Set your hearts upon the general character of the Torah's passages: their commandments do not come in imperative language but as declarations of the future—“You shall not have,” “you shall not bow,” “you shall not bear.” The intention is: it is revealed and known before Me that you will have no other gods; likewise all of them. For the nature of the source from which one is hewn cannot endure an act of transgression. Whoever stumbles into it undergoes the fool's accident, which will not persist. The positive commandments too occur as a descriptive form encompassing all times: “Remember the Sabbath day,” zakhor with qamatz, not with sheva as in “Remember the days of old.” Rather, it means: I shepherd you through the power alluded to by these descriptions, “remember” and “honor”—you are still are called the order of times relative to the six extremities in their own place. Likewise the six extremities in Binah are called the order of times relative to the six thousand included in Creation, Formation and Action, through the mystery of countenances, as above, Part II, chapter 6: “and the living creatures' horns were hidden away and concealed” [?]. Our lower world is called time's duration relative to Creation, Formation and Action; these are called time's duration relative to the six extremities in their own place. Those six are time's duration relative to Binah's six, which are Torah's two thousand years before the world was created.[TN160028]

“The chosen thing”: everything a person chooses is revealed and known before Him beforehand; knowledge does not annul choice. “Which is known”: foreseeing concerns what one will choose, not the act's conclusion. Thus at Isaac's binding it was revealed before Him that he would not slaughter. For the whole exposition see Zohar Hadash, Tiqqun 47, folio 45, at the end. Know that at the beginning of folio 46 there, in the Tiqqun, “D-L-KhNBUʾTYH” must be corrected to “D-L-Moses the prophet.”[TN160029]

“Not only”: not merely that His knowledge is unrestricted, but also this, although impossibility has “a fixed nature.” For the philosophers in the Book of Principles said: although He can alter nature, He cannot alter what is known and what human reason admits, such as saying the part is larger than the whole, contrary to reason; likewise, saying something that already was never existed. “One cannot conceive”: canceling the past does not appear possible—to say what existed did not exist, when we know it existed.

remembering Sabbaths and honoring parents.

The utterances also assist that power and bring it into symbolic action, helping us complete it, as interpretation does a dream, provided it is interpreted according to its likeness. All the more when the utterance is God's writing, engraved on the tablets. Hence everything is foreseen in the order of times, while permission is given in time's duration. Foreseeing concerns the chosen thing, which is what is known; choice is our gift from the supernal Will. Knowledge does not, God forbid, annul will. We expanded this explanation in the Treatise on the Measures, in the fourth, fifth, and sixth measures; consult it there.

Further, not only is His blessed knowledge of the future unrestricted in relation to choice: although impossibility has a fixed nature for human intellect, and one cannot conceive the past's cancellation, so that what was should be as though it had not been, nevertheless nothing is impossible for the Lord of all. The contraction of His Shekhinah is evidence: by nature it is wholly impossible for the One truly described as infinite. Yet He rules over what occupies a place, placing it where no place could contain that occupant. His net extends over the cancellation of time, for His kingship rules over everything. He is the possessor of will, prolonging nature's time as He wishes; existence does not revert to absence in Him. If He gathers His spirit and soul to Himself, what account is to be made of nature and blessed LORD. Contraction is proof: all the earth is full of His glory, yet He contracts His Shekhinah into a small place that cannot contain Him. “His net extends”: this concerns the aforementioned cancellation of the past. Nature, intellect and existence are all in the Holy One's hand as clay in the potter's hand. “Does not revert to absence”: it is inapplicable to say of existence that it was absence and lack; everything is in His hand. For if the Holy One gathers a person's spirit and soul to Himself, everything in that person is nullified—nature, intellect and time, and so forth.

“Not entrusted to ministering angels”: annulling the LORD's vow, entrusted only to righteous Israelites or their souls, as he goes on to explain. “A personal interest”: in annulling the vow not to consume Israel, for there is no king, and so forth, until He said, “I shall make you a great nation,” giving you another people in their place. This is “Leave Me.” When he saw [?] that it depended on him—as he said, “Was I holding You?”—he annulled His vow.

hovering over the patriarchs' chain, the six extremities, and bestowing upon them. Aaron was not counted because he had a share in the calf. [TN160030] “Ratui for him”: this is the Gemara's language in Hagigah, the Mishnah “One does not expound.” Ratui for him, as though written B-G, L [?], for “like KRTʾ before Him” [?].[TN160031] “Their speaking in running and returning”: from the Shekhinah's living creatures, all the more must we bear reverence for the Shekhinah when contemplating what is before, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Set your hearts”: the master returns to explain the Mishnah “Everything is foreseen,” which he began in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “In imperative language”: to say in wording, “Take care not to do such-and-such,” and in substance with an imperative verb, “Do this.” Yet every command in the holy language is in future language alone, [gap], indicating the preceding chapter's explanation: Torah is destined to be fulfilled and is repeated [?] at Mount Sinai as symbolic action. Thus: I know you will not do this—for example, idolatry: it is revealed before Me that you will have no other gods. Even if initially you time? The past is abolished from its root: neither impossibility nor persistence remains here.

Likewise no design is beyond Him: He can enlarge the part until it exceeds the whole, as in “I shall make you a nation mightier and more numerous than it.” It will please listeners to interpret this literally once this exposition is established. This promise to Moses was needed so that he could annul the vow as an individual expert for the heads of the tribes: nothing of this kind was entrusted to the ministering angels. The same must be said of Jeconiah, of whom it was said, “Childless, a man who will not prosper”; in the end the vow was annulled. This was through righteous souls that had an opportunity, or through righteous people themselves who never tasted death and entered the Garden of Eden alive.

Moses, however, had a personal interest in his own case: “He became king in Jeshurun,” and there is no king without a people. The Holy One said, “Leave Me,” and I shall enlarge your dominion: “A king's splendor is in a multitude of people.” When Moses learned the matter depended on him, immediately “Moses entreated,” ve-yaḥal—as though he said, “Pardon him,” meḥol lo. “I shall consume them,” WʾKhLM, was reversed into “the angel,” WMLʾKh: “The angel of His presence saved them.” Further, “leave,” HNYḤH, equals three YHWHs. He hinted that Moses should arouse assistance below for the three upper measures, El, Elohim, YHWH, so that all agree in mercy. Moses immediately said, take counsel [?] at some time to break this boundary, nevertheless HH [?], you will sweeten it by restraining yourself [?], for a nature implanted in you from an ancient place will not act [gap]. In the end, fear Elohim and keep His commandments. [TN160032]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) Not the beginning of the explanation up to “imperative language”—the imperative wording was not determined [?], as in “Remember the days of old.” Rather this is descriptive language, referring back to the beginning of the utterances: “I am the LORD your God, for your unification” [?], after which “they included” [?] “Remember the Sabbath day” and “Honor,” and so forth. Likewise throughout Torah, if it arises, perhaps in descriptive language, it refers back to the utterances' beginning. [TN160033]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “The utterances also”: therefore we said Torah gave birth [?] to symbolic action, as the sages said, “All dreams follow the mouth,” when one gives a fitting interpretation. Speech leads it into symbolic action; all the more when speech is God's writing, which is a strong nature.[TN160034]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “Hence it is clear”: everything is foreseen in the category of times before the world. It is revealed before Him that Torah preceded the world and will nevertheless be fulfilled. All this also concerns time's duration: in every world permission and choice are given. Foreseeing [?] does not annul choice, nor the reverse, because foreseeing includes the condition of choice. From the beginning the LORD knows the path a person will traverse, so knowledge includes choice within itself. See above, Part III, chapter 16; also Mʿ [?], ʿB, section 5, and the commentary on the Measures.[TN160035]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Choice”: the Will, blessed Supernal Crown, desires human choice and gave it to us; knowledge [gap] does not annul Will, as in the commentary on

“Remember Abraham, Isaac and Israel,” not “Jacob,” to strengthen the middle line's mercy. Israel numerically equals Moses, Jacob and David. The vav includes Joseph; the lamed includes the tower floating in the air, hovering over the chain of the patriarchs and present with them. The discerning will understand.

We return to the general principle: first intelligibles have no entry before the simple Will that brought them into being. They are in His hand as clay in the potter's hand. One who rushes to object to this is ratui, as though he had not come into the world, for he comes to contemplate what is before and what is after; the world shudders and trembles before him. This is the precise meaning of ratui, from trembling and shaking. [TN160027] From the holy living creatures we may infer a fortiori: they are silent more than they speak; their speaking is in running and returning, and when they stand they let their wings fall.

the Measures, measure 5.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “Further”: here the master reveals his view of impossibilities. The category [?] of knowledge and choice, though opposites, is built together within His Power. The same holds for other opposites which philosophers say cannot be attributed to His capability; this is no deficiency in power, since they have a fixed nature as impossibilities—odd and even, white and black in one subject, a square oval, or something already done being undone. “For the living” [?], it is not so: all these are not impossible, “except to the wealth of all, blessed” [?].[TN160036]

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “The place of His Shekhinah is evidence, and for eternities” [?]: all the earth is full of His glory at every moment, through the place of His Shekhinah between the Ark's two poles. He is the world's place, whereas the world is not His place, God forbid; rather the world is His occupant [?]. The world is called a place only in relation to those filling it, who are its occupants [?]. He rules over the world and its bounds, so that what it cannot contain may occupy it.[TN160037]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “His kingship”: so it is with the multitude of His host from these natures [?]; He is “a cause like absence” [?], not absent. He possesses will in time, at every moment as He wills, that existences should not stand within it but be absent and enduring nonetheless. At the great Jubilee, when the LORD gathers His spirit to Himself, as in the Zohar and above, SʿB SKW [?], the heavens will disperse like smoke. All appointed times and times will be abolished from their root before creation, without “movement” [?] or persistence, but complete absence from their beginning.[TN160038]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Likewise”: so too with whole and part. Philosophers ruled that He cannot be described as capable of making a part the whole while it remains a part. “And toward my words” [?], rightly, for it is not beyond Him to enlarge the part beyond the whole. Thus the LORD wished to make Moses a nation larger than Israel, so as to preserve the entire whole. This is the master's view of impossibilities. Yet Mʿ, “this answer” [?] that the master obtained from the part's enlargement, is strange to me. Philosophers too would not deny it; sense [?] testifies to it in natural things. When one takes [?] a part from a vine and plants it in the earth, who has not seen or known that it grows as large as the vine from which it was taken, and twice [?] as large? The philosophers, however, speak of a part while it is still a part, before it grows. Likewise one may question the master's aforementioned proof concerning past time.[TN160039]

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “It is known”: this promise was not to Israel's harm, as seems [?] its plain meaning, but to their benefit, so Moses would have no personal interest when annulling His vow, as it were. Thus Berakhot, chapter 5: “Moses entreated”—Rava said he annulled His vow; here it says ve-yaḥal, and so forth.[TN160040]

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “As an individual expert”: he annuls a vow, and we derive it from three laymen, as in the Gemara.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “Not entrusted to ministering angels”: they cannot annul it. RBḤ [?] heard a heavenly voice [?] saying, “Now that I have sworn, who will annul it for Me?” Thus in Ha-Sefinah, in the incident of Rabbah bar bar Ḥana.[TN160041]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) Likewise Jeconiah: Jeremiah prophesied, “Thus says the LORD: Write this man childless, a man who will not prosper in his days, for none of his seed will prosper, sitting on David's throne and ruling again in Judah” (there, chapter 22). Pesiqta, cited in Yalqut there, says: great is repentance, which annulled the decree and the oath. How did it annul the decree? “Thus says the LORD: Write this man childless,” yet “Jeconiah's sons: Assir, Shealtiel.” Rabbi Tanhum said: Assir, because the Holy One bound Himself by an oath; Shealtiel, because He consulted the court above and they annulled it for Him. Since it was permitted, “for they do not profane the Name and annul a vow” [?], it seems to me that consulting the court above means the Sanhedrin of righteous ones there, or righteous people themselves, “in the souls of the life of N‘” [?], not ministering angels. [TN160042]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) Without the Holy One's promise to make Moses a mighty nation, Moses could not have annulled His vow, having a personal interest: he was king of

Israel, and there is no king without a people. The Holy One therefore promised a mighty nation would come from him, removing that interest. Thus He said, “Now leave Me,” and so forth; Moses thereby knew it depended on him, as the sages said, “Was I holding Him?”

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) The word WLKhM [?] was reversed, when the Holy One said “and who, and an angel” [?], and so forth. Thus the Zohar there, the undetermined portion, page 233: “The angel of His presence saved them”—this is the Shekhinah, “for thus” [?] with you in exile.[TN160043]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) He further hinted through “leave,” HNYḤH, numerically equal to three YHWHs mentioned in the chapter [?]. Corresponding to them are three vavs at the centers of YHWH, the mystery of 72: “The name of the LORD is called over every LORD, and a soul” [?], as in Ra'aya Mehemna, Pinehas. Likewise the “side of nun in Binah” [?], through three vavs, receives from right, left and middle—lovingkindness, judgment and mercy. The Holy One hinted that he should arouse three YHWHs to assist these three measures, so all agree in mercy. Therefore Moses said, “Remember Abraham,” mentioning these three patriarchal measures. “Israel” rather than “Jacob” adds strength to his measure, Tiferet, the middle line.[TN160044]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) The vav of “and Israel.”

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) Lamed: in their joining Jacob to Israel, it appeases Binah, for lamed alludes to Binah, the tower floating in the air, as is known, which adds to TWQ [?].[TN160045]

Yad Yehudah - כ

“Before the simple Will,” as stated at the beginning of this part; the reader who examines it will understand how and what. [TN160046]

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “One who rushes to object”: this falls under the sages' statement in Hagigah, chapter 2, Mishnah: one contemplating four things is ratui not to have come into the world—what is above, below, before and after. Anyone unconcerned for his Maker's honor is ratui not to have come into the world. One contemplating the Omnipresent's essence, TsB [?],

does not care for his Maker's honor, all the more if this leads him to investigate what precedes and follows time.[TN160047]

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “The precise meaning of ratui”: literally, from trembling. The world's trembling is on his account: it trembles before him as though he had not come into the world. Rashi's explanation is unnecessary: ratui from mercy, meaning he would be pitied had he not come into the world, and so forth. See there and in the Arukh.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “From the holy living creatures we infer a fortiori”: our words should be few, as Qohelet says, “For Elohim is in heaven,” and so forth. They are silent more than they speak. Hagigah, chapter 2, folio 13: what is ḥashmal? Rav Yehudah said: living creatures of fire that speak. A baraita taught: at times silent, at times speaking. When speech issues from the Holy One's mouth, they are silent, and so forth.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “Their speaking”: a word or two is needed, not determined [?], beneath the firmament designated [?] above their heads. They return and bend their vitality within the Shekhinah for songs [?]. Even when they stand silently their wings fall away from speech, as Rashi explains there.[TN160048]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Preventing contemplation”: knowledge and choice contradict one another; on the contrary, those very verses indicate their truth, that all is one. The first verse, “For My thoughts are not”: My thoughts are “not,” in Emanation, where nothing and naught are the simplicity of His blessed thoughts—the first three, the mystery of thought, and naught, the Infinite. “General absence”: Keter, where one cannot say “something” at all. Or “the particular investigation” [?]: Hokhmah and Binah, united in absence, the two thousand before the world, where one can speak

Rema of Fano

Taste and see: the verses Maimonides cited to prevent contemplation in expositions of knowledge themselves indicate its truth. The prophet said, “For My thoughts are not your thoughts.” This means that the simplicity of His blessed thoughts at their beginning, being as nothing and naught—like the absence, general or particular, preceding every thing—are themselves our fitting thoughts when directing intention in the commandments. This is the measure of good. Concerning evil's measure he said, “Nor are your ways My ways”: the cessation of our material ways and their remaining in absolute nonbeing—“Do not murder,” “do not commit adultery,” “do not steal”—are the Omnipresent's ways, for He commanded their cessation and annulment.

somewhat of something. Yet nothing precedes all degrees. These themselves are the thoughts fitting for our intentions in commandments. Thus “for not—your thoughts”: there your thoughts should be.[TN160049]

“Nor your ways My ways”: where your ways are “not,” in turning from evil—“Do not murder,” “do not commit adultery”—these themselves are the Omnipresent's ways. Although B-YHKh, YṬ, MSh [?], this is from its last six; its first two belong to the mystery of absence, where they were in the mystery “Your people are all righteous.”[TN160050]

"As heaven is higher": he explains the end of the previous verse, "For My thoughts," namely, "For heaven is higher than earth." Heaven's height is apparent only through earth's manifestation: this is "from earth." In the nature of anything round and spherical, height is perceptible only through the central point of earth, for its circuit is equal on every side; height applies only from earth's center. In this respect earth preceded. Although heaven preceded potentially, in this actuality earth preceded. Thus Torah's beginning: "In the beginning Elohim created heaven and earth"; "created" is potential alone. Later, "On the day YHWH Elohim made earth and heaven," is actual making.

"Likewise My ways are higher," in knowledge, "through your ways," in choosing to turn from evil: "They also do no iniquity; they walk in His ways." This resolves why He did not say "nor My ways as your ways," as He said "My thoughts—your thoughts." "Weekday governance": in understanding this, K'L [?], the final he has two lines and receives influx from the first he's two lines; see Zohar, Va-Era. This explains "Her ways are ways of pleasantness," the first he, "and all her paths

As heaven is higher than earth: the concavity of the firmament's vault was not naturally constituted to rise in a uniformly elevated circuit from the center except through the earth's form becoming manifest. Thus earth preceded in this respect, although heaven preceded in its potential creation, stated at Torah's beginning. Likewise My ways in knowledge are elevated and strengthened through your ways in choosing to turn from evil, after the manner of the Master of the World's tefillin, which contain weekday governance, as explained in our Treatise on Tefillin. And My thoughts through your thoughts in doing good for Heaven's sake, as explained in chapter 8, after the manner of the LORD's Sabbaths.

Their common feature is that the world is judged in goodness. His judgment contains only just balances regarding the quantity of good reaching His creatures, whether little or much. The reward of a commandment is a commandment: one choosing it chooses its reward, inherent in and from it, for the LORD's Name is called upon it. This is known from dividing the letters two by two, hidden and revealed: the latter in speech and deed, the former in thought and the heart's desire. These and their substitutions are holy in the perfected person whose inwardness matches his outwardness. An allusion: "For in Yah, YHWH, is the Rock of worlds"—YH, YH twice, once independently and once at the beginning of the unpronounced Name. These are

are peace": through Yesod, called Peace, she merits her path, Hokhmah. [TN160051]

The tefillin laid on weekdays belong to influx from Binah, the mystery of garments of skin, ʿWR, with ayin. On Sabbath, through Yesod: "Peace, on Sabbath you shall be blessed," whose initials are ShBT. Influx comes from Hokhmah, garments of light, ʾWR, with alef. Thus "I considered my ways and returned my feet to Your testimonies." On weekdays influx comes from Binah through her two lines; on Sabbath she is called Thought. "I considered my ways": what was Ways becomes Thought, Hokhmah. Through this "I returned my feet," for throughout the weekdays the Shekhinah is in the mystery "her feet descend to death." Thus Shabbat: shin's three heads correspond to he's three lines; "the pupil of the eye," bat ʿayin, is yod, Hokhmah. This also explains the author: weekday governance is called Ways, while the LORD's Sabbaths are called Thought.

"The LORD's Name is called upon you": upon the commandment. MTs corresponds to YH in the division of letters into hidden and revealed. The latter, WH, correspond to revealed speech and deed

—“speech and action.” The former, MTs, are YH by atbash, corresponding to hidden thought and desire, where YH is hidden by exchanging letters. “They”: YH and their substitutions, MTs; all is holy for the righteous person, all in his deeds, ShNKh [?], inwardness matching outwardness, everything holy.[TN160052] “Or their traces”: the hidden YWH HB [?] also equals YH. Thus “From its half its word is filled.”[TN160053]

“Said concerning cancellation”: as in Bereshit Rabbah, “Behold, it was very good”—the angel of death. “Months containing no year”: pregnancy's months, when a person is sworn before entering the world's air, “Be righteous,” and so forth, as in the Gemara. “Pervert his way”: a person will sin before entering the world's air; immediately, “He was grieved in His heart.” Thus “his heart will rage against the LORD” in the inner chambers, where sadness belongs, as in the Gemara, “This is in the inner chambers,” according to Rashi's reading.[TN160054]

the letters and their substitutions, or their traces, for those knowing His mystery.

Sufferings, death and Gehinnom's punishments contain only doubled goodness, like “Behold, it was very good,” said concerning the cancellation of the canceler, as we explained. One choosing transgression chooses its reward, which comes of itself. Hence there is no waiver in Him, only patience; that is part of the goodness by which the world is judged. Every person has already been warned of this in months containing no year. From the moment it was foreseen that “his folly would pervert his way, his heart would rage against the LORD,” this accords with the inner chambers, which the rabbis in “One does not expound” say contain sadness, according to Rashi's reading and the sage's interpretation in Pardes Rimmonim, contrary to Rabbi Todros ha-Levi's reversal of it.

“Everything accords with the abundance of deeds” means the world as a whole is judged according to its majority. It also alludes to “Through sloth the roofing sags”: the potential existence of performing commandments in the souls' roots does not, God forbid, disappear, but remains low and unilluminated throughout the sloth. “Through lowering the hands,” when the instruments of action occupy themselves with low and shameful matters, “the house leaks” temporarily, and will again be built. For it says, “You shall choose life,” past in place of future. Both apply: we already chose life when we were with the King

Therefore the world is judged in goodness, justly, since people have choice. “Does not disappear”: existence will not disappear but remains low, and so forth. “It will again be built”: everything will be rectified in the comprehensive rectification explained in chapter 11. “And you shall cut,” ve-kharatta [?]: vav converts it to future. “Both”: past and future both apply. We already chose in the world of souls before being created, when we were with the King at His work; at Sinai, where all souls were present, those here and those not here. We are assured of choosing in the future, when everything will be rectified.[TN160055]

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Taste and see”: joined to the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “The verses Maimonides cited”: in Laws of Repentance, chapter 5, when he raised the exposition of His knowledge and human choice. Who is wise and understands this? If there is knowledge, where is choice? His view is that we cannot understand His knowledge, for it differs from ours. Our knowledge and essence are two things; He and His knowledge are one. Just as His essence is unattainable, so is His knowledge. He says the prophet spoke of this: “For My thoughts are not your thoughts.” Although, on his view, these verses teach a person to refrain from contemplating knowledge —deep, deep, who can find it?—they also establish and necessitate knowledge according to our interpretation.

at His work, and likewise at Sinai; we are assured that we will choose it at its proper times, in perfected actuality. This is a great general rule in Torah: whenever future occurs in place of past or past in place of future, you must expound both, joined in truth and uprightness. My son, beware of these: you have no business with them except through serving sages, command upon command, line upon line, and according to the Torah they teach you.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “The prophet said, For My thoughts are not your thoughts”: and thus its interpretation [?]: My thoughts as they were initially, before choice's existence [?], were “not,” for they were then utterly simple, abstracted from every determination of choice—your thoughts themselves [gap], and the like.[TN160056]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Like”: it is appropriate [?] to designate His simple thoughts by the designation [?] “not,” as absence is called a beginning relative to—thus the philosopher explained. Both general absence before the world and particular absence arising in the world daily are called beginnings, although they are absences.[TN160057]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “This is the measure of good”: [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Concerning the measure of evil”: in another wording, as Scripture says, “Nor are your ways My ways.” That is, in the material ways which you perform and do—those very ones— My ways and My will are not present. On the contrary, I desired to put an end to the ordering of the materiality of your limbs. What it says afterward, “For”— [TN160058]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “Heaven is higher than earth”: heaven's height is perceptible only from earth. The heavens are the spheres continually revolving in a circle, opposite [?] earth, which is like the center within their spherical circle. From it heaven is assigned elevation: it is higher relative to its measure, “relative to what?” [?]. If earth [gap], height would not be attributed to heaven. Thus the sages dispute whether heaven or earth preceded in creation. Both are true: heaven was created first potentially, so Scripture first says “heaven and earth.” But actually —[TN160059]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Earth was created first,” as it is written, “On the day YHWH Elohim made earth and heaven.” For heaven is considered only in relation to the earth. The construction of the verse is: just as heaven is high above earth, so My ways, in which I commanded the turning away from evil, have risen [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “in knowledge and have become stronger in this”] than your ways, which you have thus chosen. For from them even the seers[?] and gratuitous decreers who impose necessity on what is voluntary may learn—all the more My knowledge, which does not compel. My simple thoughts, too, will be recognized from your thoughts within yourselves, as befits them for the sake of Heaven. Thus this verse establishes and confirms knowledge together with choice. [TN160060]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “Like tefillin,” “as B-YWSQYN” [?], of the Master of the World. Thus Berakhot, chapter 1: what is written in the Master of the World's tefillin? The reason is because—[TN160061]

(10) “They contain weekday governance”: as known from the Tiqqunim and Zohar, Noah, on weekdays the Shekhinah clothes herself in Metatron, through whom union occurs and she receives influx from above. Thus the prophet: “The gate shall be shut the six working days.” On Sabbath union is without an intermediary: “On Sabbath day it shall open.” We know that the arm-tefillin signify union through Metatron; Zohar, end of Be-Shallah, and Metzora, page 36, “see” [?]: “When he lays the arm-tefillin, he must extend his left arm toward his heart and bind a knot with the right, to join one to another in the union [?] above," and so forth. Adorned with the Holy One's tefillin [?], [gap], as also stated there, they too signify union. Thus the rabbis fittingly say "the Master of the World's tefillin," meaning Metatron, the world's prince, through whom union occurs on weekdays.

Sabbath, however, is not the time for tefillin: all gates then open, and "the recognized ones, hope" [?], for "the soul to be illuminated" [?] without intermediary, [gap]. Here too, "My ways are higher through your ways": the LORD's ways designate the Shekhinah. Through what are these raised from Israel's upright ways below [?]? Especially in turning from evil [?], whereby the shells are subdued [?] around below [?], in the supernal servant Metatron, who clothes himself in them. Likewise—[TN160062]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) "Their common feature": knowledge and choice agree that the world is judged in goodness, the Mishnah's latter clause. Although this was explained [?] above in chapter 1, here both are equal in the world's being judged from the LORD's foreseeing, to give reward and punishment. The Holy One does not deprive any creature of its reward or reckon a commandment's reward against [gap], as in Midrash Shoher Tov, chapter 23, and Rabbenu Bahya, Eqev. Choice likewise causes this: one choosing good merits its reward, which follows of itself. It itself indicates, "there is no being above its agents" [?].[TN160065]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) "The LORD's Name is called upon" a commandment: YH are the letters TsM [?] in atbash; with the last two, WH, they form mitzvah. Torah writes the first letters alone because they are more fundamental than the last: YH encompass the first three sefirot, WH the seven building-days, as is known. Speech and action correspond to the last letters, thought and the heart's will to the first, as in Ra'aya Mehemna, Qedoshim, page 182 [?], [gap]. In concealment, a hint that "they are their world and their drum" [?], in letters [gap]; thus again a commandment [?].[TN160066]

(17) "No sufferings": even through retribution the world is judged in goodness. Punishments contain no evil at all, only doubled goodness: to cleanse sin and consume BYLʿD [?] with us.[TN160069]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"One who chooses transgression," etc.: that is, choice is also good for him, since one who chooses transgression chooses its punishment and the reward that follows from the punishment, even without His action. [TN160071]

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) The Holy One does not waive it altogether. Even though He "labors" [?] in goodness, He "suspends it" [?], merely prolonging His patience. This too is "the LORD" [?], from the goodness by which the world is judged.[TN160072]

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) Every person has already been instructed [?] and sworn, [gap], before entering the world's air to choose good, as in Ha-Mappelet, folio 30b. [TN160073] heart rages against the LORD" (Proverbs 19). "Against/above the LORD" means Binah, as explained in several Zohar passages, from which judgments awaken, [gap], for indeed [gap]. As judgment flows through the degrees it diminishes, as in Pardes, Gate of Essence, "and against her also" [?].[TN160074]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) "In One does not expound": and as we conclude [?], it is in chapter 1, folio 5b: "If you will not hear, My soul will weep in secret," and so forth. Rabbi Shemuel bar Yitzhaq said: the Holy One has a place where He weeps, called Secrets. Is there weeping before the Holy One? Rav Pappa said there is no sadness before Him: "Majesty and splendor are before Him; strength and joy in His place." No difficulty: this concerns the inner chambers, that the outer chambers. None in the outer chambers? But it is written, and so forth. Rashi's reading gives sadness in the inner chambers.

The great master Rabbi Moshe Cordovero [?] wondered in Pardes there: the inner chambers designate Binah, where there is no sadness, and judgment descends from it; in the other [?] sefirot, the outer chambers, there is no sadness or judgment—"whence their world?" [?]. He disagrees with Rabbi Todros ha-Levi, who reads the reverse, that there is none in the inner chambers; see there. [TN160075]

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) "Everything": here he explains the Mishnah's final clause, "Everything accords with the abundance of deeds." According to our interpretation it is explained [?] as the majority of deeds of the entire world, "for their sake" [?]. [TN160076]

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) These also hint at the inwardness of the name "deed," rising potentially above into the sefirot, the souls' roots. The commandments below are the female waters, giving strength above for the supernal union, TsH [?], to produce the host of souls. This is the initial "according to the abundance of deeds": when commandments cease below, [gap] the power rising from them. Thus Qohelet 10: "Through sloth the roofing sags, and through lowering the hands the house leaks." Sloth in commandments lowers and "can" [?] above the power roofing souls, [gap].[TN160077]

Yad Yehudah - כו

Union will not, God forbid, be annulled. Yet through slackness of hands, when hands are folded, and through the occupation[?] of the organs of action with low things—that is, when this sloth is added as well— [TN160078]

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) The house already built will also leak: the souls already come into the world. He said "leak," not "be destroyed," indicating that it will not be consumed; this is for the moment [?], and it will be built again in the future when they are rectified.[TN160080]

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) Past in place of future, but for conversive vav, hinting that both apply.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) "With the King": in the world of Creation, as the sages said, He took counsel with the souls of the righteous.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) Likewise all souls were at Sinai, those here and those not here. We are assured that they will be there in the future, "in their meritorious ones" [?]. [TN160079]

"A blessing to Elohim," etc.: wherever "Blessed" is said, the name LORD is used, unless something resembling the event precedes it—namely, the comprehensive rectification, when all will be rectified. Then "Blessed" is said concerning Elohim, for all will call upon the name of the LORD, and the LORD will be one and His name one. Otherwise one could err, since an idol too is called elohim. "It means in the latter clause," etc.: the second clause concerns blessing a name by a name. "Learned from its context": from the blasphemer, who also appears in this Mishnah. The blasphemer says, "May Yose strike Yose," namely a name by a name; likewise here, in blessing, one blesses the Name by a name. "The heavens will answer," etc.: heaven is Tiferet and earth is Malkhut. "Which is in Sefat Emet": in the book Sefat Emet written by this author. [TN180004]

"In such a case": when one blesses the Name by a name, we suspect association of the name of Heaven with another thing, as he says, he has no business with Moses'

The comprehensive rectification of which we spoke, through the cessation of impurity from all creatures, is what we continually hope for. You will not find in Scripture a blessing addressed to Elohim rather than to the LORD alone, unless something resembling this event precedes it explicitly or by allusion. So too with the sons of Gad and Reuben, when they cleared themselves of suspicion of foreign worship concerning the altar they had built. For this blessing is fitting only where there is a trustworthy clarification that it is the holy God who is blessed, and none other.

Therefore they said in the Jerusalem Talmud: If a Noahide blesses the Name, one answers amen after him; if he blesses by a name, one does not answer. In explaining the matter, it seems to us that the latter clause concerns blessing one name by another, as something learned from its context. It is derived from the blasphemer, for knowledge of opposites is one. It resembles Hosea's saying, "The heavens will answer the earth," which speaks in the same language as David our king's statement, "For You, LORD, I have awaited; You will answer, Lord my God": the first is written with yod-he, the second with aleph-dalet. In such a case we suspect him of associating the name of Heaven with another thing, since he has no business with the Torah of Moses our teacher and is liable to death for it: he mysteries, etc. But when he simply blesses the Name, one answers amen after him. "All peoples, clap your hands": all will be rectified —specifically all peoples. "He will subdue peoples under us": they will all be righteous; then "He will choose for us," etc. "You will bring them and plant them," etc.: You will bring and rectify the peoples mentioned, for at first they were dismayed, etc. "More than all gods": Jethro knew that the LORD is great more than all the worshiped gods did. Had the divinities known that retribution is exacted from those worshiped, they would not have been enticed into being worshiped. Thus, in any event, they do not know, while he knew it. This is "For in the matter in which they acted presumptuously": the divinities enticed into being worshiped acted presumptuously in this.

"In the sense of 'What king of the nations,'" etc.: in the Zohar the verse is reversed, "What king of the nations would not fear You?" All acknowledge Your divinity. "To purify themselves like him," etc.: the nations of the world should have purified themselves like Jethro. “What his tongue left short,” etc.: he said “The LORD will reign,” in the future, rather than “reigned,” in the past. He completed his prayer in Moses’ song by petitioning for the present: then there will be “a site for Your dwelling,” when all are rectified in the future. This is “You will bring them and plant them,” etc., “a site for Your dwelling,” etc. “God reigns over the nations,” etc.: they too will be rectified, and then God will sit upon His holy throne.

“Like the appearance of a human being,” etc.: it is explained in Kanfei Yonah that Ezekiel saw in Yetsirah and Isaiah in Yetsirah? He saw that all would be rectified in the future, and all peoples would become a site for the throne. This is “You will bring them”—the nations of the world; then they will make a site for Your dwelling, as above. [TN180005] “The whole soul,” etc.: in Olam Qatan, all the soul’s parts are five degrees: nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, yehidah. Each order has fifty aspects; thus Yah. This is why it does not say “shall praise to Yah”: the one praising is the praise and is Yah, and the person praising is also called Yah. “As stated”—that is, N.B.H. [TN180006]

does not penetrate its depth and alters its meaning. But simply blessing the Name is permitted to him under the Torah of the Noahides, in relation to which he is like a High Priest. [TN180001]

Concerning this comprehensive rectification the sons of Korah said, “All peoples, clap your hands,” and the whole psalm, as its plain meaning shows. It says, “He will subdue peoples under us”; then “He will choose our inheritance for us, the pride of Jacob which He loved for ever.” For it is written, “I yearn for the pride of Jacob.” It is not pleasing to their Master to interpret this as “I abhor,” Heaven forbid, but in the sense of “My soul is crushed with longing.” As it were, He yearns for what He cannot obtain, for everything is in Heaven’s hands except the fear of Heaven. [TN180002]

Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, said with these intentions, “You will bring them and plant them on the mountain of Your inheritance.” Certainly the plural expression in this verse refers to the peoples he mentioned first, who were dismayed before the LORD’s terror and the splendor of His majesty. They should have learned from Jethro, who was at first priest to all the gods, which are no gods, and afterward came under the Shekhinah’s wings. From all the gods, concerning whom it is written, “I shall execute judgments,” he knew that the LORD is great, like light’s superiority to darkness. Alternatively: I know more than all the worshiped gods that the LORD is great. Their deficient knowledge concerns the matter in which they acted

“The comprehensive rectification”: through which the entire world will be rectified, as we said in the preceding chapters.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“You will not find in Scripture”: a blessing attributed to the name Elohim, saying “Blessed is Elohim.” Rather, all blessings are attributed to the name LORD alone, and Scripture says in them, “Blessed is the LORD.”

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Unless”: something concerning comprehensive rectification is mentioned beforehand, explicitly or by allusion. For example, “Peoples, bless our God”; “Blessed is God, who has not removed my prayer” (Psalms 66). The whole preceding psalm speaks of comprehensive rectification, saying, “All the earth shall bow down to You,” etc. Likewise, “In assemblies bless God” (there, 68) speaks of the splitting of the Sea of Reeds, which belonged to this matter. Further there, “The God of Israel gives strength and might to the people; blessed is God,” after mentioning, “Kingdoms of the earth, sing to God,” etc. [gap]. This is when comprehensive rectification has already been mentioned, when all who come into the world will recognize and know that the LORD is one and His name one, and there will no longer be idolatry in the world. See the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 110b, concerning “Ask God,” as follows: [gap] “For You are great and perform wonders; You alone are God” [gap], etc. See there.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Likewise”: the reason it says in Joshua 22, “The children of Israel blessed God,” is that this concerns the sons of Gad and Reuben when they cleared themselves of suspicion of idolatry. Here there is no room for error.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“For this blessing is not fitting”: for the name Elohim, unless, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Therefore they said in the Jerusalem Talmud”—this is how it should read, etc. According to its wording, the meaning is that if he blessed the Name itself, we do not suspect an idolatrous intention and answer amen after him. If, however, he blessed a human being or the like by a name, we suspect that he intends to bless him by that idol.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“It seems to us”: the latter clause too concerns blessing the Name, but he mentioned it by a name, and we suspect association of the name of Heaven with another thing. This is what it says: he blessed the Name by a name, etc.

presumptuously against themselves, allowing themselves to be enticed into being worshiped, so that retribution would be exacted from them in the future. Alternatively: I know from them that the LORD is great, for all acknowledge the divinity of the First Cause, in the sense of Rav Yeva Sava’s “What king of the nations would not fear You?”

Had the surrounding peoples been wise and understood this, they should have purified themselves like him when Israel dwelled beside them in the wilderness. In Moses our teacher’s days, peace be upon him, what he longed for in saying “The LORD will reign for ever and ever” would have been fulfilled. Although he did not say “The LORD reigns; the LORD reigned,” he nevertheless completed in the intention of his prayer what his tongue left short, as we mentioned at the end of the preceding part. He asked that the present endure in the future manner, and also for rectification of the past, in the sense of “Gladden us according to the days You afflicted us,” explained earlier at the beginning of the treatise. [TN180003]

The sons of Korah said, “God reigns over the nations; God sits upon His holy throne.” This is the throne Ezekiel saw: upon its likeness was a likeness like the appearance of a human being, above it. Concerning this wondrous likeness it is written, “I said, ‘You are gods, and all of you sons of the Most High.’” Now, at any rate, the serpent spoke truly to Eve in saying “You shall be like gods,” for we lost the essential perfection and only “Something learned from its context”: which speaks of blessing the Name.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“It is derived from a blasphemer”: who curses a name by a name, such as “May Yose strike Yose,” as stated in the Mishnah, chapter 7 of Sanhedrin.

Yad Yehudah - י

“For knowledge of opposites” [gap], and thus he receives [gap], and this matter is—

Yad Yehudah - יא

As Hosea says (chapter 2), “On that day, says the LORD, I shall answer the heavens, and they shall answer the earth,” etc. Heaven designates Tiferet and earth Malkhut, as is known. The intention is that the name Havayah will answer the heavens, for it is the name particular to Tiferet, as is known; Tiferet will answer and impart influx to Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Which is”: the language David too used.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“The first”: “For You, LORD,” is the name Havayah; the second, “You will answer, Lord,” is the name of lordship. The intention is: You, the name Havayah, Tiferet, will answer and impart influx to the attributes and Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“In such a case,” when “I blessed” [?], one blesses a

name by a name, and one does not answer amen after him, for we suspect association of the name of Heaven [gap], so as to prohibit him from engaging in Torah. [TN180007]

Yad Yehudah - טו

"But one who simply blesses the Name": there is no basis to infer that he intends idolatry. For from the Torah of the Noahides, who are commanded resemblance remained. Likewise, "Behold, the human being has become like one," contrary to the will above, for He desired him to be actually one. This is the sense of "The whole soul shall praise Yah": it does not say "every soul" or "all souls," but "the whole soul." Know Him and serve Him, and you will understand "shall praise Yah," for the praise, the one who praises, and the One praised are one. "Gods" and "sons of the Most High" concern image and likeness, as we explained.

concerning cursing God, he knows from it to bless Him. His Torah admonished him to engage in it; moreover, in relation to it he is like a High Priest, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"All my bones," etc. (Psalms 35).

Yad Yehudah - יז

"I yearn," etc. (Amos 6): it does not mean abhorrence and loathing, as those commentators "look

against them" [?]. Rather, yearning is an expression of desire and longing, "as fitting" [?]: He desires and longs to avenge and afflict those who afflict Israel. So it is written, and as stated, "a nation, in all that he longs, for ever" [?]. [TN180008]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Concerning these intentions": comprehensive rectification and Israel's perfection. [TN180009]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"For those ways": as He says, "You will bring them and plant them," indicating that He is not speaking of Israel. This accords with our Rabbis' view: it does not say "You will bring us," etc.; rather, they prophesied without knowing what they prophesied. Therefore he mentioned a little, "D.K.L." [?], "You will bring them and plant them," in the singular. Thus He speaks of "seventy ... worship, Edom and Moab" [?], in the matter mentioned just before: "Trembling seized the inhabitants of Philistia; then they were dismayed," etc. Concerning them He said, "You will bring them and plant them," in the King's manner, for they will be rectified in the future. [TN180010]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"They should have learned from Jethro": they were not near rectification, and therefore were dismayed. Scripture says that nevertheless in the future "You will bring them," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"From all gods," etc.: in any event, the master comes to explain what was said concerning Jethro, "Now I know that the LORD is greater than all the gods." The language is difficult to accept, for Heaven forbid, Heaven forbid, there is no substance in idolatry; rather [gap], "to bless, his general rule" [?]: he said, "Now I know from all gods that the LORD is great." This is "in his praise, with a name of praises" [?], as it is written, "And from all gods, the idols of the peoples." [TN180011]

Yad Yehudah - כב

Alternatively, Jethro's intention in saying "The LORD is great" is: I know more than all the worshiped gods. For it is known that "this is God" [?], and they were enticed into being worshiped, so that retribution would be exacted from them, as retribution is exacted from those worshiped. They did not know or understand this, for had they known that retribution was destined to be exacted from them, they would not have been enticed into being worshiped. [TN180012]

Yad Yehudah - כג

"If so": I knew from the gods themselves that the LORD is great, for they acknowledge His divinity.

Yad Yehudah - כד

"In the sense of 'Who would not fear You, King of the nations?'": the Elder expounded in Mishpatim, page 175, "What king of the nations would not fear You?" For all acknowledge Your divinity.

Yad Yehudah - כה

To purify themselves and convert like him, like Jethro.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“It would have been fulfilled”: immediately, the comprehensive rectification for which Moses longed in saying “The LORD will reign.” Although he did not say “The LORD reigns; the LORD reigned,” because he foresaw what would be with them, as stated at the end of the preceding part, he nevertheless did not refrain from saying “The LORD will reign,” because of his great yearning for it.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“He nevertheless completed”: even for the future, “above” [?], he said “The LORD reigns; the LORD reigned; the LORD will reign.” That is, concerning comprehensive rectification he said “You will bring them and plant them,” etc.; through this he completed what his tongue left short of saying, “The LORD reigns; the LORD reigned.” [TN180013]

Yad Yehudah - כח

“For he asked,” etc.: as He says, “You will bring them and plant them”—the peoples—now, “already as hanging” [?], in the manner that will be in the future. That is: You, LORD, will reign, and through this the matter will endure for ever and ever. [TN180014]

Yad Yehudah - כט

“And concerning the rectification mentioned”: he also asked in saying “A site for Your dwelling,” and the throne will be complete, which You have made. “And a sanctuary, and they will build” are the two upper princes involved in building the throne. As long as the peoples below are not rectified, the throne is not complete. [TN180015]

Yad Yehudah - ל

“In the sense of ‘Gladden us,’” etc.: at the beginning of the psalm, which is a prayer concerning the rectification mentioned; see there.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“The sons of Korah also said”: this matter at the end of the psalm, “God reigns over the nations,” etc., as stated in the Midrash there, “M.R., T.Sh.R.Y., king” [?]: As long as the wicked are in this world, in the world, the Holy One, blessed be He, as it were, does not sit upon His throne. So it says, “I shall overturn the throne of kingdoms”; and it is written, “I was looking until thrones were set down, and the Ancient of Days sat.” When does He sit? “Saviors shall ascend Mount Zion,” etc. [TN180016]

Yad Yehudah - לב

“Like the appearance of a human being”: with the kaf of comparison; it does not say “the appearance of a human being.” Likewise it says “above it,” not “sitting upon it.” All this is because the throne was not complete in the prophet’s time, during exile.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“Concerning this likeness and amplification”: as stated above.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“It is written,” etc.: so it was in the first Adam’s case, of whom it is written, “I said, ‘You are gods’” (Psalms 82). This was in potential, “for he did not say ‘surely’” [?]. “You shall be like gods”—he spoke truly, indicating the diminution of perfection. [TN180017]

Yad Yehudah - לה

“Like one”: with the kaf of comparison.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“For He desired him to be actually one”: as will be adequately understood.

Yad Yehudah - לז

“The whole soul”: the letter heʾ alludes to the five parts—nefesh, ruaḥ, neshamah, ḥayyah and yeḥidah. Otherwise it should have said “all souls” in the plural, or “every soul,” but here there is heʾ, according to ordinary linguistic usage. It is already known that the neshamah is a portion of God above. [TN180018] [TN220001]

Yad Yehudah - לח

For the praise adds strength and soul [gap]. This is “The whole soul shall praise Yah.” See also Yonat Elem, chapter 25, where the master explains this verse through the expression “fifteen crowns.” The matter is one; see there.

"Like Adam you shall die," etc.: this belongs to the mystery of falling upon the face. "A servant who longs for shade" is Metatron. See the Zohar, Terumah, page 222? concerning reflected light, as stated in the Ari's teachings on Atsilut: in the mystery of reflected light, in Malkhut is K.E., in Yesod Hokhmah, and in Hod Binah, and so with all of them. Shemhazai: his head on earth and his feet in heaven. [TN180021]

"Those who mourn with the community": this is Shemhazai, who mourned over the Flood, as above. Therefore his sons saw the community's consolation in Noah's and his sons' rescue. "For You shall inherit," etc.: in the vernacular, "You will be inherited?" Among all the nations—they will accept His kingship upon themselves. "For those entering," etc.: to enter the Garden of Eden and nullify the flame of the turning sword. This is "the cutting off of the obstacle," the sword's flame. [TN180022]

Am zu qanita: the initial letters total one hundred and seventy-seven, the numerical value of "Garden of Eden." The

We have already recalled the first Adam's praise from within his disgrace: through his sin he died at that very moment of his own will, so as not to lead astray the image and likeness within him. He accepted death's judgment upon himself, in the sense of "My heart is slain within me," and all his days were in complete repentance. It is therefore fitting that his deed should be an example for us. Thus the psalmist said, "Indeed, like Adam you shall die, and like one of the princes you shall fall." This is Shemhazai, the distinguished one of the two princes who fell from the place of their holiness. They said of him in the aggadah that his two sons told him they had dreamed of the world's destruction; Metatron also sent and informed him of the Flood's decree. He stood weeping and grieved for the world. Through this merit the gates of repentance opened for him, and he suspended himself between heaven and earth, his feet in heaven and his head on earth. This too is an excellent likeness for "a servant who longs for shade." Concerning his constancy they said that he remains suspended, standing in repentance before the Holy One, blessed be He.

In chapter 9 of tractate Niddah the master said: Sihon and Og were brothers, sons of Ahiah son of Shemhazai. They take it for granted remaining letters, monith, have the numerical value of betom, "in completeness." [TN180023] "Who complete likeness," etc.: therefore it says am zu qanita, in feminine language, concerning those who complete likeness, which is Elohim, the feminine. "Until He grants us grace," etc.: "You will bring them" alludes to the exile beyond the River Sambatyon, and "You will plant them" to the sea crossings, wherever, etc. "Metatron," etc.: Metatron is in Yetsirah and Sandalphon in Asiyah. Likewise, the living creature is in Yetsirah and the wheel in Asiyah. This is "His beasts, all beasts of the forest," in Yetsirah, which will complete the world of Asiyah, and all will be one. Although Asiyah's feet descend to death, nevertheless all the earth's kings will thank You.

Yad Yehudah - א

"We have already recalled," etc.: since at the end of the preceding chapter the master expounded the verse "I said," etc., he also explains its conclusion here, "Indeed, like Adam you shall die," etc., connecting it with the preceding chapter's comprehensive rectification.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Through his sin he died": immediately, in his thought, by accepting death's judgment upon himself.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"In the sense of 'My heart is slain within me'" (Psalms 109): my heart is slain and killed within me, "and as I overturned" [?]. [TN180024]

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Therefore the psalmist said": as an admonition to repent, "Indeed, like Adam you shall die." The expression "you shall die" means "with complete lamentation" [?], that you surrender yourselves to death in the mystery of "To You, LORD, I lift my soul," as is known. Likewise, "And like one of the princes you shall fall" is an awakening to repentance, like Shemhazai, the one distinguished among the two princes because he repented. Not so his companion Azael. As stated in the record brought in Yalqut Bereshit: in the Flood generation, Shemhazai and Azael descended from heaven to dwell with creatures, "he devised" [?] that they should commit no sin or injustice. After descending, they could not subdue their inclination and corrupted themselves with the daughters of the earth. Metatron informed

there that Og was the fugitive who escaped the Flood; Tosafot inferred by analogy concerning Sihon that he too shared that rescue. Go and learn the reward of those who mourn for the community: they and their children see the community's consolation.

When the conditions of repentance are fulfilled among us, we shall hope for the promise to which Asaph alluded in saying, "Arise, God; judge the earth," in the manner of "Be vindicated when You judge," which we explained. "For You shall inherit among all the nations": had he said "all" as a direct object, it would imply that they would perish and their inheritance would endure for ever. Now that he says "among all the nations," it means that they too will accept the yoke of His kingship and, through their righteousness, become a site for His dwelling, as we explained in the preceding chapter.

The end toward which this great promise looks is "Until Your people cross, LORD": the Jordan, to enter the Land of Israel; "until they cross" a second time, from there to the Garden of Eden, the hoped-for end for those entering the Land at that time. Likewise, "this people You acquired," am zu qanita, in numerical value, its initial letters separately and the remainder separately, is "Garden of Eden, closed." Then it will be open with the obstacle's removal. Alternatively, "Until Your people cross, LORD" is the first entry, for those who possess image, the wholly righteous; "until this people You acquired cross" is the second entry, for Shemhazai that the Holy One, blessed be He, was going to bring a flood upon the world. Shemhazai also understood this from his sons' dreams and repented. Azael, however, still remains in his corruption, leading human beings into transgression. See the lengthy account there. [TN180025]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"This too": his feet being in heaven is a likeness of repentance [gap], of tractate Niddah, folio 61.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Tosafot inferred," etc.: "according to their life" [?], also in the Midrash on Moses' passing, brought in Yalqut, Va-Yelekh: "Thus, son of Amram," etc.; "I waged war against Sihon and Og, two logs of life, for at the time of the Flood the waters did not reach their ankles because of their height," etc. [TN180026]

Yad Yehudah - ז

"We shall hope for the promise": of comprehensive rectification. This is the concluding "Arise, God; judge the earth." The intention is not "Judge and punish them," but save them from judgment.

Yad Yehudah - ח

In the manner we mentioned above, Part III, chapter 3, the expression "Be proved when You judge"; "for You shall inherit among all the nations," for they too will accept the yoke of Your kingship and be rectified.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"The end," etc.: he returns to the verse "You will bring them and plant them," which in the preceding chapter we explained concerning comprehensive rectification. Here he says that "Until they cross," etc., continues into the next verse, "You will bring them," etc. After the LORD brings Israel over to the Garden of Eden, then "You will bring them," for the end toward which this promise looks is the Garden of Eden. See the explanation of "the end toward which" also in H.K.M., Part II, section 13. [TN180027]

Yad Yehudah - י

"Likewise, this people": he alluded to aspects for them in am zu qanita [gap], with the numerical value of maqom, "place." Namely, He will bring Israel over there to the Garden of Eden, and "in the place that he leaves for him" [?], open wide. [TN180028]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"With the obstacle's removal": the cherubim and the flame of the turning sword.

Yad Yehudah - יב

Alternatively, the first "Until they cross" also concerns the Garden of Eden, "and two" [?], for the wholly righteous who possess image, as stated above. This is the first penitents, who complete likeness. Afterward, "You will bring them and plant them"—all the nations—"on the mountain of Your inheritance," as stated. [TN180019]

We likewise find a first and second entry explicitly explained in different ways: Onkelos renders them concerning the crossings of the Arnon and Jordan, while tractate Berakhot explains them concerning those entering the Land in Joshua's days and Ezra's days. What we have explained too belongs to the mystery. We too look to Him until He grants us grace at the crossings of the River Sambatyon, to gather Israel's banished, and at crossings of the sea wherever they are, to gather Judah's dispersed.

After Isaiah proclaimed repentance in the passage "Seek the LORD while He may be found," and promised the foreigners who join themselves to the LORD, "I shall bring them to My holy mountain," he concluded the discourse in his Sender's name: "The utterance of the Lord GOD, who gathers Israel's banished: I shall yet gather to him, to his gathered ones." Thus far, a visitation of peace upon the earth. Afterward he proclaimed concerning the host of heaven on high: "All beasts of the field, come to eat all beasts in the forest," in the sense of "From the eater came food." We found it in "the fields of the forest," sedei ya'ar, whose numerical value is Metatron and Sandalphon, for the spirit of the living creature is in the wheels. The bet of ba-ya'ar, "in the forest," is like the bet of "among all the nations."

entry [gap]. The verse concerns penitents, who complete likeness; therefore it says am zu, "without a reed, like likeness" [?]. This is the second entry. [TN180029]

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Afterward, 'You will bring them'": this concludes the earlier statement that the end toward which the promise looks is "Until they cross," etc., and afterward "You will bring them."

Yad Yehudah - יד

"We too," etc.: for H.G.M., one can further explain this entire verse concerning the final redemption, speedily in our days. The doubled "Until they cross" alludes to the Sambatyon crossings and the sea crossings. [TN180030]

Yad Yehudah - טו

Isaiah also promises comprehensive rectification [gap]: "I shall yet gather to him, to his gathered ones." These, in their completion, will be rectified into the holy people Israel.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Thus far": he speaks of the rectification of perfection below, among earth's inhabitants. What he says afterward, "All beasts of the field, come to eat ... forest," likewise concerns comprehensive rectification, directed toward the princes above, who too will be rectified. It is well known that Metatron and Sandalphon, the two princes of the Presence, are called sedei ya'ar, "fields of the forest." Metatron has the numerical value of Shaddai; he is in Yetsirah, where "beasts of the field" are the holy living creatures, the world of angels. Sandalphon has the numerical value of ya'ar, forest; he is in Asiyah, where is the abyss, "all beasts of the forest," the shells. "And as ḥalot" [?], His kingship rules over all through Sandalphon, concerning whom it is said, "He gathered one handful upon the earth," "that above, sathalah [?], is received within him." Scripture says, "All beasts of the field," the angels in Yetsirah, "come to eat all beasts of the forest," the shells in Asiyah, to rectify them through eating. This is their ascent into holiness, their refining, and the rectification in their completion. "To eat" means to rectify, as in— [TN180031]

"From the eater came food": concerning the rectification of souls, as stated above, Part III, chapter 7 [gap].

Yad Yehudah - יח

"We found it in the fields of the forest" (Psalms 132): these are Metatron and Sandalphon [gap], for the spirit of the living creature in Yetsirah is in the wheels in Asiyah.

Yad Yehudah - יט

The bet of "in the forest" is like the bet of "For You shall inherit among all the nations," meaning that they too will accept the yoke of His kingship, blessed be He, as stated above. So too is the intention here.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Penitents," etc.: Israel, sent into exile to preserve life, to purify the places, etc., to draw near the sparks of holiness and their places. This is Joseph's saying, "God sent me to preserve life," etc., as explained in its place. This is the meaning of "Everywhere they were exiled, the Shekhinah was with them." "In a place where great princes," etc.: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who were exiled, but only to inhabited places, where impurity was not so great as for Israel in the wilderness. This resembles

Rema of Fano

Happy are penitents, for God sent them to preserve life, to purify the places to which they were dispersed. Beloved were Israel, who kept Torah and commandments in a place where great princes did not withstand their trial. This is certainly the place where penitents stand under trial. It is an essential cause of all exiles, the first of which was "He expelled the human being." Then an outlying ground outside the Garden of Eden came into being for him, so that he might rectify the outer air through his breath and prepare a throne of glory for the Shekhinah's dwelling everywhere. This is the meaning of "God did not lead them by the penitent, who subdues his inclination and withstands trial more than a wholly righteous person. This is the place where penitents stand. See the Zohar, Terumah, that Israel broke the strength and power of the other side for forty years. "For it was near," etc.: near holiness, so that it did not need rectification. He therefore led them through the wilderness to sanctify the wilderness of the peoples. [TN180035]

"The Kenites, Kenizzites, and Kadmonites," etc.: God

made one corresponding to the other. Opposite Malkhut in holiness is wicked kingship in impurity. Opposite Yesod, the holy covenant in holiness, there is in impurity "uncircumcised, va-zat va-zanu, uncircumcised" [?]. Opposite keter, crown, in holiness is karet, excision, in impurity, and so with all ten sefirot. None of the sefirot of holiness belonging to the seven days of building has the power by itself to subdue the corresponding shell in impurity, except through awakening an influx from above, from the first three. Hesed is the exception: it has the power to subdue the shells by itself. This is Michael on the right, who can subdue the shell. We find that the ten plagues corresponded to the ten sefirot: blood to Malkhut, and so with all, from below upward, until hail, corresponding to Hesed. Therefore only at the hail plague did they say, "The LORD is righteous," etc.

Likewise, the Kenites, Kenizzites, and Kadmonites are close to holiness, corresponding to Q.Q.Q., three qofs: qadosh, qadosh, qadosh, "holy, holy, holy." "On account of the purification of a dog, like Jethro" [?], their egg would not have had to be torn down. This is "The Girgashite withdrew of his own accord," for he the way of the land of the Philistines, for it was near": the wilderness of the peoples would not have been sanctified. Israel had already sought, while passing through, to perfect the lands of Edom, Ammon, and Moab, who had dispossessed the Kenites, Kenizzites, and Kadmonites and dwelled in their place. Had these three nations, close to Israel in lineage, been wise, there would have been no need to tear down their palace, as happened to the land of Sihon and Og.

For someone who has no merit in relation to thoughts of repentance has no share in the enactment for penitents. If a man stole a beam and built it into a palace, he tears down the entire palace and returns the beam to its owner. This is Torah law. Therefore the people of Nineveh acted well: they are not included in the Sages' enactment, and less than this would not have sufficed for them. This alludes to "the time when a person ruled"—a worthless person —"over a person" who found wisdom. For the external powers have no palace except through our beam. "To his harm": to the worthless person's harm, for it is the building of youths, those shaken free of commandments, and it is their demolition when the lost object is sought for its owners. If there is hope of bringing out some good fledgling, such as Ruth, Naamah, or Obadiah the Edomite convert, for these they enacted that he should return the beam's value to its owner: sufficient for its worth in the Shekhinah's rectification, for a convert who converts is like a newborn child. [TN180032] corresponds to the shell beneath Hesed, which itself has power to subdue. All the places were impure and needed purification, as it says, "changed in name." When they conquered them, they gave them other names in holiness, as stated above, Part I, chapter 3. [TN180036]

"Close to Israel in lineage": Ammon, Moab, and Edom came from Abraham. Had they allowed Israel to pass through their land, their egg would not have needed to be torn down. For by Torah law, someone who stole a beam and built it into a palace tears down the entire palace and returns the beam to its owner. But for the enactment for penitents, our Rabbis said that he pays the beam's value to its owner. Someone without ancestral merit has no share in the enactment for penitents, but is subject to Torah law: he tears down the whole palace and returns it to its owner.

"At the time when the person ruled," etc.: it is a verse, "A time when the person ruled over a person to his harm." The author explains it concerning the worthless person in impurity. Ha-adam, "the person," has the numerical value of tame, impure; in holiness, adam has the numerical value forty-five, the Name of forty-five. When Israel sins, the other side prevails: the shell of Nogah, which snatches a little from holiness, as it were. This is the mystery of the tears of the oppressed, for impurity has life only from holiness, in the manner of "You give life to them all." This resembles robbery: he stole a beam and built it into a palace, for impurity's foundation and building come from holiness. This is "The external powers have no palace except through our beam." When the worthless person rules over the person who found wisdom and snatches sparks of holiness from him, afterward, through repentance, the Holy One, blessed be He, breaks him and draws the portion near to holiness, its root. Therefore it is called teshuvah, return: it returns the portion of repentance to its place in holiness. Through this the whole palace is torn down, and all impurity has no power to live. See this in Part I, chapter 3. This is "to his harm": to the worthless person's harm, for it is a building. "When the lost object is sought": when holiness returns to its place.

"If there is hope": in some nation, such as among Ammon and Moab, Ruth and Naomi, or from Edom, Obadiah the Edomite convert, some holiness will remain there. There is no

We return to Israel's exiles. Since those exiled from Samaria were not people of Torah, it was enough for them to sanctify one corner of the world: Halah and Habor, the River Gozan, and the cities of Media. Those exiled from Jerusalem, however, dispersed from there to the world's four directions, so that their springs might spread abroad for the benefit of the whole. This is the enactment for penitents, as it is written, "I shall teach transgressors Your ways." What follows? "And sins shall return to You." It does not say "sinners," but "sins," in the sense of deliberate transgressions becoming merits, which we explained. It is written, "Who can discern errors? Cleanse me from hidden things. Also withhold Your servant from the presumptuous." The evil inclination leads astray little by little; a person sins at first under compulsion and finally willingly. Therefore he said, "Who can discern errors?" since nature is corrupted through Eve's writ. Thus I asked these two things: "Cleanse me from hidden things," but with judgment, to cleanse me of the damage of hidden things, in the sense of "I shall surely hide My face"; "also from the presumptuous," who arise from deliberate transgressions, in the sense of "he acquires for himself one accuser," "withhold Your servant; let them not rule over me," to sin further. [TN180033]

"Then I shall be complete": they explained, I shall be complete with them and make them complete, for what exists will not return to nonexistence and must be purified. It is like the purification of the pig, whose creation

need to tear down the whole palace, only to return the beam's value to its owner, as the Sages enacted. This is the Shekhinah's rectification through a convert who draws near under her wings, for a convert who converts, etc. "Which we explained": see above, Part II, chapters 10 and 11. [TN180037]

"At first under compulsion": the Ari's teachings say that the first Adam initially sinned under compulsion when Eve brought him some of the fruit. Immediately afterward the evil inclination began corrupting his inward parts, until he ate willingly. Therefore he said, "Who can discern errors?" No one can discern whether this sin was inadvertent or not. Concerning "Withhold Your servant from strangers," see the Zohar Hadash, folio 88. "But with judgment, to cleanse," etc.: as explained in the Zohar, Balaq, "I shall discipline you, but with judgment." The Holy One, blessed be He, disciplines the world during the year, to cleanse it through judgment. Here too, through the judgment of sufferings, one becomes clean for the day of judgment from the hiding of the face.

"Then I shall be complete": I shall exchange the deliberate transgressions

themselves for purity, so that they are reckoned as merits. The existence of the sin and the accuser generated by it will not return to nonexistence. It cannot be annulled from its root, since it has already been created; it must be returned and purified. "Like the purification of the pig," etc.: to return it to holiness. God will purify it from the accusing power, and then it will have this power. Perhaps this is why David concludes, "May the words of my mouth be acceptable." If he is liable through sin, however, his

the Holy One, blessed be He, will renew with two signs: now it only has a split hoof, while in the future it will bring up cud. Scripture's testimony concerning it, "It does not bring up cud," does not use a future verb, as Qimhi says, but a past verb on the pattern of "My father chastised." The Targum supports us. The noun follows the pattern of de'ah, knowledge, from a verb like "You made the dawn know its place." Along with this will follow the purification of the souls our fathers made in Haran, who at first were only converts of the gate and in the future will be righteous converts; likewise the multitude of servants who will grasp the corner of our fringed garment. [TN180034] speech creates ruah for the accuser. Likewise, "the meditation of my heart" is thought before You, for contemplating a transgression creates neshamah for the accuser. Therefore they said that thoughts of transgression are worse than transgression, for through thought one gives the accuser neshamah, the essential part. Examine it closely. "The Targum supports us," etc.: it explains the verse "It did not bring up cud" as pishra la pishar, in the past tense, unlike the future, when it now has this sign too.

[TN180038]

Yad Yehudah - א

"Happy are," etc.: the master further admonishes concerning comprehensive rectification.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Penitents": Israel, whose exile atones for transgression.

Yad Yehudah - ג

God sent them into exile to purify the places from every impurity, all the sides of defilement, and "to bend/refine the fineness of worlds" [?]. [TN180039]

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Beloved were Israel," etc.: that is, in B.E.Z., the saying, "In the place where penitents stand, the wholly righteous cannot stand." [TN180056]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"This is an essential cause of all exiles": to purify the places to which they were exiled. The first exile, too, of the first Adam, who was expelled from the Garden of Eden, was for this reason. When his contamination became mixed into the world, therefore "He set migdam before him" [?], to rectify what he had distorted. [TN180040]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"This is the occasion of 'He did not lead them,'" etc.: the intention is that had He brought them through the land of the Philistines, the wilderness among the peoples would not have been sanctified. Therefore before them He set the great and terrible wilderness, "serpents [?] and burnings," for there is the strength of "the blue/whole, a saying is it" [?], and Israel saw upon it; therefore its strength returned, as stated in the Zohar, Terumah, page 279. [TN180041]

Yad Yehudah - ז

Israel had already sought to pass through the land of Edom, Ammon, and Moab, to bring them in and rectify them. These lands especially needed rectification, because they had belonged to the Kenites, Kenizzites, and Kadmonites, as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, the section Lekh Lekha, in Rashi's wording, of blessed memory.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Had they been wise," etc.: that is, the matter of the shells that snatch sparks of holiness resembles one who steals a beam and builds it into his palace. By Torah law the entire palace is torn down and the beam returned to its owner. But for the enactment for penitents, they enacted that he should pay its value, as stated in chapter 5 of Gittin and in Bava

Qamma. So too the nations, where holy souls were exiled, sank, and were swallowed within them, need them as the foundation of their building, their life, and their existence. The strict line of Torah law likewise requires their palace to be torn down to return the holy souls to their place. Nevertheless, under the enactment for penitents, the beam's value would have sufficed for them.

Namely, to repay the holy things stolen[?] that they seized, through the souls of converts, as above, who come to take refuge beneath the Shekhinah's wings, in exchange for the oppressed souls. Their exchange, their replacement, shall be holy, so that the external powers will not need to tear down their palace. But they are far from salvation with regard to this redemption and exchange. Because they have no merit that would give them a share in the enactment for penitents, they must therefore return the stolen thing itself, according to Torah law. From this [B/K…Y?], as Israel did to Sihon and Og, according to the master: utterly to tear down their palace, below and above, for it was from the LORD that this came about: He hardened Sihon's heart not to allow Israel to pass within his border, to withhold rectification from him, as it says, "In order to give him into your hand," etc. This was because of his lack of merit.

So it will be in the future with the land of Edom, Ammon, and Moab, which Israel will inherit, as stated in Bereshit Rabbah. Their palace will be torn down, so that they may return alive to their home in peace, in exchange for their rejection of these [Israelites] in their territory[?], when Israel sought to pass through their land. For these three lands are close to Israel in lineage: Ammon and Moab from Lot, their father's brother's son, and Edom from Esau son of Isaac. This kinship could have given them useful merit for a share in the enactment for penitents; companions and brothers would tell it for their merit. Therefore, had these three nations understood and allowed Israel to rectify, there would have been no need in the future to tear down their palace. [TN180042]

"Therefore the people of Nineveh acted well": they tore down a palace to return the beam itself to its owner, as our Sages, of blessed memory, said in chapter 2 of Ta'anit, folio 16. They acted rightly,

since they did not have the merit to be included in the enactment for penitents, and paying the beam's value did not suffice for them.

Yad Yehudah - י

This is alluded to in the verse "The time when a person ruled," etc. (Ecclesiastes 8).

Yad Yehudah - יא

As stated in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 177, in these words: "There are no oppressed souls when a person rules over a person," as it is written, "The time when a person ruled over a person to his harm." "'To his harm,' certainly [gap], to the harm of this alien person," etc.; see there. In the world too, as we said, because afterward "a sefirah/counting is needed" [?] to tear down its palace. [TN180043]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Found wisdom": the external powers have no existence or foundation except through holiness—that is, the holy souls, which are our beam. This is wondrous wisdom, so that it should be [like / recognizable as[?]] a falling foundation, and its cutting down, as our Rabbis said, "The building of youths is destruction." This is what is meant. [TN180044]

Yad Yehudah - יב

At the time when the soul is lost and seeks to return to its source.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"If there is hope," etc.: this concludes the earlier statement, "Had Edom, Ammon, and Moab been wise, there would have been no need to tear down their palace," since paying the beam's value would have sufficed for them. "These have hope," etc., for according to their being swallowed there, they have merit, and for their continued existence it would have sufficed to return the equivalent value of the soul, when the Shekhinah is rectified through a convert who converts, who is like a newborn child. "And sufficient as a seal, purified for them, born" [?], for now they have converted. [TN180045]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"The law concerning Israel's exile": they needed it for the rectification of the places to which they would be exiled. [TN180057]

Yad Yehudah - טו

The exiles of Samaria were exiled to Halah and Habor, as explained in Scripture.

Yad Yehudah - טז

But Jerusalem's exiles were from among people of Torah. These are purified in the manner of what they said in the first chapter of Berakhot concerning "Let sins cease," etc. That is, "among those valued" [?], which will come into actuality, transgressions are atoned for: "To You they shall return." [TN180046]

Yad Yehudah - יז

In the sense of what our Sages, of blessed memory, said: deliberate transgressions became like merits. The intention is likewise that the evil inclination, which causes sin through deliberate transgressions, turns to good and to merits, as it says, "Who can discern errors?"

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Little by little": as our Sages, of blessed memory, said, "Today it says to him, 'Do this'; tomorrow," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"At first under compulsion": his inclination compels him. "And finally," after he has become accustomed, he becomes "one who strays" [?] willingly, without "a stirring" [?] concerning the evil inclination. [TN180047]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Through the writ": concerning how he did not cast contamination into her, B.K.Sh. This caused harm to nature, which was corrupted to the point that the sinner's nature compels him, and there is nothing here but errors. [TN180048]

Yad Yehudah - כא

"Therefore I asked two things": one, "From hidden things," concerning the damage that availed above in the hidden things on high, "in the power of the strict one, clean" [?], since in any case he was inadvertent on the day of "a hiding from above me" [?]. The second, "Also from the presumptuous": that is, the separate accusers who arise from deliberate transgressions, "withhold Your servant." [TN180049]

Yad Yehudah - כב

In the sense of what our Sages, of blessed memory, said: one who commits one transgression acquires one accuser. That is, the intention is that the accuser is acquired and comes into being from the transgression, as stated in H.M., chapter 5. [TN180050]

Yad Yehudah - כג

"Or, with them": the commentators explained according to their approach that the word ettam [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כד

Make them complete through good deeds, "to crush" [?] and bring them back to good. For such is the nature of all exiles: then they will stand beside, be rectified, and "be stopped up/be rewarded" [?]. [TN180051]

Yad Yehudah - כה

The Holy One, blessed be He, will in the future restore it by causing another sign of purity to precede in it, as stated above, Part III, chapter 17.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"Scripture's testimony," etc.: that is, Scripture does not speak of it there in future language, but in the customary way of language, which regularly uses the present tense. Nevertheless, "it did not bring up cud; at the end, in the future its weariness will be lacking" [?]. Rather, "from the way" [?] of the verb yigar there is a hint for us that it is past tense. [TN180052]

Yad Yehudah - כז

On the pattern of yaqar in the verse "The fleet, precious to a wise man, spices/heavens," etc. (Kings 11), which too is past tense. It will follow precisely that in the future it will bring up cud. [TN180053]

Yad Yehudah - כח

"And the noun comes": gerah has the pattern and weight of deʿah, in the second person, from the verb "You made dawn know its place" (Job 38); its pointing is like the pointing of the verb yisser. [TN180054]

Yad Yehudah - ל

"Along with this will follow," etc.: he returns to the earlier statement that in Jerusalem's exile Israel was scattered to the world's four directions for the benefit of the whole. Along with this, it also benefits the converts who had already converted in the days of their journey, for [gap] to be Israelites completely, since "the one who turns aside has not yet been consoled" [?]. In the future, however, they will be righteous converts. [TN180055]

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “It is written,” etc.: the author further warns concerning what belongs to repentance. He says that “its beginning” [?] is as it is written, “Gather yourselves, and gather” (Zephaniah 2). The sages said, “Adorn yourself,” etc. They hinted in hitqosheshu at the notarikon “remove” [?], etc.[TN110138]

Rema of Fano

Concerning the repair of those who repent, it is written, “Gather yourselves, and gather.” A fine notarikon has already been given for hitqosheshu: “First remove a basket of creeping things”; afterward, “gather,” as the rabbis said, “Adorn yourself, and afterward adorn others.” What is adorning oneself? As Rav Yehudah indicated: in the same place, at the same stage, with the same woman. The plain meaning is true, and the allusion is fitting for the three upper worlds blemished by rebellion, deliberate wrongdoing, and inadvertence, and for three essential parts of the human being: body, soul, and image, which mediates between them. We shall discuss them in the treatise Ha-nefesh.[TN110134]

The soul standing with us at this stage comprises the likenesses that are throne, palace, and dwelling for the first indivisible image, as explained there. The image is truly the joint binding and joining the separate to the sensible, namely the body, which is acted upon and shaped by everything above it, like a woman acted upon, shaped, and perfected by another, as is known. [TN110135]

Whoever merits in his lifetime the Formation; one who rebels to provoke blemishes Emanation. Yet in its Emanation there is no blemish whatsoever, heaven forbid, [as I mentioned above in Part III, chapter 10]. This is “in the same place”: one must return in the same world blemished by one's transgression, whether Making, Formation, or Creation. “At the same stage” and “with the same woman” hint ...[TN110140]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) ... at three essential parts within a person: the body, soul, and image joining them together. [Gap.] Corresponding to the soul and image he said, “At the same stage and time” when he sinned. The matter follows what is explained in the Zohar, in the section “and how, a small world” [?], [gap]. In these expositions, Adam's soul was undivided, and it is neither affected nor punished by them. [TN110141]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “The soul standing with us” in this chapter: “two parts” [?], [gap], which does not participate in transgression or receive punishment, for this punishment had been appointed for Adam; not so in the way with us. [TN110142]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Which are,” etc.: the first likeness clothes itself in a likeness within a likeness. The nefesh within it is like a dwelling and habitation, these for the lower likeness. Ruah is like a palace, and neshamah like a throne.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “The image,” etc.: pereq may also be interpreted as a joint, as in a lampstand made of sections, and “up to the joint” concerning handwashing, meaning the joints and connections of the fingers. The word pereq hints at the image binding and joining the soul, which is a separate thing, to the sensible body.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Which is acted upon”: the substance in that expression hints at the sensible body, which is acted upon, [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “And by everything that unfolds from it”: nefesh, ruah, and neshamah.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Whoever merits,” etc.: he returns above to matters of repentance. Whoever merits during his attribute of long-suffering, until the crooked can be repaired—happy is his old age that atones for his youth! All the more if he prevails over his inclination while still a man in his strength and might, before he grows old, as they expounded, “Before gray hair, arise.” Then he will adorn his countenance when old, adorned by early repentance, and will merit fear, as it is written, “You shall fear your God; I am the LORD,” faithful to grant reward. We have no reward for fear greater than humility, as Rabbi Pinḥas ben Yair teaches in the chapter Lifnei ʿeideihen. He disagrees with Rabbi Yehoshua ben Levi there only concerning piety, which Rabbi Pinḥas ranked higher because he stood at that degree, as explained in the Zohar: Abraham's degree.

