Rabbi Hiyya bar Abba said in Rabbi Johanan's name: All the prophets prophesied only concerning penitents; but concerning the righteous themselves, "No eye has seen, O God, apart from You." We also say, "This differs from Rabbi Abbahu," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"For it read," etc.: that is, the statement that they prophesied only concerning penitents is always from the standpoint that there is no righteous person who does good and does not sin; for the heavens [gap] testify to a stain. In this respect we are all penitents, but nevertheless the wholly righteous are greater. [TN120122]

Yad Yehudah - טו

"And it is plain": that it is so, that the righteous are greater than penitents.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"The Sages have already informed us," etc.: that is, there is proof that a wholly righteous person is greater than a penitent, since a righteous son of a wicked person, in respect of his reincarnation, is not called wholly righteous and is inferior to him. All his good deeds serve to rectify his reincarnation —D.M.?—when he himself was wicked. Thus our Rabbis informed us, as stated there, folio 7, concerning Moses: He said before Him, "Master of the universe, why is there a righteous person who fares well and a righteous person who fares badly?" etc. He said to him, "Moses, a righteous person who fares well is a righteous son of a righteous person; a righteous person who fares badly is a righteous son of a wicked person," etc. It objects: Is it not written, "Visiting fathers' iniquity upon children," and also, "Children shall not be put to death for fathers"? We answer that there is no difficulty: this is when they hold fast, etc. Rather, this is what it says: a righteous person who fares well is wholly righteous; a righteous person who fares badly is not wholly righteous. The master explains that the Gemara's

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

"Rather, this is what it says" explains what it initially supposed. Its statement "a righteous person who fares well is a righteous son of a righteous person" means the son of a righteous person in respect of reincarnation. He is called wholly righteous, for his good deeds do not go toward rectifying his reincarnation. Its statement "a righteous son of a wicked person" likewise concerns reincarnation, as stated. He is a person who is not wholly righteous, for all the righteous deeds he performs are reckoned as righteousness and as rectification of his earlier reincarnation. [TN120123]

Yad Yehudah - יז

"According to the approach," etc.: as explained above, Part III, at the end of the chapter. [TN120124]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"King Ahaz": who reincarnated in him. Isaiah alluded to this when he told him, "Hear now," etc. (there, chapter 7): you will hear—hear now what you will hear in the future when you reincarnate.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"He was also among his reprovers": therefore he had to say, "Hear now." [TN120125]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"As they supported it," etc.: in the chapter Heleq, folio 104: Why did they not count Ahaz? Rav Joseph says: Because he was ashamed before Isaiah, as it says, etc. What is this "fuller"? That he pressed down his face.

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

Yad Yehudah - כא

"The general principle," etc.: the master now explains the matter: "In the place where penitents stand" refers to the degree of turning away from evil.

Yad Yehudah - כב

"This is their division": when the Gemara says, "This differs from Rabbi Abbahu," the intention is that Rabbi Hiyya's statement concerning the righteous person's excellence pertains to doing good. It differs from Rabbi Abbahu's statement, which explains the penitent's excellence in turning away from evil.

Yad Yehudah - כג

"And also that it was designated," etc.: this too explains the master's earlier statement that the figurative expression is also true.

Yad Yehudah - כד

"As Rav Judah indicated": in the same place, according to what is explained below, chapter 14, that repentance belongs to one of two worlds. The penitent must rectify the upper place he damaged; this too is the intention here.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 1

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 2 (ב)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Also": he comes—this comes to explain the distinction between sons and servants. "This designation in its essence": to say "son" in the singular only of the collective of Israel. This is "except to the collective." "And the saying 'The LORD said,'" etc.: it says "My son" in the singular. "If we interpret,"

Rema of Fano

Behold, our merciful Father is "one, and there is no second; He has neither son nor brother," in Ecclesiastes' words. This designation does not properly apply in its essence except to the collective, in the sense of "Israel is My son, My firstborn" (Exodus 4:22). As for "The LORD said to me, 'You are My son'" (Psalms 2:7), if we interpret it plainly concerning King David, peace be upon him, he too came etc. "From his soul": David's, for he was the first Adam's reincarnation and comprised all souls, all of which depended upon the first Adam's eifah [?], as stated in the Midrash. "Yet he did not open," etc.: this is another answer to the difficulty of the singular expression "My son." "Begins with ashrei," etc.:

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

for “Happy is the man” and “Why do the nations rage” are a single passage, as is known. “Concerning Solomon it is written,” etc.: another difficulty, for it says “a son to Me” in the singular. “This is the kingdom of Israel”: Israel Sava, who rules over those above and those below, as is known to those versed in esoteric wisdom. [TN120127]

“There is no doubt,” etc.: now he explains the degree of servants mentioned above, for anyone who dwells outside the Land is called a servant. “For these matters follow the heart’s intention,” etc.: sometimes a discerning servant—one who engages in the plain meaning with good intention—rules over someone who engages in the Torah’s mysteries. See the Zohar, Behar: “This servant is called lord of all the earth,” meaning the attribute of the crown. “Son, as we have established: Israel is My son, My firstborn”—he is called a shameful son when he engages in it without intention. “Except perfecting another,” etc.: like Moses, who had no connection to this world and was created only for Israel, as stated above; he is called a faithful servant, a degree higher than a son. “A man of God,” etc.: man is Tiferet, and God is Malkhut. “Concerning forth to teach concerning the whole collective, declaring the end from the beginning. This is known from his soul, through which he indicated an obligation greater than that of any other to contemplate creation’s wonders, as he said, “Your works are wondrous, and my soul knows very well” (Psalms 139:14). For it saw and apprehended them before the primordial sin, in their radiance and their form; it surveyed them all in a single glance, from one end of the world to the other.

Rema of Fano - continued

Yet David did not open his book with that beloved, praiseworthy psalm, which begins with ashrei and ends with ashrei, through his own person or through one of the ten singing elders. Rather, its unstated attribution is as clear as an explicit one: it concerns the congregation of Israel. His words “The LORD said to me, ‘You are My son’” thus correspond to “Israel is My son, My firstborn” (Exodus 4:22). Concerning Solomon it is written, “I shall be a father to him, and he shall be a son to Me” (1 Chronicles 17:13), on account of what was to come, as said of him, “Solomon sat on the throne of the LORD” (1 Chronicles 29:23). Our Rabbis said that he ruled over those above and those below. This is truly the kingdom of Israel. There is no doubt that princes walk as servants during their sojourns outside the Land. It is written, “You are strangers and settlers with Me” (Leviticus 25:23)—as it were, actually with Me, in the sense of the exile that Rabbi Simeon ben Yohai expounded in the chapter Bene ha-Ir, and His returning with them from the exiles.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

these,” etc.: concerning Malkhut being called a servant they said, “It is a woman’s way to serve her husband”; concerning the male servants, they said, “It is children’s way,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - א

“Behold, our Father,” etc.: after explaining in the preceding chapter the distinction between the wholly righteous and penitents, the master now explains the distinction between the previously mentioned designations “sons” and “servants.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

“One, and there is no second,” etc. (Ecclesiastes 4): in Midrash Rabbah this is expounded concerning the Holy One, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“It does not properly apply”: to use the designation “sons” except concerning all Israel. So it is stated there in Midrash Rabbah: “He has neither son nor brother,” but the Holy One, blessed be He, loved Israel and called them sons.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“And the saying ‘The LORD said,’” etc.: do not object from David, who said of himself “The LORD said to me, ‘You are My son,’” in the passage “Why do the nations rage.” This too properly applies to him from the collective aspect within him, namely his soul, for he was the first

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Adam's reincarnation and comprised all the generations within it. It is known that all the generations destined to exist depended upon the first Adam's eifah [?]. [TN120128]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Declaring from the beginning": the LORD, blessed be He, said this concerning him in the first Adam's days.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"As is known from his soul": which was the first Adam's soul.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Through which he indicated," etc.: the intention of his words "The LORD said to me," etc., is to show that upon him lies the obligation to contemplate the wonders of the One perfect in knowledge, blessed be He, more than upon anyone else. For his soul too saw and apprehended His wonders, blessed be He, in their proper state, before the first Adam's sin. Therefore David said this verse, "The LORD said,"

Rema of Fano - continued

[TN120126]

One who contemplates the Torah's mysteries, however, is called a son, while one who engages in the plain meaning of matters is called a servant. It is written, "A discerning servant will rule over a shameful son" (Proverbs 17:2), for these matters follow the heart's intention. Whoever has perfected himself in hidden and revealed matters, and has no business in his world except perfecting another, tending to him according to the needs of the time, is called a faithful servant, in recompense for his service to increase Heaven's honor. This too gives a praiseworthy explanation of the saying "I do not know where my soul is going," which we explained above. For the spirit of human beings is the attribute of sons, whereas the animal soul, with all the elevation expounded concerning it, is the attribute of servants. Such a person is also called "a man of God," meaning a servant who is the son, like Moses, Elijah, Elisha, and their companions, as will be explained with Heaven's assistance. Concerning these the Sages said: It is a woman's way to serve her husband, and children's way to serve their father.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

etc., as an introduction to the book of Psalms. That is: it befits me more than anyone else to utter songs and praises before Him, blessed be He, because of my soul, which comprises all the generations and knows His wonders very well. On its account, "The LORD said to me, 'You are My son.'"

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Yet": we do not need to say that "You are My son" was said of him because of his soul, since the truth is that David did not say this of himself, but of all Israel. It is not fitting that David should have opened his book with this psalm, by himself or another of the singers, concerning himself. Although this verse occurs in the second psalm, our Rabbis already said in the first chapter of Berakhot that "Happy is the man" and "Why do the nations rage" are a single passage. Moreover, it is a very beloved psalm, as they said there: every passage that was dear to David he began with ashrei and ended with ashrei. Certainly, then, he said it concerning the congregation of Israel, and the designation "You are My son" properly applies.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Concerning Solomon," etc.: likewise, one cannot object from Solomon, of whom it is written, "He shall be a son to Me." This too was said concerning him from the standpoint of the entire kingdom of Israel, since he was king over those above and those below, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - י

"This is the kingdom of Israel": of which Jonathan said to David, "The kingdom of Israel shall be established in your hand."

Yad Yehudah - יא

"There is no doubt," etc.: this too proves that the designation "son" does not properly apply to an individual. Even our holy fathers, the LORD's chosen ones, were in the aspect of servants, as Ecclesiastes said, "Princes walking as servants upon the earth." This was fulfilled in them when they went outside the Land, concerning which—

Yad Yehudah - יב

"It is written, 'For you are strangers,'" etc.: the Shekhinah too goes with them, and they are with her—strangers with them outside the Land, and settlers in the Land.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Which Rabbi Simeon ben Yohai expounded," etc.: "How beloved Israel is before the Holy One, blessed be He, for everywhere they were exiled, the Shekhinah was with them," etc. "Even when they are destined to be redeemed, the Shekhinah is with them, as it says, 'The LORD shall return,' etc. It does not say, 'shall bring back,'" etc.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"It is written, 'A discerning servant,'" etc. (Proverbs 17): engaging in the Torah's mysteries is superior only when one's intention is for Heaven's sake, to know the LORD, His honor and greatness. One who engages in them other than for Heaven's sake is inferior to someone who studies the plain meanings for their own sake.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Whoever has perfected," etc.: this is explained in the Zohar mentioned above: he must not remove himself from the category of servant, in order to be included in the mystery of faith.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"Except perfecting another": see there in the Zohar, where this too is explained, as it says, "A servant performs his master's service and effects an upper rectification."

Yad Yehudah - יח

"In recompense for his service": to establish the mystery of faith above, Tiferet and Malkhut, so that both are included as one.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"This too," etc.: with this reasoning we can also explain the statement of Midrash Rabbah on the verse "Who knows the spirit of human beings," etc. Moses said, "I do not know where my soul is going. I entrust these upon her [?]; rely, wherever she goes she is well secured." The master has already explained this saying in different ways above, in Part III. Here he finds it fitting to explain it concerning the attribute of sons, Tiferet, which is called "the spirit of human beings"—specifically bene, sons—and concerning the attribute of servants, Malkhut, which is the holy animal spirit: "I am more brutish than any brute," as above, Part III, chapter 7. Moses was uncertain whether his soul's portion belonged to Tiferet or Malkhut. [TN120129]

Yad Yehudah - יט - continued

Yad Yehudah - כ

As in the Midrash mentioned in Part III, chapter 7.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"A man of God": a designation of these two degrees —name, Tiferet; God, Malkhut. [TN120130]

Yad Yehudah - כב

"Concerning the two": Tiferet and Malkhut, the Sages said, etc. For Malkhut in relation to Tiferet is in the aspect of a handmaid to her husband; likewise Tiferet, in relation to the attributes above it, is in the aspect of a son to a father.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"One who contemplates," etc.: the master further explains the distinction between the degree of son and the degree of servant. This is from the Zohar, the portion Behar, page 215: "When a human being knows the Holy One, blessed be He, in a general way, he is called a servant, who performs his master's command but has no permission to search [?] the treasures and mysteries of his house. When a human being knows Him in a particular way, he is called His beloved son, like a son who searches the treasures and all the mysteries of his house. Although he is called a son, a firstborn son to the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is said, 'Israel is My son, My firstborn,' he must not remove himself from the category of servant, serving his father in all the services that are his father's honor," etc. "The mystery of the matter: there are two degrees above with which a human being must [?] be crowned. They are the mystery of faith, and they are one: one is the mystery of a servant, and one the mystery of a son. This servant is called lord of all the earth; the son is as we have established, 'Israel is My son, My firstborn.' All is the mystery of faith. A human being must be crowned with these degrees, to be included in the mystery of faith," etc. He also says there: "One who labors in Torah to know the Holy One, blessed be He, in a general way is to be called a servant. When he labors to know Him in a particular way, through the mystery of wisdom, he is called a son," etc. See there.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 2