Likewise, Ginai nahara, “the river Ginai,” with the inclusive unit, has the numerical value of eshel. Rabbi Pinḥas divided it through Abraham's merit three times—another reading: cubits. First, for himself, as he was going to ransom captives; your mnemonic is “Aleph—understanding,” the mystery of redemption. Second, for guarded matzah: its sign is shin. Third, for traveling companions: its sign is lamed. [TN110136]

The sages have already said that repentance helps even at the hour of death, as it is written, “You return a human being to crushing.” We have a notarikon here too: a beautiful dwelling in the heart's thought; beautiful vessels in the limbs, the instruments of action; a beautiful wife in the human soul. When the perfection of these three parts combines, they certainly broaden a life to repair what he has made crooked and repent, through the attribute of long-suffering, whereby the Holy One, blessed be He, is patient with the wicked so that they may repent, “after his old age” [?], etc.[TN110143]

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “All the more” if he prevails over his inclination through repentance while still alive, as the sages said on “Happy is the man who fears the LORD.”

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “As they expounded”: in the Zohar, Qedoshim, page 187: “‘Before gray hair, arise’: it warns a person that before youth departs, he should stand in a good standing in the world [?], because [gap]. Then, ‘also in our toil he shall pass’ [?], etc., as is known to her [?]; it is written, ‘Remember your Creator in the days of your youth.’” It interprets “Before gray hair”: before you reach old age and gray hair, arise and awaken to repentance. Thus “Adorn the countenance of an old man”: when you are old, “upon his eyes” [?]. For it will not be your splendor and adornment if you delay repentance until the years of which you will say, “I have no pleasure in them.” “Therefore the rulers will hasten; he went before them when he was clean in his completeness” [?].[TN110144]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “… in repentance until the years of which you will say, ‘I have no pleasure in them.’ Therefore the rulers will hasten; he went before them when he was clean in his completeness” [?]. “By early repentance,” which he performed in his youth. [TN110145]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “He merits fear”: as written afterward, “You shall fear your God,” for through repentance you come to fear. Repentance “to build” [?] is needed, bringing one to fear, as it is written, etc.[TN110146]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Only concerning piety”: for Rabban Shimʿon ben Gamliel, humility is greatest of all. Rabbi Pinḥas ben Yair says one comes from humility to piety, and certainly it is greatest of all, as stated there, page 7 b, [gap]. As stated in the Zohar, Aḥarei, page 118: “Rabbi Pinḥas ben Yair, the crowns of the sides of the upper head,” etc. See Bereshit, page 31. [TN110147]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “Likewise the river Ginai,” etc.: there in the first chapter of Ḥullin, Rabbi Pinḥas ben Yair was going to ransom captives and encountered the river Ginai. He said: “Ginai, divide your waters for me, and I shall pass through you,” etc. It divided for him. There was a man carrying wheat for Passover. He said: “Divide person's mind so that he may be accepted in complete repentance. Even of one who expires in his iniquity, know that “with the LORD is lovingkindness, and with Him abundant redemption.”[TN110137]

“As we have heard, so we have seen” in the nobles of Israel, in whom the LORD's words were fulfilled: concerning purification, “Through those near Me I shall be sanctified”; concerning redemption, “Before all the people I shall be honored.” Concerning both it is written, “It shall be sanctified through My glory,” for Heaven's honor increases when He collects what is His, in the manner we explained in Part I. Yet “around Him it storms exceedingly,” and “the redemption of their soul is costly.” To teach concerning the entire class, the sages tell of their corruption and repair, so that an example may be taken from them for the generations. One of understanding will acquire counsels, to save his soul from the pit and be illuminated by the light of life.

It is written, “Against the nobles of Israel He did not stretch out His hand.” Rabbi Pinḥas said: This shows that they deserved the stretching out of a hand, for they grew presumptuous toward the One above: “They ate and drank.” Even according to Onqelos' translation, “They rejoiced in their sacrifices,” this was Abel's iniquity. Although from the outset he was an addition in creation for others' needs, nevertheless all the conditions of the cycle were fulfilled in him. His love of the commandment caused him to gaze and die, and the likeness and image were diminished in him. Afterward he returned with the

He said: “Divide for this one too, lest they say, ‘Is this how one treats traveling companions?’” It divided for him. Rav Yosef said: “How much greater is this man than Moses and six hundred thousand, for there it was once, and here three times!” Perhaps here too it was only once? Rather, “like Moses and six hundred thousand.” [Gap.]

“Three times”: [gap in the frozen source]. That is, the river divided its waters to a width of three cubits for the passage of the three people. We must also say that they were walking beside one another, not one behind another as travelers do. [TN110148]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “Your mnemonic is L.A.F.” [?], [gap]. As is known, the Exodus from Egypt occurred through the fiftieth gate of understanding. This is hinted at here concerning ransoming captives, for this attribute is to bring a nation out from within a nation, concerning which he already explained “his source” [?].[TN110149] repair of the likeness, as we mentioned above; he returned again and completed the image for himself and others. “For four, I shall not bring him back,” since his father rested in him, for he stopped the pollution from His near people.

They said concerning Abel that he became presumptuous and gazed at the Glory when his offering was accepted and his brother's was not. His sentence was suspended until they were in the field. There too he did not guard himself against “the mercies of the wicked are cruel”; “Cain arose.” Here too, long-suffering suspended their sentence from Sinai until the Tent of Meeting, and He collected what was His. They were first initiated into priesthood as befitted them, before their death. There is no doubt that on Rosh Hashanah before the consecration they were inscribed and sealed in the book of the righteous. This caused the Holy One, blessed be He, to be exacting with them to a hair's breadth. On the eighth day of consecration they acted presumptuously toward their father and teacher, as we shall mention. The Holy One, blessed be He, demands redress for His pious ones' insult more than for His own honor.

(32) “For although he was an addition” in creation, as it is said of him, “She continued to bear his brother Abel,” he did not need to come to this world for the perfection of his own soul, but only for the sake of others and for the establishment of the world, as stated above in Part III, chapters 4 and 6, etc.[TN110155]

(38) “It was suspended” for the doer of this deed until they were in the field, and payment was exacted measure for measure. There too he became presumptuous when he prevailed over Cain, so that he did not guard himself against him, “in his deceiving him” [?]. As stated in Bereshit Rabbah: “Abel was stronger than Cain. Why does it say ‘Cain arose’? It teaches [gap]. He was filled with compassion for him; immediately Cain arose against him and killed him.”[TN110159]

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) “Here too”: so it was with Nadab and Abihu. They were completely righteous, but because they grew presumptuous, they feasted their eyes upon the Shekhinah's radiance at Sinai. Their sentence was suspended until the eighth day of consecration. Then they grew presumptuous again, failing to honor Moses and Aaron, and received their punishment.

(42) “As he mentioned”: in the next chapter.

Yoel Moshe - 1

Inadvertence blemishes nefesh; deliberate wrongdoing, ruah; rebellion, neshamah. “The three upper worlds”: they are Creation, Formation, and Making. Rebellion blemishes Creation, deliberate wrongdoing Formation, inadvertence Making. The image mediates between body and soul, binding and joining them together. His nefesh corresponds to “the same woman”; neshamah to “the same place”; the image to “the same stage.” “At this stage,” etc.: unlike at another stage and time.

“A dwelling for the first image”: “K.A.L.” [?], a premise from the treatise “Q.” [?]. Each person has three degrees: nefesh from Making, ruah from Formation, neshamah from Creation. When a person merits nefesh of Emanation, that nefesh becomes encompassing light for his nefesh, ruah, and neshamah. When he merits ruah of Emanation, the nefesh becomes encompassing light for his nefesh and ruah, and ruah becomes encompassing light for his neshamah. When he merits neshamah of Emanation, nefesh of Emanation becomes encompassing light for nefesh of Making, ruah of Emanation for ruah of Formation, and neshamah of Emanation for neshamah of Creation. When he merits hayyah and yehidah, the nefesh, ruah, and neshamah of Emanation become inner light, and hayyah and yehidah encompassing light.[TN110160] Thus “dwelling” describes nefesh, distant from the king, namely Making; “palace” describes ruah, which is nearer, namely Formation; and “throne” is neshamah in Creation, where hayyah and yehidah of Emanation dwell, called the first image. This is “the same place”: the throne, a receptacle for yehidah and hayyah. “The same stage” is the image with its two shadows, as above in chapter 5. “The same woman” is the spiritual nefesh, counted within the body. “Indivisible,” etc.: Adam, being the handiwork of the Holy One, blessed be He, merited nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, and yehidah as inner light and encompassing light. The light, namely hayyah and yehidah, was not divided among all his limbs; rather, from it a crown and diadem were made for him. “Joining the separate”: the neshamah, “to the sensible”: the body. “The body which is acted upon,” etc., hints at “the same woman,” as above.

“Whoever merits in his lifetime,” etc., refers back to the repair of penitents: whoever merits returning and repairing in his lifetime, rather than after death through reincarnation, as below. “As they expounded, ‘Before gray hair’”: see the Zohar. “In Lifnei ʿareihen” [?], etc.: its words are, “Humility brings to piety; piety is greatest of all and brings to the holy spirit.” Rabbi Yehoshua ben Levi disagrees with Rabbi Pinḥas and says humility is greatest of all. “For he stood,” etc.: Rabbi Pinḥas ben Yair stands in lovingkindness, Abraham's degree, as explained in the Zohar, Aḥarei Mot, page 111. Through Abraham's merit he divided the river three times.[TN110161]

“The mnemonic ‘Aleph—understanding’”: the aleph of eshel hints at aleph-binah, for in Binah is the name Ehyeh, upon which redemption depends; “a ram, N.K.” [?], for ransoming captives. The shin of eshel has three lines and is likewise an aspect of Binah, for the first he also has three lines. It is called black bile from a blemish of the world's veins [?]. Although Malkhut is called black bile, it is also in the aspect she receives from Binah. The second time, he divided the river for someone carrying a bed [?] for Passover, as the sages said. The lamed of eshel is a tower flying in the air, as above in chapter 9 of this part, in the mystery of encompassing light for bodies. Thus through the merit of Abraham's eshel he divided the river, as above.[TN110162]

“The sages have already said,” etc.: this refers back. Someone who merits repentance during his life obviously merits abundant goodness. Yet even with the soul's departure, “to crushing” means the soul's crushing. Moreover, even someone who expires and dies in his iniquity has repair through reincarnation, as he proceeds to explain. “Dwelling, vessels, wife,” etc.: see the old Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 6, page 18 b. “They broaden his mind” means that the human beings included in the upper Human are then perfected. Adam spelled in full, aleph-dalet-mem, has the numerical value ha-keter, “the crown.” Of this he says, “You say, ‘Return, children of Adam.’” Specifically “his knowledge,” for knowledge is in Keter. “Dwelling, vessels, wife” also has the numerical value ha-keter.[TN110163]

“The redemption is costly,” etc.: the degree of their souls came from a place of great worth. Therefore they needed “T. of reincarnation” [?] through Pinḥas and Elijah, as will be explained. “In the nobles,” etc.: Aaron's sons. “Concerning purification”: they died. “Concerning redemption”: they were repaired through reincarnation. “Of their corruption and repair,” etc.: Nadab and Abihu.[TN110164]

“Abel's iniquity,” etc.: he grew presumptuous because his offering was accepted and Cain's was not, and he gazed at the Shekhinah, as below. “An addition in creation,” etc.: Abel, who is Moses, had no connection with this world and was created only for the world's foundation, as is known. “All the conditions of the cycle”: the reincarnation he needed to undergo. “He gazed and died,” etc.: this hints at the four who entered the orchard. Adam denied the root, like Aḥer; Abel gazed and died, like Ben Azzai; Noah gazed and was harmed, like Ben Zoma, through drinking wine he had planted—“and their interpretation” [?], see the Zohar, Bereshit. Abraham entered and departed in peace, like Rabbi Aqiva.[TN110165]

“He returned with the repair of the likeness”: at Seth's birth, Abel's soul reincarnated. This is the meaning of “God has appointed for me another seed,” etc. “He returned again,” etc.: this is Moses. “For four I shall not bring him back”: he would not reincarnate again. “His father rested in him”: Adam, Abel's father, rested in Moses his son. Adam's soul entered Moses by impregnation; there Adam's soul was repaired. See the Zohar, Bereshit, page 110. “He stopped the pollution”: through dead people [?] at Mount Sinai. “There too, in the field, he did not guard himself against the mercies of the wicked,” etc.: he had compassion upon Cain. As they said on “Cain arose”: it teaches that he had initially been beneath Abel, and Abel had compassion upon him. “Here too”: concerning Nadab and Abihu, He suspended their sentence, etc.[TN110166]

“Further”: the intention is to show all Nadab and Abihu's sins, one by one, finding an account through the end of their corruption [?] and rectification. “Calculating the end”: as below, chapter 16, they calculated the end before its time, to rule in place of Moses and Aaron, who delay redemption, as will be explained.

“And the unspecified, as we taught” [?]: Joshua thought their prophecy came from the blessed LORD Himself, unlike the elders who received spirit from Moses. This appears from Moses' answer: “Would that all the LORD's people were prophets, that the LORD would put His spirit upon them!” Eldad and Medad had their own spirit and light from the LORD, like Moses; therefore Joshua was jealous. Examine this. [TN190001] “Joshua's saying accords”: see Rashi there, citing this Mishnah.

“The counterpart in the New Moon goat”: Moses and Aaron corresponded to the great lights; Moses and Joshua, to the great and small lights. When Aaron and Miriam spoke against Moses, corresponding to the moon's accusation, it was

The sages further said that Aaron's sons died for drawing near and for offering; for not honoring their father, not taking counsel from Moses, and not consulting one another; for ruling on the law in their master's presence, entering intoxicated with wine and lacking garments, and without sanctifying hands and feet; for preparing outside and bringing inside, according to the Sadducees' interpretation; and for having neither children nor wives. The rabbis supported all these with verses. Beyond all this we heard their perverse speech: “When will these two elders die, so that we may lead the congregation?” The opposite was true of King David, peace upon him, who said, “I rejoiced when they said to me, Let us go to the LORD's house,” although he heard with his own ears—as “when they said to me” implies—“When will this elder die, so his son may arise and build the Temple?”

It is plausible that Aaron's two sons were also among those calculating the end. Joshua already thought Eldad and Medad sinned in this when he said, “My lord Moses, restrain them”: prevent them from using his scepter while he was still alive with them below. Joshua's saying accords with our teaching: let your student's honor be as dear to you as your own, your companion's honor as reverence for your master, and reverence for your master as reverence for Heaven. The first clause comes from Moses, who honored Joshua by saying,

not enough that he became leprous; he also had to appease him by saying “Please, my lord.” Like the New Moon goat, which the moon brings to appease above, so it is expounded here.[TN190002]

“I shall not enter the city”: Jerusalem below is WH, above YH. When Jerusalem below is incomplete and receives no illumination from Binah, called Rider in Aravot—for Daʿat is called Aravot, the seventh firmament, as explained in its place—YH likewise receives nothing from the Long Countenance, called the ancient highest heavens. This corresponds to “reverence for your master as reverence for Heaven.”

“To a degree beyond”: Enoch is Metatron; Elijah is clothed as Sandalphon in Action. Moses and Aaron merited Creation, where there were right and left. Thus “you, in H, as an appearance” [?], the letters of Aaron; joining the letters ʾT H to LKhMH [?] numerically gives ʾHRʾL [?]. They thus looked upward, for Moses and Aaron to be above in the upper worlds, while they would lead on earth below.[TN190003] battle” [?]: “Moses, Aaron and Hur ascended the hilltop.” Initially there were Aaron, Hur, Joshua and Moses; their sign is “How good ... brothers dwelling together”—ʾḤYM, brothers, precisely. They saw that Joshua alone would remain of them all and would need “to assist” [?], so they thought they would be the ones. This explains the chapter's end. [TN190004] But the matters would fall to Eliezer, Phinehas, Joshua and Caleb. The sign is “In the time of Your anger act against them”: ʾPYKh, the initials of Eliezer, Phinehas, Joshua and Caleb.[TN190005] For Nahshon's replacing Hur see Zohar, Be-Haʿalotekha, page 296.

“He was a craftsman for

“Phinehas and Caleb, delivered from the lion's mouth and the dog”: see BKh, chapter 4 [?]. The shells are called Lion, ʾRYH, illumination from four names BN, the living creatures' four horns, when fire lay like a lion, as we explained at length above, Part II, chapter 6. Phinehas also equals four times BN, while Caleb equals BN once, subduing the fire lying like a dog on the north: the name BN. In three YHWHs there are 100 letters [?]; Phinehas equals 208, thus Lion, 216. Therefore Phinehas subdued the shells called Lion, and Caleb subdued BN once, the fire lying like

“Choose men for us.” Its counterpart is “For a hand upon the throne of Yah”: because the throne is incomplete, the Name is incomplete. The middle clause comes from Aaron's saying to Moses, “Please, my lord.” Its counterpart is the New Moon goat: sun and moon are beloved companions, and atonement was needed for appeasement above. The last clause certainly comes from Joshua, as stated. Its counterpart is “I shall not enter the city”: He equated reverence for the Rider in Aravot with reverence for the Rider in the ancient highest heavens, as explained in its place.

We must nevertheless plead for Nadab and Abihu. Love of a commandment first caused them to break through toward the LORD to see. In the incense episode too they were startled and hurried to seize a commandment for themselves. Yet every holy thing requires preparation, as mentioned above. Their sin was grave in idle speech about their father's and master's death; they exalted them according to their greatness. Foreseeing afar the elders' degree at the end of days, they said: when will they depart like Enoch and Elijah, and to a degree beyond theirs, ascending higher to minister in splendor in the heights of heaven, while we lead on earth below?

They had grounds for error from being anointed together with their father, and from Moses' appointing Joshua over the Amalek war while himself preparing for the battle above, to bring down the prince on high. He joined Aaron and Hur with him. From the day the calf was made, Hur departed and Nahshon entered; he too died that year. A decree was pronounced against Aaron, and from then Moses decreed upon himself to atone for Israel. Nadab and Abihu knew that Joshua's face was the moon's face, requiring assistance to deliver our soul from the sword in the war against the seven peoples: “He shall stand before Eleazar the priest,” the high priest. Moreover, a priest anointed for war was commanded to be beside him. Thus both could have led those entering the land then, with Joshua and Nahshon—eleven days from Horeb to Qadesh Barnea. Then the two elders and the generation of knowledge together would be perfect, feeding in the gardens and in Eden of old.

They did not know that these matters would fall to Eleazar and Phinehas, with Joshua and Caleb, after forty years. Nahshon was needed only to protect against the fiery serpent at their first entrance into the wilderness. Phinehas and Caleb came afterward to deliver those entering the land from the dog's hand and the lion's mouth.

Whence your companion's honor as reverence for your master? “Moses said to Aaron, Please, my lord.” Was Aaron not older than his brother? He treated his companion as his master. "Ephraim's descendants": they departed before their time and were killed; their souls were gathered into impurity. Thus they actually delayed redemption for themselves, and all Israel lacked complete redemption, for these sparks remained among the shells until Ezekiel came and revived the dry bones. "The son of Ephraim": the future Messiah son of Joseph, for their calculating the end before its time. "Another matter": another reason he will be pierced is Jeroboam's sin of making calves; see Zohar, Ki-Tetze, page 534.

"Recalling what he did": they will recall Hadadrimmon's evil act of killing Ahab and saying "Our hand is exalted." They will lament only that declaration, not Ahab's death. This explains why it does not say "like the lamentation of Ramoth Gilead," as it afterward names the valley of Megiddo. Here it names the king, there the place. Examine this: when lamenting Josiah they will lament this too.

"As explained in the Zohar": see Shemot, page

Rema of Fano

Indeed, this is the judgment of those calculating the end: they actually delay redemption for themselves, as happened to Ephraim's descendants when Israel left Egypt. Redemption is not complete if any of your banished remain at heaven's edge. Thus the sages rightly said that they delay redemption generally. Therefore, just as the son of David is wounded through our transgressions, so the son of Ephraim will be pierced for this and for another matter. When he reaches death's gates and considers repentance in his heart, the son of David and all the holy ones with him will seek mercy for him and restore his life. Thus: "I shall pour upon David's house and Jerusalem's inhabitants a spirit of grace and supplications, and they shall cause the one whom they pierced to look toward Me," after the manner of "Their Rock sold them."[TN190022]

Abraham and Jacob likewise said, "Let their sins be erased for the sanctification of Your Name," as explained in the Zohar's Midrash Eikhah: when they surrender themselves for the sanctification of Your Name, their sins are immediately erased. Here too David's house and Jerusalem's inhabitants are the Great Court, guardians of the city, occupied with settling it above and below. They pierced the son of Ephraim by agreeing to his judgment. Now, through their prayer, he will merit, even to crushing, complete

6. A living creature in the firmament called Israel descended to Egypt with all its chariots; there were males and females. Thus they could not delay, because the LORD's hosts departed; "you departed in haste" means the Shekhinah's haste. "And these," W'LH, equals 42. The initials of "names of Israel's children," Sh-B-Y, equal 312: 312 permutations of YHWH [?] descended into Egypt. [TN190024] "Rather, as we said": the lament concerned "Our hand is exalted."

"In Joseph's lament too": just as Josiah's lament recalled another lament, so the Messiah son of Joseph's lament recalls Jonathan and Saul, who were not properly lamented. Thus "One grieving excessively over his dead weeps for another dead person": someone who died before without proper lament, then reincarnated a second time and died. Nature causes excessive grief over him because he was not properly lamented the first time. I heard this from my teacher, MHRL of Lviv.[TN190025] children, deputyship to Rachel's. Jonathan told David, “You shall be king, and my father, I shall be your deputy” [?], for David descends from Judah, Leah's son, and Jonathan from Benjamin.[TN190026] Saul therefore told him, “You choose for Jesse's son, to your shame and the shame of your mother's nakedness.” “The shame of her two sons”: Joseph and Benjamin; Jonathan was of Benjamin, his mother of Joseph. “They would not have consumed it unripe”: before its time. “King and deputy”: David, king from Leah; Jonathan, deputy from Rachel. “Enduring”: when they said, “Like all the nations.”

"Descended from Leah": kingship belongs to Leah's

“The lost she-asses”: the shells gained strength, after the manner of “sending forth the feet of ox and ass.” Micah's image resembled an ass. Saul should have returned and broken their strength, being wholly righteous and unblemished. Thus “Saul was a year old when he reigned”: as a one-year-old has no sin, Saul was clean of all sin. He should have returned them to holiness. This did not happen: he was told the she-asses were found of themselves. All this was because Saul came from the female world. His mother Rachel was told, “This too is a son for you”—“for you,” precisely.

repentance: “They shall cause to look toward Me,” in the causative stem, whose intransitive form is “One shall look toward earth.”

It is written: “On that day the lamentation in Jerusalem shall be great, like the lamentation of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon.” We translate: like the lamentation for Ahab son of Omri, killed by Hadadrimmon at Ramoth Gilead, and like the lamentation for Josiah son of Amon, killed by Pharaoh the Lame in the valley of Megiddon. Yet this short verse contains double the insight conveyed by the Targum's lengthy wording. Ahab and Josiah both died by arrows: “As the good, so the sinner.” Ahab was not lamented by Israel's pious, only by his wicked attendants, as at the end of the chapter Four Primary Categories. On the contrary, “The joyful cry was caused to pass through the camp,” like “When the wicked perish there is joy,” as in the chapter One Monetary Judgment. The spelling supports this: ve-yaʿaver lacks vav, like “Elohim caused a wind to pass over the earth,” a transitive verb. They expounded there: He does not rejoice Himself, but causes others to rejoice at the wicked's destruction.

Those lamenting Josiah in Megiddon's valley enlarged their lament upon recalling Hadadrimmon's deed. Their lament concerned his saying, “Our hand is exalted,” not Ahab's death. For Micaiah told him, “Go up and cause success,” a transitive verb, whose intransitive is “Prosper, ride”: he said Ahab would cause others to prosper.

“He clothes them”: a verse in David's lament for Jonathan and Saul: “Daughters of Israel, lament Saul, who clothes you in scarlet with luxuries,” for he too was from the female world. “Rabbi Ishmael was like him”: see Nedarim, chapter 9, Mishnah 10, “Daughters of Israel, lament Rabbi Ishmael,” and so forth.

“True, accurately determining”: it is a known premise that Jacob had two mates, Rachel and Leah. Rachel was his mate decreed at the souls' birth, as in the next chapter; Leah came through mercy. “Leah's eyes were tender,” for she supposed she would fall to Esau's lot, until great mercy joined her to Jacob. Rachel's union is from Malkhut, the tenth measure relative to Keter, Wonder, PLʾ, the letters of ʾLP, alef, from which Leah's union is illuminated. David's tens of thousands belong to this aspect, for he descends from Leah. Saul consequently has thousands, a tenth of David's. Thus “Only kingship remains for him”: the initials of “for him, only, the kingship” are LʾH, Leah. He is the Messiah son of David destined “to judge Mount Esau,” whose initials are LʾH. Therefore Jonathan told David, “Your love was wonderful to me,” from the mystery of

Wonder. Understand this.

“At that final lament”: when the Messiah son of Joseph is killed, for Jonathan's soul is in him. Rachel weeps over “her sons,” plural: Jonathan from Benjamin and the Messiah son of Joseph. “Because he is no more”: this is the Messiah son of Joseph, now arousing the weeping. “From you, thus” [?] is also a cause concerning the first son, as though both died that day [?], as Jacob said about Benjamin: “It seems to you” [?].[TN190027] “What Tosafot wrote”: in Bava Metzia, Ha-Meqabbel, there the Zarephath woman [?] is the Messiah son of Joseph; see there. [TN190028]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Ephraim's descendants”: they counted toward Egypt's exile-end and erred, [gap]. They are also the dead Ezekiel revived, as in Heleq. Before this their souls had not reached rectification.

“The LORD will give”—without specifying who gives, out of decorum —“into the king's hand”: Hadadrimmon. [TN190023] He certainly spoke truth. Others' success is what he afterward explained: “Let each return home in peace.” Why should the good and upright lament Ahab, if the wicked man's death removes wrath from the world? Then “each man and his household,” entering Egypt with Jacob, as explained in the Zohar, will return with the crown his mother placed upon King Solomon. Rather, it is as we said.

Hezekiah likewise refused to lament King Ahaz. On the contrary, he dragged his bones to purify them, after foreseeing unworthy children for himself, unable to refine his father's dough until the third generation. In the lament for the son of Joseph too, delivered into Gog and Magog's hand for Jeroboam's sin, they will recall Saul's and Jonathan's deaths. They were wholly righteous. Jonathan “chose for Jesse's son”: he chose to surrender kingship to David, descended from Leah, to the shame of Rachel's two sons. Jonathan descended from Benjamin, while his mother descended from Joseph, of Manasseh's tribe, from Jabesh Gilead.

Had Israel not improperly requested a king, they would not have consumed the first kingship unripe. David and Jonathan, king and deputy, were prepared to establish enduring kingship over Israel. But their rejecting Heaven's kingship and the stumbling block of Micah's image among them caused King Saul to be raised up. As his name

In Ha-Halil, folio 22 [?], the sages expounded this of the Messiah son of Joseph's killing. The master explains that he will not actually be killed: he will be deputy [?] to the Messiah son of David, as below. Rather his sentence will be completed “from the side, as great, that he

(13) "What the Targum conveyed": apparently [?] it is difficult: what has lamenting Ahab and Josiah to do with lamenting the Messiah son of Joseph? Moreover, why lament wicked Ahab so greatly? It signifies, he was lent the royal crown temporarily. The lost she-asses allude to the generation's corruption: the shell broke its boundary with none to restrain it. It befitted him to return them, for he was wholly righteous, without blemish, as the sages said. Yet he belonged to the female world, descending from Benjamin, of whose mother it was said, "This too is a son for you."

The young women led him to the seer's house, conversing with him at length and looking at his beauty. This was not without reason, for they were righteous women; their mazal saw that he was the one clothing them in scarlet with luxuries. Rabbi Ishmael was like him, as the Mishnah in Nedarim teaches. Saul was consequently greatly angered with them for assigning David tens of thousands rather than thousands. Yet the LORD's word in their mouths was true, accurately determining the matter: little Benjamin's measure is a tenth of the supernal Wonder, of which it says, "Your love was wonderful to me," as below. In the matter of Amalek's war, even one offense did not succeed for him; Samuel's prophecy was fulfilled, "Both you and your king shall be swept away." Moreover Saul and Jonathan were not properly lamented.

At that final lamentation Rachel weeps over her sons' sin, one from Joseph, one from Benjamin. She refuses consolation for them "because he is no more"—the one arousing the weeping—as Jacob said: it seems to me as though both died on one day. This is sufficient indication for the discerning.

therefore appears that the matter [?] is—[TN190035]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) Ahab and Josiah died the same death [?]. Ahab was not lamented at all; when Josiah was lamented, [gap] [gap], and formerly Hadadrimmon, king from Megiddo [?], also killed Ahab "in his raging" [?], [gap] [gap]. They wished [?] to prepare in their lament an allusion to the Messiah son of Joseph, and to mention Saul's and Jonathan's deaths too, descendants [?] of Rachel. Accordingly: on that day Jerusalem's lament for the Messiah son of Joseph will be so great that they will lift [?] a dirge for Saul and Jonathan, who already perished and died in ancient days and former years. This will be like the lament the mourners for Josiah recalled in Megiddon's valley: they also recalled Hadadrimmon's earlier killing of Ahab. This interpretation is correct, R' [?], for the entire phrase "like Hadadrimmon's lament in Megiddon's valley," [gap], has "like the lament" stand for two, as though saying "like Hadadrimmon's lament, and like the lament in Megiddon's valley."[TN190036]

(16) As in Bava Qamma, chapter 2 [?], concerning Hezekiah: “They honored him at his death,” [gap], thirty-six thousand with bared shoulders. But was this not done for Ahab? It says there that they made a great lament, as stated, [gap], “like Hadadrimmon's lament,” translated “like the lament for Ahab son of Omri.” It was during battle, with many people present; they all lamented him, [gap] [gap]. As written, “When the wicked perish there is joy”: at Ahab son of Omri's destruction, joy, [gap]. His servants and friends lamented him. In Megillah, chapter 1, the sages wrote that since Israel were gathered there for the battle, they had to lament him because of his friends and relatives. (17) As in the chapter ʾDM [?], folio 39b: “The joyful cry passed through the camp.” Rabbi Aha B-RḤ [?] said: “When the wicked

It is known that Jonah son of Amittai is the Zarephath woman's son whom Elijah revived. When Elijah came to her at the LORD's command, he began questioning her about cleanness, for he ate hallah portions. Scripture is precise: “Please take me a piece of bread in your hand.” “In your hand” is superfluous, allowing this exposition. She suspected he intended to investigate intercourse, only concerning uncleanness issuing from her body, as mentioned in Pirqei Rabbi Eliezer, and was punished for this. What Tosafot wrote about the Zarephath woman's son is not thereby contradicted.

Hence we know why Jonah was angry that Nineveh's overthrow did not occur in his days: he was concerned for them because of Gog and Magog's war. We also understand Taʿanit concerning the twenty-four blessings: because the conclusion must be “Who has mercy upon the land,” Jonah was placed before David and Solomon. After this one's measure is poured out like water, David's throne will bud and blossom. We too shall acknowledge Heaven's just judgment, considering how many times the deputy reached death's gates. Faithful is the Judge, blessed is He, who shows no favoritism.

perish there is joy”—at Ahab son of Omri's destruction, joy. Does the Holy One rejoice at the wicked's downfall? But it says, “When going out before the vanguard,” and so forth. Rabbi Yose bar Hanina said: He does not rejoice Himself, but causes others to rejoice [?]: “As the LORD rejoiced,” and so forth. The wording supports it: yasis, causative, not yasus; infer this.[TN190039]

Yad Yehudah - יח

As it says, “He caused to pass”: this is a transitive verb, meaning that the blessed Name caused the joyful cry to pass. It seems to me that this is why they asked, “Does the Holy One, blessed be He, rejoice at the downfall of the wicked?” For apparently [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “there is no question here: where did they learn”] that the Holy One rejoices from their saying [gap in the frozen source]? According to the master’s explanation, “He caused to pass” is a transitive verb and can refer to Him. But no objection can be raised from the verse “When the wicked perish there is a joyful cry,” since it is possible to say, as stated, that although there is Thus, when asked, “Shall I go to Ramoth Gilead for war, or refrain?” he replied, “Go up and cause success, and the LORD will give into the king's hand” (I Kings 22). Commentators think he spoke mockingly, but it is not so [?]. Micaiah's mouth and heart agreed: he meant others' success, not Ahab's, causing [?] Israel to return each to his home in peace. Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Rather, as we said”: returning to “Why should they lament him?” The lament mentioned in Megiddon's valley was certainly for Hadadrimmon's downfall [?], as stated. Know this is so, for—[TN190045]

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) Wicked King Ahaz was not lamented by Hezekiah's sons [?], [gap].[TN190046]

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “In his lament too”: supporting the point. As Josiah's lament recalled Ahab's earlier fate, the future lament, “Rachel” [?], will recall the matter of Saul and Jonathan.[TN190047]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “Jonathan chose”: “Saul's anger burned against Jonathan. He said, Son of rebellious perversity, do I not know that you choose for Jesse's son, to your shame and the shame of your mother's nakedness?” This needs explanation, especially “for Jesse's son”; it should be “for choosing” [gap] Jesse's son. The master explains: you choose the kingships [?], to sell them to Jesse's son. “To your shame” hints at the shame of Rachel's two sons, Joseph and Benjamin, from whom Jonathan came. By surrendering your kingship to David, DMTY GNLH [?], you shame Rachel's two sons, [gap].[TN190048]

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) “From Jabesh Gilead”: the virgins were given as wives to Benjamin's men; she was one given to Saul, as the sages said [?] concerning “son of rebellious perversity.” It seems to me he called him this for that reason, toward [gap] [gap], concerning her honor.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) “Had they not”: it would indeed have been as Jonathan chose [?], had Israel not improperly asked for a king.[TN190049]

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) “Lent the royal crown”: temporarily, to repair the generation's breach.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) The she-asses' initial loss and later discovery when Saul was anointed allude to the generation's corruption. Then the wild-ass shell [?] grew strong and overcame [gap]; what stands [?] against it is Torah and good deeds, as is known. See Zohar, Va-Yiqra, page 506, [gap], for earth's inhabitants “that the ass should raise them” [?], except Saul, wholly righteous. Thus “Saul was a year old when he reigned”: like a sinless one-year-old. They also said his kingship did not endure because he had no blemish. When he was anointed the she-asses appeared, hinting that kingship suited him and that he should return [?] the she-asses under restraint.

It seems to me this is Samuel's saying: “Do not concern yourself with the lost she-asses, for they are found. To whom belongs all Israel's desire? Is it not to you and all your father's house?” Apparently the difficulty is [gap], two separate matters for him, [gap]. For the she-asses appeared, and thereby kingship became known: “To whom belongs all Israel's desire?”[TN190050]

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) “Yet he was”: there is no need to say his kingship failed to endure because he had no blemish. Rather, the reason is “those subdued ones” [?], that he came from the female world, as in Zohar, Va-Yelekh, page SSṬ [?]. Therefore—[TN190051]

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) Rachel was told, “Do not fear; this too is a son for you.” “For you” appears superfluous [?], but indicates that he is of the female world, like you, the household's mistress.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) “The young women”: this is also hinted by their leading him to the seer's house. The sages further said they prolonged conversation to look at his beauty, [gap], for Israel's daughters were presumed [gap]. Were they not righteous women? All likewise alludes to his being from the female world, [gap]. David also hinted at this in the lament: “Daughters of Israel, weep over Saul.”

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) “Who clothes you in scarlet with luxuries”: because [?] he too was from the female world. [TN190052]

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) “Rabbi Ishmael was like him”: Nedarim, chapter 9, says that when Rabbi Ishmael died, Israel's daughters lamented, saying [?], “Daughters of Israel, weep over Rabbi Ishmael”; likewise it says of Saul, and so forth. [gap] Israel's daughters lamented him more than another, [gap]. Its “likewise it says” means: “in those” [?] his path continues, for Rabbi Ishmael too belonged to this female world.[TN190053]

“The word of the LORD in their mouths was true.” Yet this still needs [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “explanation: on the contrary, they raised Saul to a lofty degree, since they gave him the thousands, which are a tithe of the myriads. (44) At the final lament for the Messiah son of Joseph, which will also recall Saul's and Jonathan's deaths, the saying will be fulfilled, “in a voice” [?]: “Rachel weeps for her sons; she refuses consolation, because he is no more” (Jeremiah 31). It begins in the plural, “her sons,” and ends in the singular, “he is no more.” She weeps for her two sons: Saul, who comes [?] from Benjamin, “for also she ended with him” [?], and the Messiah son of Joseph. She refuses consolation [?] for them. “He is no more” refers to the Messiah son of Joseph, the chief subject of that lament, arousing [?] the weeping. Saul, dead since ancient years, is recalled only incidentally. [TN190056]

(45) “As Jacob said”: when the distress of one of Rachel's two sons recalls what already happened to the other [?], it is like Jacob's “It seems” [?], and so forth, as the sages said about “You will bring my gray hair down,” where he mentioned [gap]. [TN190057]

He told them: that child is the Messiah son of Joseph. My teachers hinted “forever, that this is not the word, and thus” [?]. To uphold all the sages' words, it seems to me he was Jonah and will reincarnate in the future Messiah son of Joseph. How pleasant [?], and so forth.[TN190062]

Because it must conclude, “Blessed, who has mercy upon the land.” The explanation [?]: all the blessings must end with that blessing, so David and Solomon are needed in that conclusion, since they prayed for the land of Israel. Thus I heard. Alternatively, because they established the Temple, the land's principal thing. End of quotation.

And [gap], they rightly said it must conclude “Blessed, who has mercy upon the land”: through the Messiah son of Joseph, who comes first, followed by the Messiah son of David and all holy ones with him. Therefore they put “who” [?], Jonah, first, for he will reincarnate in the Messiah son of Joseph.[TN190065]

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “The discerning will shine”: through “knows” in “You shall reign” (I Samuel 23). We know from the preceding chapter that Jonathan's soul will reincarnate [?] in the Messiah son of Joseph. [TN190067]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “Knows” applies only, “except” [?], to a true thing destined [?] to be fulfilled in any case, if not already done. This indicates that Jonathan will in his future reincarnation be David's deputy.[TN190068]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) These are three expressions [?] of kingship: malokh, timlokh, mamlokh, corresponding to Messiah's three reincarnations. Adam, David and Messiah form the acronym ʾDM, Adam, “that in” [gap] kings. Thus malokh is an infinitive in place of past, corresponding to Adam; timlokh addresses David; “Saul's kingdom shall be established,” future through YShW [?], “in honor” [?], corresponds to Messiah.[TN190069]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “We mentioned”: the master explains here [?]

Rema of Fano

The discerning will shine through Jonathan's words to David: “You shall reign over all Israel, and I shall be your deputy; my father Saul also knows this.” Knowledge applies only to true things destined to be fulfilled in every case. Saul too, when appeasing David after David cut his cloak's corner in the cave as proof that he would not harm him, said, “I know that you shall surely reign, and Israel's kingdom shall be established in your hand.” These are three kingships, for Adam, David and Messiah. Israel's kingdom will be established only in Messiah's hand, as the sages said: a lowly kingdom, the deputy's portion, will be established in the hand of Messiah, possessor of true sovereignty, with the deputy entirely obedient to him.

We mentioned Jonathan's joy and desire to be David's deputy. Jonathan's soul was bound to David's, the lesser depending on the greater. Thus David lamented, “Your love was wonderful to me.” Natural reason cannot accept that a king's son would so love his father's servant as willingly to seat him on his father's throne and become his deputy. Rather, David said, “From women's love”: our mothers' love for one another. Rachel gave Leah the signs and did not envy her sister's marriage-bed. There began your love for me, without envying

David's lament concerning Jonathan: David's soul was bound—who depends on whom? Say: the lesser upon the greater. [TN190070]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) From the supernal Wonder, Keter, Glory. Thus “Your love was wonderful,” [gap], depends on the supernal Wonder.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) It has no reason, for Supreme Crown is called Will, and there is no reason [?] in will. It also satisfies every living thing with favor, in which there is no [?] envy or rivalry.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) The younger, Rachel, seats the elder, Leah, in the bridal pavilion.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Likewise in the king’s law”: by the supernal will, Jonathan, who was of Benjamin, [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “the youngest,”] establishes the royal throne for David. This is “Your love was wonderful”: [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “the Wonder”] above made your love wonderful to me through the love of the women, our mothers, for one another, who likewise did thus. [TN190071]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Thus there are”: the master here [?] explains union above and below.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) From the Holy One's and Congregation of Israel's union—Tiferet and Malkhut—“they changed” [?], souls come into being, as is known. The union of Jacob's and Rachel's souls “holds” [?] Tiferet and Malkhut, as is known. [TN190072]

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) Of this it says “a help corresponding to him”; Leah, [gap].

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) Like Leah's union with Jacob.

Yad Yehudah - יד

As it says, “I shall lift my eyes to the mountains; from where shall my help come?” These are the words of Yesod, designated for the supernal union of Ḥokhmah and Binah, as is known. [Frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “He speaks during Israel’s exile, when there is no”] union with Malkhut, as is known. “I shall lift my eyes”—they are Netsaḥ [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “and Hod, which are over him—to”] the mountains, the three over them called mountains, as is known; “from Nothing”—from the Supreme Crown, which is me. Both came from the supernal Wonder, which has no reason, satisfying every living thing with favor, without envy or rivalry. He did what He wished: the younger seated the elder in the bridal pavilion and served as her bridal attendant. Likewise in the king's law, little Benjamin established Judah's throne.

Thus a person has two kinds of pairing. One is like Rachel's with Jacob: she was his actual mate at the souls' generation from the union of the Holy One and the Congregation of Israel. Of this it says, “My help is from the LORD,” like “I shall make him a help corresponding to him.” The other follows not the law of generation but mercy, like Leah's union: “From where shall my help come?” For the supernal Wonder is called Nothing, ʾayin, as is known; likewise, “Wisdom is found from Nothing.” Let the Righteous One of the world, of whom it says “The righteous one is lost,” say: “I shall lift my eyes”—the two measures above him —“to the mountains,” the three above them; “from Nothing,” the Wonder encompassing three, “shall my help come,” as stated.

This is indeed a wondrous unification, simple and clear in truthful language. Whoever recites this psalm with intention at the end of all his prayers, before moving his feet, is provided a fitting mate, whether through generation or mercy. One seeking mercy for the supernal union according to our stated intention, while needing that same thing himself, is answered first, so he may merit arousing below and being called Nothing [gap in the frozen source]. [TN190073]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) [gap] of the world is Yesod, of which it is written, [gap], union from the world, “as against them” [?]; Zohar, Shemot, page YS [?].[TN190074]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “Encompassing three”: as in the Tiqqunim, Nothing encompasses [?] three sefirot: alef, Keter; yod, Hokhmah; vav, Binah. [TN190075]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) In truthful language, [gap].

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) Therefore his union will be remembered [?]. [TN190076]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “The reason”: returning to Jonathan's desire to be David's deputy. It did not happen in David's days because of the blemish of Lot's two daughters, upon whom David's house was borne [?]. The blemish was not yet rectified and prevented David from having a deputy under him, [gap], until Rehoboam was born “in times” [?], completing the two daughters' rectification.[TN190077]

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “When he was an infant”: in Midrash Rabbah [?], on “Many things have You done, LORD, Your wonders and thoughts toward us.” Not “toward me” but “toward us”:

Rehoboam sat in David's lap, and David said, “Concerning me and you” [?] two verses were spoken, [gap], Lot's two daughters. Concerning the rectification's completion in his days, KYZ [?]. [TN190078]

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) David gives praise and thanks: “Then I said, Behold, I have come,” and so forth. The sages expounded: “then” signifies song.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) Alternatively Rehoboam was not born [?] in David's days; his mother Naamah the Ammonite was born then. Rehoboam's sitting in his lap means [gap], who would issue from him, KhʿS [?], in the chapter Ḥʾ QY [?]. Thus, foreseeing [?] that rectification was near through Rehoboam's birth, he said of him, “Your wonders,” and so forth. [TN190079]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “Afterward”: as in Heleq, “After this matter Jeroboam did not return.” After what? Rava [?] said: after the Holy One grasped his garment and told him, “Return, and I, you, and Jesse's son shall walk in the Garden of Eden.” He asked, “Who is first?” He answered, “Jesse's son.” He said, “I do not want it.” This too is the reason: before Rehoboam, while Lot's two daughters' rectification was

Until Rehoboam was born, however, David's house had not completed its refinement from Lot's two daughters. When Rehoboam was an infant in the cradle, David praised and thanked God that this had been completed in his days. Alternatively, he foresaw this rectification drawing near, as we explained in the Treatise Em Kol Hay. Concerning Rehoboam and himself he said, “Your wonders and Your thoughts toward us.” Afterward the Holy One wished Rehoboam and Jeroboam, Judah and Ephraim, to be together king and deputy, removing the cherubim's guard and the flaming sword east of the Garden of Eden, and fulfilling there “I shall walk among you,” as in Heleq. We did not merit it; may we merit it, live, and see.

Yet it is written, “Through those near Me I shall be sanctified.” When Glory was sanctified through Nadab and Abihu, they were near the Omnipresent: despite all this they had considered repentance in their hearts. After their price had been far beyond pearls, they were redeemed through Phinehas, who did not become a priest until he judged Zimri by zealots' striking. Then his soul fled in sudden fear, and Nadab's and Abihu's souls came to him as two halves of a body and revived him. Because he was zealous for his God, arousing himself to that act, he merited “I give him My covenant of peace,” BRYTY ShLWM, numerically equal to “Blessed be the glory of YHWH from His place,” with the large kaf of the final letters incomplete, David was unfit for a deputy. Once Rehoboam was born and refinement completed, the Holy One wished Rehoboam to be king and Jeroboam deputy. [TN190080]

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “To remove”: His “We shall walk in the Garden of Eden” follows Zohar, Bereshit, page 83 [?]: “He stationed” [?] east of Eden the cherubim—these are Messiah son of David and Messiah son of Joseph. [gap] to Jeroboam [gap], two Messiahs overshadowing east of Eden; remove the obstacle [?], and we shall walk in Eden. “And what” [gap], “were—he” [?].[TN190081]

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) To fulfill “I shall walk among you.” The sages expounded: the Holy One will in the future stroll in the garden [?] as the righteous, and so forth. [TN190082] the holy covenant, entered among many crowds, and lifted the adulterers [?] on his spear before all Israel, all Simeon's tribe [?] with the crowds that came [?] toward him, his soul fled. Two souls that had been naked without a male were included in it; two spirits approached and strengthened themselves within him. Then the spirits “of cleanness” [?], to become high priest, which had not been fitting beforehand, and so forth. See there.[TN190084]

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “Two halves of a body”: Zohar, Aharei, page 113 [?]. Rabbi Elazar asked his father [?]: are there not two [?], and were there not two; why were two not found? He answered: two halves of a body, because they had not married; therefore they were included in one. [TN190085]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “Because he was zealous for his God”: he was zealous for the holy covenant, which was appeased, and union [?] above. Thus he merited “I give him.” Zohar, Aharei, there: “My covenant itself shall be [?] with him in peace.” This concerns the world's Foundation [?], designated for the blessed supernal union and making peace in His heights; hence the name covenant of peace, as is

MNTsPKh. This is the acronym of “They were weeping,” BWKhYM, at the Tent of Meeting's entrance, for the gates of tears were not closed before them. He arose with a great deed, equal to them all.

Because he atoned for Israel with these souls' assistance, he merited for himself and his seed after him the covenant of eternal priesthood. He was then traced to Aaron the chief priest, outside the usual law of priesthood: Aaron's anointing did not benefit Phinehas, only what he merited through his own deed. For he acts as their strong redeemer [?] for the anointed priests,[TN190095] and he turned wrath away from Israel. It says, “Phinehas stood and va-yefallel.” It does not say va-yitpallel, the reflexive stem, for he is the LORD of Hosts' angel. Thus the sages expounded “The woman took the two men and hid him”: she hid Caleb alone from them; Phinehas hid himself.

In the plain sense, however, “she hid it” can refer to that act: even her household should not perceive her taking them, for afterward it says “she brought them up” and “she concealed them,” plural. Concerning va-yefallel, what we mentioned fits the verse's plain sense, in addition to our explanation at the end of Part I of Em Kol Hay. He needed no adhesion or attachment above. Rather, he bound crowns for the Master of kings from Moses' and his companions' prayer. They were weeping at the Tent of Meeting's entrance, acknowledging Heaven's just judgment, to cleanse the upper roots of Zimri's blemish. This is like the lower waters, for those knowing

(34) “He was then traced to Aaron”: wherever “Phinehas son of Eleazar” is written, “son of Aaron the priest” is written too. Although priesthood did not come to him from Aaron, “son of Aaron” alludes to Aaron's sons Nadab and Abihu, whose souls were included in him. All this is mentioned in Aharei and Pinehas.

Yad Yehudah - מ

“At the end”—that is, of Part I of Em Kol Ḥai, where we mentioned that, because of the binding of crowns, the Princes of the Presence are reckoned as binders. All this language concerning prayer is in the reflexive form, for the person praying attaches himself to his Maker so that crowns may be bound for Him from his prayer. This is not so with Phinehas, because he is an angel. [TN190089]

Yad Yehudah - מא

“Destined to be fulfilled”: Messiah son of Joseph will be deputy to Messiah son of David, and Jonathan's soul is in Messiah son of Joseph, as in the preceding chapter. Otherwise, how could knowledge be annulled altogether? Jonathan died before David reigned; how could he say “I shall be your deputy”? How sweet, accordingly, is “They wept for one another until David became great”: precisely until David is king and Messiah son of Joseph—Jonathan—is his deputy. Their weeping extends until then. Examine this. My teacher MHRRL of Lviv. [TN190092] The counterpart is knowledge above: it must be actualized, although temporarily unfulfilled because Jonathan died before David's kingship. It will be fulfilled later, as in the preceding chapter.

king, Messiah son of Joseph, Jonathan's reincarnation, deputy.

“And in Gʾ, Saul” [?]: “They gave David tens of thousands; only sovereignty remains for him.” Henceforth no superior degree remains except that he shall have sovereignty, while I have kingdom—Jonathan becoming deputy. Thus the Holy One is described as making other kings reign: He gives them a lower degree, but sovereignty is His, for “Sovereignty belongs to the LORD,” the upper degree, blessed is He.[TN190093] This explanation seems clear. He wrote there that “the One making reign,” HMLYKh, equals HQM, the sixteenth of the seventy-two names, by which kings are enthroned; see there. Thus “Israel's kingdom shall be established,” WQMH, in your hand, like “raising kings and removing kings.” Joseph's brothers said, “Will you surely reign over us?” There he asks: who mentioned sovereignty? Their mazal saw when he told them, “My sheaf arose,” QMH. Thus David: “Establish,” HQM, Your word for Your servants. See what was written on this in Heqor Din, Part I, chapter 1.

Alternatively, “Will you surely reign?” is astonishment: can you reign over us, when you descend from Rachel, whose offspring have only deputyship? “Will you merely rule us?”—only as deputy, for sovereignty belongs to Leah's sons. Thus I heard; understand this. See the preceding chapter on the LʾH initials of “for him, only, sovereignty,” and “to judge Mount Esau.”

“From women's love”: one may also explain according to chapter 16, that Saul belonged to the female world, like “This too is a son for you”—“son,” precisely. David therefore said “Your love was wonderful to me from women's love,” precisely. Mem may express cause. “From the Wonder”: Supreme Crown is called Wonder; thus “your love was wonderful,” precisely. “Favor to every living thing”: the supernal Will.

“A help corresponding”: the mystery of two countenances. At the souls' generation they come male and female from Tiferet and Malkhut's union, descending from the palace of Sapphire Pavement. This is “I shall make him a help corresponding to him,” and countenances. “The world's Righteous

One”: Yesod, called righteous, the world's foundation, as in “The righteous one is lost.” See Zohar, Shemot, page 15, and Tiqqunim, Tiqqun Tʿ [?], folio 126.[TN190096] Yesod says “I shall lift my eyes”: Netzah and Hod, the two measures above Yesod. “To the mountains”: the patriarchs, the three higher measures, Hesed, Gevurah, Tiferet. “From Nothing”: the supernal Wonder, the first three, Keter, Hokhmah, Binah.

“To arouse below”: one who is half a body cannot arouse and unify the supernal union, as is known. This was Nadab and Abihu's sin: they did not marry. Phinehas rectified them, meriting the yod in the full spelling of Phinehas. See Zohar, Aharei Mot, page 102. “To fulfill I shall walk”: Heleq's Gemara says the Holy One told Jeroboam, “Return, and I, you and David shall walk in Eden.” Thus “I shall walk among you.” This makes Jeroboam's question “Who is first?” precise: he knew one would be king and head, the other deputy. He was answered: Jesse's son first, being from Leah.

“Yet it is written”: returning above to “the turning” [?] of Nadab and Abihu. Glory was sanctified when they were burned; they were near, having considered repentance in their hearts for their sin. They were redeemed through Phinehas in the mystery of soul-impregnation, after the wording “concerning redemption and substitution.” “After it was far”: as explained above, “Around His glory it storms greatly.”[TN190094]

“Two halves of a body”: Zohar, Aharei Mot, page 102, asks how two souls could be bound in Phinehas's one body. They were two halves because they had not married; thus they were included as one. This is “Phinehas did not become a priest until he killed Zimri.” The large kaf among the final letters equals 500, because its position is after tav. BWKhYM, “weeping,” has the initials of “Blessed be the glory of the LORD from His place.”

“It does not say va-yitpallel”: that expresses adhesion; it does not say he attached himself, but va-yefallel—he attached others. Being an angel, he needed no awakening above: Phinehas is Elijah, and Elijah is clothed in Sandalphon, binding crowns for his master from Israel's prayers. “Afterward it says”: thus “she hid it” refers to that act, not to them.

“Zimri's blemish”: he blemished Yesod, the holy covenant, the small yod. See Binat Adam.

“The lower waters weep”: Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 5, folio 15. The explanation follows “Elohim made the two great lights,” equal in one illumination of the blessed Infinite. After the accusation the moon diminished and must receive through an intermediary, the six extremities, clothing and thickening the influx. Thus alef's form, (alef): one yod above, upper Father, Hokhmah; one yod below, lower Wisdom; the vav between is Binah's garment. Influx from above comes through an intermediary between upper and lower waters. Therefore the lower waters weep to be before the King without an intervening garment. This will be rectified in the future through the name YWY, with alef thus, YWY. See Galante on “What shall I testify to you?” Through this Phinehas received everyone's reward: “My covenant of peace,” numerically “Blessed be the glory of the LORD from His place.” Accordingly Rashi's saying is precise: the law was hidden from Moses so Phinehas could come to his fitting reward.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“A duty upon each”: the lost thing is a soul that sinned and reincarnated in a person, who is called its holder. He must gather it into his house and rectify that soul, cleansing it of all leprosy: “You shall cleanse him of his leprosy.” It seems to me this explains the verse's conclusion, “It shall remain with you until your brother seeks it.” The Gemara, These Are the Finds, explains: until you investigate your brother, whether he is dishonest. One must purify it of every blemish and trace of transgression, examining the soul lest any aspect of deceit remain. Thus “You shall return it to him”: see how you return it, as the sages expounded concerning “vessels of

Through the praise of Phinehas and Elijah, rectifying Nadab's and Abihu's souls in every detail of their errors, measure for measure, He guides sinners in the way: how faithful repentance may be completed for them. The Masorah alludes to this: ve-asafto occurs twice, once “You shall gather him into your house,” once “You shall cleanse him of his leprosy.” Hence the holder of a lost thing must pity and cleanse it, like Torah's compassion for the stranger's soul. All the more must the sinner himself, granted patience, do so.

Although some of our rabbis simply say “Phinehas is Elijah,” this does not mean, as many scholars think, that Phinehas never died and personally changed his name. Elijah descended from Rachel's children. His father's name was Abijah, of Becher's sons, a Benjaminite dirt” [?].[TN190097]

“All the more the sinner himself”: when the sinner is born a second time to rectify his first wrongdoing and the Holy One has been patient, he must completely purify himself. “From Rachel's descendants”: according to MHRN in his book Mʿ, “To Jerusalem I shall give a herald,” initials MKhBY BYṬR QLW [?]. Thus Moses said, “Please send by whom You will send”: Phinehas is included in Elijah, who indeed rectified Phinehas concerning Jephthah's days, as below. Within them are Nadab's and Abihu's souls, the initials Nʾ, “please.” They will be heralds in the mystery of “Merely dialectic”: since Elijah is not literally Phinehas and was not a priest, why ask, “Is the master not a priest?” It is merely dialectical discussion. Moreover, he actually became a priest at Carmel. “Israel's nobles”: Nadab's and Abihu's souls. “They grew presumptuous”: he enumerates how Elijah rectified their souls and sins, measure for measure. “Eli replaced him”: Eli descended from Aaron's son Ithamar.

“Rebuilding Jericho”: he disregarded Joshua's ban as a mere threat [?]. Torah says that if they worship idols, “He shall shut heaven”; they worshiped idols, yet rain fell. Elijah therefore said scribes' words are stricter than Torah's: the blessed LORD lives forever, is patient, and collects His due much later. One born of woman, however, must immediately substantiate his words. Thus “There shall be no dew or rain these years except by my word.”

“His honor was revealed,” and so forth: his father's honor departed from them, as the Zohar explains “She bore”; see

mentioned at the beginning of Chronicles; Elijah too is named nearby. Rabbah bar Avuha's question to him in Ha-Meqabbel, “Is the master not a priest?” is merely dialectical discussion. Moreover, he became a priest on Mount Carmel. Rather, Phinehas's deeds complete Elijah, and Elijah's deeds complete Phinehas. Between the two, rectification was completed for these nobles of Israel whom we are discussing.

They grew presumptuous toward Heaven; of Elijah it says, “He wrapped his face in his mantle.” They transgressed and were punished for approaching beyond their precinct; Phinehas withdrew from the high priesthood for many years, and Eli replaced him. Elijah too served on Carmel only by the LORD's command, as a temporary ruling: “At Your word I have done.” For their offering unconsecrated things in the courtyard, he offered consecrated things outside by divine utterance, as stated. Before meriting this, he rectified Phinehas's error in Jephthah's days: Phinehas would not go to him to annul his vow, and the Shekhinah departed from him. Now Elijah went to visit Hiel the Bethelite, Ahab's companion, as in Heleq; the holy spirit rested upon him to sanctify Heaven's Name publicly.

Hiel mocked the sages' words, disregarding Joshua's ban when rebuilding Jericho. He argued that even Torah's words seemed mere threats, like someone threatening without acting: he and Ahab worshiped Baal, yet heaven was not shut as Torah states. Elijah, Va-Era.[TN190099] They were now traced to Phinehas. Although Tetzavveh records their priesthood independently, they were later traced to Phinehas according to his end, when he inherited them in Zimri's episode. Between these times Phinehas was a Levite. Thus, although Tetzavveh attributes priesthood to them, they had not become priests and were considered Levites until Phinehas's deed.

“A priest is a minister”: for others. “Had he been accepted”: Cain. “Let the innocent come”: if you improve your deeds, “lifting,” you shall atone for others. “Enoch”: Enoch, Jared and Methuselah inherited Adam's supernal radiance as residents, as above, chapter 3. The hint is “Every shrub of the field before it grew, and there was no man”: SYḤ, shrub, initials of Shem, Jared and Enoch, who rectified the supernal radiance. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob inherited Adam's souls as residents. Enoch rectified Adam: had Adam not sinned, he would have become a chariot for the Shekhinah. After the sin Enoch rectified this—the Youth, Metatron, called the Shekhinah's bird's nest, a clean bird. Shem rectifies Abel, through the initials Moses, Seth, Abel.

My sign is “There is vanity beneath the sun”: Abel, Seth, Moses, Shem; understand this. “Not for building,” and so forth [?]: Zohar, Bereshit, page 150, because he rectified Abel, who is Moses.[TN190100] “Moses brought Aaron near”: in the mystery of raising him and lowering him, he waved Aaron; this was his offering, literally offering Aaron, as mentioned above, chapter 6, “a complete part” [?]. [TN190101]

“His world is not his place”: Moses has no belonging in this world, as stated repeatedly above. “Comparing the verses”: they are adjacent. Here “Fire issued”; immediately before, concerning the sin offering, “Fire issued from before the LORD and consumed the burnt offering.” Thus Moses said to Aaron, “Today they offered their sin offering and their burnt offering”—precisely their own, for they themselves are sin offering and burnt offering. Thus “Such things befell me”—precisely “such.” Recalling their death on the Day of Atonement: Zohar, Aharei, page 78, at the end. “Through an act”: Moses said, “Please send by whom You will send,” refusing four times; priesthood was taken from him and given to Aaron: “Is not Aaron your brother the Levite?” “Hear and know”: joined to the remembered for good, taught him that scribes' words are stricter than Torah's, as in Ha-Neheṇaqin and many similar places. Heaven's honor remains in its place: He is patient and collects what is His, as we explained in Part I. Thus Elijah told him, “As the LORD, Israel's God, lives, before whom I stood”: He lives and endures forever, and His word will not return empty, whereas I, born of woman, must substantiate my words. This is the reason for the aforementioned greater strictness of scribes' words. Therefore, “There shall be no dew or rain these years except by my word.”

They did not honor their father, and his honor departed from them: their priestly genealogy was recorded only in connection with Phinehas. Thus the Zohar, II, 26b, explains “She bore him Phinehas; these are the heads of the Levites' fathers.” Phinehas was a Levite until then; priesthood was returning to its lodging. Likewise, “Is not Aaron your brother the Levite?”—he was not yet a priest. A kohen is simply a minister. The Mishnah teaches, Zevahim 14:10, “There is no priestly service at a private altar”: an individual offering for himself is not called a priest. What, then, does Melchizedek's “He was priest to God Most High” mean? He is Shem son of Noah, who became a priest for his father. Noah wished to offer burnt offerings upon the altar but had a blemish, having been bitten by a lion in the ark. He told his son Shem to offer them for him.

Onqelos's rendering of “Preeminence in dignity and preeminence in strength” following chapter's beginning.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Through their praise”: the master further reveals that Elijah, of blessed memory, also rectified Nadab and Abihu's matters [?]. From Phinehas's and Elijah's rectification of their souls, entirely measure for measure as shortly explained, other sinners against their own souls may learn how to be rectified and complete repentance, through soul-impregnation and reincarnation, merit through a meritorious person. As above, chapter 14, “to teach concerning the whole,” and so forth; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“They hinted at it in Scripture”: that is, gather the leprous soul into your house through the mystery of soul-impregnation, in order to rectify it and finally to cleanse [?] it of its leprosy and the filth of its impurity. [TN190102]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“From here [we learn] that it is incumbent”—upon the finder of the soul that was captured and is found naked, without a place to rest, and so forth; this is the stranger.[TN190103]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) Torah's compassion for the stranger's soul: it warned to purify it. “You know the stranger's soul”; see above, chapter 3.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) If another person must purify and rectify the transgressor through soul-impregnation, properly returning it to its place, all the more the sinner himself, granted patience and a further entrance into this world through reincarnation. He must rectify his soul lest his remedy become his ruin, God forbid.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) Elijah descended from Rachel's children, as in Bereshit Rabbah, Va-Yiggash, and Tosafot, Ha-Meqabbel, citing Seder Eliyahu Rabbah.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “We find”: there in Bereshit Rabbah, concerning “the turning [?] of Tamar from all” [?], as written: “Jareshiah, Elijah and Zichri, sons of Jeroham ... all these are Benjamin's sons” (I Chronicles 8). Seder Eliyahu Rabbah, cited by Tosafot there, concludes: they told him, “Give a sign for your words.” He replied: thus is written Benjamin's genealogy, “Jareshiah and Elijah,” and so forth.[TN190104]

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “Merely dialectic”: in Ha-Meqabbel, Rabbah bar Avuha found Elijah standing in a gentile cemetery and asked, “Is the master not a priest?” He replied: gentile graves do not convey uncleanness. This does not show he was a priest.

(Genesis 49:3) teaches that the firstborn's service is the law of priesthood. Thus Cain first aroused himself to it: had his offering for himself been accepted, he would also have been inaugurated for others. Of him it says, “If you do well, lifting”: Torah says, let the innocent come and atone for the guilty. A sage may now understand that Enoch son of Jared and Shem son of Noah were attendants for Adam and Abel. In chapter 3 we mentioned Enoch among those completing David's years and Adam's relinquished years, together with Jared and Methuselah. He merited rectifying what the other had perverted, seeing it with his own eyes, after the mystery of the bird's nest, for those who know it.

Shem likewise merited becoming Abel's guardian and tutor after the world was founded from him in Seth. His establishing study houses was not for nothing, as in the Zohar, Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 69, folio 117b. From there Moses merited serving as priest in a white tunic. Moreover, he fulfilled “A person who offers from among you”: “Moses brought Aaron and his sons near,” as mentioned above. Moses compared himself with Abraham in two places, concerning priesthood and kingship, as in Bereshit Rabbah on the binding and at the beginning of Va-Ethannan. Abraham was brought near; Moses was distanced.

Adam, the world's firstborn, should have ministered splendidly for himself and all who entered the world, according to priesthood's law, serving God Most High for his children. He offered only an ox-

Elijah's answer was merely dialectic, putting him off: even if he were a priest, a gentile cemetery would be permitted. Thus, KhPG [?], Tosafot wrote there concerning R. ʿA [?]; conversely, Rabbah bar Avuha did not ask because he recognized him as a priest, but to debate the law of gentile graves. [TN190105]

Yad Yehudah - ט

Alternatively, it may be said that he decided between them: the one who says “from Shittim[?]” and “he became a priest on Mount Carmel.”[TN190106]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Rather, Phinehas's deeds”: Elijah, with the intention that both aimed at one thing, completing Nadab and Abihu's rectification. Their souls also entered Elijah in impregnation, as in the Idra.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “Toward Heaven, to raise” [?], as written; Elijah rectified this by wrapping his face.[TN190107]

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “For drawing near”: Nadab and Abihu offered unconsecrated things in the courtyard. Elijah rectified this by offering consecrated things outside at divine command, the opposite.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) Before Elijah merited rectifying Nadab and Abihu's “skulls” [?], he had to rectify Phinehas's matter. Since Phinehas would not go to Jephthah, as the sages said, Nadab's and Abihu's souls fled him. In his zeal for the LORD's vengeance, Elijah aroused himself to rectify "the dog, Phinehas's faces" [?], by "forgetting in silver" [?] and visiting Hiel. [TN190108] Thus Heleq, folio 113, on "In his days Hiel the Bethelite rebuilt Jericho." Ahab was his companion; he and Elijah came to the house of ṬʿMʾ [taste/reason?]. He sat and said: perhaps Joshua cursed rebuilding Jericho under another city's name or another city under Jericho's name? Elijah answered yes. He said: Moses his master's curse is not fulfilled, but his own is? "You shall turn aside and serve other gods ... He shall shut heaven and there shall be no rain." That man erects an idol on every furrow to worship them, yet rain will not let him go; Joshua his disciple's curse is fulfilled? Immediately Elijah said, "As the LORD, Israel's God, lives, before whom I stood, there shall be no dew or rain these years except by my word."

Yad Yehudah - יד

For even the words of Torah concerning idolatry, "He will shut up the heavens," are only a threat. This is what he said: "Now the curse of Moses, his master, is not fulfilled." [TN190109] bull for himself. His kingship too was diminished: had he not sinned, but ruled his world, Cain and Abel would not have divided it between themselves or quarreled. Abraham merited rectifying both as guardian and tutor to Adam's soul, as mentioned above. Moses thought to resemble Shem son of Noah, king of Salem and priest to God Most High. He was told, "Do not approach here," for his world is not his place, as we explained in Part III.

In truth he was distanced from both only so as not to bequeath them to his sons. He himself was king and priest, no gate closed before him in heaven above or earth below. Moreover, he ruled the chosen people at the degree of Jeshurun, a kingship no other person merited, of which it says, "Riding heaven to help you, and in His majesty the skies." This kingship belongs distinctively to blessed God: the verse begins, "None is like God, Jeshurun." In priesthood too Moses offered people to Heaven, Aaron and his sons, as stated.

Nadab's and Abihu's souls were burned like limbs of the burnt offering and sacrificial portions of the sin offering, by comparison of the adjacent verses, "Fire issued from before the LORD." They said recalling their death on the Day of Atonement atones like sacrifices. Eleazar and Ithamar were like remnants of consecrated offerings, for they are called "those remaining." This teaches a great, excellent temporary priesthood for Moses our teacher, peace upon him. Through an act, eternal priesthood returned to Aaron, older than him in

(15) "Elijah taught him": Elijah's "As the LORD lives, there shall be no dew or rain these years" was not said to substantiate Moses' curse in the matter, "as said in the bitter, KhR" [?], as apparently seems. Otherwise the difficulty would be, "establish what Elijah establishes—is it fulfilled?" [?]. Moreover Elijah made it depend on himself, "except by my word," not Moses. Rather: you cannot "rescue" [?] proof from Torah's words for scribes' words. On the contrary, scribes' words are stricter here: humans are a passing spirit that carries them off, so the Holy One guards their honor by especially fulfilling their words within their lifetime. The blessed LORD, however, is not a man to lie; He is patient and collects His due.

Thus: certainly a sign and wonder for you—there shall be no dew or rain these years except by my word. This is knowledge "that according to them" [?]: although Moses' curse in this very matter is not fulfilled, mine is; hence we judge Joshua's ban. [TN190110]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) This is itself the reason for "Scribes' words are stricter."

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) "They did not": returning to Nadab and years. Hear this and another matter, and know for yourself.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) As in Zohar, Va-Era, page 46 [?]: “Eleazar son of Aaron took one of Putiel's daughters as wife; she bore him Phinehas. These are the heads of the Levites' fathers.” “These are heads”—was he not alone? Rather “these,” and so forth: at the verse's beginning we find it, “and what” [?]; what they impaired and rectified he completes, gains their priesthood, and it rests in him. In the verse of both, “the deed of the beginning of what is not” [?] was found in him. Who are they? Nadab and Abihu. See there. It called them Levites: they did not become priests until Phinehas did, “at the hour we cleansed for the master” [?], and priesthood was returning to its lodging.[TN190111]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) He had not yet become a priest, so it was unfitting to call him [?] priest, which is a designation of affiliation.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) Kohen means service: ministering in sacrificial matters. Before appointment to that service it is inapplicable to call him thus. Hence they said—

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) There is no priest at a private altar: a non-priest is fit there, as in the Mishnah at the end of Zevahim. Even the offerer himself is not called priest here, for a priest serves others, not himself.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “What, then, does He was priest mean?” We do not find Melchizedek offering sacrifices for others. But there [?], Melchizedek is Shem son of Noah, as is known; he offered for his father Noah, who had a blemish and was unfit to offer.[TN190112]

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) On “Preeminence in dignity” he translated: you were fit to receive three portions—birthright, priesthood and kingship.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) The firstborn served before the Tabernacle was erected, as in Zevahim. The law of birthright caused this; therefore he translated “priesthood.”

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) Cain, firstborn and principal offspring, first aroused himself to bring an offering. Do not object: “the birthright was Abel for others” [?]; for there [?], had he been accepted and his offering received, he would have been inaugurated for others too. Thus—[TN190113]

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “Lifting”: “If you do well, lifting”—language of lifting, Moses our teacher to priesthood, and so forth, and there shall be birthright. If you do well, birthright will be fitting for you. Thus the Zohar there, page 103 [?]: what is lifting? “Preeminence in lifting”—this is birthright, for the firstborn has “in all of it” [?], and so forth.[TN190114]

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Now”: the master inwardly reveals Moses' priesthood, coming to him from Shem son of Noah, and Aaron's priesthood.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“They were attendants” to Adam and Abel, the primordial king [?], as stated in the Zohar on the Song of Songs: when Adam sinned, those glorious garments of the light of the Garden of Eden flew away from him, and the soul of the radiance [frozen-source gap; recovered from print: “of the supernal speculum”] that had descended into him departed from him. When Enoch came, the supernal radiance, a holy soul, descended into him, and Enoch was in that supernal radiance that had left Adam; see there. Shem son of Noah was likewise an attendant to Abel’s soul, as stated in the Zohar that we shall cite shortly. [TN190115]

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “Among those who completed for David” the seventy years that the first Adam relinquished to him, for he needed assistance in the matter, and David’s guarantor himself needs a guarantor. Enoch, Jared and Methuselah completed them and agreed with him concerning the relinquishment, for they too relinquished years to him in this way, as explained there.[TN190116]

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) Enoch is known to have merited rectifying Adam's sin, [gap].

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Shem had already merited,” and so forth. These are the words of the Zohar, Bereshit, page 150: “Be-shaggam—this is Abel. But we established that be-shaggam is Moses. Moses is Seth, and he is Shem, and he is Abel,” and so forth; see there. Further there: “The breath of Torah alone,” of which it was said, “The voice of the LORD hews flames of fire”; this is the secret of Moses being from Shem, for of him it says, “For I drew him from the water.” Above, Shem was establishing houses of exposition in Torah. He was there the completion of the HKPSh TsHYṬ [?]; therefore “You placed everything beneath his feet.” [TN190117]

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) From there, “as the words of a priest” [?], Moses in his reincarnation merited high priesthood, serving in a white tunic without priestly garments during the seven inauguration days, or throughout Israel's forty years in the wilderness, according to each view, as in Zevahim and Shemot Rabbah. (41) “Do not approach here”: approaching means priesthood; here means kingship, as in Bereshit Rabbah. “His world is not his place”: he did not come into the world for his world's sake, to bequeath priesthood and kingship to his sons. “Do not approach here” refers to this.

Yad Yehudah - מב

(42) “In truth”: in Zevahim, Tevul Yom, and Midrash Rabbah, we initially raised Moses' priesthood. Some there say priesthood ceased only from his seed: why should he be diminished from being Israel's priest and king because he did not come into this world for their need? On the contrary, who is greater to serve as priest for others and govern kingship? This is why he came. “Rather, bald in this world, not against his will” [?]; his distancing means only not bequeathing them to his sons. Thus the conclusion there: it means for him and his seed. “But after a world Moses avenged kingship, and they did not give it to him” [?]. See above, Part III, chapter 5. [TN190121]

“Which none merited,” and so forth. In the Zohar, Va-Yishlaḥ, at the reference ḤB [?], on the verse “And now hear, Jacob My servant, and Israel whom I have chosen,” and so forth, “Do not fear, My servant Jacob, and Jeshurun whom I have chosen,” its words are: “There are three degrees in all: first Jacob, then Israel, then Jeshurun. Come and hear: Jacob we have established; Israel—Kʿ [?]. Although they are degrees, they are one. Jeshurun: why is Israel called by this name? Israel and Jeshurun are all one. Jeshurun, as it says, ‘He looks upon men,’ because he takes a line to this side and to that side, and because of those two lines he is called Jeshurun,” and so forth.

The intention is Tiferet in the aspect of its receiving from the right and the left without inclining toward either of them, as explained in Pardes, in the Gate of Epithets. Concerning this Scripture says, “There is none like God, Jeshurun, who rides heaven to your help,” and so forth; see there. As is known, heaven is a designation for Tiferet. The intention is that He who rides heaven, bestowing upon Tiferet in the aspect of Jeshurun without inclining to either side, will Himself be your help. By this Moses merited reigning over Israel at this degree, in the attribute of One. [TN190122]

Yad Yehudah - מה

(45) Nadab and Abihu were already in the aspect of an offering, there in the burnt offering's limbs, meaning “their KSMT” [?]. This is indicated in Shemini concerning inauguration sacrifices, “Fire rose,” beside Nadab and Abihu's death, where it again says “Fire issued”: they too were an offering to the LORD.[TN190123]

(46) Zohar, Aharei, page 100, says recalling their death atones as sacrifices.

“The world's tranquil ones,” etc.: Nadab and Abihu sinned in not taking counsel. I heard this from my master, the eminent Rabbi Elhanan, ShN [?], the divine man, the great kabbalist.[TN190124] I asked why the author began with this verse and how the verse belonged to this matter. He answered me thus, in these words: “One who enters and leaves this wisdom knows that the complete stature has three thirds, which are nefesh, ruaḥ and neshamah. The conjunction of the right and left brains includes between them a cavity of the skull containing no brain. This is the glorious dwelling of Daʿat, the agreement of the two together. Thus the skull has three cavities, two full and one empty, from the participation of the two full ones; from there the right's power goes to the right hand, and likewise for the left. What is called neshamah in the head as the higher Daʿat is called ruaḥ here in the heart. Immediately it descends to the central channel between the two kidneys, the lower third. There counsel is completed, for the kidneys advise from what mediates between them, and one is called nefesh. You already know that Yesod is named Peace, establishing peace, etc.: after both full ones made peace, being two halves of a body, they must take counsel with one another. In their general conjunction they are called Netzah, Hod and Yesod. Shalwei has the numerical value of the three Elohim within them, sweetened by three YHWH names, as known from the mystery of ShWL, TShWLW as initials, in the mystery of the Qaddish, as above.[TN190125] This is shalwei; when Yesod's action is completed, completed through itself, it is called shalom. This is 'Peace within your rampart, tranquility within your palaces.' Now KH [25/ thus?] remain under the name 'the world's tranquil ones.' 'From whose [MI] womb did it come out?'—the awesome ice, Dʿ [?], entered in actual peace, etc.; these are ancient matters.[TN190126]

“The world's tranquil ones attained wealth”: they did not take counsel with Moses in a matter requiring many counselors. Phinehas at Shittim consulted Moses in a matter admitting no consultation. On the contrary, a difficulty arises: in such a case one does not consult a court, and someone who comes to consult is not instructed. Rather, Phinehas said this to Moses: “Our master, you have already taught us the zealot's law; now I need only to fulfill in myself wise instruction, to appease the lowly, the souls of the needy.” With this, his soul's desire drew in the spirit of these two survivors. Moses too said only, “You have spoken rightly,” since they had already stated the law: “Let the

"But Nadab and Abihu are Adam the first man's nefesh and ruaḥ, and are literally called sanctified ones, for they attained the wealth swallowed by the shell, which it shall vomit up. reader of the letter be its messenger." What Phinehas received from Moses was confirmation of the law, not permission, so that the disciple might be justified in his speaking and the master acquitted in his judging.

They did not consult one another; here both came with one counsel to Phinehas, to add strength to the might above. They issued a ruling in their master's presence; Phinehas fled from giving rulings and did not agree to sit at the head after Joshua's death throughout the elders' and judges' days. They entered drunk with wine; of Elijah it is written, "He shall drink from the brook"; he asked the Zarephath woman only for water, and the angel prepared a flask of water for him, according to the law of the priests of the paternal house. They entered lacking garments; Elijah mourned this and had a leather belt instead of a sash, fulfilling in himself, "The skin of the burnt offering which he offered—to the priest it shall be his." Of Abraham it is written, "You are a priest forever": he offered Isaac, who is the whole world, in the sense of the reward of them all that we explained, and of what we intimated concerning him in the treatise Em Kol Hay. Elijah said, "As the LORD lives, before whom I stood"; this was on Mount Moriah, for his celestial counterpart was there. He offered to the priest—Abraham—the ram caught in the thicket. Therefore the Torah said, "The skin of the burnt offering shall be his." This also accounts precisely for the extra "his" in the verse: it could have said "shall be the priest's," but it is as we said. "A man's burnt offering," too, is sweeter than honey and union with the woman who fears the LORD, not with alien fire, an alien woman, they would necessarily have taken counsel with one another, through participation in the completion of counsel dwelling there in that place. They would also have taken counsel with Moses, who occupies higher Daʿat, for Daʿat descends and becomes counsel, as above. Corresponding to this counsel, which is nefesh, it is said, 'And to you, guard yourself—to his soul.' Examine it and you will find.[TN190127] Therefore Phinehas, Yesod, performed the actions of YWʿB [?], for a spirit of zeal passed over him for the LORD God of hosts, precisely. To rectify their damage he had to repay their unnecessary approach through one who took counsel where counsel was unnecessary, for 'the zeal of the LORD of hosts shall do this.' Examine it. Therefore the covenant of peace was given him. This is the abridgment, and this needs no delay."[TN190128] End of his words.

"To fulfill in myself," etc.: I need no advice; what I ask now is to rectify Nadab's and Abihu's souls. This is "to give merit to the lowly," etc. "The disciple might be justified" is Phinehas; "the master acquitted" is Moses, for both spoke rightly. "Who is the whole world":

Isaac is weighed against the whole world; Abraham offered him as a burnt offering, as a priest. This is precisely “You are a priest for the world.” “He offered,” etc.: Elijah offered the ram as an offering to Abraham at the binding. Hence “before whom I stood”: he had already stood before Him at Mount Moriah. See the writings of the Ari, according to interpreters: at the binding there was an accusation between Michael and Satan. Michael brought the ram near so Isaac would be saved; Satan pushed it away so Isaac would be slaughtered. His argument concerned the calf's sin: if Isaac were slaughtered, Israel as a whole would cease. This is the mystery of ‘And behold, a ram’ having Michael's numerical value. ‘Behind’—three caught in the thicket [?]: take the letters after S-B-Kh and they are ʿ-G-L, calf; after samekh, ʿayin; after bet, gimel; after kaf, lamed. [TN190129] Michael defeated him—by what? ‘By its horns’: HShṬ [?] has the numerical value 368 [?]. The incense measures are 365, with three the high priest added on the Day of Atonement, as known: 368. For the calf's sin, afterward He took Nadab and Abihu: ‘The LORD was also angry with Aaron’ means the destruction of sons. With

They were negligent in sanctifying hands and feet; Elijah sanctified his whole body in the brook Cherith for many days. They prepared fire outside and brought smoke inside; he said, “I shall put no fire,” and there was no smoke-producing ingredient there: the entire trench was full of water. They did what He had not commanded them; he said, “At Your word I have done it.” They had no sons and were redeemed by their brother's son, resembling the law of the son of a woman in levirate marriage. In the sense of “the raven wants children,” ravens sustained Elijah. They had no wives, for Israel's virgins were not praised by them; they desired kings' daughters. They were redeemed through the son of a woman of Putiel's daughters, who acted zealously against Simeon's prince when he sinned with a princes' daughter. Likewise Elijah acted zealously against Ahab, whom his wife Jezebel, daughter of the Sidonians' king, incited. They said, “When will these two elders die?” Elijah said, “Take my soul.” They also calculated the end-times; he said, “I am no better than my fathers,” as Rabbi Zeira said: “The land that Moses and Aaron did not merit entering—who says I shall merit it?” They sought to lead the congregation and presumably hoped to exercise authority in the Land of Israel. He said, “I alone remain,” asking that others lead Israel, until he was commanded to anoint Jehu as king and Elisha as prophet. He ascended in the storm to heaven only across the Jordan. Even then he raised to its place above the fire that had come out from the

this the calf's sin would be atoned for.[TN190130]

“The midrash is known: nothing of the ram was wasted. Its skin became a belt for his loins; it shall be his. The priest is Elijah, offering ‘a man's burnt offering,’ for Isaac's soul flew away and entered the ram, as above, part II, chapter 30. Thus the offering itself is a man. ‘The skin of the burnt offering which he offered to the priest’—the righteous priest Abraham —‘shall be his,’ Elijah's, who made himself a belt from it and gathered them from it [?], as in the midrash.[TN190131] There is an allusion: ‘God will see for Himself the lamb’; the initials of Elohim, yir’eh, lo are ELYH. Although Elijah had not yet been born, his celestial counterpart was there, for Elijah brought it near and Satan pushed the ram away.”

“Of Putiel's daughters”: she was not distinguished by lineage, whereas they had intended precisely kings' daughters. This seems to me to follow from the tribes' disparaging him: “This son of Puti,” etc. Therefore he was traced to Aaron, to show Nadab and Abihu were within him; he had to rectify matters by not marrying a great man's daughter. Examine it. “By their brother's son”: Phinehas son of Eleazar, Nadab's and Abihu's brother. “The raven wants children”: they had no that fire now ascended with him. Thus of Elijah: “And behold, a chariot of fire,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “The world's tranquil ones,” etc.: the master returns to explain further the reincarnations of Nadab and Abihu and their rectification through Phinehas and Elijah. The world's tranquil ones, Nadab and Abihu, [gap] that they offered without consulting their master. Phinehas rectified this by consulting Moses, as in Ha-Nisrafin: “Phinehas saw”—he saw the deed and remembered the law. He said, “My father's father's brother, did you not teach me on descending Mount Sinai: one who has intercourse with an Aramean woman [?]—zealots strike him?” He answered: “Let the reader of the letter be its messenger.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “On the contrary, a difficulty”: why did Phinehas need to say to Moses, “Did you not teach me thus?” One does not consult a court. Moses's words, “Let the reader of the letter,” etc., are also difficult: we hold that one who comes to consult is not instructed, as stated there.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) Rather, this is the thing he said [gap], to rectify Nadab and Abihu's failure to consult their master. To show that he did not need his ruling, he said, “Did you not teach me thus?” I am not asking you what the law is: you taught it to me when descending Mount Sinai, and I know that one who comes to consult is not instructed. Necessarily, then, I am not mentioning the law before you today—

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) —but wise instruction, to appease the lowly, Nadab's and Abihu's souls, and atone for their error.

Yad Yehudah - ה

With our explanation, we need not say that the souls of Nadab and Abihu entered Phinehas [gap in the frozen source; recovered from print: “without his awareness”]. For indeed Phinehas’s soul desired this from the beginning, in order to rectify them. [TN190132]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) Moses too, answering “Let the reader of the letter,” etc., did not intend to answer Phinehas “in

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “And the law,” etc.: that is, according to this, Moses did not give him permission to kill, but acknowledged the law to him; and he appeased Moses and Phinehas concerning the matter he mentioned.[TN190134]

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “To add strength”: these matters above, as already stated above.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “According to the law of the priests of the paternal house”: they are forbidden to drink wine.

“He offered Isaac”: thus he was priest to Isaac, who received the reward of the whole world and became a conduit through which the whole world was nourished. [TN190136]

Yad Yehudah - יב

In the sense of what the sages, of blessed memory, said concerning intention: the lower beings strengthen the Holy One, blessed be He, who receives the reward of them all, in the manner explained above, Part II, chapter 14. [TN190137]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “And from what we intimated” [gap].

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “He offered,” etc.: the word “to the priest” in the verse about the burnt offering's skin is not joined upward to “his,” but downward to “offered.” It means Elijah, who offered to Abraham.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) Therefore the Torah says the ram's burnt-offering skin shall be his: Elijah's leather belt came from Isaac's ram, as known.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“But as we said”: that is, “to the priest” and “it shall be his” are connected together. [TN190138]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “And a burnt offering of water,” as the sages say, “who offered the burnt offering,” and “WNH ṢʿM [?] to fill with water,” is also sweeter than honey. It alludes to Isaac's being [?], literally a burnt offering of water, as explained above, part II, chapter 18: Isaac's soul, which flew from him at the binding, entered the ram.[TN190139]

Yad Yehudah - יח

“They were redeemed by their brother’s son,” Phinehas. This was like levirate marriage: one who departs without sons returns and emerges in his brother’s son. Therefore Elijah was sustained by ravens, which desire offspring, as the sages, of blessed memory, said. [TN190140]

Yad Yehudah - יט

What woman suits us?” Rabbi Menaḥama, in Rabbi Joshua ben Nehemiah's name, said: “Fire consumed his young men.” His young men consumed fire because “his virgins were not praised.”[TN190141]

Rema of Fano

“Who said to his father and mother, ‘I have not seen him’” (Deuteronomy 33:9): this is certainly Phinehas, for whom Moses our master, peace be upon him, sought mercy: “Bless, LORD, his strength, and accept the work of his hands” (Deuteronomy 33:11). He says to his father—Eleazar—and to his mother, literally, “I have not seen him,” Aaron, mentioned in the preceding verse: “Your Thummim and Your Urim belong to Your faithful man” (Deuteronomy 33:8). “I have not seen him” means: I derived no benefit from his anointing, for Phinehas became a priest solely by his own merit. On this reading “to his father” is readily priest of On. Although Jethro was Midian's priest, all is one mystery, in one whole: first Joseph's father-in-law was called priest of On, then Moses's father-in-law was called priest of Midian, for Joseph and Moses ascend in one mystery. See Zohar, Yitro, ʿQYṬ [?], and there you will understand. Their saying “from Joseph and Jethro” is all one mystery: he was from the idolatrous priests, the priest of On and the priest of Midian, and both are one. Examine it. “To bring a pure thing from an

impure one": Phinehas and Jethro.[TN190142]

One may further explain "I have not seen him." Moses and Aaron are known to have been the likeness and reincarnation of Cain and Abel: Moses—Seth, Abel; Aaron—Cain. His mother was from Jethro the Kenite, also Cain's rectification, as known. Concerning this he says: Do not say my priesthood, which I took from Nadab and Abihu, came from the merit of my father and mother, who rectified Cain, the world's firstborn, who should have been priest. It came from my own self.

"He withdrew from the conduct": Phinehas withdrew from worldly conduct and lifted responsibility for his sons from himself when they had already kept Your Torah. This is "he did not recognize his sons," to direct them any longer. When was this? "For they kept Your sayings." "Continual repetition": reviewing study so it is not forgotten. As the young stag turns backward while running, every Torah scholar must look backward at what he already learned, lest he forget. "Fit to teach": "They shall teach Your laws to Jacob," the revealed part; the hidden is "Your Torah," the LORD's Torah, "to Israel." "Such as incense": "They shall put incense in Your nostrils." "Vindicating His judgment in two understood, and "to his mother" is also necessary. According to the view "of Joseph's daughters"—Joseph who mastered his inclination—Joseph was the firstborn in intention, and we already recalled that priesthood belongs to the rights of primogeniture. It teaches us that the matter depended on his own merit, not others'. According to the view "of Jethro's daughters"—Jethro who fattened calves for non-gods—both accounts apply: her father was from Joseph, her mother from Jethro. This too is what Elijah told the sages: "I am of the sons of Rachel's sons." Her father's mother may also have belonged to Gad's tribe, so all the sages' words stand.

One might suppose his mother caused his initial exclusion, for that is the judgment of the priest of On: his sons are kept far from salvation. Alternatively, heaven might favor bringing a pure thing from an impure one. Thus we find that Jonadab son of Rechab produced high priests from his daughters' sons, and eight priests who were prophets descended from the daughters of Rahab, who married Joshua. One might say that Phinehas's mother likewise caused his present admission. It teaches us otherwise. "He did not recognize his brothers, nor know his sons": he withdrew from the world's conduct to be alone in his Creator's service. Since a person may not throw off responsibility for children and relatives before fulfilling his obligation to them, training them in Torah and fear of heaven, it says he did this only when they had already "kept Your saying" in their hearts, having learned the whole Torah. "They shall preserve Your worlds," etc., etc.: until now man's judgment has been settled under two judgments, namely the New Year judgment and the soul's judgment after death. The obligation remains for us to explain the third judgment, after resurrection. See part I, chapter 1.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) "Who said," etc.: the master explains these verses [?] concerning Phinehas, "who emerged, ṢYT" [?], in the preceding chapters.[TN190143]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) "I have not seen him": it does not mean "I have not seen" his companion, for it would then have said "I have not seen you." It refers to the preceding verse, "and did not say [?], Your Thummim and Your Urim belong to Your faithful man," Aaron. Phinehas speaks of him to his own praise: "I have not seen him," Aaron, from whom I neither became priest nor obtained lineage at all, for I did not become a priest until I killed Zimri.[TN190144]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) All this readily explains why he said it to his father, indicating that Phinehas's priestly lineage would not be his.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"To his mother is also necessary": this must be said so that you do not wonder why he mentioned

his mother thus. Who would imagine that the priesthood came to him from her? It is therefore necessary to say this: according to the one who expounds “of the daughters of Putiel” as “of the daughters of Joseph,” one might say that Phinehas became a priest on her account. For priesthood belongs to the rights of primogeniture, as mentioned above in chapter 18, and Joseph was the firstborn in intention, as explained above, Part III, chapter 18. Therefore it was necessary to say that this is not so. And likewise — [TN190145]

Yad Yehudah - ה

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Both accounts apply”: as they say in the chapter of Sotah, folio 23 [?]: if his father-in-law's father was from Joseph, his father-in-law's mother was from Jethro; and if his father-in-law's mother was from Joseph, his father-in-law's father was from Jethro. “And the wording is right,” etc., the main “DKHYḤ” [?] here, of Elijah's saying “I am of the sons of Rachel's sons,” as above, chapter covenant” is continual repetition of study. Even a Torah scholar who sits studying all his days must beware of forgetting one thing he learned, as we learned in Avot. He should learn from the young stag, which runs forward while constantly looking behind.

They too are fit to teach its revealed part, such as the laws known to the multitude, and its hidden counterpart, passed in whispers to the wise. This is the LORD's Torah, a need on high, as written, “And Your Torah to Israel.” They are also fit to be trained in priesthood, even its inner services, such as incense, which is entirely consumed on the inner altar. Even a burnt offering has its skin given to the priests, unlike incense. This altar in the sanctuary is devoted to the Most High: it permits nothing to another. The bronze altar differs: priests and owners benefit from it after the permitting portion has been offered as commanded. Hence “Your altar.” Then, when the children and relatives have been perfected in heaven's service, “Bless, LORD, his strength”—that of the head of this holy paternal house, who withdrew from worldly ways to stand before the LORD in constant solitude, as in “As the LORD lives, before whom I stood.” In its plain sense he asked that his sons be blessed by the Most High, after placing his trust in the LORD concerning them. “Accept the work of his hands”: when Elijah builds an altar before You and offers on Mount Carmel. “Crush the loins of those who rise against him”: Baal's prophets; “and of those who hate him, so they do not rise”: Asherah's prophets, who eat at Jezebel's table. But Ahab humbled himself and was rectified.

(8) “One might suppose” refers back to “according to the view: of Jethro's daughters.” One might suppose Phinehas was initially kept from priesthood because of his mother, Jethro's daughter, the priest of On who fattened calves for idolatry. He therefore also had to say to his mother, “I have not seen him,” Aaron: I did not merit priesthood by being Aaron's son, so that someone could say, “As being Aaron's son was mine, against it I was of Jethro's sons, priest of On, whose lineage deserves exclusion.” What earned me priesthood was my own merit, “and my father's lineage, but,” while my mother's lineage does not detract [?]. Thus Moses our master's blessing, peace be upon him, encompassed the priesthood's law for its two heads of lineage, Aaron and Phinehas. This is a sound, clear plain reading. Along our path we have learned that for Nadab and Abihu, through Phinehas, who is Elijah, change of name, change of place, and change of deed were completed. “The LORD's day,” etc.: having set out thus far the LORD's true judgments in two worlds, this world and the world to come, the master saw fit to discharge his obligation to explain the third judgment, the world of resurrection, as promised at the treatise's beginning. He said that the LORD's great and awesome day, mentioned at the end of Malachi's prophecies —“Behold, I send you Elijah the prophet before the LORD's great and awesome day comes”—is judgment day at the resurrection of the dead. The LORD will see and judge between righteous and wicked.

Rema of Fano

The LORD's great and awesome day is the judgment day at resurrection. Judgment belongs to God: whether a person can be numbered with the righteous who sit with their crowns on their heads, enjoying the radiance of the Divine Presence. Through their righteousness they will renew their strength during the years in which the Holy One, blessed be He, will renew His world. All the great sages have agreed, in explaining the teaching of three classes on judgment day, taught in the additions to Sanhedrin, chapter 13, and in Seder Olam, chapter 3, that these are the LORD's judgments concerning the world of resurrection. Their divisions are six, explained in the Gemara, the first chapter of Rosh Ha-Shanah, as follows.

First: the completely righteous, for everlasting life.

Second: intermediate people who are not bodily transgressors—He who is abundant in mercy inclines toward mercy.

Third: intermediate people who are bodily transgressors descend for a time and meṣafṣefin, meaning “hidden/north” [?], or cry out, or emerge and ascend to their rest.[TN190157]

Fourth: those whose sins are the majority, who are not bodily transgressors. Some apply to them what we learned in the Select Tractate: “The judgment of the wicked in Gehinnom is you ask what the righteous do in those thousand years when the Holy One, blessed be He, will renew His world, as written, “The LORD alone shall be exalted on that day,” He makes them wings like eagles, and they float over the water, as written, “Therefore we shall not fear when the earth changes.” Perhaps you will say they suffer: Scripture says, “Those who hope in the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount wings like eagles.” Tosafot, first chapter of Rosh Ha-Shanah, says: “Three classes on judgment day, when the dead revive, as the verse proves. Although they were already judged after death for the Garden of Eden or Gehinnom on account of the soul, another judgment will still determine whether one merits the life of the world to come, which endures forever. Some have already received their judgment in Gehinnom and may thereby merit it.” End of quotation.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“All the great sages,” including Tosafot, agreed that the teaching of three classes concerns judgment

in the world of resurrection, unlike the interpreters who think it concerns judgment in the world of souls.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“First chapter of Rosh Ha-Shanah” (folio 16b), in these words: “It was taught: the school of Shammai says there are three classes on judgment day: one of the completely righteous, one of the intermediate, and one of the completely wicked. The completely righteous are immediately inscribed and sealed for life in the world to come; the completely wicked are immediately inscribed and sealed for Gehinnom, as written, ‘Many of those sleeping in the earth's dust shall awaken, these to everlasting life and those to reproach, to everlasting abhorrence.’ The intermediate descend to Gehinnom, cry out, and ascend, as written, ‘I shall bring the third through fire and refine them as silver is refined.’ Of them Hannah said, ‘The LORD kills and revives, brings down to Sheol and raises up.’ The school of Hillel says: ‘Abundant in mercy’—He inclines toward mercy. Of them David said, ‘I love, for the LORD hears my voice’; the whole passage was said of them: ‘I was brought low, and He saved me.’ Israel's bodily transgressors and the nations' bodily transgressors descend to twelve months,” after which they ascend to their rest. Others explain more leniently, equating intermediate people who are bodily transgressors with those whose sins are the majority but who are not bodily transgressors, since they are alike. Their term is not fixed: they are judged for a time, meaning as much as cleansing requires, and their judgment will in no case reach twelve months. Nevertheless, their faces resemble the bottom of a pot, scorched by Gehinnom's fire. It is somewhat difficult to be so severe toward the intermediate, even if they are bodily transgressors, since ultimately the scale of guilt does not outweigh the other in the weighing of the God of knowledge.

Fifth: those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors. All agree that their judgment in Gehinnom lasts twelve months. Afterward their bodies are consumed and their souls burned; Gehinnom casts them out, and a wind scatters them beneath the righteous people's feet, as in Malachi's prophecy. This is the judgment of resurrection. Those like them at the judgment of death are cast out by Gehinnom after twelve months and handed to Dumah. Even there they have no rest, but await the testing Elihu revealed to Job.

Sixth: those who spread their terror in the land of the living, withdraw from the community's ways, and lead the many to sin. Gehinnom closes upon them and they are judged there for generations of generations. At the judgment of death, after generations of generations—at least to the fourth—it is possible that these too will be tested through hidden

Gehinnom and are judged there for twelve months. After twelve months their bodies are consumed, their souls burned, and a wind scatters them; they become ash beneath the feet of the righteous, as written, ‘You shall tread upon the wicked, for they shall be ash beneath your feet.’ But sectarians, informers, heretics, those who denied Torah, those who denied resurrection, those who withdrew from the community's ways, those who spread their terror in the land of the living, and those who sinned and led the many to sin, such as Jeroboam son of Nebat and his companions, descend to Gehinnom and are judged there for generations of generations, as written, ‘They shall go out and see the corpses of the men who transgressed,’ etc. Gehinnom ends, but they do not end,” etc.

they have no remedy! There their sins are the majority; here half are sins and half merits. This is what it means: if half are sins, including the sin of Israel's bodily transgressors, 'I shall bring the third through fire' cannot be avoided. Otherwise, 'Abundant in mercy'—He inclines toward mercy. Of them David said, 'I love,' etc. Who are Israel's bodily transgressors? Rav said: a head that does not put on tefillin. The nations' bodily transgressors? Rav said: through sexual transgression. 'Those who spread their terror in the land of the living': Rav Hisda said: a leader who imposes fear on the community for something other than heaven's sake."

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Second: intermediate people," etc.: according to the school of Hillel, as the wisdom, by Him who devises plans so none banished remains banished from Him. This is the meaning of "Gehinnom ends, but they do not end." We explain it according to the sages' interpretation of "I shall exhaust My arrows upon them." There, "My arrows are exhausted" is the end of afflictions; here too, "Gehinnom ends" is the end of punishment. For the arrows and Gehinnom will not cease, throughout their existence, from raging against them and rebuking them. Yet ultimately they do not end. Gehinnom itself is so called because its numerical value equals ḥinnam, 'for nothing': a deep pit into which people descend for matters of ḥinnam. Purified souls are brought up to the Garden of Eden's messengers, and they say, "Hinnam—here they are; they have been whitened." Of souls merely examined, which need no whitening, they call, "Hinnam—here they are; take them and go," as explained in the Zohar. In truth, nothing is everlasting except in the quality of goodness.

Gemara establishes, where half are sins and they lack the sin of bodily transgressors. We must say that the school of Hillel and the first teacher each spoke of a different case and do not disagree.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Third: intermediate people who are bodily transgressors": according to the teaching's unqualified statement, the intermediate descend to Gehinnom, cry out and ascend, and the Gemara's conclusion: if half are sins, including the sin of Israel's bodily transgressors, "I shall bring the third through fire" cannot be avoided.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"For a time": Rashi explains thus: "They cry out"—they cry out from suffering for one hour, then ascend.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Or cry out": as Rashi explains.

Yad Yehudah - י

Or the reading is "emerge," meaning "ascend."

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Fourth: those whose sins are the majority," etc.: this is the teaching's plain sense, "The completely wicked are immediately inscribed and sealed for Gehinnom." Rashi explains "completely wicked" as those whose sins are the majority.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Some explain" that the judgment in Gehinnom of wicked people who are not bodily transgressors lasts twelve months; afterward they ascend to their rest. Of them we learned in Eduyot, "The judgment of the wicked in Gehinnom is twelve months." Other interpreters do not explain it thus: wicked people who are not bodily transgressors are judged like intermediate people who are bodily transgressors, for a time. They explain the teaching that distinguishes intermediate from wicked and says "the completely wicked," etc., as referring to those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors. Etc.: according to them it may also be said that "The judgment of the wicked in Gehinnom is twelve months" concerns those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors, at judgment after death. After twelve months their judgment in Gehinnom ends and they have some rest. For this it brings proof from "From new moon to new moon, all flesh shall come to bow down." At the judgment of resurrection, however, we say that after twelve months their bodies are consumed and their souls burned; how could it bring a proof that contradicts this?

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Meaning as much as cleansing requires”: it does not mean a brief hour, as with intermediate people who cry out and immediately ascend. They are not equal in this: the latter are intermediate after all, and severity toward them is difficult; those whose sins are the majority need cleansing corresponding to their many sins. Nevertheless, they resemble the intermediate in that their judgment in no case reaches twelve months.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Nevertheless, their faces,” etc.: Rabbi Isaac bar Avin's statement that their faces resemble a pot's bottom was said of this class.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“From Gehinnom's fire”: these wicked people are judged in Gehinnom for a duration appropriate to their many sins.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“It is somewhat difficult to be so severe” toward the intermediate that their faces resemble a pot's bottom. Granted they are bodily transgressors; nevertheless, even with this gravity they remain intermediate. The weighing of a person's sins and merits follows their magnitude in the God of knowledge's understanding, not their number, as above, part I, chapter 8. Although they descend to Gehinnom because bodily sin is grave and are not treated by “abundant in mercy” like other intermediate people, ultimately they are intermediate. Reason does not allow their remaining in Gehinnom as long as the wicked whose sins are the majority. Accordingly, it seems to me that Rabbi Isaac bar Avin's explanation, “Their faces resemble,” etc., applying to the intermediate, means wicked people who resemble the intermediate.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Fifth: those whose sins are the majority,” etc.: as taught, Israel's bodily transgressors descend to Gehinnom and are judged there for twelve months, etc. The Gemara establishes that their having no remedy applies where sins are the majority.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“All agree”: even those who hold that wicked people without bodily sin are not judged for twelve months, as mentioned, agree here.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“As in Malachi's prophecy”: “You shall tread upon the wicked, for they shall be ash beneath your feet,” as in the Gemara.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“Those like them,” etc.: these wicked people are judged in Gehinnom for twelve months also at judgment after death. Afterward Gehinnom casts them out; they do not ascend to rest but are handed to Dumah. Their bodies are not consumed nor their souls burned; otherwise there would be no returning to judge them on resurrection day.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“They await” and are ready to be reincarnated again, thereby to be tested. This is the mystery of reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Which Elihu revealed to Job” (33), saying: “Behold, God does all these things twice, three times, with a man.”

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Those who withdraw from the community's ways”: this includes sectarians, informers, heretics, those who denied Torah and those who denied resurrection. The Gemara counts them and then enumerates “these withdrawers” [?] from the community's ways.[TN190159]

Yad Yehudah - כד

“For generations of generations”: Gehinnom ends, but they do not end. Do not object: since their judgment is to remain in Gehinnom for generations of generations, who removed them from it at judgment after death, so they must descend again at resurrection's judgment? It is possible that also—

Yad Yehudah - כה

—“these at the judgment of death” are rectified through reincarnation after being in Gehinnom for four generations. This is the Gemara's expression “generations”: the minimum of dori is two, and of dorot two, thus four. Since after four generations they ascend from Gehinnom for rectification, they return to Gehinnom for resurrection's judgment if they were not rectified at the judgment of death.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“To the fourth”: four generations.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“Through hidden wisdom”: although they are not ready for reincarnation as the fifth class is.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“We explain it”: not in its plain sense to the transgressors' detriment, meaning their punishment has no end and it is easier to attribute an end to Gehinnom than to their punishment. Our explanation favors them: Gehinnom, the wicked people's punishment, ends; the wicked are not consumed in their sin, but have hope for their latter end.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“According to the interpretation”: R. Ḥ. bar Pappa, first chapter of Sotah (folio 9): “I, the LORD, have not changed”—I have not struck a nation and repeated it. “You, sons of Jacob, have not ended,” for it is written, “I shall exhaust My arrows upon them”: My arrows are exhausted, but they are not. Tanḥuma, Niṣṣavim, concludes: thus the congregation of Israel said, “He bent His bow and set me as a target for the arrow.” To what is this likened? A warrior set up a beam and shot arrows at it. His arrows are exhausted; the beam remains. Likewise Israel: whenever afflictions come upon them, the afflictions end, while they remain in their place and do not end.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“The arrows and Gehinnom” will not cease fulfilling their commission throughout their existence; thus one cannot say punishment will end while they still exist.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Gehinnom itself”: its name indicates that all who descend into it ascend. Although Ha-Zahav says “except one who has intercourse with a married woman,” etc., nevertheless even they do not end; they will be rectified in the future. It is called thus from “the valley of hinnam”: people descend into it for matters of ḥinnam, as in Eruvin, meaning sexual prohibitions. Secondly, it is so called because after the souls are whitened their overseers say, “Hinnam—here they are.” Both occur in the word Gehinnom. Learn from this that even those descending into it for matters of ḥinnam will be rectified and called “Hinnam—here they are.”

Yad Yehudah - לב

“As explained in the Zohar,” Vayyakhel, page 379, in these words: “Why is it called Ben Hinnom? There is one place in Gehinnom; there souls are refined, a refining to whiten them before they enter the Garden of Eden. Certainly those souls are worthy when they are brought there. Two angels are stationed in the Garden of Eden, standing at the gate, and give toward [?] those overseers in that place of Gehinnom, to receive that soul. Before it has been whitened in fire, those overseers descend to them and say, ‘Hinnam—here they are.’ At times when it has been whitened, those overseers go out with it from that place and prepare it for the Garden of Eden's entrance, where those ascend, saying to us, ‘Hinnam—here are the souls that have been whitened.’ Then they bring that soul into the Garden of Eden,” etc.[TN190160]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“At resurrection”: one of the three judgments mentioned at the book's beginning. “They will renew their strength”: see the Gemara, Heleq, folio 92. When the Holy One, blessed be He, renews His world, what do the righteous do? He makes them wings like eagles, as written, “Those who hope in the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount wings like eagles.” “These are the LORD's judgments”: all agree that the teaching of three classes concerns the future world of resurrection. “Their term is not fixed”: at twelve months; rather they are judged for a time. “Somewhat difficult”: it is improper to be severe toward the intermediate, since the scales are balanced and liabilities do not outweigh merits in the weighing of the blessed LORD, called “the LORD, God of knowledge.” “Those like them at the judgment of death”: he means to compare resurrection's judgment to death's judgment, as in the Gemara, first chapter of Rosh Ha-Shanah. “People like these”: those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors, after twelve months, etc. “As in Malachi's prophecy”: “You shall tread upon the wicked, for they shall be dust beneath your feet.” “Await testing”: prepared for rectification through reincarnation. “Which Elihu,” Job's companion, “revealed to Job”: “God does all these things twice, three times, with a man.” A person is reincarnated three or four times, and afterward, “For four, I shall not turn him back.” “Generations of generations, at least”: the minimum of dori is two, and dorot also two, thus four; this is “to the fourth.” See above, part II, chapter 15.

“These too may be tested”: they too may be rectified through the reincarnation of their souls. “From the resident,” etc., we explained above at the end of part II, chapter 29, ʿṬ [?].[TN190161] “The arrows and Gehinnom": ḥiṣṣai, 'My arrows,' has Gehinnom's numerical value. They are arrows that are exhausted, so all will be rectified in the comprehensive rectification. "Take them and go"—his intention, etc.: its place is in "the blessing of Vayyakhel," page 359; see it at length. "They gesture it toward the Garden of Eden's entrance, where tables are stationed, and say to them, 'Hinnam,'" etc. [TN190162] "An everlasting thing": enduring forever, only in the quality of goodness; afflictions and Gehinnom, by contrast, end.

"The LORD's day," etc.: having explained thus far the LORD's true judgments in two worlds, this world and the world to come, the master saw fit to discharge the obligation to explain the third judgment, the world of resurrection, as promised at the treatise's beginning. He said that the LORD's great and awesome day, mentioned at the end of Malachi's prophecy—"Behold, I send you Elijah the prophet before the LORD's great and awesome day comes"—is judgment day at the resurrection of the dead. "They will renew their strength," etc.: in Heleq, the school of Elijah taught that the righteous whom the Holy One, blessed be He, will revive do not return to their dust, as written, "He who remains in Zion and is left in Jerusalem shall be called holy," etc. Just as the Holy One endures forever, they too endure forever. If you ask what the righteous do during those thousand years when the Holy One, blessed be He, will renew His worlds, as written, "The LORD alone shall be exalted on that day," He makes them wings like eagles, and they float over the water, as written, "Therefore we shall not fear when the earth changes." Perhaps you will say they suffer: Scripture says, "Those who hope in the LORD shall renew their strength; they shall mount wings like eagles." Tosafot, first chapter of Rosh Ha-Shanah, says: "Three classes on judgment day, when the dead revive, as the verse proves. Although they were already judged after death for the Garden of Eden or Gehinnom on account of the soul, there will still be 'a judgment, he said' [?], whether one merits the life of the world to come, which endures forever. Some already received their judgment in Gehinnom, and from 'all' [?] may merit it." End of quotation.[TN190163]

"All the great sages," including Tosafot, agreed that the teaching of three classes concerns judgment in the world of resurrection, unlike the interpreters who think it concerns judgment in the world of souls.

"First chapter of Rosh Ha-Shanah" (folio 15b), in these words: "It was taught: the school of Shammai says there are three classes on judgment day: one of the completely righteous, one of the intermediate, and one of the completely wicked. The completely righteous are immediately inscribed and sealed for Gehinnom, as written, 'Many of those sleeping in the earth's dust shall awaken, these to everlasting life and those to reproach, to everlasting abhorrence.'[TN190164] The intermediate descend to Gehinnom, cry out and ascend, as written, 'I shall bring the third through fire and refine them as silver is refined.' transgressors, for a time. They explain the teaching distinguishing intermediate from wicked, saying "the completely wicked," etc., as referring to those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors. It seems that on their view, "The judgment of the wicked in Gehinnom is twelve months" also concerns those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors, at judgment after death. After twelve months their judgment in Gehinnom ends and they have some rest. For this it brings proof from "It shall be a measure [?], new moon in its new moon: all flesh shall come to bow down."[TN190167] At resurrection's judgment, however, we say that after twelve months their bodies are consumed and their souls burned; how could it bring a proof that contradicts this?

"Meaning as much as cleansing requires": not a brief hour, as with intermediate people who cry out and immediately ascend. They are not equal in this: the latter are intermediate after all, and severity toward them is difficult. Those whose sins are the majority need cleansing according to their many sins. Nevertheless, they resemble the intermediate in that their judgment in no case reaches twelve months.

"Nevertheless, their faces," etc.: Rabbi Isaac bar Avin's statement that their faces resemble a pot's bottom was said of this class.

"From Gehinnom's fire": these wicked people are judged in Gehinnom for the duration appropriate to their many sins.

"It is somewhat difficult to be so severe" toward the intermediate that their faces resemble a pot's bottom. Granted they are bodily transgressors; nevertheless, even with this gravity they remain intermediate. A person's sins and merits are weighed by their magnitude in the God of knowledge's understanding, not their number, as above, part I, chapter 8. Although they descend to Gehinnom because bodily sin is grave, and are not treated by "abundant in mercy" like other intermediate people, ultimately they are intermediate. Reason does not allow their remaining in Gehinnom as long as wicked people whose sins are the majority. Accordingly, it seems we must say that the Gemara's discussion, which appears to apply Rabbi Isaac bar Avin's "Their faces resemble," etc., to the intermediate, means wicked people resembling the intermediate.

“Fifth: those whose sins are the majority,” etc.: as taught, Israel's bodily transgressors descend to Gehinnom and are judged there for twelve months, etc. The Gemara establishes that their having no remedy applies where sins are the majority.

“All agree”: even those who hold that wicked people without bodily sin are not judged for twelve months, as mentioned, agree here.

“As in Malachi's prophecy”: “You shall tread upon the wicked, for they shall be ash beneath your feet,” as in the Gemara.

“Those like them,” etc.: these wicked people are also judged in Gehinnom for twelve months at judgment after death. Afterward Gehinnom casts them out; they do not ascend to rest but are handed to Dumah (Gehinnom's prince). Their bodies are not consumed nor their souls burned; otherwise they could not be judged again on resurrection day.

“Those who withdraw from the community's ways”: this includes sectarians, informers, heretics, those who denied Torah and those who denied resurrection. The Gemara counts them, and the expression includes other withdrawers from the community's ways.

“For generations of generations”: Gehinnom ends, but they do not end. Do not object: since their judgment is to remain in Gehinnom for generations of generations, who removed them from it at judgment after death, so they must descend again at resurrection's judgment? It is possible that “these too at the judgment of death” are rectified through reincarnation after being in Gehinnom for four generations. This is the Gemara's expression dori dorot: the minimum of dori is two, and dorot two, thus four. Since after four generations they ascend from Gehinnom for rectification, they return to Gehinnom for resurrection's judgment if they were not rectified at death's judgment.

“We explain it”: not in its plain sense to the

transgressors' detriment, meaning their punishment has no end and it is easier to attribute an end to Gehinnom than to their punishment. Our explanation favors them: Gehinnom, the wicked people's punishment, ends, while the wicked are not consumed in their sin, but have hope for their latter end.

“According to the interpretation”: R. Ḥ. bar Pappa, first chapter of Sotah (folio 9): “I, the LORD, have not changed”—I have not struck a nation and repeated it. “You, sons of Jacob, have not ended,” for it is written, “I shall exhaust My arrows upon them”: My arrows are exhausted, but they are not. Tanḥuma, Niṣṣavim, concludes: thus the congregation of Israel said, “He bent His bow and set me as a target for the arrow.” To what is this likened? A warrior set up a beam and shot arrows at it. His arrows are exhausted; the beam remains. Likewise Israel: whenever afflictions come upon them, the afflictions end, while they remain in their place and do not end.

“Gehinnom itself”: its name indicates that all who descend into it ascend. Although M. Ha-Zahav says “except one who has intercourse with a married woman,” etc., even they do not end, but will be rectified in the future. It is so named from “the valley of hinnam”: people descend into it for matters of ḥinnam, as in Eruvin, meaning sexual prohibitions. Secondly, it is so called because after the souls are whitened their overseers say “Hinnam—here they are.” Both occur in the word Gehinnom. Learn from this that even those descending into it for matters of ḥinnam will be rectified, and it is said of them, “Hinnam—here they are.”

“As explained in the Zohar,” Vayyakhel, page 211b, in these words: “Why is it called Ben Hinnom? There is one place in Gehinnom where souls are refined in a refining to whiten them before they enter the Garden of Eden. If those souls are worthy when brought to that place, two angels are stationed in the Garden of Eden and stand at the gate. They call toward those overseers in that place of Gehinnom to receive that soul. Before it has been whitened in fire, those overseers call to them and say, ‘Hinnam—here they are.’ At times when it has

"From the statement," etc.: here he explains in the reverse direction from above, part I, chapter 9: although He is gracious, etc., He is nevertheless righteous in all His ways and all His matters. Here he explains: although He is righteous and executes judgment, it will nevertheless end in the last generation, so they will be rectified. "Repeated in Isaiah's prophecy": "From new moon," etc.; "They shall go out and see the corpses of the men who transgressed against Me, for their worm will not die and their fire will not be quenched, and they shall be an abhorrence to all flesh"; "From new moon," etc. It is repeated for this reason: although there will be abhorrence for rebels and transgressors, afterward they will still be rectified. This is "From new moon," etc.; hence these verses adjoin. YTQQ means Isaiah, the Twelve, Ecclesiastes and

From the statement "The LORD is righteous in all His ways and gracious in all His deeds," we learn that at resurrection's judgment too, the judgment of these wicked people ends in the last generation. We find a hint in the second occurrence of "From new moon," repeated at the end of Isaiah's prophecies. The interpreters said this was to conclude with consolation. We say both apply: rebels and transgressors too, after becoming an abhorrence to all flesh—however this is understood—still have a vision for their appointed time, when they will come to bow down to the King, the LORD of hosts. The same applies to the other similar verses. All are repeated at the ends of four books, designated YTQQ, and can be expounded in their own right.

At the end of the Twelve it says He will send Elijah the prophet. Its adjacency to "Remember Moses's Torah" teaches that he will come to teach Israel the Torah's closed matters and resolve doubts concerning its rulings, for he is Moses our master's foremost disciple, peace be upon him. The following verse explicitly says he will establish peace in the world.

Lamentations—that is Eikhah—in all of which the final verse is repeated.

At the end of the Twelve: "Remember the Torah of Moses My servant," etc.; "Behold, I send," etc.; "He will turn fathers' hearts toward sons and sons' hearts toward their fathers, lest I come and strike the earth with utter destruction." Then they repeat "Behold, I send you." It means HNʾ, initials "KNS, twenty-two, Abihu [?], Aaron's sons."[TN190168] "He will come to teach": Elijah will come to teach Israel, etc.; therefore it adjoins "Remember Moses's Torah," etc. "For he is his foremost disciple": see Zohar, Ki Teṣe, Raʿaya Mehemna, page 46: "Who will be your disciple?" etc.; everything will be left until Elijah comes. "Moses undertook to explain": hoʾil has the letters of Elijah.

"In the following verse": "Behold, I send you," adjoins a second time "He will turn fathers' hearts," etc., to establish peace in the world. "Which is principal": resolving doubts or making peace. "So too in the house of Israel": because of peace in the house he says "house of Israel." At the end of Lamentations: "Why do You forget us forever?" etc.; "Bring us back, LORD, to You," etc.; "Even if You have utterly rejected us," etc.; "Bring us back, LORD," etc. "According to the days You afflicted us, which we explained": in chapter 1 of the treatise MH, part I. At Ecclesiastes' end: "The end of the matter, all has been heard," etc.; "For every deed," etc.; "The end of the matter, all has been heard," etc. This too has that intention: do not say nothing follows Gehinnom's judgment and they will have no hope. Therefore "The end of the matter," etc., adjoins, "for this is every man": he will return and be rectified, as in the chapters ahead.

"In its sense, that is," etc.: after explaining in the preceding chapter that those who spread their terror in the land of the

I still do not know which is his principal mission; even if peace is principal, we do not know its power. Therefore it says, "Lest I come and strike": this is why I send him beforehand. We learn that peace in the household saves from calamity; so too in the house of Israel, all of whom are brothers and friends.

The end of Lamentations follows this chapter's intention: "Even if You have utterly rejected us and been exceedingly angry with us"—even if anger reaches the utmost rebellion—"bring us back, and we shall return." Had Scripture not repeated it, I would have said this applied during life, as implied by the earlier "Why do You forget us forever?" It therefore repeats it, teaching that even after Gehinnom's judgment Israel's transgressors have hope: they will return and be renewed as though one had never sinned. This is "Renew our days as of old," in the manner of "Gladden us according to the days You afflicted us," which we explained. Ecclesiastes concluded his book with "The end of the matter, all has been heard," for "God will bring every deed into judgment." Perhaps you will say that after judgment is concluded nothing remains. "The end of the matter: fear God"—vindicate His judgment and bless Him always, "for this is the whole of man." This is what we will explain in the following chapters, with heaven's help.

living and the like have rectification at death's judgment after four generations, the master explains here that so too at resurrection's judgment they have a remedy after the fourth generation. "The LORD is righteous in all His ways," etc., indicates this. Its meaning, "as ShW [?], he grasps the word/quality of righteousness and graciousness" [?], is that when He treats creatures graciously He executes righteous judgment, as above, part II, chapter 9. Conversely, when He executes righteous judgment upon them, He, blessed be He, is gracious. We learn that even at resurrection the Holy One, blessed be He, will show mercy toward the wicked people's judgment in the last generation after four generations: their punishment will stop and end, and they will be rectified.[TN190169] of the men who transgressed against Me, for their worm will not die and their fire will not be quenched, and they shall be an abhorrence to all flesh. From new moon to new moon," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Both apply": to conclude with consolation, and also to say that the transgressors too, after becoming an abhorrence, will come to bow before Me, and their pains will end.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The same applies” to the other verses repeated at the books' ends: repeated not only to conclude with something good, but also for exposition.

“The designation YTQQ”: Isaiah, the Twelve, Ecclesiastes, Lamentations.

Yad Yehudah - ו

At the end of the Twelve it is written: “Behold, I send you Elijah the prophet before the LORD's great and awesome day comes. He will turn fathers' hearts toward sons and sons' hearts toward their fathers, lest I come and strike the earth with utter destruction. Behold, I send you,” etc. The repetition's reason follows what we learned at the end of Eduyot about Elijah's coming: R. Sh. holds that it is to reconcile disagreement, meaning the sages' disagreements in Torah matters; the sages say it is to make peace in the world, as written, “He will turn fathers' hearts,” etc. The verse itself explicitly follows the sages. Its repetition indicates the intention of R. Sh.'s view, because it is—

Yad Yehudah - ז

—adjacent to the preceding verse: “Remember the Torah of Moses My servant, which I commanded him at Horeb for all Israel, statutes and laws. Behold, I send,” etc. From this adjacency we learn of Elijah's day [?], to teach, explain and reveal the Torah's hidden things, open its closed matters and resolve its doubts. “For in him these, it is said” [?]: he is Moses our master's foremost disciple, peace be upon him.[TN190170] As in Raʿaya Mehemna, Ṣav, page 26: “All arose and said: Certainly your portion is fortunate, Faithful Shepherd, to be joined to you! Moses received Torah from Sinai, and from then onward all are your disciples, from Joshua to the end of all generations. BGH [?], ‘and transmitted it to Joshua, and Joshua to the elders, and the elders to the prophets,’ to the end. All are your disciples. Who will there be? For we see that it is said of everything: ‘This is left until Elijah comes,’ who will tell them. Thus this Elijah is your disciple's disciple, a colleague,” etc., as far as “Elijah shall be my mouth; he shall come to resolve all these doubts and untie them ‘as in Zeira's house’ [?].”[TN190171] See Raavad's commentary, to which I also directed my eyes: “called to this” [?]. In Raʿaya Mehemna they derive it from adjacency to “Remember Moses's Torah.”[TN190172]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“In the following verse” itself, “He will turn fathers' hearts toward sons,” it is explicit, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Therefore” it concludes, “Lest I come and strike the earth with utter destruction,” and repeats “Behold, I send you,” etc. This shows that his principal mission is to make peace in the world, and peace's power is great, saving the house of Israel from calamity. The verses' sense is: “Remember Moses's Torah,” etc., and for its sake “Behold, I send you Elijah the prophet,” to resolve its doubts. He will also do this: “turn fathers' hearts toward sons,” so there will be peace in the world. This will be his principal mission, for “lest I come and strike the earth with utter destruction,” I send a cure before the blow; “Behold, I send you,” etc., to make peace in the world and save it from calamity. There is no need for Raavad's statement that “Lest I come” refers back to “Remember Moses's Torah.”

Yad Yehudah - י

At Lamentations' end: “Bring us back, LORD, to You and we shall return; renew our days as of old. Even if You have utterly rejected us and been exceedingly angry with us. Bring us back, LORD, to You,” etc. The repetition's reason follows this chapter's intention: even after Gehinnom's severest judgment there is hope for the transgressors' latter end. “Even if You have utterly rejected us” with exceedingly great wrath, the wrath and punishment of abhorrence suited to the utmost rebellion, nevertheless, “Bring us back,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יא

Had Scripture not repeated “Bring us back,” we would not learn from it an intention concerning Israel's transgressors' hope after their punishment in Gehinnom. We would instead say it meant hope for redemption in this world, learned from the context of “Why do You forget us forever?” which speaks of the exile's length. It therefore repeats “Bring us back,” indicating that the first occurrence joins the preceding “Why do You forget us forever?” and speaks of this world's redemption, while the second teaches that even, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יב

This is “as of old”: before we sinned.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“We explained”: in part I, chapter 8; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יד

Ecclesiastes, concluding his book, said: “The end of the matter, all has been heard: fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole of man. For God will bring every deed into judgment, concerning every hidden thing, whether good or evil.” Then it repeats “The end of the matter, all has been heard,” etc. As we said, this tells you that even after the last judgment, “Fear God.” Thus “God will bring every deed into judgment, whether good or evil,” yet do not say, “Only in vain did I purify myself and rectify my deeds.” Even “the end of the matter,” after the last judgment, when the commandments no longer apply, is “Fear God”: vindicate His judgment and bless Him, “for this is the whole of man,” who will be rectified in the future.

“Contempt for commandments”: for example, a head that does not put on tefillin, despising this commandment, saying, “What have the rabbis benefited us?”[TN190173] “Someone commanded in them”: Israel is commanded in the commandments. “Selling oneself to transgression”: sexual prohibitions, uncommon except among gentiles whose ancestors did not stand at Mount Sinai. “In actuality”: their ancestors at the giving of Torah did not stand at Mount Sinai—these are the gentiles; “KY’ [?], Israel alone,” in the sense of “An inheritance of Jacob's congregation,” etc.[TN190174] “From elsewhere”: explained above, part II, chapter 28. Naḥalah is called inheritance from fathers to sons; yerushah comes

The sages gave identifying marks for the “bodily transgressors” they mentioned: contempt for commandments, which applies only to someone commanded in them; or selling oneself to transgression, which is uncommon except among those whose ancestors' feet did not stand at Mount Sinai. This may be in actuality, for of them it is written, “An inheritance of Jacob's congregation”: an actual inheritance, though not from fathers to sons but from elsewhere, namely master to disciple, as we already explained. Or it may be in potentiality, for we read it as “betrothed,” the mystery of the souls yet to be created. Thus Rabbi Nathan, of blessed memory, expounded: “Therefore Sheol has enlarged its soul”—for neglect of positive commandments—“and opened its mouth”—for prohibitions—“without statute.” Resh Laqish in Heleq expounded: for one who left out even one statute. Rabbi Yoḥanan told him: this is not pleasing to their Master; rather, for one who kept not even one statute. Both are Israel's bodily from elsewhere, as a husband inheriting his wife. See above. “Or in potentiality”: morashah, “as one plain sense, betrothed,” etc.; for to them too the Torah was betrothed, whose souls did not stand at Mount Sinai. This is unlike Israel: “Those who are here and those who are not here”—all stood there potentially in their fathers at Mount Sinai.[TN190175] “For prohibitions”: neglecting positive commandments does not give the destroyer as much power as prohibitions, “so that he does not open his mouth and say ‘Give, give’” [?].[TN190176] “Even one statute as commanded”: this too concerns Israel's transgressors, who kept commandments, but not as commanded, only as a learned human commandment. “If you reject My statutes”: against this stands “I have not rejected them”; against “If My laws,” etc., “I have not abhorred them”; against “not doing all My commandments,” “to destroy them”; against “breaking My covenant,” “to break My covenant with you.” Thus against not doing all the commandments, according to Rabbi Yoḥanan that he kept not even one statute, stands “to destroy them.”

“The order of confession”: whether to say “QṬʾTY [?], I acted iniquitously, I transgressed,” or the reverse.[TN190177] “This statement is difficult”: Daniel's four expressions, “We sinned, acted iniquitously, acted wickedly, rebelled.” Why so much? He should have said only “acted wickedly,” as David, and not “rebelled.” The answer is that there are two rebellions. One is a person to whom commandments are contemptible, as one eating carrion without appetite. His judgment is more severe than that of one eating from appetite, who is somewhat constrained, acting to fill his soul when hungry. It is lighter than that of one eating to provoke, knowing his Master and intending to rebel against Him. Therefore Daniel said “acted wickedly and rebelled” for these two rebels: in those days they were so brazen in both rebellions. In David's days transgressors: one left out a statute because its commandment was contemptible to him, as we shall mention; the other kept not even one statute as commanded, only as a learned human commandment.

The passage supports Rabbi Yoḥanan. It says, “If you reject My statutes”—“I have not rejected them”; “if your soul abhors My laws”—“I have not abhorred them”; “so as not to do all My commandments”—“to destroy them”; “to break My covenant”—“to break My covenant with them.” Why all this? “For I am the LORD their God.” Here there is room to examine what was taught in Amar Lahem Ha-Memunnah: “Transgressions are rebellions,” etc. Rabbi Meir and the sages differ concerning the order of confession. Both recognize three divisions of transgression, differing only in their order: whether sin precedes iniquity and transgression or follows them. A teacher supports the sages from Daniel's confession: “We have sinned, acted iniquitously, acted wickedly and rebelled.” This statement is difficult: these are four. If David's “we have acted wickedly,” also brought as support for the sages, means rebellion, why did Daniel need all this? Here one certainly cannot say “he states it and then explains it,” for there is no specification of the sin: both are general expressions.

The conclusion is that there are two kinds of rebellion, in earthly kingship and in heavenly kingship. One is as we find with Saul: “Worthless men said, ‘How will this one save us?’ and despised him.” Likewise toward heaven is one to whom the commandments are they were not so brazen and confessed one lighter rebellion, without appetite, despising commandments. “He greatly increased guilt”: it is written of Manasseh's son in II Chronicles 33; his grandson too sought to provoke more than he. Moses's “transgression,” without “acted wickedly and rebelled,” includes both: rebellion, provoking in its plain sense, and contempt for commandments, also called transgression, as “Israel's bodily transgressors,” explained as a head that does not put on tefillin, despising the commandment. “All this”: selling oneself to transgression is uncommon in Israel, for they are few in sexual transgressions; rebellion, however, has no application at all to Israel. [TN190178]

Yad Yehudah - א

“The sages gave identifying marks”: Rav's “Israel's bodily transgressors: a head that does not put on tefillin; the nations' bodily transgressors: through transgression” uses these as a sign and example, and the same applies to similar cases. Tefillin is an example of—

Yad Yehudah - ב

—“contempt for commandments,” for their concern was contempt, as Tosafot says there: “A head that does not put on tefillin: Rabbenu Tam explains that here the commandment is contemptible in his eyes, the straps on his head being repulsive to him," etc. This applies only to an Israelite commanded in them, not to a gentile. Why should the commandments matter to him when he is not commanded in them? The "transgression" they mention means—

Yad Yehudah - ג

—he sold himself to it and regards the prohibition of sexual relations lightly, or says the Merciful One did not command concerning it. This is uncommon in an Israelite, who has shame because his ancestors stood at Mount Sinai, as at this chapter's end. See there and in the following chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"In actuality": his ancestors, the nations present at the giving of Torah, did not stand at Mount Sinai. Thus of Torah: "An inheritance of Jacob's congregation." In Sanhedrin, chapter 7, they differ: one says morashah, inheritance; one meʾorasah, betrothed. Above, part III, chapter 28, we explained that yerushah applies only to inheritance coming from elsewhere—

Yad Yehudah - ה

—not inheritance from fathers to sons, which is called naḥalah, not contemptible, who says: "What does the Merciful One care whether one slaughters from the neck or from the nape?" He does not accept "God's saying is refined." Rather, he eats carrion even when not driven by appetite, as Ran mentioned at the beginning of Hullin. One may say he learned his statement from here. His judgment is more severe than that of one eating from appetite, who is also deliberate but eats from hunger, to fill his soul when hungry. This one, even when not hungry, "despises the word and will be ruined by it": he leaves permitted food and eats forbidden food. Yet he is less severe than one eating to provoke, intending to arouse anger, like the one of whom it is written, "He greatly increased guilt." Moreover, his grandson sought to provoke more than he. Daniel therefore elaborated his confession, knowing the hour's need. Earlier generations did not display all this brazenness toward heaven, and it sufficed to confess the lighter kind of rebellion, as David said, "We have sinned with our fathers, acted iniquitously and acted wickedly."

Moses's "transgression" includes both: rebellion in its plain sense, as "Moab's king rebelled against me," and contempt, as taught, "Israel's bodily transgressors." The sages said this is a head that does not put on tefillin. Rabbenu Tam explained that they say, "What use are these straps?" Likewise sexual transgressors who consider their prohibition light, or say the Merciful One did not command concerning them. Certainly all this is uncommon in Israel, as we said.

yerushah. So too with Torah, according to the view that morashah is literal: had it also meant inheritance from fathers to sons, his brothers, Edom and the Ishmaelites, might have a share in Torah, descending from Abraham and Isaac, who studied Torah. Rather, inheritance here is only master to disciple: the blessed LORD gives Torah to Israel, who stood at Mount Sinai, not the nations, who did not. The sense is "Moses commanded Torah to us," not the nations; even by inheritance it belonged only to Jacob's congregation, without another seed like him.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Or in potentiality": the nations' souls did not stand at Mount Sinai like Israel's souls, including future generations, which were present at Mount Sinai, as in the midrashim and Zohar, Lekh Lekha, folio 247, from "Those who are here," etc., "and those who are not," etc. This is the reason for the view meʾorasah: the Holy One, blessed be He, betrothed all Jacob's congregations to the end of all generations at the giving of Torah, since all their souls were there.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Therefore she enlarged," etc. (Isaiah, etc.).

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Both”: one who left out one statute and one who kept not even one statute are Israel's bodily transgressors. The former left it out because the commandment was contemptible to him; Resh Laqish addresses this. Without intended contempt for a commandment one certainly could not say it, since he is completely righteous. Resh Laqish teaches that where there is contempt, although in all other matters he is completely righteous, one sin of bodily transgression entails descending to Gehinnom, as above, chapter 4, concerning the intermediate. Rabbi Yoḥanan, saying “It is not pleasing to their Master,” etc., holds this can be said only of the intermediate, not of a completely righteous person, even with one bodily transgression. He therefore said: only one who kept not even one statute. Rabbi Yoḥanan does not mean to exempt from Gehinnom someone who kept only one statute, for he is completely wicked, his sins overwhelmingly the majority. Rather, he kept not even one statute as commanded, with all proper intention and for His blessed name, but by habit, as in Isaiah: “Their fear of Me was a learned human commandment.” Even if he kept the whole Torah in this way, he is among bodily transgressors, judged in Gehinnom. If he kept one statute, “a gift” [?], for His blessed name, that certainly shields him from Gehinnom, for ultimately his merits are the majority.[TN190179]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“The passage supports Rabbi Yoḥanan”: it says, “If you reject My statutes, and if your soul abhors My laws, so as not to do all My commandments, breaking My covenant.” At the passage's end: “Yet even then, when they are in their enemies' land, I have not rejected or abhorred them to destroy them, to break My covenant with them, for I am the LORD their God.” This ending corresponds to “If you reject My statutes.” Even though you reject My statutes, and I ought to reject you measure for measure, nevertheless “I have not rejected them.” Though your soul abhors My laws, “I have not abhorred them.” Although it would be proper to destroy them for not doing all My commandments, “I have not abhorred them to destroy them,” nor to break My covenant with them in exchange for their breaking Mine. “For I am the LORD their God,” and have mercy on them nevertheless. This follows Yoḥanan: only one who kept not even one statute is judged in Gehinnom. It therefore rightly says destruction would be proper for “not doing all My commandments.” According to Resh Laqish, why “all My commandments”? Leaving out even one would suffice to destroy him.

Yad Yehudah - י

“Here,” in saying that one to whom commandments are contemptible is among bodily transgressors, we have room to examine and resolve the apparent difficulty in what was taught, etc., as concluded shortly.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Transgressions,” etc.: there (folio 36), the rabbis taught: “How does one confess? He says, ‘I acted iniquitously, transgressed, sinned.’ Of the dispatched goat too it says, ‘He shall confess upon it all the Israelites' iniquities and all their transgressions, all their sins.’ Of Moses too: ‘Bearing iniquity, transgression and sin.’ These are Rabbi Meir's words. The sages say: iniquities are deliberate sins, as ‘That soul shall surely be cut off; its iniquity is in it.’ Transgressions are rebellions, as ‘Moab's king rebelled against me.’ ‘All their sins’ are inadvertent sins, as ‘If one sins inadvertently.’ After confessing deliberate sins and rebellions, does he return to confess inadvertent sins? Rather, he confessed thus: ‘I sinned, acted iniquitously, transgressed.’ Of David too: ‘We sinned with our fathers, acted iniquitously, acted wickedly.’ Of Solomon too: ‘We sinned, acted wickedly, rebelled.’ Of Daniel too: ‘We sinned, acted iniquitously, acted wickedly, rebelled.’ As for Moses's ‘Bearing iniquity,’ etc., Moses said before the Holy One, blessed be He: ‘Master of the universe, when Israel sin and repent, treat their deliberate sins as inadvertent ones.’”

Yad Yehudah - יב

“There are three divisions of transgression”: inadvertence, deliberateness and rebellion.

Yad Yehudah - יג

But Rabbi Meir and the Rabbis did not agree on their order.[TN190180]

Yad Yehudah - יד

“A teacher”: the teacher of this teaching.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“The difficulty”: for the sages there, how can they bring proof from Daniel? Daniel necessarily did not address their number or order, for he specifies four, and all agree there are no more than three. Furthermore, if David's “we acted wickedly,” from which the Gemara supports the sages, means rebellions, Daniel himself presents a difficulty: why did he need to say “we acted wickedly”?

Yad Yehudah - טז

One could say he stated “we acted wickedly” generally and then specified it by “we rebelled,” as we say in Yoma's final chapter that one must specify the sin: “Please, this people sinned a great sin and made themselves gods of gold”—a general statement followed by a particular. Likewise our practice is to say generally “But we have sinned,” the confession's essence, then specify the sins. Here, however, it is different: there is no particular; both “acted wickedly” and “rebelled” are general. But—

Yad Yehudah - יז

—“the conclusion,” following our approach that contempt for commandments is like bodily transgression, teaches two rebellions toward heaven. One eats carrion even without appetite because commandments are contemptible to him, without intending to provoke. The other eats carrion to provoke. These two kinds are also found in earthly kingship. This settles, as it were, these difficulties, as explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“He does not accept” what the sages said in Tanḥuma, Shemini: “God's saying is refined”—to refine His creatures. What does the Holy One, blessed be He, care if Israel eats without ritual slaughter? It is to refine Israel. So they expounded in Midrash Rabbah there. This rebel does not hold thus; see Yefeh Toʾar there.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“As Ran wrote” at the beginning of Hullin, concerning an Israelite apostate who eats carrion from appetite: an Israelite checks a knife and gives it to him. He distinguishes appetite, absence of appetite, and provocation.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“But he is hungry”: when permitted food is unavailable, he eats forbidden food.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“This one,” eating carrion without appetite, “despises the word”: commandments are contemptible in his eyes.

Yad Yehudah - כב

This is the second rebellion, intending to provoke, like Amon: “For he, Amon son of Manasseh, greatly increased guilt” (II Chronicles 33). The sages said in Heleq (folio 103) that he had intercourse with his mother. She said, “Is there pleasure in the place from which you came?” He said, “Am I doing it for anything but provocation?”

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Moreover,” his grandson Jehoiakim sought to provoke more than he, as also there: when Jehoiakim came he said, “The earlier ones did not know how to anger Him. Do we need anything but His light? We have Parvaim gold that we use,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“Therefore Daniel elaborated his confession” because of his time's and generation's need: these kings were close to his days. He said “acted wickedly and rebelled” for their two kinds of rebellion. Earlier generations, in David's and Solomon's days, were not so brazen in provoking in the world; confession of their lighter rebellion sufficed, namely without appetite. David therefore said only one, “acted wickedly.” Solomon similarly said only “rebelled”: where they do not occur together, each signifies only the lighter rebellion.

Yad Yehudah - כה

Moses's “transgression” in “Bearing iniquity, transgression and sin,” recounting the blessed Omnipresent's praise, certainly includes both rebellions, for it is impossible, heaven forbid, that he should diminish His blessed praise. He therefore did not need to specify wickedness and rebellion, as Daniel, who spoke them in confession. Transgression expresses rebellion to provoke, as “Moab's king rebelled against me,” and also the rebellion—

Yad Yehudah - כו

—of contempt for commandments, as in the sages' language, “Israel's bodily transgressors,” “the nations' sexual transgressors”: both concern contempt, as above and as explained ahead.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Lighter than rebellion, as we said”: in the preceding chapter. “Know this, for the sages said”: this implies Israel too stumbles in sexual transgressions, but they are few. Here, concerning the three classes, they exclude them entirely from Israel and count the nations' sexual transgressors. Rather, precisely acting without appetite and to provoke is called bodily transgression. Among Israel there are few in sexual transgressions who consider their prohibition light; among the nations, sexual transgression is to provoke. “They transgress with their bodies”: despising commandments without appetite, but not to provoke heaven. “To lighten the intermediate people's case”: they are bodily transgressors in a portion of their sins, without appetite and not to provoke. It would differ if they acted to provoke. Of them it is said, “Do not have compassion,” etc.

“What does it mean?”: the fathers have already died; how can he say he can sin with the fathers? Moreover, “caused iniquity” and “caused wickedness” are transitive:

Rema of Fano

In Sanhedrin, Zeh Borer, Abaye and Rava differ concerning “Do not appoint a wicked person as a witness.” Rava agrees with Abaye that a wicked person guilty of dishonest gain is disqualified from testimony. One who eats carrion from appetite resembles him: just as he eats when hungry, so too when hungry he consumes four zuz and testifies falsely. But regarding a wicked person who acts to provoke, Abaye says he is disqualified and Rava says he is qualified. The law follows Abaye: this is the last case in the mnemonic Y'L QGM. Nevertheless, how could we suppose Rava would qualify for every Torah testimony the grave provocateur intending to rebel against the Omnipresent? Even such a wicked person in one minor matter is wicked and alienated from the whole Torah. Rather, he certainly calls someone “wicked to provoke” merely because he acts without appetite: more severe than deliberate sin, lighter than rebellion, as we said.

We learn for our discussion that all who act from appetite are not called bodily transgressors. Know this: the sages say “a minority in sexual transgressions,” whereas here they exclude them entirely from Israel. When “bodily transgressors” is taught, it is to lighten their case: they transgress with their bodies, but not against heaven. Thus where merits are we made others act iniquitously and wickedly. When he holds to his fathers' deeds in transgression, he is called a sinner with his fathers; others also learn from him and do the same. This is “we caused others iniquity,” the plain explanation. “But the truth is clear”: through soul-impregnation the father's soul reincarnates in the son and was with him at the sin. This is “We sinned with our fathers.” “Retrospectively, what we sinned”: the children's souls' sparks were hidden in their fathers when the fathers sinned. This is “We sinned when we were with our fathers.” Those sparks could then have overcome the evil inclination misleading them and saved their fathers from sinning: the father is one in his lifetime, while his sons, the sparks, are many. They could have overcome it but did not. Therefore sons are guarantors for fathers and pledged on their fathers' behalf, as written, “From infants' and sucklings' mouths You founded strength,” as explained in the midrash. According to the author's two explanations, the midrash said: “Honor your father”—honor him in his life, honor him after his death.

Yad Yehudah - א

In Sanhedrin, Zeh Borer (folio 27), we say: “An apostate who eats carrion from appetite: all agree he is disqualified. To provoke: Abaye says disqualified, Rava says qualified. Abaye says disqualified because he is wicked, and the Merciful One said, ‘Do not appoint a wicked person as a witness.’ Rava says qualified: we require a wicked person guilty of dishonest gain.” Rava equates eating carrion from appetite with dishonest gain for Rif's reason: if when hungry he eats carrion, so too when hungry he consumes four zuz and testifies falsely. There is no need for Rashi's explanation that one eating carrion from appetite acts for money, since carrion is more readily available cheaply than permitted food.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“The law follows Abaye” against Rava in Y'L QGM, including an apostate who provokes. Although the law does not follow Rava—

Yad Yehudah - ג

—we must nevertheless explain Rava's statement. How could we suppose he would qualify one intending to rebel against the blessed Omnipresent? Although we conclude at Hullin's beginning that an

the majority we need not require that their minority of sins lack bodily transgressions. Even if such sins occur, we follow the majority. This is what we said to lighten the intermediate people's case, even if they are bodily transgressors. If they intended to provoke, they would be wholly withdrawn from the community's ways, and their judgment would not be examined, for “together they are lighter than breath.” Their sacrifices are unacceptable, no offering is accepted from their hands. Of them Scripture says, “Do not have compassion and do not conceal.” They can in no way be described as having a majority of merits. To revive them, it is therefore impossible “to rise in the scales”: none of their righteous deeds will be remembered, unless they repent fully of rebellion itself, with complete regret and no reservation. The LORD sees into the heart. Whoever knows R. Y. Niqtilya's explanation of these two kinds of bodily transgressors should not say he disagrees with us: both apply, and a wise heart knows the matter's resolution. [TN190181]

We must still learn from David's confession: what does “We sinned with our fathers” mean, and why are “we caused iniquity, we caused wickedness” transitive verbs? By the verse's plain sense one may explain: when we hold to our fathers' deeds in a transgression that bears fruit, others learn from our deeds. But the clear truth is this: had we sinned by ourselves, without our fathers literally within us through soul-impregnation, the sin would have been light. Yet we sinned with them, when apostate in one matter is not an apostate toward the whole Torah—except an apostate to idolatry, one who pours wine libations, and one who publicly desecrates Sabbaths—nevertheless an apostate who provokes in even one matter is an apostate toward the whole Torah, as Ran wrote there. This is also proved by Horayot, chapter 3 (folio 11).

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Rather, certainly,” Rava's qualification of an apostate who provokes does not concern someone intending rebellion, but one eating carrion without appetite, leaving permitted food and eating forbidden food because commandments are contemptible to him. Compared with eating carrion from appetite, he calls this “to provoke.”

Yad Yehudah - ה

“More severe than deliberate sin” from appetite.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“As we said” in the preceding chapter.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“We learn from this for our discussion” of Israel's bodily transgressors: any apostate acting from appetite, not because commandments are contemptible to him, is not included among bodily transgressors.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Know this”: the sages said, “Most in robbery, a minority in sexual transgressions.” Here in our discussion they said the nations' bodily transgressors act “through transgression,” as if Israel had no sexual transgressors. Certainly the minority in sexual transgressions acts from appetite and is not bodily transgressors.

Yad Yehudah - ט

When Israel's “bodily transgressors” is taught, it is not to make their case severe, saying they transgress actually to provoke, but to lighten it. Their leniency gives them this designation: they transgress with their bodies, without appetite, but do not intend to provoke heaven.

they were already righteous: this begins the damage. Then we caused them iniquity through deliberate sins and wickedness through transgression. It is a great sin and a great confession.

There is also a retrospective confession: we sinned with our fathers in their lifetimes, while our souls' sparks were hidden within them, in the sense of “Those who are not here.” Had those sparks overcome the misleader then, they would have saved the fathers from sinning. Therefore children are guarantors for fathers, since the father during his life is one among many, those sparks, and “according to their multitude, so they sinned.” Thus we caused their iniquity and wickedness from then, and their fault depends only on us. We must therefore rectify doubly, for ourselves and for them. This is undoubtedly the meaning of “A son gives his father merit.”

Yad Yehudah - י

This resolves the apparent difficulty: above it was clear that those with a majority of merits count as righteous even if their minority of sins contains bodily transgressions. If bodily transgressors are rebels who provoke, how can they stand in the congregation of the righteous? We would have had to stipulate that a majority of merits counts as righteous only if the minority of sins contains no bodily transgression. But on our explanation that bodily transgressors are not provoking rebels, it is clear: even if these bodily transgressions occur among their minority of sins, they are nevertheless righteous.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“What we said”: above, chapter 4.

Yad Yehudah - יב

If bodily transgressors were simply rebels who provoke, the law would not allow them to count as righteous or intermediate when they possess one bodily transgression. Those intending provocation withdraw entirely from the community's ways. Of them we say that Gehinnom closes upon them; their judgment is not examined to see whether they possess a majority or half of merits.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Of them Scripture said”: in sins and rebellions, “You shall not forgive or atone for him,” because he is a rebel who provokes.[TN190182]

Yad Yehudah - יד

When he wishes to return: nothing stands in the way of repentance.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“We must still consider” David's confession, “We sinned with our fathers, caused iniquity, caused wickedness” (Psalm 106). Why associate his sins with his fathers' sins, and why use transitive “caused iniquity, caused wickedness,” as though we intentionally made others act iniquitously and wickedly? He should have used the simple forms, “acted iniquitously, acted wickedly.”

Yad Yehudah - טז

“One may explain”: when we hold to our fathers' deeds, in a transgression others learn from us. The verse's sense is: we sinned in the same sin as our fathers; moreover, in the sin by which we caused others, learning from us, to act iniquitously and wickedly. It is a grave transgression. As the sages said in Qiddushin's first chapter: “A transgression bearing fruit has fruit.” Rashi explains, for example, desecration of the Name: an important person transgresses and others learn to do so from him.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Through soul-impregnation”: like Nadab's and Abihu's souls, which impregnated Phinehas, as known.

Yad Yehudah - יח

Our sin would have been light to atone for, since we alone sinned, without involving others.

Yad Yehudah - יט

But we sinned with our fathers while their souls were within us through soul-impregnation. They were already righteous, and our sin was a grievous evil for them. This is “sin”: what we damaged in them merely inadvertently. Then we caused our fathers iniquity also deliberately and intentionally, and further made them wicked through transgression. Thus he says transitively “caused iniquity, caused wickedness,” referring to our fathers.

Yad Yehudah - כ

There is a further possible explanation of the verse there, “We sinned,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - כא

In the sense of “Those who are not here,” which the sages expounded of future generations' souls, all present at Mount Sinai, as above, chapter 3. They were hidden in our holy fathers who were at that assembly.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Over” the evil inclination that causes sin.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Therefore,” because the children sinned with their fathers, they became the fathers' guarantors. Thus the sages expounded in Midrash Shoḥer Tov, on “My son, if you guaranteed your neighbor,” etc.: at the giving of Torah the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Israel, “Give Me guarantors that you will fulfill it.” They said, “Heaven and earth.” He said, “They will cease; rather, give Me your children,” etc.; see there. Even though the fathers themselves sinned, the children must pay more than they.

Yad Yehudah - כד

The children's inclusions hidden within the fathers are a majority relative to the fathers' souls, and we follow the majority.

Yad Yehudah - כה

“Thus we,” etc.: the verse means that we sinned with our fathers long ago, while our souls were hidden with them, and did not save them from the evil inclination though we could have overcome it. Moreover, we actually made our fathers act iniquitously and wickedly in their sin, since our souls' inclusions within them were the majority relative to their souls.

Yad Yehudah - כו

This is the reason and meaning of the sages' saying, “A son gives his father merit”: through proper repentance the son rectifies himself and his father.