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 3 (ג)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ה · ז · ח · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לה · לו · לז · לח · לט · מ · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד · נה · נו · נז · נח · נט · ס · סא · סב · סג · סד · סה · סו · סז · סח · סט · ע · עא · עב · עג · עד · עה · עו · עז · עח · עט · פ · פא · פב · פג · פד · פה · פו · פז · פח · פט · צ · צא · צב · צג · צד · צה · צו · צז · צח · צט · ק · קא · קב · קג · קד · קה · קו · קז · קח · קט · קי · קיא · קיב · קיג · קיד · קטו · קטז · קיז · קיח · קיט · קכ · קכא · קכב · קכג · קכד · קכה · קכו · קכז · קכח · קכט · קל · קלא · קלב · קלג · קלד · קלה · קלו · קלז · קלח · קלט · קמ · קמא · קמב · קמג · קמד · קמה · קמו · קמז · קמח · קמט · קנ · קנא · קנב · קנג · קנד · קנה · קנו · קנז · קנח · קנט · קס · קסא · קסב · קסג · קסד · קסה · קסו · קסז · קסח · קסט · קע · קעא · קעב · קעג · קעד · קעה · קעו · קעז · קעח · קעט · קפ · קפא · קפב · קפג · קפד · קפה · קפו · קפז · קפח · קפט · קצ · קצא · קצב · קצג · קצד · קצה · קצו · קצז · קצח · קצט · קק · קקא · קקב · קקג · קקד · קקה · קקו · קקז · קקח · קקט · קקי · קקיא · קקיב · קקיג · קקיד · קקטו · קקטז · קקיז · קקיח · קקיט · קקכ · קקכא · קקכב · קקכג · קקכד · קקכה · קקכו · קקכז · קקכח · קקכט · קקל · קקלא · קקלב · קקלג · קקלד · קקלה · קקלו · קקלז · קקלח · קקלט · קקמ · קקמא · קקמב · קקמג · קקמד · קקמה · קקמו · קקמז · קקמח · קקמט · קקנ · קקנא · קקנב · קקנג · קקנד · קקנה · קקנו · קקנז · קקנח · קקנט · קקס · קקסא · קקסב · קקסג · קקסד · קקסה · קקסו · קקסז · קקסח · קקסט · קקע · קקעא · קקעב · קקעג · קקעד · קקעה · קקעו · קקעז · קקעח · קקעט · קקפ · קקפא · קקפב · קקפג · קקפד · קקפה · קקפו · קקפז · קקפח · קקפט · קקצ · קקצא · קקצב · קקצג · קקצד · קקצה · קקצו · קקצז · קקצח · קקצט · קר · קרא · קרב · קרג · קרד · קרה · קרו · קרז · קרח · קרט · רי · ריא · ריב · ריג · ריד · ריה · ריו · ריז · ריח · ריט · רכ · רכא · רכב · רכג · רכד · רכה · רכו · רכז · רכח · רכט · רל · רלא · רלב · רלג · רלד · רלה · רלו · רלז · רלח · רלט · רמ · רמא · רמב · רמג · רמד · רמה · רמו · רמז · רמח · רמט · רנ · רנא · רנב · רנג · רנד · רנה · רנו · רנז · רנח · רנט · רס · רסא · רסב · רסג · רסד · רסה · רסו · רסז · רסח · רסט · רע · רעא · רעב · רעג · רעד · רעה · רעו · רעז · רעח · רעט · רפ · רפא · רפב · רפג · רפד · רפה · רפו · רפז · רפח · רפט · רצ · רצא · רצב · רצג · רצד · רצה · רצו · רצז · רצח · רצט · רק · רקא · רקב · רקג · רקד · רקה · רקו · רקז · רקח · רקט · רקי · רקיא · רקיב · רקיג · רקיד · רקטו · רקטז · רקיז · רקיח · רקיט · רקכ · רקכא · רקכב · רקכג · רקכד · רקכה · רקכו · רקכז · רקכח · רקכט · רקל · רקלא · רקלב · רקלג · רקלד · רקלה · רקלו · רקלז · רקלח · רקלט · רקמ · רקמא · רקמב · רקמג · רקמד · רקמה · רקמו · רקמז · רקמח · רקמט · רקנ · רקנא · רקנב · רקנג · רקנד · רקנה · רקנו · רקנז · רקנח · רקנט · רקס · רקסא · רקסב · רקסג · רקסד · רקסה · רקסו · רקסז · רקסח · רקסט · רקע · רקעא · רקעב · רקעג · רקעד · רקעה · רקעו · רקעז · רקעח · רקעט · רקפ · רקפא · רקפב · רקפג · רקפד · רקפה · רקפו · רקפז · רקפח · רקפט · רקצ · רקצא · רקצב · רקצג · רקצד · רקצה · רקצו · רקצז · רקצח · רקצט · רקק · רקקא · רקקב · רקקג · רקקד · רקקה · רקקו · רקקז · רקקח · רקקט · רקקי · רקקיא · רקקיב · רקקיג · רקקיד · רקקטו · רקקטז · רקקיז · רקקיח · רקקיט · רקקכ · רקקכא · רקקכב · רקקכג · רקקכד · רקקכה · רקקכו · רקקכז · רקקכח · רקקכט · רקקל · רקקלא · רקקלב · רקקלג · רקקלד · רקקלה · רקקלו · רקקלז · רקקלח · רקקלט · רקקמ · רקקמא · רקקמב · רקקמג · רקקמד · רקקמה · רקקמו · רקקמז · רקקמח · רקקמט · רקקנ · רקקנא · רקקנב · רקקנג · רקקנד · רקקנה · רקקנו · רקקנז · רקקנח · רקקנט · רקקס · רקקסא · רקקסב · רקקסג · רקקסד · רקקסה · רקקסו · רקקסז · רקקסח · רקקסט · רקקע · רקקעא · רקקעב · רקקעג · רקקעד · רקקעה · רקקעו · רקקעז · רקקעח · רקקעט · רקקפ · רקקפא · רקקפב · רקקפג · רקקפד · רקקפה · רקקפו · רקקפז · רקקפח · רקקפט · רקקצ · רקקצא · רקקצב · רקקצג · רקקצד · רקקצה · רקקצו · רקקצז · רקקצח · רקקצט · רקקק · רקקקא · רקקקב · רקקקג · רקקקד · רקקקה · רקקקו · רקקקז · רקקקח · רקקקט · רקקקי · רקקקיא · רקקקיב · רקקקיג · רקקקיד · רקקקטו · רקקקטז · רקקקיז · רקקקיח · רקקקיט · רקקקכ · רקקקכא · רקקקכב · רקקקכג · רקקקכד · רקקקכה · רקקקכו · רקקקכז · רקקקכח · רקקקכט · רקקקל · רקקקלא · רקקקלב · רקקקלג · רקקקלד · רקקקלה · רקקקלו · רקקקלז · רקקקלח · רקקקלט · רקקקמ · רקקקמא · רקקקמב · רקקקמג · רקקקמד · רקקקמה · רקקקמו · רקקקמז · רקקקמח · רקקקמט · רקקקנ · רקקקנא · רקקקנב · רקקקנג · רקקקנד · רקקקנה · רקקקנו · רקקקנז · רקקקנח · רקקקנט · רקקקס · רקקקסא · רקקקסב · רקקקסג · רקקקסד · רקקקסה · רקקקסו · רקקקסז · רקקקסח · רקקקסט · רקקקע · רקקקעא · רקקקעב · רקקקעג · רקקקעד · רקקקעה · רקקקעו · רקקקעז · רקקקעח · רקקקעט · רקקקפ · רקקקפא · רקקקפב · רקקקפג · רקקקפד · רקקקפה · רקקקפו · רקקקפז · רקקקפח · רקקקפט · רקקקצ · רקקקצא · רקקקצב · רקקקצג · רקקקצד · רקקקצה · רקקקצו · רקקקצז · רקקקצח · רקקקצט · רקקקק · רקקקקא · רקקקקב · רקקקקג · רקקקקד · רקקקקה · רקקקקו · רקקקקז · רקקקקח · רקקקקט · רקקקקי · רקקקקיא · רקקקקיב · רקקקקיג · רקקקקיד · רקקקקטו · רקקקקטז · רקקקקיז · רקקקקיח · רקקקקיט · רקקקקכ · רקקקקכא · רקקקקכב · רקקקקכג · רקקקקכד · רקקקקכה · רקקקקכו · רקקקקכז · רקקקקכח · רקקקקכט · רקקקקל · רקקקקלא · רקקקקלב · רקקקקלג · רקקקקלד · רקקקקלה · רקקקקלו · רקקקקלז · רקקקקלח · רקקקקלט · רקקקקמ · רקקקקמא · רקקקקמב · רקקקקמג · רקקקקמד · רקקקקמה · רקקקקמו · רקקקקמז · רקקקקמח · רקקקקמט · רקקקקנ · רקקקקנא · רקקקקנב · רקקקקנג · רקקקקנד · רקקקקנה · רקקקקנו · רקקקקנז · רקקקקנח · רקקקקנט · רקקקקס · רקקקקסא · רקקקקסב · רקקקקסג · רקקקקסד · רקקקקסה · רקקקקסו · רקקקקסז · רקקקקסח · רקקקקסט · רקקקקע · רקקקקעא · רקקקקעב · רקקקקעג · רקקקקעד · רקקקקעה · רקקקקעו · רקקקקעז · רקקקקעח · רקקקקעט · רקקקקפ · רקקקקפא · רקקקקפב · רקקקקפג · רקקקקפד · רקקקקפה · רקקקקפו · רקקקקפז · רקקקקפח · רקקקקפט · רקקקקצ · רקקקקצא · רקקקקצב · רקקקקצג · רקקקקצד · רקקקקצה · רקקקקצו · רקקקקצז · רקקקקצח · רקקקקצט · רקקקקק · רקקקקקא · רקקקקקב · רקקקקקג · רקקקקקד · רקקקקקה · רקקקקקו · רקקקקקז · רקקקקקח · רקקקקקט · רקקקקקי · רקקקקקיא · רקקקקקיב · רקקקקקיג · רקקקקקיד · רקקקקקטו · רקקקקקטז · רקקקקקיז · רקקקקקיח · רקקקקקיט · רקקקקקכ · רקקקקקכא · רקקקקקכב · רקקקקקכג · רקקקקקכד · רקקקקקכה · רקקקקקכו · רקקקקקכז · רקקקקקכח · רקקקקקכט · רקקקקקל · רקקקקקלא · רקקקקקלב · רקקקקקלג · רקקקקקלד · רקקקקקלה · רקקקקקלו · רקקקקקלז · רקקקקקלח · רקקקקקלט · רקקקקקמ · רקקקקקמא · רקקקקקמב · רקקקקקמג · רקקקקקמד · רקקקקקמה · רקקקקקמו · רקקקקקמז · רקקקקקמח · רקקקקקמט · רקקקקקנ · רקקקקקנא · רקקקקקנב · רקקקקקנג · רקקקקקנד · רקקקקקנה · רקקקקקנו · רקקקקקנז · רקקקקקנח · רקקקקקנט · רקקקקקס · רקקקקקסא · רקקקקקסב · רקקקקקסג · רקקקקקסד · רקקקקקסה · רקקקקקסו · רקקקקקסז · רקקקקקסח · רקקקקקסט · רקקקקקע · רקקקקקעא · רקקקקקעב · רקקקקקעג · רקקקקקעד · רקקקקקעה · רקקקקקעו · רקקקקקעז · רקקקקקעח · רקקקקקעט · רקקקקקפ · רקקקקקפא · רקקקקקפב · רקקקקקפג · רקקקקקפד · רקקקקקפה · רקקקקקפו · רקקקקקפז · רקקקקקפח · רקקקקקפט · רקקקקקצ · רקקקקקצא · רקקקקקצב · רקקקקקצג · רקקקקקצד · רקקקקקצה · רקקקקקצו · רקקקקקצז · רקקקקקצח · רקקקקקצט · רקקקקקק · רקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקטו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקטז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקיט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקכט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקל · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקלט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקמט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקנט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקס · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקסט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקע · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקעט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקפט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצ · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקצט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקק · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקא · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקב · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקג · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקד · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקה · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקו · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקז · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקח · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקט · רקקקקקקקקקקקקקקי · רקקקקקקקקקקקק

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

reincarnated in them, as stated in the Zohar in several places.

"Joseph had to enter," etc.: this is stated in the Zohar, Va-Yishlah, which gives another reason for Joseph entering in Isaac's place. But according to both explanations I find a difficulty: why were only twenty-eight years counted for Jacob, up to Abraham's years? Why not count another five, to reach the years of his father Isaac, as with Abraham? This requires examination. "The solar days": three hundred and sixty-five days. "Counts as a year": that distinct portion, a quarter of a day, is reckoned as a year. Thus there are three hundred and sixty-six days, the numerical value of shem YHVH, three hundred and sixty-six. "And Havayah with a filling equal to its root"—this is how it should read. It is the Name of fifty-two, thus: yod-vav-dalet, he-he, vav-vav, he-he. Shaddai and the Name of fifty-two total three hundred and sixty-six.

"Between donim [?], shin-yod and dalet?": these allude to the Name revealed and concealed, for within the name Shaddai too are included "Sh.K., yod" [?]. Between the letters "shin-dalet" [?] there is dalet, alluding to Havayah revealed and concealed, namely the value of ta'anit, "fast." This was on that day at the time of the afternoon offering, concerning which it is written, "Let my prayer be established as incense before You": its initial letters are T.T.Q.L., nine hundred and thirty; its final letters are nittakh, "melted." For he decreed upon himself the melting of his blood through fasting, as stated. Nine hundred and thirty, together with dam, "blood," has the numerical value of the nine hundred and seventy-four generations "who were snatched away before their time." He labored for their rectification, in the sense of "I shall teach transgressors Your ways, and sinners shall return to You." Thus he bore the sin of many, like someone who seeks mercy for his fellow while needing the same thing himself: justice requires that he be answered first. Likewise, tefillati, "my prayer," has the numerical value nine hundred and thirty, for the dagesh in the lamed comes in place of a yod, as is known. It is written, "The lifting of my hands, an evening offering." This was the first prayer of those who came into the world; therefore our Rabbis particularly admonished us concerning the afternoon prayer. We learned in the chapter Ha-Tekhelet that the golden altar is inaugurated only with the incense of the late afternoon. Incense is a service performed quietly and by individuals, as is known, alluding to service of the heart and concentration of thought: to direct one's intention well and be alone with it. [TN120132]

Rema of Fano - continued

Before the sin, these seventy years were fitting for our first father to complete the thousand, living them as a wholly

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

name Havayah with its filling as well, and its four letters: "seventy-eight, shin, K.H., Sh.K." [?]. See the book Olam Qatan, which pertains to this, and you will find satisfaction. "For My name is within him": its final letters have the numerical value twenty-six, like the name Havayah, "giyonot?" [?]. [TN120135]

"A settler like Enoch": through the patriarchs he merited the degree of stranger, which corresponds to likeness; through Enoch, the upper radiance, image. This is called a settler. Henceforth there is no difficulty as to why he needed two gifts, from the patriarchs and from Enoch and his companions. Examine it closely. "Sprang upon them": see the Zohar, Bereshit.

Yad Yehudah - א

"The known," etc.: the master now explains the distinction between stranger and settler, which he mentioned in chapter 2. He says that from the sense [?] of stranger he also intended the term settler. The matter is that through the first Adam's sin holy powers fell among the shells, as did the souls of converts, "which accompany and beget?" [?]. "And the distinctive Name is what returns to us" [?], as the master wrote in the treatise E.K.H., section 8? This is indicated by the term stranger: it is so called because of its sojourning in this world with the shells. Nevertheless, by the term settler he intended "the Holy One, blessed be He" [?], which never fell among the shells. [TN120136]

Yad Yehudah - א - continued

Yad Yehudah - ב

"In the sense of" what is written, "You know the stranger's soul, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt": the intention is that you too, in respect of your souls, were strangers in the land of Egypt, since they were captive in Egypt's shell, as he wrote in the treatise H.Q., section 3, chapter 26? As our Rabbis similarly said, every— [TN120137]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"And David's soul": included and honored [?] through stranger and settler.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"That Adam is traced to Jared," etc.: they gave him his seventy years, as will be stated below. [TN120138]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Who were settlers": everything is in accordance with what our Rabbis said. [TN120139]

Yad Yehudah - י

"He set aside from these": as will be stated below.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"When he sought": this was when he sought repentance [?] and sought mercy. Incidentally, the righteous person: "He shall yet live for ever; he shall not see the pit." After the sin they too were his, through the LORD's compassion for him, for He desires lovingkindness: He would forbear until the end of a thousand years, together with twilight, but in the manner of a penitent. Although he reconsidered and set them aside for David, he nevertheless required assistance, for a prisoner cannot release himself, and David's guarantor himself needed a guarantor. They said in the aggadah that the gift was written in a book, and the Holy One, blessed be He, Metatron, and Adam signed it. Thus far.