Rema of Fano

Blessed is He of great knowledge, righteous in all His ways and gracious in all His deeds. The LORD's enemies, rebels and transgressors against Him, are described by “Their worm shall not die”: it is death that it lacks throughout punishment's duration. Death means transgressors”: one must state what we introduced, “third of the first part” [?]. The accuser's vitality is in the mystery of “You give life to all”: they have life only through attachment to holiness, through man's sin. The worm is the accuser, as the author mentions.[TN190184] For other people who are not rebels, death applies to that worm, the accuser. Immediately after their twelve-month judgment of the wicked in Gehinnom, the holy spark within the filth is hidden away in its place, its original root. This is death, which is only concealment and withdrawal from darkness's paths. But for these transgressors and rebels, the Living One, the Holy One, blessed be He, does not contradict the living. While it has life, meaning attachment to light from holiness, He does not deny it but lets it collect its debt. As it collects, holiness's light departs from it: the annulment of the annuller, until it has no life at all and is annulled of itself. Thus although "their worm shall not die," it will nevertheless be subject to the annulment of the annuller, after which they will rise again. Likewise the sages' statement that Gehinnom's fire has no worldly quenching: "already NTN-NW" [?], etc.; rather, it means its own world. In Gehinnom's world it has no quenching, but afterward it will. [TN190185]

"It is a formula established by King David," etc., etc.: it is a known premise that "world" and "world" are Binah and Malkhut. In the First Temple they said only being hidden away, as known in its place. As long as the accuser acquired through sin—the worm mentioned—is engaged in collecting its debt, it is not described as dead. The Living One does not contradict the living, as we mentioned above. Yet after the sinner is sold into the hands of a harsh master, he will have redemption through the worm's complete annulment, which is far more than death, as written, "Behold, Your enemies shall perish." Destruction and death are two things, for Scripture distinguishes them. "Their fire shall not be quenched": as the sages say, Gehinnom's fire has no worldly quenching.[TN190195]

The Mishnah already censured those who say there is only one world. In the First Temple they concluded blessings "from the world unto the world," a formula established by King David, peace be upon him, and his court: "from the world," from Adam the first man's time, "unto the world," the messianic days. In the Second Temple, because it lacked five things, they initially concluded only "from the world." Later they restored the former practice so as not to imitate deniers. Initially they followed the sages' saying that until Abraham the Holy One, blessed be He, was called only God of heaven, after Nimrod and his companions corrupted things and caused the Divine Presence's departure from below. Through Abraham they additionally called His name God of earth. Understand this. It follows "Where are His mighty deeds and His awesome deeds?" said by Jeremiah and Daniel: one diminished the title "mighty," the other "awesome," until

"Blessed is the LORD," Tiferet, "from the world," whose influence comes from Binah: ʿ [?], "with the crown with which his mother crowned him"; W [?], "the world," Malkhut. Tiferet is like the middle bar, bringing influence from Binah to Malkhut. [TN190186] The allusion is Adam, the first world; Messiah, the last world; David between. In the Second Temple it was not so; hence they said only "Blessed is the LORD from the world," not "unto the world." Later they restored the crown to its former state. The allusion is that at first He was called only God of heaven: Elohei is Binah, heaven Tiferet, but not earth, since influence did not pass from Binah through Tiferet to Malkhut. Afterward influence reached earth, Malkhut. This too alludes to restoring the crown to its former state, as in Zohar, Aḥarei Mot, page 111: "The Matron returned to the King and all returned to the King's celebration; therefore they are certainly called Men of the Great Assembly." End of quotation. "Awesome" is Tiferet; they restored the crown to its former state, its original place. "To its former state" follows Zohar, Ki Teṣe: "Days, because all," etc. This explains the author's words in their proper manner and order.

Daniel removed it so they should not say “mighty”; Jeremiah removed “awesome,” saying the nations dance in His sanctuary—where are His awesome and mighty deeds? As in Yoma's Gemara. “Until they came and restored in both”: in “from the world unto the world” and in “mighty and awesome” they restored the crown to its former state. “No alien god shall be within you”: through annulling the alien god, so only “I, the LORD your God” shall have My dwelling among you. This comes only through annulment of the annuller. Then might is unnecessary to prevail over the evil inclination, in the sense of “Who is mighty? He who conquers,” etc. Thus here too, “The LORD your God is within you” means no alien god is within him; therefore the title “mighty” is unnecessary. “The Almighty—we have not found Him”: there is no need for power and might as titles, as above. “We have learned that His fire”: this returns to “Their fire shall not be quenched,” which the sages explain as having no worldly quenching. At the ending of worlds it will be quenched, for all will be rectified.

“It too was prepared for the King”: the verse begins, “Topheth was prepared from yesterday; it too was prepared for the King,” etc.

the Men of the Great Assembly and their disciples came and restored the crown to its former state in both matters.

They never answered Amen in the Temple. This concerned prayer's blessings; in blessings of praise and other commandments they did not lengthen the blessing formula, and all the people answered Amen, as R. YBD [?] explained, bringing “Ezra blessed the great LORD, and all the people answered Amen.”[TN190183] Here the son asks: Moses our master, peace be upon him, at the beginning of the section Ve-Hayah ʿEqev, said “a great and awesome God,” omitting “mighty”; these are Daniel's very words! You too should tell him that Moses expressly prefaced his words there with the condition “For the LORD your God is within you,” in the sense of “There shall be no alien god within you.” We explained it in the treatise Ha-Nefesh, chapter 28. What follows it? “I am the LORD your God,” for the couch is too short for two companions to stretch upon. There is then no need for “mighty,” since His way is to strengthen those who fear Him over their inclination. With the annulment of the annuller mentioned above, “The Almighty—we have not found Him abundant in power.”

We have learned that Gehinnom's fire lacks worldly quenching, but is quenched when this world ends. This follows all the more from what they expounded concerning goodness: “All the earth's days”—the covenant with Noah's descendants is made only for all the earth's days. When earth ends, the covenant ends, as written, “The earth shall wear out like a garment.” Thus the

The sages expounded it of NB [?]. On that interpretation “it too” has no explanation. On ours it refers to the Holy One, blessed be He, who will be ready to rectify in the future; “for the King” is the King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He. [TN190187] “Abhorrence will no longer apply to rebels”: Zohar, Terumah, page 288, explains diraʾon as a compound: that they see enough of them. This is their chief punishment, the righteous looking at them, and their chief pain. Afterward the righteous will not wish to see evil. The author calls this “too pure-eyed to see evil”: they will not wish to look, for sins will end and all will be righteous and whole. They will no longer be in an inferior existence, doing wickedly wherever one turns, but will exist quietly, etc.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Blessed,” etc.: in chapter 4 [?], etc., he already explained that even rebels and transgressors have hope at the end of their due punishment. He returns here to argue in their favor and explain thus the end of Isaiah: “Their worm shall not die and their fire shall not be quenched.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “Righteous in all His ways,” etc.: this verse indicates that it comes only to offer consolation

concerning the wicked, as stated in chapter 3. [TN190188]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “It is death that it lacks”: the meaning is not that punishment, called the worm, never stops, as the plain sense suggests. On the contrary, it proves that punishment is annulled. “Worm” designates the accuser. It lacks death but has annulment, which is more than death: death is concealment and hiding, not annulment.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “As known in its place”: above, part IV, chapter 22; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “Acquired through sin”: the sages said, “One who commits one transgression acquires one accuser.” That very transgression creates a destroyer to harm the transgressor, the accuser, also the worm mentioned above.

world to come's governance contains no evil at all. The sages further said, “There is no Gehinnom in the future.” This means its fire, created on the second day. Its hollow, created before the world, will be sanctified with the Garden's holiness, as mentioned. There the righteous will dance, with the Holy One, blessed be He, leading the dance; it is written, “It too was prepared for the King.”

Having explained the worm's destruction and the fire's quenching, abhorrence still endures for all flesh. Yet the righteous will be purified in body and soul, as we shall explain in the treatise Resurrection of the Dead, with heaven's help. The good promise conceived in thought will be fulfilled in them, as written, “I said: you are gods.” Each will then resemble his Maker, who is too pure-eyed to see evil; abhorrence will no longer apply to rebels. Rather, “Let sins end,” not sinners; or, as “In this wilderness they shall end,” which they expounded as wholeness. “The wicked are no more” in that inferior existence, doing wickedly wherever they turn. They do exist in quiet and tranquil existence, as written, “You shall see the wholeness of the wicked.”

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “To collect its debt”: from the sinner, against whom it was sent to exact payment.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) The accuser is not described even as dead, which means only concealment and hiding. The sinner's punishment is the accuser's life and sustenance; when punishment is annulled, the accuser is wholly annulled.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) As above, part II, chapter 17; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “He will have redemption” after receiving his punishment by measure and weight: the accusing worm will be entirely annulled.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “Scripture distinguishes them”:

“Destruction and death said,” etc. (Job 28).

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “Their fire shall not be quenched”: the verse's continuation also implies something favorable, an end to the wicked people's punishment. As the sages say in Maqom She-Nahagu: the fire the Holy One, blessed be He, created on the second weekday has no worldly quenching, as written, “Their fire shall not be quenched.” Worldly quenching it lacks, but at this world's end it is quenched, as shortly explained.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “Already censured,” etc.: incidentally the master explains some expositions belonging to this matter.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) In the Mishnah, Ha-Ro’eh: “All who concluded blessings in the Temple said ‘from the world.’ After sectarians corrupted matters, saying there is only one world, they instituted saying ‘from the world unto the world.’” The master explains that the Mishnah concerns the Second Temple. In the First Temple they certainly said “from the world unto the world,” David's established formula: “Blessed is the LORD, the LORD, God of Israel, from the world unto the world." This differs from Rashi, who explains the Mishnah as all who concluded blessings in the First Temple, and that after sectarians corrupted matters, Ezra and his court instituted it; see there. Rashi seems to derive this from Yoma, chapter 7: "Ezra blessed the LORD, the great God"—what is "great"? Rav Giddel said, "Blessed is the LORD God of Israel from the world unto the world." This implies they did not say so before Ezra; otherwise, what was Ezra's distinction? Yet David's case remains difficult for Rashi. Moreover, sectarianism was not introduced into Israel until after Ezra, in the days of Antigonus of Sokho. This requires examination.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) "And unto the world—the messianic days." Rashi explains this concerning the resurrection of the dead. However, according to the master's approach, that the Mishnah speaks of the Second Temple, it cannot be explained thus: for what reason would it teach us the matter of the resurrection of the dead? He prefers to explain it concerning the messianic days. For five things were lacking in the Second Temple, as stated in the first chapter of Yoma, and there was a hidden heart, as stated in the treatise Em Kol Hai, part II, chapter 28. Thus their redemption was [recovered from print: incomplete; therefore they did not merit, and they instituted "from the world until Messiah"]. [Frozen-source notice: the ending of the sentence had not yet been resolved.][TN190189]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) Afterward, when sectarians corrupted matters, they restored the former practice, concluding "unto the world" as in the First Temple, "so as not to strike" [?] the deniers "BHShYM" [?].[TN190190]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) At first, before sectarians corrupted matters, they thought "not alone" [?], like the sages' statement in Bereshit Rabbah, Ḥayyei Sarah: "I adjure you by the LORD, God of heaven and God of earth." Rabbi Phinehas said: "Before I made Him known to His creatures, God of heaven; once I made Him known, God of earth." Rashi likewise explains "The LORD, God of heaven, who took me from my father's house," etc.; see Yefeh Toʾar. The midrash and Rashi's plain intention is that before earth's inhabitants recognized His blessed divinity, the worthy in the generation did not call the LORD God of earth. But the master apparently found this difficult: why should it matter to Abraham and that generation's pious? They knew the LORD truly ruled all earth, even if His divinity was not yet known there. Why be ashamed to describe Him as God of earth? On the contrary, they should call Him so to make it better known. He therefore prefers to explain the midrash by the Divine Presence's withdrawal, as in Bereshit Rabbah: "'They heard the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden.' Rabbi Abba bar Kahana said: it does not say holekh, walking, but mithallekh, leaping and ascending. The Divine Presence was chiefly below. When Adam the first man sinned, it withdrew to the first heaven; Cain sinned, to the second; Enosh's generation, to the third; the Flood generation, to the fourth; the Dispersion generation, to the fifth; the Sodomites, to the sixth; the Egyptians in Abraham's days, to the seventh. Against them arose seven righteous men: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Kohath, Amram and Moses. Abraham arose and brought it down to the sixth," etc. For this reason they did not wish to say God of earth: since they sinned [?], the LORD abandoned earth and withdrew His Presence [gap], until Abraham came and began bringing the Presence down below. Then they again called Him God of earth.[TN190191]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) Nimrod was a cause [?] of the Dispersion generation, as known. The master singled him out because "Therefore it is said, 'Like Nimrod,'" etc., is written of him.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) It follows what the sages said in Yoma, chapter 7. R. YBL said: "Why are they called Men of the Great Assembly? They restored the crown to its former state. Moses said, 'The great, mighty and awesome God.' Jeremiah came and said, 'Nations dance in His sanctuary; where are His awesome deeds?' He did not say 'awesome.' Daniel came and said, 'Nations enslave His sons; where are His mighty deeds?' He did not say 'mighty.' The Men of the Great Assembly came and said: on the contrary, this is His might and these His awesome deeds. His might is restraining His anger and being patient with the wicked. His awesome deeds: without them, how could one nation endure among seventy nations?" How could the sages rely on their own understanding and uproot Moses's words? Rabbi Isaac son of Rabbi Eliezer said: “They knew the Holy One, blessed be He, is truthful; therefore they did not lie to Him.”

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) This one, Daniel, diminished and did not say “mighty”; that one, Jeremiah, diminished “awesome.”

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “In both”: in the title mighty and the title awesome.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Never,” etc.: incidentally the master explains everything belonging to the Mishnah about those concluding blessings.

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) They did not answer Amen in the Temple, as explained in the Gemara there and in Taʿanit.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) At the beginning of ʿEqev he said: “Do not be terrified of them, for the LORD your God is within you, a great and awesome God.”

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) Because he omitted “mighty,” he first said “The LORD your God is within you.” There is then no further need for “mighty,” namely—

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) —in the sense of “There shall be no alien god within you; do not bow to a foreign god. I am the LORD your God who brought you up from Egypt” (Psalm 81). The sages said in Shabbat, chapter 13: “Which alien god is inside a person's body? Say: the evil inclination.” Understand accordingly: no sin or iniquity shall appear to you, all the more those who prevail through an alien god; for “I am the LORD your God who brought you up from Egypt,” and the Holy One is within you, and the couch is too short to stretch upon. Here too the meaning is: do not be terrified of them, since the LORD your God is within you. The evil inclination certainly cannot prevail against Him; therefore do not be terrified of them.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) With this intention there is no need to add “mighty” afterward. “The LORD your God is within you” suffices, since His way is to strengthen, etc.; this is His might.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) When the evil inclination is annulled, “The Almighty—we have not found Him abundant in power” will be fulfilled. The Jerusalem Talmud, Ha-Roʾeh, says: “We did not find the Holy One's power and might, blessed be He.” This is in the future, when the evil inclination is annulled. When it seeks to prevail, His blessed might is known through His strengthening those who fear Him over their inclination, “what is not LʾH” [?] to say at its annulment.[TN190192]

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “We have learned,” etc., returns to the earlier sages' saying that Gehinnom's fire has no worldly quenching.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) All the more from the exposition in Bereshit Rabbah, Noah: “All the earth's days, sowing and reaping,” etc. Rabbi Yudan in Rabbi Samuel bar Naḥmani's name: “Noah's descendants, as their established covenant stands forever—but as long as heaven and earth exist, their covenant exists” [?]. When the day comes of which it is written, “The heavens shall dissolve like smoke and the earth wear out like a garment,” then “My covenant shall be broken on that day,” etc. If they said this concerning goodness, all the more Gehinnom will be annulled when the world ends.[TN190193]

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) Thus, from Gehinnom's quenching we learn that there is nothing evil in the world to come.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) They also said in Nedarim's first chapter and in Avodah Zarah: “There is no Gehinnom in the future; rather, the Holy One, blessed be He, takes the sun from its sheath.”

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) “Created on the second day,” after the world's creation; therefore it is annulled when the world is, as we said. But Gehinnom's hollow is one of the seven things created before the world, as answered in Maqom She-Nahagu. Its existence does not depend on the world's: even after the world is annulled it endures forever. It will be sanctified with the Garden of Eden's holiness, as we shall mention in chapter 7; see there.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) There will be the dance the sages spoke of in Taʿanit, chapter 4: the Holy One, blessed be He, will make a dance for the righteous in the Garden of Eden, sitting among them, and each will point to Him, as written, “They shall say on that day: behold, this is our God, for whom we hoped,” etc. This dance will not be in the Garden of Eden itself but in Gehinnom's hollow, which will be sanctified in the future with the Garden's holiness. For thus—

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) —it is written of this: “Topheth was prepared from yesterday; it too was prepared for the King.” It was prepared for the world's King to be there leading the dance. Jonathan too translated, in his way, “king in the world”; see there.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) After explaining above that the worm is destroyed and Gehinnom's fire quenched at the world's end, one may still say the punishment of abhorrence, mentioned at the verse's end, “They shall be an abhorrence to all flesh,” endures even after the world's annulment.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) We must nevertheless say abhorrence too will be annulled. They will be so purified in body and soul that their blessed Maker's quality will begin [in them], and they will be too pure-eyed to see evil. They will not look at the wicked or behold their punishment; abhorrence's annulment follows. Diraʾon is a compound, as in Midrash Ha-Neʿelam, Vayera, page 268: “What is diraʾon? Dai raʾon”—all will say, “Enough of seeing them.” Jonathan likewise translated: “Until the righteous say of them, ‘We have seen enough.’” See Zohar, Terumah, page 228. Since the pure-eyed no longer look at the wicked at all, they can no longer say of them, “We have seen enough.”

(38) “The good promise”: resemblance to his Creator.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) “Conceived in thought”: before Adam the first man's sin.

Yad Yehudah - מ

(40) What, then, must you say? The righteous will be pure-eyed because the wicked and rebels will repent and be rectified, as above, chapter 3, and explained below, chapter 7. There will be no evil or wickedness in the world, as written, “Let sins end from earth”; “are no more,” as Beruriah said to Rabbi Meir in Berakhot's first chapter: does it say “sinners”? It says “sins.” When sins are absent, the wicked are no more.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(41) Or yittammu may be explained from wholeness, in the manner of their exposition in Zohar, Shelaḥ Lekha, page 318, of “In this wilderness they shall end”; see there. The meaning here of “Let sins end from the earth” would be that the wicked will repent and be whole with the LORD. Then “the wicked are no more”: they will no longer undergo the turns [?] of reincarnation and the measure of punishment, since the cause for which they acted wickedly and were reincarnated has already been removed. For [recovered from print: henceforth these men will be] whole; [recovered from print: in their recompense] too there will be quiet and wholeness, recompense corresponding to the deed: “He grants quiet, and who will condemn?”[TN190194]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“We learned there,” etc.: his intention is to explain why the Holy One, blessed be He, will rectify everything in the future. Is He not righteous in all His ways? Strict justice would allow their worm neither death nor destruction. He therefore says: because He enabled their damage, in the sense of “I caused evil,” as he proceeds to explain. “Attach to himself”: saying “I was obligated,” “I enabled,” etc. “The damager is liable”: ḥav rather than ḥayyav, because as a Jerusalem teacher he teaches concise language. “His land above”: in the mystery of “He who dwells with them amid their uncleanness,” the mystery of “one wheel on earth”; this will be atoned for through our good deeds. “His soul shall lodge in goodness”: although the material soul will pay, in the sense of death cleansing, his higher soul will nevertheless lodge in goodness.

“I diminished the moon”: there was a commandment performed not for its own sake; see below, Em Kol Hay, part I, section 13. From this followed Adam the first man's sin, as above, S3, chapter 9 [?]. [TN190196] The moon's diminution and accusation will be explained in their

We learned there in Damages: “Whatever I was obligated to guard, I enabled its damage. If I enabled part of its damage, I am liable to pay for its damage as though I enabled all of it.” How astonishing that this teacher should attach others' curse to himself! Certainly, who is this teacher? The Holy One, blessed be He, who wished to give Israel merit. He is a Jerusalem teacher, teaching concise language, as the Gemara says of the first clause's end, “The damager is liable,” using ḥav. Its sense is lenient, not severe. Thus He told them: “My children, do not be troubled by what I taught you, that the damager must pay damages, for I said only ‘with the best of the land.’” The intention is to pour wrath upon wood and stones, in the plain sense of “His land shall atone for His people.”

We have a plainer and more necessary reading: it should have said “His land shall atone” in the feminine, or “He shall atone through His land for His people.” Rather: His people shall atone for His land above through repentance and good deeds, as we explained in part I, chapter 13, on “He shall atone for the holy place.” Both are knop and flower. Even if “the best of the land” concerns man's body, certainly the world's separated dough-offering, there is nevertheless hope for his latter end, and his soul shall lodge in goodness. For “I, I am He who erases your transgressions for My sake”: “I caused evil,” putting leaven in the dough, as expounded in place. How did He enable part of its damage? “A sin offering to the LORD,” in the sense of “Bring atonement for Me because I diminished the moon.” “The second is liable”: Israel is the second, the Holy One, blessed be He, the first. Our saying “We transgressed” is an excellent confession: we say we cause the damage, not the blessed LORD. He answers: on the contrary, “in MṬW [?], the second properly,” etc.[TN190197] “They possess no celestial fortune”: as in Bava Qamma's Gemara, “A human has celestial fortune.”

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “We learned there,” etc.: after explaining in preceding chapters that rebels and transgressors have a remedy, the master gives the reason. The blessed LORD forgives transgressions for His own sake, because He created the evil inclination. He begins explaining all this through the Mishnah at Bava Qamma's beginning: “Four primary categories of damage,” etc.; “When it causes damage, the damager must pay damages with the best of the land. Whatever I was obligated to guard, I enabled its damage. If I enabled part of its damage,

I am liable to pay for its damage as though I enabled all of it," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) How astonishing that the teacher speaks in the first person, "Whatever I was obligated to guard," directing the damager's curse and disgrace toward himself. He should have used the third person: "Whatever he must guard, he enabled," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) "This is the Holy One, blessed be He," master of the Mishnah.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) He is a Jerusalem teacher: dwelling in Jerusalem.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) As in the Gemara on the first clause's end: "When it causes damage, the damager is liable," ḥav. The Gemara objects: should it not say ḥayyav? Rav Judah said in Rav's name: this teacher is a Jerusalemite, teaching concise language.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) This ending does not mean severity, as its plain sense suggests, requiring payment specifically with the best; it means leniency in payment. The words allude to Israel: when they cause damage through their sins, "they bring" [?] payment for that damage with the best of the land—Jerusalem and the Temple—but not with their souls. The leniency is pouring

Sukkah. Thus "I was obligated to guard it; I enabled its damage," for "the inclination of man's heart is evil from his youth," as there. Originally too, "I enabled part of its damage," diminishing the moon; "I am liable to pay for its damage as though I enabled all its damage," in the sense of "one male goat for a sin offering to the LORD." Therefore "The sun shall no longer be your light by day, nor shall the moon shine for you in brightness, for the LORD shall be your everlasting light."

The rabbis taught: "A pit belonging to two partners—the second is liable." Indeed "we transgressed and rebelled": an excellent confession, awakening the Omnipresent's mercy. The Holy One, blessed be He, said: "My children, the rule is otherwise: the second covered it properly"—these are the sages' ordinances, making a fence for Torah—"and an ox or donkey fell there and died: he is exempt." As the sages said, "An ox, but not a human," from those possessing the first image explained in the treatise Ha-Nefesh. The fallen one falls from those lacking the full endowments of birth, who are beasts unto themselves. "A donkey, but not vessels": they did not merit the holy likenesses mentioned there, which truly constitute the second image. Thus these lost ones possess no celestial fortune. Therefore the second is exempt. "I am He who diminished their endowments, through the LORD's judgments, true and altogether righteous; I shall complete them for them," as we shall explain in these chapters. In Heleq they already expounded "Gilead is Mine, Manasseh is Mine" concerning the Omnipresent's wrath upon wood and stones, as written, "The LORD spent His wrath and kindled fire in Zion."[TN190198]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) As in "His land shall atone for His people": in its plain sense, the land atones for Israel.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) We have another plain reading of this verse, clearer and more necessary than the first. The first leaves a difficulty: it should have used the feminine we-khipperah, speaking of the land [?], a feminine noun; or "He shall atone through His land," meaning the Holy One, blessed be He, atones for His people through His land. Necessarily the verse's order is rearranged: "His people shall atone for His land." His people atone for the land above and the upper holy place through repentance and good deeds below.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "Even if you say," etc.: he returns to the Mishnah. Even if you do not wish to explain "with the best of the land" as Jerusalem, the Temple and the holy house, as we said, but wish [?] to apply it to man himself: he is the world's separated dough-offering, the dust lifted into Adam the first man's body, certainly the best of the land.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) Nevertheless, the Mishnah implies only leniency, teaching hope for his latter end. It precisely says man must pay in love for Israel's transgressors after the affliction is washed from their garments and they are purified. It also occurs in Rabbi Eliezer's teaching, chapter 17.

respect of his body, the best of the land; in respect of his higher soul, “his soul shall lodge in goodness.”

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) Thus it is written, “I, I am He who erases your transgressions for My sake”: because I created the evil inclination and put leaven in the dough, I therefore treat you leniently.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) As expounded on “I caused evil” and related verses in Sukkah, chapter 5.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “With this,” etc.: the teacher adjoins “Whatever I was obligated to guard,” etc. These are the Holy One's well-reasoned words, blessed be He: I lightened payment to the best of the land because I created the evil inclination and became obligated to guard it. Therefore I also enabled payment for its damage on the side of mercy.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) As there in Sukkah.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Originally too,” etc.: the Mishnah's ending, “I enabled part of its damage,” teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, told Israel: this event, My causing you damage, had already occurred with the moon's punishment. As known from the sages' statement in ʾṬ [?], the moon accused: “Master of the universe, can two kings use one crown?” He told her, “Go and diminish yourself,” etc., until He said, “Bring an offering for Me because I diminished the moon.” Thus R. Sh. said: “How does the New Moon goat differ, that ‘to the LORD’ is said of it?” etc. His blessed words in the Mishnah, “I enabled part of its damage,” mean that earlier I also enabled and prepared some damage for the moon by telling her to diminish herself. I therefore became liable to pay for the damage and commanded atonement on New Moon.[TN190199]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) Therefore, besides the atonement commanded for the moon's diminution, God also did this: He Himself, in His blessed glory, will shine for us as everlasting light, as written, “The sun shall no longer,” etc. (Isaiah 60). This pays for the light we lost through its diminution and is included in “I am liable to pay for its damage,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “The rabbis taught,” etc.: the master similarly explains the Mishnah in Shor She-Nagaḥ: “A pit of two partners: the first passed it without covering it, and the second without covering it; the second is liable.” The teacher addressed the evil inclination and the leaven of man's materiality [?], called a pit. It belongs to two partners: the Holy One, blessed be He, who created it, and Israel, who sin against their souls and strengthen the alien god, as in the preceding chapter. We are liable.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “These are the sages' ordinances”: when they were “rectifiers of children” [?], nothing is deducted from their reward in the world to come, as explained in Zohar, Vayeshev, page TKhL [450?]. [TN190200]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “As,” etc.: the treatises Ha-Nefesh and Olam Qaṭan explain four soul-images. The first image is called “man to man” and belongs to the world of Emanation. The second includes three likenesses—neshamah, nefesh and ruaḥ—and belongs to Creation. The third is from Formation; the fourth from Making. See there. Corresponding to these he says “fell there” of those lacking endowments: one whose soul comes neither from Emanation nor Creation. “An ox”: not those of the first image, called human. “A donkey”: not those of the second image, including three holy vessels, but those of the other two images, who are beasts, like beasts relative to the first. They therefore lack celestial fortune like theirs. “Children, life, one from merit, these—is it?” [?], depending on the higher fortune, as explained in Em Kol Hay, part VI, section 5. “And wise, learned men said” [?] that Torah protects them “to annul concealment” [?], as explained in the Zohar there. [TN190201]

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז · יז

“You shall tread upon the wicked”: the verse means that the righteous are commanded to make dough from the wicked through tears, the water; thereby they become dough beneath the righteous people's feet. This water is the oppressed people's tears, “which are placed upon them” [?], and the righteous people's tears; “and as the name of the crushed ones of the Holy One, blessed be He” [?], as below.[TN190202] “Will not be trodden with shoes”: thus Moses is told, “Remove your shoes from your feet,” etc. Hence MṬṬ is called a sewer of shoes: separating the shell, to which “ShLKh shoes” [?] alludes, separating holy from impure. This is the mystery of someone with no shoes on his feet. [TN190203] “For those who know a ladder” [?]: see above, part III, end of chapter 16.[TN190204]

“My supplications in My house of prayer”: the Holy One, blessed be He, also prays. What is His blessed prayer? “May it be Your will that My mercy conquer My anger.” In My house of prayer they will bring Israel, called “the daughter of My scattered

“You shall tread upon the wicked, for they shall be ash beneath your feet” (Malachi 3:21). This is a wondrous promise containing mercy and truth for the other class, numbered fifth. This ash will not be trodden with shoes, for ultimately it will become holy ground. It can be kneaded through the gates of tears, which have not been closed. This is surely a positive commandment for the righteous to pass through the Valley of Weeping—Gehinnom—to revive these lost ones, as Ezekiel revived the dead, and it is written, “He led me around them, round and round” (Ezekiel 37:2). So too the righteous who fear His blessed name, mentioned by Malachi at his prophecy's end, will pass through the Valley of Weeping. For the general intention of this verse, its plain explanation suffices: they weep there in prayer and supplication. Through their abundant tears and those of the sinners against their own souls, stirred to weep with them, they make that valley a spring, like the trickling waters Ezekiel mentioned, which will emerge beneath the sanctuary's threshold, as we learned in Sheqalim and Middot. This is Gehinnom's purification that we spoke of.

With this awakening God will send a generous rain and sprinkle pure water upon them from the upper waters suspended by utterance, for those who ones,” from wa-yafeṣ, ‘He scattered’: they will be scattered ash, afterward contentment before Me. “Three partners”: the oppressed people's tears, the righteous people's tears, and the blessed LORD's own prayer. Thus the blessed LORD, called Teacher, will robe and clothe Himself in blessings; blessings means prayer. “Including what we mentioned”: “also” includes the blessed LORD, as above. On this verse see the book KY [?], part III. [TN190205]

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “You shall tread,” etc.: the master also explains this verse at Malachi's end, cited in the teaching above, chapter 8, about the fifth class, those whose sins are the majority and who are bodily transgressors. He takes it as a good promise for this class, showing how they too will be rectified, rather than the bad promise suggested by its plain sense.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) Though this ash is said to be “beneath your feet,” and the sages say their souls are burned, Gehinnom casts them out and a wind scatters them beneath the righteous people's feet, the intention is not harm or disgrace, saying the righteous will tread on it, as wa-ʿassotem, a term for trampling, also seems to imply according to the interpreters. Ultimately it will become holy ground, when these wicked people shed tears like a stream in complete repentance. Then this scattered ash—

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) —can be kneaded into fine dough with those tears and rectified, for the gates of tears have not closed. It certainly would not be fitting to say they trample it. Wa-ʿassotem instead expresses dough-making: the wicked people's ash will become fit dough. "Beneath your feet"—

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) —is a positive commandment for the righteous to pass through Gehinnom, reviving with their tears too the burned souls of these wicked people. "Beneath your feet" thus favors and know their secret. From there come the treasuries of resurrection's dew. Then the Teacher will robe Himself in blessings from these lost ones too. They will go from strength to strength until, after a long time, they come to be numbered with the righteous, the chosen host that appears before God in Zion. One may explain "also" as including Zephaniah's saying in the LORD's name: "My supplicants, the daughter of My scattered ones, shall bring My offering" (Zephaniah 3:10). It means My supplications in My house of prayer—"May My mercy conquer My anger"—and the rest of the prayer: these will bring "the daughter of My scattered ones," for they will be despised, scattered ash, afterward becoming contentment before Me; this is "My offering."

Thus three partners awaken mercy upon rebels and transgressors after they waste away in their iniquity: the righteous people's tears as they pass through the Valley of Weeping; the tears of the oppressed themselves, as expounded of them in ʿOsin Passin (Eruvin 19a); and "also the Teacher will robe Himself in blessings," including what we mentioned.

consoles the wicked: the ash will be rectified when the righteous people's feet pass through the Valley of Weeping. So it was with the dead Ezekiel revived: the Holy One, blessed be He, led him round, as written, "He led me," etc. (Ezekiel 37).

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) Here too the righteous pass around the wicked, walking in Gehinnom to revive them. Thus Malachi at his prophecy's end: "For you who fear My name, a sun of righteousness shall shine, with healing," etc.; "You shall tread upon the wicked," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) It may also be explained plainly: wa-ʿassotem as trampling. The righteous people's footsteps will be upon the wicked as they too pass through the Valley of Weeping. Likewise wa-ʿassotem may derive from ʿasis, pomegranate juice, the liquid emerging from them, as interpreters also explain. On our approach it designates tears: the juice and tears of those fearing His blessed name will be upon the wicked, "for they shall be ash," etc., when the righteous pass through the Valley of Weeping.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "They make it a spring": "Passing through the Valley of Weeping, they make it a spring; also the Teacher robes Himself in blessings. They go from strength to strength, appearing before God in Zion." The sages in ʿOsin Passin explained those passing through the Valley of Weeping as the wicked; the master prefers applying it also to the righteous.

(9) Sheqalim, chapter 6, and Middot, chapter 5.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) "It is of" [?]: this spring is Gehinnom's purification, which we said in chapter 5 will occur in the future, sanctifying it with the Garden's holiness; this spring rectifies the wicked within it.

(13) “For those who know their secret”: this means higher Hokhmah, as explained above, part IV, end of chapter 17. See Pardes, Gate of Epithets.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) From there come the treasuries of dew and the influx of life descending to Tiferet, as written, “My head is filled with dew.”

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) What is written (Zephaniah 3): “Beyond Cush's rivers, My supplicants, the daughter of My scattered ones, shall bring My offering.” Interpreters explain that the nations bring Israel as an offering, called “My supplicants, the daughter of My scattered ones” because the Holy One, blessed be He, answered them in their exile, where He scattered them. The master, on his approach, explains ʿatarai as “My prayer.” In Berakhot's first chapter: “How do we know the Holy One, blessed be He, prays? ‘I shall gladden them in My house of prayer.’ It does not say ‘their house of prayer,’ but ‘My house of prayer,’ teaching that He prays. What does He pray? Rava said: ‘May it be My will that My mercy conquer My anger, that My mercy prevail over My attributes, that I treat My sons with mercy and enter for them beyond the strict line of judgment.’” The verse thus means: My supplications and My prayer will bring the scattered ash of the wicked as an offering; this is “the daughter of My scattered ones.”

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “Three partners,” etc.: first, the righteous people's tears; second, the wicked people's tears. As in ʿOsin Passin on “In the Valley of Weeping they make it a spring,” etc.: “Those passing”—people who transgress the Omnipresent's will; “valley”—Gehinnom is deepened for them; “weeping”—they weep and shed tears like a spring of shittin, channels, etc. There is also a third: the Holy One's prayers, blessed be He. Thus it concludes, “Also the Teacher robes Himself in blessings.”

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) Including the prayers we mentioned.

“He will judge among the nations, full of bodies”: one may find a fine allusion here. The initials of yadin ba-goyim maleʾ gewiyyot are GShM BYW [?]; likewise geshem nedavot yaʿṭeh moreh has the initials GShM BYW [?]. [TN190207] “Of which it is written, He tore His

Rema of Fano

The word “robe” here is not far from their exposition of “He will judge among the nations, full of bodies.” By the merit of the holy ones, dead from the world for the sanctification of His blessed name, engraved upon His purple robe—of which it is written, “On the day of evil He tore His garment”—He will then, at a favorable time, robe Himself in it, because they shed tears like a stream.

garment”: know that this garment is the garment of Creation, insofar as it includes all names, and the mystery of three times yearly, as said, “Just as one comes to see, so he comes to be seen,” etc. This is the mystery of “According to the standing of those entering, they would come out", etc., concerning firstfruits.[TN190208] In this respect it is His purple robe: at vengeance He judges the nations with this garment, upon which all the holy ones' souls then are. This is "full of bodies": from their power comes His vengeance. At that time He will also make a garment from them.

"Of which it is said, All My garments ʾegʾalti": it is a shared word with two senses. ʾegʾal derives from "stained with stains," and from the language of redemption; it is also a composite of past and future. Gaʾalti is past; adding aleph, ʾegʾalti, turns it to the future.[TN190209] At the killing there were two meanings: stained with the victims' blood, and thereby redeemed from the accuser standing against the whole community. Likewise in the future I shall stain/ redeem it with the blood of the slain, their slayers, and it will also be redeemed from the fathers' covenant, ḤYY [?], pledged with us; if He fulfills His promise it will be redeemed. [TN190210]

"From Isaiah's words": to understand this, examine the book Qinat Setarim, on "They sit on the ground, silent," at the end of folio 22b. Esau includes the shell's stature; its first three, called head, do not

Their righteousness stands forever before Him, blessed be He, to advocate for all the faltering. This purple robe includes all His attributes, the garments of higher providence, and vindicates its judgments. Of it it is said, "All My garments I will have stained/redeemed," ʾegʾalti: I shall redeem them in the future as I have redeemed them already. At first they were stained with the blood of those killed by royal decree and thereby redeemed from the accusation directed against the whole community. They also had to be stained with their killers' blood and redeemed from the covenant of the fathers, to whom they were pledged. Thus in this distinguished verb we learn the meaning of shared senses and composition, preserving truth forever.

From these words of Isaiah we know faithfully that He will also judge the "full of bodies": Esau, the beloved son of Isaac, master of judgment, because Esau is full of bodies, in the sense of "game was in his mouth." Our interpretation has already benefited many through the mystical commentator on Lamentations, which he named Qinat Setarim, on "They sit on the ground, silent." Consult it: this is a deep exposition, much needed here to complete the explanation of Amalek's seed being erased, following this judgment. When the entire stature gathers as game in Esau's mouth, as explained there, Amalek will be judged by two additional erasures, one from the mouth and one from the nose, whose mystery is heaven, with the mouth below it, as known to one familiar with the Idra. This is intended in "I shall surely erase Amalek's memory from belong to them, for it is close to holiness: "the head/poison of serpents"—ʾakh zar, "only alien," this limiting expression—and they are included in holiness from judgment's side, Isaac's attribute. This is "Is it not concealed with Me?" No aspect of the head approaches holiness more than the mouth. Already "He crushed a head over a vast land," for the head is included in holiness through the mystery of Esau's head buried in Isaac's bosom. Thus far are the words of his writings[?]; see there. [TN190211] The explanation is that the game, all the nations, will be rectified in his mouth. Therefore he is called full of bodies: Esau's head is near holiness, in Isaac's bosom, and all the nations, the game, will be rectified through the head's mouth or nose. Amalek, however, will be judged by two deaths: one from heaven, the nose, called Tiferet in Pardes, Gate of the Values of Epithets; also from the mouth, which is beneath heaven, from which he will be erased[?]. Amalek will have no rectification except in the ear, as will follow.[TN190212]

"Stoning, burning, execution and strangulation in order": this matter is very deep, and the author's intention is difficult to understand.

He wrote that Amalek in its four permutations signifies the four court-imposed deaths. First, any four-letter word has twenty-four permutations, yet he wrote four. Furthermore, where do these permutations hint at the four deaths? I asked my master, the holy man, the great kabbalist, may he live, Rabbi Elhanan, ShN, and he gave me this answer. But I, the small Moses, will also express my weak opinion below, after the answer Rabbi Elhanan gave. His words are as follows. It appears to my humble judgment, Elhanan's[?]—to anyone who examines well, with sound reflection and deep understanding: level, proceeding straight[?]—this is the King's Valley, above all those who arise, the divine ones of the higher academy; and it is easy to understand[?]. In these all the places indicated by the author, of blessed memory, will be explained—especially in NLḤ, etc., concerning Esau's head buried in Isaac's bosom, etc. [TN190213]

In truth, this entire chapter and the next are wholly incomprehensible to someone unversed in the exalted teachings in the highest heights, higher and higher. Especially what we shall mention, the beginning from the end of beneath heaven." The attribute of patience, entrusted to the possessor of the nose, does not apply to Amalek at all, neither any of it nor any part.

His name causes this: Amalek, head of adversaries, is named for ʿamal, ʿamaq, malaq and ʿalaq, four harsh shells—stoning, burning, execution by the sword and strangulation, in that order. All were fulfilled in Balaam, as expounded in Heleq. Here we need the masters of Torah's secrets: just as in holiness Moses is within and Jacob without, so Balaam is within and Amalek without. When bet is exchanged for qof in a known alphabet, their names are equal. Thus Balaam corresponds to Moses, as we explained. Therefore Moses wrote Balaam's section: a scroll he delivered to Joshua, beginning "Moses gave to the tribe of Reuben's sons" and ending "To Levi's tribe Moses gave no inheritance," etc. It contains "Balaam son of Beor, the diviner, the Israelites killed with the sword among their slain." From here they expounded four deaths concerning him; his sin and punishment are specified in this verse. Since this section was small, Joshua attached it to his book, as Isaiah did two verses prophesied by Beeri, Hosea's father. See Em Kol Hay, part II, section 1.

Amalek's name hints at the four shells mentioned through the composition we shall discuss in the treatise Resurrection of the Dead concerning ruṭafash, encompassing the healing of every wound, bruise and fresh blow through its four operations known in manual practice. This too is among our language's wonders, holy of holies. It is written, "For a moment is in His anger":

this chapter, which concludes, "It is written: a moment in My anger," etc.; "the external powers first take root in the nose," etc. What is this, and why specifically the nose? This conclusion actually explains the whole chapter, and it is very deep, as the author emphasized here: "we learn, for it is" [?] a deep exposition, etc. I shall therefore explain generally a short introduction to this matter for one accustomed to studying, entering and leaving the extended teachings of Emanation.

Before the first emanation, the ten sefirot as ten points, there was the Man of Creation, Adam Qadmon before all primordial beings. He is called "of Creation" relative to the revelation of the preceding garment, called the Man of Emanation: the revelation of YHWH's yod. This Adam Qadmon is the revelation of YHWH's he. From him emerged ten points, to become Emanation, Creation, Formation and Making, thus: every human configuration has four breaths. One emerges from his head's hair, from the skull, the aspect ḥayyah, the power of YHWH's yod, the Name of 72, YHWH filled with yods. The second breath emerges from the ear-holes. It is more perceptible: closing the ear, one hears a sound within, since the breath is prevented from emerging. Breath from the hair-channels is less perceptible. This second is neshamah, the power of YHWH's he, the Name of 63. The third, from the

the external powers first take root in the nose. They will be annulled below, but their existence in holiness endures forever. Amalek will be erased, both himself and his rooting there; nothing will remain of him except a thin trace, sealed and concealed above the nose, as explained shortly.

nostrils, is more perceptible than the first two, visible to the eye; it is ruaḥ, YHWH's vav. The fourth, from the mouth, is more revealed than the first three: nefesh, YHWH's final he.[TN190214]

Although this Adam Qadmon cannot at all be described as a human configuration because of his subtlety and exaltedness, we liken him to a human configuration insofar as human understanding can grasp. It is thus: concerning these points, we have no teaching whatsoever about the first breath from the skull. It begins only at the ear-holes: one breath emerges and clothes itself below, within the nose's breath when it reaches it. Both descend from there, and reaching the mouth's breath, clothe themselves within it. Then this mouth-breath emerges, making from “its expansions/firmaments” [?] ten vessels, ten points. The ear-breath ends at the beard's tip; thereafter only the two breaths, nose and mouth, descend. Keter therefore receives its illumination, when formed, from the point at the beard's tip; shattering can in no way rule it. Hokhmah and Binah also receive their illumination there. Keter, however, receives the ear's light itself directly, without the mixing of two breaths, whereas Hokhmah and Binah receive the ear-light in a mingling and participation of two breaths. Thus Hokhmah and Binah have no shattering in their faces, only in their backs. The seven extremities were made from Adam Qadmon's navel downward, where ear-light is wholly absent; therefore they shattered and fell.[TN190215] It must also be said: a very subtle first existence was made for the first three from ear-light, so they received illumination from it. The six extremities, Lesser Countenance, begin their root in nose-light; his feminine counterpart begins hers in mouth-light. Therefore all possessing the breath of life in their nostrils—precisely their nostrils—died, fell and shattered.[TN190216]

The reason for their shattering was that the external powers had gradually been separated from all their holiness through the many descending links of all the worlds in the world of Ein Sof, a thousand thousand worlds beyond number, and likewise this Adam Qadmon. After Binah's vessel emerged, the time had come for the external powers to separate from the holy ones: their externality was already recognizable and perceptible, called the green line, “at the opening, sin, this crouching.” Shattering therefore occurred “to strip vessels” [?] emerging from Binah, to which the green line clung intensely. It is called green because at first there was only complete whiteness, but here whiteness's deviation became discernible, and its beginning was green. It was not yet actually green, only slightly greenish; it is called the line of chaos, and this whole emerging world is accordingly called the world of chaos.[TN190217] It had to fall from a high roof into a deep pit, to burst and break, like wheat whose grinding separates bran from fine flour.

As soon as the fall separated external powers from holiness, a new existence immediately arose above. The 72 in Adam Qadmon, which had initially given no share, now joined the 63 in this Adam Qadmon to produce holy existence, called King Hadar—splendor is certainly his. This encompasses the Ancient One, containing several configurations, one within another in rectification: the Ancient One, Long Countenance, etc. Then the Ancient One's feet extended to the fallen fragments' place. With his feet he gathered the holy ones in Edom's land and raised them above, where they were rectified. For they fell because Adam Qadmon's 72 had no share in them, and they did not adhere together, remaining separate points. The first three were not linked to the lower seven; head and body were not together. Therefore they shattered; for this reason Adam Qadmon's 72 did not participate initially, so that they would shatter and the shells separate, as

we said.[TN190218]

After separation, holiness was raised above and rectified, becoming a garment for the extension of the first three, the three heads of L-L', of 'YN, and of Long Countenance [?], as explained at length in its place. Thus head and body adhere together.[TN190219] Therefore the external powers left below, not raised and not rectified in this rectification, remained in their first aspect. Their head is wholly unattached to their body; it is concealed above, earlier, in the higher degree preceding them from which they emerged: the tenth vessel, Malkhut's point, the end of the ten holy vessels, the aspect of the vast land containing all lower things, in the sense of "QL [?], great is Your faithfulness," explained everywhere. This is "He will judge among the nations" the head over them all, Esau, as known. He is called full of bodies: his garments depicted all the world's statures, all chariots of the external powers, all wild animals, cattle, snakes, fiery serpents and the like. They are garments for souls, for Esau, who is their inwardness and life. This full-of-bodies Esau is "He crushed a head": his head is his whole self, and it is over a vast land, as above.[TN190220]

Thus "The LORD rebuke," etc.—rebuking Satan, "even GSh, 72" [?], which flows and is poured out. Nothing, even among shells, lacks holiness's life. In holy configurations, however, the holy life above adheres literally within them. This is "I shall dwell within them," literally: the soul's 248 limbs in the body's 248 limbs.[TN190221]

Their head too, the passage for all life coming from above, adheres essentially to the body, so holiness itself dwells within the body. But the shells' head is concealed above. All their life coming from above must pass through their head, since every upper light descends into the body in order, first to the head, thence to the body. Since the body is not attached to the head, how can light descend from head to body? All the light remains in the head, which casts and shines an illumination from afar into the body, apart from its own essence. Understand. Thus "NB [?] which flows," yet until their bodily vessels are emptied of holiness, their life, as above.[TN190222] Therefore they are dead while alive: "Cut off its head, and will it not die?" This is the separation between the Pavement of Sapphire, the last aspects of Malkhut, the vast land, in whose palace are all souls, as known, and the opening of the great abyss, the chariot of all external powers, as known.

How their Ein Sof together with their skull is unattached to the rest of the body is a lengthy matter, in the mystery of the dragon, as written, etc. These are secrets; one must spare his Maker's honor. Thus among the shells whoever adds diminishes: their Ein Sof is unattached to their ten, making eleven, one added to holiness's ten. Yet this—since their deficiency is in them[?]—will, with God's help, be the clarification of their future rectification.[TN190223] Then all souls in Adam the first man's body will already have been exhausted, as stated[?] in the midrash. No holy spark will remain below needing elevation, since all holiness will have emptied from the external powers below. They will have no existence at all, for no existence is without holiness, SW [?].[TN190224] What remains becomes ash. Evil consumes itself; the fire ceases by burning what clings to it, ending when its operation is complete. It leaves only fine ash, nothingness and chaos, translated ṣadya, empty of all holiness. That ash adheres to the holy righteous people's feet, their final refinement, so nothing of evil's existence remains, only its root remaining in holiness.

It happens thus: this ash again becomes dough through tears from the spring made by those passing through the Valley of Weeping, explained in the preceding chapter. One examining Zohar, Shemot, page 28—"Everything the Holy One, blessed be He, does below alludes to what is above," etc.—should see wondrous matters there. The field-stone decays, returns and is consumed by fire, becoming ash; in that same fire it then becomes pure, sapphire-like matter: glass, named for the final purification by which dark matter becomes a sapphire-like body. Likewise the wicked person's body becomes glass from ash, for man is literally a field-stone, specifically after decay, "and HKL [?] after this," since it is stained/redeemed in earth's dust, as known from Zohar, Terumah. Examine this wondrous matter if you understand.[TN190225]

Thus Abraham said, "I am dust": when he returns to dust and decays into dust, it returns and is consumed, and becomes ash; this is "and ash." He therefore merited the suspected wife's dust, because she conceives iniquity: they make iniquity a male for the shell, which has been castrated[?] and has no

male potency; she carries it through fornication.[TN190226] With this dust it is somewhat rectified: decayed and dissolved, “its food is dust” within water in which the Name was erased; the holy Name rectifies thereby. Likewise the red heifer's ash, source of judgments, as known: PR, PRH. This is ʾPR, ash: aleph sweetens the judgments, in the mystery of ADNY, where aleph sweetens DYN, judgment, as known in the mystery of “ʾKh, H, DYN”; this too is “ShKH, H, ADNY.”[TN190227]

This is “You shall tread upon the wicked, for they shall be ash,” etc. All four breaths in holiness's rectification, as above, assist this refinement; the four occurrences of hevel have the numerical value of qemaḥ, flour, made from this dough, refined by the mouth's teeth grinding. The mouth is nearer revelation than nose and ear; therefore its initial emergence was from the mouth-breath, as above. From there they emerged, and there they return, into the mouth, where all are sweetened.[TN190228] To understand this, examine R. Y. [?] Sarug's booklet printed in Novelot Hokhmah. It derives from Sifra di-Ṣeniʿuta: the snake's tail, the end of all evil judgments, is in the snake's own mouth; see there.[TN190229] Then their flesh dissolves entirely, leaving only their head concealed in holiness, together with the little refined at the end, remaining after all this world's refinements, where we lacked power to refine further to a hair's breadth. The Holy One, blessed be He, enters to a hair's breadth; likewise He is exacting with the righteous to a hair's breadth.

Therefore the righteous have no rest even in the world to come: they constantly ascend degree after degree, refined again and again. Garments unfit to ascend to their lofty place are stripped from them in the world below it, where spiritual subtlety is less. This is the offering the high priest above offers on the altar above; that burnt offering's skin remains his, “it shall be the priest's.” At its initial descent to this world it was not as bright and pure as now, when the righteous person made it, merited it and purified some of its dustiness. This rewards the high priest's service: “that a righteous man was sent” [?], and they gave strength to God, adding strength and might to the heavenly retinue.[TN190230] This offering—the high priest above offers literally a man's burnt offering, the righteous person. The high priest's reward: the skin of this burnt offering, which he offered and raised above to the priest, “and also ʾBH, certainly a high priest”; that skin will belong to the high priest who offers it. Enough of this.[TN190231]

All external statures gather their spirit, soul and life into Esau's mouth, the root of all external powers, becoming his game in his mouth. This means “full of bodies”, all the forms of statures of wild animals, cattle and the like: game in his mouth. It is also HVQ[?], which in AT-BaSh is ṢD[?]. Esau's head, hidden in holiness upon the vast land, is also concealed with what depends upon it, becoming an expression of game in Isaac's mouth. Understand, including the sages' words and riddles found in Galanti. Although this never was Galanti's intention, nor the speaker's there concerning this, these words are nevertheless true: from whose womb did they emerge?[TN190232] Rabbi Moses Cordovero, of blessed memory, speaks literally like Moses at Sinai, while the Ari, of blessed memory, establishes them clearly, as above, for one knowing R. M.'s greatness concerning his not understanding TRʿM teachings in the heavenly academy. They are explained in their place; see there.[TN190233]

From all the foregoing comes a weighty, hidden mystery concerning the skull of Jehoiakim king of Judah, which Rabbi Perida's ancestor found outside Jerusalem's gates. He buried it, but it emerged again, until he hid it in his chest; his wife found and burned it, since “This, and yet another” was written on it. See Heleq.[TN190234] He said: the earlier ones did not know how to provoke above. For while the bucket was tied by the cord of his folly, he would only[?] draw stored water from broken cisterns; rather, he said to abandon that fountain of living waters and cut the shoots: do we need Him in the stature of the man above? His light is Ein Sof’s light, giving life to all. Anyone believing one of His blessed creatures is separate from Him, even vermin and creeping things, cuts the shoots, heaven forbid; see Sefer Ha-Berit.[TN190235] Thus his statement, “⟨We have⟩ gold of Parvaim”[?]: it is the image’s head of gold, also encompassing all the statures of all shells, in Isaac’s bosom. This is Parvaim, resembling bulls’ blood: PR, PRYM, from MNṢPKh, as known. It is reckoned as Ein Sof in relation to the external powers, as explained in the words of the book Limmudei Aṣilut. Therefore he takes its light, saying that their own Ein Sof suffices for their influx, and there is no need for Ein Sof itself, heaven forbid.[TN190236]

He was therefore punished measure for measure: his skull was not buried, “there it was hidden,” because their head never descends to their body. His body is literally buried with a donkey's burial, or in dogs' intestines, according to the respective views—two shells, a braying donkey and barking dogs. Of the skull, however, it is written, “Cast outside Jerusalem's gates,” the entrance of the Pavement of Sapphire's palace, the vast land, as above, indicating his cutting. Thus even the skull was uprooted from its root, until “yet another” was fulfilled in it through a woman speaking with her husband. It returned and was consumed through the righteous woman mentioned above, becoming burnt ash to be made into the dough of “You shall tread upon the wicked,” mentioned above. Through these righteous people the skull was in any event rectified. Because of these fools, should the Holy One, blessed be He, destroy His world? Rather, with poured-out wrath the Supreme King will reign over all Israel.[TN190237] The skull necessarily had to remain in holiness, but his body was nevertheless not rectified and remained there for all the external powers' statures. Examine it.[TN190238]

Therefore he was not numbered among those lacking a share in the world to come, since he merited rectification through these righteous people. It was unlike what Hillel said to the skull floating on water, likewise denied burial and separated from its body. By the holy spirit Hillel saw that it resembled Jehoiakim's skull: he cut the shoots and rejected the blessed Ein Sof's light. This is ʾaṭefta, translating “You extinguished his lamp”—“you extinguished the light,” saying “Light of Ein Sof, depart from us.” He was therefore judged by precisely this measure, like Jehoiakim, but was not rectified like them. Rather, “In the end those who drowned you will be drowned,” also in the manner of the last rectification mentioned above. As for “one who consults the dead,” our sages, of blessed memory, explained: one consulting a skull, in their root hidden in holiness. These are certainly dead: “Cut off its head, and will it not die?”[TN190239] These precious observations suffice, inclusive, hinted, bound with cords of love.

Now let us return to the author's intention, of blessed memory. As stated above, those

rectifications were made for the world of rectification of the six extremities that emerged on the first day from the nose, as above; for they became the mystery of ʾerekh ʾappayim, patience: Arikh Anpin, Long Countenance. This is the attribute of patience entrusted to the possessor of the nose, Tiferet.[TN190240]

In the words' plain sense, and in our matter, Lesser Countenance encompasses the six extremities; its hidden aspect is the Name of 45, King Hadar, splendor to him, extending in its way and clothing itself in all the holy ones raised and linked together, head with body, as above. All this is explained in its place on many sheets, beyond thought's grasp, for these matters are deep, exalted and lofty, requiring a strong mind to receive them. The author, of blessed memory, elucidated in this intention what he said earlier. Everything is clear to one understanding the foregoing; there is no need to repeat it. Thus his conclusion is well understood: “It is written: a moment in His anger,” for the external power first takes root in the nose and will be annulled below in the mouth. Enough of this.

Now, my brothers and friends, having understood this chapter's essentials, let us also explain the author's expositions, of blessed memory. He follows his own reasons and arguments, expounding and receiving reward. He says: after the whole external stature becomes game in Esau's mouth, its flesh ended, what extraordinary force does Amalek's erasure have beyond theirs? Thus he says Amalek is head of adversaries: his name contains four shells, the power of the four court-imposed deaths, opposite holiness's four YHWH letters, as known in the confessions. He thus stands against Lesser Countenance in holiness, just as the four YHWH letters within it[?] came from the nose, as above, in the mystery of life's breath in its nostrils—its vitality. Although holy Lesser Countenance was rectified by patience, Long Countenance, Amalek has no portion or inheritance in this. He is therefore also erased from Esau's nose, and the same applies higher in the degrees mentioned above.[TN190241]

Every heaven is Lesser Countenance and every earth his feminine counterpart. Thus heaven is nose, beneath heaven is mouth, the feminine counterpart's revelation, as above. Of the righteous, however, it says they were hidden “at the LORD's mouth”: within the nose above the mouth, for their life-house is there even after death, having been rectified in the first rectification. Enough of this.

This is his statement that Amalek and Balaam have one name, in one of the alphabets of the 231 gates, in which bet exchanges with qof. They correspond to Moses and Jacob in holiness, the configuration of Lesser Countenance; likewise Balaam and Amalek are the shells' Lesser Countenance, of the worthless man.[TN190242] Moses therefore had to transmit Balaam's section to Joshua, several verses containing Balaam's death. They are unnecessary in Joshua's book too, as explained in the book ShLH. “Likewise, behold, in Balaam literally”: therefore it was also given to be written in Joshua's book, transmitted to him like the transmission of Amalek's erasure. Only because it was small did Joshua append it to his book.[TN190243] This section is Balaam's section, unlike the interpreters' plain explanation, since it is obvious that the Torah must contain all of Balak's and Balaam's section. Understand.

Amalek's four forms are explained thus: first without the last letter, then without the letter next to the last; then without the first, then without the letter next to the first. The form ʿamal: “You behold trouble,” everywhere; from it comes the cooks' ʿamilan, absorbing every impurity, “and by its power, exertion and scouring the impurities, even of ʾR” [?], like what we learned, “One does not exert oneself,” etc.[TN190244] The form ʿamaq is the white drop of seminal emission. Jonathan's Targum of ⟨“sprawling upon their couches”⟩ is “stretching out upon their couches”[?]: they were stained with wicked whiteness—semen that was not theirs, etc. So too the white ʿamaqi raven; consult the Arukh. This is Laban, whitened in wickedness, from whom Balaam is whitened in wickedness—this defilement[?] is in Zohar, Balak; see there. Therefore he is judged by it.[TN190245]

The form malaq is pinching off, breaking the neck and killing. The form ʿalaq: “The leech has two daughters,” etc.; this is Gehinnom's fire. As for his words “in order,” implying the order set out here, I do not know their explanation, for ʿalaq would allude to burning, Gehinnom's fire; killing to malaq; stoning to ʿamaq, a troubled valley, etc., since those stoned are thrown “from beyond” [?] into the valley. This suffices: the author's expositions follow their custom, “to walk in them” [?], wherever they occur.

He also says the word ruṭafash in Job 33 has four compositions: “His flesh shall be softer than in youth; he shall return to his youthful days.” The whole passage concerns resurrection; see there. The Arukh and the concordance skipped its place, for this word has no companion in Scripture. The Arukh instead brought it under ṭarafas, explaining it by its Targum, “His flesh became thin,” like ṭarfesha, with letters reversed, meaning soft.[TN190247] The author means that four operations must be performed on a wound, hinted by four words, like a skilled physician. First he cleans the wound itself, then applies dusting[?], binding and softening with oil or something else, each corresponding to another.[TN190248] A bruise, a wound not open, needs softening with oil, as known in this craft. A fresh wound needs binding, a dressing made like a wick, which they put into it to draw off filth. An open wound without pus needs sprinkling: fine, well-ground powder is scattered on it, then it is tied with a piece to bring it together. These are skilled remedies.[TN190249] There is another: washing the wound with clear water, like what we learned, “They bathe [it] with cold [water]”. Ṭaraf and raṭaf are one matter in the Arukh; see there. Raṭaf is like raṭav, which Ralbag explained as moisture: they are dampness. This is one form; three remain, raṭash, refesh and ṭafash.[TN190250]

In truth, explaining them is not obligatory: perhaps he has another reversed substitution, since each has six “houses”. I am neither prophet nor prophet's son, and no one tells me what the four forms are, as explained for Amalek. Here he left them unspecified; in my humble view, he therefore gives them only generally because they are fitting expositions in his opinion. Understand.[TN190251] Readers may find it somewhat laughable: who has given each a heart to understand so much? He therefore relied on the reader examining that treatise on resurrection, and left it unspecified[?], he of blessed memory. Nevertheless, these four forms too seem to follow exactly the order of the four made from Amalek, precisely. They are raṭash, refesh and ṭafash, as above. The form ṭafah is softening with oil or honey; consult the concordance in its place. Raṭash clearly means crushing the sprinkling-powder. As for the term refesh, its explanation is like muck and mud, turbid waters, which is a fresh purulent wound; conversely, clear water without muck and mud—therefore it is sometimes open. Consult the Arukh. [TN190252] There is no need to prolong it pointlessly, writing upon paper and writing upon time. He calls it a wonder of the holy tongue that one word includes four forms belonging to it. [TN190253]

If Amalek has an additional erasure from the nose, “upon P” [?], his existence must remain as a fine trace higher up, in the ear above the nose. This is “Place in Joshua's ears,” explained in the next chapter. It is easy for one who has attained to understand, yet who can encompass it [?]? It is exceedingly deep and can be explained only mouth to the questioner's ear. I shall set chapter-headings before you, “from the mother to the tradition which is with you”: Joshua, Moses's attendant, a youth, did not depart from Moses's tent, with everything said of him, in the likeness of MṬṬ.[TN190254] “Train a youth according to his way,” Lesser Countenance's way; “even when he grows old,” being Abraham's servant, the elder of his household, “he will not depart from it,” precisely: the actual tent. They merited three aspects: his head in Creation, where Mother nests, rooted in the ear; his belly, the middle third, in Formation, where the Holy One, blessed be He, Lesser Countenance, nests, rooted in the nose; his feet, the lower third, in Making, where the feminine counterpart and Lesser Countenance nest, rooted in the mouth.[TN190255]

When Rachel and Leah unite with Jacob, atonement is effected[?] through Joseph’s remembrance, as one of the two lower [ones]; nevertheless, there is some smoke in the LORD’s nose, and breath blazes from Him, as explained in the Idra, even though at the time of union everything brings contentment before Him, blessed be He. Therefore, for Amalek’s many evils, the Holy One’s nose will smoke, and he will be erased from the book of life, as above. But in the upper union no smoke is seen, only very subtle breath; there is complete contentment, and sparks flare[?]. Enough of this. And study it with doubled wisdom[?]. Thus far. The above eminent master’s explanation is exceedingly sharp and deep, and requires much examination and study.[TN190256]

But I, the small Moses, offer my weak opinion. The interpreters too explain “Amalek is the first of nations, and his latter end is utter loss” thus. At first [?] it is difficult: why is he head of adversaries more than all other nations? He saw four righteous men hinted in his name: Amram, Moses, Levi and Kohath. Scripture therefore says “first of nations”: he saw his name in their initial letters but did not see the ending, for the ends of their names are “death”: Amram's mem, Levi's yod, Kohath's tav, Moses's he. Thus “his latter end is utter loss” hints at the final letters MYTH, death, as they explained. [TN190257] It is known that the Name's four letters atone for the four court-imposed deaths, as the Ari, of blessed memory, wrote in Tiqqun Shabbat: yod atones for stoning, the first he for burning, vav for execution by sword, the second he for strangulation. Thus I said concerning Cain, “The LORD placed a sign upon Cain”: the Zohar explains that He marked the Name's vav on his forehead. Why specifically vav, or why all this? According to this it is well resolved: vav atones for execution by sword; Cain owed that death because he killed his brother Abel. Thus Scripture says, “Anyone who kills Cain,” etc., implying he was liable to execution. The Holy One, blessed be He, therefore marked vav on his forehead to atone for it. I already wrote this above, part I, chapter 18, but here our exposition's path is clearer.

We must preface one small introduction, “in a man's palm.” Amalek combines two names: ʿM from Balaam, LQ from Balak. They are also “ʿamal and ʾawen,” “and divination from Israel”. For my relative, MHRN [?], peace be upon him, of Kraków, wrote on “You made man ride upon our head; we entered fire and water,” expounding great matters briefly: “You made man ride”—combining two sexual transgressions; “we entered fire and water” for idolatry, “Their gods' images you shall burn with fire,” and also for carrion and torn flesh, whose death is croup, strangulation. This is what they said in the midrash—[TN190258]

—when a Gentile saw a Jew in the market, the Persian said, “Tomorrow I shall strangle you.” Therefore Esther said, “I am poured out like water,” “and all my bones came apart.” Because they sinned at that wicked man's banquet, they were liable to strangulation, their death being in water, as stated: the judgment of the four deaths has not ceased. Someone liable to strangulation may drown in a river. Therefore she said “like water.”[TN190259]

Because they bowed to the image, they were liable to stoning. As said, “stoning includes ... [abbreviation unresolved]”; hence “all my bones came apart,” falling from two statures high. And M’ [?] said, “My only one from a dog's hand”: one eating carrion reincarnates as a dog. Therefore Amalek is called “he licked a people like a dog,” and the best butcher is Amalek's partner.[TN190260]

Let us return to Balak and Balaam. Through the power of the endings of Balak and Balaam comes the subjugation [?] of Samael and his company. Raʿaya Mehemna says there are four shells, two males and two females. Awen, iniquity, and ʿamal, trouble, are the males; naḥash, augury/snake, and qesem, divination, the females.[TN190261] Balak and Balaam saw Amalek, first of nations, joined with ʿamal and qesem: the letters of ʿamal plus qof from qesem. SM remains from qesem, the SM of Samael; naḥash is there, and ʾL remains from Samael, the alien god. Balaam took ʿM from Amalek and Balak LQ from Amalek. Haman also took the shell ʿamal; therefore it is said concerning him, “His trouble shall return upon his head”: ʿamal heads the shells; qesem is his feminine counterpart. “Upon his crown, his violence”: the two letters remaining from qesem, of qesem which Amalek took. Amalek's qof is expounded upon qodqod, crown: through his image Haman drew from the crown above, “as he completed Amalek entirely.”

Accordingly Balak's shell was awen, male; opposite it naḥash, its feminine counterpart. Balaam is the shell ʿamal, opposite his feminine counterpart, as is known concerning the four faces: Israel and Jacob, Israel with Leah, Jacob with Rachel. See Zohar, Ki Teṣe, page 545.[TN190262] They hint at the four deaths, for these four men hinted in his name atone for them. He wished to arrange the four deaths in order; hence: ʿamal lacks Kohath, ʿamaq lacks Levi, malaq lacks Amram, ʿalaq lacks Moses. We begin where he ended.

The midrash says Pharaoh told Shiphrah and Puah: as soon as she sits on the birthstool, strangle the children. Moses protected against strangulation, for immediately when Moses was thrown into the sea, might was annulled. Zohar, Bereshit, page 139, says: “Therefore, ‘For from the water I drew him’—shin, three fathers; this is ⟨mem-shin⟩ from Moses; he, the lower Divine Presence,” etc.; see there.[TN190263] Thus Moses is he, the Divine Presence; the final he atones for strangulation. Hence he removed mem from Amalek's name for strangulation.

Amram atones for execution by sword. Amram is called man: “A man of Levi went.” Literally it is man, from “a whole man,” Jacob, the Matron's husband, Tiferet, the Name's vav. Vav atones for execution. Thus the Zohar says, “A man of Levi went and took Levi's daughter”: she is the Divine Presence, “MKhL this” [?]. Man is therefore Tiferet; see Zohar, Shemot.[TN190264] We then say in the midrash: because Levi's tribe had no share in idolatry, they are the upper King's troops, and the Holy One, blessed be He, chose them for Himself. Of idolatry it is written, “Their gods' images you shall burn with fire,” as above. Levi therefore atones for burning; this permutation lacks lamed, hinting at Levi, who atoned for burning. Thus of Levi: “This time my husband, ʾishi, will join me.” She did not say baʿali but ʾishi, the mystery of two fires, Torah's fire and the offerings' fire. Likewise in the Gemara the supervisor says, “My lord, high priest”; he specifically used this wording. That mystery is there. Therefore she repeated the two letters in “will join, my husband” [?]: yod at the beginning and he at the end; yod hints at stoning and he at burning.[TN190265] Thus Levi has yod within his name, at its beginning and end he is also called Levi; he lacks he, for he hints at and atones for burning.

Then he said ʿamal, lacking Kohath's qof: Kohath atones for stoning through yod. The interpreters asked why the LORD's chosen holy tribe was fewer than all tribes when the reverse was fitting. R. ʾM [?] answers: they were not under hard labor in Egypt, so they were not included in “As they afflicted them, so they multiplied,” etc.[TN190266] But was the LORD's hand too short to multiply Levi's tribe? Rather, they explained that Levi's tribe had been honored[?] since Egypt because of their holiness, studying Torah handed down from their father Jacob through the tradition of Abraham, Isaac, Shem and Eber. This was especially true of Kohath, who gathered assemblies to expound the LORD's Torah publicly. This is Kohath: “to him shall be the peoples' obedience”. Solomon too is called Qohelet after Kohath, doing like Kohath, wise in Torah and gathering assemblies like him. Lamed is because he was king with thirty distinctions. See Ṣeror Ha-Mor, Vayeṣe, Vayeḥi and Bemidbar.[TN190267]

Because they studied Torah, called tushiyyah, it weakened them. They had no sons because they constantly studied day and night. The Holy One, blessed be He, gave them custody of the sanctuary; because of this[?], they had no sons. Therefore Kohath was counted first, before Gershon's sons: they possessed Torah and wisdom more than all his brothers. Levi's sons excel all tribes, and Kohath excels Levi's whole tribe.[TN190268] Thus "Do not cut off the tribe of the Kohathite families": ha-Qehati begins with he and ends with yod. Yod is called a stone, as the Zohar wrote in Shofeṭim: "To judge Samael by stoning, with a stone—this is yod." In Pineḥas, Raʿaya Mehemna, page 432, on "May He bless you, shine, lift," it says: "From the right side, called stone, and many moist stones," etc., "from which are Torah's waters. Therefore Rabbi Aqiva told his disciples: when you reach stones of marble, do not say 'Water, water,'" etc. "These are Torah's waters, of which it is said, 'Torah is light.'" See the entire passage until "He beheld no iniquity in Jacob, nor trouble in Israel," etc.: "Immediately one stone was revealed from three stones which are like the segolta sign, of which it is said, 'In the thirtieth year'; they are yod, yod, yod." See there.[TN190269] Thus Kohath atones for stoning: wise in Torah, the stone of stoning, Torah being higher Hokhmah, called yod, Father. Hence it says, "He saw no trouble, ʿamal, in Israel."[TN380071] Thus the four deaths are hinted in these permutations, in order: ʿamal, stoning, lacking Kohath; ʿamaq, lacking Levi, burning; malaq, lacking Amram, execution; ʿalaq, lacking Moses, strangulation. Examine well and it will bring satisfaction. Anyone with a brain in his skull will understand more of this matter on this premise. Thus far is what seems to me, Moses Levi.

"Here we need Torah's secrets": Tiqqunim asks: Jacob is Tiferet; how do they say Moses is? It answers: Moses within, through Daʿat's mystery, when Tiferet ascends between Hokhmah and Binah and mediates between them. This encompasses Tiferet in its head. Jacob is without, Tiferet in its own place. Likewise Balaam and Amalek: Balaam within, as "knowing the Most High's knowledge"—examine it—and Amalek without. Writing Balaam and Amalek, Balaam appears on one side above, from above downward; Amalek on the second side below and from above downward, thus:

Likewise fear, yirʾah, and love, ʾahavah: fear above and from above downward on one side, love on the second side below and from above downward, thus:

"His sin and punishment": "the diviner" is his sin; "killed with the sword" is his punishment. "The word ruṭafash": we explained above.

"For a moment in His anger": regaʿ has the initials of reʾshit goyim ʿAmaleq, first of nations, Amalek. This follows the words of the Zohar, "He makes clouds His chariot": ʿBYM has the initials Amalek, Balaam, Jacob, Moses. Likewise "Behold, the clouds are high"; Balaam and Amalek have the numerical value of Egypt.[TN190270] This is what the LORD did in Egypt: there Balaam came in Amalek's power to obstruct Israel, as in Zohar, Balak, page 392, 303. With that hand the Holy One, blessed be He, came and confused their counsel, in the mystery of "They came to Goren Ha-Aṭad"—[Ha-Aṭad] having the numerical value of "the hand"— as in Zohar, Vaʾera, page 21. This is the hand He employed in Egypt.

"To be annulled below": below the neck they will be annulled, for the external powers have no holiness there. Their existence in the head, in holiness, through the mystery of Esau's head, etc., as above, endures forever. Amalek, however, will be erased from there too. "Concealed above the nose": in the ear, from its rear, as below, chapter 9. Examine it.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) The word "robe" in "Also the Teacher will robe Himself in blessings," mentioned in the preceding chapter, is not far from the sages' exposition in Tanḥuma, quoted in Yalqut Psalms, on "He will judge among the nations, full of bodies." They said: "Every soul Esau killed from Israel—as it were, the Holy One, blessed be He, takes each soul's blood and dips His purple robe in it until it is dyed with blood. When judgment day comes and He sits over him on the tribunal to judge him, He wears that purple robe and shows him every righteous person's body inscribed upon it, as written, 'He will judge among the nations, full of bodies.' Then He takes vengeance upon him," etc.; see there. It is also in Zohar, Bereshit. Here it means that the blessed LORD will wear that purple robe, as explained ahead.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) Of it is written “On the day of evil,” at the destruction, “He tore His garment.” The sages explained: He tore His purple robe. The blessed LORD did not stir on its behalf then, but tore His robe.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) Then, at a favorable time, when the blessed LORD has mercy on the wicked in Gehinnom, He will wear it because those holy, pious people shed tears like a stream over the wicked, as in the preceding chapter, advocating for them. Thus “also blessings,” words of advocacy, “the Teacher will robe Himself in.”