Rema of Fano - continued

This book is the book of the righteous, opened on the first Rosh Ha-Shanah. The Holy One, blessed be He, and Metatron signed as witnesses to the matter; Adam acknowledged it by his signature, as though their testimony had been examined in court. Alternatively, the Holy One, blessed be He, signed—He in whose hand is the soul of every living being, of whom it is written, "You give life to them all"—to give David life after his falling, owing to the character of his birth, as is known. Metatron signed for what Enoch and his companions set aside, and Adam for what the patriarchs set aside, since he was in trust with them.

The patriarchs, as strangers, yielded to David from their own years: Abraham five years, falling short of Isaac's years; Jacob twenty-eight, falling short of Abraham's; and Joseph, in Isaac's place, thirty-seven, falling short of Jacob's. Together they numbered seventy years, master explains his repentance.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

"But in the Holy One's day": which is a thousand years. He sought to prolong the time of the decree so that he could repent.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"At the hour when He set him up?": for in the tenth hour he fled, and in the eleventh he was judged.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"With the judgment?": its numerical value is nine hundred and seventy-four, corresponding to the nine hundred and seventy-four generations decreed "to the chamber, which?" were snatched away before their time. [TN120140]

Yad Yehudah - טו

"In the sense of" what David said to Solomon, etc.: this corresponds to the first Adam, from whom many [?] came, namely the generations before him. [TN120141]

Yad Yehudah - טז

"And it may also be?": that is, what he intended at the time when he burned the late-afternoon incense [?] was that the incense alludes to prayer.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"In secret"—inside the Sanctuary, and with a single priest. [TN120142]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Service of the heart": this is prayer.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"And before," etc.: one cannot object, How did Adam set aside all seventy years for David? Surely they were not his to give. Even according to his prayer, he surely had to die within the Holy One's actual day, before the thousand years were completed, as it says, "On the day you eat," etc. In fact they were his, for he prayed to the LORD that it should be the entire day [?], including twilight, like the blink of an eye, so that he could live all thousand years. The reason is that Adam initially was to live a full thousand years without dying, and afterward live for ever. For it is written, "On the day you eat from it, you shall surely die": its meaning is, if you eat from it within the day, namely within a thousand years, you shall surely die afterward, when the day has passed. It follows that if he did not eat from it throughout the day, he would afterward live for ever. Therefore his repentance and prayer achieved half: to live the whole day and die afterward.

Yad Yehudah - כ

But the seventy years were his only as they belong to a penitent.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"Nevertheless, he needed": its confirmation, as will be stated below, namely that the Holy One, blessed be He, and Metatron signed

Rema of Fano - continued

as explained in the Zohar. Joseph had to enter in Isaac's place because Isaac accepted the judgment of death upon himself at the binding, in his thirty-seventh year; consult the end of the treatise Em Kol Hai. Likewise, among the settlers we mentioned, who were the choicest of those generations, we find that Jared yielded thirty-eight years to him, and Methuselah thirty-one—the years each lacked from a thousand. As for Enoch, to complete his days and years, since he is the prince of the world, it was sufficient for them to complete the solar days, a day for a year. The sun's circuit is completed only in approximately three hundred and sixty-five days and a quarter. This is a distinct portion and counts as a year in what Enoch set aside, for he was fit to live as many years as the numerical value of shem YHVH, "the name of the LORD," in the sense of "His name is like his Master's," said concerning Metatron. This means Shaddai, and Havayah with a filling equal to its root, which we mentioned in Part II, chapter 31. It is written, "For My name is within him": be-qirbo has the numerical value shin-yod, with dalet in the middle alluding to four letters. These, like the name Shaddai, are concealed and revealed in a full name, as we said. [TN120133]

Of this it is said concerning David: a stranger like Abraham and his companions, a settler like Enoch and his companions—thus, "like all my fathers." He said, "I am a stranger with You," indicating the present; but "a settler" will be fulfilled in our Messiah. Alternatively, "with You" serves both this document; likewise, that his fathers, Isaac and his companions, should confirm it for him. Without this reason, how could he be required to rectify David and give him seventy years as a gift, when he himself was confined and needed this? [TN120143]

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

Yad Yehudah - כב

"In the aggadah's account": in Yalqut Bereshit on the verse "This is the book of Adam's generations." He passed all the generations before him and showed him David, for whom three hours of life were inscribed. Adam said before Him, "Master of the universe, is there to be no remedy for this one?" He said, "Thus it arose in thought before Me." He said, "How many are the days of the years of my life?" He said, "A thousand years." He said, "Is there a gift in heaven?" He said, "Yes." He said, "Let seventy of my years belong to this destiny." What did Adam do? He brought the document and wrote a deed of gift upon it, and the Holy One, blessed be He, Metatron, and Adam signed it, etc. This is "Behold, I have come; in the scroll of a book it is written concerning me."

Yad Yehudah - כג

"This book," etc.: the master explains that this document, of which it says "This is the book of Adam's generations” and also “Behold, I have come; in the scroll of a book,” was the book of the righteous opened for him, for that day was Rosh Ha-Shanah.

Yad Yehudah - כג - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

what precedes and what follows. So too he says of himself, “I was young”: like Enoch, who was chosen in his youth to serve on high; “I have also grown old”: like the fathers of the world, upon whom old age sprang.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“Witnesses”: Adam’s signature was to confirm the matter, and the signatures of the Holy One, blessed be He, and Metatron were to confirm it by signature.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“It is written, ‘And life,’” etc.: even those upon whom death has been decreed, You give life. [TN120144]

Yad Yehudah - כז

“As what Enoch set aside”: he is Metatron, who together with his companions also set aside the seventy years for David, as will be stated.

Yad Yehudah - כח

For the first Adam, in respect of his nefesh, ruah, and neshamah, was to bestow upon them, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“As strangers,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ל

He yielded five years to Abraham; Abraham lived one hundred and seventy-five. [TN120145]

Yad Yehudah - לא

Jacob, who lived only one hundred and forty-seven years, yielded twenty-eight years.

Yad Yehudah - לב

Joseph, who lived one hundred and ten years.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“Seventy years,” which the upper David needed in order to subsist through them: explained in the Zohar, Va-Yishlah, page 168; see there.

Yad Yehudah - לה

“Likewise, the settlers”: Jared, Enoch, and Methuselah.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“Who were of the number of those generations”: each should have lived a thousand years, like Adam. Jared lived nine hundred and sixty-two years, and Methuselah nine hundred and sixty-nine. They yielded to David the years remaining to complete a thousand.

Yad Yehudah - לז

Enoch, who lived three hundred and sixty-five years, certainly had enough with these and was not fit to be in this world for more than the number of the solar days. The sun circuits the world in three hundred and sixty-five days and a quarter. His years were a day for a year, since he was prince of the world. Yet corresponding to the quarter-day, which is reckoned as a whole day because part of a day is like its entirety, he should have lived one more year. This he yielded to David. The total set aside by these three is seventy.

Yad Yehudah - לז - continued

Yad Yehudah - לח

“In what Enoch set aside”: his years were a day for a year, and he should have had more.

Yad Yehudah - לט

“For he was”: know that the number three hundred and sixty-six was fitting for the completion of his days, for this is the number “as written, YHVH” [?]. He too is called by the Name, as it is written of him, “For My name is within him.” Our Rabbis said: this is Metatron, whose name is like his Master’s and has the numerical value of Shaddai. [TN120146]

Yad Yehudah - מא

“Equal to its root”: the filling likewise totals twenty-six.

Yad Yehudah - מב

“And the M.?” etc.: the reason it is reckoned this way is that all is alluded to in “For My name is within him.” Be-qirbo has the numerical value shin-yod; “My name” is dalet, which points [?] to the four letters of the name Havayah. When you place dalet between shin and yod, there is Shaddai concealed, as in the words “My name is within him.” Also reckon the Name’s revelation [?], Havayah, for Scripture does not depart from its plain meaning. In “For My name,” the intention is the name Havayah, whose full spelling totals alephs [?], as below. [TN120147]

Yad Yehudah - מג

“Concerning this, in his saying?” etc.: this concludes the earlier matter, David’s words “For I am a stranger with You, a settler like all my fathers." Namely, "a stranger like Abraham," etc., for all these were his fathers, from whom his days and years were allotted.

Yad Yehudah - מג - continued

Yad Yehudah - מד

"But a settler": "I am with You" was not said concerning it, because it was not fulfilled in David himself, "because not the attribute of his fathers?" [?]. Nevertheless, it was fulfilled in the Messiah, "who will finish, as touching my days?" [?]. [TN120148]

Yad Yehudah - מה

"Alternatively": David himself too is a settler, through "days in his name?" [?], called Enoch and his companions. According to this, the word "with You" would also be referred [?] forward to the word "settler." [TN120149]

Yad Yehudah - מו

"Likewise": concerning this matter David, peace be upon him, said, "I was young; I have also grown old," etc. (Psalms 37). The intention is: I was like Enoch, who walked with God while still a youth. As is known, this is why Metatron too is called a youth. "I have also grown old": I was like the fathers of the world, who were old and advanced in days. For from all these come the generations of my life. See the Zohar, Hayyei Sarah, page 67.

Yad Yehudah - ג

One who dwells outside the Land is like someone who has no God [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ד

[Frozen-source gap; recovered from print: "One who desires"] to dwell thus—[frozen-source gap; recovered from print: "that is[?] the wicked one of whom our Rabbis said in the Passover Haggadah, 'Had he been there, he would not have been redeemed.'"] [TN120150]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"These matters reach," etc.: this was already explained above, Part III, chapter 17 [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ט

"A righteous son of a righteous person": in its plain meaning and also in respect of his soul's reincarnation, as stated on the verse "Good?" etc. (Ecclesiastes 7). See the Zohar that he quotes below, Part IV, chapter 18 [gap]. See also the Zohar, Terumah, page 229, in Sitrei Torah.

Yad Yehudah - כה

For then too [gap].

Yad Yehudah - לד

"For Isaac," etc.: there in the Zohar [gap]. The master explains this matter: from the binding onward, Isaac was regarded as dead, for he accepted the judgment of death upon himself. Moreover, his soul actually flew away. From then onward he had nothing to set aside for David. Therefore Joseph entered in his place and set aside thirty-seven years on Isaac's behalf, corresponding to the thirty-seven years before the binding.

Yad Yehudah - מ

This means Shaddai [gap].

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 3

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 4 (ד)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ה · ו · ז · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יז · יט · כ · כא · כד · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · ג · ד · ח · יד · יח · כב · כג · כה · כו

Yoel Moshe - 1

"For He chose," etc.: because the LORD chose, etc., through this we know that Jerusalem is the choicest place, the opposite of the stranger's soul and dwelling outside the Land, as above, chapter 2. For

Rema of Fano

"For the LORD has chosen Zion; He desired it as His dwelling." We know that Jerusalem is the choicest inhabited place for attaining the divine favor and the holy spirit. The people dwelling in it had their iniquity borne away, as befits a one who dwells in the Land of Israel merits the aspect of settler: this is the gate of heaven for attaining the LORD's favor, blessed be He. "In the king's palace": even when one sins against him, one does not commit a great sin, because of shame before him. So Jerusalem bore away iniquity, which is deliberate sin, because it is the palace of the King, the Holy One, blessed be He. “In his sojourning”: outside Jerusalem. “The blind and the lame”: these were two powers of impurity that he brought among them when they gathered, “prototha of sin” [?], as in the parable of the lame man: he sets the lame man upon the blind man. Both were in Balaam, lame and blind, “with a closed eye” and “shefi.” “Leading contemplation astray” corresponds to the image; “destroying action,” to likeness. “Its impurity,” etc.: that of dam tevusah, which defiles; therefore we take care not to render ourselves unfit through impurity. [TN120154]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

What he writes on the reverse of the page, “all the configurations,” etc.: all souls depended upon him, as in “You are My son” in the preceding chapter. Therefore they could not dispossess them, for this action was assigned specifically to David. “All his curses,” etc.: the curses David pronounced against Joab were fulfilled in David’s seed when Joab was killed, as stated in the aggadah of Heleq. “They will not be able” is written, in the future tense: they would not be able, for although they dispossessed king’s son in the king’s palace. As long as David our king was in his state of sojourning, the Jebusite dwelling in Jerusalem prevailed against him, together with the blind and the lame, hated by David’s soul, whom the intermediary of sin brought among them, as is known from the parable of the lame man. Both were present in Balaam. The blind led contemplation astray, and the lame destroyed action; they are great obstacles to completing the image and likeness of which we spoke. There is no doubt that the name Jebusite derives from dam tevusah: a mixture of blood that issued during life and blood that issued after death, in the sense of the doubled death of which the first Adam was warned, which we explained. Its impurity, which is rabbinic, contains a great admonition to all of us not to injure ourselves. This suffices as an indication. [TN120151]

Rema of Fano - continued

Once David reigned over all Israel, which is the unification of all the configurations, he trusted that both this and that would be established in his hand, as Ezekiel promised, “I shall make them one nation, and one king shall be king over them all.” This completes the promise we mentioned in chapter 2, “The LORD said to me, ‘You are My son,’” concerning both the collective and the individual, as above. Therefore King David, peace be upon him, proclaimed throughout Israel’s camp: “Whoever strikes a Jebusite shall reach the channel.” He did not need to specify the reward, for whoever strikes the Jebusite will certainly reach the channel of favor, to carry out His mission and succeed; them, it did not remain in our hands, since the Temple was destroyed.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“For knowledge,” etc.: an introduction to this is what the master Rabbi Ezer wrote in Imrei Binah: intellect, the intellectual knower, and the intelligible object are the first three. Cognition is K.E., in the mystery of nothingness; the knower is Hokhmah, in the mystery of something from nothing; and the known is Binah, where the six extremities are present in potential, in the mystery of something from something. Knowledge, which is Tiferet in its inclusion of the six extremities, is in all this a connection and union, “and the known,” for there everything is in the mystery of “Your people are all righteous.” It is written, “He knows what is in darkness,” etc. From this he brings proof that Atsilut is called knowledge. “He set the wicked person’s way far away”; therefore there is coupling and connection there. But through the diminution of the moon, which is Malkhut in the mystery of “one wheel upon the earth,” the damage done by sins causes separation of knowledge from free choice, which belongs to Malkhut. Through the new-moon goat offering, it returns to cognition. His mention of the designation

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

cognition accords with the Zohar, Ra'aya Mehemna: ascend with him as far as Keter. [TN120155]

In truth, knowledge is for good; it is true, so that no banished one remains banished from Him, and all is destined to be rectified. If you say, Then free choice is not unrestricted—L.A.—the truth is indeed so, for unrestricted free choice is the attribute of the foolish servant. But before it, it is written, "I shall reign over you," in any event. "Let the righteous be called," etc.: in any event, honor is the comprehensive rectification, as below, chapter 11. At first, through sins, she diminishes herself. See the treatise Em Kol Hai, section 17. [TN120156]

Yad Yehudah - א

"For it was chosen," etc.: the master now explains knowledge and free choice, mentioned in chapter 2, and prefaces this with Jerusalem's excellence.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"In the king's Zion": it is more fitting at the outset as a site for a palace. So it was with David: as long as he was outside, outside Jerusalem, when he reigned in Hebron over Judah and not in Jerusalem, the Jebusite opposed him.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"In Balaam": who was lame and blind, as our

Rema of Fano - continued

there is no greater reward. Therefore they gave him what was his, to become chief and commander. Since Joab merited this, all his curses reawakened retroactively and were afterward fulfilled in the curser's seed, after he himself had specified his reward.

In Joshua's days it is written, "The children of Judah could not dispossess the Jebusites dwelling in Jerusalem." In the Sifrei, the portion Re'eh, Rabbi Joshua ben Qorhah said: They could, but they were not permitted. The reason is that this commandment was assigned specifically to David and his men. Still, "they will not be able" is written, although "they could not" is read, for it has not remained established in our hands because of our sins and our fathers' iniquities. [TN120152]

Just as that place is a gathering place for those who possess image and likeness at a time of favor, so knowledge and free choice were first united there, in the sense of "Now I know," said at the binding, for which we already opened gates of light in the preceding part. This too belongs to what we are explaining. For knowledge itself is a connection and union with cognition, the knower, and the known. It is written, "He knows what is in darkness, and light dwells with Him." For He is the place of light, and light is not His place: someone in the light does not see what is in darkness. But through the moon's diminution, free choice became distinct. Atonement through the sin-offering goat avails to return free choice to cognition.

Yad Yehudah - ה - continued

Rabbis said in the chapter Heleq, from "with a closed eye" and "he went shefi."

Yad Yehudah - ו

"To complete the image and likeness": damage to contemplation prevents image, and damage to action prevents likeness.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"There is no doubt": the Jebusite was a mixture of those two powers of impurity, for the name indicates this, corresponding to the expression dam tevusah, a mixture of blood from before death with blood from after death, as explained in the Gemara, Keritot.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"And with bihehato?" [?], etc.: the master explains the intended reason why the Rabbis decreed impurity upon dam tevusah: to admonish through it concerning "Guard your souls very carefully," so that we do not cause our own death when it is not for the sake of a commandment. [TN120157]

Yad Yehudah - י

"Once David reigned," etc.: he returns to the earlier statement that while David was in Hebron the Jebusite opposed him, but once he reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel—

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Which is the unification of all the configurations": when they were one nation, he did not fear him; his heart was firm and trusting.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

Yad Yehudah - יב

“That this is, and this is the kingship?”: when they were one nation, it would be established in his hand.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“For this is the completion of the promise” that the Holy One, blessed be He, made to him, “You are My son,” etc. Above we expounded it concerning the collective, the congregation of Israel, and concerning the individual, David himself, since he possessed the first Adam’s soul, upon whom all Israel’s souls depended. Certainly a man with these qualities is fit to unify the configurations, so that they become one nation for him.

Rema of Fano - continued

Unrestricted free choice, without the rod of discipline, is the attribute of the foolish servant, who serves when sent [?] and intends his own benefit. If he rebels against his master, his master will sell him permanently, as happened to the generation of the Dispersion, and as in the saying “He saw and released,” when He shone from Seir and appeared from Paran and released them from the seven commandments. To sons, however, it is said, “He will teach him the way he should choose”; and it is written, “I shall reign over you,” in any event, for “the LORD is a God of knowledges, and by Him deeds are weighed.” This is the meaning of “Go and diminish yourself,” and “Let the righteous be called by your name,” as we shall explain adequately in the treatise Ha-Me’orot ha-Gedolim, with Heaven’s assistance. [TN120153]

Yad Yehudah - יג - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

“And according to the approach,” etc.: their saying in chapter 3 of Sanhedrin, folio 48b, is known: the curses David pronounced, “May there never fail from Joab’s house one with a discharge, or a leper,” etc., were all fulfilled in David’s seed. The master explains the intention of what Scripture says: because “at the time of ascending rams?” [?]—Joab’s reward for striking the Jebusite, “which are raised?” [?]—he reached the channel of favor; therefore his curses reawakened against himself. [TN120158]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“In Joshua’s days,” etc.: the master also explains the intention of the Sifrei’s statement.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“They could”: although the written future form “they will not be able” implies that they were not able.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Just as,” etc.: he returns to Jerusalem’s excellence. Just as it is a place for those who possess image and likeness—that is, the wholly righteous and penitents—so knowledge and free choice were united there at first, before the moon’s accusation, when Tiferet and Malkhut adhered as one. So it was the place of knowledge and free choice, image and likeness, as mentioned above, chapter 2. Jerusalem was prepared for this because it corresponds to Malkhut, the upper Jerusalem, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“In the sense of ‘Now I know,’” which we mentioned in the preceding part, chapter 10: now, at this binding, “I know,” for knowledge has extended into the present. See there.

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

Yad Yehudah - כא

“This too,” etc.: it can also be explained according to our approach: Abraham said this because he stood on Mount Moriah, which is the site corresponding to the upper Jerusalem. [TN120159]

Yad Yehudah - כד

“But through the moon’s diminution,” etc.: this refers back to the statement that knowledge and free choice were first united in Jerusalem, before the moon’s accusation, when the luminaries adhered as one, as explained in the treatise H.K.M.?, Part I, chapter 5. After the accusation, however, the moon diminished in the mystery of free choice, becoming a womb for agents; free choice required [gap] good and evil. See the treatise Ha-Middot, M.D. [TN120160]

Yad Yehudah - כז

“To the generation of the Dispersion,” whom the blessed Name destroyed; this was explained above. [TN120161]

Yad Yehudah - כח

“And they stretch?” [?]: “He saw and released the nations,” which they expounded: He saw that they had not fulfilled their seven commandments, so He arose and released them. The reason is that even at a time of proper conduct they intend only their own benefit. [TN120162]

Yad Yehudah - כט

“To sons, however”: whose way is not to serve in order to receive a reward, “as in, they will sing?” [?], etc. This is also what Scripture says, “Surely with a strong hand and with wrath poured out I shall reign over you.” [TN120163]

Yad Yehudah - ל

“This is the meaning”: after the moon made her accusation, the Holy One, blessed be He, told her, “Go and diminish yourself.” Afterward He appeased her, saying, “Let the righteous be called by your name,” as stated there, 60b. The diminution also concerned choosing good, “that it should be, that she should be?” [?]—this choice too would be other than for Heaven’s sake. This is “Diminish yourself,” specifically yourself. The intention of this appeasement was that the righteous, who choose good for Heaven’s sake, would be called by your name. [TN120164]

Yad Yehudah - לא

“In the two luminaries”: this is in the treatise H.K.M.?, Part I, from chapter 5 onward; see there. [TN120165]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“With the blind and the lame”: the master explains the intention of what Scripture says: “The king and his men went to Jerusalem, to the Jebusite dwelling in the land. He said to David, ‘You shall not come here unless you remove the blind and the lame,’ saying, ‘David shall not come here.’ David captured the stronghold of Zion, which is the City of David. David said on that day, ‘Whoever strikes a Jebusite shall reach the channel, and the lame and the blind, hated by David’s soul,’” etc. (2 Samuel 5). He says that the blind and the lame were two powers of impurity. The Sages gave a parable for the matter in the chapter Heleq concerning body and soul on the day of judgment: A king had an orchard and placed two guards in it, one lame and one blind, etc. What did he do? He mounted the lame man upon the blind man and judged them as one, etc. The parable too is true; “to understand a parable and a figurative expression,” the intention concerns two powers of impurity [gap].

Return to chapter in contents

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

[gap]

Yad Yehudah - ח

In the sense of the doubled expression “You shall surely die,” said to the first Adam, which we learned above, Part III, chapter 5 [gap].

Yad Yehudah - יד

“He did not need,” etc. [gap], and he will reach above, to the channel of favor that desires this, so that the person who strikes the Jebusite is an emissary of favor, above which there is nothing. The influx in this world naturally follows, to become compassion and lovingkindness.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“And still, behold them, whom David dispossessed” [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כב

“For knowledge,” etc. [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כג

“It is written, ‘He knows,’” etc. (Daniel 2) [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כה

“And the atonement” [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כו

“However,” etc.: here the master explains that there are two kinds of free choice. The first is choosing good and rejecting evil out of self-love, so that the LORD will treat him well [gap]. The second is a person’s choosing good because the LORD desires it, intending solely to do His will, blessed be He, without regard for reward [?] [gap], the rod of discipline, for “whom the LORD loves He reproves.” This free choice is not unrestricted like the first, for He has already given him, from the standpoint of free choice, the choice of the opposite. [TN120166]

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 4

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 5 (ה)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט

Yoel Moshe - 1

"If in the utmost unity," etc.: an introduction from the treatise Olam Qatan is needed. In the world of Atsilut, although the name Elohim is used there for Binah and Malkhut, this is borrowed usage. Elohim itself appears only through the name Havayah. In Havayah filled with he letters, thus yod-vav-dalet, he-he, vav-vav, he-he, the concealed part consists of five letters, corresponding to the five letters of Elohim. Thus the concealed part of Havayah is the source of Elohim. This is the mystery of the five knots in the fringes. See Bahya, who at its end wrote concerning the four kings against the five, and concluded there, "The LORD is God"; examine it closely. Thus in Atsilut, image alone is revealed, while Elohim, corresponding to likeness, is not revealed at all. In Beriah there is greater revelation, and the name Elohim, corresponding to likeness, appears. Nevertheless, Havayah, which is image, prevails over it. Therefore it is called the world of the throne, ha-kisse, with the numerical value of Elohim. Since it is a masculine world, Havayah prevails.

Rema of Fano

Concerning the saying "Let us make a human being" (Genesis 1:26), the Sages explained in Bereshit Rabbah: "He consulted His heart; He consulted the ministering angels; He consulted the souls of the righteous; He consulted the work of heaven and earth." For our Rabbis all is true, because He considered every manner of employing image and likeness. If in the utmost unity, as we shall mention, then concerning the perfection of this governance, He consulted His heart. When image rules over likeness, He consulted the ministering angels, in the sense of the living creatures that bear the throne—not through toil or exertion, but the throne rejoices and bears its bearers, as is known. When likeness rules, through which penitents become beloved, with image accompanying it, He consulted the souls of the righteous: the mystery of each person's forms, as explained in the treatise Ha-Nefesh. Alternatively, "He consulted the souls of the righteous" may concern the first icon that we explained there; this would be image's rule over likeness. "He consulted the ministering angels" would then concern likeness's rule, with image accompanying it in its work. This is more correct; consult chapter 15 there. When likeness alone rules, He consulted the work of heaven and earth.

Come and see: when God, blessed be He,

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

In Yetsirah, Elohim, likeness, prevails; nevertheless Havayah is also revealed there, although likeness, Elohim, prevails over it, because the feminine world begins there. In Asiyah, which belongs wholly to the feminine world, only the inclusion of Elohim, likeness, is revealed. A second introduction: in Atsilut are the illuminations of the first icon—nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, yehidah. This is called the soul of the soul, the upper arrangement, the upper image. There is another degree below this, called the second icon, the form of the upper likeness: nefesh from Asiyah, ruah from Yetsirah, neshamah from Beriah. There is a third degree called the lower image, comprising two shadows, in the sense of "and like the shadows" [?]. It is a garment of the neshamah, attached to the body. One shadow is a garment of ruah, and one a garment of nefesh, so that these parts adhere completely to one another. Since one is subtler than another, an intermediary is needed. A fourth degree is called vital spirit: the sensing, growing, and inanimate soul. This is called the lower likeness. Thus there are upper image, lower image, upper likeness, and lower likeness—four degrees. See chapter 12 on how the surrounding lights and "o." [?]. [TN120168]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"He consulted His heart": this is the Shekhinah, in the mystery of "He was grieved at His heart." It is the highest degree, where even likeness is reckoned as image and Elohim is included in Havayah. This is called the utmost unity, where the name Elohim is not revealed, as above. "When image rules," etc.: this is in Beriah, where Elohim is revealed but Havayah rules over it. "He consulted the ministering angels": these are the living creatures that bear the throne, for Beriah is the world of the throne. "When likeness rules": this is Yetsirah, where the name Elohim, likeness, rules over image, Havayah; yet Havayah accompanies it in any case. "He consulted the souls of the righteous": it is the reverse, for the ministering angels are in Yetsirah. Therefore he says, "Alternatively, 'He consulted the souls of the righteous' may concern the first icon," with image ruling over likeness. Although he says "first" and it is the second, one may answer that for the alone undertook to create the human being in His own person and glory, He consulted His heart and created him in His image. Likeness was not mentioned by name at all; it too was included in its root. This is the reason for the verse's repetition, "In the image of God He created him." When He consulted the souls of the righteous, He said, "Let us make a human being in our image, according to our likeness." On account of the consultation with the ministering angels, it is said at Seth's birth, at the height of the first Adam's repentance, "He begot in his likeness, according to his image" (Genesis 5:3). From the consultation with the work of heaven and earth it is said, "God created a human being; in the likeness of God He made him" (Genesis 5:1), in the sense of "On the day you eat from it, you shall surely die" (Genesis 2:17): he was delivered to the celestial arrangement on the very day of creation, in the manner we explained at the beginning of chapter 21 of the treatise Ha-Nefesh. This is why Scripture placed it beside the book of Adam's generations: since it wished to say what the measure of his days was, it also began by showing that the sin on the day of his coming into being caused the human being's end to be death.

Rema of Fano - continued

At Cain's and Abel's births, however, none of this was mentioned; no consultation applied to them at all. The Torah did not speak of those dead from the outset. The Rabbis attached all these consultations to the verse "Let us make a human being," which is a governing model for the whole subject, explicitly first Adam, the handiwork of the Holy One, blessed be He, it is reckoned the second icon, whereas for us it is the first. See chapter 14 and you will understand this explicitly.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"And the ministering angels," etc., "when likeness rules," etc.: this is Yetsirah, the world of angels. "This is more correct," etc.: according to this, the ministering angels are in their own place, in Yetsirah; there is no need for the strained explanation that the living creatures bear the throne, etc., as above. "The work of heaven and earth," etc.: this is Asiyah. "In the verse's repetition," etc.: it indicates likeness included in image—specifically, "in the image of God." "The souls of the righteous," etc.: according to the second interpretation we gave above, alluding to Beriah, it says, "In our image, according to our likeness": image rules over likeness. "He begot in his likeness, and according to his image": likeness rules over image in Yetsirah. "According to the likeness of God," etc.: image is included in likeness. [TN120169]

"On the day you eat," etc.: just as it says here "on the day of creating," on that very day he was sold to the celestial arrangement in Asiyah. This is specifically "He made him," asah. This too is alluded to in "you shall surely die": he was placed under nature, to be judged day by day. "Scripture placed it beside," etc.: the verse "on the day of creating" is placed beside "This is the book of Adam's generations," etc., to tell and recount the measure of Adam's days, which the sin caused, on the day he was created. Hamalakhah, consultation, comes from nimlakh, consulted. "The Rabbis attached," etc.: our Rabbis expounded "He consulted His heart," as well as the souls of the righteous and the work of heaven and earth, all concerning the verse "Let us make a human being," as stated at this chapter's beginning. Although each exposition concerns its own verse—"in the image of God" and all the other verses brought above—this is a governing model. "In it agreed": in image and according to likeness, the created being's cognition, namely the souls, agreed with the higher cognition.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"Image is the thing itself," etc.: it says be-tsalmenu with bet, and likeness with the kaf of comparison, ki-demutenu with kaf. "You are gods" first corresponds to image; afterward "sons of the Most High" corresponds to likeness. In relation to "sons of the Most High," Elohim is higher, whereas in relation to Havayah it is called mentions image and likeness, and expresses the created being's agreement —comprising the souls of the righteous —with the higher cognition. Through this we know how precious the saying "Let us make a human being in our image, according to our likeness" is in its revealed plain meaning: image is the thing itself, while likeness is by analogy. It is like "I said, 'You are gods'" first, and afterward "all of you sons of the Most High" (Psalms 82:6), as it is written, "I shall be like the Most High" (Isaiah 14:14). Image and likeness were then fit to rule over those above and those below.