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Including,” etc.: the purple robe also includes providence's garments, His blessed attributes. This robe vindicates providence's judgments, as “Who is this coming from Edom?” etc.; “Why is Your clothing red?” etc.; “Their lifeblood spattered My garments, and all My garments ʾegʾalti” (Isaiah 63). The verb ʾegʾalti combines past and future: ʾegʾal is future, gaʾalti past. It is not as the interpreters thought, as though he said higʾalti, “for only aleph is missing in place of he” [?]. Furthermore, the verb shares the senses of staining and soiling and of redeeming. The reason follows.[TN190271]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) It means I shall stain/redeem them in the future as I did in the past, meaning—

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) —at first His blessed garments were, as it were, stained and soiled with the blood of those killed by royal decree: the holy ones on earth who died sanctifying His blessed name. Thus providence's garments, His blessed attributes, were also redeemed from the accusation the heavenly princes brought against Israel, since the holy ones atoned for them. So it will be in the future at vengeance.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) The garments had to be stained and soiled with the killers' blood. Thus the garments and His blessed attributes were also redeemed from the fathers' covenant: His attributes were pledged to them to execute judgment and vengeance under the LORD's covenant with them. As the sages said in Bereshit Rabbah on “And also the nation they serve I shall judge”: “also” includes the kingdoms' subjugation. When the LORD fulfilled His word then, the garments were redeemed. This is “All My garments ʾegʾalti”: I shall stain and soil them in the future, and also redeem them, as in the past, when they were stained and soiled and also redeemed. The staining sense hints at the purple robe engraved with the holy ones' souls; redemption hints at higher providence's garments and His blessed attributes' governance. As we said, the robe includes both.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) In ʾegʾalti we learned the reason for shared meaning, belonging to two senses, and for composition, combining past and future, etc.—a true and firm reason.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “This is Esau,” etc.: Galante explains this on “They sit on the ground, silent, the elders of Zion's daughter; they put dust upon their heads.” He says: “‘Their heads’: the skull's mystery descends through all worlds. Since all worlds descend from ten, every ten has a skull. So too their particular aspects, each including ten and ten from ten, contain the skull's mystery. As my master, of blessed memory, said in the Idra concerning ‘How many skulls sit as reward for the threshing floors [?] of the Ancient of Days.’ One of the companions explained it through ‘The reward of a commandment is a commandment’: it is first in emanation to its Maker, exalted above all blessing and praise. ‘And for his reward,’ all longings [?] from many skulls are received by him and may not enter without him. This is wondrous. [TN190272]

“Our masters' tradition already teaches that even harsh shells have a skull's mystery concealed in holiness, like Esau's head buried in the Cave of Machpelah in Isaac's bosom, as Jonathan ben Uzziel says in his Torah translation. Hence the wicked are called dead while alive: their head is cut off, hidden and rooted in holiness, while the remainder of their stature is separated from holiness, in the mystery of the separations between the Pavement of Sapphire's palace and the opening of the great abyss. In Eglah ʿArufah: they bring the head to the body, Rabbi Eliezer's words, in the mystery of holiness ‘stretching’ [?] downward to sanctify all the links. Rabbi Aqiva says the body to the head, in the mystery of the rectification handed down to us. [TN190273] stature is annulled, all its limbs and branches are swallowed into their root, the concealed head. Through this mystery 'The cruel head/venom of serpents—is it not concealed with Me, sealed in My treasuries?' can be expounded beautifully. 'A stranger already suffices you' [?] to diminish alienness at its hidden place: there it is altogether modest and acknowledges the Head of all heads. [TN190274] No aspect of the skull is nearer revelation than the mouth. There 'He gathers to Himself his spirit and soul,' causing the powers extending throughout the days of desire to be concealed. This is a wondrous, soul-sweet reason for 'Isaac loved Esau, for game was in his mouth': it attributes the righteous man's love for that son to his future purification of himself and the whole world.

"For head [gap], the entire shell's ten sefirot, RMQ [?], in his ordering, is yod, aleph, BYM [?], closed and concealed in the act of 'that flies' [?], skull, the head of serpents mentioned. This is the meaning of 'sealed,' so it can be numbered 'in My treasuries': among all closed treasuries not destined to extend again is this head of serpents. Its concealment there forever is necessary, since its emanation will not disappear entirely. It testifies to His kingdom's rule over all, sanctifying everything with its holiness."[TN190275]

"Thus far, a wise man's gracious words, from the mentioned one, as mentioned" [?]: knop and flower. Likewise these elders, "all explanations," contain the skull's mystery. Thus "They put dust upon their heads," etc.; see there.[TN190276]

Briefly, all this means: as holiness contains the stature's mystery, head, skull and other parts, so does the shell, for God made this opposite that, as known. The shell's head is rooted in holiness, unlike the rest of its body. In the future, when the shell is annulled and rectified through its head's holy root, the rest of its stature and limbs will be swallowed into its head, specifically its mouth, the aspect nearest revelation. This is "Isaac loved Esau, for game": the shell's annulment will occur in Esau's mouth. The "one of the companions" Galante mentions is the master. Accordingly the master here calls Esau "full of bodies": in the future he will include the shell's stature's bodies, all its branches and limbs swallowed into his skull. The blessed LORD will judge him to rectify him, as explained below, chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) "According to our interpretation": the interpretation we set forth of this verse, spread among many through the commentator Galante in Qinat Setarim.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) "To complete the explanation," etc.: that exposition explains the erasure of Amalek's seed commanded by Torah.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) When the shell's stature gathers from all the body and limbs into the head and mouth, to become sweetened game included in Esau's mouth in the future, after he is purified.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) "Additional" to the judgment of Esau's other sons: all are rectified in the holy stature's mouth, the aspect nearest revelation in the whole skull, after acknowledging the Head of all heads. Amalek differs: he is wholly expelled from there, from mouth and nose, the two erasures. His rectification is only from the ear, through the mystery of the backs, as explained below, chapter 11.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) "Whose mystery is heaven": heaven designates Tiferet, as known. The nose too is Tiferet; the mouth is Malkhut below the nose, Tiferet, as all mentioned in the Idra.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) This is intended by "I shall surely erase": two erasures, from heaven and beneath heaven. Erasure from heaven means the attribute of patience, entrusted to the nose's possessor, will not apply to Amalek. Patience is Tiferet; Rav Hamnuna said of it in the Idra, "To the possessor of the nose I pray."

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) Amalek, first of the nations to distress Israel, dared this because he belonged to harsh shells. He is named for four combinations from his name: ʿamal, ʿamaq, ʿalaq, malaq, removing one letter in order from below upward. These four names correspond to stoning, burning, execution and strangulation, four harsh shells. Zohar, Pequdei, page 463, says: "When the Other Side arouses its palace to rule through accusation [gap], the four court-imposed deaths—stoning, burning, execution, strangulation—are all the commission of evil accusation. Stoning, because it is a stumbling stone; burning, a fire of stumbling, fierce fire; execution, 'a sharp sword shall eat flesh,' fit to rule flesh: this is the end of all flesh; strangulation, because it is God's curse, ruling strangling and swallowing," etc.; see there. Stoning is explicitly the harsh shell Samael, a stumbling stone. From Zohar, Balak, page 390, we know it is called "trouble in Israel," ʿamal. ʿAmaq is burning's shell, Gehinnom's fierce fire, deep Sheol. ʿAlaq is execution's shell, ruling flesh, like the worm growing in rivers, desiring human and animal flesh and attaching to their feet when they pass through water. This worm is called ʿalaq, mentioned by our masters "because of the danger of a leech." Malaq is strangulation's shell, for malaq means strangling, as in Zohar, Ṣav, page 49, Raʿaya Mehemna, on "He shall pinch off its head"; see there.[TN190277]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) As expounded in Heleq (folio 106): "Balaam son of Beor, the diviner, the Israelites killed with the sword among their slain." Rav said they fulfilled four deaths upon him: stoning, burning, execution and strangulation.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) "Here," etc.: our association of Balaam's four deaths with Amalek follows their equal degree on impurity's side. Moses and Jacob are both on holiness's side, differing only in Moses being within and Jacob without, as in Tiqqunim, explained in Pardes and Yonat Elem. So too Balaam and Amalek.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) Balaam is within in impurity, like Moses within in holiness.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) We explained above, part III, chapter 9.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) Because Balaam corresponds in impurity to Moses's degree, Moses wrote Balaam's section, as in Bava Batra's first chapter.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) It begins "Moses gave," etc.; it is in Joshua (13).

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) "From here": from "among their slain."

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) This verse specifies his sin: "the diviner." They said there: a diviner? Was he not a prophet? Rabbi Yoḥanan said: first a prophet, finally a diviner, when he set his eyes on cursing Israel.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) As Isaiah attached to his book two prophetic verses prophesied by Beeri: "When they say to you," etc.; "To Torah and testimony," etc. (Isaiah 8).

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) "The hint comes," etc.: the combination mentioned in Amalek's name, hinting at four shells, resembles that in ruṭafash, "His flesh shall be fresh more than youth" (Job 33). Likewise four: raṭav, raṭash, rafas, ṭafash, hinting at four operations needed to heal wounds. These are sprinkling a wound with powdered medicaments, binding it with anointed dressings as customary, cleaning it, and softening it with oil. These three tasks occur in "They were not sprinkled, not bound, not softened with oil." There is also a fourth: bringing healing skin over it as before. Raṭav, moisture and dampness, hints at softening; raṭash, scattering, at scattering medicaments, a merchant's powder; rafas at spreading dressings resembling mud, from refos ṭiṭ, trampling mud; ṭafash, blockage, at completing and closing the skin.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) "In manual practice": medical scholars divide into two parts. One treats things arising inside the body, where the hand cannot reach. The other treats bruises, wounds and fresh blows usual in outer limbs, where the practitioner uses both hands to heal them with a plaster, ointment and the like. Hence it is called manual practice.

Yad Yehudah - כח

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) "It is written," etc.: he returns to the earlier statement that patience, entrusted to the nose's possessor, does not apply to Amalek at all. Thus "For a moment is in His anger" (Isaiah 54): the external powers' initial rooting, like a moment and the blink of an eye at twilight, as known, occurred in His blessed nose, the nose's possessor. Although they will be annulled below in the body, their existence remains in holiness at their root, when the whole stature gathers in His mouth. Amalek differs, being erased from there by two erasures, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“He has already mentioned, the sage,” etc. That is, the author of Pardes; see Or Neʿerav, chapter 2, section 5. “His soul was grieved[?]”: he distressed himself over someone who asked him a question, called “poor[?]” because he had not yet attained the depth of the mystery. He made himself heavy[?] because he could not answer him the mystery. He said that he did not answer him because the questioner's mind could not bear it; he answered the question only for himself, and we do not know what the answer is. The difficulty was: the things that we wrote in the book—KNS[?]—it is written, “this as a memorial in the book”; how can he place them in Joshua's ears?[TN190278]

“With what is said, ‘The Kenite withdrew,’” etc. Briefly, the intention is that the nations' rectification will be through Metatron, characterized as the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, who is between the world of Creation and the world of Formation, where a little evil begins. They will have rectification both in his mouth and in the nose, wherever it is. That

“The Lord said to Moses: Write this as a memorial in the book, and place it in Joshua's ears.” The sage has already mentioned, in the chapters that he placed before the brief preliminaries he wrote for beginners in wisdom—“place it in their mouths”—what grieved his soul concerning a poor questioner: since a scriptural verse does not depart from its plain meaning, is it possible, in this commandment, after it was given to be written in a scroll of a book, that it should be placed literally in Joshua's ears? He said that he answered this question for himself and his peers, because that questioner's mind could not bear it; we have not merited his explanation until now. As for what Rashba ha-Levi copied, in his explanation of the passage beginning “Jacob, Moses, and Joseph go as one,” from the words of Ibn Farḥi, consult it there.

Consider this place: how exalted are Joshua's ears for this designation, together with what is said, “The Kenite withdrew from among Amalek.” For the ears of the stature of Joshua son of Nun, a youth in the world of that supernal Youth who is characterized as the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, are the particular receptacle above the nose in which, through Moses our master, peace be upon him, the true unification is engraved and written. This is “this, a is, it is obvious that, from the aspect of their vitality above, they will have rectification even in the mouth as well, except for Amalek. This is the mystery of “Happy is he who repays you your recompense,” by the sword and strangulation, by every kind of suffering; through this they will have rectification. “And dashes your infants against the rock”: Metatron is called a rock. Amalek will have two erasures, as above, from the mouth and from the nose; only in the ear, which is a subtle impression and is above the nose, will he have rectification.

This is what Moses our master, peace be upon him, said: “Write, and ʾet”—that is, take the influx from “and ʾet,” which is Malkhut; “and memorial,” which is Yesod; “in the book,” Tiferet. This is Rachel, Joseph, Jacob: Rachel is Malkhut; Joseph, Yesod; Jacob, Tiferet, which is the principal unification. Place that influx in Joshua's ears, which is Metatron: there he will therefore have rectification. “For I shall surely erase the memory of Amalek from beneath the heavens”: from heaven, which is Tiferet, the nose, and beneath heaven, which is the mouth; thus precisely in Joshua's ears. This is the mystery of "The Kenite withdrew"—he is Jethro—"from among Amalek," for he does not need rectification through the ear alone. This explains the verse "Strong is your dwelling, and place your nest in the rock," which is Metatron, called the rock. [TN190279]

"Qadlohu[?]," etc., etc.: in the manner of Midrash Rabbah, portion Jethro, "I did not rest, and I was not at ease, and agitation came"—this is the agitation[?] of Amalek. Also, because he has no rectification in wrath and rising[?], which is the nose, it is called agitation. [TN190280]

"Numerically Maṣpan": this is the Name YHWH in atbash, as above in part II, chapter 32.[TN190281]

"Rather, what was permitted to other prophets," etc. For there, in that passage in Bereshit on page 100, he explains Moses's superiority to Joshua, excluding Elisha. See the Zohar, Beshalah, on page 77, for he is in Moses's grade—under the name of Elijah his master—and therefore they had greater power than Joshua. "By the designation 'my sister, my companion,'" etc. His meaning is: the attribute Malkhut is called "my sister, my companion," memorial, in the book"; its mnemonic is Rachel, Joseph, and Jacob, as is known in the language of truth. When it is stored away there, "there the wicked cease from agitation, and there the weary of strength rest."

From there we may also learn a praiseworthy explanation of what is said to Joshua: "Every man who rebels against your mouth, in everything that you command us, shall die." The sages said: Could this apply even to a matter of transgression? Scripture teaches: "Only be strong"—in Torah—"and courageous"—in commandments. Joshua is not suspected, heaven forbid. Rather, what was permitted to other prophets as a temporary instruction, such as Elijah on Mount Carmel, concerning whom it is written, "To him you shall listen"—anything of this kind was forbidden to Joshua, lest people say, "Moses has not yet died, and we have abandoned his teaching." Moreover, Joshua's face is the face of the moon, and the moon has nothing of its own. This is raq, "only," numerically Maṣpaṣ: the female surrounds the great Name. Concerning her it is written of Israel, "You shall be only above," by the designation "my sister, my companion." Likewise, "be strong and courageous" numerically equals 252, the limbs of the weak female, who has two hinges and two doors and needs strengthening; as it is written, "For He has strengthened the bars of your gates"—the mystery of modesty—and then, "He has blessed your children within you." We explained this in the Treatise Em Kol Hai.

Therefore the elders of that generation said, "Alas for that shame," and were in the mystery of the two faces before the diminution of the moon. "Yokhti[?], my perfect one," above—this itself is "my sister," kevor[?] the two great lights—when she rises to resemble the male. "My dove, my perfect one" is below. This is "You shall be only above": the Name Maṣpan has the numerical value of raq.[TN190282]

"In speaking and saying," etc. See the Zohar, portion Shemot: speaking is Malkhut, and saying is also this, but above; these are two good grades. Speaking is Malkhut's aspect in her place, and her equality with Tiferet is called saying. There is no need to explain further; see Pardes, the Gate of the Entries of Appellations.

(b) The pious R. Moses Cordovero, of blessed memory, has already written in Or Neʿerav, part III, in the preceding chapters, before part VI, which orders the preliminaries needed by beginners in the wisdom of Kabbalah, and part V, which orders the special qualities of the wisdom of Kabbalah. There, chapter 2, he wrote as follows: "The plain qualities are words in the Torah that are not well formed and not exact according to the plain meaning. That is, in the Torah: ‘Write this as a memorial in the book, and place it in Joshua's ears.’ And setting them up[?], one of those who philosophize in worship asked me and said: What is ‘place it in Joshua's ears,’ and why ‘to Joshua’? It should have said—because remiss in his eulogy, for they were occupied with another commandment: dividing the land among the men and determining its boundaries. Nevertheless, they should have considered that, in its division among the tribes, Scripture equated Joshua's prophecy with his master's in speaking and saying. Know this. We have already mentioned some of this in part IV, chapter 6; consult it there.

‘place,’ as it is written, means that he would write it in a section and Moses our master would put it into his ears. I answered him according to the plain meaning: the Torah speaks in human language, for a person says to his fellow about a matter, ‘Strengthen so-and-so, and make him swear.’ Do not believe that there will not come here a matter that we do not know—a mystery by which the language will be rectified. I told someone that it is known in wisdom. Of these he said, ‘the tears of the oppressed, and they have no comforter’: these are mysteries of Torah, deep and hidden from the intellect's eye. And I established [it] according to the way of truth in this, as will be explained in its place, with the help of Heaven.”[TN190283]

(e) “And what he copied,” etc. The master's intention is to explain this difficulty by the way that Rashba ha-Levi wrote in Ṣofnat Paʿneaḥ, in the explanation of the Haʾazinu passage in Raʿaya Mehemna, page 100, beginning “Moses and Jacob,” etc. The explanation of passages concerning the ear is not in our possession.

[gap] Malkhut, Yesod, and Tiferet. For “this” is an appellation of Malkhut, “memorial” of Yesod, and “book” of Tiferet. What is said, “in Joshua's ears,” intends Metatron of Joshua, as it is written, and in the manner of sapphires[?], in saying, “Joshua son of Nun, a youth, would not depart from within the tent.” The intention is Metatron, the supernal Youth. The matter is that Metatron is called:[TN190286]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) “The Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil”: for two princes[?] also draw nourishment from him, and through him they will be rectified in the future by cutting off power. This is not so for Amalek, who will be judged by two deaths, from the throne and from the seal, to erase the subtle impression that he had. This will be the rectification for the sides, through the death of other gods, for “the Lord is good to all, and His mercies are upon all His works.” According to this, the verse's sense will be: “Write this as a memorial in the book” is the true unification, and place it in the ears of Joshua—Metatron—[gap] designated for this, so that through this the subtle impression that will remain for Amalek will be rectified there. “For I shall surely erase the memory of Amalek from beneath the heavens,” from the throne and from the seal, etc. That is, precede in the ear[?]: in these two aspects they will never be rectified, and nothing will remain for them except a subtle impression fit to be handed over for rectification through this unification. “Place it in Joshua's ears”—the supernal Youth. This also is the intention of “The Kenite withdrew from among Amalek,” so that he will have rectification in these two worlds; that is, this—Amalek's legs[?]—which will need the two in the ear, in the lobes, a subtle

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) “The sages said”: in the chapter Nigmar ha-Din, folio 49.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(n) For Joshua is not suspected of commanding Israel to transgress the words of Torah without cause, so that it would have been necessary to say “only.” Rather, the intention is a temporary instruction: for one might have said that it is forbidden to Joshua to annul words of Torah by a temporary instruction, as “tomorrow we shall fight”[?]. Therefore he restricted it and said “only.” The reason that it is forbidden to Joshua is “lest people say,” etc.[TN190289]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(o) “Moreover”: herein is a reason for permission[?], namely, that they needed what is to be learned —“from his mouth you will learn the aforesaid stringency,” etc. This is because Joshua's face is the moon's face, Malkhut, and Moses's face is the sun's face, Tiferet. The moon has nothing of its own, only what it receives from the sun. Therefore Joshua may not do anything against Moses's Torah, even by a temporary instruction.[TN190290]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(p) This is in the restrictive designation in the verse's word raq, for raq numerically equals ʾLPṢ, which is a Name particular to Malkhut, as NQṢṢ, ḤSh, treasure[?]. But the Name YHWH, which is ṢLT ṢM ʾLPṢ, occurs in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 172. Thus in the word raq the matter of the moon's face opposite the sun's face is intimated, and this caused Joshua to strengthen himself in words of Torah even for a temporary instruction.[TN190291]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(q) “Concerning her it is written,” etc. It is in the Zohar, portion Terumah, page 234, as follows: “Come and see: BSh, etc. The first letters rise in their number, and the last letters descend in their number, in order to direct the eye from above downward,” etc.; see there. In Pardes, the Gate of Combination, chapter 7, he objected and said: according to this, the alphabet of LBGD, which indicates ascent, would be in the mystery of returning light, to receive the influx; and the alphabet of TShRQ would be in the mystery of direct light, to transmit below. Yet this is not what R. Simeon bar Yoḥai, peace be upon him, says in the Zohar on the Song of Songs, saying TShRQ in Emanation and LBGD in Tiferet. He, of blessed memory, explains the matter through the mystery of the two faces of Tiferet and Malkhut, before the severing, while they adhered back to back: “the living one”[?] of Tiferet supported upward toward Keter, and “the living one,” BSh, Malkhut, lay below[?]. Therefore now, after the severing, when they turn face to face, the male bestows and illuminates downward toward the female, and the female [turns] upward toward the male to receive from him; see there. According to this it is beautifully expounded, like a string of pearls: “You shall be only”—numerically ʾLPṢ—letters that rise upward, indicating YHWH, Tiferet, to receive an influx of mercies from him.[TN190292]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(r) “By the designation ‘my sister, my companion,’” mentioned in the passages: when she was before the severing she is called “my sister,” and after the severing, “my companion.”

Yad Yehudah - יט

(s) Likewise, what is written, “be strong and courageous,” also indicates this matter: these words have the numerical value 216, 22, Adonai, in the female. Corresponding to this, the twenty-two kings of praise ascend with her when she joins her husband, as is in the Tiqqunim, and it was explained in Pardes, the Gate of Essence and Governance, chapter 23; see there.[TN190293]

Yad Yehudah - כ

moon and be appeased by her receiving from Tiferet, and no longer feast their eyes on the sun's face upon them. This is “Who shall stand”[?]. [TN190294]

(w) “In speaking and saying”: for thus it is written of him, “The Lord spoke to Moses, saying.” As the Zohar states, speaking is attributed to Malkhut in the aspect of her ascent, and saying in the aspect of their being poor[?] toward Tiferet. See Pardes, the Gate of Appellations.[TN190297]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“In the sense of a beast,” etc. Until now he explained “full of bodies” concerning Esau, who includes all the nations, up to “for game was in his mouth.” Now he makes “from holiness, opposite”[?], and explains it concerning Behemoth on a thousand hills. This is Malkhut of Creation, which is a garment for Malkhut of Emanation. From the aspect that she includes all the souls, they are called “a beast devours a beast,” from the aspect of the offering of souls, as explained above. He will then judge that one “full of bodies,” namely the holy souls; then even Esau's head will be purified, as it were—and silence is fitting —in the manner of “For by fire the Lord is judged”: it is not written “judges.” See the Zohar, Bereshit, page

Rema of Fano

Happy are all who wait for Him, the God of judgment, for He will also judge the one full of holy bodies, in the sense of “a beast devours a beast,” which we mentioned above. This is what the prophet intends when he says, “For by fire the Lord is judged.” From this will follow “He crushed the head” for Esau, the serpents' head, just as his head was crushed by Hushim son of Dan. They have already said that Isaac foresaw that he would eventually ponder repentance in his heart; therefore he said, “It shall be when you grow restless,” from the expression “I am restless in my complaint,” as one regretting his sins, “that you shall break his yoke from upon your neck.” For then he broke the yoke of the goat that bears upon itself all the iniquity of the blameless man, away from the part of his stature that rises specifically above the neck. But the rest of the body did not escape, as it is written, “To take hold of the earth's “That rises in his stature,” etc. This is his head, which is in holiness, as above; this is specifically “from upon your neck”—the head above the neck—as opposed to the rest of the body, which will remain in impurity.

95: “Great is Your faithfulness”—certainly, that she can[?] take all the inhabitants of the world; see there.[TN190298]

“Upon a great land,” etc. See the Zohar, Bereshit, page 98, and you will find it explained as an exposition concerning Malkhut of Creation, with which we are occupied. It is in the manner that she is all the souls, and from this aspect the little contains the much. “The good and that which has been made good” means the souls that were rectified; from this aspect she is called “Great is Your faithfulness,” for each night the souls are deposited there. Therefore we say “True and faithful” in the evening service. He will have purification through this, and then “from the stream on the way,” as he proceeds to explain. This is what the verse concludes: “Therefore he shall lift up his head.” Thus someone said to the mixed multitude, “Severed of neck,” in the manner of “He crushed the head,” for in impurity they have no head at all. This is the mystery of ʿal ken, “therefore, he shall lift up his head”: now she has ken, which is numerically from the seven lower ones, without a head; then everything will be rectified, and they will have a head, and from ken he will make ʿal, which are numerically one hundred with the head. See above what I wrote on the verse “David came up to the head.” Therefore they said, “Let us appoint a head, and return to Egypt,” for sinners have no head. [TN190299]

“It is written, ‘Your ears shall hear,’” etc. In the known manner: eyes and the whole stature, such as mouth and nose, are called the face, and ears are in the mystery of the back. He says here that even the ears, which are in the mystery of the backs, will be rectified. This is skirts, and let the wicked be shaken out of it.”

The head became rooted in holiness “upon a great land,” of which it is written, “Great is Your faithfulness.” It is the special property of places that the little contains the much, the good and that which has been made good. Corresponding to this, Esau's head was stored away in the lap of Isaac his father, and the father's right hand seals the son's mouth, “with bit and bridle, his trappings, to restrain.” After that head was crushed, as stated, “He shall drink from the stream on the way”: this is the inheritance of Shittim[?], which the spring from the Lord's house watered. [TN190320] “Therefore he shall lift up his head,” through the merit of his holy ancestors, who in their righteousness will bring forth the precious from the vile. This establishes a general principle for all those lacking atonement: to prepare a pool of purification for them.

It is written, “Your ears shall hear a word behind you, saying: This is the way; walk in it.” For even those stored away in the Youth's ears in the attribute of the backs, as we mentioned, are capable of rectification at the end of days. Its counterpart in the world is a righteous shoot that came forth from them—and who is it? Rav Samuel bar Shilat, from Haman's descendants, just as R. Meir came forth from Nero Caesar, and Onkelos the convert, Titus's sister's son; Shemaiah and Avtalyon from Sennacherib; and from Sisera, R. Akiva. The letters of his name are the final letters of “Light is sown for the righteous, and joy for the upright in heart.” He is from the foundation of the Amalek's lowliness, that he will have no rectification in the face but only in the backs. Although we explained above that it is a subtle impression, sealed and hidden, nevertheless there is in it [scope] to make light and conceal[?]. [TN190300]

“From the foundation of the Oral Torah,” etc. Malkhut is called the Oral Torah, and R. Akiva had [it] from the aspect of the illumination of Keter within her. This is what they intimated in saying ʾayin, “none,” from Keter, which is Ein-Sof. His question, “Is there a man here?”—this is R. Akiva—may be explained according to the known matter that Moses numerically equals R.ʿ, with 25 also R.ʿ[?]. Therefore they answered him, “None,” from the supernal Wonder, as above. This is “Be silent; thus it arose in thought”: R. Akiva is from that supernal thought, which is Keter, ʾDR and ʿQB[?], letters of Rabbi Akiva; see BGLʿ[?]. Therefore they sometimes exchange he for aleph, for sometimes Akivah is written and sometimes Akiva. [TN190301]

This is what is said in the Gemara: one said shoham (onyx), and one said yashfeh (jasper). Shoham —there is Moses, the Written Torah, for shoham is Joseph's in the breastplate, and Moses and

Joseph go as one. Yashfeh —there is R. Akiva, the Oral Torah; in the breastplate Benjamin has yashfeh, and all ten martyrs executed by the kingdom were from

Oral Torah, from the source that it has in the supernal Wonder, through its illumination in her. This is what Sisera said to Jael: “Is there a man here?” And she said, “There is none.” To intimate this, they exchange the he for an aleph.

Benjamin. This is “The mandrakes wrote fragrance”[?]: these are the mandrakes that Reuben brought, and from this Issachar was born, “a strong-boned donkey.” R.

Akiva was partly from Issachar; therefore he said, “Who will give me a Torah scholar, that I may bite him like a donkey?” See the Treatise ʾBḤ, section 3. He said, “New, also old, my beloved, I have stored away for you.” Yeshanim, “old,” is an acrostic: Yose, Shimon, Nehemiah, Yehudah, Meir. Dodi, “my beloved,” numerically equals twenty-four, intimating the twenty-four thousand disciples who died in one period, of whom only the five mentioned remained. This is “I have stored away for you.” See below, in the adjacent chapter, that R. Akiva came from Sisera's intercourse; examine carefully.[TN190302]

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “Happy are all who take refuge,” etc. The master again returns to the verse “He will judge among the nations, full of bodies,” etc., which he mentioned above in chapter 5; there he called Esau “full of bodies.” We likewise find this designation in holiness for Malkhut of Creation, on account of what is stated in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 54: “He makes grass grow for the beast,” etc. “This is the beast that lies upon a thousand mountains, which grow that grass for her every day. This grass is the living creatures and angels that rule for their hour, that were created on the second day, and stand as food for this beast, since there is fire that consumes fire,” etc. “The image of man below [recovered from print: takes form in their images in a garment], and not in another manner. Therefore they endure for a time and season. Each and every night the spirit strips itself [recovered from print: of this garment and ascends; and that consuming fire consumes it]. Afterward they return as before and take form in their garments. Therefore they do not endure like those images and likenesses above. Concerning this it is written, ‘New every morning.’ Human beings are new every day. What is the reason? ‘Great is Your faithfulness’: she is great and not small. ‘Great is Your faithfulness’ indeed—great, [recovered from print: able to bear] all the inhabitants of the world and encompass them within her, upper and lower: a great and ample place, encompassing everything without becoming overfull,” etc.; see there.

The intention is Malkhut of Creation: she is the spirit of the holy beast upon a thousand mountains, which consumes the fire of the angels each day and human souls each night as they ascend above; they return new each day. Here the master says of this, “He will judge among the nations, full of bodies.” The intention is that, because of nations—the princes called gods—who are destined to descend to Gehinnom, the blessed Lord will also judge and “rescue to Gehinnom” [?] the one full of holy bodies, angels and souls, namely Malkhut of Creation. As stated in Midrash Shoher Tov, brought above in part V, chapter 3: in the future the princes of the nations will come to accuse Israel: “These worship idols and those worship idols; these descend to Gehinnom and those do not descend.” The Holy One, blessed be He, will say [recovered from the frozen gap: “Each and every nation shall descend with its god,” for thus it is written: “For by fire the LORD is judged”—“judges” is not written here, etc.]. It is known that “the God of Jacob” is Malkhut of Creation, as stated in the Zohar, page 536. [TN190303]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(b) In the sense of what he says in several places: “A small one; there is a small one; a small palace.” This also intends the present matter, as explained above in part III, chapter 6.[TN190304]

Yad Yehudah - ג

(c) And what is said at the verse's end will be understood: “He crushed the head upon a great land.” It refers to “a snake, for them snares,” of the side[?], whose head is stored away and hidden in holiness, in the mystery of the skull; not so the body, as stated above in chapter 8. The appellation intends “He will judge among the nations, full of holy bodies”; through this Esau's head will be rectified and will be crushed and separated entirely from the body, for the waters will be in holiness[?], "upon a great land," which is itself "full of bodies," as mentioned.[TN190305]

Yad Yehudah - ד

(d) Just as his head was crushed also in this world by Hushim son of Dan, this was a sign and an enacted likeness that the head of his stature would also be crushed and separated from the rest of his stature.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) "They have already said," etc.: the master explains it according to the Targum's rendering of "And it shall be when you grow restless," etc. [TN190306]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) From the expression "I am restless in my complaint," as Rashi explained according to his approach; our eye is on the Youth. The intention is: when you grieve over your sins and regret them in repentance.[TN190307]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "The iniquity of the blameless man": as stated in the Zohar, Pinehas, page 430, "The goat shall bear upon itself all their iniquities"—the expression "their iniquities" means "the iniquities of the blameless one," of whom it is said, "Jacob was a blameless man." See the Zohar, Aḥarei, page 114. [TN190308]

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "From the part that ascends": namely, the head, which is the superior part of his stature. This is "above your neck." But the rest of his stature, which is the body, did not escape, since the neck forms a division, in the mystery of the separation between the Palace of Sapphire Pavement and the opening of the great abyss, as stated there in Galanti, which we copied above in the first chapter.[TN190309]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) As it is written, "To grasp," etc. (Job 38). He means the skirts of the great earth, which is an appellation of the body, for the head is above the earth, as will be stated before us. The skirt of that earth is the body, which has not yet escaped its impurity: "And the wicked are shaken out of it."[TN190310]

Yad Yehudah - י

(j) "And in them," etc. The conclusion of the preceding matter is also in the verse: "He crushed the head upon a great land; he shall drink from the stream on the way; therefore he shall lift up his head."

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) "The special property of his place," etc. As is there: "He said: great, abundant vision, which includes everything," etc. This is the reason that she is Malkhut, poor and small in relation to the other sefirot, as is known. What he said, "the special property of the place," is that the little contains the much: all the angels and all the souls that are nourished, and also those that rub themselves, without iniquities[?].[TN190311]

Yad Yehudah - יב

(l) "Corresponding to this": that the rectification of the head of Esau's stature—he stored away his head "because"[?], in Isaac's lap, as above in chapter 8, in the name of Targum Jonathan—they intimated its rectification.[TN190312]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) "Seals the mouth": for he thus alluded to the aspect of the mouth in the head, which is called "the hidden El," as stated there in Galanti.[TN190313]

Yad Yehudah - יד

(n) This is the stream of Shittim, concerning which [is] "the greatness"[?], "and a spring shall come forth from the Lord's house and water the stream of Shittim" (Joel 4); see the commentators there. The verse here is to be interpreted as saying that Esau also will drink from this stream after rectification, and therefore will lift up his head through his ancestors' merit, etc.[TN190314]

Yad Yehudah - טו

(o) "It is written," etc. That is, concerning this intention, which we mentioned above in the preceding chapters and which is intimated in the erasure of Amalek, it is written, "Your eyes shall be," etc. (Isaiah 30). That is, even someone of whom nothing remains except a subtle impression, such as the attribute of the backs in Amalek—"your eyes shall be behind you"—will be rectified through Torah scholars, and he will say, "This is the way," etc. We have already disclosed [it].[TN190315]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) The counterpart in this world: "Shiloh, a staff of strength from his stock."[TN190316]

Yad Yehudah - יז

(q) Thus what is said on the verse “Light is sown,” etc. (Psalms 37): “Nor, princes of Akivin”[?]—he is the righteous one for whom light is sown. For he is from the foundation of the Oral Torah, that is, from Malkhut, and “is called rectifiers, all Supreme Crown, all”[?]; from its aspect he came, namely from Keter within Malkhut.[TN190317]

Yad Yehudah - יח

(r) For this reason language of grace fell into Sisera's mouth, when he said above, “Stand at the tent's entrance, and if a man asks you and says, ‘Is there a man here?’ you shall say, ‘There is none’”—from above. “And you shall say to her”[?]: a covenant is made with the lips. He expounds ʾayin, “none,” which is an appellation of Keter, as is known; “there is here”—this is R. Akiva, whose foundation is from Keter.[TN190318]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(s) To intimate this, they write Akiva with an aleph in place of he. According to his allusion in “Light is sown for the righteous,” etc., it ought to be written with he; they write aleph to intimate the foundation of Abba, KWḤ[?], which is called aleph, as is known. [TN190319]

“Guard the Torah,” etc.: like the skin of garlic.

“Which is a fruit suited,” etc. “Cursed is the man who makes a carved or molten image,” for “from my flesh I behold God.” Just as garlic draws and increases the power of seed from thought into actuality—distinguishing thousands upon thousands of distinctions—the supernal shum, numerically ShTW, numerically raṣon, “will,” is His will from the supernal source. From there is the illumination and influx of the Supreme Crown; it is from Malkhut in the aspect of shum, which draws from above, from the supernal thought, and is the fruit itself. See the Zohar, Bereshit, page 134: “R. Akiva entered in

Rema of Fano

Ben Azzai did not, however, transgress the rules of proper conduct when he said, in the last chapter of Bekhorot, “All the sages of Israel seem to me like the skin of garlic, except for this bald one.” Rather, all the sages of Israel were greatly honored by him, with R. Akiva at their head. For the snake is eager for garlic, as is in Bereshit Rabbah, and crushed garlic is dangerous when left uncovered, in the first chapter of Yom Tov. From this we learn Ben Azzai's intention: all the sages of Israel guard the Torah and save it from Sadducean interpretations and discreditable aggadot, as the skin does for garlic, which is a fruit suited to increasing the image, while its skin protects it from snakes. Except for R. Akiva: “he is bald”—pure from the impure—for he possesses the fruit itself, the Oral Torah, shum ha-dayyanim, “the judges' confidence[?],” etc. The other sages of Israel are like garlic's skin, protecting the garlic. This is “except for this bald one,” in the manner of “If a man's head loses its hair, he is bald, he is pure”: he is pure from the impure. Therefore his power to subdue the shell is greater when he is pure from the impure, in the manner of “In the place where penitents stand,” etc. R. Akiva was pure from the impure—this is Sisera; examine carefully. [TN190321]

“And all follow R. Akiva”: he is from the mystery of the Oral Torah, Malkhut, and therefore merited more than Moses, for Moses's illumination was specifically from the Written Torah, from

Tiferet; therefore it was not from the Oral Torah. This is what I heard in the name of one sage: “His eye has seen every precious thing”—this is R. Akiva. Moses saw only the knot of the tefillin, as it is written, “You shall see My back,” whereas R. Akiva saw all the tefillin. Yeqar, “preciousness,” also [means this], as is in the Gemara: “and joy, gladness, and honor”—these are tefillin. This is specifically “every.”

“He lay with her on that night”: the Holy One, blessed be He, assisted him. Issachar, “a strong-boned donkey,” is R. Akiva —KL’[?]—“Who will give me a Torah scholar,” etc., as above.[TN190322]

“Refinement after refinement”: literally other acts of intercourse apart from that act in which “he returned, he”[?], the filth. This is “beginning and end”: before that act of intercourse and after it. [TN190323]

“Why is his chariot so long in coming,” etc. It may be explained in the manner of the Yalkut midrash: three did not wait six; six[?], among them, Sevara[?]. According to this it will be well explained, for from among six acts of intercourse R. Akiva was born.[TN190324] appraisal.” Shum in atbash is B-P-Y; this is his strength for his God, “a law [given] to Moses at Sinai,” for everything was said to Moses.

“They are maidens beating timbrels”: according to the mystery of “the seven maidens fit to be given her from the king's house.”

The sages, of blessed memory, truly said: matters revealed to Moses only as general principles, general principles, were revealed to R. Akiva, who merited to expound them from his own understanding and to accord with the law. For just as the soul of Moses our master, peace be upon him, is from the quarry of the Written Torah, and it is called “the Torah of Moses,” so R. Akiva's soul is from the quarry of the Oral Torah, and, in our opinion, it is called by his name. For an anonymous Mishnah is R. Meir; an anonymous Tosefta, R. Nehemiah; an anonymous Sifra, R. Judah; an anonymous Sifrei, R. Simeon; an anonymous Seder Olam, R. Yose; and all follow R. Akiva. The Holy One, blessed be He, established him in the generation of the destruction, to protect the world and the Torah so that it would not be forgotten.

Therefore the Shekhinah looked out through the window so that Sisera would not perish, on account of the chain of descent stored away within him, until Jael conceived from him in the third of Sisera's seven acts of intercourse. “These six the Lord hates”: only this one is mentioned with praise, for of it is written “he lay,” an honorable expression, as you say, “He lay with her on that night.” The Shekhinah wailed over the delay of refinement: “Why is his chariot so long in coming?” For that wicked man burdened it with much refinement through the great filth that he cast into her at the beginning and at

“He will divide spoil”: see S.Y.[?], who wrote that shalal, “spoil,” numerically [is] the pillars of the shell: they are six, fifty, encompassing all[?]. Each one is composed of ten, and fifty, all, two[?]; the seventh is the shin, which includes them all in the aspect of ten, namely shin. [TN190325]

“And he is merciful,” etc. He explains the verse “a womb, two wombs, for a man's head,” etc.: “thus three” intimates the third act of intercourse. [TN190326]

“Of these,” etc. That is, of the six acts of intercourse it is said, “So may all Your enemies perish, O Lord.” “Those who love Him” is R. Akiva, “as loving”[?], “like the sun going forth in its might,” when he recited the Shema with the sun's dimming, at the time of the Shema. It is in the Ari's Kavvanot that R. Akiva is Jacob. Because Jacob became angry at unity[?] when he sent Joseph to his brothers, he therefore recited the Shema when he saw Joseph. Because R. Akiva also came from Zimri, who is Shechem son of Hamor, as above and in the Treatise ʾBḤ, section 2, and in Zimri's episode it is written, “Impale them before the Lord, facing the sun,” R. Akiva rectified this through reciting the Shema with the sun. Therefore in Targum Jonathan, concerning the episode of Shechem, it is said: “’alifun[?], they weep and recite the Shema.”[TN190327]

the end. “The wise among her princesses answer her”—they are maidens beating timbrels—“she also repeats her words to herself: Surely they find, they divide spoil,” to strip off the filthy garments in refinement after refinement. This is “a womb”—one; “two wombs”—two: thus three “for a man's head,” “whose way is hidden, and God has hedged him in.” Of these it is said, “So may all Your enemies perish, O Lord”; concerning R. Akiva and his companions it is written, “But those who love Him are like the sun going forth in its might.”

Yad Yehudah - ג

(c) And R. Akiva is among them and greater than they.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(d) From this we learn Ben Azzai's intention, for this is what he says: all the sages of Israel seem to me, and in my eyes, like the skin of garlic. Just as the skin protects the garlic from corrupting agents, so the sages of Israel protect the Torah from Sadducean interpretation. He mentioned garlic because its power in the union of human beings is strong; similarly, the Torah's special property, when people occupy themselves with it for its own sake, is to add power to the supernal union of male and female.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) Except for R. Akiva, from a higher aspect: he possesses the garlic itself, that is, he possesses the Oral Torah, and does not need guarding from aspects[?], as he wrote the reason.[TN190328]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) “Bald,” after the verse “He is bald, he is pure.” By this he indicates his attainment: that he is from the side that has no hair and is all exposed skin, and is superior in subduing impurity.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “The Oral Torah”: for garlic is practiced in the mouths of the holy rabbis[?]; also, the letters of shum are the letters of Moses.[TN190329]

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) This is R. Akiva: his power is great to attain secrets from the foundation of the Oral Torah, Malkhut, as mentioned, without the QWLN[?]; he merited a law from Sinai toward the one who remembers[?]. Therefore in his attainment he accords with the law and does not need guarding against the Sadducees.[TN190330]

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) “For everything was said,” etc. The master explains: no—the attainment of Moses our master, peace be upon him, was not less, heaven forbid, than R. Akiva's attainment, as appears at first sight from their words, of blessed memory. Rather, the matter is that all the supernal mysteries destined to be newly disclosed throughout the Torah were revealed to Moses our master, peace be upon him, in general form, but he did not expound where they were intimated in the writings. R. Akiva merited length of life above, to understand from his own mind that in each and every stroke are intimated heaps upon heaps of laws. Thus it is explained in the Ari's Kavvanot.[TN190336]

Why are the steps of his chariots delayed? The wise among her princesses answer her; she also repeats her words to herself: Surely they find, they divide spoil, a womb, two wombs for a man's head; spoil of colored garments for Sisera's womb,” etc. “So may all Your enemies perish, O Lord; but those who love Him are like the sun going forth in its might.” Its explanation is also according to the aforesaid way: “Sisera's mother” is an appellation of the Shekhinah.

(14) Concerning the severity of the refinement and rectification, since R. Akiva did not arise until the latter days: the wickedness thus required him to undergo much refining, because of the great amount of filth this one cast in before the conception and afterward.[TN190333]

“Who are the ministering kings? The rabbis,” etc. See the Treatise Em Kol Hai: from ten classes of angels[?] the world was perfected. Each class [has] twenty rows; GM KT[?], numerically dor, “generation”; to this, from ten, to the rabbis, they ascend as one[?]. They correspond to the first class, of the completely righteous.[TN190337]

“At this the soul shall tremble,” etc. That is, that she perfect the world in five aspects: Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Yehidah, Hayyah —vital soul, spirit, higher soul, unique soul, living soul. He began with the lower he, there in the aspect of Nefesh in

After God has made all this known to us, come, and I will teach you the outlines of the counterparts of the three classes, for they have a sign in the Gemara; the discerning will shine from it and within it, like the radiance of the firmament. They said in tractate Nedarim: Who are the ministering angels? The rabbis. Consult the Treatise Em Kol Hai, part III, section 11. Rabbah bar Naḥmani, in the chapter Ha-Roʾeh, used to say, “Such as we are intermediate,” for “He does not trust in His holy ones,” and we do not know how far the ultimate testing extends. The days of the third class “were shriveled before their time,” as is in the chapter Ein Dorshin, for Gehinnom comes to an end but they do not come to an end; rather, “a river is poured as their foundation.”

Malkhut. “House of Aaron, bless the Lord” is the aspect of Ruah, for the waw in the word shalom, which is Aaron's attribute, indicates this. Although Aaron is the aspect of the right, which is Hesed, nevertheless in Hesed all six days are included, as in “For in six days the Lord made.” See the Zohar, Vaʾera, page 24. On this account Yesod is called El Ḥai. El is Hesed, for its illumination is from there. Therefore it is called Ḥai, for it is ninth from above downward and from below upward, in the mystery of returning light and direct light: the number eighteen.

Lord” corresponds to Neshama, the first he, for the Levite is the one who stirs the powers of judgment toward their root's place, to Binah, so that they may be sweetened there. For this he brings proof: “The Levite shall serve, he.” That is, the Levite's whole service is only that the powers of judgment come to the attribute hu, “he,” Binah, in the mystery of “and the Lord”—He is Binah, and His court is Tiferet and Malkhut, as in “and he will strike them[?], our adversaries,” the mystery of redemption; see KY[?], part II[?], section 2.[TN190338]

“Those who fear the Lord, bless the Lord”: yod corresponds to Yehidah. “Blessed is the Lord” corresponds to the point of yod, the first head and source, will. This is barukh, “blessed,” rukh[?], corresponding to Hayyah[?]. Thus there are five grades. He said, “from Zion”—this is Yesod—“the perfection of beauty, God”—this is Malkhut—“has shone forth,” and illuminates through these five grades. Then “the mother of children rejoices,” and she says, “Bless the Lord, O my soul,” numerically Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Yehidah, Hayyah. Blessed is the Lord forever; amen and amen.[TN190339]

At this the wise soul shall tremble greatly; she will understand her end, watching the ways of her house in awe, fear, and humility, like a beautiful and gracious bride. She will rejoice with trembling within her bridal canopy, and the king will desire her beauty. “House of Israel, bless the Lord”—in the lower he. “House of Aaron”—the matron's bridal attendant—“bless the Lord,” in the waw of shalom, “peace,” which completes Hesed and transmits it into the world, and is called El Ḥai, “Living God,” after it. “House of Levi, bless the Lord”—in the upper he, of which it is written, “The Levite shall serve, he.” “Those who fear the Lord, bless the Lord”—in yod, for there is fear. “Blessed is the Lord”—in the upper point, head and source of all blessings—“from Zion,” “the perfection of beauty, God has shone forth,” for all are included in the Shekhinah. “The mother of children rejoices.” “Bless the Lord, O my soul; Hallelujah.”

To expound publicly at the moon’s concealment, on our festival day. [TN200001]

“And the LORD attended to Sarah as He had said, and the LORD did for Sarah as He had spoken” (Genesis 21:1). Our Rabbis, peace be upon them, said: wherever “and the LORD” occurs, it means He and His court (Jerusalem Talmud, Berakhot 9:5, the chapter Ha-Ro’eh). The intention is clear here: although attending to Sarah was an act of mercy, He had to consult the attribute of judgment, because the Holy One, blessed be He, is exacting with the righteous to a hair’s breadth. But the way of deriving how this word indicates that His court is joined to Him comes to us from another general rule, which for them is a measure in the Torah: an inclusion following an inclusion serves only to exclude. For the great four-letter Name, blessed be He, is well known to be specific to the attribute of mercy. The additional vav in “and the LORD” is itself

Yad Yehudah - ז

“In Midrash Rabbah”: on the verse “The LORD spoke to Moses, saying, ‘And I, behold, have taken the Levites.’” The Rabbis say: wherever “And I” is said, etc. The reason is that it is an utterance of the Name YHVH, as it is written, “The LORD spoke,” and the additional vav indicates the court.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“And the ruling”: the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter Ha-Ro’eh; Midrash Rabbah, Numbers; and the Jerusalem Talmud, Sanhedrin. [TN200005]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“And the LORD has spoken evil concerning you” (I Kings 22).

Yad Yehudah - י

For Israel's benefit and for mercy; therefore the Name YHVH is mentioned. He, blessed be He, had, as it were, to consult the court because of the severe judgment He began with him. After they agreed, it was all mercy for Israel.

Yad Yehudah - יא

As it is written there, Micaiah said to Ahab, "I saw all Israel scattered over the mountains like sheep without a shepherd; and the LORD said, 'These have no masters; let each return to his home in peace.'" The master expounded: because "these have no masters," since Ahab would die, thereby "let each return to his home in peace."

Yad Yehudah - יב

Likewise, in Job it is written, "The LORD gave, and the LORD took; may the Name of the LORD be blessed." This too follows the same approach: He gave through pure lovingkindness, and therefore the Name YHVH is written. "And the LORD," He and His court, took through righteous judgment, to exact payment in this world. Both are reckoned as mercy, since the world is sustained through them and the continuance of the work of Creation depends on them. Therefore the name called Yehi, which is one name from the Name of seventy-two, is the name in the work of Creation.

a letter of mercy; it comes to restrict mercy's scope and add His court. We suppose this to be a diminution of mercy, but it is nothing other than an increase of mercy, for the court too agrees to this act. [TN200002]

In Midrash Rabbah on the Book of Numbers, section 3, "And I" means He and His court; it is an utterance of the unique Name. At the beginning of Sanhedrin in the Jerusalem Talmud, they said, "'LORD God': He and His court" (Jerusalem Talmud, Sanhedrin 1:1). All three brought a general precedent from the verse "And the LORD has spoken concerning you" (I Kings 22:23), which Micaiah said to Ahab. Ahab's death was for Israel's benefit, as it is written, "These have no masters; let each return to his home in peace" (I Kings 22:17).

Likewise, in Job it is written, "The LORD gave" through pure lovingkindness, "and the LORD took" through righteous judgment (Job 1:21). Yehi, "may it be," which is the Name of the LORD, one of the combinations of His letters, as is known to have served in the work of Creation, is "blessed" in any case; for both sustain the work of Creation. As we learned, "Through ten utterances the world was created," to exact payment and to give reward (Mishnah Avot 5:1). We explained this in the Treatise on the Measures, measure 7; examine it. "Always, the LORD is God," etc.: even in mercy He is a judge.

Therefore “there is no assurance” [?] for the righteous, who fear judgment even within the attribute of mercy. [TN200008]

Yad Yehudah - כ

“And they / also [?] said,” etc.: as explained in the Zohar, Be-Shallah, see page 89 [?], in these words: “Like a king who is complete in everything; his understanding is complete said, “He is a complete king: when He judges for good, He judges for ill, and therefore one must beware of Him” (Zohar II, 89a). All the more so in the reverse direction, for the favorable measure is greater. Thus it is written, “Seek the LORD, all the humble of the earth, who have performed His judgment” (Zephaniah 2:3). The Sages said, “Where His judgment is, there are His deeds” (Yevamot 78b): their merits are recalled at the time of judgment.

in everything. What is that king’s way? His face is always radiant like the sun / in the sun / with joy [?], because he is complete. When he judges for good [?], he judges for ill; therefore one must beware of him. A fool sees the king’s face and does not take care / does not take care to beware [?] of him. A wise person sees the king’s radiant face and says, ‘The king is certainly complete. He is complete in everything, and his understanding [?] is complete. But see: within that radiance judgment sits concealed, though it is not visible. Otherwise the king would not be complete. Therefore one must beware.’ So the Holy One, blessed be He, is always complete in this [?] manner, but is seen only in radiance of countenance. Therefore those fools are beguiled [?]; radiant, judgment is concealed within him. Therefore one must beware of him.”

“Rabbi Judah said: hence, ‘I, the LORD, have not changed.’ I am not divided into another place. In Me all is included; in Me are two aspects, in Me they are included. Therefore everything appears in a straight course,” etc.; see there. It is explained before us that even within the kindly countenance [?] of mercy, judgment / as judgment [?] is concealed in Him, as mentioned / as above [?]. [TN200009]

Yad Yehudah - כא

“All the more so in the reverse direction”: when He judges for ill, He judges for good, for the favorable measure is greater than the measure of punishment. If He shows judgment within mercy, all the more does He show mercy within judgment, as we said.

Yad Yehudah - כב

Likewise it is written, “Seek the LORD,” etc. (Zephaniah 2). Resh Laqish said in the first chapter of Yevamot, folio 78 [?]b: “Where His judgment is, there are His deeds.” Rashi explained: in the place where a person is judged, there they recall the deeds of his righteousness. [TN200010]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“We suppose,” etc.: you will also find this in Sefer Ha-Peli’ah. Its explanation: where “and the LORD” occurs, the LORD indicates His court, which is Malkhut; “and the LORD” is male. Thus it will be He and His court in order. Support for this is in the Zohar, Va-Yaqhel, page S.M.H. [?], in these words: “For seventy-two [?], these letters of the holy Name: this is the name included below, for this is included above and included below. When it is included below, these letters ascend to receive this one letter. From that letter these letters are nourished, and that letter is the letter vav.” Thus far the passage. The explanation is that although this name is revealed in Tiferet, nevertheless it is in Malkhut, and the additional vav in “and the LORD” is the male; examine closely. [TN200011]

The author, of blessed memory, found this difficult: if so, why does it come after an inclusion following an inclusion? “It should have said, as one [?], ‘He and His court,’ L.” [?] This is what he says, “We suppose,” etc. In truth it is not so, but an indication of turning [?] judgment into mercy. [TN200012]

“‘And I’ is an utterance of the unique Name,” etc.: this is the Name Ehyeh [?], mentioned among the seventy-two names in the section Be-Ha‘alotekha, which is the tree’s trunk, as explained there. But when the vav occurs at its beginning, the explanation is that “and I” is Malkhut, which includes the name of T.D., H.D., and K.V.V. [?], whose numerical value is sixty-one, the value of ani, “I.” The vav is an image of the mercy of the Name YHVH. All this returns to the Name YHVH, as is known. [TN200013]

“For Ahab’s death,” etc.: there too, judgment is joined with mercy for Israel’s benefit. “Yehi, which is the Name of the LORD,” from its letter combinations: one of the Name of seventy-two. This is explained in Pardes, in the explanation of the Name of seventy-two and the combination’s operation. “For both,” etc.: the Name YHVH and His court, which is Elohim.

What we said concerning the conjunction of judgment and mercy: it is entirely mercy.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“What the Rabbis praised in him”: in Bereshit Rabbah, section 4, there are four whose jars the Holy One, blessed be He, tapped and found to be jars of urine. They are Adam, Cain, Balaam, and Hezekiah. Adam: “The man said, ‘The woman whom You gave to be with me,’” etc. Cain: “The LORD said to Cain, ‘Where is Abel your brother?’ He said, ‘I do not know,’” etc., etc. But He found Ezekiel cleanest of them all, as it is said, “Son of man, will these bones live?” He said, “Lord GOD, You know,” etc.; see there. [TN200015]

Yad Yehudah - ג

Ezekiel answers the LORD, blessed be He.

Rema of Fano

From this comes a remarkable lesson concerning what the Rabbis praised in Ezekiel (Bereshit Rabbah 19:11)[1]. When He, blessed be He, asked him, “Will these bones live?” he answered with discerning instruction, “Lord GOD, You know” (Ezekiel 37:3). At first sight, it appears that he evaded the matter and did not explain what he himself wished to judge concerning them. What was so great about making his decision depend on the Omnipresent’s knowledge?

Rather, Ezekiel said this: Master of the world, I know from the conjunction of Your attributes that You are the sole Lord, ruling over all opposites and governing Your world through them, in the sense of “He makes peace in His heights” (Job 25:2). Therefore, if You ask me through the attribute of judgment, “You knew”: You chastised them, from “He made the people of Succoth know through them” (Judges 8:16). He made their offense known through punishment, and Scripture does not depart from its plain sense. Today You “What was so great about it?”: that the Rabbis praised him for this.

Yad Yehudah - ה

I know from the conjunction of Your two attributes, judgment and mercy, that You rule over all opposites, for judgment and mercy are two opposites.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“In the sense of ‘He makes peace in His heights’” (Job 25): our Rabbis, of blessed memory, expounded this concerning Gabriel, prince of fire, and Michael, prince of water, which are opposites; the Holy One, blessed be He, makes peace between them.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Therefore,” etc.: that is, Ezekiel said, “LORD, my God, You know.” He mentioned the attribute of mercy through the Name YHVH and the attribute of judgment through the Name Elohim.

Corresponding to them, he said / says [?] "You know" in three ways: one [?] for judgment, one [?] for mercy, and one [?] for the conjunction of judgment and mercy together. Corresponding to judgment, "You know" is interpreted [?] as chastisements, in the manner of Scripture / what is written [?] concerning Gideon: "He took the elders of the city, the thorns of the wilderness, and the briers, and through them made the people of Succoth know" (Judges 8). Its Targum / as its Targum [?] is tavar / u-tevar [?], "he broke / and he broke," through them. There are many instances of this sense in the verses.

Corresponding to mercy, he explains "You know" as in "God knew." In this sense he explains "Is not Boaz our acquaintance?" and its like [?], meaning one of those who love us [?] and show us mercy. Corresponding to the conjunction of judgment and mercy together, he explains "You know" as have made Your providence and knowledge of the particulars of their deeds known to these people. Behold, You have struck; who will heal them?

If You ask me through the attribute of mercy, You have shown mercy from eternity to eternity, and Your mercies are over all Your works, from "God knew" (Exodus 2:25). His providence and knowledge are always only for the good as their end. If so, certainly, in the conjunction of these two Names, "You knew," from "The man knew" (Genesis 4:1), means You united Your attributes to judge with mercy. Therefore, "From the dead, by Your hand, LORD": although they are now "dead from the world," "their portion is in life" in the future (Psalms 17:14). [TN200014]

Here, concerning the attending, it says "and the LORD," whereas when it is put into effect, it says "the LORD did." There is no need to mention an act of the court in it, fulfilling what is said: "The LORD is righteous in all His ways and gracious in all His deeds" (Psalms 145:17). For attending is the way toward attaining the desired object, while the deed is the completion of the end. This is clearly manifest.

union, like "The man knew," meaning he was united with his wife. See all this in Radak's Book [?] of Roots, under the root yada, know. [TN200016]

Yad Yehudah - ח

Gideon made known the offense / foulness [?] of the people of Succoth, that is / by means of [?] the punishment [?] they suffered in the city / he inflicted on the city's elders [?], with the thorns of the wilderness and the briers [?]. Radak likewise writes there: "'He made them know through them': as its Targum, 'and he broke,' etc. It can also be explained in its ordinary sense: he made their transgression known to them with the thorns." Thus far. [TN200017]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Scripture does not depart from its plain sense": although we explain / he explained [?] "he made known" as chastisements, the essence of the explanation is nevertheless that Scripture does not depart from its plain sense. It is an expression of knowing and understanding something, but the intention here is that he informed them through the matter of chastisements / through chastisements [?]. "This is a question concerning Radak" [?], who wrote, "It can also be explained in its ordinary sense," as though they were distinct explanations. "So, on this, there are two explanations" [?]: the plain sense [?] remains, while the intention changes according to the matter, sometimes to chastisements, sometimes to mercy, and sometimes to union / to unite [?]. All these [?] were Ezekiel's intention [?] in "You know." [TN200018]

Yad Yehudah - י

"And to these, on the day," etc.: the master returns to Ezekiel's words. If through the attribute of judgment, he said, "You knew and chastised them." "And to these," meaning these very people, You made Your providence and knowledge known through chastisements at the beginning and

chastised them. Who can say to You, “What are You doing?” [TN200019]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“For His providence and knowledge,” etc.: the master explains the reason why an expression of knowing can be interpreted as mercy.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Therefore,” etc.: Ezekiel prayed for them, since He was / would be [?] bound [?] to judge with mercy. Therefore, although they are dead now, nevertheless in the future their portion will come in life. This prayer needed [?] the formulation [?] of the one who says in the chapter Heleq that they were wicked, especially according to Samuel, who said [?] that they denied the resurrection of the dead; see there. [TN200020]

Yad Yehudah - יג

“From the dead, by Your hand”: “For from the dead of the world, their portion is in life” is Scripture (Psalms 17). The master took up that expression here to expound it in this way.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“And here, a priest [?],” etc.: the master returns to his course concerning the attending to Sarah. [TN200021]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“The LORD did”: it does not also say “and the LORD,” for there is no longer any need, etc. The deed is the completion of the end and is entirely mercy, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“The LORD is righteous in all His ways” [gap] [gap]. He is righteous [?] in His ways, in attending to each and every person to be exacting with him through righteous judgment. “And although [?] He arranges [?] his judgment with him”; “and gracious in all His deeds”: when bringing the deed into effect, which is the completion of the end, He, blessed be He, acts graciously and does not join [?] “as a court” [?] with Himself. [TN200022]

Yad Yehudah - יז

“For attending is the way,” etc.: this is “in all His ways.”

Return to chapter in contents

Yoel Moshe - 1

“He evaded and did not explain,” etc.: Ezekiel withdrew himself and did not explain an answer to the question “Will they live?” etc. He only said to Him, “You know.” “You know”: if so, the difficulty is, what was so great about making it depend on the Omnipresent’s knowledge, without asking that they should live?

“Through the conjunction of Your attributes,” etc.: therefore he said, “Lord GOD, You know,” in the sense of “You shall cut off” [?], and in the literal sense of knowing. You knew them and thereby made punishment known; if so, “You have struck,” etc. “You have shown mercy,” etc.: the word “You knew” will mean “You showed mercy” [?], from the expression “You united,” like “The man knew,” etc. Therefore their portion will be in life: these bones will live. It follows that he truly prayed for them. [TN200023]

“The LORD is righteous in all His ways”: the way is the attainment of the end, and this is “The LORD is righteous,” judgment and mercy; this means He and His court. But “gracious in all His deeds”: here there is only the LORD, who is complete mercy. Examine closely.

Reference or explanatory note; its editorial source and attribution of authorship have not yet been determined.

There are four whose jars the Holy One, blessed be He, tapped and found to be jars of urine. They are Adam, Cain, Balaam, and Hezekiah. Adam, as it is said, “The man said—the woman ...” Cain: “The LORD said to Cain, ‘Where is Abel,’” etc.; “he said, ‘I do not know’” (ibid., chapter 4). Wicked Balaam, as it is said, “Who are these men with you?” “Balaam said to God ...” (Numbers 22). Hezekiah: “What did these men say ...” (Isaiah 39). But He found Ezekiel the most knowledgeable of them all, as it is said, “Son of man, will these bones live?” He said, “Lord GOD, You know!” (Ezekiel 36). [TN200024]

"Attended": after the master expounded the word "and the LORD," he returned to the word paqad and said that its meaning, etc. That is, the verb paqad serves all these expressions, and all are present here: providence, counting, etc. See Radak's Book of Roots on this, under the root p-q-d.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"As in 'according to their numbered ones'"; likewise, "Saul counted the people" (I Samuel 13).

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Command, as in 'The LORD's precepts are upright'"; likewise, "He commanded me to build Him a house" (Ezra 1).

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Appointment, as in 'Let the king appoint'"; likewise, "May the LORD, God of the spirits, appoint," etc. It would have been better for the master to bring this example, since it too belongs to "the general/light" [?], unlike "let the king appoint," which belongs to the heavy form. [TN200027]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"And from it": from this sense of appointment he

"Attended," paqad (Genesis 21:1).

This verb has the senses of providence, counting, command, appointment, and absence. The first we mentioned, providence, is as in "I have surely attended to you" (Exodus 3:16). Counting is as in "according to their numbered ones." Command is as in "The LORD's precepts are upright" (Psalms 19:9). Appointment is as in "Let the king appoint officers" (Esther 2:3), and from it comes "the deposit that was deposited with him" (Leviticus 5:23). Absence is as in "David's place was missing" (I Samuel 20:25).

Although this attending is essentially and primarily a matter of providence, as we shall explain, all these senses are nevertheless present in it. For someone barren is not worthy to be numbered among the legions of the King of kings, unless he fulfilled his obligation on another occasion, like Ben Azzai (Yevamot 63b)[1], as will follow. For this reason, those counted by Moses were heads of families only. Concerning them it is said, "By their skulls" (Numbers 1:2): Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, foresaw through the holy spirit the number of drops in each one's head, as the Sage, of blessed memory, wrote in his commentary on the Torah. He said that anyone who was destined by also explained "the deposit that was deposited with him" (Leviticus 5). That is, he was appointed "to recognize it with him" [?]. [TN200028]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Although": the verb paqad stated here needs to be explained as providence, and this is the hidden and remote explanation. Nevertheless, all the explanations are possible [?] in it. [TN200029]

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Is not worthy," etc.: therefore he said "And the LORD attended" in the sense of counting, for He numbered Sarah among His legions.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Unless he fulfilled his obligation": he fulfilled the commandment of being fruitful and multiplying once, for he had already existed formerly and now returned by way of reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Like Ben Azzai": as stated in the chapter Ha-Ba 'al Yevimto, anyone who does not engage in it—Azzai said—is as though he sheds blood and diminishes the image. They said to Ben Azzai, "You expound well but do not fulfill well." He said to them, "What shall I do? My soul longs for Torah. It can be sustained through others." That is, he had already fulfilled the commandment of being fruitful and multiplying when he was in the world before.

Yad Yehudah - י

"As will follow": below, Part III, section—[section number is not securely visible]. [TN200030]

Yad Yehudah - יא–יג

"And what is the reason?" Those counted by Moses in the wilderness of Sinai and the plains of Moab were only heads of families; they were not counted as heads of ancestral houses, because Moses knew of them [gap] worthy of this. "And concerning them / and elevated [?]": that is, in the wilderness census, "every male by their skulls [?]," the number of drops [gap] each one, how many descendants each and every one would produce. They merited that none of them died. [TN200031]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"From him, Machir and Gilead alone": this is the reason why fathers and grandsons were marked as families, as explained in the verses of Pinehas. [TN200032]

Yad Yehudah - טו

"More than this": our teacher, peace be upon him, also foresaw and perceived how many times

himself to produce six hundred thousand was counted as a head of a family. Therefore Machir and Gilead were counted as two, although Machir was Gilead's father. Gilead alone had the power to produce six hundred thousand; Machir still had another six hundred thousand from his other sons, apart from Gilead. [TN200025]

He also foresaw and perceived more than this in each one of them. It is a mystery manifest in the word mentioned, for whoever pays attention to it. All is included in what the Sages said: the Holy One, blessed be He, showed Moses each generation and its sages, each generation and its leaders (Va-Yiqra Rabbah 26:7).

From this one can understand what Rashi wrote in the section Pinehas, near the verse "The sons of Korah did not die" (Numbers 26:11), in the name of the Jerusalem Talmud (Sotah 1:10). During the war with the Amalekite after Aaron's death, some of the people sought to return to Egypt. The Levites pursued them, and people from both sides died, until four families of the tribe of Levi ceased to exist. Rashi said that two are the Shimeite and Uzzielite families; the third is the Izharite family, of which only the Korahite family was counted in the plains of Moab. He said that it was not clear to him which was the fourth. What is the difficulty? In the section Va-Era it is written, "The sons of Izhar: Korah, Nepheg, and Zichri" (Exodus 6:21). Since only the Korahite family is counted later, here are Nepheg and Zichri, who ceased to exist.

each one of them would need to be reincarnated.

Yad Yehudah - טז

This is manifest in the word le-gulgelotam, "by their skulls," which is an expression of gilgul, reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"What Rashi wrote in Pinehas": concerning the plains of Moab and the sons of Simeon, in these words: "I found in the Jerusalem Talmud that when Aaron died, the clouds of glory departed. The Canaanites came to fight Israel, and they set their minds on returning to Egypt and went backward eight stages," etc. "The Levites pursued them to bring them back and killed seven families among them. Among the Levites, four families fell: the Shimeite and Uzzielite families; of Izhar's sons, only the Korahite family was counted here. I do not know what the fourth was." Thus far.

Mizrahi wrote, in these words: "That is, of the eight Levite families—Gershon's Libnites and Shimeites; Kohath's Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel; and Merari's Mahli and Mushi, as stated in the section Be-Midbar—neither the Shimeite nor the Uzzielite nor the Izharite family is mentioned here. Izhar had three sons: Korah, Nepheg, and Zichri, but only the Korahite family is mentioned. Since most of the families were removed, it is as though the entire Izharite family was removed. Thus three families of the Levite family are missing." Thus far his words.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"What is the difficulty?": for Rashi, of blessed memory, who said about the fourth, "I do not know."

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Since Libni was counted," concerning Pinehas, in the census of Levi: here are Nepheg and Zichri, two families; together with the Shimeites and Uzzielites, these are the four that were missing. Mizrahi raised the same difficulty. [TN200033]

Yad Yehudah - כ

[gap] For it is true that the Jerusalem Talmud counts [gap] and Zichri as two families, in order to increase [gap] these two families.

Yad Yehudah - כא

Rashi, who did not think it appropriate to count [gap], since in the wilderness census neither they nor the Korahite family were counted, but all were included under the name [gap] the Izharite family. Since in the section Pinehas the Korahite family is mentioned explicitly [gap], and they had already been included [gap] two families [gap]. This is what Rashi wrote

Certainly, the Jerusalem Talmud counts them as two to increase the distress, to make known how much sin causes. Rashi, however, in accordance with our premise, saw that these two were nowhere counted separately so that one could say of them "the Nephegite family" and "the Zichrite family." Thus they are called by their father's name, and the Izharite family was diminished by their loss. All the Sages' words stand.

Let an empty-headed person gain understanding concerning the census of Moses and Aaron in the wilderness of Sinai: "its numbered ones, by the number of names" is said only of the tribe of Simeon. The holy spirit grieves over them: those whom I nurtured and reared are all my enemies. For many of the mixed multitude attached themselves to them, afterward married women from the daughters of Simeon, and fathered children by them (Zohar III, 237a)[2]. This resembles what happened to Dinah daughter of Jacob: the Hivite cast contamination into her before she married Simeon, and she bore him Zimri son of Salu, who is Saul son of the Canaanite woman. These, then, sinned and caused others to sin; the hand of the LORD too was upon them. Those who died in the plague numbered as many as those killed at Shechem after entering the covenant of circumcision without acting for its own sake.

It is known from the census of Moses and Eleazar in the plains of Moab that Simeon's tribe was very much reduced [gap] only the Korahite family. Mizrahi too wrote something close to this in answering such a difficulty; see there [gap], according to our premise that no family was counted for them except one fit to produce six hundred thousand [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כב

[gap] That is, Rashi [gap] destined to produce six hundred thousand [gap] a family. Therefore the master's intention [gap], and he did not establish his words [gap] upon these matters.

"Those who died in the plague": twenty-four thousand [gap] those killed at Shechem, who likewise numbered twenty-four thousand [gap] the sons of Simeon [gap] for Heaven's sake [gap] on account of Dinah [gap] of Simeon [gap].

"Very much reduced" [gap] the families of the Simeonites [gap] and twenty thousand and two hundred; in the wilderness of Sinai [gap] for the tribe of Simeon, fifty-nine thousand and three hundred [gap] Rashi, of blessed memory, in the section Pinehas [gap] twenty-four thousand fell from the tribe of Simeon [gap], in accordance with the Zohar.

Yad Yehudah - לא

"Its sense includes" [gap]. It has already been explained [gap] that paqad means counting [gap] the words of the Jerusalem Talmud and Rashi concerning the four families [gap] the tribe of Levi [gap] concerning the loss from the tribe of Simeon.

"But," etc. [gap] the master's explanation of the word paqad [gap] counting. He said that Sarah our mother [gap] through this attending, and entered the number; this is "And the LORD attended" [gap].

Yad Yehudah - לג

[gap] She said in her prayer, "LORD of hosts, if You will indeed see," etc. [gap] From the day the Holy One, blessed be He, created His world, no person called the Holy One, blessed be He, "Hosts" until Hannah came and said before Him [gap]: neither eating nor drinking, neither being fruitful nor multiplying, nor dying, but living forever [gap]. She too entered the number of the hosts above and below, etc.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"The number of drops in the head," etc.: this is le-gulgelotam, "by their skulls," meaning in each skull. This is "You shall raise the head of the children of Israel." Concerning this, Midrash Tanhuma says, "'This they shall give, everyone who passes among the numbered': even a fetus in its mother's womb." "Like Ben Azzai," etc.: he had already existed formerly and rectified himself through the commandment of being fruitful and multiplying. He came into the world only to study Torah. This is his statement, "My nefesh longs for Torah": specifically nefesh. [TN200034]

"More than this": it is obvious that he perceived how many people would arise from him, as the word le-gulgelotam explains: the drops in each skull. He saw how many generations would arise from him. But Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, also foresaw and perceived how many times each and every Israelite would be reincarnated. This mystery is included in the word mentioned, namely le-gulgelotam, which the author mentioned as an expression of reincarnation and impregnation.

"'Its numbered ones, by the number of names,'" etc.: this is an expression of absence, for twenty-four thousand of the tribe of Simeon were lost through Zimri's deed. "For they attached themselves to them," etc.: to sweeten the mystery, Ts.A.L. [?]: impurity has no desire for holiness unless it has some connection with holiness. Sometimes it is in order to be purified, for that holiness has a connection with impurity. This is the mystery of the beautiful captive woman in the section Ki-Tetse. Since he desires her, she is certainly fit [?] to be purified. The Torah commanded bringing her into your house and seeing: if he hates her after her disfigurement, she has not yet reached purification from filth and contamination. See the Ari's intentions for everything needed on this matter. Therefore here too, Zimri did not go to Cozbi for nothing. [TN200035]

When Dinah was with Shechem, he cast contamination into her, and she had an attachment from the contamination of his impurity. The men of Shechem who were circumcised had some rectification and connection with Dinah. Because it was not for its own sake, twenty-four thousand of them were killed. Therefore it is written, "My son Shechem's nefesh longs for your daughter"—specifically nefesh. When she later married Simeon, she bore him Zimri son of Salu, who is Shechem's reincarnation. See Jonathan's Targum in the section Va-Yiggash, that Saul son of the Canaanite woman, Simeon's son, is Zimri. That is, Shechem's neshamah too was compounded with his pure neshamah. Cozbi had light from Dinah's neshamah; therefore Zimri desired Cozbi. Through this, twenty-four thousand were killed, corresponding to those killed at Shechem, for those killed had some connection with Dinah.

For this reason the mixed multitude, who were reincarnations of those twenty-four thousand killed at Shechem, desired to take wives from the tribe of Simeon. Those twenty-four thousand were born and killed until they were rectified. In connection with this, Rabbi Akiva's students equaled the men of Shechem and the sons of Simeon in number.

Because they did not honor one another, for each recognized his fellow, they all died between Passover and Shavuot, as explained in the Gemara. Then they were truly purified. For Rabbi Akiva had a spark of Zimri's neshamah in the mystery of impregnation, and he is Shechem son of Hamor. This is the mystery of Rabbi Akiva's saying, "Who will give me a Torah scholar, that I may bite him like a donkey?"—hamor, donkey, specifically. The wife of wicked Turnus Rufus, whom Rabbi Akiva married, is Cozbi. This is what the Gemara says concerning Rabbi Akiva: he laughed, wept, and spat. He spat because of attachment to impurity, laughed because of rectification, and wept because of corruption. [TN200036]

This is a hint in the final letters of A.H.Y.R., A.P.Y.M., K.V., E.Z.: their final letters are Z.M.Y.R.Y. [?] "Let my soul not enter their council": this is Zimri's deed. "For in their anger they killed a man": our Sages, of blessed memory, expounded this as Shechem son of Hamor, on account of which Zimri came into the world. See the Zohar, Pinehas, page 438. One can explain "those dead from before" as meaning that they were dead at first, as the author says: the twenty-four thousand of Shechem. This is ha-metim, "the dead"—already dead. The Zohar, Pinehas, explains, "dead from before"; see there, page 438. [TN200037]

Concerning this, I heard an explanation of what Jacob's sons said: "Shall he make our sister like a prostitute?" The difficulty is that "shall he make" suggests the future, whereas he had already made her a prostitute. Rather, they alluded to this mystery concerning Cozbi, who became a prostitute afterward and is a reincarnation of Dinah's neshamah, as above. How sweet, with this, are the words of the verse in the section Pinehas: "Concerning Cozbi daughter of the prince of Midian, their sister." The word "their sister" refers to Israel, for through the reincarnation of Dinah's neshamah she was the tribes' sister. Examine closely. I heard this from my teacher and master, MaharaL of L.B.N. [?]. [TN200038]

"Among the number of the hosts," etc.: the stars number six hundred thousand, as is known in the Gemara. This is "And the LORD attended," etc., in the sense of counting.