Rema of Fano - continued

Concerning this we learned: "Beloved is the human being, who was created in an image." It brings the verse written later, in the portion Noah. For from image alone in the portion Bereshit one can expound something higher, as we said, and the tanna does not discuss it, for "No eye has seen, O God, apart from You." There in the portion Noah, Scripture reveals that it speaks of both, image and likeness, by first saying, "Whoever sheds the blood of the human being, by a human being" (Genesis 9:6). All the interpretations truly stated concerning the doubled death of which our first father was warned, as above in Part II, properly apply to this doubling.

It is readily understood that for sons, who are the wholly righteous, repeated study is absolutely greater. This is the hidden treasure in which Israel rejoices in its Maker, as in what we learned: "Beloved are Israel, who are called the Omnipresent's sons." For servants, who likeness, as above. "Later, in the portion Noah," etc.: it says, "In the image of God He created the human being." This differs from the verse in Bereshit, "In the image of God He created him," from which something higher can be expounded: Elohim is included in image, and likeness is not revealed at all, as above. The tanna of the Mishnah does not discuss this great reward, for "No eye has seen," etc. The verse he brings and explains in the portion Noah, however, concerns both image and likeness, by first saying, "Whoever sheds blood," etc. Some death pertains to likeness, in the manner of "Her feet descend to death."

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"All the interpretations," etc.: this is what he wrote in Part II, chapter 5, and the reason for the doubling, "that the hand began" [?], etc.; see there. Likewise, "Whoever sheds the blood of the human being, like a human being": while he is in the world he dies every day, through the power of the lower likeness, the vital spirit. [TN120170] "Repeated study is greater," etc.: study and contemplation are greater than action, according to an introduction from the Ari's teachings. On the first day one must rectify more through thought, corresponding to Beriah; on the second through speech, corresponding to Yetsirah; on the third through action, corresponding to Asiyah. Of this he said, “It is time to act for the LORD; they have annulled Your Torah.” At first they needed only speech, orally, rather than action. Now, after the sin, we need to rectify through action and writing. This is “I shall write for him the many things of My Torah,” but are penitents, action is absolutely greater. Here belongs “Beloved are Israel, to whom a precious instrument was given.” It afterward says, “Through which the world was created,” to indicate its ordering through the explicit matters alone. For its hidden matters belong to the LORD our God, and His instrument of craftsmanship in them is the treasure itself. All is explained in the passage “The LORD acquired me at the beginning of His way.” Examine it closely and you will find it. [TN120167]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Rema of Fano - continued

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“they were reckoned as foreign” after the sin. Therefore writing and rectification through action became necessary and unavoidable. A wholly righteous person’s damage reaches only as far as Beriah; therefore he rectifies through thought. See what is written below, chapter 10, concerning the mystery of thought. The penitent rectifies through action, corresponding to Asiyah.

“The hidden treasure,” etc.: this excludes the precious instrument, which is the revealed aspect, as below, at the beginning of chapter 6. “Its ordering through explicit matters,” etc.: this is the world’s revealed conduct, order, and habitation. Without judgment, truth, and peace the world would not endure. This excludes hidden matters in the world’s conduct, such as knowledge and free choice, or a righteous person who fares badly, which are explained in the Torah’s mystery, the treasure. The author intends to explain the Mishnah: “Beloved are Israel, who are called the Omnipresent’s sons,” corresponds to image, as above; “Beloved are they, to whom a precious instrument was given,” is likeness, the servant’s degree.

Yad Yehudah - א

“Concerning the saying ‘Let us make a human being,’” etc.: the master returns to image and likeness, with which he began the treatise.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“For He considered,” etc.: chapter 1 already explained that image designates Havayah, and likeness the name Elohim. According to the arrangement of these two great luminaries there were four aspects, corresponding to the four worlds, Atsilut, Beriah, Yetsirah, and Asiyah. First was complete unity, in Atsilut, for the LORD is God. Second was image’s rule over likeness, in Beriah, where the name Elohim is revealed. For the upper Mother nests there in the three upper sefirot; therefore it is called the world of the throne, ha-kisse, whose numerical value is Elohim. Nevertheless, Havayah prevails there. Third was likeness’s rule over image, in Yetsirah, where Elohim prevails, for the lower Mother nests in Metatron. The fourth aspect was likeness’s rule alone, in Asiyah, whose entire basis comes from judgment; all judgments are also powerful there. Elohim alone is revealed, and Havayah is included within it. The master explains that the four consultations mentioned in Bereshit Rabbah corresponded to these four aspects, as will be explained below.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Concerning the perfection of this governance”: in Atsilut, He consulted His heart, which designates Atsilut, from which come the generations of life for all emanated and separate beings, as explained above, Part I, chapter 3.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“When image rules”: in Beriah. Concerning this they said, “He consulted the ministering angels.” The throne is called ministering angels because it serves its Maker and bears its bearers.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“When likeness rules”: in Yetsirah, where penitents, who correspond to likeness as mentioned in chapter 1, are transformed through it. There, “there the souls of the righteous, great” [?]; concerning this they said, “He consulted the souls of the righteous.” The intention is each person’s forms, which include penitents too. [TN120171]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Alternatively”: their saying “He consulted the souls of the righteous” concerns actual righteous people and the aspect of the first icon, according to what is explained in the treatise Ha-Tselem, the treatise Olam Qatan, and other places. The souls of the first icon are from Atsilut, comprising all five parts of the soul: nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, and yehidah. It comprises the three forms in which we were imaged. The lower icon comprises nefesh, ruah, and neshamah, extending from the three worlds Beriah, Yetsirah, and Asiyah: nefesh from Asiyah, ruah from Yetsirah, and neshamah from Beriah. This, however, includes the natural nefesh and ruah, the vital soul; see there. Although the first icon is from Atsilut, its revelation could occur only through diminution in the successive unfolding of those worlds, in the aspect of image’s rule over likeness, as in Beriah. Accordingly, “He consulted the ministering angels” corresponds to Yetsirah, the world of angels.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“This is more correct”: according to this, “the souls of the righteous” and “the ministering angels” mean actual righteous people and ministering angels. We do not have to force an interpretation concerning the throne and penitents.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“When likeness alone rules”: in Asiyah. This is “He consulted the work of heaven and earth.”

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Come and see”: this reasoning resolves why, at the human being’s creation, it sometimes mentions image alone, sometimes likeness alone, sometimes both with image first, and sometimes likeness first. These correspond to the four aspects mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - י

“This is the reason for the repetition in the verse”: after saying “God created the human being in His image,” it says again, “In the image of God He created him,” to include likeness, which is comprised within image.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“When He consulted the souls of the righteous”: according to the second interpretation, image precedes likeness, as in Beriah, where Havayah prevails.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“On account of the consultation with the ministering angels”: in Yetsirah, where Elohim prevails; therefore likeness comes first. This was in the sense of “the Ts.R.Y., repentance” [?], and penitents are transformed through it, as mentioned. [TN120172]

Yad Yehudah - יג

“From the consultation with the work of heaven and earth”: likeness rules in Asiyah; therefore likeness alone is mentioned in the verse “On the day of creating,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“In the sense of ‘On the day you eat’”: “on the day of creating” is to be interpreted like “on the day you eat”: on that day he passes under the arrangement and the natural constellations, and this is his death. This occurred on the very day he was created. Even without sin, Elohim alone created him, the name of judgments; “Elohim spread beneath him” [?], for the judgments were powerful in him and he was delivered to the celestial arrangement. [TN120173]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“This is why Scripture placed it beside,” etc.: the verse “This is the book of Adam’s generations; on the day of creating,” etc., “Adam lived,” etc., seems difficult. It should have said only “This is the book of Adam’s generations; Adam lived,” etc. Why interrupt with “On the day God created”? What does it come to inform us, since it already mentioned the human being? According to what we said, it is fitting: when Scripture comes to mention the first Adam’s allotted days, it first says, “This is the book of Adam’s generations; on the day of creating.” On the day he was created, this caused his days in the world to come to an end.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“At their births, however,” etc.: Scripture does not mention that Cain and Abel were born in his likeness, according to his image, as it does concerning Seth, because they were destined for death from the outset, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“The Rabbis”: although the verse “Let us make a human being” mentions only image’s rule over likeness, they nevertheless attached all four consultations to this verse for the following reasons: it is a governing model for consultation itself, in saying “Let us make”; and another reason is that in this verse—

Yad Yehudah - יז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Both are mentioned”: image and likeness. This differs from the other verses, where only one is mentioned concerning Adam himself. Third, because the entire intention of this verse is to say—

Yad Yehudah - יט

“The created being’s cognition agreed”: namely, the throne, the ministering angels, and the souls of the righteous agreed with the LORD’s cognition, blessed be He, that He should make a human being.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“In the revealed plain meaning”: it says “in our image” from the standpoint of the human being’s entire soul, which is a portion of God above. “In our image” refers to the LORD Himself, blessed be He. It says “according to our likeness” from the standpoint of the speaking, intellectual soul included in the human being’s essence, in which he resembles the ministering angels; “according to our likeness” refers to the angels. Thus it says “in our image” with bet and “according to our likeness” with the kaf of comparison. This is a very precious and honorable designation.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“In the sense of” the verse (Psalms 82), “I said, ‘You are gods’”—in our image; that is, “in our image” first, and afterward “sons of the Most High,” by analogy, for [gap] an expression of comparison, as it is written, “I shall be like the Most High.”

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Over those above and those below”: image over those above, likeness over those below. So the verse “Let us make a human being” concludes: “Let them rule over the fish of the sea, the birds of heaven, and all the earth.” The fish of the sea are the greater and lesser retinues, and the birds of heaven are the angels.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Concerning this we learned,” in chapter 3 of Avot: “Beloved is the human being, who was created in an image,” etc., as it says, “For in the image of God He made the human being.”

Yad Yehudah - כד

“For image alone,” etc.: that is, he ought to have brought the verse “God created the human being in His image,” written at the beginning of Bereshit. The reason is that the tanna discusses the totality of the human soul, which was in the image of God in the plain meaning, rather than the first icon among the upper beings, dependent upon what is alluded to in “God created the human being in His image,” concerning which “No eye has seen,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

Yad Yehudah - כה

“There,” etc.: do not object that this verse too concerns those sins, as mentioned. This must mean that it necessarily concerns also “the completeness of knowledges” [?], for the beginning of the verse reveals it to us by saying, “Whoever sheds the blood of the human being.” The he corresponds to image and the he to likeness. The intention concerns the parts of the soul: when the he withdraws from them, the nefesh remains alive, as explained above, Part II, section 46. Therefore the doubled “you shall surely die” is also written concerning the first Adam; see there. All the interpretations mentioned there apply here too. Alternatively, from here we alluded to the human being, when he is killed, being a living human being from the soul’s standpoint; thus both image and likeness are alluded to in this. [TN120174]

Yad Yehudah - כו

“It is readily understood,” etc.: the master here explains what is further stated there in Avot: “Beloved are Israel, who are called the Omnipresent’s sons,” etc.; “Beloved are Israel, to whom a precious instrument was given, through which the world was created,” etc. This accords with our Rabbis’ discussion at the end of the first chapter of Qiddushin, whether study or action is greater. His view is that for the wholly righteous, study is certainly greater, from the standpoint of the hidden aspect. This is the subject of the first clause, “Beloved are Israel, who are called sons.” For penitents, action is greater. This is the subject of the last clause, where “a precious instrument” designates the Torah’s revealed aspect, which serves action. See the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“This is the hidden treasure”: as our Rabbis said in chapter 9 of Shabbat, the angels said before the Holy One, blessed be He, “A hidden treasure is Yours,” etc. This is Torah from the hidden standpoint.

Yad Yehudah - כח

"It afterward says, 'Through which the world was created'": the intention concerns the world's order and habitation, all of which is revealed in the revealed Torah, which establishes and sustains the world. It does not refer to the world itself, for the Holy One's instrument of craftsmanship in creating the world was the treasure itself, rather than the precious instrument, as stated above, Part II, chapter 14.

Yad Yehudah - כט

It is written, "The LORD acquired me" (Proverbs 8). From there through "I was beside Him as a craftsman," etc., it speaks of the hidden treasure before the world was created, through which the LORD, blessed be He, created the world. Afterward it says, "Playing in His inhabited earth, and my delights were with human beings," from the standpoint of the precious instrument. It is easy to understand.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 5

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 6 (ו)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Moses spoke to the LORD": it is not respectful toward the One above to say that he spoke to the LORD. Therefore zaqef qatan marks a pause: Moses spoke between himself and himself, and it was thereby heard by the LORD. "Requires proclamation," etc.: he asked that a man and leader be appointed over the congregation. A leader is not appointed over the community unless proclaimed above. This is one of three matters in the Holy One's hands alone; their mnemonic is P.Sh.R.: parnas, leader; sova, plenty; ra'av, famine. With Aaron, even when the LORD speaks to him, there is a separating zaqef qatan, for He spoke face to face with Moses, not with Aaron. Likewise, "Moses entreated" lacks the separating tipha, for it is not respectful, as above.

Rema of Fano

Thus you have learned that the treasure is one thing and the precious instrument another. Concerning them we learned, "Moses received Torah from Sinai." It does not say "the Torah," for the statement does not concern the Torah's essence and hidden aspect, to which the language of receiving or transmitting does not apply, but intellectual apprehension. At Sinai, however, he engaged in the treasure itself and was not permitted to transmit it to others, as stated in the Sifrei: "The LORD commanded me at that time"—He commanded me matters to utter between me and myself. This is the meaning of "The LORD spoke to Moses": what befits him alone, deep and hidden matters; "saying": what falls under "Go and say." Likewise, in the passage "Let the LORD, God of spirits, appoint," it is written, "Moses spoke to the LORD": what he spoke for Heaven's honor; "saying": what requires proclamation in the court above, without which a leader is not appointed over the community

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"From that very instrument," etc.: from the revealed matters he answered the ministering angels: What is written in it? "You shall not murder," etc. In its hidden aspect, however, the entire Torah is the Holy One's names, and its letters have another combination. Their complaint concerned the hidden aspect, the treasure itself rather than the precious instrument, when they said, "A hidden treasure which You have had since the six days of creation." Nevertheless, Moses undertook to explain that study is action and everything is for Israel, even the mysteries. "What we learned," etc.: here it appears to be the reverse, that study is higher, since it is called image and action likeness, the one hidden and the other revealed. "Is understood," etc.: iqqar means the root of the thing, while study is the planting.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"In the Tiqqunim," etc.: the vav of the Name is the tree's fruit; the first he consists of three lines, like branches in either direction, and the vav is the trunk, as an acronym: "branch, branch, trunk, fruit." The final he, Malkhut, blessed be He, is the foundation and root; the roots too extend into the earth in either direction, three lines. "One who acknowledges the other letters but not it": the final he; he denies the root. "Repeated study in itself": study and contemplation through Moses, the face of the sun. "Left ownerless in the earth": action, the revealed aspect, which he transmitted to Joshua, the lamp of commandment. This differs from Moses, Torah as light, whereas Joshua's face is the face of the moon. [TN120177]

"One attends to the work of creation," etc.: we must rectify Asiyah; therefore we sometimes have to suspend study for it. "Until rectification is completed," etc.: this is in the future, when all will become one people, as stated below, chapter 11, the comprehensive rectification. "If for himself," etc.: he studies for himself. He comes to explain the commentators'

Rema of Fano - continued

below.

We must not overlook the master of the accents' precision in the verse "The LORD spoke to Moses, saying," wherever it occurs: it contains no disjunctive accent apart from tipha on the word "the LORD." In "Moses spoke to the LORD, saying," however, there is zaqef qatan on "Moses" and tipha under "the LORD." Likewise, in "The LORD spoke to Aaron, saying" and "The LORD spoke to Joshua, saying," there is zaqef qatan at "the LORD" and tipha at "Aaron" and "Joshua." In "Moses entreated the face of the LORD his God," the tipha before the etnahta is absent, contrary to the usual practice; there are many such cases. Anyone accustomed to our manner of chanting the accents in synagogues and houses of study will understand all these and their many weighty counterparts with complete simplicity; therefore an indication suffices. [TN120175]

It is clearly manifest that Moses has no essential business with the precious instrument except for others' sake: he received it as a deposit and transmitted it to Joshua. From that very instrument he answered the ministering angels, although their complaint concerned the treasure itself. Through this he undertook to explain that repeated study is action, and that all is for Israel at appointed times, in the sense of "I shall show him wonders," which we mentioned at the end of Part II.

What we learned, "Exposition is not the root, but action," is understood through what they said in the Tiqqunim: the root difficulty: surely action is the end. He answers that study, which causes it, is greater as an efficient cause. This is "His deeds are more numerous through the power of his wisdom," the study that brings him to them. "They all apply to him": sometimes the explanation is Tiferet receiving influx from Binah, which is called Elohim; or he is the Matronita's husband, as stated above, chapter 2, being man and God, son and servant. All are justified together. [TN120178]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - א

"Thus you have learned," etc.: this connects with the end of the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Concerning them": concerning the precious instrument.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"It does not say 'the Torah'": the language indicates that it does not concern the treasure itself, but the precious instrument, which he received for others' sake, so that they would know what to do, and transmitted to Joshua. It was not for his own need, for he did not need to raise his soul to a higher degree through good deeds, as explained above, Part III.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"At Sinai, however": although it also says "from

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

Sinai" rather than "at Sinai," he received the precious instrument from Sinai and carried it away for others' sake. At Sinai he himself engaged in the treasure itself.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"This is the meaning" of "The LORD spoke to Moses, saying." They expounded "saying" as saying to Israel. The intention is not that Moses and Israel are equal in the speech: He tells each what befits him, Moses in the hidden aspect, Israel in the revealed.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Likewise, concerning 'Let Him appoint,'" etc.: our Rabbis expounded that "saying" need not have been stated, but Moses said, "Answer me whether You appoint leaders over them or not." This was because the word "saying" was difficult for them, since here it cannot be explained as instructing others either. According to our approach, the intention was to say it to the court above, to proclaim concerning him. Moses spoke to the LORD what befitted Him concerning the appointment of the leader, which depends on His proclamation to the court above. This is one of three things concerning which our Rabbis said in the first chapter of Ta'anit that the Holy One, blessed be He, makes proclamation.

Rema of Fano - continued

of four letters and ten letters is the kingdom of heaven. They said that one who acknowledges it but not the other letters cuts the plantings, while one who acknowledges the other letters but not it denies the root. From this we learn that repeated study in itself is "Torah, light," the face of the sun, "the LORD's planting, for adornment." Its root is entrusted in "the earth He gave to human beings," to put forth a branch and bear fruit. Action is "the lamp of commandment," entrusted to each generation and its expounders among those entering the Land, where the root of fulfilling the commandments lies. Their governance begins with Joshua, the face of the moon. [TN120176]

Since even the good and upright among us are reckoned as penitents through the serpent's instigation, as we mentioned in chapter 1—for this reason the prophet said, "We have all become like the unclean"—they said in the Jerusalem Talmud that where study raises concern that action will be neglected because of it, one attends to the action and suspends study for it. This is also an established teaching in the Babylonian Talmud, in the first chapter of Mo'ed Qatan: Torah study is suspended for a commandment that cannot be fulfilled by others. It is already known that the cessation of impurity from Israel will not suffice for the entirety of existence until rectification is completed for all who come into the world. Therefore they took a vote and concluded: study is greater, for it leads to action, however this is understood.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"We must not overlook," etc.: from the disjunctive accents in "The LORD spoke to Moses, saying," we also understand that Moses has no business with the precious instrument, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"And one accustomed to us," etc.: he explains the matter through the melody too, by which one understands all this. In "The LORD spoke to Moses," there is no zaqef qatan over "The LORD spoke," for one must not separate Him, blessed be He, from His speech: He and His speech are one in His essence. Likewise, at Moses' hearing ear nothing intervened or separated Him, blessed be He, from His speech, as it is written, "He heard the voice speaking." For Moses' prophecy was through the luminous speculum, from Tiferet, as it is said concerning this, "Mouth to mouth," etc., and as the author wrote, Part III, section 20; see there. "This is in the emergence of human speech in his prophecy, for to separate between two names," as mentioned [?]. This differs from "Moses spoke to the LORD," where zaqef qatan comes over "Moses spoke," for flesh and blood and his speech are not one thing. With Aaron and Joshua, zaqef qatan comes at "the LORD": although the LORD, blessed be He, and His speech are one in His essence, with respect to the hearing ear their prophetic power was through the nonluminous speculum, from Malkhut through a succession from Tiferet. To indicate this, zaqef qatan comes. At "to Moses" there is tipha, for one must not separate there between the two names. [TN120179]

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

Yad Yehudah - ט

"It is clear," etc.: this is why there is no accent at "Moses, saying": the speech within the aforementioned instruments is to be said to Israel, not to himself, since he has no need of it, as explained. This differs from Aaron and Joshua, where tipha separates their names, and there is no accent on "saying," because the speech is also for his own need.

Yad Yehudah - י

"Which he received," etc.: he returns to "between," mentioned above. [TN120180]

Rema of Fano - continued

If it concerns the learner himself, action is the end, and what leads to it is greater as an efficient cause. We derive from this that action is greater only so long as contemplation leads to it. This is what we learned, "His deeds exceed his wisdom": in the tipping of the scales, they are more numerous because of his wisdom and contemplation, through which action is perfected. It is written, "I have held fast to my righteousness and will not let it go." This teaches that whoever is engaged in one commandment and encounters another, if they are of equal weight, "the righteous shall hold to his way," and the other will be fulfilled by others. Otherwise, this is obvious: are upright people suspected of abandoning their uprightness? Heaven forbid! If it concerns others, so that his study leads to action in the manner of perfection we explained, he is among those who make the many righteous and has ascended from the degree of son to become a man of God. We have explained this in all its usages, so that you may be justified; they all apply to him.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"And he sets down," etc.: from the precious instrument he answers the statement "What is written in it? 'You shall not murder,'" etc. "Is the evil inclination among you?"—as stated in chapter 9 of Shabbat.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Concerning the Torah itself" [gap], as in their saying, "You have a hidden treasure," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יג

This reasoning, which he attained from the precious instrument, showed you that study is greater because it leads to action, as stated there in Qiddushin. He brought them in for Israel's sake, namely in the future, "obligated to L.A.L. in the H.P.Q.Y." [?]; but "the earth shall be filled with knowledge," in the upper light. [TN120181]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"In the sense of" what is written, "As in the days of your coming out of the land of Egypt, I shall show him wonders" (Micah 7), in the manner of what is said in the Zohar, Be-Ha'alotekha: the Torah's wonders in the future will reveal the fifty gates of Binah.

Yad Yehudah - יד - continued

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Which we mentioned": above, at the end of Part II and chapter 3.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"What we learned," etc. [gap], that action is more a root. They explained the reason as stated in the Tiqqunim and at the end of the Zohar, Bereshit, page 190, as follows: [gap] "denies the root," namely the attribute Malkhut [gap], and a root; the other sefirot are branches. In this manner our Rabbis said, "Exposition is not the root," etc., for study belongs to Tiferet, and action to Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Yad Yehudah - יז

"The face of the sun": as our Rabbis said, Moses' face was like the sun's face, and Joshua's face like the moon's face. Moses, the face of Tiferet, engaged in the upper treasure, as above.

Yad Yehudah - יח

[Frozen-source gap; recovered from print: "The face of the sun,"] as our Rabbis said, [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: "'Moses' face was like the face of the sun, and Joshua's face like the face of the moon.' This means that Moses was the countenance of Tiferet, for he was occupied with the upper Delight, which is 'the planting of the LORD, to be glorified.' The explanation is that he occupies himself with it and renews through it the work of Creation every day continually."] And Joshua's face —[frozen-source gap; recovered from print: "from whom the beginning of practice derives"—is] the face of Malkhut. [TN120182]

Yad Yehudah - יח - continued

Yad Yehudah - יט

"And according to 'they merited,'" etc.: he returns to the preceding chapter's statement that action is greater for penitents. [TN120183]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"And for," etc. (Isaiah 64).

Yad Yehudah - כא

In the first chapter of Mo'ed Qatan, folio 9: it is written, "Weigh the path of your foot, and all your ways will be established"; it is also written, "Lest you weigh the path of life; her paths wander, you do not know." There is no difficulty: here it concerns commandments that cannot be performed by others, there those that can. They again sat and raised the question: it is written, "She is more precious than pearls, and all your desires cannot compare with her"—thus Heaven's desires can compare with her. Yet it is written, "All desires cannot compare with her," even Heaven's desires! There is no difficulty: here it concerns commandments that cannot be performed by others, etc. Rashi explains this concerning suspension of Torah study; see Rashi there.

Yad Yehudah - כב

"Therefore they took a vote," etc.: in the first chapter of Bava Qamma, "We say that he fulfilled, but we do not say that he taught." But did the master not say, "Great is Torah study, for it leads to action"? One concerns learning, the other teaching. Rashi explains: "Leads to action"—thus action is superior. For learning on one's own, action is superior; but teaching others is superior to action. Therefore we do not say that he taught. Tosafot wrote: The commentary explains "thus action is superior." Rabbenu Tam finds this difficult, for on the contrary, in the first chapter of Qiddushin it derives from here that study is greater, etc. Rabbenu Tam says that this is the meaning: Did the master not say that study leads to action? Since we say that he fulfilled, we are saying that he learned, for if he had not learned, how did he fulfill? etc. It answers that this concerns teaching: we certainly do not say that he taught, for this is certainly superior, since through his study he leads the many to action.

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 6

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

The master's view accords with Rabbenu Tam: necessarily study is greater. Yet for the learner himself, who in his study follows action, action is the end, while the study that brings him to it is the agent; in this respect it is greater [gap]. Where it concerns teaching others, it is certainly greater, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - כג

"This is," etc.: the mem in me-hokhmato is the causal mem; that is, his deeds become more numerous because of his wisdom.

Yad Yehudah - כד

"It is written, 'I have held fast to my righteousness'" (Job 27): the intention is that I have held fast to the commandment to which I am already accustomed, because another that I encountered was greater than it. How would we know this without study and contemplation? [TN120184]

Yad Yehudah - כה

"Otherwise": if you wish to explain the verse in its plain meaning, the difficulty arises: would it need to be said? etc.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"If for others," etc.: this refers back to "If for himself," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כז

We explained it above, section 13 [gap], what was said concerning the hidden and the revealed; see there.

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 7 (ז)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא

Yoel Moshe - 1

“A decree of the watchers,” etc.: a decree of the court above is not necessarily fulfilled unless it first issues in an enactment in likeness, like a dream, which is fulfilled only through interpretation: all dreams follow the mouth. “For the end of deliverance,” etc.: it is a verse. “That is, to merit, it is,” etc.: as explained, the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham, “You are a sign for your children,” etc.; go and conquer the way before them, and the like. “Through the truth of the matter”: when we believe and establish the truth of this matter. “The deed of the lion,” etc.: this too was an enactment in likeness by David, through which he afterward weakened the powers of impurity. [TN120187]

“The three they said”: digging a river, bringing seed, and pigs. He was not to bring them himself, but to appoint servants over them. This was Nebuchadnezzar’s intention. But the man greatly beloved is Daniel; his thoughts were not like Nebuchadnezzar’s. His intention concerned honor. “A designation,” etc.: as stated in the Zohar, Be-Shallah: “Come and see: rock everywhere is

Rema of Fano

Nahmanides wrote in his Torah commentary that every decree of the watchers, once expressed through an enactment in its likeness, will afterward necessarily be fulfilled, as with “An arrow of the LORD’s deliverance” and “Thus shall Babylon sink.” Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, made likenesses for the fathers of what was to come for the children. This is the substance of his words at the beginning of the portion Lekh Lekha. All aggadic expositions together become complete through the truth of this statement. For us, a similar example is the deed of the lion and bear that David struck, which we explained in the treatise Em Kol Hai.

In the chapter Heleq there is a statement that strongly accords with this exposition, in the opinion of all the greatest amoraim. They asked there: Where did Daniel go, so that he was not cast into the fiery furnace with his companions? This was by the counsel of the LORD, Daniel himself, and Nebuchadnezzar, as stated there. Rav said: to dig a river in a mountain. Samuel said: to bring lucerne seed. Rabbi Johanan said: to bring pigs from Alexandria. It is possible that Nebuchadnezzar commanded him to oversee these three assignments in a single journey, appointing many servants over them, in accordance with the great king’s means and the needs of his work. But he, the man greatly beloved, would intend in his deed that

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Gevurah,” etc. At the end of the page it says: “Rabbi Simeon said: ‘The Rock, His work is perfect’—the rock changes to become ‘His work is perfect’; ‘and ... Abraham’ [?], of whom it is written, ‘Walk before Me and be perfect.’” End of quotation. Digging a river signifies mercy, for water designates Hesed, in a mountain, which is rock, judgment. [TN120188] “Upon its four quarters,” etc.: see “Your implements and your bow,” etc. This is explained from what they expounded concerning the four kingdoms, which Isaac wished all to be under Esau. Likewise, Nebuchadnezzar, the head of gold, is Babylon; he made all of it gold, alluding to all being in his hand. This is “upon its four quarters”: four kingdoms. “Which was not cut off”: Theudas said that no cow or sow ever went out of Alexandria in Egypt unless its womb had been removed. He commanded that they be brought with their wombs. “The great officer was killed”: he was Pompey. “Obstructed”: the rule of Julius Caesar, who sought the governance of Rome’s kingdom. “The first”: he was the first to be called Caesar. “Whose pronunciation is close to the beast's name": that is, to hazir, pig. Thus I heard. [TN120189]

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

A further allusion, N.K.: in mi-ya'ar, "from the forest," the ayin is suspended; R.M.Y. remains, which is G. [gematria?] Rome. "He went with Ezekiel," etc.: to perform an enactment in likeness. [TN120190]

Yad Yehudah - א

"Nahmanides wrote," etc.: the master returns to explain the mystery of knowledge and free choice "and the coming chapters?" To this end he prefaced them with this chapter concerning an enactment in likeness, mentioned by Nahmanides at the beginning of the portion Lekh Lekha on the verse "Abram passed through the land."