“The intended meaning,” etc.: the master now explains the verb paqad in the sense of command, which he mentioned in section 3. Namely, the Holy One, blessed be He, did not decree that Sarah should have the basis of pregnancy, as stated in Bereshit Rabbah: “The LORD did for Sarah as He had spoken.” That is, she did not have the very womb, and the Holy One, blessed be He, decreed a womb for her. [TN200040]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Lacked the tube” [gap]. A barren woman has no child; she did not even have a child’s chamber. [TN200041]

Rema of Fano

The sense of command, however, certainly means a new creation in the righteous woman’s nature. She was not merely barren in the ordinary way, but from the beginning of her formation lacked the sac within which the fetus is formed. Concerning this the Sages said that she did not have the very womb (Yalqut Shim‘oni on Genesis 17, remez 82). The Holy One, blessed be He, had to command the miraculous formation of this vessel in her. In her nature, this was a renewal of the work of Creation, of which it is written, “For He spoke and it was; He commanded and it stood” (Psalms 33:9). There it is written, “spoke” and “commanded”; here it is written, “He attended to Sarah as He had spoken” (Genesis 21:1).

As for the sense of appointment, it is simple and clear: just as Abraham was appointed "father of a multitude of nations" (Genesis 17:5), so Sarah our mother was mother of all living. That is, mother of every living person: these are the righteous, who are called living even in their death (Berakhot 18a). All converts destined to convert are included in this, as we shall mention again.

The Holy One, blessed be He, had to command this change in nature, which precedes the work of Creation, just as He commanded the work of Creation itself.

At the covenant between the pieces, Abraham was told that his seed would resemble the stars, which only their Creator counts (Genesis 15:5). Earlier too, after Lot parted from him, he was told, "If a person can count the dust of the earth, your seed too shall be counted" (Genesis 13:16). This is an affirmative statement directed toward the Primordial One, in the necessity of His existence and subsistence, the unique Person who depends on no other, blessed be He, who cherishes them and counts them. But concerning the handmaid's son, the angel speaking to her states categorically that his seed "will not be counted because of its multitude" (Genesis 16:10; Yalqut Shim'oni on Numbers 4, remez 695). For there is no desire for a multitude whose individuals lack perfection, in the sense of "Will the LORD take pleasure in thousands of rams?" (Micah 6:7). These are the rams of Nebaioth, Ishmael's firstborn (Genesis 13:14). [TN200039] and your seed too will be counted by the LORD, blessed be He, Himself. Thus “if a person can” is not a question, as it might seem, but an affirmation. This is “affirmative toward the Primordial One,” meaning the LORD, blessed be He. He said “the dust of the earth”: this is Malkhut below, upon which all souls depend. More hidden still, the mystery of Israel will truly be counted by the Holy One, blessed be He; this is not so for the other nations. [TN200044]

Yad Yehudah - א

“The sense,” etc.: the master now explains paqad as absence, the last sense mentioned in section 3. He says that this sense follows the moon’s diminution, as our Sages, of blessed memory, said in the chapter Ellu Terefot: Rabbi Simeon ben Pazi posed a contradiction. It is written, “God made the two great luminaries,” and it is written, “the great luminary” and “the small luminary.” The moon said before the Holy One, blessed be He, “Master of the world, can two kings use one crown?” He said to her, “Go and diminish yourself,” etc. Rashi, of blessed memory, wrote in the Pentateuch on “and the stars”: “Because He diminished the moon, He multiplied her hosts to appease her.” Thus far.

Rema of Fano

The sense of absence follows the manner of the moon’s diminution: He appeased her by multiplying her hosts. For when a man and woman do not produce offspring, neither has an advantage over the other in completing the common end. In this respect both luminaries were called great at the beginning of their formation. As they said in the Zohar on the Song of Songs (Zohar Hadash 86b): “The lights were joined as one and were of one balance, so that both were called great. It is not that the moon was great and elevated, but whenever the moon is with the sun in one mystery, on its account she is called great together with it. A lion’s tail is a lion, and is called a lion.” Likewise, the tribe of Dan was equated with Judah in being called a lion, on account of the Messiah, whose father is from Judah and mother from Dan, as stated in Midrash Rabbah (Bereshit Rabbah 97).

“And as it were, this is L.H. [?], K.B.Y.” [?] So here too, Sarah, who was on Abraham’s level [gap], “became his daughter.” As will follow shortly, therefore the LORD too attended to her and diminished her level through her producing descendants. For the receiving female’s level is always below that of the bestowing male; insofar as she had not borne children, she was equal to him. This will be explained further below, section 13; see there. [TN200046] of their formation, before the moon produced her offspring. See below, section 6.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"As stated in the Zohar on the Song of Songs," etc., through "and is not called": know that in this part the master explains the moon's smallness and diminution, mentioned in the chapter Ellu Terefot, in the midrashim, and in the Zohar. Sometimes it is in its plain sense, concerning the sun and moon; sometimes in the hidden sense, concerning Tiferet and Malkhut; and sometimes through the revealed and hidden together. For so it is fitting to expound, to understand a proverb and a figure, the Sages' words and their riddles. Here he set out evidence that even according to the mystery, both luminaries were originally called great, for the reason, etc., which he will explain shortly. [TN200047]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Likewise, the tribe of Dan," etc.: incidentally the master adjoins the matter of Dan, the lowliest tribe, which was equated with Judah in being called a lion. This too is for the reason, etc.: a lion's tail is a lion.

Yad Yehudah - ו

As stated in Midrash Rabbah, Va-Yehi: "'Judah is a lion's cub': this is Messiah son of David, who will come from two tribes,

Behold, this we have investigated, and so it is with these two luminaries: equality of siblinghood alone, like a brother and sister supported at their father's table, where he makes no distinction at all among the children. This figurative understanding gives pleasant meaning to the splendid verse in which Abraham said of Sarah, "She is my sister, my father's daughter" (Genesis 20:12). Through this kinship he was not greater than she, nor the reverse. "But not my mother's daughter": Abraham's mother was great among women, according to what is related of her to those versed in esoteric wisdom, while Haran, Sarah's father, was from another woman.

It is known that the world is built through lovingkindness, for the first generation could not suffice except through a brother marrying his sister. Here too, after this pattern, it was lovingkindness that Abraham encountered his brother's daughter, whom one does not refrain from calling one's sister. Likewise, concerning Lot it is written, "His brother had been taken captive" (Genesis 14:14). Jeremiah called Hanamel, his uncle's son, his uncle (Jeremiah 32). She was suited to him in her deeds, and it is written, "She became my wife" (Genesis 20:12), of her own will. By nature and inherent disposition a woman prefers one qav and intimacy —like the joining of a man and entwined forms (I Kings 7:36)—to nine qavs and separation (Sotah 20a), in the sense of siblinghood, for ah, brother, totals nine. The sister, half a body, is dalet. [TN200045] his father from Judah and his mother from Dan. Both are called lions, as it is said, 'Judah is a lion's cub.' Dan is called a lion's cub, as it is said, 'Dan is a lion's cub, Judah [?].'" [TN200048]

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Behold, this," etc.: the master explains the Zohar's saying that the luminaries were joined and of one balance according to what is also known from the Zohar: Tiferet and Malkhut were originally two faces. Concerning this our Sages, of blessed memory, said that Adam and Eve were created as two faces. As Pardes explains in chapter 4 [?] of the Gate of the Moon's Diminution, these luminaries were two faces while still above, within Binah. In relation to Hokhmah and Binah they are united in complete union. "How was Hokhmah revealed [?]?" Only from within Binah. Therefore he explained the saying [gap]: "Binah established heaven; understanding from its shoulder [?], and bringing forth in the world Tiferet and Malkhut together," in the mystery of two faces. Examine carefully there in Pardes. [TN200049]

These are the master's words: at first, when these two luminaries were in Binah, they were not in the aspect of male and female, but only in that of siblinghood. Tiferet, the brother, and Malkhut, the sister, were equal in level and included, supported at their father's table; this is "as Hokhmah," etc. They were not in the aspect of marriage until they emerged from Binah's womb and descended below to the place of their emanation.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"This figurative understanding," etc.: that is, this explanation is beautifully hinted at in the

When her eyes lift imploringly on high, it is written, "You have given Me heart, My sister, bride" (Song of Songs 4:9), in the sense of removing the heart of stone so that a heart of flesh is renewed, and they become one flesh, as we shall explain. This is the reason livavtini, "You have given Me heart," is repeated twice. The soul of that righteous woman knew very well that there was no righteous man like him in that generation. She became his wife without her father's consent, for he was among those of little faith, as is known.

verse "She is my sister, my father's daughter." According to its plain sense, Abraham's intention is also to hint [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ט

"It is known," etc.: that is, the LORD, blessed be He, pairing Abraham with his sister's daughter as a wife follows the manner of "The world is built through lovingkindness." He also alluded to it above in the mystery of Hesed. For in the attribute of Hesed, Tiferet and Malkhut

encountered one another from their attachment and became mates for each other, as stated in the Zohar, Ahare, where it says "lovingkindness and mighty ones" [gap], "lovingkindness is a mystery"; see there. So is the matter here: "vows of lovingkindness" [?] for Abraham and Sarah. [TN200050]

Yad Yehudah - י

Likewise it is written concerning Lot, who was Abraham's brother's son, yet Scripture called him his brother.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"She became my wife": he did not say "He took her as a wife," but "My sister, my father's daughter, my mate [?] for me, and also suited to me in her deeds." That is, she diminished herself, and of her own will became my wife. [TN200051]

Yad Yehudah - יב

"By nature and inherent disposition," etc.: that is, every [gap] woman prefers one qav and tiflut to nine qavs and separation. Incidentally, he also teaches us that tiflut is an expression of joining and coupling, like tafel, "attach," and the word "you attached" too. Separation has its ordinary meaning. The intention is that a woman prefers a qav with coupling, that is, "and to be a man" [?], to nine qavs and separation from him. Bertinoro explains it this way too, and it likewise accords with Tosafot's opinion there. This excludes some interpreters who explain tiflut as disgrace and impropriety, and separation as piety. [TN200052]

Yad Yehudah - יג

[gap]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"When," etc.: that is, when Malkhut merits union with Tiferet through Tiferet, He says, "You have given Me heart, My sister, bride." He calls her "My sister" in the aspect she had before union and "bride" in the aspect of union. This will be in the future, when what is said in Ezekiel 36 is fulfilled: "I shall remove the heart of stone from your flesh and give you a heart of flesh." It is already known that "the shells concern the removal of the evil inclination" [?] and Tiferet and Malkhut becoming one flesh, "for four letters [?] cleave," etc. This is the matter of "You have given Me heart with one." [TN200053]

Yad Yehudah - טו

This is why he said livavtini twice: "You have given Me heart, My sister, bride; You have given Me heart with one of your eyes," etc. It hints at two hearts: the heart of stone, which will be cut away, and the heart of flesh, which will be sanctified.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"The soul," etc.: this concludes the statement above, "She became my wife," of her own will—that is, on her own and without her father's consent.

Yad Yehudah - י

He was among those of little faith when Abraham our father was cast into the fiery furnace, as is known from Midrash Rabbah, Noah.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The sense of absence,” etc.: paqad means absence, as above, section 2. It follows the manner of the moon’s diminution, for the bestower necessarily has a greater level than the recipient. Therefore a man and woman cannot produce offspring unless one has an advantage over the other. When He diminished the moon from the sun’s level, she then produced hosts, and He multiplied her hosts. So too concerning Sarah: He attended to and diminished her, then appeased her through offspring and multiplied the hosts coming from her.

“In this respect they were called the great luminaries”: to understand this mystery, the depth of the author’s words, examine the mystery of the two faces in Pardes and be attentive. To present it briefly, however, one must know a familiar premise: a person was warned [?] against making a graven or molten image. Rather, “From my flesh I shall behold God.” This is in the manner of a representation, no more than a likeness from above to below, and He, being merciful, will atone. [TN200054]

At first the female was emanated together with him as one, two faces, front and back. She was then in the mystery of a point, from between his breasts downward, in the form of a small yod: only the light of Keter. That is, opposite his breasts in front was the point at his back. This is terdohi, meaning breasts. This she had of herself, and no more. Afterward He gave her a greater influx from above downward through her entire length; she had a complete stature at his back down to his feet. But the stature began from between the breasts, opposite the breasts, receiving influx from nine measures like him, in the mystery of a human form at the back, as below. Afterward, in the mystery of the sawing apart, when “He sundered” [?] the two faces and divided them, she returns to Binah, having been in the mystery of a small yod. [TN200055]

Further, Ts.A.L. [?]: the light of Hokhmah, which is Father, descends to Tiferet over its entirety. The light of Binah, which is Mother, is clothed only from above down to between the breasts. There the light of Hokhmah is clothed together with Binah, as far as between the breasts. This is not so from there downward to the feet: it is unclothed, only the illumination of Hokhmah alone, without Binah. These are the two premises, briefly.

From this we come to the author’s intention and wording. He said that when it was back to back, with the faces joined, both were equally great luminaries. For the male had no advantage over the female at that time, since he was not bestowing upon her. Although she was small, like a yod, nevertheless, in the mystery of “a lion’s tail is a lion,” etc., as below, on this account “a tree” [?] was called—both of them great. Incidentally the author interrupted the matter: Dan is the lowliest of the tribes, while Judah is the head, yet Dan was equated too [?] with Judah, because a lion’s tail is called a lion. The sign is “For a hand upon the throne of Yah”: Y.D., Judah–Dan. [TN200056]

He then said, “A brother and sister supported at their father’s table”—their father, specifically. Through Hokhmah, which reached over its entirety as above, Malkhut received light as he did; Hokhmah is called Father. But through Binah she had nothing, for it reached only as far as his breast, and from there she begins. Thus she does not receive from it as he does. This is what Scripture said, “She is my sister, my father’s daughter.” Concerning Abraham’s mother’s name, our Sages, of blessed memory, expounded: Amatlai daughter of Karnebo. The sages of truth applied this to great matters. The intention in the present matter is that she had light from Binah, and through this she bestowed upon Abraham, who is Hesed.

This is the representation, so that you may have a general rule: although we expound Abraham as Hesed, Isaac as Gevurah, and Jacob as Tiferet, nevertheless each includes male and female. Sh.A.: Abraham is Tiferet’s governance through Hesed, and Sarah is Malkhut’s governance through Hesed. Likewise, Isaac and Rebekah are the governance of the powers of judgment, and likewise Jacob. Therefore he said, “She is my sister,” in the mystery of when the two luminaries were equal at the back. “Through this kinship he was not greater than she,” etc.: “my father’s daughter” means Hokhmah. This is hinted in the Masorah: “Please say you are my sister”; “Say to wisdom, ‘You are a sister.’” Thus far. [TN200057]

“But not Mother’s daughter”: from Binah she had no light. This was the actual likeness, for Haran was from another woman. He concluded, “She became my wife,” for a woman prefers one qav and intimacy. This follows what we explained above: at the sawing apart she was in the form of a yod. This is “one qav,” a small amount, “and intimacy,” meaning union and joining. This is “in the joining of a man and entwined forms”: a small joining, as at first. She prefers this to what she originally had in the mystery of two faces and separation, in the sense of siblinghood. Ah, brother, totals nine, indicating the nine lights she initially had from the male when she was at his back. For his Malkhut is reckoned only in the mystery of the crown; therefore he counted only nine for the mystery.

“Siblinghood, half a body, is dalet,” from the word ehad, one, because it extended opposite four sefirot: Tiferet, Netzah, Hod, and Yesod, from the breasts downward, as is known. See the Zohar, Bereshit, the matter where he expounded N.B.: ah separately and dalet separately. Another reason she is called dalet is that her eyes lift imploringly. The verse’s meaning is: first, “You have given Me heart, My sister, bride,” back to back in the mystery of two faces; afterward, “You have given Me heart with one of your eyes,” face to face after the sawing apart. [TN200058]

Know that before she received influx from the male, the five powers of judgment in her were sweetened only through the male’s five lovingkindnesses. This is the mystery of a man emitting white, which is lovingkindness, and a woman emitting red, which is judgment. Silence is fitting. This is what the author wrote in the sense of removing the heart of stone. It is explained in Tiqqunim, explanation 65: “‘Vinegar’ [?] from the side of bone, the side of judgment hard as bone; ‘vinegar’ [?] from the side of flesh, a soft heart.” Thus far. This is the sweetening of the five powers of judgment, which resemble stone, through the five lovingkindnesses. Understand. [TN200059]

“In the Zohar, Song of Songs,” etc., folio 22a: the five attributes on the right are called five lovingkindnesses. Their sign is K.H.N. [?]: Keter, Hokhmah, Hesed, Tiferet, Netzah. The five on the left are five powers of judgment: Gevurah, Binah, Hod, Yesod, Malkhut. [TN200060]

In the likeness below, he said, “She is my sister, my father’s daughter,” for both came from Terah in one kinship, “but not my mother’s daughter.” Abraham’s mother was of distinguished lineage, Amatlai daughter of Karnebo, whereas Haran’s mother was another woman. “For the first generation did not build” [?], etc.: there were in the world only Cain and his sister, Abel and his sister, and they had to marry their sisters. “For Abraham, his brother’s daughter”: Sarah was the daughter of Haran, Abraham’s brother, and grandchildren are like children. Thus it is as though Sarah were the daughter of his father Terah, and she is his sister. [TN200061]

“‘You have given Me heart’ twice,” etc.: as it is said, “You have given Me heart, My sister, bride,” etc., “You have given Me heart with one of your eyes,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - א

Sarah's life depended on Abraham's life, for after Abraham's death Pharaoh's household would treat her as ownerless.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Heaven forbid for a vessel": meaning Sarah.

Yad Yehudah - ג

Therefore Abraham feared for her when he said, "But keep you alive." At first sight this is superfluous wording; on the contrary, to make the matter more grave, he should have been silent about this. The master expounded that he feared she might become profane. This is "But keep you alive."

Yad Yehudah - ד

The two evils are that they would kill Abraham and use a vessel of holiness.

Yad Yehudah - ה

Corresponding to these evils is denial of providence over particulars. Pharaoh denied divine providence over particulars and would therefore do deeds that ought not be done, thinking that the Holy One, blessed be He, did not attend to them.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"In the sense of Pharaoh's saying, 'I do not know the LORD'": his intention is

Rema of Fano

Because her life depended on his life, and Heaven forbid that a vessel used by holiness should become profane by being taken into Pharaoh's house, Abraham feared for her in Egypt and said, "They will kill me, but keep you alive" (Genesis 12:12). These are two evils, corresponding to denial of the One who exercises providence over particulars, in the sense of Pharaoh's saying, "I do not know the LORD" (Exodus 5:2), together with acknowledgment of general governance through the natural order, in the sense of "It is the finger of God" (Exodus 8:15). The word etsba, finger, has the numerical value of alef–he–vav–he spelled out, the great seal of the work of Creation, which is formed from the initials of et ha-shamayim ve-et ha-arets, "the heavens and the earth." [TN200062]

They may have acknowledged creation from preexistent matter, following Plato's view, but not particular providence through recompense or through absolute will, as we believe it on the basis of the Torah. These are upright, corresponding modes of governance, concerning which it is written, "Is the LORD among us, or is there nothing?" (Exodus 17:7). Had we not interpreted it as a test, it would have been reckoned a great commandment for us. This is the meaning of "Israel has mazal" and "Israel has no mazal" (Shabbat 156a):

that he does not believe in particular providence. It cannot mean that he denied the existence of God, for he said, "It is the finger of God." What, then, must we say? In saying, "I do not know the LORD," he denied particular providence. In saying, "It is the finger of God," he acknowledged general governance: how the LORD, blessed be He, governs the world through the nature He arranged for it.

Yad Yehudah - ז

The word etsba, finger, has the numerical value 163, like the Name A.H.V.H. spelled out thus: alef–he–vav–he, which also totals 163. This Name is the great seal of the work of Creation, formed from the initials of et ha-shamayim ve-et ha-arets. As stated in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 43: "'In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth': the initial letters are A.H.V.H., through which heaven and earth were created. Through A.H. the heavens and everything in them were created; through V.H. the earth and everything in it were created," etc.; see there. Thus Pharaoh's mention of the word finger shows that he believed in the world's creation.

Yad Yehudah - ח

Despite all this, one should not object: how could he not believe in particular providence, since belief in creation also entails providence over particulars? For when creating the world, the LORD, blessed be He, attended to each and every particular, as explained in the Guide of the Perplexed, Part III, chapter 17. This is no objection, because Pharaoh may have held Plato's opinion: he believed that the LORD, blessed be He, created His world from preexistent matter, not from nothing. Thus belief in creation does not entail providence over particulars.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Through recompense": to repay a person according to his deed.

Yad Yehudah - י–יא

"Or through absolute will": that He, blessed be He, should, as it were, thus attend to human beings' ways. These two aspects are upright modes of governance, through which the LORD, blessed be He, governs and attends to the world. For absolute will too bestows an influx of abundant favor upon every living being through Hokhmah and Binah. These are the first three, included as one. As is known, the influx descends to the seven days of building, and they give one master said one thing, and another said another. Penitents have mazal; the wholly righteous have no mazal.[1] See the beginning of Part IV of the Treatise Heqor Din. [TN200063]

Here Abraham held to the attribute of siblinghood, of which these people are not jealous. On the contrary, he said, "So that it may go well with me because of you" (Genesis 12:13). They explained, "They will give me gifts" (Rashi). This saying is astonishing, given what is well known: in truth and uprightness, throughout his life he despised gain through oppression more than anyone else. It necessarily follows that these gifts are none other than a name of impurity, which he took from Egypt to bequeath afterward to the sons of the concubines, under the law of the male-children ketubbah provision. Of them it is written, "Abraham gave gifts" (Genesis 25:6). His ruling over a name of impurity and enumerating with it an order of separations, to keep it far from Isaac and his sons, bring life to his soul in the light of the King's face, in his saying, "My soul will live because of you" (Genesis 12:13). [TN200064]

It is written, "He treated Abram well"—the Good One who does good, blessed be He—"because of her" (Genesis 12:16), as the Rabbis said, "Honor your wives, and you will grow rich" (Bava Metzia 59a). "He had sheep and cattle," etc. (Genesis 12:16): their particulars are seven.[2] Concerning Isaac it says, "He had flocks of sheep," etc. (Genesis 26:14): here are six.[3] Jacob said, "I have ox and donkey, sheep," etc. (Genesis 32:6): these are five.

each person recompense according to his deeds.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Corresponding": each needs the other, and they are included in one another.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Concerning them it is written, 'Is the LORD,'" etc.: yesh, being, is a designation for the seven days of building, whose actions are manifest. Ayin, nothing, designates the first three, for they are hinted in the word ayin: alef hints at Keter, yod at Hokhmah, and nun at Binah, as explained in Tiqqunim. Relative to the other sefirot, these three are on the level of nothing with respect to revelation, for they are not revealed so much. The verse's intention is that Israel wished to know whether their governance was through yesh or ayin.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"Had we not," etc.: had they not asked in a testing manner, their question would have been proper and a commandment. This is not so now, since they said it in testing the LORD. So it is stated in the Zohar, Be-Shallah, page 113; see there.

Yad Yehudah - טו

This is why some of our Rabbis, of blessed memory, said Israel has mazal, while others said Israel has no mazal. In truth they do not disagree. The intention is that the attribute of yesh is the mazal and bestows upon penitents; the attribute of ayin causes influx to flow and bestows upon the wholly righteous.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Here," etc.: the master returns to expound Abraham and Sarah, and incidentally explains the verses following the verse with which he began this section.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"The attribute of siblinghood": when he said, "Please say you are my sister."

Yad Yehudah - יח

These Egyptians are not jealous of it, as they are of the marital relationship, of which the powers of impurity are accustomed to be jealous, as we find with the primordial serpent.

From here you learn whence these possessions came to the fathers of the world. No human hands initiated their giving, but Greatness, Might, and Beauty, which among the divine attributes are fifth, sixth, and seventh in reverse order, as is well known. They are the great hand, the strong hand, and the exalted hand, in their straight order from above downward. Jacob guarded against this when he told Laban, "You shall give me nothing" (Genesis 30:31), in the sense of "Seek the peace of the city to which I have exiled you," etc., "for in its peace you will have peace" (Jeremiah 29:7). The intention is that in its peace we should draw sustenance specifically from the holiness clothed outside, and from nothing else, as we mentioned there, Part II, chapter 9. It needs assistance from the worthiness of our deeds. Therefore he said, "I too shall work for my own house" (Genesis 30:30).

Yad Yehudah - יט

Of them it is written, "To the sons of Abraham's concubines, Abraham gave gifts." Our Sages, of blessed memory, explained that he transmitted a name of impurity to them. The master says these are the very gifts he received from Egypt, to bequeath to the concubines' sons, for this is fitting for them on account of their mother's ketubbah, under the male-children ketubbah provision.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"In his saying": this is why he said, "My soul will live," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כא

It is written, "He treated Abram well," without specifying who did good. The master finds it fitting to interpret this as the LORD, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - כב

"But Greatness": this is Hesed, belonging to

Yad Yehudah - כב - continued

Abraham; its hand is seventh from below upward. Therefore seven possessions were specified concerning him, to indicate his attribute, which supported the seven days of building and made all this wealth for him. So too with Gevurah, the Fear of Isaac, which supported six sefirot; therefore he had six possessions. Tiferet belongs to Jacob; its hand is fifth, so Scripture specified five possessions concerning him.

Yad Yehudah - כג

"They are the hand," etc.: human hands were not involved in the patriarchs' possessions, but only the hand of the King of kings, blessed be He: the great hand for Abraham, the strong hand for Isaac, and the exalted hand for Jacob. Their attributes are called by these names in many places in the Zohar and Tiqqunim.

Yad Yehudah - כד

Jacob guarded against this: benefiting from Laban, rather than only from what his attribute above would bring him.

Yad Yehudah - כה

"In the sense of 'Seek,'" etc. (Jeremiah 29): the intention is likewise along this line. The master explains the word peace as the Shekhinah. Therefore he said, "Seek," through your good deeds, "the peace of the city": the Shekhinah clothed in the prince of the city of Babylon. "For in its peace": when the city's peace is attained, "you will have peace," and you will draw sustenance and be satisfied from the breast of her consolations, but not from Babylon's prince.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"As we mentioned there": Part IV. [TN200065]

Yad Yehudah - כז

Therefore Jacob said, “When shall I too work,” through my exalted hand, “for my own house?” Section.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Two evils [?],” etc.: after Abraham’s killing, there would be profane use of a holy vessel. “Corresponding to denial of the One who exercises providence,” etc.: a premise, it seems to me. At the Flood it is written, “The LORD sat at the Flood,” etc. Yet the LORD is the attribute of “alef” [?]. We expound the Name YHVH as male, and the Name Elohim as female and judgment. Nevertheless, within the Name Elohim too there is an inwardness of YHVH. At the Flood, the inwardness of YHVH within the Name Elohim withdrew above to its roots in the Name YHVH, and there was only the operation of Elohim alone, whose numerical value is ha-teva, nature, without providence through changing nature. For YHVH’s governance is called particular providence, and the Name Elohim is general providence. Pharaoh denied particular providence, the Name YHVH, and acknowledged only the Name Elohim. This is “I do not know the LORD,” as is known. [TN200066]

“They acknowledged,” etc.: the difficulty is that Pharaoh acknowledged only the Name Elohim, whereas etsba, finger, has the numerical value of the Name Ehyeh. Therefore he answered that they acknowledged creation from preexistent matter. This is the view of some philosophers: they acknowledge that the Holy One, blessed be He, created His world, but found matter already prepared beforehand and created the human being from it, following Plato, one of the philosophers. [TN200067]

“Through recompense,” etc.: from the side of the six extremities, where it is in the mystery of yesh. Through absolute will is in the mystery of Keter, ayin; the first three are called ayin. Here too he feared lest they “kill me,” which is the governance of YHVH, the male, “but keep you alive,” she being female, the Name Elohim; they would have a hold on you. This was Pharaoh’s intention in “Every son who is born,” etc., “and every daughter”—female—“you shall keep alive,” for he denied particular providence, as above.

us, or is there nothing?’ Had they not said it in a testing manner”: that is, as a question. It would have been reckoned a great commandment. Yesh is from the side of the six extremities, where it is in the mystery of yesh, and it concerns recompense. Absolute will is in the mystery of ayin. In truth, we should not have believed it by way of testing, for it is true that His governance is through recompense and through will, which is miraculous and changes nature. This is found in the Zohar. See the end of page 112 of the Zohar, Be-Shallah, concerning “one who makes a separation,” etc. See the Zohar, Shelah Lekha, page 301, E.S., “Is there a tree in it, or not?” See the places in the section Be-Shallah where he decided in favor of the Zohar’s words; see there. [TN200068]

“Israel has mazal,” etc.: from the side of Elohim. “Has no mazal,” etc.: from the side of the LORD. “The attribute of siblinghood, of which these,” etc.: the attribute of siblinghood, when he said, “You are my sister,” is in the mystery of two faces, as above, section 5, without union or joining. These are jealous only when they see union, like the serpent, who saw them engaging in intercourse and desired them, as Rashi explained in the section Bereshit.

“Honor your wives,” etc.: in the manner of “From you He gives wealth.” “But Greatness, Might, and Beauty”: these are the attribute of ayin—Greatness for Abraham, Might for Isaac, Beauty for Jacob.

“Jacob guarded against this,” etc.: he was careful to take nothing from Laban. “In the sense of ‘Seek,’” etc.: as explained in the book Qol Bokhim, Israel is B.A.H., in purity, through the Shekhinah’s clothing in the shells. Therefore Jacob did not want it to be through impurity, as we now receive the influx. This is seeking the city’s peace through the external powers. Therefore he said, “When shall I too work for my own house?”—and not through you. [TN200070]

“And he honored” [?], etc.: this continues the end of the preceding section, where the master explained Jacob’s words, “You shall give me nothing,” and “When shall I too work.” Here he explains them further in another manner, prefacing this with Daniel, Nehemiah, and Esther. [TN200074]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“The Sages taught us”: in chapter 4 of Shevuot, every “king” mentioned in Daniel is profane except, etc. Some say this too is sacred, as it is said, “My Lord, may the dream be for Your haters.” To whom does he

Rema of Fano

The Sages have already taught us concerning Daniel’s words when he stood before Nebuchadnezzar and said, “My Lord, may the dream be for Your haters and its interpretation for Your enemies” (Daniel 4:16): he said this with reference to the glory of the Shekhinah. So I say concerning Nehemiah, when Artaxerxes asked him, “Why is your face troubled?” etc. (Nehemiah 2:2), and it is written, “I prayed to the God of heaven” (Nehemiah 2:4). Could there have been time between the king’s question and Nehemiah’s answer to pray inwardly, even a brief prayer? What, then, was his prayer? The very words he was saying before the king, while his heart was directed toward heaven. So too with say this? If you suppose he says it to Nebuchadnezzar, who are his haters? Israel. Would he be cursing Israel?

Yad Yehudah - ג–ד

“So I say concerning Nehemiah”: he was speaking to the king, while those words were in the manner of prayer before the LORD, blessed be He. For it is written, “The king said to me, ‘Why is your face troubled, though you are not ill?’” etc. “The king said to me, ‘What is it you seek?’ I prayed to the God of heaven and said to the king, ‘If it pleases the king, and if your servant is pleasing before you, send me to Judah, to the city of my fathers' graves, that I may build it'" (Nehemiah 2).

Yad Yehudah - ה–ז

The difficulty is: could there have been time between the king's question, "What is it you seek?" and Nehemiah's answer, "If it pleases the king," etc., for Nehemiah to pray even only a brief prayer? Not merely with his lips outwardly, but even inwardly, in his heart, he could not have had hours / time [?] to pray. Necessarily, "I prayed to the God of heaven" does not mean that he prayed between the question and his answer. Rather, the words he answered, "If it pleases the king," were themselves the prayer he prayed to the LORD, although they appeared to answer the king's question. [TN200075]

Yad Yehudah - ח

Likewise, concerning Esther it is written, "Queen Esther answered and said, 'If I have found favor in your eyes, O king,'" etc. Onkelos translated: "Esther lifted her eyes toward heaven, and Queen Esther answered and said, 'If I have found mercy before

Esther. This is plain, to teach the children of Judah to devise counsels within our souls, so that the LORD is always before us and our words flow before Him in appeasement, petition, and all our needs.

Here too, for the supernal Glory, Jacob said, "I shall serve You seven years for Rachel, Your younger daughter" (Genesis 29:18), of whom it is written, "There is reward for your work" (Jeremiah 31:15), and "There is hope for your future" (Jeremiah 31:16). Therefore they were in his eyes like a few days (Genesis 29:20). He pleaded with Him, "You shall give me nothing" (Genesis 30:31), that He should select his portion from the choicest, without any blemish in it—not for love of wealth, but for Heaven's glory. As it is written, "I shall return, pasture Your flock, and guard it" (ibid.), as we shall explain shortly. [TN200072]

His saying, "When shall I too work for my own house?" (Genesis 30:30) will thus be in the sense of "If I am not for myself, who is for me?" (Mishnah Avot 1:14), and the entire mishnah. The initials of these words contain eg'al, "I shall redeem," my house. For his possessions from outside the Land were all for redeeming his eternal house, as our Sages, of blessed memory, said on the verse "In my grave, which I acquired for myself" (Genesis 50:5).[1] [TN200073]

You, exalted King,'" etc. [TN200076]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"And all our needs": even when speaking of them with human beings, it should be in the manner of prayer to the LORD, blessed be He, as it is written, "I have set the LORD before me always."

Yad Yehudah - י

Here too, concerning Jacob it is written, "Jacob said, 'I shall serve You seven years.'" Later too, when Laban asked him, "What shall I give you?" it is written, "Jacob said, 'You shall give me nothing. If You do this thing for me, I shall return, pasture Your flock, and guard it.'" In all these his speech was directed to the LORD, blessed be He, not to Laban. It seems to me that for this reason Scripture did not say in either passage, "Jacob said to Laban." Likewise, with Daniel, Nehemiah, and Esther, Scripture was careful not to mention the name Artaxerxes, to indicate that the speech's intention was not directed to them. [TN200077]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"For the supernal Glory Jacob said, 'I shall serve You,'" etc.: as stated in the

Zohar, Va-Yiqra, page 33, in Ra'aya Mehemna: "This is Malkhut, the letter he "of an arrow" [?], as we call it, as in 'I shall serve You seven years for Rachel, Your younger daughter.'" In the Zohar, Va-Yetse, page 356: "What was Jacob's intention, that he did not say ten months or one year? Why, rather, seven years? Jacob acted with wisdom," etc. "All seven supernal years rested upon Jacob," etc. "The mystery of the matter is what is written, 'They were in his eyes like a few days.' What does 'like a few days' mean? He weighed all seven years in his eyes like those supernal ones, which are united and not separated. All are one, joined to one another." Thus far. He therefore expounds "I shall serve You seven years" as corresponding to the seven supernal sefirot, and "for Rachel, Your younger daughter" as corresponding to Malkhut. [TN200078]

Yad Yehudah - יב

Of her it is written, "Rachel weeps for her children," etc. "Thus says the LORD: restrain your voice from weeping and your eyes from tears, for there is reward for your work," etc. In the Zohar, Va-Yiqra, page 34: "Rabbi Hiyya said to him, 'What is "Rachel weeps for her children"?' He said to him, 'We have learned that this is the Assembly of Israel, and this is Jacob's wife [?],'" etc. That is, Malkhut, which is called the Assembly of Israel. The master's intention is that the expression "I shall serve You" is like the expression "work" used there. [TN200079]

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Therefore they were," etc.: this has already been explained in the Zohar passage from Va-Yetse mentioned above.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"He pleaded with Him": Jacob's words, "You shall give me nothing," etc., were not an answer to Laban. Rather, through them Jacob pleaded with Him, blessed be He, to choose his portion from the choicest of the flock.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Without any blemish," etc.: he expounded me'umah, "nothing," through mum, blemish. That is, do not give me blemished sheep, but the choicest. Jacob did not ask for this out of love of wealth, so that his flock would be of superior monetary value.

Yad Yehudah - טז

Rather, for Heaven's glory, because the act with the rods among the flock was a symbolic act for separating the holy souls, as will be explained shortly, section 9. Therefore in this symbolic act his soul desired whole sheep, without blemish.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"As it is written, 'I shall return,'" etc.: the intention is, if You do this thing for me, giving me unblemished sheep, "I shall return and pasture Your flock," meaning the souls. These I shall guard, to bring them out of the iron furnace through this.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"His saying, 'When shall I work,'" etc., which Jacob said earlier, is in the sense of the mishnah in the first chapter of Avot: "He used to say, 'If I am not for myself, who is for me? And when I am for myself, what am I?'" etc. Its hidden meaning is: if I do not have the attribute of Malkhut, called Ani, "I," as explained in many places in the Zohar, particularly Ki-Tetse, who is for me? So they explained in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 70, what Hillel used to say: "If I am here, all is here; if I am not here, who is here?" See there. "When I am for myself" means when this attribute is mine alone, without my also benefiting another, what am I? See the Treatise Heqor Din, Part I, chapter 22.

Here too Jacob said, "When shall I too work for my own house?" That is, when shall I also benefit another and make the attribute of Malkhut too, called Anokhi, "I," as explained in the Zohar, Yitro, for my house, the house of Israel, for the holy souls?

Yad Yehudah - יט

"It contains," etc.: the master further expounded "When shall I work," etc., in another way. The initials of e'eseh gam anokhi le-veiti are the letters eg'al, "I shall redeem." The intention is that Jacob said, "Send me away, that I may go to my place and my land," etc., for when shall I redeem my house, my eternal house? The intention is his grave, his share in the Cave of Machpelah, which he had to redeem and buy from Esau. The master could have expounded the verse this way without the acrostic mentioned, but he found it fitting to derive from the initials the expression redemption, which applies to a house or field held as an ancestral possession.

Yad Yehudah - כ

His possessions from outside the Land, which Jacob brought from Laban's house, were his instruments for redeeming his share in the Cave of Machpelah. [TN200080]

Yad Yehudah - כא

As our Sages, of blessed memory, said in Bereshit Rabbah, the section Va-Yehi. Rashi's wording there is: "'Which I kariti': in its plain sense; its midrashic meaning," etc., "is like 'which I acquired.' Another midrashic meaning is from keri, a heap: Jacob took all the silver and gold he had brought from Laban's house, made it into a heap, and said to Esau, 'Take this for your share in the cave.'" Thus far.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"With reference to the Shekhinah," etc.: mari, "my Lord," refers to the Shekhinah. "I prayed to God," etc.: he did not pray at all between the king's question and his answer. Rather, the very words that he intended toward heaven were the prayer, as with Daniel. So too Esther, "K.Z.A., and he said" [?], "If it pleases the king": she alluded to the holy King. They did not expound without reason that he said it with reference to the Shekhinah, for the Zohar, Balaq, page 374, explains, in these words: "'He said: the children whom He graciously gave,' etc.—the holy spirit said it. Therefore the word 'He said' has a zaqef gadol, in a hidden manner." Thus far. It is explained in K.Y. that zaqef gadol has the form of YHVH: two yods with a vav between them, like this: יוי. Likewise, in the verse "We shall see [?] what will become of his dreams," the holy spirit says this, as Rashi, of blessed memory, explained. It too has a zaqef gadol on "we shall see," as does the word mari in Daniel. Examine closely. [TN200081]

"For the supernal Glory Jacob said," etc.: having brought "When shall I work," etc., above in the preceding section, he explains it. He explains "for the Glory," which is Hokhmah: glory has the numerical value thirty-two, the paths of wisdom. Jacob said to Laban—"lavan, white, a voice to Hokhmah" [?], which is from the side of Hesed, like white snow, the supernal Father—that he wished to serve seven years, alluding to the six days of building and sefirot, "for Rachel, Your younger daughter," who is Malkhut, to attain the attribute of Malkhut. Do not object: how could he say seven years when there are only six before Malkhut, since he said "for Rachel, Your younger daughter," which is Malkhut? One can answer that the male too has the attribute of Malkhut, in the mystery of the crown. [TN200082]

This matter is explained in the Zohar, Va-Yetse, page 340: "What does 'like a few days' mean? He weighed all seven years in his eyes like those supernal ones, which are united," etc.; see there. That is, the seven days of building. This is why he concluded,

"Therefore they were in his eyes like a few days." This is the mystery of the verse "Do you know Laban son of Nahor?" It indicates Hokhmah, called lavan, white, complete mercy, thirty-two paths. "And with vav, L.N.V." [?] indicates the fifty gates of Binah, from the side of Binah's inclusion with it, for the companions above do not separate. Through this, Hokhmah is designated by the name Yah, "son of supernal Hokhmah." This is what is mentioned in Laban son of Nahor: "nun, like white snow" [?], who is the son of the supernal one concealed in Keter, as is known. This is "son of Nahor" in the supernal likeness. Jacob our father, peace be upon him, spoke with this Glory. [TN200083]

"'I shall return, pasture Your flock,'" etc., is said concerning the holy souls, as below in the next section and in section 9. "In the sense of 'If I am not for myself,'" etc.: Hillel said, "If Ani"—which is the attribute of Malkhut—"is not for me, who is for me?" Everything depends on her; a person cannot cleave above except through her, in the mystery of "If I am here, all is here." "If I am for myself" means that I have not perfected another, but have acquired perfection from the levels of Ani only for myself: what am I? "If not now, when?" So too were Jacob's words: "When shall I too work"—Anokhi being the attribute of Malkhut—"for my house," whose bed was complete, to perfect them too at this level. "When shall I work" parallels "If not now, when?"

"To redeem his eternal house": this is the grave, the share in the Cave of Machpelah that he bought from Esau with the possessions from outside the Land that he took from Laban.

Printed annotation - 1

(Rashi.) Its midrashic meaning is from keri, a heap: Jacob took all the silver and gold he had brought from Laban's house, made it into a heap, and said to Esau, "Take this for your share in the cave." Thus far.

"Alternatively," etc.: the master further expounded "I shall redeem my house," mentioned in the preceding section, in another way: when shall I redeem the twelve tribes, for they are his house? As it is said, "Thus says the LORD to the house of Jacob, who redeemed Abraham" (Isaiah 29), followed by "When he sees his children," etc. Our Sages, of blessed memory, said on this that through their merit Abraham was saved from Ur of the Chaldeans, as explained in Midrash Rabbah, Toledot, and Tanhuma there, and especially in the Zohar, Ahare, page 101 [gap]. They themselves needed redemption because they were born outside the Land. Therefore Jacob provided the ransom of their souls through the possessions he acquired in Laban's house. Concerning this he said, "When shall I work," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב

The LORD's intention agreed to Jacob's purchase of Shechem, because it was manifest before Him, blessed be He, that Joseph would be sold in Shechem. It was good in God's eyes for Jacob to buy Shechem first, so that Joseph would

Rema of Fano

Alternatively, "I shall redeem my house" means the house of Jacob "who redeemed Abraham": I mean the twelve tribes, as it is written, "When he sees his children," etc. (Isaiah 29:23), through whose merit he was saved from Ur of the Chaldeans. Since they were born outside the Land, he provided the ransom of their souls through the labor of his hands. From it he sent a gift to Esau; from it he bought Shechem from Hamor's sons. The supernal intention agreed to this, so that Joseph should not be sold as a slave in another domain among the nations' cities. Rather, his brothers would first rule over him in the domain of holiness, and afterward he would rule throughout Egypt, as a shelter and hiding place from Israel's subjugation under Egyptian hands, as explained in the Zohar (I, 184a).[1]

For the decree "They shall serve them," pronounced between the pieces, required actual slavery. It was fulfilled in Joseph, whose person belonged to Egypt. Had he descended there with his person enslaved, without his brothers first ruling over him, but instead been captured by Midianites or Ishmaelites and sold there, he might have remained absorbed among them forever. A tribe would have been diminished from Israel, Heaven forbid; who would raise it up? For the law allowing a Hebrew slave sold to an eqer, "rootstock," to go free not be sold outside the Land.

Yad Yehudah - ג

As explained in the Zohar, Va-Yeshev, page 414: "'Israel said to Joseph, "Are not your brothers pasturing in Shechem?"' etc. Jacob the complete, who loved Joseph more than all his sons and knew all his brothers hated him —why did he send him to them? He did not suspect them, for he knew they were all righteous, and did not suspect them. Rather, the Holy One, blessed be He, caused all this to fulfill the decree He pronounced between the pieces. We found in the books of the ancients that these sons of Jacob had to rule over him before he descended to Egypt. Had he descended [?] to Egypt without their first ruling over him, the Egyptians could have ruled over Israel forever. It was fulfilled in Joseph, who was sold as a slave, and they ruled over him. Although Joseph afterward became king and the Egyptians were his slaves, it followed that Israel ruled over them all." Thus far. These are the master's words before us. [TN200085]

Yad Yehudah - ד

"For the law of a Hebrew slave," etc.: the master gave a fitting explanation for the Zohar's words. He said that the law of a Hebrew slave sold to a gentile—concerning whom the section Be-Har says, "He shall reckon with his purchaser," and "He shall return his purchase price to him," etc.—means that he goes free through a reduction of the price. He deducts from his redemption price the money that the calculation assigns to the years already elapsed. This applies only when an Israelite is the seller, for the law concerns one who sells himself or whom the court sells, not one whom a gentile sells. Such a person is only a captive sold, who does not go free through a reduction of the price or through the other means by which a Hebrew slave goes free. So it would have been with Joseph, had he been sold by Midianites or Ishmaelites without their having purchased him from his brothers.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Although," etc., is from the Zohar passage

through a reduction of the price applies only when an Israelite is the seller. [TN200084]

Although Joseph afterward became king, and the Egyptians were his slaves through a small measure of ownership of their persons, since he kept them alive with bread, nevertheless people could say it was a chance occurrence: a slave ruling over princes. They said, "We shall be slaves to Pharaoh" (Genesis 47:25), not to you. Needless to say, after Israel was enslaved in Egypt, even Joseph's kingship would neither benefit nor save them.

Now, however, since his brothers sold him within their hereditary possession in the Land of Israel, redemption would be available to him, and he would reckon with his purchaser. Thus he reduced his redemption price and went free for sustenance and provision. In all other arrangements of kingship too, he exercised authority throughout his life in Egypt. Yet he was always subject and submissive to the awe of the community, in the congregation of the LORD. For concerning his brothers it is written, "They commanded Joseph" (Genesis 50:16), even while they were submitting to him. It followed that Israel ruled over them all.

mentioned. The intention is that although Joseph became king and his bondage was broken—for there is no greater emancipation than this—and the Egyptians too were his slaves, since he bought them with bread, so that one cannot say he remained submerged forever, nevertheless people could say Joseph became king only by chance [gap] to rule over them. The Egyptians too did not become his slaves, as they carefully specified in their wording: they did not say "We shall be your slaves," but "Pharaoh's."

Yad Yehudah - ו

V.A.L.: since it was to be reversed afterward and the Egyptians enslaved Israel, what benefit is there for us in saying Joseph was king? For all these reasons Israel would have remained submerged in Egypt had Joseph been sold through anyone other than his brothers. [TN200086]

Yad Yehudah - ז

But now, since his brothers sold him, he had the status of a Hebrew slave sold by an Israelite to a gentile. Secondly, the sale was in the Land of Israel. Redemption would be available to him, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"He went free for sustenance and provision": to sustain Egypt and his brothers in the famine years, as Scripture says, "For the preservation of life God sent me before you."

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Always," etc.: nevertheless he was subject to his brothers, and the awe of the community rested upon him.

Yad Yehudah - י

Even while submitting, when his brothers humbled themselves before him and pleaded for their lives, it is written of them, "They commanded."

Yad Yehudah - יא

“It followed that Israel,” etc.: the wording of the Zohar passage mentioned.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The house of Jacob, who redeemed,” etc.: see the Zohar, Ahare, page 108. It is explained there that the children of Jacob’s house, whose bed was complete, saved Abraham from Ur of the Chaldeans through their righteousness. It is known from the Zohar, Lekh Lekha, that, on the contrary, in proportion to holiness’s great strength, impurity dwells there first. This is its test, as with the Land of Israel first in Canaanite hands, and Bathsheba in Uriah’s hands, and likewise with all. These children, whose bed was complete, were born outside the Land. Afterward Jacob redeemed them with his money, “and they struck, from Esau’s hand” [?]. This is “I shall redeem my house.” [TN200087]

“As explained in the Zohar,” etc.: its location is the Zohar, Va-Yeshev, page 414, “We found in the books of the ancients.” See there, and you will see that the author added a little to sweeten the mystery. “Only when sold by an Israelite,” etc.: this would not be so if Joseph had been sold through Midianites and not through his Israelite brothers; he would not have gone free through a reduction of the price. “They commanded Joseph,” etc.: they commanded him after Jacob’s death, although they were submissive under him.

“The act with the rods,” etc.: the master returns to his exposition mentioned in section 7. He says that the act with the rods that Jacob set in the troughs, and the entire matter, was a symbolic act to bring what it hints at above from potentiality into actuality. Through this action of the rods, he separated the holy souls and brought them out of the shells into which they had fallen. See the

The act with the rods performed by Jacob our father contains a symbolic act for separating the holy souls from the iron furnace. As it is written, “He set the flock’s faces”—in the sense of the “human flock” spoken of by Ezekiel —“toward the bound/streaked one”: this is Isaac. Alternatively, he intended through them the meaning of the sacrifices, as we learned: one does not truss the lamb, but binds it. [TN200088]

Zohar, Va-Yetse, page 371.

Yad Yehudah - ב–ג

“As it is written, ‘He set,’” etc.: therefore he set the flock’s faces toward the bound/streaked one. This is in the sense of the “human flock” stated in Ezekiel 36: “For this too I shall be entreated by the house of Israel to do for them: I shall multiply them like a human flock,” etc.; “so the ruined cities will be filled with a human flock," etc. They can beautifully be expounded in the lofty manner concerning the holy souls destined to emerge from the place into which they fell. Here too Jacob set the flock's faces toward the bound one, Isaac, who had been bound upon the altar, to hint that the holy souls would return to Isaac's seed, or to recall Isaac's binding, through whose merit the souls would return.

Yad Yehudah - ד

Alternatively, by setting the flock's faces toward the bound one, he intended through them the meaning of sacrifices, in accordance with Nahmanides' words in the section Va-Yiqra. Their reason is that when performing the sacrificial act, a person should consider that he sinned against his God with body and soul. His blood ought to be shed and his body burned, were it not for the Creator's lovingkindness, taking a substitute from him and atoning through this offering, so that its blood stands for his blood, life for life, and the offering's principal limbs correspond to his principal limbs.

Rabbeinu Bahya brought evidence for this reason from our Rabbis' exposition of "He offered it as a burnt offering in place of his son." What does "in

We return to Abraham, who said to Sodom's king, "If I take anything of yours." He accepted gifts from Abimelech only as a sign of reconciliation and on condition of returning them. For the thousand pieces of silver that he mentioned to Sarah must certainly be understood as the equivalent value in silver. These are the very sheep and cattle Scripture mentioned in the giving itself. Otherwise, why did Abimelech not mention them to Sarah, to appease her further? Afterward too, Abraham returned them to Abimelech when making the covenant. He did not, however, return the male and female servants, who had undergone circumcision and immersion and were included among the souls they had made. How could he return them to their former waywardness?

Rather, they were Isaac's servants mentioned in the passage about the wells they dug in the wadi of Gerar, for they were local people and knew the sources of water. Gerar's shepherds sought to oppress them as Midian's shepherds did Jethro's daughters, since they had departed from their ways. Our Rabbis have already mentioned that when they oppressed them concerning the first well, it dried up in their hands; when they returned it, it sprang up by itself. The second dried up and never sprang up again. They did not oppress them at all concerning the third. Isaac's shepherds, however, at his command rescued the servants from the Philistines. Thus we learn that Isaac's shepherds and Isaac's servants were place of his son" mean? At every act of service Abraham performed with the ram, he prayed: "May it be Your will that this service be as though performed upon my son: as though he were slaughtered, as though his blood were sprinkled, as though he were burned and reduced to ashes." Accordingly, the master expounded "He set the flock's faces toward the bound one" as hinting that the offerings look toward the human being who ought to have been bound in their place. They may also have hinted at bound Isaac, who is evidence for this reason.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"As we learned": at the beginning of chapter 4 of Tamid, the offerings must be bound. According to Rabbeinu Bahya's words, it appears that this is what the Gemara says there: "It was taught: hand and foot, like the binding of Isaac son of Abraham," to indicate the sacrifice's reason.

Yad Yehudah - ו

We return to Abraham, whom we left in section 6.

Yad Yehudah - ז–ח

He said to Sodom's king, "If I take," etc., because he hated gifts. The gifts he accepted from Abimelech —as it is written in Va-Yera, "Abimelech took sheep and cattle, male and female servants, and gave them to Abraham"—were a sign of reconciliation, to show him that he was appeased.

Rema of Fano - continued

separate groups. This is a sound close reading of Scripture.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“On condition of returning them”: as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - י

“For the thousand pieces of silver”: do not object, why did Abraham not also return to Abimelech the thousand pieces of silver he gave him, as the verse’s plain sense appears to indicate: “To Sarah he said, ‘Behold, I have given a thousand pieces of silver to your brother’”? In fact, he never gave him a thousand pieces of silver. The correct interpretation of the thousand pieces of silver mentioned to Sarah is their equivalent value in silver: the sheep and cattle he gave him. Nahmanides, of blessed memory, likewise explained it; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יא

Otherwise, if you wish to explain it as an actual thousand pieces of silver besides the sheep and cattle, the difficulty is: why did Abimelech not also mention the sheep and cattle before Sarah? A.Z., as we said. [TN200089]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Afterward he returned them”: as it is written in Va-Yera, “Abraham took sheep and cattle and gave them to Abimelech, and the two of them made a covenant.”

Yad Yehudah - יג

“He did not return the servants”: the reason he did not also return to Abimelech the male and female servants received from him is that he had already circumcised and immersed them, bringing them under the Shekhinah’s wings.

Yad Yehudah - יד

They are included among “the souls they had made,” concerning which our Sages, of blessed memory, said Abraham converted converts, etc.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“Mentioned in the passage about the wells”: as it is written in Toledot, “Isaac went from there and encamped in the wadi of Gerar,” etc. “Isaac’s servants dug in the wadi and found there a well of living water. Gerar’s shepherds quarreled with Isaac’s shepherds, saying, ‘The water is ours.’ He named the well Esek, because they contended with him. They dug another well, and they quarreled over that too,” etc. “He dug another well, and they did not quarrel over it,” etc. The master explains incidentally that Gerar’s shepherds therefore sought to oppress Isaac’s servants: because they had converted and departed from their deeds.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“As Midian’s shepherds did Jethro’s daughters”: it is written, “The shepherds came and drove them away.” Our Sages, of blessed memory, said in Shemot Rabbah, as Rashi brought, that it was because of the ban they placed on Jethro for abandoning idolatry.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Our Rabbis have already mentioned,” etc.: as stated in Jonathan’s Targum on “Gerar’s shepherds quarreled,” etc. See there; Nahmanides mentioned [gap] what was done through Isaac’s servants after they converted.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“When they returned it”: to Isaac.

Yad Yehudah - יט

Gerar’s shepherds, however, were not the servants who dug the three wells [gap]; they were righteous converts. Not so these shepherds: they did nothing except rescue the servants at Isaac’s command. [TN200090]

Yad Yehudah - כ

This is a sound close reading of Scripture: it began with servants, saying, “Isaac’s servants dug,” and concluded with shepherds, “They quarreled with Isaac’s shepherds.” It is as we said.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The act with the rods,” etc.: see the Zohar, Va-Yetse, page 341. You will find there that Jacob’s making rods and peeling them in the troughs—“I passed by the field of a lazy man [?],” the initials of “over Laban’s flock”—was only a symbolic act below corresponding to above. He peeled them in the troughs to establish the flock of Israel, who are called a flock, the holy souls, separately, and Laban’s flock separately. The manner of his rectification is explained to those who know the mystery in the verse “My God [?],” which is called holiness [?];

there it is explained at length. [TN200091]

“In the sense of a human flock,” etc.: these are holy souls. Alternatively, he intended the reason for the sacrifices. It is known that the binding of the offering involved its feet and hands, like the binding of Isaac son of Abraham. So was his binding, and it is a symbolic act. Just as we say, “Through the lowering of hands, the hands leak”: through lowering the hands below, one causes impurity, as mentioned above concerning the lifting of hands. In the offering mentioned, through the feet’s rising to the hands above, there is a rectification that includes the attribute of the feet in the hands. Here too Jacob said “bound ones” with this intention. [TN200092]

“Otherwise”: if he gave an actual thousand pieces of silver as well as sheep and cattle, why did Abimelech not mention them when he said to Sarah, “Behold, I have given your brother a thousand pieces of silver”? Why did he not mention the sheep and cattle he gave him? Certainly, then, the sheep and cattle he gave him were worth a thousand pieces of silver: these are the very thousand pieces of silver he mentioned. Afterward they were returned to him when making the covenant.

“For they were local people,” etc.: the servants Abraham converted had previously belonged to Abimelech; therefore they knew the places where water emerged and the wells that had existed earlier. “As Midian’s shepherds,” etc.: they drove them away because Jethro had abandoned idolatry, and they put him under a ban. Likewise here, because they converted, Gerar’s shepherds oppressed them.

“Our Rabbis have already mentioned,” etc.: in Jonathan’s Targum. It is a hint at the three sanctuaries they established. The first Temple was destroyed and they restored it; it lay destroyed for only seventy years, and afterward it was built. The second was built and destroyed, and has not been built again. The third will be built speedily in our days, and they will never oppress it. “Isaac’s shepherds separately, and the servants,” etc.: those who converted were called Isaac’s servants. Isaac’s shepherds rescued the servants mentioned above.

“A woman, however,” etc.: above, in section 5, the master compares Sarah’s visitation with the moon’s diminution. Until now he has elaborated on expositions drawn after this; here he returns to the first subject.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“As our Sages said”: at the end of the chapter Ha-ba al Yevimto, they compel him to divorce her on the

Rema of Fano

A woman, however, has an especial need for children, who are staffs for her hand, as our Sages, of blessed memory, said. Through them she will be beloved by her husband, as they said, “A woman is only for children.” It is written, “Your sons shall possess you,” for the drops of seed from which the children are formed continually impregnate her throughout the pregnancy and bring her perfection from potentiality into actuality. The children themselves thereby grounds that “I need a staff for my hand.”

Yad Yehudah - ג–ה

“Beloved by her husband”: for he married her with this in view, as they said, “A woman is only for children.” This is “Your sons shall possess you” (Isaiah 61). At first sight this expression is unintelligible, since the language of intercourse applies only to a husband.

The point, however, is that the drops of seed continually tend her, act in her, and benefit her; hence the language of intercourse. Scripture teaches us that the children themselves thereby fulfill the stated purpose in her. For apart from producing descendants, a woman has no perfection in herself as a man does, who is commanded in the commandments. For this reason they said, "A woman is only for children"; they likewise said that women's understanding is light because they have no perfection in themselves. [TN200094]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Through them": the children.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Although she is not commanded": a man is commanded concerning procreation, but not a woman, as explained at the end of the chapter in Yevamot; all the decisors ruled accordingly. She said "Give me children" only to bring her perfection into actuality through them.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"When there joins her," etc.: since this is so, and the children themselves fulfill the purpose, there are three here: the father's understanding, the understanding of the children who complete

unquestionably fulfill the purpose in her, since she has no perfection of her own as the man does. Therefore they said that her understanding is light; she seeks her completion through them, like Rachel, who said, "Give me children," although she is not commanded. When the father's understanding, the children's understanding, and the understanding of the Giver of forms join her—as we shall explain, they are all described in terms of visitation—their saying concerning "He built the rib" is most fitting: He gave woman more understanding than man. [TN200093]

It is known that binah is the treasury of daat, as Maimonides explained at the end of chapter 3 of Avot. The objection of Nahalat Avot is void from the outset, for the tanna speaks of the human dimension, not the divine, according to the words' plain meaning. Here too, when the supreme understanding of the Giver of forms and the understanding of the children, Israel—certainly her builders, as we expound from the verse's redundant wording—join the moon, they observe the sun's courses at His command and reckon by her, the moon, in faithfulness with Him. Through this, without doubt, additional love is made known to her.

The stars adorned the rule of night, so that we may rightly say that both luminaries were great from the beginning of their creation: the sun through greatness of structure, the moon through greatness of number. Through their shared governance in complete equality, the purpose of their creation their own being, and the understanding of the Giver of forms, which is His supreme understanding, blessed be He. These join the woman's understanding in bringing the child's potentiality into actuality.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"As we shall explain": in part III, around section 6.

Yad Yehudah - י–יב

"Their saying is most fitting": in the chapter Yotse Dofen and in Bereshit Rabbah, that the blessed LORD gave woman more binah than man. This is because all the stated understandings join her; this is the place of binah, which is the treasury of daat, as is known from the sages of truth. Maimonides too, in the revealed teaching according to his approach, explained the mishnah there, "If there is no binah, there is no daat," etc. See there: his explanation is very obscure and itself requires explanation. According to the master's words, Maimonides means that daat is the power of intellection, namely the judging intellect, and binah is the judgment concerning what is understood. Thus binah is the treasury of daat, gathering the intellect. The tanna says, "If there is no daat, there is no binah": without intellect, whence would the intelligible object come? "If there is no

binah, there is no daat": without an intelligible object, concerning what will be achieved, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - י–יב - continued

would intellect instruct? This explanation is the reverse of what the sage

Yad Yehudah - י–יב - continued

Abravanel wrote in his book Nahalat Avot concerning Maimonides' intention; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יג

The objection that the book Nahalat Avot raised there against Maimonides—saying that if he mentioned intellect and intelligible object, he ought also to have mentioned the one who understands—is void from the outset and is no objection.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"For the tanna speaks of the human dimension": if the tanna's words concerned the divine, this would certainly be an objection. Since he speaks only of the human dimension, it is inappropriate to say that if there is no one who understands, there is no intellect or intelligible object. Even in the absence of the human species as understander, intellect and intelligible object nevertheless remain among the separate beings, namely the angels. Know that Abravanel there challenged Maimonides with another objection as well; the master does not mean that objection.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"As we expound from the verse's redundant wording": "All your sons shall be taught by the LORD, and great shall be your sons' peace." The second "your sons" is redundant, and our Sages expounded: read not "your sons" but "your builders." Here too Israel are the moon's builders.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"At His command": the Holy One, blessed be He, commands them to reckon by the moon. Nevertheless they observe the sun's courses, when it enters Aries, so that spring may arrive at its time, as the command concerning these matters came in His saying, "This month shall be yours," and "Observe the month of spring."

Yad Yehudah - יז–יח

"The stars, however," etc.: above, in section 5, the master wrote according to the hidden teaching that both luminaries were great from the beginning of their creation. Now he says this according to the plain meaning, concerning the actual sun and moon. The moon's initially being called great too was not because of its dimensions and magnitude, but because the stars were with it and adorned it by going out with it. Thus the sun was great through greatness of structure, owing to its size, and the moon was great through greatness of number, owing to the many stars surrounding it. Although even before the moon's accusation the blessed LORD decreed that the stars should go out with it, we said above that after the accusation He increased its hosts to appease it. We must say that the moon did not know of this, and the blessed LORD disclosed it in language of appeasement.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"As will be explained": shortly.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"A woman, however," etc.: this chapter is joined to the earlier chapter 5, which mentioned the moon's diminution and the premise of its human counterpart, "From my flesh I shall behold God." His intention is to resolve the contradiction between the statements. Once he stated the truth of what we expound: daat comprises ten times the numerical value of YHVH, namely 260, after the manner of "The LORD saw that he turned aside [sar] to see." See part II, section 28 of this treatise. Ten times the numerical value of Ehyeh is 210, making 470; with the four letters in their plain reckoning, this is daat. Since it comprises ten times, each contains the five lovingkindnesses and five powers of judgment mentioned above. Malkhut has only five powers of judgment. Five times 26 equals 130, and the he comprises the five powers of judgment: altogether 135. This is "their understanding is light [qallah]." [TN200095]

"Through the father's understanding joining her," etc.: through Yesod; also the children's understanding, "Your sons shall possess you," as above. They continually impregnate her throughout her pregnancy; so it is, with a thousand thousand distinctions, above. The souls also illuminate her in the mystery of daat. The understanding of the Giver of forms means that the Name Yah likewise shines in them at the time of union. She therefore has more binah than the man, for it is known that daat is in the treasury of binah. Daat is the inwardness and finest beauty of the six extremities that rise above into the mental faculties; it is emanated [?] from binah, as is known. Thus the author's words are correctly understood. [TN200096]

"As RaMB explained in his book," in the revealed teaching, the saying in Avot, "If there is no daat, there is no binah; if there is no binah, there is no daat": thus binah is the treasury of daat. Although the book Nahalat Avot, of blessed memory, objected to him concerning "If there is no daat, there is no binah": "I have already informed you of RaMB's view: binah is intellect, daat the intelligible object. According to his words he ought also to mention the one who understands." End of quotation. In truth, however, he answers that the one who understands hints at the blessed Ein Sof, whereas he speaks of the intelligible object and intellect, which are the human dimension. This resolves the objection. [TN200097]

The explanation of his saying, "All your sons shall be taught by the LORD, and great shall be your sons' peace," will be explained concerning deficiency and excess. Therefore they expounded: read not "your sons" but "your builders." "The stars adorned," etc.: that is, they add to the moon. "The sun through greatness of structure": it was itself great. "The moon through greatness of number": through its many hosts, the stars. Through their shared governance in the future, the moon's light will be like the sun's light; the purpose will be achieved.

Yad Yehudah - א

"The moon, however, brought its accusation," etc.: now the master proceeds to explain the entire saying in the chapter Ellu Terefot concerning the moon's diminution, which he began above in section 5. I have seen fit to copy the entire saying so as to understand the master's explanation, which will come point by point in the following sections through section 29. This is the saying:

Rabbi Simeon ben Pazi raised a contradiction: it is written, "God made the two great luminaries," and

Rema of Fano

The moon, however, brought its accusation before the Holy One, blessed be He, in a statement seeking peace and pursuing love. Therefore the sages called it qitrug, a compound word meaning a quarrel of desire or a bond of desire, as "desirable to behold" is translated meraggag le-mehezei. It said, "It is impossible for two kings to use one crown." Thus it is taught in the chapter Ellu Terefot. [TN200098]

Its meaning is that, to fulfill the will of the Good Who does good, it is insufficient for both to exist as individuals, each with a perfection sufficient for itself, without benefiting another. From this standpoint, the moon

it is written, "the small luminary." The moon said before the Holy One, blessed be He, "Master of the universe, can two kings use one crown?" He told it, "Go and diminish yourself." It said before Him, "Master of the universe, because I said something proper before You, should I diminish myself?" He told it, "Go and rule by day and by night." It said to Him, "What advantage is that? What use is a lamp at midday?" He told it, "Go: let Israel count days and years by you." It said to Him, "It is also impossible not to count the seasons by the day, for it is written, 'Let them be for signs and appointed times, and for days and years.'" He told it, "Go: let the righteous be called by your name—Jacob the Small, Samuel the Small, David the Small." He saw that its mind was not appeased. The Holy One, blessed be He, said, "Bring an offering for Me, because I diminished the moon," etc.

In this section the master explains the matter according to its plain meaning, concerning the actual sun and moon. His view is that even before the accusation the moon governed night alone; it desires to join the sun in the manner of marriage: their governance is shared, its parts agreeing, so that both may benefit others. Its longing was for a continual union in complete equality, with the light from above spreading before them without interruption, in the King's bounty. Even though the sun alone would rule the governance of day, when man goes out to his activity and labor in the commandments observed during it, the moon's governance of night would prepare for the performance of deeds occasioned by night—for it was created only for study—and all that is similar. This would be accounted honor and greatness for the moon: thereby it would rise with him and not descend from his rank.

too rejoiced in its portion and was content with it. No jealousy or rivalry against the governance of day ever entered its heart on that account. Rather, the accusation arose from the desire and longing of the moon that its governance not be attributed to it separately, and the sun's governance to it separately, but that the governance of both be attributed to them jointly, by complete sharing and equality and in pursuit of the sun's love—not to provoke its husband, Heaven forbid.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Therefore the sages called" its statement "qitrug," saying, "From the moon's accusation."

Yad Yehudah - ג

"A compound word": qat is the language of quarrel, rug the language of desire, meaning a quarrel of desire. Alternatively, qitr is the language of binding, rug of desire, with the resh serving both the preceding and following elements. It means a bond of desire, in that it desired the sun.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Thus it is taught," etc.: to exclude the other version that will be explained below in section 14.

Yad Yehudah - ה–ז

"For it is insufficient," etc.: something called perfect must be good for itself and do good to others. Therefore it is insufficient for the sun and moon both to exist individually—that is, not as a genus or species but as a separate individual, each alone—with each having its own perfection and not benefiting another. For if the governance of day and night constitutes two parts of governance, and each luminary is attributed its own part alone, neither will benefit another, because alone it cannot confer benefit. Even in illuminating those who dwell upon it, it illuminates only within its portion of governance, which is half the governance; this is no complete beneficence. This is its saying, "It is impossible for two kings to use one crown." It does not mean that because they are two kings, they ought to use two crowns. Quite the reverse: since they have only one crown and one perfection for both together, their governance ought not to be separate; rather, it ought to be shared, as though belonging to one king.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Its parts agreeing": both its parts, so that it is appropriate to say that together they benefit others throughout their governance.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"For a continual union," etc.: as it was at that time, when it received its light not from the sun but from the light above itself, which spread before both equally. The moon asked that this continue.

Yad Yehudah - י

"Even though," etc.: do not wonder how the moon asked to share with the sun in their governance so that both together would benefit others. Surely the entire purpose of their creation and the essential

benefit they confer is the observance of Torah and commandments, which Israel can perform by their light. This is possible only with respect to the sun, not the governance of night, when the commandments do not apply. Yet even on this account it was elevated [?]: the moon spoke properly, for although the performance of commandments is not at night, preparation for a commandment applies at night. This is study, which leads to action, for night was created only for study. By preparing the performance of commandments through its light, the moon would be accounted honor and greatness when sharing this with the sun; thereby it would rise with him, etc. The master has thus explained the moon's accusation according to the plain meaning. He will explain the blessed LORD's answer in section 13; see there. [TN200099]

Yoel Moshe - 1

"It is impossible for two kings," etc., "to use," etc.: literally, it is impossible—as it were, it is impossible—for them to have conjunction and union when they are within one crown, in one world, as above in section 5. When they were back to back in the mystery of the two faces, each had illumination sufficient for itself, but they did not benefit others by engendering souls. Because of the force of the illumination of lovingkindnesses in the male—for his light is great, who can contain it?—and likewise the harsh judgments in her, in the five powers of judgment, the world could not bear them.

From this standpoint the moon longed for continual conjunction and union to benefit others. Although the sun would govern by day and the moon by night, each would nevertheless have its own, as it was: by day, in the commandments pertaining to it; and by night, the governance of its service would be study, for night was created only for study, as he explains. Thus it benefits others. [TN200100]

Yad Yehudah - א

"This may fittingly be attributed," etc.: the philosophers disagreed concerning the nature of heaven. Some say that the heavens possess intellect and are living, intelligent beings. They proved this view from their perpetual movement, always moving in a circle. This movement is not natural, like the stone's downward movement and fire's upward movement, for if it were, the heavens would inevitably rest on reaching the place from which they departed, like everything

Rema of Fano

This debate, in wisdom and moral teaching, may fittingly be attributed to the moon, whether the celestial bodies are living, intelligent beings, or whether their movers speak and strive for their proper ordering and are called by their names. If we posit that they possess intellect, this is what the sages of Israel established in the chapter Mi she-Hayah Tame, saying that the sphere is fixed and the astral body revolves. The astral body is a particular intellectual part within the sphere, like the brain in man, which governs the body with intelligence, longs, cleaves, and becomes a throne of glory for the soul. So it is with the astral

moving by natural movement. Nor can this movement be like that of an animal, which moves to approach what it imagines useful and pleasant and to withdraw from what harms it. For the heavens always move in a circle; to the place toward which they go, they return to go again. Necessarily, then, this movement arises from longing: the heavens desire and long for this movement. Since longing can be attributed only to beings possessing soul and intellect, they concluded that the heavens are intelligent. Maimonides explained all this in chapter 4 of part II of the Guide, and strengthened this opinion from verses there in chapter 5. He also wrote thus in chapter 3 of the Laws of the Foundations of the Torah.

Others say that the spheres' perpetual movement does not compel us to say they possess intellect; rather, the angels, sent on the LORD's mission, move them without interruption. The master says that according to either of these two opinions, the stated debate, a matter of wisdom and moral teaching, may be attributed to the moon. If we say that the heavens themselves are intelligent, we can only judge the same rightly concerning the stars, since they are parts of the sphere. Maimonides likewise wrote this in chapter 3 of the Laws of the Foundations of the Torah. Clearly, then, the moon's debate can rightly be attributed to it. If we say that angels move the spheres and strive for their proper ordering, we too shall attribute this debate to those angels appointed over the movement of the moon's sphere.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Or whether their movers": the movers of the heavenly bodies are the angels, who possess a

body: it understands, governs the sphere through its wisdom, longs, cleaves, and becomes a base for the angel. [TN200101]

Thus the sphere possesses a vital soul, fixed in its perfection, subsisting as an individual. Its intellect is the astral body, which turns to contemplate its Maker's will and is stirred toward the ordered movement within its sphere. Its intellectual soul is the angel, for without it, it will not contemplate the Shekhinah so as to fulfill Her desire, just as the human brain does not perfectly recognize its Creator without the soul. Whoever says that the astral body is fixed and the sphere revolves speaks truth: the feet carry the head, and it and its matter are equal in this perceptible respect.

One of the commentators went beyond measure in saying that the sages of Israel retracted and conceded to those who say this, for the discussion does not accord with his words. Even if we suppose that they were silent before them, and that among those who repeat the laws they also found someone following their approach—which contains no falsehood according to the revealed plain meaning—they, in their wisdom, did not wish to reveal their reason and grounds.

According to those who say that these bodies have no life of their own and that their movement is merely natural and circular, like the ascent of the light elements and descent of the heavy ones, we too shall say that their movers begin speaking soul and strive for the spheres' proper ordering. They therefore spoke well on the moon's behalf in the stated debate.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"And are called": the angels are called by the name of the sphere each moves.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"If we posit," etc.: if we establish as a firm premise that the heavens possess intellect, this will itself be what the Gemara says in the chapter Mi she-Hayah Tame. Our Rabbis taught: the sages of Israel say the sphere is fixed and the astral bodies revolve; the sages of the nations say the sphere revolves and the astral bodies are fixed. Rabbi said: a refutation of their words is that we have never found the Wagon in the south or Scorpio in the north. Rav Aha bar Jacob challenged this: perhaps it is like the pivot of a mill, or alternatively like the socket of a door. See Rashi's explanation there.

Yad Yehudah - ה

For the astral body is a particular part of the sphere in which the intellect dwells.

Yad Yehudah - ו

Like the brain in man, which is a part of him [?] [gap] the body [?] longs for the soul, cleaves to it, and becomes its throne of glory, for [gap]. [TN200102]

Yad Yehudah - ז

So it is with the astral body, which understands [gap] possessing intellect through the understanding astral body [?], like the body through the brain;

with the astral body and finish with the sphere drawn after it. Those who stand within the mystery of creation and the truth of its ordering cannot conceive the reverse in any way.

also [gap] for the angel, for the angel [gap]. [TN200103]

Yad Yehudah - ח

[gap] The Rabbis say that the sphere is fixed and the astral body revolves [gap] that the sphere is fixed and does not move [gap] the sphere revolves, for it possesses a vital power [?] [gap] fixed, meaning always fixed [gap] subsisting [gap] unchanging; and [?] the movement is only from the side of [gap] the sphere's intellect is the astral body, which turns, etc. [TN200104]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"For without it," etc.: he does not mean to say here that the angel moves the sphere, for that is only according to the one who holds that the spheres are not living and intelligent. Rather, our saying that the sphere's intellectual soul is the angel means that this is necessarily the truth: without the angel, the astral body will not recognize its Creator.

Yad Yehudah - י

"Whoever says that the astral body is fixed," according to the sages of the nations, speaks truth according to the plain meaning. For the astral body is like the head and the sphere like the feet. Thus the sphere revolves and carries with it the astral body fixed within it.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"It"—the head—"and its matter"—the feet—are equal in that both revolve. The feet revolve essentially, while the head revolves incidentally, through being fixed upon them.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"He went beyond measure": the one who explained that the sages of Israel retracted and conceded to the sages of the nations, as though this were a dispute. Even if you say there is a dispute between them, as appears from the Gemara's plain meaning, the discussion still does not appear to accord with his saying that the sages of Israel conceded to the sages of the nations. On the contrary, Rabbi said, "A refutation of their words." Although Rav Aha bar Jacob challenged it, this too provides no proof for his words.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Even if we suppose": even if we posit and say that the sages of Israel were silent before them, and even if some who repeat the laws follow the approach of the sages of the nations and likewise hold that the astral body is fixed—as is true according to the plain meaning, as stated—this nevertheless constitutes no concession to them. The essential point is that the sages of Israel did not wish to disclose their reason: why and in what respect they said the astral body revolves while acknowledging the reverse.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"According to those who say," etc.: what we said on the Rabbis' behalf accords with those who say that the spheres possess intellect, because their movement is their souls' longing. According to those who say they have no life, etc., we must explain the Rabbis' words differently, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Their movement is merely natural": I already wrote at the beginning of this section that they proved the movement cannot be natural. Those who say that the spheres have no life at all hold that their movement occurs through the angels who move them. Here the master writes a third opinion: some hold that their movement is natural. They said that its innate nature includes never resting but always moving circularly, so that the other natural movements we mentioned present no difficulty.

The master therefore says that even if the sages of the nations hold this view and hence say the sphere revolves, we too shall say on behalf of the sages of Israel: although they likewise hold that the spheres do not possess intellect, they do not hold that the spheres' movement is natural. Rather, they hold that it occurs through the angels. They therefore said the astral body revolves, meaning that the moving angels begin to move the astral body, which revolves, and the sphere is drawn after it.

It seems to me that since natural science and astronomy have shown that, according to the one who says movement is natural, it is more appropriate to say the astral body revolves than the sphere revolves, the master could likewise have established the sages of Israel's view in that manner. He preferred, however, to establish the Rabbis' view according to the one who says that the angels are the movers, for we find this to be our Sages' opinion in Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 12. It will be cited below in part III, section 100.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Like the ascent of the light elements": fire and air, whose nature is to ascend, and like the nature of the heavy elements, earth and water, to descend. So it is the nature of the spheres or astral body always to revolve in a circle.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"The reverse cannot be conceived": to say that the astral body is fixed and the sphere revolves.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"In any way": whether we say the movement arises from longing, is natural, or is brought about by angels.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Those who stand within the mystery of creation": the mystery of creation proves it, for the purpose of creating the luminaries is one thing, and the purpose of creating the heavens another. How can we say that the heavens move when the movement is not for their own need? Only the luminaries need it, so that by revolving they may illuminate the entire terrestrial globe. The same applies to the other planets, unlike the heavens, which have no need of movement at all.

Yad Yehudah - כ

The ordering of creation, too, is indeed a sign that the sphere does not revolve, for the heavens preceded the luminaries in creation. If the movement were natural or arose from longing, the heavens' movement before the luminaries were created would have been in vain. If we say the movement occurs through angels, it is true that they were created; the difficulty returns: if their charge was to move the sphere, their work would have been in vain as long as the luminaries had not been created. Necessarily, then, the astral body revolves, and this is what we hold.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"This debate may fittingly be attributed," etc.: the moon's debate with the blessed LORD, although the moon does not literally speak, may be justified in two ways. First, the celestial bodies—the spheres—understand with good intellect so as to speak. Second, angels—angels who move the spheres—are the speakers. "If we posit," etc.: the first manner, in which the spheres themselves possess intellect. "The sphere is fixed," etc.: the reverse of the opinion that the astral body is fixed and the sphere revolves, as below. "Becomes a base for the angel," etc.: the angel is like a soul within a body. "It and its matter," etc.: the head and material body are equal in this, that the feet carry them.

"He went beyond measure," etc.: in saying that the sages conceded to them, he went beyond measure, for the discussion does not accord with his words; rather, it is satisfactory to say that they were silent before them. "Even if we suppose that they were silent," etc.: not that they actually conceded to them, but that they were silent because this opinion too is true according to the revealed plain meaning, in that the feet carry the head. "They did not wish to reveal," etc.: therefore they were silent and did not concede, because they did not wish to reveal.

"According to those who say," etc.: this is the second manner we wrote above. "Like the ascent of the light elements": fire and air, whose nature is that the flame rises upward, and likewise the air. Similarly, the descent of the heavy elements—earth and water—whose nature is to descend: so the sphere has no life, but moves [?] by nature. Its movers are the angels: they move the astral body fixed within the sphere, and the sphere follows it. The reverse of this explanation cannot be conceived. [TN200105]

Yad Yehudah - א

“These too,” etc.: the master returns to the moon’s accusation and says that some sages hold that the accusation and diminution of the moon mentioned by our Sages are a parable and riddle. This includes the moon’s complaint that the purpose of its creation was unknown to it. Therefore it said, “It is impossible for two kings to use one crown.” It meant: if the sun is satisfied with its crown while its purpose is concealed from it, what does it care? I do not wish to use that crown whose purpose I do not know.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Neither they knew”: the stars, which themselves possess intellect.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Nor their movers”: the angels, according to the one who holds that the luminaries possess neither life nor intellect, as explained in the preceding section.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“For whom”: they were created; “and for what”: they were created.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Until later”: when man was created, for then the purpose of their creation became known to them.

Rema of Fano

These too belong to the sages: the parables of the moon’s accusation and diminution, from their sayings and riddles concerning the luminaries’ being created before man. Neither they nor their movers knew for whom or for what, until later. The hint is in qitrug, numerically siah ha-sadeh, “the growth of the field”—and these are the initials of nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayah, yehidah. Their final letters give sihah, in the mystery of na‘ar and na‘arah, youth and maiden; the middle letters have the value of hatan, bridegroom. From here it is proved that discourse before God preceded “there was no man.” Therefore the possessors of intellect sought to stand within the LORD’s counsel in this and similar matters. [TN200106]

Our Rabbis have a familiar expression for this: the camel came to ask for horns, and the ears it had were clipped from it. For all cud-chewers lack teeth; therefore they have horns, since the hard matter from which other living creatures’ teeth are formed extends upward over their heads. The camel chews cud and sought horns on this ground, but its claim was not accepted, since the Gemara has already established that it has fangs. Into these there also extends part of the cartilage from which ears grow in creatures lacking such fangs. Therefore the ears it had—prospectively, according became known to them.

Yad Yehudah - ו

The hint to this complaint is in the word qitrug, the sages’ expression “the moon accused.” Qitrug equals siah, and siah hints at the five parts of man’s soul, N.R.N.H.Y., whose initials numerically equal siah. Corresponding to them is the hint in the verse, “No growth of the field was yet in the earth,” etc., “and there was no man.” This means that the soul in its five parts, whose initials are siah—the growth of the upper field of Malkhut—was not yet in the lower earth, for there was no man. The creation of souls and that of the luminaries resemble one another: both preceded man, although their entire purpose is for man. Therefore the complaint appears in qitrug, which hints at man’s soul.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Their final letters”: numerically, sihah. The matter is in the mystery of youth and maiden, explained in several places in the Zohar: when the Shekhinah is in the mystery of union, She is called na‘arah, maiden, with a he. See below, part

II, section 24. So it is with nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayah, yehidah: if the soul does well in Torah and commandments, it is in the mystery of union, for then it raises good deeds above as feminine waters to awaken union, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - ח

The middle letters also hint at this: pe from nefesh, vav from ruah, shin-mem from neshamah, yod from hayah, and het-yod-dalet from yehidah. Their numerical value is hatan, bridegroom, indicating that if the parts of the soul merit, they are in the mystery of "a bridegroom adorning himself with splendor" and of sihah with he, namely the mystery of union, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ט

From here it is proved that the souls hinted at in sihah were before the blessed LORD before man was created. This too is our Sages' view in the midrashim.

Yad Yehudah - י

"Therefore the possessors of intellect sought": the moon or its mover, to stand within the LORD's counsel, to know the purpose of creation in these matters.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Our Rabbis have," etc.: what happened to the moon was as our Sages said in the chapter Heleq, that the camel went to ask

to its own approach, not in actual possession—were clipped from it and made smaller.

In this manner of contemplating the secrets of rightly ordered nature, everything stated concerning the moon occurred as we mentioned, except that it was a commandment performed not for its own sake. The length of the debate is evidence of this. Moreover, even after much appeasement it was not appeased, nor was its mind soothed; therefore atonement was required. The first answer came to it that it should make itself small, for a woman who emits seed first bears a male. This is the reason stated in Bereshit Rabbah: it was called the small luminary because it entered its fellow's domain, although it entered with permission. Moreover, they said, "I caused it to enter its fellow's domain." For when the moon senses its deficiency, it is fitting and obligatory for it to acknowledge that it needs the sun more than the sun needs it. By this acknowledgment it diminishes itself, as He said, "Go and diminish yourself."

This too affords it some consolation, from what is explained in Ta'anit and Sanhedrin: one who is ashamed of himself does not suffer the same shame of face as one shamed by others. Thereby it will rule by day and night, for even during the sun's governance it will be a help corresponding to him. Righteous women likewise raise our children and save us from the sin of deficiency in withholding oneself from procreation, and from the sin of excess in the sexual prohibitions of the Torah.

for horns, etc. Incidentally, the master explains this according to natural science. He says that it is a figurative expression, as though an advocate were speaking favorably concerning the configuration of the camel's limbs before it existed.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"For," etc.: the camel's request and case accord with what natural science explains: the growth and development of animals' teeth, ears, and horns come from the coarse, hard part of their humors. Cud-chewing creatures lack teeth, as stated in the Gemara in the chapter Ellu Terefot, and because of this they need to chew cud, as is known. Nature compensates for this deficiency with horns: it sends upward to the head the coarse part from which teeth ought to have formed, and horns arise from it. The master says that this is what the camel's nature likewise requested in exchange for its lack of teeth.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Its claim was not accepted": the secrets of nature found no substance in its argument, since it has fangs, as stated in the Gemara in the chapter Ellu Terefot. Rashi explained fangs as two upper teeth, one on either side. He also explained fangs as protruding gums [?], etc.;

see there. [TN200107]

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Into these”—the fangs—extends the hard part that constitutes the material for the growth of ears in other creatures lacking fangs. Therefore, not only was the camel not given the horns it requested, but further, after the wisdom of its nature decreed that it should have fangs, it decreed on this account that its ears should be small instead of the large ones that ought to have accompanied it. Nature needed to take the hard substance from which ears grow as material for the fangs.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“From the closed part”: the wording of the mishnah in chapter 7 of Bekhorot, “Its ear was notched in the closed part,” meaning the cartilage of the ear. [TN200108]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“In creatures lacking”: that is, in an animal without fangs, according to its approach, which mentioned that it has no teeth and ought to have ears. Not in actual possession, as might appear from “clipped them,” for this is not so: it did not yet have ears, since this debate occurred

Although beside him it is a lamp at midday and the principal rule belongs to the sun—for the man is commanded concerning procreation; he and his mother are obliged to honor his father; and wherever betrothal takes effect and no transgression is involved, the child follows the male, as it is written, “By their families, by their fathers’ houses”—nevertheless, she brings immediate benefit to the husband himself, relieving him of the great burden of raising children, which is indeed great. Furthermore, if he brings wheat, does he chew wheat, unless she grinds and bakes? If he brings flax, does he wear flax, unless she spins and weaves?

With the luminaries too, although there is “the precious produce of the sun,” we also need “the precious yield of the moons.” Moreover, she holds what is entrusted: “All that he has, he has placed in her hand.” This too is diminution for her in one respect and greatness in another. For by his authority she distributes from his possessions to whoever needs, small and great together. Some perform commandments, such as multiplying the likeness, whose commandment is at night; likewise, the song of Torah is only at night. Opposite them it is written, “In it all the beasts of the forest creep.” To all of them and their lords she “gives food to her household and a portion to her maidens.”

before a camel existed in the world, as stated. [TN200109]

Yad Yehudah - יז

“And made them smaller”: the expression “clipped them” concerns what was prospectively due.

Yad Yehudah - יח

“In this manner,” etc.: just as happened to the camel in this contemplation of nature, so it happened to the moon, which sought to share with the sun and equal it in complete equality, so that the two together would exercise one governance, as mentioned above in section 11. Not only was its request not fulfilled, but it was also diminished.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Not for its own sake”: its intention was not for the commandment’s sake, but for its own honor and greatness.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“The length of the debate”: the moon debated with the blessed LORD because its thought was not for the commandment’s sake. Otherwise, it ought to have set aside its opinion before the Omnipresent’s opinion, blessed be He, immediately on seeing that its words were not good and right in His eyes.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“Therefore”: because it was a commandment performed not for its own sake, the moon required atonement. This is “Bring atonement,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“The first answer came,” etc.: the master explains the first answer the blessed LORD gave, “Go and diminish,” etc. He says that the diminution is as our Sages said: a woman who emits seed first bears a male. By emitting seed first, she entered a domain inappropriate to her, and therefore diminishes herself and does not bear a female like herself, for the male's seed prevails over her. So it is with sun and moon, likened to male and female, as the Zohar too likens them according to its approach: because the moon entered the sun's domain, He decreed diminution upon it.

Yad Yehudah - כג–כד

"This is the reason stated in Bereshit Rabbah," whose wording is: "After calling them great, does He return and impair them, 'the small luminary'? Astonishing! Rather, because it entered its fellow's domain. Rabbi Phinehas said: in all the offerings," etc. "The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Bring atonement for Me, because I diminished the moon, for it is I who caused it to enter its fellow's domain" [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כה

[gap] the children, and saves him [gap] one who does not marry a woman and does not merit fulfilling the commandment of procreation [gap] one who engages in forbidden intercourse.

Yad Yehudah - כו

"And concerning it too, she said": according to this explanation, not only is the answer "Go and diminish," etc., not a punishment, but it even contains some consolation and appeasement for her. That is: you have already diminished yourself, and you need not be so ashamed. [TN200110]

Yad Yehudah - כז

"Thereby it will rule by day and night": this is the second answer the Holy One, blessed be He, gave it, "Go and rule by day and night." The moon will assist the sun in ripening fruits, as he concludes shortly.

Yad Yehudah - כח

So we find with man and woman, likened to sun and moon: righteous women assist their husbands, as our Sages said, "If he merits, a help." They do so by raising the children and saving their husbands from sin, as Rabbi Hiyya told Rav in chapter 6 of Yevamot (page 63a). Rashi explained "from sin" as thoughts of transgression. The master explains it as the sin of intercourse itself through deficiency and excess: deficiency in one who does not marry and does not wish to fulfill procreation's commandment; excess in one who engages in forbidden intercourse.

Yad Yehudah - כט

Although the moon beside the sun is like a lamp at midday, as our Sages said in the Gemara that the moon asked, "What advantage is that? What use is a lamp at midday?"

Yad Yehudah - ל–לב

So it is also with man and woman: the principal governance belongs to the man, in that he is commanded concerning procreation and the woman is not, as stated there. Furthermore, our Sages said in Qiddushin concerning honor for father and mother that the father takes precedence, since he and his mother must honor his father. They explicitly said that wherever betrothal takes effect without transgression, the child follows the male.

Yad Yehudah - לג

"Multiplying the likeness": that is, [gap] procreation.

Yad Yehudah - לד

"With the luminaries too": likewise with the luminaries, although the sun is principal and ripens the fruits, as it is written, "The precious produce of the sun," the moon nevertheless assists it, as it is written, "The precious yield of the moons." Some fruits are ripened by the moon, such as cucumbers and gourds, as Rashi explained there.

Yad Yehudah - לה

"Moreover, she holds what is entrusted": as stated in the Zohar, Be-Shallah, page 68: "Like a king who joined with the matron," etc. [gap] "small luminary" [gap] "to fill his house with everything needed and bring food and sustenance into it. Once night enters and the female receives everything" [gap] "as it is written, 'She rises while it is still night and gives food to her household,' etc.—she, not he" [gap]. See there. The intention concerns Keter and Binah together, namely Tiferet and Malkhut, male and female [gap] by day and the female by night; once night enters, the female receives everything [gap]. These are the master's words. [TN200111]

Yad Yehudah - לו

"This too" is diminution and lowliness for the moon on one side, greatness and importance on the other: greatness in its rule, receiving everything; diminution in giving sustenance also to the external forces that rule at night, just as to those performing commandments then.

Yad Yehudah - לז

"For she distributes by his authority": that of the daytime governance, and from his possessions to “Multiplying the likeness”: that is, the commandment of procreation.

Yad Yehudah - לט

“Opposite them it is written”: “You set darkness and it becomes night; in it all the beasts of the forest creep” (Psalms 104). “Beasts of the forest” is a designation for the external forces. She gives food to her household, as stated in the aforementioned Zohar, Bereshit.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The parables of the accusation,” etc.: the language of parables. “Neither they knew”: the luminaries. “Nor their movers”: the angels. For whom and for what were they created? Man had not yet been created.

“The hint is in qitrug, numerically siah,” etc.: if you wish to know its explanation, know that man’s intention is explained: everything depends on the deed below. One who merits nefesh brings the unification of the he in the Name, for the strengthening of the judgments from the female side; the influx is made from Yah [?], a silver carriage [?]. One who merits ruah: when they perform a commandment below through the unification of vav-he in the Name, mercies grow stronger from the male, and this is ruah. One who merits neshamah draws upon Yesod, vav-he, light from the first he in the mystery of the shelter of peace: through Yesod, called the Life of the Worlds, as above, chapter 12 of Heqor Din, part V, chapter 12; see there. Likewise hayah comes from the yod of the Name, and yehidah from the tip of yod, in the uniquely treasured one. Thus everything depends on awakening below. [TN200112]

The mystery of siah is explained in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 132: it means bringing down the influx from the first three, the shin of siah, three heads, through Yesod—the hai of siah—which is the Righteous One, Life of the Worlds. Its wording is: “Shin: three branches of the tree, which are the three fathers,” etc.; see there. The mystery of na‘ar and na‘arah is known: na‘ar is numerically shin [ShYN], the five powers of judgment, five times dan, numerically shin [ShYN]. Na‘arah has the numerical value 325: alef from Ehyeh in Binah sweetens the powers of judgment, one for each—one for each power of judgment, making one—and it becomes 325 with he [?]. From judgment there comes lordship, Adonai, through the alef that sweetens those five judgments: five times Adonai. Here too, siah and sihah are like na‘ar and na‘arah. The mystery of the matter is that ha-shemesh, the sun, numerically equals ShN and 325; me’orot, written defectively, numerically equals siah and sihah [?]. This is the mystery of “The LORD’s saying is refined.” See Zohar, Bereshit, 76. One may further interpret the word amrat outside our present path: Ehyeh numerically equals Keter through atbash, whose letters are TaTzMTz; reverse it to Ehyeh, and according to the reckoning of me’orot. Examine this closely. [TN200113]

“It sought horns on this ground,” etc.: because it has no teeth, it therefore sought horns. “The length of the debate,” etc.: the moon’s debate with the blessed LORD proves that its intention was not for its own sake, for had its intention been for its own sake, it ought immediately to have diminished itself without dispute. Moreover, the moon was not appeased after the diminution until the Holy One, blessed be He, said, “Bring atonement for Me for diminishing the moon.”

“The first answer came,” etc., joins what preceded: since there was a desire to benefit others, they therefore said that it should diminish itself. Originally it was the seventh degree, but now it descended below and became the tenth, so as to clothe itself in Beriah, Yetsirah, and Asiyah, in the mystery of “one wheel upon the earth.” This is the diminution, as though, as it were, part of it were not in Atsilut. It is a vessel for awakening the influx from below in the mystery of feminine waters, and then the lovingkindnesses grow stronger. This is “a woman emits seed first”: through awakening below, the influx increases, and she bears a male, the increase of lovingkindnesses. This suffices for greater understanding.

“For when the moon,” etc.: the difficulty is why she sensed her deficiency. Although they cannot contain his lovingkindnesses owing to their extreme subtlety, they can nevertheless contain them better than her powers of judgment, which are exceedingly harsh. Thus she needs his sweetening more; thereby she will rule. See Ma'arekhet Elohut, page 94, and you will find this matter well explained. "This too affords it," etc.: it diminishes itself of its own accord and has consolation, for they are not alike, etc.

"Deficiency," etc.: he expounds sin in the sense of deficiency, as in "I and my son Solomon shall be sinners." They save from the deficiency involved in neglecting procreation, and also literally, so that we do not sin through forbidden sexual relations. "Rather, she holds what is entrusted," etc.: in the Zohar, Be-Shallah, page 88: "The king issued a proclamation: Henceforth all the king's affairs shall be handed over to the matron." See there, well explained; at the beginning of the page, "And above them he entrusted the matron." "Multiplying the likeness": fulfilling procreation, for whoever does not engage in procreation is as though diminishing the likeness, as our Sages expounded.

"That we mentioned above": section 5.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"It is evident," etc.: the Zohar's wording there is: "God created the two great luminaries. Initially the two lights were joined together," etc., as above in section 5, through "and is called a lion." "The moon said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Can one king use two crowns together? Rather, this one separately and that one separately. He told it: I see that your desire is to become a head to foxes. Go and diminish yourself, for although you will be their head, you have less than you had," etc.; see there. From the Holy One's saying to it, "I see that your desire is to become a head to foxes," it is evident that

Rema of Fano

From the passage on Song of Songs in the Zohar that we mentioned above, it is evident that the moon itself opened its mouth in wisdom to request this diminution. Jonathan ben Uzziel said that both luminaries were great for twenty-one hours less 672 parts, out of 1,080 per hour. Their mnemonic is 'ittim, times, reckoned with the large values of the final letters M.N.Tz.P.Kh. Its numerical equivalent is "You shall have mercy on the world," which is fifteen times seventy-two, after "By Yah, the LORD, the Rock of worlds." The Name spelled out with yods equals seventy-two. Furthermore, the backs of the four spellings of the ineffable Name—single, double, triple, quadruple for each—total 624. The Name Ehyeh has three spellings, totaling 455; together they number 1,080 with the inclusive unit. Again, twenty-four times the Name spelled out with alefs equals 1,080, it itself sought diminution. This is diminution in itself: becoming a head to foxes and not a tail to lions, for a lion's tail is nevertheless a lion, and a fox's head is a fox. So it is also stated in the Zohar, Terumah, page 229; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Jonathan ben Uzziel said": in Bereshit, on "God made the two great luminaries": "The LORD made the two great luminaries, and they were equal in their glory for twenty-one hours less six hundred and seventy-two parts of an hour. Afterward the moon spoke," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Out of 1,080 per hour": thus the master explains, for an hour is indeed divided into 1,080 parts, as is known from our science of intercalation. This is not only because this number lends itself to division into small whole numbers, as Maimonides wrote in chapter 6 of the Laws of Sanctifying the Month, but also because it contains great mysteries according to the truth, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - ה

The mnemonic for 1,080 is ‘ittim, which equals 1,080 when reckoning the final letters M.N.Tz.P.Kh: after tav comes final kaf, which is 500, and after it final mem, which is 600. Thus ‘ittim amounts to 1,080. See the Treatise on Times, section 9.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“You shall have mercy on the world” likewise numerically equals 1,080.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Which is fifteen times seventy-two”: this equals 1,080, after “By Yah, the LORD”: fifteen times the Name YHVH, which is seventy-two spelled out with yods—YVD HY VYV HY.

Yad Yehudah - ח

We further find 1,080 in the Name YHVH as follows: with the backs of its four spellings. These are the alef spelling, YVD HA VAV HA; the he spelling, YVD HH VV HH; the yod spelling, YVD HY VYV HY; and the spelling with three yods and one alef, YVD HY VAV HY. We reckon each as single, double, triple, and corresponding to the twenty-four permutations of the Name Adonai, as is known: four stones build twenty-four houses. The sage, of blessed memory, has another approach to 1,080 in his book Pardes Rimmonim. [TN200114]

According to what we explained, the luminaries’ equality lasted twenty full hours, corresponding to the twenty letters in the first two spellings of the four-letter Name, from whose side there is no diminution of the moon at all. The third spelling, that with alefs, since the moon’s diminution began from and within it, is reckoned as only one hour. During seventeen of its forty-five parts the luminaries were still great, corresponding to its first two letters, yod-vav, and the central point of dalet. For the master said, “It was yod”: it is one out of ten in the first yod and one out of six for vav. This suffices. Once this small yod began spreading sideways to take the form of dalet, poverty and diminution began, after “He cast from heaven the earth of Israel’s Tiferet.” [TN200115]

The part cast down is the spelled-out AD, numerically 671, plus the inclusive unit: “constricted is the strength of koh.” This is the gate we mentioned: the diminution was in the last twenty-eight parts of this spelling, which are 672 parts of the hour, for “by the wrath of the LORD of Hosts the earth was darkened.” Alternatively, the twenty-one hours mentioned by ben Uzziel hint at the Name Ehyeh, the upper gate, as is known, less the parts we mentioned—671 plus the inclusive unit—the lower quadruple: first we take the single element, then that element with what follows it, making it double; then both with what follows them, making it triple; then the three with what follows them, making it quadruple.

For example, in the alef spelling YVD equals twenty, the single element. HA following it equals six; with the single twenty it makes twenty-six. We now have twenty and twenty-six, totaling forty-six. VAV equals thirteen; with the preceding twenty-six it makes thirty-nine, which with the stated forty-six totals eighty-five, the triple stage. HA is six; with thirty-nine it is forty-five, which with the stated eighty-five totals 130. In this manner the he spelling totals 144, the yod spelling 184, and the three-yod-and-alef spelling 166. All four spellings total 624.

Ehyeh likewise has three spellings: the alef spelling, ALP HA YVD HA, amounts in this manner to 143; the he spelling, ALP HH YVD HH, to 151; and the yod spelling, ALP HY YVD HY, to 161. Altogether they are 455; with the stated 624 they total 1,080 less one, and the inclusive unit completes the number. [TN200117]

Yad Yehudah - ט

In another manner you find 1,080 in YHVH: twenty-four times YHVH

spelled with alefs, YVD HA VAV HA, which equals forty-five. Twenty-four times forty-five equals 1,080. The reason for counting twenty-four times is the twenty-four permutations of Adonai, each indicating the alef spelling of YHVH.

Yad Yehudah - י

"For four stones," etc.: as we learned in Sefer Yetsirah. It means that four letters make twenty-four words by exchanging their permutations.

Yad Yehudah - יא

According to what we wrote, that 1,080 corresponds to the Name's spellings, we may also say that the twenty-one hours less 672 parts mentioned by the translator Jonathan follow this approach. Twenty hours correspond to twenty letters in YHVH's first two spellings: the two yod spellings, one containing an alef.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"From whose side there is no diminution": therefore each letter is reckoned as one hour.

gate. Likewise twenty-six times twenty-six is 671 with four letters and the inclusive unit. All was foreseen at the beginning of thought, for me'orot, luminaries, is written defectively, since the diminution caused "the LORD's curse in the house of the wicked." "Let there be luminaries," together with the four letters and the word, numerically equals 671. This too suffices for the intended point. [TN200116]

Most of what appears in tractate Hullin as an exchange between the moon and the righteous Judge is presented in the Zohar on Song of Songs as a premise agreed upon by both speakers. For every woman who knows a man acquires a master for herself by choice and consent, in the sense of "A woman is acquired." They changed the first expression, saying, "It is impossible for one king to use two crowns together, but this one separately and that one separately." Here the king is the Holy One, blessed be He, and the two crowns are the sun and moon. Their desired equality for attaining their purpose will not be fitting until each is first recognized in its own perfection. This is a mishnah: "A virgin is given time," etc., "and likewise the man is given time to provide for himself."

Yad Yehudah - יג

"Seventeen parts out of forty-five": the value of the alef spelling. Correspondingly, if you also divide the hour into forty-five parts, each includes twenty-four of the 1,080 parts, since twenty-four times forty-five gives that total. During these seventeen parts of the twenty-first hour both luminaries were still great: 408 of the 1,080 parts, since seventeen times twenty-four equals 408. Together with the stated 672, they total 1,080. Likewise, subtracting the 672 parts in which diminution occurred from 1,080 leaves 408.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"With yod-vav," etc.: sixteen of these seventeen parts correspond to the two letters yod-vav in YVD of this spelling. They cannot be counted as hours, for not even one whole hour elapsed in this spelling; therefore they are reckoned as fractions of an hour. The seventeenth part corresponds to one point in the dalet following yod-vav: the central point of dalet at the southeastern corner.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"For the master said" concerning it in the Tiqqunim, "It was yod; it is one out of ten," etc.: one of a tenth part, for the two letters preceding it, together with it, are ten parts. [TN200118]

Yad Yehudah - טז

Once this small yod—the central point in dalet—began spreading sideways in length and breadth to assume dalet's form, poverty and diminution began:

immediately after the seventeenth part, the moon was diminished.

Yad Yehudah - יז

After "He cast from heaven to earth the glory of Israel" (Lamentations 2). According to its plain meaning, the glory is what was cast down, and earth is the place to which it was cast. The master explains that earth is what was cast down and is joined to Tiferet: He cast down the earth of Israel's Tiferet. It hints at the spelled-out Name Adonai, Malkhut, the earth of Tiferet. Ra'aya Meheimna, Mishpatim, page 208, expounds similarly: "Who placed earth in heaven, that it says, 'He cast earth from heaven'? Rather, certainly this is the Shekhinah, with Tiferet alongside Her," etc.; see there. The master gives the reason: the portion cast down from the twenty-first hour—the stated 672 parts in which diminution occurred—corresponds to the spelled-out Name Adonai, ALP DLT NVN YVD, which equals 671, and 672 with the inclusive unit.

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Behold, in it, strength is constricted": the Zohar's wording in Va-Yishlah on "If you slacken on the day of distress, your strength is constricted": "koh, strength, constricted." The master intended to expound it: twenty-eight constricted parts out of forty-five parts per hour, for the first seventeen parts had perfection and the last twenty-eight diminution, totaling forty-five. "Constricted strength" is Malkhut, as is known. [TN200119]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"This is the gate we mentioned": the spelling of Adonai, called the gate of heaven, Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"In this spelling": of Adonai.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"Which are 672": every one of the forty-five parts equals twenty-four of the 1,080, as stated, and twenty-four times twenty-eight is 672, after "By the wrath of the LORD," etc. (Isaiah 9). That is, by the number of 'evrat in the LORD's spelling, the earth of Tiferet was darkened.

Yad Yehudah - כב

"The Name Ehyeh": whose numerical value is twenty-one, the upper gate, Keter.

Yad Yehudah - כג

"Which are 671": the language of a gate, the lower gate, Malkhut. This is the Name Adonai, whose full spelling has that value, and 672 with the inclusive unit.

Yad Yehudah - כד

Likewise, twenty-six times twenty-six—the numerical value of YHVH—amounts to 666; with four letters and the inclusive unit, it is 671. [TN200120]

Yad Yehudah - כה

Everything stated concerning the moon's diminution was foreseen by the blessed LORD before its complaint, at the beginning of His thought of creating it.

Yad Yehudah - כו

For before its creation it is written, "Let there be luminaries," with me'orot lacking vav, in the sense of curse and malediction, which the moon's diminution causes, as stated in the Zohar.

Yad Yehudah - כז

"The LORD's curse in the house of the wicked": the master adopts Scripture's wording as a decorous expression, since the curse caused by the diminution comes through the wicked Samael and the nights, as explained in the Zohar. [TN200121]

Yad Yehudah - כח

"Let there be luminaries" numerically equals sixty-six / twenty-six [?]; with the four letters of me'orot and the word, it is 671, likewise hinting at the stated matter. [TN200122]

Yad Yehudah - כט

"Most of what," etc.: the master returns to explaining the Gemara concerning the moon's diminution.

Yad Yehudah - ל

"As an exchange": rather than by way of agreement.

Yad Yehudah - לא

"By choice and consent": so here with the sun and moon, the matter must be agreed upon by both.

Yad Yehudah - לב

In the sense of the mishnah, "A woman is acquired." The Gemara says: why not teach, "A man acquires"? If it taught "acquires," I might think even against her will. It teaches "A woman is acquired": with her consent, yes; without her consent, no.

Yad Yehudah - לג

In the Zohar they also changed the first expression given in the Gemara: "It is impossible for two kings to use one crown." In the Zohar they said, "It is impossible for one king," etc.

Yad Yehudah - לד

Here in the Zohar the king is the Holy One, blessed be He, and the two crowns are sun and moon. In the Gemara, sun and moon were designated two kings, and their rule a crown.

Yad Yehudah - לה

“It will not be fitting for them,” etc.: the moon’s intention in saying, “It is impossible for one king to use two crowns together,” was that each be recognized in its own perfection. Although according to the Gemara, as explained above in section 11, the moon desired shared governance with the sun in complete equality, the Zohar nevertheless does not disagree with the Gemara. According to the Zohar too, it first opened its mouth in wisdom to say that each should be recognized in its own perfection, so that afterward it might likewise come to complete equality and partnership with the sun. Before each one’s perfection is recognized separately, equality will not suit them.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“And it is a Mishnah: ‘They give,’ etc.” Evidently, a time was intended for each one separately to attain its perfection.[TN200123]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“From the Zohar that we mentioned,” etc.: above in section 5; the Zohar passage is on page 22a. It says there, “The Holy One, blessed be He, said: I see in you that your desire is to become a head to foxes.” End of quotation. Thus it appears explicitly that she requested this diminution.

“Their mnemonic is ‘ittim,” etc.: ‘ittim numerically equals 1,080, with closed mem worth 600. The positions of the final letters M.N.Tz.P.Kh follow tav: thus final kaf is 500, and final mem is 600. See the introduction to the book Avodat Shem, where it is explained more fully. Fifteen times seventy-two equals 1,080. “By Yah, the LORD”: Yah equals fifteen, and fifteen times the LORD, the Name of seventy-two, YHVH spelled with yods: “the Rock of worlds.” [TN200124]

Again, the backs of the ineffable Name YHVH in its four spellings: with yods, YVD HY VYV HY, the Name of seventy-two, by double and triple reckoning, etc., amounts to 184. Thus YVD equals twenty; YVD HY equals thirty-five; twenty[?] and thirty-five amount to fifty-five. YVD HY VYV equals fifty-seven; fifty-five and fifty-seven equal 112. YVD HY VYV HY equals seventy-two; 112 and seventy-two total 184. Likewise the he spelling, the Name of fifty-two, YVD HH VV HH, totals 144 in that manner. The alef spelling, the Name of forty-five, YVD HA VAV HA, totals 130 in that manner. Likewise, with two yods

and an alef, YVD HY VAV HY, the Name of sixty-three, it totals 166 in this manner. The amounts 184, 130, 144, and 166 total 624. In the New Tiqqunim you will find a mnemonic for the backs: P.Q.D., Q.S.V., Q.L., Q.D.M.; understand. [TN200125]

The spellings of Ehyeh: ALP HY YVD HY totals 161. Again, the he spelling, ALP HH YVD HH, totals 151. Another spelling, ALP HA YVD HA, totals 143. The amounts 161, 151, and 143 total 455; 455 and 624 total 1,080 with the inclusive unit counted as one. In my view, this is the mystery of “Set [tenah] Your splendor upon the heavens.” “The sage has,” etc.: the Gate of Circumference. [TN200126]

“For the twenty letters”: in the first two spellings, YVD HY VYV HY, the seventy-two spelling, and the sixty-three spelling, YVD HY VAV HY. In all there are twenty letters, corresponding to the twenty hours in which both luminaries were perfect. “Sixteen parts out of forty-five,” etc.: divide 1,080 into forty-five parts, and each part is twenty-four parts. Sixteen times twenty-four is 408: the luminaries were still equal. The remaining 672 were deficiency, for 672 and 408 total 1,080. Thus in the two Names of seventy-two and sixty-three they were equal; in the third spelling, the Name of forty-five, diminution began. Although it has ten letters, all are therefore counted as one hour. [TN200127]

The first sixteen of the forty-five parts are the first yod of the Name of forty-five, the vav of its spelling beside yod, and the middle point of the spelled-out dalet, which is one. The master said, “It was yod,” in the Tiqqunei ha-Zohar: initially dalet was yod, then spread in length forward and downward and became dalet. That point is one out of ten in the first yod and one out of six in the first vav of the spelling. For yod in its entirety comprises the whole configuration of Hokhmah; when divided into its spelling, the yod is the first three, the vav the six extremities, and the dalet Malkhut. Thus she is one out of ten in the first yod and one out of six in vav. Taking one from dalet leaves three, and the other three letters of the Name of forty-five are HA VAV HA: together the value is twenty-eight, which is 671 parts. For twenty-eight times twenty-four—the twenty-eight forty-fifths of the hour—equals 671 [?]; counting the inclusive unit as one makes 672. The full spelling of Adonai, ALP DLT NVN YVD, also

totals 671. The gate of heaven is the Name Adonai, “the one forming—strength, thus[?]”: the attribute Malkhut is called koh. The moon’s diminution began in dalet, as above, and dalet is Malkhut, as above. This is the mystery of the moon’s diminution, and this kaf hints at the twenty-eight parts out of the forty-five divisions of the 1,080, as above. [TN200128]

This is the mystery of “How good [mah tov]”: the sixteen parts of the Name of forty-five, “brothers dwelling together,” when the luminaries were equal. See Rashi’s explanation in Isaiah, section 5, on “distress and light,” etc. The principal matter concerned Sh.Q., as above. “Distress, strength, thus”[?] has the numerical value of “good and evil,” for this verse also includes the sun’s diminution from what had been three hundred forty-three—or sixty-three[?]—thousand[?]; for “distress, thus”[?] has the numerical value of sixty-three[?]—Elohim, or parts[?]—of the sun. [TN200129]

“The earth of Tiferet,” etc.: Malkhut, called earth, as is known; heaven is called Tiferet. “The earth was darkened,” etc.: meaning, it was darkened. “The upper gate,” etc.: the fifty gates of Binah are the upper gate, Ehyeh; the lower gate is Adonai. “A woman is acquired”: she is acquired by him, for the man is the husband and rules over her. Therefore the moon itself diminished itself. [TN200130]

“They changed the first expression,” etc.: the Zohar changed the expression: the Gemara says, “It is impossible for two kings to use one crown,” while the Zohar says, “It is impossible for one king to use two crowns.” In the Gemara the crown is Yah and the kings are sun and moon; here it is the reverse. It said, “It is impossible for one king”: for the influx from the letters Yah to be in complete unification when they are crowns together, in the mystery of two faces without union. Rather, this one must be separate and that one separate; then the influx can pass through two crowns together, so that she separately may rectify the lower worlds, Beriah, Yetsirah, and Asiyah, and his rectifications separately concern the upper worlds.

This is the mystery of giving a virgin twelve months to prepare her adornments, and likewise giving time to the man. In the hidden teaching these two preparations are the twelve oxen beneath Solomon’s sea, whose action is to raise the deeds of the lower worlds in the mystery, and the preparations of the twelve diagonal boundaries above through Binah. Twelve months[?] in the moon below also exist in the revealed teaching; on this matter he established chapter 15. This is the mystery of “One called to the other”: his twelve preparations and her twelve preparations. [TN200131]

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“For this reason,” etc., continues the preceding section: the blessed LORD granted the moon’s request that its perfection be recognized separately. Therefore He answered, “Let Israel count days and years by you,” as stated in

Rema of Fano

For this reason, the principal determination of the appointed times depends on the moon, although it watches the sun’s courses, for all its salvation and desire are to cleave to him. It circles the whole vault of heaven in approximately twenty-seven and a quarter days, reaching the place where the Gemara.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Although it,” etc.: although the moon’s eyes are always upon the sun’s course and its entire desire is to cleave to him, so that for this reason it comes by the longer course and approaches him in a short time, the principal determination nevertheless depends on it, in approximately twenty-nine and a quarter days. For between one renewal and the next are twenty-nine days, twelve hours, and 793 parts, as is known. Its renewal occurs when it joins the sun, that is, when in its own sphere it is directly beneath the sun in his sphere. During this time the sun too moves from his place, traveling about one-twelfth of his sphere, whose revolution takes 365 and a quarter days. One-twelfth of the moon's course takes approximately two and a quarter days. Thus subtracting these two and a quarter days from twenty-nine days, twelve hours, and 793 parts leaves approximately twenty-seven and a quarter days. In the remaining two and a quarter days, the moon travels and overtakes the sun wherever he is. [TN200134]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Then," at conjunction, the moon's upper face shines. All astral bodies are set in the firmament half upward and half

it first stood beneath the sun at the moment of the preceding conjunction. In approximately another two and a quarter days it again catches up with him and joins him; there another birth of the moon is reckoned for it, as is known. Thus in two and a quarter days, plus about half an hour, the moon travels as far as the sun travels in approximately twenty-nine and a half days and two-thirds of an hour. [TN200132]

It is known that it has no fewer than twelve conjunctions a year. Then its upper face shines, for the sun has never seen the moon's deficiency. These are the ways of peace between him and her, even after the accusation, as we explained it. This is the burnt offering of each month in its month: she is the one ascending beside him, without doubt. Yet we still need to bring a goat as a sin offering, since from this point onward she distances herself from her beloved to give us light. So they concluded in Sefer ha-Bahir: there is descent in the sin offering, for it is written on the day that took ten crowns, "He descended from performing the sin offering." Therefore the month is sanctified only after conjunction with the sun, when she renews herself and ascends with him, as his lamp shines over her head. [TN200133]

The months of the year are named after him. They are no fewer than twelve, corresponding to the tribes of Israel, of whom it is written, "Joy for the upright of heart": simhah, joy, numerically equals 353 days, the shortest year. Nor downward, the latter visible to us. At conjunction the moon's lower face, facing our eyes, is unilluminated, since the sun's light, being directly over the moon, does not reach it so as to illuminate its lower face. Its upper face, however, shines from the sun's light, for "it has never seen," etc., as stated in Rosh ha-Shanah: the moon's deficient horns are never directed toward the sun. The sun's eyes do not see the moon's dark place; rather, the face of the moon that the sun sees at conjunction is illuminated.

Yad Yehudah - ו

Such was the case in conjunctions: these are the ways of peace between sun and moon, whereby the blessed LORD appeased it, saying, "Let Israel count by you," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"This is the monthly burnt offering," etc.: this is also undoubtedly the reason for the words "monthly burnt offering," because the moon ascends to the sun at its renewal.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Yet we still," etc.: the goat as a sin offering is because, from its renewal onward, the moon distances itself from the sun and descends from him; there is descent in the sin offering. This is "Bring an offering for Me," meaning on My account, because I caused the moon to descend from the sun.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"In Sefer ha-Bahir": it is in the Zohar, Pinehas, page 428. See there, where it is expounded according to its approach.

Yad Yehudah - י

Therefore the court does not sanctify the month by fixing it at the completion of the moon's revolution in its sphere, after twenty-seven days as mentioned, but only after twenty-nine days, twelve hours, and 793 parts, the time of conjunction.

Yad Yehudah - יא

After the sun the months are called "months of the year," for it is known that the year is attributed to the sun, which circles its sphere in one year, not to the moon, which circles its sphere in twenty-seven days, as mentioned.

are they increased beyond thirteen, when Joseph's tribe divides in two. All correspond in number to the attributes of mercy, which at their source are twelve and, with the inclusive unit, thirteen. None of our years exceeds 385 days, numerically Shekhinah. Just as the moon willingly diminishes herself in a moment and turns to the world's needs, so do the righteous, and they are called by her name. Although the determination of the appointed times has been placed entirely in their authority—even when misled, inadvertent, or deliberate, according to the exposition of "you" three times—they nevertheless make themselves small before the Lord of all the earth, Who reveals His counsel to His servants and makes His covenant known to them. For right governance required that time be entrusted to their hands, since it is created, as we are.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"No fewer than twelve": months.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"The shortest year": a deficient year.

Yad Yehudah - יד

No more than thirteen months, corresponding to thirteen tribes when Joseph's tribe divides into two, Ephraim and Manasseh.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"At their source": the twelve-letter Name, namely the twelve letters of the three occurrences of YHVH in the priestly blessing, corresponding to the twelve permutations of YHVH from the aspect of mercy within them.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"Beyond 385 days": in a leap year.

Yad Yehudah - יז

In a moment after conjunction it diminishes itself and turns away from the sun, despite its great longing for him.

Yad Yehudah - יח

So too the righteous diminish themselves before the blessed LORD and are therefore called by the moon's name. This is what they said in the Gemara: the Holy One, blessed be He, told it, "The righteous shall be called by your name." The master explains that they diminish themselves as it does.

Yad Yehudah - יט

According to the exposition of "you" three times: they said in the Gemara, "You, even if inadvertent," etc.

Yad Yehudah - כ

They make themselves small, fear mistakes and inadvertent errors, and rely in this upon the blessed LORD, Who reveals His counsel to His servants.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"For right governance," etc.: do not wonder that determination of the appointed times was given to them even through mistake, inadvertence, or deliberateness. For this is indeed right judgment: time should be entrusted to their hands, since it is something created, as we are, through the creation of the luminaries by which time is measured. It is likewise written, "Days were formed," and this will be explained in the next chapter.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"In two days," etc.: from twenty-seven days until twenty-nine days, twelve hours, and 793 parts, it travels and overtakes the sun. What the sun travels in twenty-nine days, twelve hours, and 793 parts, the moon travels in two and a quarter days and somewhat more, etc.

"Then its upper face shines," etc.: the counterpart above is explained in part III of M.T.H., chapter 4. Knowledge is in the mystery of daat in Tiferet, in the mystery of “Your people are all righteous” and “The LORD knows the way of the righteous.” The defect is in the aspect that is in Malkhut, that is, from the aspect of her garment, in the mystery of “one wheel upon the earth.” The sun, which is in Tiferet, has never seen the inwardness of the moon, for the moon is from him through the sun; and its explanation in the activity: returning[?] the intellect[?] to daat, as above. According to this, “its upper face” is precise; examine it. [TN200136]

“For there is descent in the sin offering,” etc.: it does not resemble her ascent on festivals and Sabbaths, when she ascends as far as Keter. At the New Moon she stands in the place of Tiferet and receives the influx from above. [TN200137]

“After him the months of the year are named,” etc.: Sefer Yetsirah has “world, year, soul.” That is, world is Binah; year is Tiferet; soul is Malkhut. Therefore the months of the year are called by that name: the mystery of conjunction with the sun, which is in Tiferet; she renews herself and ascends with him.

Yad Yehudah - א

“Would that they were wise,” etc., continues the end of the preceding section. The master says: would that investigators who boast of the wisdom of investigation and hold that an ordering of times may rightly be spoken of even in relation to Him understood that this is not so. For it is written, “For everything there is a season,” etc., “under heaven” (Ecclesiastes 3). Time is the measure of day and night, the reckoning of

Rema of Fano

Would that those who boast of investigation were wise and understood this! Do they not know, do they not comprehend, that “for everything there is a season, and a time for every purpose” only “under heaven,” but not above heaven at all? Even the unmeasured duration by which they designate what preceded the beginning of reckoning the measure of day and night is an inarticulate statement upon which contemplation is forbidden. For it is not fitting to describe His infinite primordiality, blessed be He, by the sun’s rising and setting over the earth. The sun itself is in the firmament of heaven, but above heaven, where the luminaries are not, time cannot be spoken of.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Even duration,” etc.: not only is it inappropriate to apply time—the measure of the sun’s course—to Him; even duration of time unmeasured by the sun’s revolution or by anything else may not be spoken of in relation to the blessed

LORD. For even unmeasured temporal duration contains past and future, which cannot be said of Him, since He is always present, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"By which they designate": the investigators so designate the period before the luminaries were created, when time could not actually be measured; they therefore called it duration.

Yad Yehudah - ד

There is no past or future there at all. Our saying of Him that He was and will be is relative to us.

Yad Yehudah - ה

Time should therefore be attributed to human beings, the world, heaven, and the like, which are conditioned by time, time being their cause.

Yad Yehudah - ו

Job said, "Are Your days like the days of mortal man, or Your years like the years of a mighty man?" (there, chapter 10). The days of the Holy One, blessed be He, have no relation, etc., as stated in the Zohar. Human days end either in his death or in the absence of the ordinances of heaven by which they are conditioned. The days of the Holy One, blessed be He, are otherwise; they have no relation to this.

duration, even if we call it unmeasured. Duration, by its nature and property, necessarily contains past, present, and future. None of this applies to the primordiality and eternity absolute in His existence alone, exalted above every blessing and praise. There is no past or future there at all: neither before time was created, nor now, when we are described in terms of time, nor after the ordinances of heaven come to an end.

Time should therefore be attributed to those conditioned by it, such as "the days of the world," "the days of heaven," and the like, and to nothing else. Therefore Job said, "Are Your days like the days of mortal man?" This means that they have no relation or likeness to the lowliest of men, according to the Zohar's approach, for his wound is incurable and his days end without hope. "Or Your years like the days of a mighty man?" Even the righteous man who overcomes his inclination, whose days are eternal and enduring, as is known, has no comparability even with "Your years": the time that changes through Your governance from judgment to mercy. This accounts for the verse's repetition and variation. [TN200141]

The day of the Holy One, blessed be He, which is a thousand years, may very fittingly be called an ordering of times. This is one of the reasons for counting between the omer harvest and the giving of Torah. It is the complete opposite of unmeasured duration, as is evident to anyone who understands. From this the verse "And You are He, and Your years shall not end" may be understood. It says

"Who overcomes his inclination": he expounds gever from the language of overcoming.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"As is known": from several places in the Zohar. See H. H.D., the end of chapter 8. [TN200143]

Yad Yehudah - ט–י

"This is the time," etc.: "Your years" means the changing of His governance from judgment to mercy, not years dependent on the time of the sun's courses; attach it to that. "This accounts for the repetition and variation": Scripture repeats the matter with days and years, and changes the wording, saying enosh with days and gever with years. According to what was stated, the reason is that the years are not of the same kind of time as the days, nor is gever of the same sense as enosh. It therefore rightly uses days with enosh and gever with years.

Yad Yehudah - יא

As for our Sages' expression "like the day of the Holy One, blessed be He," it does not mean, Heaven forbid, day and years dependent on time. It too means the ordering of times of His governance, after their saying: the world exists six thousand years and is desolate for one, as it is said, "The LORD alone shall be exalted on that day." The Zohar writes, as the sage Abravanel brought in his book Ma'ayenei ha-Yeshu'ah, spring 10, palm 10: "In the seventh, a sabbatical release remains in the desolate world, and the world is rebuilt as before," etc.; see there.

All the sages of truth likewise wrote that the blessed LORD will renew His world after seven sabbatical years pass over it, and it will continue another six thousand years with one desolate. The LORD will do this seven times, corresponding to that these pronouns occur, encompassing the descriptions of providence that changes from revealed to concealed, while He is one in both, as in "Blessed are You, LORD, Who has sanctified us." Its ordering of times, together with them, has no end. Observe "Your years," which is feminine, and "shall not end," which is masculine. The verse's conclusion is expounded not only concerning what immediately precedes it, but also concerning its beginning. Thus the endurance of the ordering of times depends on its joining the descriptions we mentioned, which together shall stand forever and ever. [TN200142]

seven sabbatical cycles, forty-nine thousand years; the fiftieth year is the great Jubilee, as stated in H. H.D., part II, chapter 26; see there. The master says that the one desolate may rightly be called an ordering of times, since it is the ordered change in the time of general governance from existence to absence and from absence to existence. All existence is mercy, and absence is judgment, as our Sages said in Bereshit Rabbah: there was an ordering of times beforehand. [TN200144]

Yad Yehudah - יב

"This is," etc.: this matter is one of the reasons for the commandment of counting the omer. The Torah said, "Count seven weeks for yourself," corresponding to the world's seven sabbatical cycles, and "Count fifty days," corresponding to its years.

Yad Yehudah - יג

It is the opposite of unmeasured duration, said to be the interval before the reckoning and measure of day and night after heaven was created. Therefore they said it has no measure but does have duration. Not so on the LORD's day, which will be after the heavens dissolve like smoke and the earth wears out like a garment: it has not even duration.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"And You are He," etc. (Psalms 102): he says that these pronouns, You and He, occur together, encompassing two descriptions of providence—revealed in existence and mercy, concealed in absence and judgment. You signifies direct, revealed address, while He signifies the third person, concealed. Providence changes from revealed to concealed, as mentioned, and the blessed LORD is one in both, for YHVH is Elohim. Therefore both pronouns, You and He, come together.

Yad Yehudah - טו

Like the formula of the blessing, "Blessed are You, LORD," in direct address, concluding "Who has sanctified us" in the third person.

Yad Yehudah - טז

The ordering of times of the change in providence, hinted at by "and Your years."

Yad Yehudah - יז

They have no end: this is "shall not end."

Yad Yehudah - יח

Masculine wording, for with feminine subjects one would say tittammenah.

Yad Yehudah - יט–כא

The verse's conclusion, "shall not end," is expounded not merely concerning what immediately precedes, "and Your years," but also concerning the beginning, "And You are He." Thus the endurance of the ordering of times of providence, hinted at by "and Your years," depends on its joining the descriptions "You" and "He." Concerning them together He said, "shall not end."

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Those who boast of investigation," etc.: the philosophers who say there was an ordering of times before the world was created. "For everything there is a season and a time," etc.: as written above in chapter 19 of part IV, the ordering of times is the six extremities of Hokhmah shining in the six extremities of Binah. These are the mystery of the two thousand years by which Torah preceded the world, before the six thousand years in which the world exists. The six thousand years correspond to the six extremities in their own place. A further degree is Malkhut, called time. But of the two thousand years by which Torah preceded the world, one cannot say there was an ordering of day and night by which we could count day, month, and year according to morning and evening, day one. For in the six extremities in their own place they are called time, day and night, through the governance of lovingkindnesses by day and powers of judgment by night, for there it is actual, in the six extremities in their place.

But before the six thousand, Torah was an ordering of times, a subtle existence in absence preceding existence; this is called measured duration. He wrote "what above": above the six extremities in their place, in the first three, the governance of lovingkindnesses and powers of judgment is in Hokhmah and Binah potentially, a subtle existence in the mystery of absence preceding existence. Before the two thousand years, however, it is not even measured; it is called unmeasured [?], and there is not even an ordering of times. This is time "under heaven": Malkhut, beneath Tiferet, called heaven, as above, is called time. "Upon heaven" are Hokhmah and Binah, the intermediate ordering of times; heaven is the six extremities in their place. But "above heaven," Keter, there is no ordering of times at all. Our calling it unmeasured duration in Keter is an inarticulate statement, as he proceeds to explain, and it is forbidden to contemplate it, etc. [TN200145]

Thus you will understand, so that the niceties of the author's words do not trouble you: at first, at first he says "under heaven," meaning heaven itself, but finally specifies "above heaven," implying that heaven too is included. Rather, this is what he means: Malkhut is time: "under" is Malkhut, and heaven likewise, namely the six extremities, where there is time, evening and morning. But "above heaven," Keter—as distinct from Hokhmah and Binah, called "upon heaven"—is not even measured.

"To those conditioned by it," etc.: time may be spoken of only concerning human beings, heaven, or the world, which are conditioned by it; concerning Him, as it were, it does not apply. "Whose days are eternal, as is known": in the mystery of "Your days have drawn near to die," as explained many times in the Zohar. Even so, they have no likeness to "Your years": the six extremities in their place, in Tiferet, are called year, as above, and also an ordering of times corresponding to twenty-six thousand [?] years. Shanah, year, is the language of change and indicates the change from judgment to mercy in the six extremities of H.K.H.; they have no comparability with them. "Days" is plain wording. [TN200147]

"That we call it an ordering of times," etc.: in relation to our time. "Until the giving of Torah," etc.: meaning six thousand years and one [thousand] desolate, seven times: these are the forty-nine days of counting, a day for a year, like the day of the Holy One, blessed be He. "It is the opposite of duration," etc.: the intermediate ordering of times is called measured duration, and this is called temporal duration, unlike unmeasured duration, its complete opposite. [TN200148]

"And You are He," etc.: its mystery is that You indicates the revealed six extremities, and He indicates Arikh, which is exceedingly concealed. All is in complete unity, like a flame bound to a coal. "Your years" indicates the ordering of times, and all of them shall not end. "Like B.R.Y.," etc.: You is direct address and revealed; "has sanctified us" is third-person reference. "The verse's conclusion," etc.: "shall not end." "What immediately precedes," etc.: "Your years"; but also the beginning, "And You are He." [TN200149]

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

What we said in the preceding section concerning His governance in judgment and mercy, of which it says "Your years shall not end," is also what we intend by emet, which likewise hints at it, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - ב

After "The LORD God is true," as stated in the mishnah, chapter 2 of Berakhot: Rabbi Judah says one should not interrupt between Va-Yomer and Emet ve-Yatsiv. In the Gemara: what is Rabbi Judah's reason? Because it is written, "And the LORD God is true."

Yad Yehudah - ג

"It alone," etc.: the Shema has 245 words; to complete the number 248, corresponding to the human limbs, the prayer leader adds three words, repeating "the LORD your God, true." This comes from Midrash ha-Ne'elam on Ruth, the Zohar, Va-Yera, and the Tiqqunim, brought by the Beit Yosef in Tur, Orah Hayyim, section 61; see there. The master says that emet alone, with proper intention, suffices for an individual as the three words do for the prayer leader.

Rema of Fano

This is what we intend by emet, true, which we add at the end of the Shema, after "The LORD God is true." It alone suffices for an individual who knows how to direct his intention within it, in place of the three words added by the prayer leader. For the letters of emet are known to be the beginning, middle, and end of the alphabet. So too is the seal of the Holy One, blessed be He, of Whom it is written, "I am first"—above, to infinity; "and I am last"—below, without end; "and apart from Me there is no God"—between the extremities, which have no limitation whatsoever. [TN200150]

On this foundation, itself firm and established, the Book of the Reasons for the Commandments of Qanah, composed by Rabbi Avigdor, author of the Peli'ah, writes that the words repeated ought to be "I am the LORD your God." This also has a foundation in the Midrash ha-Ne'elam on the scroll of Ruth. Below we shall say something about it concerning the three chief officers, who are called princes of the Presence, when they bind crowns for their Master from Israel's fire offerings and prayers. Furthermore, it is written, "And the LORD God is true," meaning He and His court, as above: this is "I, the LORD." With this, the prayer leader will not err by saying emet quietly at the end of the Shema, which is inappropriate in any manner; the

"As is known," etc.: it suffices because it hints at three things, beginning, middle, and end. In the alphabet, alef is beginning, mem middle, and tav end. Concerning this our Sages said: the seal of the Holy One, blessed be He, is emet. This follows the Tiqqunim's exposition: "I am first, and I am last, and apart from Me there is no God"—I am first above, I am last below, and apart from Me there is no God in the middle. Above means from the supreme Keter, encompassing the first three, to the blessed Ein Sof; below, from Malkhut without end; and Tiferet with the other sefirot between them, which are the middle of sixty extremities. Beginning, middle, and end are hinted at by emet, and this is His seal. Thus whoever says it and directs intention to the aspects hinted at by these three things has fulfilled the obligation. The verse "The LORD God is true" likewise hints at this: the two attributes, judgment and mercy, unite in emet, beginning, middle, and end, as we said above concerning "Your years shall not end." [TN200153]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Which have no limitation": although expressed in numerical language, they have no limit at all.

Yad Yehudah - ו

The repeated words added by the prayer leader ought to be "I am the LORD your God." The reason likewise follows what was stated: these three words hint at Ein Sof, Tiferet, and Malkhut. I hints at Malkhut, as is known; the LORD is in Tiferet; "your God" is said of the Emanator, blessed Ein Sof, in relation to those emanated from Him. Although "the LORD your God, true" likewise hints at this through emet, there is nevertheless reason to fear an error by the prayer leader, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - ז

It also has a foundation in the stated midrash. Although it explicitly says the repetition is "the LORD your God, true," repeating "I am the LORD your God" also has a foundation there, because the matter depends on three Names. Its wording is: "The early pious ones instituted the Shema corresponding to the Ten Commandments and the number of human limbs. But three are lacking from the number of human limbs! They instituted that the prayer leader repeat and complete them. What are they? 'The LORD your God, true.' In prayer they number of words attests to this. Although many later authorities were not precise about it, our words appear more convincing than theirs.

Nevertheless, the custom has not been to repeat "I." Rather, the established arrangement transmitted to the public is that the prayer leader alone repeats "the LORD your God," and everyone adds emet only once: the individual at the beginning, not at the end, and the prayer leader at the end, not at the beginning. This is the Gemara's conclusion as settled law: "He does not repeat and say emet." It speaks without qualification: no one repeats and says emet, for the prayer leader did not say it initially. This must not be changed, for it too is agreed upon in the Zohar. The Midrash ha-Ne'elam there also explains the arrangement for an individual: to direct intention to the vavs, which have the numerical value of two Names, "the palace of YHVH"; with the emet the individual said at the beginning, these are three Names. Our approach, however, is preferable: to direct intention to emet, for at night the vavs are absent. Some nevertheless direct intention to ve-emunah, which contains amen, numerically equal to the vavs. From this and that let the Most High be praised, provided a person directs his mind toward heaven. [TN200151]

Since the law of the Shema has come to our hand, let us say something concerning the Rabbis' explanation: whoever is precise in its letters has Gehinnom cooled for him. Rav Ovadiah taught: "You shall teach them"—let your instituted three opening blessings and three concluding blessings; in the Shema, three Names at its beginning, 'the LORD our God, the LORD is one,' and three Names at its end, 'the LORD your God, true,'" etc. Since the matter depends on three Names, repetition can accordingly also apply to "I am the LORD your God," for I is a Name, as is known and as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ח

Below, in section 31, we shall say something about "I am the LORD your God" relevant to the three keravin mentioned below in sections 29 and 30; see there. [TN200154]

Yad Yehudah - ט

Further evidence that "I am the LORD your God" should be repeated comes from the very verse "And the LORD God is true," from which the addition is derived. "And the LORD" means He and His court, as above in section 1. This is "I, the LORD": the vav hinting at His court also hints at I, Malkhut, for the court is in Malkhut, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - י

"With this": through repeating "I am the LORD your God," it is assured that the prayer leader will not err by saying emet quietly before the repetition, which he may not do. In no manner—whether repeating "I am the LORD your God" or

"the LORD your God, true"—is it appropriate for him to say emet quietly. The word count attests to this: he repeats three words to complete the number, and if he said emet quietly he would need to repeat only two. But if the repetition is "the LORD your God, true," he might err by saying emet quietly and counting it within the three added words, together with "the LORD your God," which he repeats. If the repetition is "I am the LORD your God," such an error is impossible, since on that basis the repetition would in any case comprise four words.

Yad Yehudah - יא

They were not precise about this, and hold that the repetition is specifically "the LORD your God, true."

study be complete. Concerning this the Gemara says that Rava answered after him: for example, "with all your heart," and similar cases. We must know what Rava teaches us, for this seems the same thing. In truth, he excluded cases so that we count as adjoining letters only identical letters, both pronounced with movement, as Rabbi Jonah attested from the accurate texts of the Gemara. There are only eight pairs: four of lameds, two of mems, one of bets, and one of pes. Their total is sixty in the reduced reckoning of Enoch. Such is the tradition of the Ari, of blessed memory, from the mouth of my teacher Rabbi Israel, may his light shine, one of his great disciples, who favored me with many essential teachings of Torah. These are ancient matters: why eight, why sixty, and why reduced reckoning. This is not their place. All the other precautions beyond these are included in being precise in its letters, but are not among the adjoining letters between which a space must be left in the same manner. This suffices. [TN200152]

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Nevertheless," etc.: the Beit Yosef already wrote that there was someone in Egypt who followed the Book of Peli'ah, and likewise in Constantinople, and the great authorities of that generation rebuked him.

Yad Yehudah - יג

Everyone, prayer leader and individual alike, adds emet only once. They do not say it quietly except that an individual praying with the congregation says at the beginning, "the LORD your God, true," and waits until after the prayer leader's repetition. He then continues in order and does not repeat emet at the end, after the prayer leader's repetition. The prayer leader says emet at the end, with the repetition, not quietly at the beginning.

Yad Yehudah - יד

This is the Gemara's conclusion. They asked:

does he repeat and say emet or not? Rabbi Yohanan and Rabbah disagreed; according to Rabbah, he does not repeat, and thus we hold.

Yad Yehudah - טו

No one, even an individual, repeats. It cannot mean that it concerns the prayer leader, for he has not yet said it, and "repeats" would not apply to him.

Yad Yehudah - טז

This custom must not be changed, and only "the LORD your God" is to be repeated. It is in the Zohar and Midrash ha-Ne'elam cited by the Beit Yosef, as he explained; he wrote that whoever changes it has the weaker position, etc.; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יז

"There": in Midrash ha-Ne'elam.

Yad Yehudah - יח

To direct intention to the fifteen vavs in Emet ve-Yatsiv. The Beit Yosef wrote the reason there: fifteen vavs equal ninety, corresponding to three Names YHVH, each with its four letters equaling thirty, likewise totaling ninety. Rema, in his glosses, wrote that fifteen vavs with the reading counted as one equal ninety-one, the numerical value of amen and of the Name in its reading and writing. It is as though one said "YHVH, Adonai, emet."

The master favors this latter reason regarding two Names: the vavs equal YHVH and Adonai. This too is his expression "the palace of the LORD," for Adonai is a palace for YHVH, and heikhal likewise has the value of Adonai. Of this it says, "The LORD is in His holy palace; let all the earth be silent before Him," as is known from the Zohar, Pinehas, page 442 [?]. It is also known from the Zohar, Bereshit, page 105, that all blessings and prayers stand before the gate of this palace. To indicate this intention, the master wrote palace in place of Adonai; they are the same. As for the third Name, saying the vavs indicate emet, the master's view is that this is unnecessary, since the individual says emet explicitly and lacks only two Names in the intention. [TN200155]

Yad Yehudah - יט

Our approach is preferable: directing intention to emet as beginning, middle, and end, as stated. For at night, in any event, when Emet ve-Yatsiv is not said and the vavs are absent, one must direct intention to emet alone.

Yad Yehudah - כ

Some direct intention in the evening service.

Yad Yehudah - כא

Equal to the vavs together with the reading counted as one.

Yad Yehudah - כב

"The Rabbis explained": in chapter 2 of Berakhot, Rabbi Hama bar Hanina's saying, "Whoever is precise," etc. He based it on the verse, "When Shaddai scattered kings in it, it snowed in Tsalmon." Further there, Rav Ovadiah taught: "You shall teach them"—let your study be complete, leaving space between adjoining letters.

Yad Yehudah - כג

"And similar cases": they taught there, 'al levavekha, 'al levavkhem, 'esev be-sadekha, va-avadtem meherah, ha-kanaf petil, etkhem me-erets —"upon your heart," "upon your hearts," "grass in your field," "you shall perish quickly," "the corner, a cord," "you from the land."

Yad Yehudah - כד

Only identical letters: the letter with which one word ends begins the adjacent word, and both letters are pronounced with movement, as stated.

sixteen, two nuns ten, and two pes sixteen: altogether sixty. [TN200156]

Yad Yehudah - כו

All the other precautions and exactitudes a person must observe in the Shema, such as those mentioned by the decisors, apart from these adjoining letters, are included in being precise in its letters, as Rabbi Hama bar Hanina said. One must leave space between them as between adjoining letters. Rabbi Hama teaches us that even for those exactitudes, Gehinnom is cooled for him. See below, section 20. [TN200157]

Yoel Moshe - 1

"I am first, above," etc.: the first three; "I am last, below": Malkhut. "They ought to be," etc.: I is Malkhut; the LORD, the six extremities; your God, Binah encompassing the first three. Thus one need not say "I am the LORD your God, true," but only "I am the LORD your God." ("The palace of yod": this is the Name Adonai, for heikhal and YHVH together are ninety-one, the value of ayin.) [TN200158]

"Concerning the three karkhin," etc.: they are Akatriel, Metatron, and Sandalphon, as will follow below. I heard in the name of the Zohar hadas [?] that one must not interrupt between emet and ve-yatsiv, for emet is Jacob and ve-yatsiv Joseph; body and covenant are reckoned as one. [TN200159]

"Both pronounced with movement": for example, be-khol levavekha, "with all your heart," where the lamed moves in pronunciation. "In reduced reckoning," etc.: reduced value from the side of Metatron. Four pairs of lameds, eight lameds, equal twenty-four in reduced reckoning; two pairs of mems, four mems, equal sixteen; one pair of bets gives four; and one pair of pes, two pes, equals sixteen in reduced reckoning: altogether sixty. "All the other precautions," etc.: the other things in which one must likewise be precise are included in being precise in its letters.

Therefore the LORD desired that the world be judged at these times, so that the merit of Torah and commandments might stand for us to redeem our souls and plead favorably before Him.

Rema of Fano

This God of ours, blessed be His Name, rules over the ordering of times. Everything is like clay in the potter’s hand; so it is in His hand and authority. He brings every hidden thing into judgment every day and every hour, as explained in the Gemara from the verse, “You visit him every morning and test him every moment.” We have already explained in part II of Heqor Din that the tannaim who seem to disagree about this each state a different point and do not disagree.

He singled out no day from others on which to make His judgments righteous —such as “today is the world’s birth,” designated for judging man—and likewise no other modes of governance, such as the other seasons in which the world is judged, except to direct our hearts toward fear of Him. For He placed the world in our hearts, so that we are occupied for most of the time. These seasons are holy convocations for us and our children, undoubtedly for the redemption of our souls, so that the corresponding faces of the Chariot may plead merit on our behalf. Therefore they are called four peraqim, the joints of the Chariot and its bonds. Furthermore, they are appointed over deliverance and redemption: certainly four redeemers. [TN200160] of the Chariot, will also plead merit for us, to save us from harsh judgment. As stated in the Zohar, Va-Yehi, page 477: “Rabbi Yose said: When the matters are contemplated, everything is found like these joints—Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and King David. Through these the world is judged at four seasons; human beings are judged on the days when they were found in the world,” etc.; see there. This is also why these times are called peraqim, after the fathers who were found in the world during them. They are the Chariot’s joints and parts, and the bonds that bind it. They are also the four redeemers from subjection to the four kingdoms, as is known from the midrashim. These times are therefore rightly called peraqim in the language of deliverance and redemption.

first to purify ourselves and to greet the teacher, resembling the commandment of appearing to greet the Shekhinah; to engage in Torah; to increase service, namely prayer and the day's offerings; and to gladden through them the poor, the stranger, every widow and orphan, which is the practice of lovingkindness. These are the world's three pillars, for through this He will teach us of His ways, and we shall walk in His paths.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Like a bride," etc.: he likens Israel to a bride, the appointed times to marriage, and the new moon to betrothal arrangements [?] and consent. [TN200167]

Rema of Fano

In sanctifying the month and appointed times, we are like a bride asked to marry in Nisan or Sivan. Until she consents and says, "Such-and-such a day is Nisan," we do not cast barley into the mortar. Once she has consented and fixed the new moon, she must wait to provide for herself until the fifteenth of the month or its sixth day, each according to its rule. But the sanctity of "today is the world's birth" is different, for the new

Yad Yehudah - ג–ד

"Until she consents," etc.: in chapter 1 of Ketubbot (page 8), concerning the blessing "in Whose dwelling is joy," they say that the beginning of the wedding is from when barley is cast into the mortar; see Rashi. Clearly her consent is required, as we say in chapter 7 of Niddah (page 66): if she was asked to marry and consented, she must observe seven clean days. Likewise, the time given her to provide herself with adornments, as we learned in the chapter Af al Pi, begins when she consents. So it is with Israel: after they consent and fix the new moon, which establishes the appointed times, we must wait to provide and attend to the festival's needs until the fifteenth of Nisan and the sixth of Sivan.

Yad Yehudah - ה–ו

But the sanctity of Rosh ha-Shanah is different, for the new moon is concealed at the festival, and Rosh ha-Shanah falls on the very day of the new moon. There is not even a day or two between them for preparation. Therefore it contains only the marriage proposal, for a marriage to take place during the Festival. She is first summoned to examination in the judgment of Rosh ha-Shanah and the Day of Atonement, like a bride asked to marry who must first examine herself for clean days, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"With love that contains jealousy": there is no hostility in this examination, Heaven forbid, for between bridegroom and bride there is only bridal love; no hatred arouses this examination. There is, however, love containing moon is concealed at the festival. She is first summoned to examination on Rosh ha-Shanah and the Day of Atonement, with love that contains jealousy, for "He does not trust even His holy ones." When we emerge acquitted, with signs in our hands—the lulav and its four species—we shall merit the shelter of peace, "a canopy over all glory," and "she shall be cleared and conceive seed." [TN200164]

What all the months of the year share is what is written in the Responsa of the Geonim: for seven days before the moon becomes visible, the attribute of mercy wages war against Samael and his armies concerning the diminution. The hairy goat provokes a quarrel with the smooth man, out of jealousy over her who is beautiful as the moon. Michael and Gabriel fight against the accusers. At the end of the seventh day Gabriel weakens their power, and Michael the high priest brings Sham'ashael, the great prince who pleads merit for Esau, who is in the likeness of a goat, and offers him in the likeness of an offering upon the altar standing before Repentance at every new moon. Then Will is appeased, Glory increases and is filled, and the goat's power is consumed in the fire of Gevurah. Yet it awakens again in the days of descent, until the appointed time of which it is written, "The moon's light shall be like the sun's light." [TN200165]

From this we learn concerning greeting the Shekhinah through the blessing of the moon: the choicest performance of the commandment is not to bless it before the seventh night from conjunction, while the requirement to jealousy, as stated in the Zohar, Metsora, page 57, on "Jealousy is harsh as Sheol": "There is jealousy only in love, and from love comes jealousy," etc. This is like one who is jealous concerning his wife and does not trust her because her love is wondrous to him. So it is explained in the Zohar, Va-Yehi, page 516: "From here we learn that a man should be jealous concerning his wife so that he may bind himself to her in complete love, for through this he does not set his eyes upon another woman."

Yad Yehudah - ח

When we emerge acquitted in the judgment of Rosh ha-Shanah and the Day of Atonement, and the signs of victory in judgment—the four species of the lulav, as stated in the midrashim—come into our hands, we shall merit the wedding canopy at Sukkot. The bride shall be cleared and conceive seed, as Scripture says concerning one who is jealous about his wife.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"What they share," etc.: the reason we gave for sanctifying the month as the beginning of marriage suits those months containing festivals in the likeness of marriage, but not the other new moons without a festival. What all new moons share, providing a fitting reason for their sanctification and rejoicing, is what is written in the Responsa of the Geonim, etc. The sage Galante also brought it in his commentary on Lamentations, on "From the daughter of Zion departed," in the name of the gaon Rabbi Yehiel Ashkenazi, of blessed memory, with some omissions and additions. This is its wording; see do so before the sixteenth is indispensable. The two formulations in the Gemara that explain Rabbi Yohanan's saying, "Until its deficiency is filled," are precise and do not disagree. This is "until it becomes perfumed" in tractate Soferim, as we have explained the matter and its reason. Why on a weekday, and why after the Sabbath? Let it be sought from there in Iyyunei ha-Shinnun. [TN200166]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Then Will is appeased": Galante writes, "Satisfaction is produced before Him, and the emanation that was lacking from Glory, in the likeness of a punishment for the moon's diminution, increases and is filled. This is the likeness of atonement through the goat offering. This is a goat to atone for what is above, corresponding to what is below," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"Yet it awakens again," etc.: Galante's wording is, "It returns and renews itself through the power of Will until the time of destruction arrives and the prophet's saying is fulfilled: 'The house of Jacob shall be fire and the house of Joseph a flame,'" etc. In all this the reason for the new moon and its offerings is well explained.

Yad Yehudah - יג

From our explanation that the new moon begins and establishes the marriage, and that the goat's power awakens again in the days of descent, we learn concerning sanctifying the moon: although the obligation begins when it is visible, the choicest performance should not precede the marriage. Therefore one should wait until the seventh night, not before, because of Sivan, when the festival is on the sixth. As an indispensable requirement one must sanctify it before the sixteenth night, for afterward the days of descent begin. For this reason, in Nisan and Tishri one cannot wait until after the festival, which is on the fifteenth.