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Once it issues in an enactment in likeness": the prophet performs some action resembling that decree, and it is fulfilled as a necessary decree, whereas without this it could have been annulled.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"As with": it is written concerning Joash king of Israel that Elisha told him, "Take a bow and arrows," etc.; "Place your hand upon the bow," etc. It is written, "Elisha said, 'Shoot,' and he shot. He said, 'An arrow of the LORD's deliverance, an arrow of deliverance against Aram; you shall

Rema of Fano - continued

"The Rock, His work is perfect"—a designation of the attribute of judgment, from which a stone was cut without hands, according to the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's first dream—should clothe itself in the attribute of mercy, bringing from the flinty rock a spring of water that never ceases, and a river continually increasing. This enactment in likeness was for Daniel to awaken the Omnipresent's mercies, that He might hasten the destruction of the statue that Babylon's king set up upon its four quarters. [TN120185]

Samuel said: to bring lucerne seed. This is fodder for animals, which is sown and ready to be cut every thirty days, as mentioned at the beginning of the chapter Hezqat ha-Battim. Nebuchadnezzar needed much of it for his horse stables and his forces, for his camp was exceedingly great. Daniel's intention in his deed would be to make the four beasts' growth sprout like grass, so that they might speedily be cut down for ever.

Rabbi Johanan said: to bring pigs from Alexandria, with the wombs of their females intact, at the mighty king's wish, contrary to the rule to which Theudas the physician testified in tractate Bekhorot. It is known that through the Egyptian kingdom, by Ptolemy, the great officer was killed who had obstructed his fellow's rule—the first bearer of the title whose pronunciation is close to the name of this forest beast, from which the earliest rulers drew nourishment, as is known. The earliest bearers of that title possessed abundant might and great strike Aram in Aphek until it is consumed.' He said, 'Take the arrows,' and he took them. He said to the king of Israel, 'Strike the ground.' He struck three times and stopped. The man of God was angry with him and said, 'You should have struck five or six times; then you would have struck Aram until it was consumed. Now you shall strike Aram three times'" (2 Kings 13). Likewise, it says to Baruch (Jeremiah 51), "When you finish reading the words of this book, tie a stone to it and cast it into the Euphrates. Say, 'Thus shall Babylon sink,'" etc. [TN120191]

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Likenesses for the fathers": everything decreed for them was an enactment in likeness of what was destined to come upon his children.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"All aggadic expositions": they are constrained within this approach. It seems to me that this is also what was said, "An omen has significance," and our Rabbis said that a person should always be accustomed to eating things such as qara? and the like. All is because of enactment in likeness. [TN120192]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"The deed of the lion and bear": it was an enactment in likeness concerning Nebuchadnezzar, as he also says afterward, section 22; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Concerning these three assignments” [gap], a dispute in kingship.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“That he appointed servants over them”: not that Daniel in his own person should engage in these matters.

Rema of Fano - continued

strength on behalf of the fourth beast Daniel saw. He knew that the decree could not be annulled, for it too was part of the statue we mentioned, and intended to attend diligently to it so as to weaken its strength. [TN120186]

The Sages further said that Daniel, at the Holy One’s command, blessed be He, went with Ezekiel to revive the dead in the valley of Dura. Through this he prevailed against its opposite, by an enactment in likeness of the end of days.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“He would intend in his deed”: other matters, because of enactment in likeness, for his heart was not directed toward these, since [gap]. In digging a river in a mountain he intends the attribute of judgment and Hesed, for mountain and rock designate judgment, while water designates Hesed and mercy. His thought was above: just as he was prepared to do it [?],

Yad Yehudah - ט - continued

digging a river in a mountain, so might he merit to bring water from the Rock of the worlds [gap], upon A.B. [TN120193]

Yad Yehudah - י

“From which a stone was cut,” etc.: Daniel was especially moved to intend this as an enactment in likeness, since this was the interpretation of the dream in the wording in which he dreamed it. As it also says, “You were looking until a stone was cut out without hands and struck the image,” etc. Concerning this Daniel said, “In the days of those kings, the God of heaven will establish a kingdom that shall never be destroyed,” etc.; “it shall crush and bring to an end all these kingdoms,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Intact”—and not removed, contrary to the rule written there, as they objected there in the Gemara: “But was it not taught: Theodosius the physician testified that no cow,” etc. As for the answer, [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “He brought small ones without their knowledge”; the master is content that this was by the will of the mighty king (N.N.[?]).] And who could say to him, “What are you doing?” The intention was thus [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “to hasten from Egypt the success of”] the first ruler; and as he interpreted, so it happened, for there [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “in Egypt his associate was killed, who had been”] obstructing his kingship, as written in the ancient books of records. [TN120194]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 7

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 8 (ח)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז · יח · יט · כ · כא · כב · כג · כד · כה · כו · כז · כח · כט · ל · לא · לב · לג · לד · מא · מב · מג · מד · מה · מו · מז · מח · מט · נ · נא · נב · נג · נד · נה · נו · נז · נח · נט · ס · סא · סב · סג · סד · סה · סו · סז · סח · סט · ע · עא · עב · עג · עד · עה · עו · עז · עח · עט · פ · פא · פב · פג · פד · פה · פו · פז · פח · פט · צ · צא · צב · צג · צד · צה · צו · צז · צח · צט · ק · קא · קב · קג · קד · קה · קו · קז · קח · קט · ר · רא · רב · רג · רד · רה · רו · רז · רח · רט · ש · שא · שב · שג · שד · שה · שו · שז · שח · שט · ת · תא · תב · תג · תד · תה · תו · תז · תח · תט

Editorial reading note: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“He will descend; they will surrender”: he asked the Urim and Tummim whether Saul would descend there and Qeilah's inhabitants would surrender them. They answered, “He will descend; they will surrender.” It passed from simple potentiality in the watchers' decree to what lies between, and so forth. Actuality is the other extreme from simple potentiality in the watchers' decree; the Urim and Tummim's speech mediates between them. “For there is no”: no symbolic act in the Urim and Tummim to embody and establish it in actual deed; that occurs only through its symbolic act.

“Lent to them”: it is not intrinsic to the angels. On the contrary, for them hearing precedes doing, as below; they merely also use this mystery, like Israel. “Moses My servant”: the servant's rank, precisely as with the ministering angels, unlike Israel. “Children of the Most High”: they are called children. “It is intrinsic”: therefore they said “we shall do” corresponding to image, and “we shall hear” corresponding to likeness.

Rema of Fano

Everything is foreseen, yet permission is given; the world is judged in goodness, and everything accords with the abundance of deeds. Thus Rabbi Aqiva taught in Avot, chapter 3. What we mentioned at the beginning of the preceding chapter makes it plainly apparent that simple existence in the decree of the watchers does not necessitate the future act. Further proof comes from the Urim and Tummim concerning Qeilah. Although it said there, “He will descend; they will surrender,” and the matter had already passed from simple potentiality into what lies between it and actuality, he nevertheless did not descend, nor did they surrender him. For there was no symbolic act in which the intended thing would become embodied. Everything decreed concerning human affairs is undoubtedly conditional.

Accordingly, it is entirely correct to say that the Torah written before the blessed One on high two thousand years before the world, however this is understood, is the holy ones' utterance concerning commandments destined to be fulfilled through us. At the encounter at Mount Sinai it issued into a symbolic act through everything done there. Consider closely our saying, “Everything the LORD has spoken we shall do and we shall hear,” at the reading of the Book of the Covenant in Mishpatim. This is a

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“One in honor of the likeness”: this also resolves why initially six hundred thousand descended, but finally one million two hundred thousand descended and removed them. Initially they said “we shall do and we shall hear”: hearing was included in doing, likeness in image, after the manner of “He took counsel in His heart,” above, chapter 5. Thus one angel sufficed for two ornaments. At the sin, image and likeness separated; therefore 120 destroying angels descended and removed them.[TN160002]

“With strength in hearing”: for hearing he used masculine language, “You approach and hear”; for speech, feminine language, “And you speak to us.” Thus the Zohar, Va-Ethannan: “We do not desire the supernal strength above, but the female place, and no more”; see the beginning of page 439. Hearing consequently follows as likeness, the female place, as below. By giving strength to hearing they brought it first, before doing: “We shall hear and we shall do.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"The doing": although in the preceding chapters he explained likeness as deed and contemplation as image, as above, "Study is not the main thing," here it is reversed. He proves his words from man's creation through the name Elohim: thirty-two occurrences of Elohim are written in the creation passage, yet this is for the King, the name YHWH. For the name HWYM [?]—thirty-two YHWHs are hidden in the thirty-two Elohims of creation. Its sign is "The glory of Elohim is to conceal a matter": KBWD, glory, equals 32. Correspondingly, "May the glory of the LORD be": KBWD equals 32. See Zohar, Mishpatim, page 169.[TN160003] Thus "we shall do and we shall hear" is image and likeness; "we shall hear and we shall do" is likeness and image, with likeness prevailing over it to hear.

"What He commands": angels need hearing before doing. Although Scripture says of them first "doing," then "to hear," this is only lent to them, to use the mystery at times. "Another commandment": this explains the verse: we shall do now so that we may hear afterward, for the reward of a commandment is a commandment. Likewise, "doing His word" so as to merit hearing every word of His. "Until all agree":

Rema of Fano - continued

mystery used by the ministering angels, lent to them insofar as they serve the Most High, after the manner of "Moses My servant"; intrinsically it belongs to the children of the Most High, for whose sake the world was created. We shall say more shortly. Six hundred thousand ministering angels tied two crowns upon each of us, one in honor of the image and one in honor of the likeness. We already mentioned this at the end of Part II, chapter 9; consider it there.

We still hoped to bear the utterance from the mouth of Power. Trembling seized us, however, and we told Moses, "You approach and hear, and you speak to us," with strength in the hearing and weakness in the speech. Thus the order was reversed: "We shall hear and we shall do." The doing mentioned here applies to the image, just as in man's creation the name Elohim is the craftsman of the work of creation for the King, the four-letter Name hidden within it, as we shall mention. Hearing applies to the likeness. "We shall do and we shall hear" is thus like "in Our image, according to Our likeness"; the grammatical reference is to Elohim named in the verse and to the unique Name always with it. "We shall hear and we shall do" is like "in his likeness, according to his image," said at Seth's birth after his father had completed an excellent repentance, as mentioned in chapter 5.

This is the servants' measure, intrinsic to the ministering angels. They form a separate precinct, are restricted from performing two missions, and must hear angels do not say "Holy" until they give one another permission to sanctify their Maker: "They receive from one another," as servants do. Israel, called the Omnipresent's children, instead all answer together, "Hear, Israel."

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

"As Amasa did not guard himself": here too nishmaʿ means that their saying is heard, that others heed our voice. "This itself provides": another explanation of nishmaʿ, as a future that will continue. "Great praise": Israel's praise, "Who revealed this mystery to My children?" is not that they use a mystery used by ministering angels. Israel's rank is higher; this mystery is merely lent to angels, while intrinsically belonging to Israel. The praise is that all Israel possess this degree, using the mystery entrusted to the individual, as above. That is the praise.

"In this exalted unification": as it says, "all the people together." Hearing, likeness, is unnecessary, coming of itself because image rules likeness. Therefore it says, "Moses returned," from Binah, then "Moses told," language of drawing forth, from Hokhmah, whose rank exceeds Binah. Return belongs to Binah; "told," to Hokhmah. He has not yet specified the additional excellence, but here [?] he explains the image's activity alone, with likeness included within it. One verse says “we shall do and we shall hear”; once, “we shall hear and we shall do”; once, “we shall do” alone; once, “we shall hear” alone—like image and likeness above in chapter 5.[TN160004] “Corresponding to them”: corresponding to the twice-repeated “we shall do” alone, creation likewise twice says “in His image” alone, with likeness included. In one, likeness is included without being revealed at all; in the other, it is included, image rules it, and likeness is somewhat revealed.

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

“Future in form”: nishmaʿ without vav is future, whereas ve-shamaʿnu with vav is past converted to future. “Past and active for the feminine”: in the vernacular, “she has become …” [?]. “And you speak to us”: we do not find Israel telling Moses “and you speak” in feminine language, but ve-nishmeʿah in Yitro is feminine; they alluded to the feminine that is heard —in the vernacular, “we are heard” [?].[TN160005] “Whose fathers are unknown”: who instituted them. Moses, with the word itself, numerically equals ShMY, “My Name.”[TN160006]

“In its absence”: in the

Rema of Fano - continued

what the LORD commands before doing it. Yet they use that mystery entrusted to the children, who await the reward of a commandment—another commandment, and nothing else. The difference is that a son among the sons has his words upheld; servants do not, until they all agree. The children are further beloved in that all worlds are entrusted to their hands to change nature as they will: for example, the earth's mouth, and “Sun, stand still in Gibeon.” Thus “we shall do,” and afterward “we shall be heard,” as in “Amasa did not guard himself.” This is what is written: “The LORD hearkened to a man's voice.”[TN160001] This itself provides that we too shall hear in the future, continuing the melody that adds strength to the Power above. Great praise was bestowed on Israel: each person would resemble the ministering angels by using this mystery, entrusted only to chosen individuals, as stated.

Great for us also is our twice being distinguished in accepting the yoke of Heaven's kingship. Once, in Yitro: “All the people answered together,” with all countenances and opinions equalized, “Everything the LORD has spoken we shall do.” In this exalted unification hearing is unnecessary, for it comes of itself. Of this it says, “Moses returned,” then again “Moses told”: a voluntary telling, greater than a return, the drawing-forth of Wisdom, as is known. It does not specify what it was. Once again, in Mishpatim: “All the people answered with one voice.” Here we carried unification further, with one answer and one voice, the activities of image and absence of doing, giving ear is written in its place, the measure of Tiferet, for heaven. “Hearing to earth”: as the heavens answer, explained below, chapter 18 of this part. After the sin each was assigned the other's: hearing to heaven, belonging to Tiferet, and giving ear to earth. Thus the Tiqqunim say: “Angels of Elohim ascend”—first the Matron's camps ascend, then the upper camps descend below. That is, rectification and awakening below are needed first; likewise, “Return to Me and I shall return to you.”

Yoel Moshe - 1 - continued

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Everything is foreseen”: after first discussing symbolic action in the preceding chapter, the master returns to expound knowledge and choice.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) In straightforward revelations, without need [?] of a symbolic act.[TN160007]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Further proof from the Urim and Tummim”: David consulted them at Qeilah, as written in I Samuel 23: “Will Qeilah's inhabitants surrender me into his hand? Will Saul descend?” The blessed LORD answered, “He will descend; they will surrender.” Nevertheless, when David fled Qeilah and Saul was told, he did not descend, nor did Qeilah's men surrender David. The condition was that David remain in Qeilah. In a matter of choice and condition, they are like the movers [?] between potential and actual, like an image; the simple was not removed from them to the movers [?], except within the simple itself.[TN160008]

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “For there is no”: concerning these matters of choice and condition there is no symbolic act through which the thing becomes embodied and established, because those deeds are conditional, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “To be fulfilled through us”: everything will be fulfilled in the future nevertheless. See the adjoining explanation.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Consider closely our saying”: therefore they put “we shall do” before “we shall hear,” to place doing beside the LORD's word. Everything the LORD spoke before the world's creation is destined to be fulfilled through us, and we shall do it.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “A mystery”: as in Shabbat, chapter 9, folio 88. Rabbi ʾA said: [TN160026] when Israel put “we shall do” before “we shall hear,” a heavenly voice issued and said, likeness in complete, wondrous union. Again we said only, “We shall do.”

Rema of Fano - continued

Corresponding to these: “Elohim created man in His image”—one creation by the name Elohim; “in the image of Elohim He created him”—a second creation, without specifying the creator, for it is the hidden Name, blessed forever. This is in addition to our explanation in chapter 5. What we mentioned there is also correct: the likeness was included in the image and repeated in the verse, just as hearing was twice included in doing in our words. This is the meaning of “Elohim said”: He took counsel in His heart, the blessed four-letter Name, apart from whom there is no Elohim. This is one of the wondrous, profound correspondences between creation and the giving of Torah. Hear it and know for yourself: “We shall do” alone corresponds to Elohim's image, “for His Name alone is exalted”; the likeness is included in its root and resembles it. “We shall do and we shall hear” expresses the image's rule over the likeness; “we shall hear and we shall do,” the likeness preceding the image.

When they said, “You speak with us and we shall hear, but let Elohim not speak with us,” the image became hidden and the likeness remained. This caused our ornaments to be taken down from Mount Horeb and our being emptied of them, as mentioned in Part II, chapter 9. Here is a place to contemplate the distinction between our saying ve-nishmeʿah, future in form, and ve-shamaʿnu, a past converted into future. We shall allude to this at the end of “Who revealed to My children this mystery used by the ministering angels?” For it is written, “Bless the LORD, His angels, mighty in strength, doing His word, to hear the voice of His word”—first doing, afterward hearing.

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Lent to them”: the meaning is not that this mystery intrinsically belongs to the ministering angels rather than Israel, and that the Holy One therefore asked who revealed it to His children so they too could use it. Rather, this mystery intrinsically belongs to Israel, and the angels also use it by borrowing. The Holy One means: who revealed to My children what belongs to them? Its natural basis is that angels serve the Most High and are called servants; thus the mystery belongs to them only by borrowing. Hence “ministering angels use it,” as an attendant before a sage. Israel are superior as children of the Most High, eternally children; thus the mystery itself belongs to them. This is His saying, “Who revealed to the children?”

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “Shortly”: there he will explain why this mystery applies [?] more to children than to servants. [TN160009]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “With strength in hearing”: it uses attah,

Yad Yehudah - י - continued

masculine “you,” and weakness in speech, using at, feminine “you.” See Zohar, Va-Ethannan, pages 458 and 459 [?].[TN160010]

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “The order was reversed”: they first said, “We shall hear.”

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “The doing”: above, chapter 5, the master explained image and likeness in man's creation and their changes of precedence. Corresponding to these, he explains here “we shall do and we shall hear” and their changes.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “To the image”: the name YHWH.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “As the name of divinity”: in man's creation Elohim is primary, the matter of creation [?], and is related to YHWH through the latter's being included and hidden within Elohim. Thus in Tiqqunei Miqdashi [?], thirty-two names Elohim, “in sides” [?], thirty-two YHWHs. Here likewise YHWH is primary. [TN160011]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “As we shall mention”: “we have heard” said here applies [?] to the image. [TN160012]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “To the likeness”: the name Elohim.

Rema of Fano - continued

chapter 10. The wonder is in ve-nishmeʿah, fittingly interpreted as feminine passive past, “and she was heard.” This is what Moses later rebuked when they said to him, “And you [feminine] speak to us,” as mentioned in this chapter. If we interpret the vav of ve-nishmeʿah as converting the word from past to future for the feminine that is heard—the mouth of Power—this too belongs to the seventy faces, like “she shall be cleared and shall be sown with seed.”

Here Israel also accepted the oral Torah: its contemplative part, such as midrash and aggadah, and its practical part, such as rabbinic commandments and prohibitions. For some we know who arranged them: Solomon instituted eruvin because of Jerusalem's populousness in his days, and handwashing because of the many sacrifices eaten throughout the city. For others we do not know their fathers: Sabbath restrictions, muqtzeh, secondary forbidden sexual relationships, and the like. These, then, are the very body of oral Torah, all from Moses' court, “from the mouth of Power,” MPY GBWRH, numerically equivalent to “rabbinic,” MDRBNN. Likewise MShH, “Moses,” together with the word itself, is ShMW, “His Name,” the Holy One's Name.

Concerning hearing alone, however, it is written, “I shall call heaven and earth to witness against them”: hearing and giving ear, the latter replacing doing in its absence. Before the sin, giving ear was assigned to heaven and hearing to

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) Here “we shall do and we shall hear” is like “in Our image, according to Our likeness” in man's creation. There it refers to the two names, YHWH and Elohim, indicated by this:

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) The concealed plural, “in Our image, according to Our likeness,” refers to these two names. Elohim is expressly written before it: “Elohim said”; YHWH is included within it. Here “we shall hear and we shall do” is like “in his likeness, according to his image.”

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) This measure of “we shall hear and we shall do” is the servants' measure, appropriate to the ministering angels.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) Yet they too borrow the mystery “we shall do and we shall hear,” entrusted to children. This measure suits children because they receive and hope to merit another commandment conditionally, as the sages said, “The reward of a commandment is a commandment.” We shall do the commandment, and its reward will be to hear another commandment afterward.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) The distinction between angels and Israel: although angels too use this mystery and receive another commandment,

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

they lack the complete freedom possessed by Israel, where “every living one shall be” [?] given permission to perform a commandment before hearing it. Of those angels earth, according to the teacher's words: “I shall answer the heavens” first, “and they shall answer the earth.” After the sin, hearing was assigned to heaven and giving ear to earth, according to the disciple's words: “Return to Me, and I shall return to you.”

Rema of Fano - continued

Yad Yehudah - כא - continued

it is written, “mighty in their strength”; “they receive one from another and say,” needing permission by everyone's agreement, as the sages said.[TN160013]

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) Further, the children are beloved: in His eyes [?] the mystery “we shall do and we shall hear” applies more to Israel, for the children preceded, and so forth.[TN160014]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) Thus “we shall do”—past, before “we shall be heard” [?], [gap]; the intention is toward [gap], on the pattern “he did to her as he had vowed” (II Samuel 4), “borrowed from a fetter” [?], as explained above, ḤQ, PYʿ [?]. Here nishmaʿ follows what is written in Joshua about the sun in Gibeon: “There was no day like it before or after, when the LORD hearkened to a man's voice” (there, chapter 10).[TN160015]

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “This itself provides”: nishmaʿ can additionally be interpreted in its normal order: the Holy One [?] is heard above by everyone decreeing concerning Him, so that we merit also hearing the LORD's voice below, continuing the matter and adding strength to the Power above, as is known.[TN160016]

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “Great praise”: accordingly we may say this mystery intrinsically belongs to the angels themselves and also to righteous, chosen individuals whose mouths have power to produce the influx [?]. The LORD's “Who revealed to My children?” concerns all Israel: who revealed that they too could use this mystery? For every dwelling and dwelling it is a mystery whose strength is fine, and one who brings merit to the many can incline the influx as they will [?].[TN160017]

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) This is well explained by Israel's twice saying only “we shall do,” without “we shall hear.” Yitro says, “All the people answered together and said, Everything the LORD has spoken we shall do; Moses returned the people's words to the LORD,” and

Yad Yehudah - כו - continued

“Moses told the people's words to the LORD.” In Mishpatim, before the Book of the Covenant was read: “All the people answered with one voice and said, Everything the LORD has spoken we shall do.” In these two answers hearing was effective [?], being included beneath—as the verse's plain meanings imply [?]—so that they were heard above and would themselves hear in the future. Thus they did not need to say “we shall hear.” This also explains what is written in Yitro.[TN160018]

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Moses returned,” followed again by “Moses told”: the repetition seems difficult. “Told” is more significant, both openly and mystically, than “returned.” In its plain sense the latter is a lesser expression for one carrying out a mission and returning the words. Not so “told,” which means:

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) Of his own mind, without a mission. Mystically too, “returned” alludes to Binah, “told” to Hokhmah. Return is in Binah, telling in Hokhmah, as is known; it is an expression of:

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) Drawing from upper Wisdom to lower Wisdom. Accordingly, it should have said only “told.” If you say these are two things, why:

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “And he told” was not explained—what was the telling, “where is it for the sage?” [?] According to our approach, surely this is the intention: Moses returned their “we shall do” to the LORD as a return from below [?]. The “we shall be heard” above, in potentiality, he told of his own accord: “ShKhM [?]—that they would increase their preparation, companions above” [?]. Therefore it says “and he told,” wording that alludes to the drawing-forth of Wisdom.[TN160019]

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “With one answer”: therefore it did not say “they answered,” as in Yitro, but “it answered,” in the singular.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “The activities of image and likeness”: voice is the image's activity, the name YHWH; answering is the likeness's activity. Voice is in Tiferet and answering in its female, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) And already [gap] in this chapter.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) This explains the sages' statement about “Elohim said, Let us make man”: He consulted His glory, referring to YHWH hidden within Elohim; apart from Him there is no Elohim.

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) “This is one”: the conclusion and sum. In creation, concerning man's creation, once it says “image of Elohim,” once “according to the likeness of Elohim”; also “in Our image, according to Our likeness,” then “in his likeness, according to his image,” as explained above, chapter 5. So too at the giving of Torah: once Israel said “we shall do” alone, once “we shall hear” alone; both, “we shall do and we shall hear”; afterward, “we shall hear and we shall do.” By “we shall do” alone they intended Elohim's image, the blessed unique Name that does and effects everything, whom alone it befits to serve, keeping and performing His commandments. As likeness, the name Elohim, is included within it, as explained there, so hearing was included in doing. By “we shall do and we shall hear” they intended the whole and the likeness, and the image's eternal rule; by “we shall hear and we shall do,” the likeness's eternal rule; by hearing alone, likeness alone.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) “This caused us”: all their salvation and desire was to cleave to Him, as explained above there.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) “Here is a place”: therefore they said ve-nishmeʿah rather than ve-shamaʿnu. Ve-shamaʿnu is itself past, converted to future by conversive vav, whereas ve-nishmeʿah is itself future, “its power” [?]. They did not know what, for thus was the Holy One when they stripped themselves of their ornaments.[TN160020]

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) “The wonder in nishmeʿah”: it has another interpretation. Final he marks the feminine; nishmeʿah is passive past. The intention is: “Speak that which is from Him, and we shall be heard,” as though she had already been heard [?]. Because they did not say ve-nishmaʿt, second person, but ve-nishmeʿah, third-person feminine, Moses rebuked them as if they had said “and you speak” in feminine language. It likewise concludes there with “we have heard”—past language, “referring not to us” [?]—which they said to him; rather, certainly, their ve-nishmeʿah is resolved in this matter. [TN160021]

Yad Yehudah - לט

“If we interpret,” etc.: that is, the word ve-nishmeʿah can also be interpreted as future through the conversive vav, and it will be a feminine passive form, like “she shall be sown with seed.” The intention is: “You speak with us, and then the blessed Power will be heard.” The master could also establish this interpretive meaning according to his first explanation, in which ve-nishmeʿah refers to Moses. The intention would be, “You speak, and then you will be heard.” Yet he prefers to expound that they intended the feminine passive, so that what Moses said to Israel in his rebuke, “and we shall hear,” will also be justified. [TN160022]

Yad Yehudah - מ

(40) MPY GBWRH, “from the mouth of Power,” numerically equals ShMW, “His Name,” like MDRBNN, “rabbinic,” and with the inclusive unit it alludes to the Holy One's Name.[TN160023]

Yad Yehudah - מא

(41) “Concerning hearing alone”: the likeness's eternity. It says, “Call heaven and earth to witness against them,” meaning Tiferet and Malkhut. Then, “Give ear, heavens, and let earth hear”: hearing is likewise assigned to Malkhut, opposite Tiferet, “which intrinsically these” [?]. In place of the absent answer it says only “giving ear.” Do not object: why, then, does Isaiah fittingly say, “Hear, heavens, and give ear, earth”? For the perfect ones—[TN160024]

Yad Yehudah - מב

(42) Before the sin it suffices to assign only giving ear to heaven, as Moses the teacher says, after the manner of “The LORD will open His good storehouse, heaven, to give rain to His land,” and concerning the descent of the world's influx of blessings.

Yad Yehudah - מב - continued

Yad Yehudah - מג

(43) Thus: “On that day, says the LORD, I shall answer the heavens, and they shall answer the earth” (Hosea 2). YHWH bestows on Tiferet, and Tiferet on Malkhut. Not so after sin: the influx ceases, and awakening below is required to join Malkhut, “prayer” [?], to Tiferet. Thus “the speaking was in These are the generations of Jacob” [?], as is known. Isaiah the disciple therefore fittingly rebuked, “Hear, heavens,” assigning to Tiferet the hearing of Malkhut, necessarily required there to receive the influx.[TN160025]

Yad Yehudah - מד

(44) Thus, “Return to Me,” and so forth (Zechariah 1): return to Me; then, as you awaken below, I too shall awaken above to receive the influx and return to you.

Editorial reading note - 1

The 5458 (1698) printing: “For ‘let us make’ alone is directed toward the image”; the 5618 (1858) printing: “For ‘let us make’ alone, between [?], toward the image.” The reading of 5618 is uncertain; the wording of 5458 is retained in the main text, and no new decision is made here. [TN000059]

Return to chapter in contents

Historical index: Heqor Din - IV - Chapter 8

Editorial remarks - uncertain reading in a parallel witness

Heqor Din - Part IV (ד) - Chapter 9 (ט)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: כד · כג · כב · כא · כ · יט · יח · יז · טז · טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The nature of the source”: the soul's source above is from the good, after the manner of “Your people are all righteous.” Stumbling in sin is the fool's momentary accident, which does not persist; all will be rectified in the comprehensive future rectification. Zakhor is present language, like arukh, “arranged”: remembering Sabbaths and honoring father and mother, for all will be rectified. “According to its likeness”: when the interpretation resembles the dream, as in the Gemara.

“In the order of times”: see chapter 5, DṬ [?]. The six extremities in Hokhmah

Rema of Fano