Yad Yehudah - יד

In the Gemara, Sanhedrin: Rabbi Aha bar Hanina said in Rabbi Yose's name, in Rabbi Yohanan's name: Until when does one bless the new moon? Until its deficiency is filled. How long? Rabbi Jacob bar Idi said in Rav Judah's name: until seven. The Nehardeans say: until sixteen. Both hold like Rabbi

Yohanan, etc. Rashi explains that both hold like Rabbi Yohanan and disagree about the meaning of his statement, etc.; see there. To the master, it means that each says a different thing and they do not disagree: until seven concerns the choicest performance, while until fifteen concerns the indispensable limit.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"In tractate Soferim": there, chapter 20, they say, "One does not bless the moon until it becomes perfumed." Rabbi Jonah has this reading at the end of the chapter Tefillat ha-Shahar. He mentions various explanations and writes: "Some explain becomes perfumed as the language of a canopy, like 'He made a wedding feast for his son.' That is, when it becomes like a canopy, somewhat large and illuminating its surroundings." The master likewise explains it in terms of a canopy, but means until the time of marriage, namely until seven, for the choicest performance.

In his responsa, section 75, he further wrote: "What is 'until it becomes perfumed'? Until seven, because its deficiency is concealed, and then she is like a daughter of twenty-two," etc. Here and there it is clear that the master explains until seven exclusively: when the seventh night begins, the commandment is to sanctify it. According to what was stated, the reason is that there is no longer any concern on account of the sixth of Sivan. It is analogous to until fifteen. This is unlike Rashi, of blessed memory, who explains it in different respects, followed by Rabbi Y. Gikatilla, brought in Shulhan Arukh, Orah Hayyim, section 426, who holds that one does not bless until seven days have passed. [TN200168]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“In Iyyunei ha-Shinnun”: he likewise wrote this in the aforementioned responsum.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Until the fifteenth of the month,” etc.: the counterpart above is that on the fifteenth of Nisan and Tishri there is conjunction for the moon with greater elevation through the festival at midmonth. Then she ascends with him to Keter, and her adornments come from the Name Yah, corresponding to the month’s fifteen days. In Sivan, with the festival on the sixth day of the month, she has illumination only from the vav of the Name. This suffices, since she also has light from the fifty days of counting.

“Today is the world’s birth,” etc.: Rosh ha-Shanah; the festival is concealed in it. She has no adornment, being examined like a suspected adulteress, as it were—like a suspected adulteress. Our Sages said in Sotah: she adorned herself, therefore she shall be disfigured, as it were. “Love containing jealousy,” etc.: by way of example, if he does not love his wife, he is not jealous about her; for why should he love her afterward [?]? Rather, the jealousy comes from her precedence. This is explained in the Zohar, Emor, page 184, at the end: the Shavuot meal offering is like the jealousy offering of barley flour, and the examination takes place during the fifty days of counting. See there, page 186, from “He shall wave,” etc.: “The woman of valor approaches of herself as an offering to the high priest; certainly

she is a side, and she shall be cleared and conceive seed.” End of quotation. Here too, after the examination she merits the covering of peace: this is conjunction, but not yet actual union, until Shemini Atseret, when “she is taken and conceives seed” through actual union. [TN200169]

For it is known that at Passover, although judgment concerns grain, the final he, the left, it is itself called the right arm. She has light from Yesod within Tiferet; this is only conjunction, corresponding to the right. Sukkot is the left arm, from Gevurah within Tiferet. But the Atseret of Shavuot and Shemini Atseret come from the rectification within Tiferet: unification and actual union. This is explained.

“Standing before Repentance”: before he, Binah, which is Repentance, the first he. Then the upper Will, Keter, is appeased, and Glory, the moon, increases. See Galante on “All her splendor departed from the daughter of Zion”; he brought this responsum in fuller explanation. See there on the verse “Rejoice and be glad.” “Until the appointed time,” etc.: in the future, when the moon’s light will be like the sun’s, without descent. “Until the seventh night”: just as the festival is after the sixth of Sivan and after the fifteenth of Nisan and Tishri, so the moon’s blessing, etc., until fifteen, neither less nor more. “In Iyyunei ha-Shinnun,” etc.: the author’s responsa. Although the Holy One, blessed be He, told it, “The righteous shall be called by your name”—meaning, as explained above in section 16, that just as the moon diminishes itself in turning to the world's needs, so the righteous diminish themselves before Him—and they further resemble each other according to the preceding section, since the moon's cycle of ascent and descent remains pending until the appointed time, nevertheless now, before the end-time, its mind is not appeased.

Yad Yehudah - ב

The testing in the furnace of exiles is hard for Israel, and the consolation too is at distant times.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"She too," etc.: so it is above, in understanding the upper moon. During Israel's exile, in their distress, as it were, She is distressed and also in exile. The Holy One, blessed be He, ascends higher and higher and the union separates, as stated in the Zohar, Va-Yiqra. Therefore She said, "Set me as a seal above Your heart, as a seal above Your arm," as will be explained before us.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Where the end of the right was revealed to Him": it is known that head designates Keter, and heart Hokhmah, after its thirty-two paths. Concerning this our Sages said in the chapter Heleq, on "The day of vengeance is in My heart": "To My heart I revealed it, but to My limbs I did not reveal

the end of the right was revealed to Him, as when she was faithful with Him, "declaring the end from the beginning"; "as a seal above Your arm"—the left that repels, from the morning of the world's creation until now, concerning which it was said, "To My limbs I did not reveal it," even to the right that draws near. What is written afterward? "For love is strong as death, jealousy hard as Sheol; its flashes are flashes of fire, a flame of Yah." To complete the explanation in its intended sense, first examine the verse's repetition and variation in all its parts, none missing, the joining of some with others on either side, and their relation to the whole exposition we are explaining. [TN200171]

Now let the wise hear: here the perfect beloved, with honeycomb-sweet, pleasant sayings, found Sheol as a house for Death, prepared from yesterday to expand according to the measure of the wicked, in the sense of "there is nothing new." "It too was prepared for the King," for He created everything for His glory. It is destined to add its whole hollow—"it all says Glory"—to His palace in the Garden of Eden, through the merit of one who leaves space between the adjoining letters of the Shema, which are sixty, as above. This is the meaning of our Sages' saying that Eden is one-sixtieth of Gehinnom. For every space throughout all Israel adds one Eden to the world. Thus we turn the curse into a blessing. If so with Gehinnom, how much more with all creation! [TN200172]

She too said that jealousy, certainly a it." The end of wonders was revealed only in the first three, which are complete mercy and still concealed. This is "To My heart I revealed it": Hokhmah, the beginning of revelation. But not in the seven days of construction, which are fully revealed: "To My limbs I did not reveal it," for it is known that they are called by the names of limbs.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"As when she was faithful with Him": Tiferet and Malkhut were initially two faces when within Hokhmah and Binah, in the aspect of siblinghood. Afterward, when they emerged from Binah's womb, Hesed came and separated them; they became male and female and descended to their places, as explained above in section 5. Therefore the Kingdom of Heaven says: Would that I knew and might find Him, a day of salvation and a time of favor for the LORD! For I shall utter riddles from of old: wisdom rests in the wise heart, the beginning of revelation. I too was there; no mystery was hidden from me. All the more when I was above it, in the supreme Keter, the head and brain above the heart, where He abounds in redemption and mercy, and a time of favor is present. Therefore, "Set me as a seal"—the supreme Keter—"above Your heart."

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Declaring from the beginning": this is the supreme Keter and Hokhmah.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"As a seal above Your arm," the left that repels, etc.: it is likewise known that initially the Holy One, blessed be He, wished to create the world through the attribute of judgment, but preceded it by joining the attribute of mercy to it. This concerns the two arms, Gedullah and Gevurah. His will arose to create the world by His left arm, which repels every root bearing poison and wormwood; hence the Name Elohim mentioned in the work of creation. He preceded it by joining mercy to it through His mighty right hand of Hesed, which draws near everyone who comes to shelter in its shade.

Since through Hesed Malkhut and Tiferet became male and female, after saying, "Set me as a seal above Your heart," as I was in the aspect of two faces before the world's creation, she further said: would that You set me as the head of a man, in the aspect of union after the world's creation. This is "as a seal," Hesed, "above Your left arm." It will be further explained shortly.

spirit of purity, is a nest for love, and the fire of the coal a dwelling for the flame. For the occupant is strong—who can dislodge it?—and the place is hard, never to be shaken. The Rock, Whose work is perfect, made the heart a dwelling for His seal, and with Him is abundant redemption, in a correspondence finer than fine, like the brain above it. This is "above Your heart"; similarly, "Above their heart I shall write it," which we explained in Heqor Din. In the LORD's arm—namely Elohim of the work of creation—is the seal of creation. Its counterpart is in His right hand above it, of which it is written, "He raised His hands on high"; by it, "a world of lovingkindness shall be built." This is "above Your arm." [TN200173]

She therefore pleads to return to the days of her youth, for deliverance and redemption, so that the end of the matter may be good as it was at the beginning of thought, the beginning of knowledge: when the singers went first —the upper heavens and their offspring —followed by the players—the upper earth and her offspring—amid maidens beating drums, the souls of the righteous, concerning whom it is written, "Let there be light." The garments of skin are stripped off: these are its sheath, concerning which it is written, "And there was light." Concerning this a covenant was made not to force the end.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Even to the right that draws near": concerning good deeds, we must learn that Israel's merit can avail to bring redemption near, by an a fortiori argument from Gehinnom. Therefore she concludes, "For love is strong as death," etc.

Yad Yehudah - ט

The repeated wording: "For love is strong as death," and again, "Jealousy is hard as Sheol."

Yad Yehudah - י

The variation of wording, in the times [?] of the first and last clauses. [TN200174]

Yad Yehudah - יא

The combination within each expression: love beside death, and jealousy beside Sheol.

Yad Yehudah - יב

Their relation: these matters will also be understood in relation to the whole exposition, G.V.Sh., "Set me as a seal," etc. [TN200175]

Yad Yehudah - יג

Now let the wise hear the verse's correct explanation.

Yad Yehudah - יד

Here, when His beloved, His perfect one, said "For strong as death," etc., the matter is that she finds Topheth prepared from yesterday for Death, in the nature of every place and occupant: the place holds, and the occupant is what is held. Likewise Gehinnom is the place for Death, and Death the occupant of Gehinnom, requiring a place. Thus Gehinnom continues to expand according to the measure of the wicked, so that there may be room to contain all who enter it, few or many.

Yad Yehudah - טו

In the sense of “there is nothing new under the sun,” from which our Sages derive that Moses our teacher’s saying, “If the LORD creates a creation,” concerns not creating Gehinnom but bringing its opening near. Rashi wrote in the chapter Ein Bein ha-Muddar: merely bringing something near is not included in “there is nothing new.” To the master, bringing the opening near is an answer, and we do not derive from it that exclusion: everything is included in “there is nothing new.” Moses’ bringing the opening near means that Gehinnom was created initially with this in view: to continue expanding according to the number of the wicked.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“It too,” etc.: the beloved further found that lowest Sheol was prepared for the Holy One, blessed be He, to make there in the future a circle for the righteous and sanctify its space with the sanctity of the Garden of Eden, as explained in Heqor Din, part V, chapter 5; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“Through the merit of one who leaves,” etc.: concerning this our Sages said of the Shema, “Whoever is precise in its letters has Gehinnom cooled for him.” The intention is that Gehinnom is transformed into Eden for him. Since the adjoining letters are sixty, as above in section 17, and Eden is one-sixtieth of Gehinnom, one who leaves space between the sixty adjoining letters transforms all Gehinnom into sixty Edens and extends the Garden of Eden over their sanctity.

Yad Yehudah - יח

All the more so all creation, which will be purified with Israel’s purification.

Yad Yehudah - יט

The beloved further said that the spirit of jealousy, etc.: so it is with love and jealousy, and with fire and flame, which she mentioned. Just as Sheol is the place for Death, a man’s jealousy is the nest for love, and love the occupant of jealousy. Likewise, the fire of the coal is the place and dwelling of the flame: the coal’s fire is the place, the flame its occupant. Of the occupant, which needs a place in which to rest, one may rightly use the language of strength: no one can raise and remove it except the place that receives it as a host. Of the place one may rightly use hardness, indicating its endurance, a firm peg that will not move.

Accordingly the verse means: “Set me as a seal above Your heart,” as I was in the aspect of two faces, to know when the end of wonders will come; “as a seal above Your arm,” in the aspect of union after the world’s creation, repelling the wicked with the left and drawing near the righteous with the right, for the vision is still for an appointed time. It is likewise fitting before God to hasten redemption through this. The proof is that just as Death is a strong occupant, so His love for Israel is strong, a strong occupant needing a place. Likewise jealousy, love’s place, is hard as Sheol is a hard place for Death. Love’s flashes are flashes of fire bound to the flame of Yah, the great jealousy; understand this.

It follows that if Sheol, the place of a flame blazing upon the wicked, is found to abandon its occupant —not to bring it into spaciousness as usual, but to release it, because it desires a spirit of purity and the nature of its opposite, through Israel’s merit— how much more will jealousy thereby hold its course within its occupant, kindling love’s flashes and winning its heart! For both intend one understanding, the spirit of knowledge and fear of the LORD. The more jealousy endures, the more revealed and concealed love will increase between them, to bring redemption near, speedily in our days, amen.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“The Rock,” etc., concludes the explanation of “Set me as a seal,” etc. “Above Your heart” means the supreme Keter, which is above Hokhmah [gap].

Yad Yehudah - כא

“In a correspondence finer than fine”: concerning the incense service on the Day of Atonement, where the hint is to the supreme Keter. This follows what natural philosophers and physicians said: the vital scent ascends in man from heart to brain, where it becomes finer and nearer the rank of the psychic spirit. This is “From my flesh I shall behold God.” [TN200176]

Yad Yehudah - כב

In Heqor Din, part II, chapter 16; see there.

Yad Yehudah - כג

The counterpart: as we said concerning Keter and Hokhmah, so with Gedullah and Gevurah. The LORD's right hand is majestic in upper strength, above His mighty arm; and the LORD will strike [?]. Of it it is written, "For He raised His hands on high" (Habakkuk 3). This is "as a seal above Your arm." [TN200177]

Yad Yehudah - כד

"She therefore pleads," etc.: the overall intention of "Set me as a seal," etc., is that after the blessed LORD told her, "The righteous shall be called by your name," she pleads for redemption through the righteous' merit. Thereby she too will return to her former state, and the moon's light will be like the sun's light.

Yad Yehudah - כה

"As it was at the beginning of thought": in the heart of Hokhmah, for there the end of days was revealed, as mentioned. This was also when God said, "Let us make man," of which our Sages said, "He took counsel in His heart." The deeds of the righteous, the cause of redemption, were then also foreseen. For present with the King in this consultation were the upper heavens, Tiferet, and their offspring, the angels receiving from her, and the upper earth, Malkhut, and her offspring, her angels. Of this they said, "He took counsel with the work of heaven and earth"; "He took counsel with the ministering angels."

Yad Yehudah - כו

And with the souls of the righteous, as they said, "He took counsel with the souls of the righteous."

Yad Yehudah - כז

Concerning them it is written, "Let there be light," for it is known that the Holy One, blessed be He, stored that light for the righteous. The Zohar, Bereshit, page 102, says that concerning that light it was said, "Let us make man in our image."

Yad Yehudah - כח

"When the garments of skin are stripped off": as stated in the Zohar, Pequdei, page 418: "Come and see: the soul does not ascend to appear before the holy King until it merits being clothed in an upper garment to appear there. Likewise, it does not descend below until it is clothed in a garment of this world," etc. "We have established that the soul ascends only in a shining garment. Come and see: when Adam the first man was in the Garden of Eden, he wore a garment like the one above, a garment of upper light. Once expelled from the Garden of Eden, needing the forms of this world, what is written? 'The LORD God made garments of skin for Adam and his wife and clothed them.' Initially it was written, 'garments of light,' the earlier light that served the Garden of Eden, for the shining upper light serves this Garden of Eden. Therefore, when the first man entered the Garden, the Holy One, blessed be He, clothed him in a garment of that light and brought him there. Had he not first been clothed in that light, he would not have entered there.

"Once expelled from there, he needed another garment. Then: 'The LORD God made garments of skin for Adam and his wife,' etc. They have established that a person's good deeds in this world fashion a garment from the illumination and lights of the upper splendor, in which he may be prepared for that world, to appear before the Holy One, blessed be He. In that garment which he wears, he delights and sees within the shining speculum, as it is said, 'To behold the LORD's pleasantness and visit His palace,'" etc.; see there.

These are the master's words: the righteous are initially clothed in garments of skin, the clothing of this world. When they come to behold the LORD's pleasantness, they strip these off and clothe themselves in garments of service for ministering in holiness, which they drew through their good deeds from the upper light, the first light stored for them for this purpose.

Yad Yehudah - כט

Concerning it is written, "And there was light." Because it does not say, "And it was so," our predecessors learned that there were two lights: the first was stored away, the light of that world; the second serves in this world, the garment of skin, as stated.

Yad Yehudah - ל

"Concerning this": concerning the stated rectification and reason.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"For the present, however," etc.: although He promised her that the righteous would be called by her name and everything would be rectified in the future, her mind is nevertheless not appeased. The testing—the refining of exile—is hard, and the time until redemption is distant. “Where it was revealed to Him,” etc.: the end of the right was revealed in the heart, after our Sages’ saying, “To My heart I revealed it, but to My limbs I did not reveal it,” for the end is revealed there.

“As when she was faithful with Him”: in the mystery of a point behind him, between his breasts, directly opposite his heart, as above in section 5. This is the mystery of “until an issar is seen opposite his heart.” Then He declared the end from the beginning. My prayer is to restore the former days, when she knew the mystery of redemption before the sawing apart, in the mystery of two faces. See the Zohar, Metsora, page 96, where this verse is explained in this manner. [TN200178]

“As a seal above Your arm”: from the day of the world’s creation, the illumination of her mental faculties comes from the mystery of the hand-tefillin, on the left hand, from which she has illumination. What power she has is in the mystery of the left that repels, subduing shells. Of this it says, “To My limbs I did not reveal it,” even the right hand. Therefore the right draws near, as Ishmael repented. She is like it [?] “above Your arm”—above precisely: the right overcoming the left. Even so, it has no revelation of the end. The reason is that from the right, Abraham, came Ishmael, and from the left, Isaac, came Esau. These are the shells, the “end of days” with mem, on the Other Side: the image erected by Nebuchadnezzar. In this, sparks of holiness enter impurity within that stature.

In the Babylonian exile we separated the sparks that descended into the image’s head; likewise, in the other exiles they separated the remaining sparks until feet reach feet. Then “His feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives,” as stated in the Zohar, Pequdei, page 464, and Sefer ha-Kavvanot. The end was revealed only to Jacob, from whose side there is no shell: the body’s inwardness in Tiferet, where the end of the right is revealed. Therefore Jacob sought to reveal the end of the right to his sons, and the holy spirit departed from him. He said, “Perhaps there is something unfit,” etc., through “Just as there is only One in your heart”—in your heart precisely, after “To My heart I revealed it.” The withholding from him was because Jacob encompasses the entire body, not only its inwardness, the heart. Therefore the holy spirit departed from him, for Moses is within and Jacob without, as above. [TN200179]

“Examine the repetition,” etc.: strong and hard. The variation is why strong describes death, and hard Sheol. The combinations are “love is strong as death” and “jealousy is hard as Sheol.” “Here the perfect beloved,” etc.: after “my beloved, my perfect one.” The overall plain sense is that strong, death, and love are called occupants; hard, Sheol, and jealousy are the place for strength. The place for strength is hard; because it is hard, it is prepared [?] for strength as occupant, and hard is its place. Likewise Death is the occupant and Sheol its place. Jealousy is a place and reinforcement for love, the occupant, for through jealousy concerning a suspected adulteress, love eventually comes, although it is hard, as above: the testing is hard for her. Likewise the flame is the occupant and the coal its place, the flame bound to the coal. [TN200180]

“It too was prepared for the King,” etc.: this Gehinnom too will become the Garden of Eden through the merit of those who leave space between adjoining letters. “Who can dislodge it”: the testing is hard for her, since in the future jealousy will become love and Sheol will remain without Death. It is hard for her that it should endure; Death is strong because it will be abolished in the future. Likewise the flame ceases, while the coal stands. “Like the brain above it”: through Keter’s illumination upon Tiferet’s inwardness, where the mystery of redemption lies.

“To return to the days of her youth,” etc.: during exile she does not even have the adornment of “above Your arm,” indicating the right-side lovingkindnesses overcoming the left, as at the world’s creation through the thirty-two occurrences of Elohim, within which Names YHVH are hidden and prevail over them, as above in Heqor Din, chapter 10, part IV. His intention here is to explain differently the midrash “He took counsel in My heart,” mentioned above, through this mystery: He took counsel in His heart, where redemption’s mystery lies. “He took counsel with the work of heaven and earth” is hinted at by the upper heavens, Tiferet, and their offspring, the angels: this is “He took counsel with the ministering angels,” male angels. After them the players: earth, Malkhut, which is in a complete foundation, and her offspring, female angels. Amid the maidens: the souls of the righteous, with whom He also took counsel. “Let there be light”: in unification, in

“So that,” etc.: after explaining in the preceding section the Gemara’s expression “He saw that its mind was not appeased,” both openly concerning the actual moon and in the hidden teaching concerning the Shekhinah, the master concludes here that the moon’s mind remained unappeased for the sake of the Shekhinah, the upper Glory, so that it would not cease its prayer [?], as mentioned in the preceding section. [TN200183]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“He finally provided,” etc.: he explains the saying’s conclusion, when the Holy One, blessed be He, said, “Bring atonement,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“For the present”: until the appointed time when the moon’s light will be as stated above in section 19.

Rema of Fano

So that the upper Glory may sing and not be silent, the moon too must have no silence: in its praise, let it neither be mute nor still. The Holy One, blessed be He, finally provided for it, for the present, a rectification looking to all the world’s needs, saying, “Bring atonement for Me because I diminished the moon.” The master at the beginning of tractate Shevuot already sensed the difficulty of the saying in its plain meaning and set it right through two true explanations. These correspond and inherently require one another; the exposition cannot be fully understood unless they are joined.

The first explanation renders ‘alai, for Me, as before Me; this alone is what the later authorities understood from him. Yet this is insufficient unless ‘alai is also explained according to the master’s reason, as stated: because of the guarantee I gave the moon that you would be righteous, determine new moons according to its visibility, and maintain reckoning by it for sabbatical

The master Alfasi already sensed this saying’s difficulty if interpreted literally, as other commentators also wrote, especially our master Rabbi Samuel Yafeh in his commentary on Midrash Rabbah, Bereshit, chapter 6. He wrote: “All our pursuers have overtaken us”—how can such things be attributed to the blessed LORD, Whose ways are all judgment without any aspect of injustice, as though He needed atonement? Furthermore, if so, the blessed LORD would be the one receiving atonement; how could He atone for Himself? Another difficulty: since He can repair it by making the moon great again, why leave it diminished? See there.

The master Alfasi sensed all this and explained it to set the matter right: “Its mind was not appeased. The Holy One, blessed be

He, told it: I shall give you honor to appease your mind in place of My diminishing you. What is it? That Israel shall offer an offering before Me at every new moon to atone for their sins. Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, said: Bring an offering before Me on the new moon to atone for yourselves, so that you may complete atonement for Me. This is the honor I said I would give the moon because I diminished it.

years and jubilees, for the sanctity of the chosen land, its counterpart. The land diminishes and contracts itself when not all its inhabitants are upon it, like this gazelle whose skin cannot contain its flesh. For while the gazelle is alive, it expands its skin with the force of its breath. The extent of the expansion destined and prepared for the chosen land is explicit in the verse, "It is the beauty of all lands." When this living creature must be flayed, the skin ceases to contain its flesh, for it is small. [TN200182]

This is the explanation of 'Bring atonement for Me because I diminished it,'" etc.

It is clear that Alfasi explains 'alai as before Me. The master's understanding of Alfasi is that he also explains 'alai literally, and therefore concludes, "so that you may complete atonement for Me." The intention of "Bring atonement for Me" is sustained by these two explanations together:

bring atonement before Me at the new moon for your sins, thereby making your deeds righteous and becoming righteous, as I promised the moon that the righteous would be called by its name and determine new moons according to its visibility. This is Alfasi's conclusion, "so that you may complete atonement for Me": through your atonement, fulfill on My behalf the promise I gave the moon.

Yad Yehudah - ה–ו

This is the one explanation the later authorities understood. They thought Alfasi's words contained nothing else beyond explaining 'alai as before Me. This is not true, for before Me alone is insufficient. Even if we say the blessed LORD commanded this atonement on the new moon as honor and splendor for the moon, the difficulty remains: what relation is there between atonement and the moon? But when joined to the guarantee the blessed LORD gave the moon, that the righteous would be called by its name, as hinted at by 'alai in its plain meaning, it is fittingly said: Israel should bring the atonement they require for their sins on the new moon, so that the moon's glory may be revealed. I arranged for it that you would be righteous and determine new moons according to its visibility, as explained above in section 15.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Like this gazelle," etc.: as stated in the Gemara, chapter Ha-Nizzaqin, concerning the six hundred thousand towns belonging to King Yannai. Ulla said,

"I saw that place myself; it could not contain even six hundred thousand reeds." A certain sectarian said to Rabbi Hanina, "You are telling lies!" He told him, "It is called the land of the gazelle. Just as a gazelle's skin cannot contain its flesh, so the Land of Israel expands when people dwell upon it, and contracts when they do not." Rashi explained "its skin cannot contain": once flayed, it contracts and cannot again cover it.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"It is the beauty of all lands" (Ezekiel 20) hints that all lands are destined to be sanctified with the sanctity of the Land of Israel.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"When this living creature," etc.: this comparison does not mean that during exile, when our skin is stripped from our flesh, we resemble a dead gazelle and are like the dead, like slain ones lying in a grave —the wicked being called dead during their lives, as will be explained in the next section. This is not so. Rather, even today the LORD is great and greatly praised, keeping our soul among the living, now as before. On the side of our skin too, the Land of Israel is called the land of the living in either case, and its sanctity has not departed. If our sins caused the flaying, this is only like a vigorous gazelle flayed while still alive. In this respect we resemble it, for then the skin ceases to contain its flesh because it is small. So it is with our skin, "heated like an oven," as the lamenter said; perhaps this is what he intended.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"For the sanctity of the land," etc.: this appears related to what preceded, for he now explains that the moon resembles the Land of Israel, since Malkhut is called the Land of Israel, as is known. She diminishes herself for the present during exile; therefore it is called the land of the gazelle—just as this gazelle, etc., as below—like the moon. Therefore appeasement depends on counting days and years for sabbatical cycles and jubilees, which depend on the Land of Israel, not lands outside it, since the Land of Israel is the moon's counterpart, diminishing herself as above.

This lasts until the moon's light becomes like the sun's light. Then the land too is broad before them—before them precisely. Therefore the people of Shechem said, "The land is broad before them," before them precisely. For they are like dwellers in graves, not the nations, who are called dead during their lives, as will follow. [TN200184]

"From what we know," etc., continues the end of the preceding section. Here and in the following section the master brings expositions concerning it.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"As the commentators say": among them Rashi, of blessed memory, wrote: "'Did not sustain' is abbreviated wording: the land's pasture did not sustain them. Therefore 'did not sustain' is written in the masculine." End of quotation. Earth is feminine, so it should have said nasa'ah; because it is abbreviated wording, however, it says nasa, referring to the unwritten word pasture. The master's view is "their sign did not sustain": their sign did not

Rema of Fano

From what we know—that dead flesh does not expand the skin, and the wicked are called dead during their lives—it follows that when Abram joined Lot, it is written, "Their sign did not sustain the land." This is not an abbreviated verse, as the commentators say; rather, otam means their sign, in the sense of "a true sign" and the sign of the scarlet thread, which the sages expounded in Rahab's words. Likewise, "They plotted themselves against his sign": the reflexive form is not justified by the usual plain interpretation of the commentators, but by what we explained. Joseph's brothers imagined themselves sufficient to complete his sign among the banners and hosts of the LORD. Afterward they could kill him without causing any diminution in the Shekhinah's camp, in their opinion.

sustain the land, as he concludes in the next section.

Yad Yehudah - ג

The sages expounded it in the Zohar, Va-Yehi, page 506: "'A true sign': this is the letter vav, for life dwells in it. Thus we learned: she sought Moses' sign, but they said and gave her the cord of scarlet thread. He told him: They said, Moses has already departed from the world, for the sun has been gathered in and the time has come for the moon to rule. We have no sign to give you. This is the cord of scarlet thread, as it is said, 'Your lips are like a scarlet thread,'" etc.; see there. Here too, concerning Lot, he explains sign as a sign and banner above.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The reflexive form is justified”: it ought to have said va-yenakkelu, but according to what we explained, oto likewise means his sign and banner. They imagined themselves sufficient to complete Joseph’s sign. Therefore it uses the reflexive form: they plotted within themselves concerning Joseph’s sign.

Yad Yehudah - ה

They thought they would complete Joseph’s sign, the covenant of peace as is known, through the attribute of peace they maintained.

Through this power of peace they also associated the Shekhinah with them in the ban they imposed, as is known.

This was through the attribute of peace, which they maintained among themselves wholeheartedly. By its power they associated the Shekhinah with them, for it alone suffices to draw the lovingkindness of El into the world from the thirteen measures of mercy. Thirteen times hesed numerically equals shalom, reckoned with the large values of the final letters M.N.Tz.P.Kh. Yet it is written, “There is no peace for the wicked,” for baseless hatred and the deprivation of peace are found only in damaged souls, all the more if they have already stumbled through one another. Go and learn from Rabbi Akiva’s disciples, who did not accord one another honor, recalling the sin of Shittim from which they were not purified until all were consumed together: they died a second death at that season. Observe the adjacency of the verses in Pinehas: “The sons of Korah did not die,” followed by “the sons of Simeon.” Join them and teach: the sons of Simeon did not die, but rather descendants of the mixed multitude who had married women of that tribe. We have already mentioned this above.

the thirteen measures of mercy, etc. The matter is that a world of lovingkindness is built by the Name El, seventy-two, through the merit of the tribes of Yah; this is also the place, his sign. To indicate this, the names of Israel’s sons were inscribed on the breastplate’s stones in seventy-two letters: the tribes themselves in fifty letters, as stated in the chapter Ellu Ne’emarin; above them was written Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and below them “tribes of Yeshurun,” as stated in the chapter Ba Lo. Their letters are thus seventy-two; see Rabbeinu Bahya on Tetsavveh.

Through the peace and brotherhood among them, the seventy-two letters accrue to each one, since each is reckoned as all of them. Thus peace draws into the world thirteen times the lovingkindness of El from the thirteen measures of mercy, corresponding to thirteen tribes when Joseph’s tribe is counted as two. To hint at this, Yehosef was written on the breastplate with an extra letter. Joseph’s brothers, however, thought that the number of tribes was unnecessary here, since peace alone suffices to draw thirteen times hesed into the world. This is indicated by the number of shalom, numerically 536, since mem among the final letters is counted as two hundred, corresponding to thirteen times seventy-two, likewise 536. [TN200186]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Yet it is written, ‘There is no peace’”: Joseph’s brothers did not judge rightly, for this peace is reckoned only as war and deprivation of peace, as Scripture says of the wicked, “There is no peace.” Their peace is the deprivation of peace.

Yad Yehudah - ט

All the more is such peace vain and useless, since it divides brotherhood, through their stumbling in this against their brother.

Yad Yehudah - ב

This is the reverse of “They plotted themselves against his sign” according to our explanation in the preceding section, where the intention is affection for the sign.

Yad Yehudah - ג

According to the exposition of Scripture’s saying there, “They raised their voices and wept”: our Sages said, “You weep without cause”; He decreed upon them that they would weep for

Rema of Fano

Even the wilderness generation, who said, “Because the LORD hates us”—the reverse of “They plotted themselves against his sign,” according to our approach—had decreed against them, “Your carcasses, you, shall fall in this wilderness.” Its initials form ve-eivah, and enmity, which brought upon them another enmity: the acronym “How does the city sit solitary,” according to its exposition. They came from a lofty quarry, the source of love, as is known, of which it is written, “Everything came from dust,” even the sun’s sphere. They did not remain in their tranquility; on the contrary, they acted corruptly, bringing hatred into the domain of the upper King, to Whom peace belongs. They were sentenced to have their pollution consumed in the wilderness dust, a place of fiery serpent and scorpion, until this day, as hinted at in the Zohar. [TN200190] generations.

Yad Yehudah - ד

This enmity was decreed upon them because they came from a lofty quarry, Binah, the source of love. As the Zohar, Qedoshim, page 164, in the Tosefta, says: in the Name, fear; he, love; vav, Torah and commandments—thus YHV. This is Binah, ben Yah, son of Yah. Therefore it is said, “You are sons to the LORD your God.” They acted corruptly in bringing hatred into this domain, as he concludes. [TN200191]

Yad Yehudah - ה

Concerning it is written, “Everything came from dust.” They said in the Zohar: “Even the sun’s sphere there was dust from the upper dust, as it is said, ‘And its dust contains gold,’” etc.; see there. The intention is Binah.

Yad Yehudah - ו

In the domain of the upper King: Binah. This is "Because the LORD hates us": our sign is Binah.

Yad Yehudah - ז

In the wilderness dust, measure for measure, because they damaged the upper dust.

Yad Yehudah - ח

As hinted at in the Zohar, Shelah Lekha, page 308 [?], on "Your carcasses, you, shall fall," etc.; see there. [TN200192]

Yad Yehudah - ט

This is the meaning of Scripture's "When the falling one falls." Our Sages said: he has not yet fallen, yet Scripture calls him falling; rather, this one was destined to fall, etc. The difficulty remains: why call him falling merely because he is destined to fall? Their intention is that he is called falling because of his fall into the pollution of sin, like "Your carcasses, you, shall fall." This is their saying that he too is destined to fall because he is already falling through his sin.

Yad Yehudah - י

Likewise, "You strip the garments of the naked" (Job 22). At first sight the wording seems incorrect, since the naked lack garments. Rather, it means stripping off the garments worn by those naked of perfection. See the Treatise

This is the meaning of "When the falling one falls": the body affected by pollution. Likewise, "You strip the garments of the naked": those naked of perfection wear garments of mourning; when they return to their perfection, stripping off the garments of the naked is to their praise, so that they may wear garments of salvation, a robe of righteousness. There is no need for Ibn Ezra's strained interpretation of this verse, which he praises and uses everywhere as an analogy, counting it a pleasing plain interpretation—not so for us.

Peace, however, is a distinctive sign of companions in Torah and commandments, from yesterday and the day before, whose banner over them is love, in the sense of "They plotted themselves against his sign," which we mentioned. Here too, Abram and Lot's banner and their sign did not sustain the land so that it would enlarge its tent's place for both, even at the time they were upon it. After Lot separated, it broadened and opened around Abram alone, as it is written, "Lift your eyes and look northward, southward, eastward, and westward." The reverse occurred with Lot: initially he dwelt in the cities of the plain, afterward he pitched his tent as far as Sodom, and finally he confined his dwelling to Sodom's gate. Even there he was given no rest, for a cistern is not filled from its own excavated earth. Just as the land's consolation says, "Lengthen your cords," and Jerusalem is destined to expand as far as Damascus to contain its many inhabitants, in the sense of "Who bore these for me," so "the moon's light shall be like the sun's light."

Jerusalem is destined to expand, as our Sages said, and as Scripture says, “Who bore,” etc. (Isaiah 49).

Yad Yehudah - כ

So the moon will expand, as will be explained in the next section.

Yoel Moshe - 1

The source of love is the first he, Binah, as stated in the Zohar, Qedoshim, page 165: “Awe and love, which are Yah, we call fear and love.” Thus love depends on the first he. “Everything came from dust”: Binah, even the sun’s sphere, ‘A.T. [?]. “In the King’s domain”: the wilderness generation acted corruptly and brought hatred into Binah, to Whom peace belongs, ‘A.T. [?]. They were judged measure for measure, to be consumed in dust, as hinted at in the Zohar, Shelah Lekha, page 149: the wilderness generation dresses every morning in the garment they had at Mount Sinai, and toward evening puts

on a bodily garment and dies. [TN200194]

“They wear garments of mourning”: explained above in chapter 12 of Heqor Din, part I. “There is no need for Ibn Ezra’s explanation,” etc.: he wrote several times that the verses are not so exact in the matter; for example, “You strip the garments of the naked”—what garment does a naked person have to strip? This is his explanation, and he praises this plain interpretation everywhere, although it is merely an example and analogy. We do not regard it as a pleasing plain interpretation. Rather, garments of the naked are garments of mourning worn through one’s sin, as above.

“His banner over her is love”: love numerically equals thirteen; peace likewise numerically equals thirteen times hesed. “For a cistern is not,” etc.: the shell is called a cistern.

“Belief in the possibility”: to believe that the moon was diminished from the great state it had, through its parts folding together, as he concludes.

The perceptible condition of the holy land—formerly four hundred parasangs square in a time of peace, whereas now its boundaries, specified in the Torah and visible to the eyes, have drawn near, pressing, constricting, and folding it between them, to fulfill “Your enemies shall be desolate over it”—makes belief in the possibility of the moon’s diminution very accessible to reason. It proceeded from the potential state prepared at first, before sin, by Him Who is awesome in His dealings with humankind, and afterward followed in actuality. Everything expounded concerning it is true. Had we merited, first man sinned and the luminaries were impaired. As stated in Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 12: Rabbi Berekhiah said in Rabbi Samuel’s name: although the things were created in their fullness, once Adam sinned they were impaired, and will not return to their proper state until the son of Perets comes. As it is said, “These are the generations of Perets,” written fully, because of six things that returned: his radiance, etc., and the luminaries. Whence the luminaries?

"The moon's light shall be like the sun's light."

Yad Yehudah - ד

"By Him Who is awesome in His dealings": through His awesome dealings, the blessed LORD brought the matter and cause about at the time of the accusation, knowing that afterward, through Adam, it would pass into actuality.

Yad Yehudah - ה

Everything expounded concerning the moon is true. Midrash Rabbah, which holds that the luminaries were impaired through man's sin, and the other midrashim, which say the moon was diminished because of its accusation, do not disagree. As we said: through the accusation it diminished in potentiality, and through man's sin in actuality.

Yad Yehudah - ו

Behold [?], had we merited and Adam not sinned, we would have used the upper light created on the first day. The luminaries would have served only to measure the ordering of times by their course and movement, like those

we would continually have enjoyed the light above, and the two luminaries would have served us like clocks, solely to measure the ordering of times, for initially it is written, "Let them be for signs and appointed times." In anticipation of sin, however, they were also prepared to illuminate the earth. [TN200195]

It is known concerning transparent bodies that when their parts fold together and gather into one another, they thicken and their transparency diminishes, as Maimonides wrote in chapter 4 of the Foundations of the Torah. Since Scripture attests, and our Rabbis explain, that the light diminished through our sins, it is no wonder that this should follow from the actual gathering and shrinking of the luminaries' bodies, and the differing magnitudes of the luminaries, one relative to the other, greater or smaller. This is "the moon shall be abashed," for the present, in the sense of "Do not be humiliated, for you shall not be abashed," said of the land. Although it also says, "The sun shall be ashamed," the words are literal, for on its account the whole world was stricken. Yet it has left gleanings to give those who reckon by it their reward in this world.

timekeeping instruments called clocks, made with wheels. [TN200196]

Yad Yehudah - ז

For initially it is written, "Let them be for signs and appointed times, and for days and years"; afterward, "Let them be for luminaries." This shows that initially they existed and were created only for counting appointed times, days, and years. Afterward, foreseeing Adam's sin, He also prepared them to illuminate.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Since Scripture attests": for example, "Their light is withheld from the wicked," and "The moon's light shall be like the sun's light," etc., which our Sages brought as evidence of the light's diminution.

Yad Yehudah - ט

Their shrinking through the gathering of the parts.

Yad Yehudah - י

"The differing magnitudes of the luminaries": the light's diminution also followed from the changed sizes of the two luminaries. Since the moon's diminution was decreed in potentiality from the time of its accusation, afterward, at man's sin, its actual diminution was greater than the sun's. Otherwise, the moon would have lost nothing through its accusation. This too occurred through the moon's body gathering together and constricting its parts more than the sun's body.

Yad Yehudah - יא

This is the meaning of Scripture's "The moon shall be abashed and the sun ashamed, for the LORD of Hosts reigns in Jerusalem," etc. (Isaiah 24). Ve-haferah essentially concerns digging in the ground, and from this is also said of shame, as though the ashamed person digs a hole to hide in temporarily until the time of shame passes. The moon dug and contracted itself and gathered in its light in this world, but in the future the moon's light will be like

the sun's light. [TN200197]

Yad Yehudah - יב

In the sense of "Do not be humiliated, for you shall not be abashed" (there, chapter 54), said of the holy land, which will expand in the future in place of its present deficiency, having constricted its parts and confined its boundaries.

Yad Yehudah - יג

Although it also says there, "The sun shall be ashamed," the commentators explain the words literally: it will be ashamed in the future, when the LORD of Hosts reigns in Jerusalem, because the whole world was stricken on its account, namely because they worshipped it as an idol. The difficulty is that according to the stated reason it ought also to have said "the sun shall be abashed," since it too has somewhat [?] drawn in its light. [TN200198]

Yad Yehudah - יד

"Yet it has left," etc.: this is why it did not say "the sun shall be abashed": it will not be ashamed in this world. Since the reward of those nations who merely reckon by it without worshipping it is in this world, it ought not to be ashamed until the future, when the whole world will be stricken because of idolatry. To indicate this, it did not say ve-haferah, which signifies only temporarily. The moon is different: the reward of Israel, who reckon by it, is only in the future, not in this world. Correspondingly, its shame is only in this world, because of the smallness of its light. Therefore it says ve-haferah of it.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Like clocks," etc.: its meaning is a dial/hand [?] (veyger) in German. "The whole world was stricken," etc.: when the sun is eclipsed, it is a bad sign for the world. "Those who reckon by it": the nations of the world, who reckon by the sun. For there is none over against the sun's produce; nevertheless, it left its gleanings for those who reckon by it, etc. The moon, however, was abashed altogether; therefore its light will be great in the future. Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"All the more now," etc., continues what was said at the preceding section's end concerning "The moon shall be abashed." The master says that because the righteous are called by its name, as the Holy One, blessed be He, answered to appease it, and they too are the small ones of the earth, afflicted and crushed in this world, the moon will therefore be all the more ashamed in this world.

Rema of Fano

All the more now, when the righteous are called by the small luminary's name. It is known what they answered the Sadducees at the end of tractate Yadayim: everything's impurity accords with how beloved it is. Ben Uzziel has already explained in three passages of the Prophets the luminaries' return to their former state: the sun's restoration will be three hundred and forty-three for one, the multiplication of sevens in length, breadth, and depth, in the sense of "The sun's light shall be sevenfold," when it returns to its first strength. A

Yad Yehudah - ב

Everything's impurity accords with how beloved it is. Therefore the righteous' sufferings in this world accord with how beloved they are.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"In three passages": first, "Those who love Him are like the sun going forth in its might" (Judges 6); second, "Like morning light when the sun rises" (2 Samuel 23); third, "The moon's light shall be like the sun's light, and the sun's light shall be sevenfold, like the light of the seven days" (Isaiah 30). The translator Jonathan wrote: "The sun's light is destined to shine three hundred and forty-three for one, like the light of the seven days." [TN200201]

Yad Yehudah - ד

"The multiplication of sevens": when we multiply seven by two further sevens, the length, breadth, and depth, so that hint appears in Proverbs: "They do not despise a thief," and "When found, he shall repay sevenfold." This concerns Adam's sin, stealing from the Tree of Knowledge and paying from the best, as stated. According to what is reported concerning the folding of the Land of Israel at this time within its boundaries, which we mentioned, it is very close to maintaining this proportion. What we have said suffices for the present intention. [TN200200]

each is seven, we obtain 343. Seven by seven in length and breadth is forty-nine; the seven of depth resting upon those two dimensions makes seven times forty-nine, which is 343. Our Sages gave a similar case in the mishnah, chapter 3 of Shevi'it, concerning three courses—three by three, and three in height—whose quantity is twenty-seven stones.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"In the sense of 'The sun's light,'" etc.: this is the explanation of "The sun's light shall be sevenfold": multiplication of sevens in all three dimensions. Then it will be in its first strength, as in the seven days of creation when the great light served, as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, chapters 11 and 12. This is "like the light of the seven days." There is no need for Rashi's explanation: "Sevenfold, seven sevens; like the light of the seven days, thus forty-nine sevens, totaling 343." It appears that in his view Jonathan derives 343 from sevenfold, meaning seven by seven, forty-nine, and from "like the light of the seven days," meaning seven times forty-nine. The master finds this strained and prefers to explain "like the light of the seven days" literally, deriving 343 from sevenfold alone.

Yad Yehudah - ו

A hint appears in Scripture's "They do not despise a thief," etc. (Proverbs 6): they should not despise Adam the first man for stealing and eating from the Tree of Knowledge, thereby causing the light's diminution, as mentioned in the preceding section. For he will repay sevenfold in the future, when the sun's light will be sevenfold. Thus the entire repayment is derived from the word sevenfold.

Yad Yehudah - ז

According to what is reported by those knowledgeable in geographical measurement

concerning the Land of Israel's size now, after it folded up and its boundaries drew near, as mentioned in the preceding section, the matter is close to that proportion. You will find that in its tranquility the Land of Israel was nearly 343 times larger. May it return and expand beyond sufficiency, speedily in our days, amen.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"According to how beloved it is," etc.: therefore the righteous and the moon, which have no light at all in this world and diminish, will merit the abundant good stored away. "The luminaries' return," etc.: in the future the luminaries will return to their initial state and will be 343 parts for one. For it is written, "It shall be sevenfold": seven times seven is forty-nine, and seven times forty-nine is 343. We calculate seven times forty-nine, not forty-nine times forty-nine, because this follows multiplication in length, breadth, and depth in the form of a cube.

Something truly square, seven by seven, yields forty-nine pieces when divided into strips, each one cubit by one cubit, for example. When you make it seven in height as well, it will contain seven times forty-nine pieces, altogether 343. This is easy. "And he paid from the best, as stated," etc.: through Adam's sin the sun was diminished. Therefore he will repay sevenfold, like the light of the seven days, as in the case of a thief.

Therefore a spirit from them extends below, and that spirit takes form below in the animals. When a person brings an animal as a sacrifice, the

Rema of Fano

It is known from the expression "My offering, My bread, for My fire-offerings" that the mystery of the sacrifices is the appeasement of the retinue above and below, so that all may enjoy the King's table. Even the burnt offering, which is wholly consumed for the ishshim, provides its hide to the priests; of the sin-offering goat, its blood and sacrificial portions go to the altar, while its flesh and hide go to the priests. [TN240001]

From this we have learned a true plain meaning, sweet to the soul and clear as the sun, in the verse addressed to Eli: "You honor your sons more than Me, to fatten yourselves from the first of every offering of Israel, for My people." The commentators have said that the lamed is superfluous. This is not so: it is like the lamed in "for My fire-offerings." Here too, "for My people" includes all who benefit from the offering: the ishshim receive their portion, and the priests theirs, which is the remainder of the offering, not its first portion. This is plain.

Alternatively, "for My people" means "before the eyes of My people": when they see that the priests' claim is stronger than the altar's, they will say, "The LORD's table is despised." Or it may mean "from the first of every offering of Israel" brought for the needs of "My

"And those below": groups of priests. [TN240003]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"The lamed" of le-ammi, "for My people," is superfluous; "and I have drawn a comparison with their like" [?], as in "they killed Abner" (le-Avner). "Rather, it is like the lamed of le-ishshai": the meaning is that the sacrifice is for My fire-offerings. So too

You showed My people that you are more honored than I. How did you show this? 'By fattening yourselves from the first of My offering.'" R.Y. also wrote something close to this. [TN240006]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Brought for the needs of His people": this is the offering of a woman after childbirth, purifying her for her husband for the sake of the souls, so that they may come into the world; they are the Holy One's people, blessed be He. Eli's sons ate their portions of those offerings first, before offering them, and thereby delayed the bird-offerings. This is what the blessed LORD said about them: "To fatten yourselves from the first," etc.

Yad Yehudah - י

"With the King": the souls dwelt with the King of the world in the work of heaven, as stated in the Midrash. They are those destined to be created, each at its proper time; Eli's sons held them back.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"As our Sages say": in the chapter "Bammeh behemah," on the verse "who lay with the women": because they delayed the women's bird-offerings so that they did not go to their husbands, Scripture reckons it against them as though they had lain with them.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"You honor your sons," etc.: this is the verse concerning Eli's sons, because they took meat before offering the fat and blood to the Most High.

"'For My people,' concerning which they said the lamed is superfluous," etc.: the lamed of le-ammi. It is not so—that the lamed was superfluous—but rather, etc. This means Israel's offering belonging to My people, for My people too benefit from it. Included in My people are the ishshim, that is, the angels. Ishshim is an expression for honored beings, like "To you, O men, I call," etc. The priests also benefit from it, but the priest benefits only from the remainder left from the portion of the Most High, not the first portion. They did the reverse and benefited from its first portion; hence, "To fatten yourselves from the first of the offering of Israel."

"For the needs of My people," etc.: the offering comes to purify a woman for her husband through the bird-offerings, so that the women may immediately return to their husbands, who will take them and beget the people of the children of Israel. By delaying the women's bird-offerings, Eli's sons diminished their procreation and diminished peoples.

"They are His people and inheritance": this is "for My people," meaning for the sake of My people who will come forth from them.

Yad Yehudah - א

“Of what is set aside,” etc.: in the preceding section, the master explained Eli's sons' sin in eating the first portion of the sacrifice rather than the remainder. Now, along that same line, he explains the remainder and what is set aside from the sacrifices for the priests to eat.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“It is said”: concerning the meat of the consecration offerings.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“The Sages said”: in Pesahim, chapter “Ha-ishshah,” folio 59b.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Along with this”: with the priests’ eating, he returns to say that fulfillment of this commandment comes to teach concerning the owners, that they receive atonement through the priests’ eating; yet it is found learning that the priests eat through the owners’ receiving atonement. For after the upper camps have benefited from the sacrifice and become advocates, the priests below eat and recline at the table of the Most High, as explained in the preceding section. [TN240009]

Rema of Fano

Of what is set aside from the sacrifices for the priests, it is said, “They shall eat those things through which atonement was made.” The Sages said: the priests eat and the owners obtain atonement. There is one rule for the sin-offerings of the community and of the individual.

The intention is that eating the sacrifices was for them a decree of the King, like putting on tefillin, applying blood, and burning the sacrificial portions upon the altar. Along with this, fulfillment of this commandment turns out to come to teach and be found learning: we think that their eating effects atonement for the owners, but it is only from the owners' receiving atonement that the devout among the priests eat. For they recline at the table of the Most High in a holy place, enjoying and being nourished by the radiance of the Shekhinah. [TN240007]

A blessing used to be sent at a time of favor in the distribution of their portions and in their eating to satiety, whether little or much reached each one. They used to mention with praise the Babylonians, whose appetite was good for the outer sin-offering goat of a Day of Atonement that fell on the eve of the Sabbath: they did not allow it to become leftover sacrificial meat, as we learned in Menahot, in the chapter “Shetei ha-lehem.” [TN240008]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“A blessing used to be sent”: in their eating, because they enjoyed the radiance of the Shekhinah.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“They used to mention with praise”: in the Mishnah, chapter “Shetei ha-lehem,” concerning the goat of a Day of Atonement that fell on the Sabbath, the Babylonians eat it raw because their appetite is good. That is, they did not recoil from eating raw meat. The master’s view is that mentioning them by name was with praise, because they intended to enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah, and there was no ravenousness in it at all —unlike Tosafot there, whose view is that this was to their blame; see there. [TN240010]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“From the owners' receiving atonement,” etc.: their atonement depends on a high place, namely Binah. From there is the source of the priests' eating, since they enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah. See Tiqqun ha-Teshuvah, chapter 8. These hidden sparks are the actual owners of that matter which is eaten, for sometimes through a person's sin he is reincarnated in an animal; they are called the owners of that living creature. Through the priests' eating they receive atonement and return to their root. Accordingly, the author's intention can also be explained by this mystery; examine it carefully. Of “In truth,” etc.: the master returns to explain the end of the account of the moon's accusation, at “He saw that her mind was not at ease.” He says that the reason her mind was not at ease was that, although the Holy One, blessed be He, told her, “The righteous will be called by your name,” nevertheless, “There is no righteous person on earth,” etc. Therefore, to put her mind at ease, He required them to bring atonement.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“As we said”: above, section 21, in explaining “Bring an offering on My account”: alai means “for My sake”—for the guarantee I gave the moon that you would be righteous, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“For He is the one who proclaims,” etc.: the guarantee is as He made known to all by saying, “Your people are all righteous.” For this reason He also urges Israel to

Rema of Fano

In truth, “There is no righteous person on earth who does good and does not sin.” Therefore, as a matter of course, we need atonement: “a sin-offering for the LORD,” as we said, for He is the one who proclaims through His prophet, “Your people are all righteous.” He is a guarantor who goes after the borrowers and urges them to repay on account of His guarantee. The word alai, “upon Me,” is therefore entirely precise: the atonement is for yourselves, while the obligation rests upon Me to atone for you, for “the LORD is the hope of Israel.” [TN240012]

Alai may also be interpreted according to the truth, in the sense of “Like a weaned child upon me is my soul,” for those who know the hidden wisdom. Alternatively, it is in the sense of “Borrow on My account, and I shall repay,” for trust itself brings about atonement for the moon's diminution through our deficiency. Or it means “for My sake”: bring an awakening from below sufficient to awaken above. This is the sense of “for His sake”—for His praise: He praises and is praised, above bring an offering for all their transgressions and sins, to release Him, as it were, from His guarantee.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“It is precise,” etc.: moreover, alai can be understood in this way: the obligation to atone rests upon Me, in order to uphold the guarantee to the moon.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“For the hope,” etc.: Scripture similarly says, “The LORD is the hope of Israel” (Jeremiah 16). Our Sages expounded in the Mishnah at the end of Yoma: just as a ritual pool purifies the impure, so the Holy One, blessed be He, purifies Israel. Their purification is thus assured in any event. [TN240016]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“The truth”: the intention is Binah, which is above he, as is known. [TN240017]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“In the sense”: of the verse “Like a weaned child upon me is my soul” (Psalm 131),

where alai also intends Binah according to the truth.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Alternatively": alai expresses trust, as in "Borrow on My account." The intention is: bring an offering and trust Me to atone for you.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"For trust itself": your trusting Me in this brings about atonement, for the moon was diminished because of our deficiency, and through this trust you will fill the deficiency.

Yad Yehudah - י

"Or it means": alai is like "for My sake," meaning bring an awakening from below, etc., as is known from many places in the Zohar: fitting deeds below produce an awakening above.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"This is the sense": of "The LORD has made everything for His sake" (Proverbs 16), meaning for His praise—the praise He utters above and the praise He receives below. This accords with what is known: through the Shekhinah's being praised below, she sings above. Both cause the blessed upper union to be effected.

Yad Yehudah - יב

"The harmony of the melody," etc.: the union in Tiferet and Malkhut, and likewise in Hokhmah and Binah, is the harmony of a melody of two voices, each

and below. The harmony of the melody in two voices truly "does wondrously." It is otherwise when the awakening below is absent; then it is said, "I, I am He who blots out your transgressions for My sake." "I" is in manifest providence; "I am He" is in hidden providence, as we mentioned above. Of them it is said, "It is the Day of Atonements," implying two. Hence, "Who blots out your transgressions for My sake," for even ancestral merit is insufficient unless those below who are still alive first awaken to repentance. [TN240013]

Likewise, "For My sake, for My sake, I shall act": they oblige Him to harmonize the melody within Himself alone, for how should it be profaned, Heaven forbid? Hezekiah said, "Behold, for peace I had bitterness, bitterness." The bitterness is doubled because he was told, "I shall defend this city to save it for My sake"—for the generation has no protecting merit—"and for the sake of My servant David," in the sense of "the dead inherit the living," which we explained in the treatise Heqor Din. So too, "I praised the dead," in Ecclesiastes. [TN240014]

The first bitterness concerned him generally; therefore he first said mar li, "bitter for me," because the blessed God would have to awaken first, as it says, "For My sake." The second bitterness, li mar, "for me, bitter," concerned him personally: even at the end, merit would not be reckoned to him but to David his ancestor. This was because he relied upon his own merit, so they made it depend upon others' merit, as our Sages speaking and singing. The awakening from below harmonizes and unifies the melody; this is a wonder. See Heqor Din I.4.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"It is otherwise when the awakening below is absent": then the awakening must come from above, from within itself; of this it is said, "I," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"'I' means": as the Sages explained in Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 30, on "I, I am He who comforts you": "I—the upper Mother above; I—the lower Mother below. Of both it is said, 'See now that I, I am He'"; see there. Here too, "I" in manifest providence is Malkhut; "I am He" in hidden providence is Binah.

Yad Yehudah - טו

"Of them it is said," etc.: as in the Zohar, Emor, page 218: "Come and see: on that day the moon is concealed and does not shine until the tenth of the month, when all Israel return in complete repentance. The upper Mother loves and illumines her. On that day she receives everything from the Mother, and joy is found in all. Therefore it is written, 'Day of Atonements.' It is a day; it should say 'atonement.' Why 'Day of Atonements'? Because two lights shine together: the upper lamp illumines the lower lamp," etc.; see there. The intention is Binah and Malkhut.

"Hence," etc.: likewise, in the Zohar, Lekh Lekha, page 241: "Another explanation: 'Who blots out your transgressions for My sake.' Come and see: the world's sinners cause a blemish above. When they sin, mercy and the upper illumination depart, and the nourishment of blessings does not descend below. This degree does not receive the blessings above that it conveys as nourishment below. Therefore, 'for My sake,' so that blessings will not be withheld from nourishing it."

Yad Yehudah - טז

In the manner of "See now that I, I am He," to show that there is no separation between above and below, as has been said.

Yad Yehudah - יז

Likewise, "For My sake, for My sake, I shall act" (Isaiah 48) also means that if there is no awakening below—Heaven forbid!—I shall act to awaken the union for My sake, as it were—Heaven forbid!—and so that blessings will not be withheld, as mentioned. [TN240018]

Yad Yehudah - יח

"Hezekiah said, 'Behold, for peace I had bitterness, bitterness'" (Isaiah 39): this too intends the manner just described. The doubling of bitterness—his saying mar, "bitter," twice—is because he was told, "I shall defend this city to save it for My sake and for the sake of My servant David" (there, chapter 37, and 2 Kings 19). "For My sake" excludes the merit of the generation, since the generation has no protecting merit. The subsequent "for the sake of My servant David" means Hezekiah's merit reckoned to David, according to "a son confers merit on his father" and "the dead inherit the living," explained in Heqor Din II.29; see there.

Corresponding to both, Hezekiah doubled the bitternesses. For "for My sake," he said mar li, "bitter for me," since he saw no one protecting the generation. Because this concerned him generally and not personally more than anyone else, he said mar first and li afterward. For "for the sake of My servant David," he said mar a second time; the preceding li extends to it as well, because this concerned him personally. [TN240019]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"As our Sages say": in the first chapter of Berakhot.

Yad Yehudah - כ

"It may also be interpreted": "Bring atonement alai," meaning "upon My head." This is the purpose of the sacrifices: to make from them a crown for His blessed head. There is evidence from prayers, which stand in place of sacrifice: our Sages said in the chapter "Ein doreshin" that crowns are made from them; all the more from the sacrifices themselves.

Yad Yehudah - כא

"In the sense": of "Do I eat the flesh of mighty bulls," etc. (Psalm 49). My intention in them is only to make a crown. The LORD desires the crowning because He spoke and commanded, and His will was done. As the Sages said concerning "a pleasing savor": "It is satisfaction before Me that I spoke and His will was done." [TN240020]

Yoel Moshe - 1

"There is no righteous person on earth," etc.: therefore the moon's mind was not put at ease when He told her, "The righteous are called by your name," for the righteous sin. Therefore He said, "Bring atonement on My account," and through the sacrifice the sin is atoned for. It is called "a sin-offering for the LORD," because the Holy One, blessed be He, guarantees that all will be righteous. Atonement for the righteous person's sin repays the Holy One's debt, blessed be He. This is alai, referring to the guarantee, not the atonement; the blessed LORD Himself, as it were, needs no atonement.

"In the sense of 'Like a weaned child upon me is my soul,'" etc.: this can be explained according to the Zohar, Miqqets, page 530, on "He raised the height of a person within him." As soon as a person is formed, the upper light of his soul is beside him as surrounding light, for the body is small and it cannot spread within until he grows; then the light spreads within as inner light. It is known that the deeds of the wicked also cause inner light to become surrounding light, as above in Heqor Din II.13.

Therefore, “The wicked will be silent in darkness” corresponds to surrounding light, as explained by the Ari, of blessed memory. This is what David said: “Like a weaned child upon me”—precisely “upon me”: my soul is in the mystery of surrounding light through sin. Likewise, here He says alai, “upon Me,” atonement: through sin you caused the moon's diminution, and it became surrounding light, literally upon Me. [TN240021]

“For trust,” etc.: alai would mean that it rests upon Me to atone, through the atonement you bring.

“For His sake,” etc.: in the verse, “The LORD has made everything for His sake,” meaning for His praise. It is known that everything depends on awakening from below. When Israel are worthy, they awaken and effect a union above between Tiferet and Malkhut. Afterward, through this power, Tiferet and Malkhut also act above in Father and Mother. Thus Tiferet and Malkhut receive praise from below and afterward give praise above, effecting the union above in Father and Mother, as stated. This is “Bring an awakening from below sufficient for an awakening above,” through Tiferet.

There is another degree: when Israel are unworthy and there is no awakening below, there is nevertheless union above, for the companions above do not separate. This is “I [anokhi]”—manifest providence, Malkhut in union with Tiferet—and “I [anokhi]”—hidden providence, the upper union. [TN310001]

“Who blots out your transgressions for My sake”: for His praise, for I Myself awaken the union. Of this it is written in Tiqqunim, Tiqqun 30: “‘I, I am He who comforts you’—the upper I, the lower I,” etc.; see there.

Historical index: Em Kol Hai - I - Chapter 28

“Day of Atonements”: a plural expression, two: one in Binah, the upper union, and one in Tiferet and Malkhut, the lower union. If you should say that even when they are unworthy there is an awakening through ancestral merit, he answers that even ancestral merit has ended. This is the meaning of “Bring atonement on My account,” etc. Alai would mean “for My sake,” for His praise: let them bring atonement on My account, for My sake—awakening below, as above.

“The harmony of the melody,” etc.: this is explained in the Zohar, Yitro, page 165, at its end: “Similarly, the melody of the whole world—worthy deeds,” etc. That is, their good deeds are called a melody. “In two voices” means two unions effected through good deeds. [TN240022]

“How should it be profaned,” etc.: how should they cease? Rather, they never separate, as above. The doubling of bitterness is as described. The first bitterness, mar li, concerns Hezekiah together with all Israel: “for My sake,” not through the generation's merit, but the union above awakens of itself. The second bitterness, li mar—the word li referring both backward and forward—is that he was told, “For the sake of My servant David,” not through your merit, as you relied upon your own merit, but for the sake of My servant David. This is the second bitterness.

“It is only,” etc.: the end of the sacrifices is that from them a crown is made for the head of the Holy One, blessed be He, who spoke and whose will was done. Thus precisely alai: a crown upon His head, as it were, through atonement, which is the end of the sacrifice.

Em Kol Hai - Part I (א) - Chapter 29 (כט)

Yad Yehudah: טו · יד · יג · יב · יא · י · ט · ח · ז · ו · ה · ד · ג · ב · א

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

"This is the meaning," etc.: this continues the end of the preceding section. Just as the LORD desires burnt offerings only because a crown is fashioned from them for His head, for such is His will, so it is with prayers. The blessed LORD does not need them in order to be affected by them, as a human being might imagine. Their intention is to bind crowns for the head of the Life of the Worlds, for prayers stand in place of sacrifices. We therefore have no need of the strained explanations commentators have offered for prayer.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"The prince must," etc.: he must delay binding crowns until the poor person, who prolongs his prayer, finishes. As stated in Ra'aya Mehemna, Eqev, page 583, concerning the wrapping mentioned with regard to the cup: "Wrapping: 'A prayer of the poor when he delays'—all blessings and prayers wrap themselves until the poor person's prayer ascends." [TN240026]

In the Zohar, Balaq, page 359, part III: "'A prayer of the poor,' etc.: the poor person is brokenhearted, and it is written, 'The LORD is near to the

Rema of Fano

This is the meaning of binding crowns from prayers, attributed in the aggadah to the Prince of the Presence. He must wait for the prayer of the poor person who prolongs the pouring out of his complaint. At the beginning of his words before the LORD, the poor person apologizes for having caused the binding to be delayed through his deeds—and all the more now. This is "A prayer of the poor when he delays." [TN240023]

The one who binds is called Prince of the Presence because he increases the dominion according to the measure of the faces of those who pray. Some know how to pray only at the level of nefesh; another prince binds crowns from all prayers of this kind, and his name is Sandalfon. Others pray at the level of ruah, and they have a prince greater than the first, as we shall mention. Of these two degrees it is said, "Many daughters have done valiantly." Of neshamah and her companions who pray at her level, it is written, "But you surpass them all." [TN240024]

For them there is a great, exceedingly awesome prince, the redeeming angel whom Jacob mentioned, with whom evil does not dwell, according to one of the interpretations spoken in truth. Jacob sought mercy on his behalf, that he be given permission to bless the youths—the princes we mentioned first. Of them Moses said to Pharaoh, "With our youths"—two—"and with our elder"— brokenhearted,' etc. The poor person always makes a quarrel with the Holy One, blessed be He, and the Holy One, blessed be He, listens and hears his words. When he prays his prayer, he opens all the windows of the heavens, and that poor, brokenhearted person pushes aside all the other prayers ascending above. For it is written, 'A prayer of the poor when he delays.' It should say, 'when he wraps himself.' What is 'when he delays'? He causes a wrapping for all the world's prayers, and they do not enter until his prayer enters. The Holy One, blessed be He, says, 'Let all the prayers be wrapped, and let this prayer enter before Me. I do not want a court here to judge between us; let his complaints be before Me, and I and he alone.' The Holy One, blessed be He, is alone with those complaints in that prayer, as it is written, 'Before the LORD he pours out his complaint'—before the LORD indeed," etc.; see there. It explains ya'atof as delay, like "when the sheep were late-bearing."

Yad Yehudah - ג

"At the beginning of his words," etc.: this is "A prayer of the poor when he delays." When he prolongs his prayer, his heart trembles over this too, and he first prays concerning it. “Before the LORD”—because he caused Him a delay in binding —“he pours out his complaint” about this. This explanation differs somewhat in manner from the Zohar's explanation just cited.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“And all the more now”: when he further delays the binding by prolonging his prayer.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Some,” etc.: in Tiqqunim: from the side of the masters of Scripture, prayer rises like a bird; from the side of the masters of Mishnah, like a dove; from the side of the masters of Kabbalah, like an eagle, the Matron above all. The intention is the degrees nefesh, ruah, neshamah.

one—“we shall go.” For in accurate books the first is written with a yod, the second without a yod. May the LORD's name be called upon all three through Jacob's merit—this is “my name”—and through his ancestors' merit, as the verse concludes. This completes the upper Chariot, as is known from the Sages' saying, “The patriarchs are the Chariot.” The hint is in the Masorah: ve-tahat occurs twice, “And because He loved your fathers,” and “And beneath the firmament their wings were straight.” [TN240025]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“His name is Sandalfon”: as stated in the chapter “Ein doreshin.” He is appointed over souls called birds, as stated in Tiqqunim, for he is in the world of Asiyah, where souls are at the aspect of nefesh.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“They have another prince”: Metatron, Prince of the Presence, who is in the world of Yetsirah and appointed over souls called dove, at the aspect of ruah.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“As we shall mention”: in the next section.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Her companions”: these are yehidah and hayyah.

Yad Yehudah - י

“They have a great prince”: his name is Akatriel, in the world of Beriah, where the aspect of neshamah is.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Evil does not dwell with him”: in Sandalfon's world of Asiyah, shells are numerous; in Metatron's world of Yetsirah, there is good and evil. It is otherwise with Akatriel in the world of Beriah, where there is no evil at all, as is known. Therefore Jacob said concerning him, “The angel who redeems me from all evil,” for his is the right of redemption, to redeem from all evil.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Not the interpretations” [?]: as stated there in the Zohar, page 483: “Come and see: the Holy One, blessed be He, made below in the likeness of above. The cherubim's form was like the appearance of youths, and they stood beneath this place, on the right and left. They are blessed first from the blessing flowing from above and from that place, and from here blessings would flow below. Therefore it is written, ‘The angel who redeems me,’ who would receive blessings from the colors above. Once he receives, ‘may he bless the youths’: this is the mystery of the cherubim, from whom blessings would flow from above below.” The intention is clear, as the master wrote: the redeeming angel is Akatriel, and the youths are the two princes mentioned, the upper cherubim. [TN240027]

Yad Yehudah - יג

“That he be given permission”: to receive blessings, give them to the youths, and draw the blessings below.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“With our youths and with our elder we shall go”: “with our youths” is written plene, with a yod, in the plural, intending the two princes, the two upper cherubim called youths. “With our elder” is written defectively, without a yod, in the singular, hinting at Akatriel, called elder.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“May it be called upon all three”: the end of the verse, “May my name and the name of my fathers be called upon them,” means: may the LORD's name, which I and my fathers always call, be called upon these three degrees. The intention is that the Name add influx to them to receive blessings above through my merit and my fathers' merit.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“From prayers,” etc.: they stand in place of sacrifice during the destruction. The Prince of the Presence is Sandalfon, as below, who binds crowns for his Master from Israel's prayers.

“At the beginning of his words,” etc.: the poor person's beginning is “when he delays.” This itself is the statement “a prayer ... when he delays”: an expression of delay, for he causes the binding to be delayed through his deeds and therefore apologizes before Him, blessed be He. See Ra'aya Mehemna, Eqev, page—page 502, concerning wrapping: all prayers and blessings are wrapped until the poor person's prayer ascends. See also the Zohar, Balaq, page 359, at its end. As for “and all the more now,” in my view it means “he has done two [things] to Him”: he delays his prayer and delays the binding of the crown, and all the more now, when he comes to prolong his prayer and pours out his complaint. He must therefore pray about this first. Ya'atof also hints at wrapping the Holy One, blessed be He, in the crown made from their prayers. [TN240028]

“Sandalfon”: he corresponds to nefesh in the world of Asiyah. Do not wonder that Sandalfon is called Prince of the Presence when he is in the world of Asiyah, at the mystery of the backs. One may answer that on the side called sandal he is in Asiyah; on the side called fon he is called Prince of the Presence.

“Another prince greater than the first”: this is Metatron, S.H. Sandalfon is in the world of Asiyah on the side of nefesh, and Metatron in Yetsirah, ruah. [TN240029] hayyah pray at this level; it has one great and awesome prince, named Akatriel, in the world of Beriah, where there is no evil thing in the world. He is “the angel who redeems,” etc., “from all evil.”

“Of neshamah and her companions”: yehidah and

“According to one of the interpretations spoken,” etc.: that angel, Akatriel, will bless the youths, the two angels we mentioned, Sandalfon and Metatron. The youths refer to the mystery of schoolchildren, and the elder is Akatriel in Beriah, explained by Galante on the verse “The elders of the daughter of Zion”; see there.

“‘With our youths’—two”: Sandalfon and Metatron. “‘With our elder’—one”: a singular expression without a yod, hinting at Akatriel.

“May it be called upon all three,” etc.: this explains the end of the verse, “May my name and the name of my fathers be called upon them,” etc.

“Through Jacob's merit,” etc.: it is explained in Pelah ha-Rimmon, folio 35b, “P.D., T.D.” [?]: “Hesed is primary in Beriah, a world entirely good, corresponding to Abraham. Mercy is in Yetsirah, for the Holy One, blessed be He—that is Tiferet—dwells there, corresponding to Jacob. Judgment is in the world of Asiyah.” Therefore he mentioned the merit of his fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, corresponding to the three worlds mentioned, Beriah, Yetsirah, Asiyah. He further explained: after the patriarchs repaired the first Adam's sin, Abraham repaired nefesh, Isaac ruah, and Jacob neshamah. [TN240030]

“‘And because He loved,’” etc.: therefore, “‘beneath the firmament,’” etc.: they themselves are the Chariot. [TN240031]

"In the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter 'Hayah qore'": "Rabbi Hiyya the Elder said: 'In all my days I never concentrated, except that once I wished to concentrate, and I reflected in my heart and said: Who should enter before the king first, the alqafta or the exilarch?' Samuel said: 'I counted fledglings.' Rabbi Bun said: 'I counted courses of masonry.' Rabbi Mattanyah—some say Rav Sheshet—said: 'I am grateful to my head, for when it came to Modim, it bowed of itself.'"

Certainly this account should not be understood literally, since these things are very improper for anyone, all the more for men of renown like these, as the author of the Aqedah wrote in gate 28; see there. The master explains alqafta as a designation for Akatriel, who raises the thought and proper intention of prayer before Him, blessed be He, since he is in the world of Beriah, where thought is. Exilarch is a designation for Metatron, in whom the Shekhinah clothes herself with us in exile. He is therefore also called "son of Yered," as stated in the Zohar, Va-yehi, page 471. He raises the prayer only

The title Prince of the Presence which we mentioned has other interpretations belonging to the hidden depths of the world; the explanation we gave is one of them, true and consonant with the plain sense. This is what Rabbi Hiyya the Great intended in the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter "Hayah qore," when he reflected in prayer: "Who enters before the king first: the alqafta"—this is Akatriel, the most honored of the three—"or the exilarch?" This is Metatron, called "son of Yered" after the descent into exile, as is known. He said that this was his principal intention: to discern whether speech or thought and proper intention predominated in his prayer. He was careful not to direct his attention beyond this, for he was concerned lest he engage in scrutiny of prayer. [TN240032]

Rabbi Bun counted courses of masonry: these are the corners of the halakhah through which prayer is accepted. Samuel counted fledglings: these are the companies of angels that raise it on their wings. Another expressed gratitude to his head, which bowed of itself upon reaching Modim, to draw down an influx full of favor without toil or effort. [TN240033]

The adornments of prayer that we mentioned are called ketarim, not atarot, for an atarah has an aspect of the back, while a keter is entirely toward the face. The nezer, which is a testimony for the kings of the house of David, is so named to the degree of hearing, since he is in the world of Yetsirah, where speech is. Rabbi Hiyya was pondering which of these princes raised his prayer—that is, whether speech or thought predominated in it.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"He was careful not to direct his attention beyond this": not to reach the point of knowing for certain that intention predominated in his prayer, for he was concerned about scrutiny of prayer, which the Sages prohibited.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Rabbi Bun": he directed his attention to the ways and paths along which prayer travels above, as stated in the Zohar, Va-yaqhel, page 324. So too, dimosiyyin are rows and steps of prayer ascending to the house of God.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Samuel": he directed his attention to the angels receiving the prayer, as stated in the Zohar there. Fledglings designate the winged ministering angels.

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Another," who said, "I am grateful," etc.: he did not mean that he lacked intention in his prayer, Heaven forbid, for we hold that one who prays must direct his heart. Rather, he meant that he was trained to bow his head of itself in order to draw down the influx abundantly.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“The adornments,” etc.: incidentally, the master gives a favorable explanation for the title Prince of the Presence. He says that an atarah must be distinguished from a keter: an atarah surrounds the entire head, front and back, whereas a keter is only on the side of the face. Therefore the adornments of prayers mentioned above are called ketarim, since they have no side of the back. It is thus fitting to call the one who binds them Prince of the Presence.

for the slope of the crown of the head, the beginning of knowledge, above the place of tefillin, where it begins to separate toward the nape. This is the junction of the skull bones known to anatomists as the coronal suture and to Rabbi Simeon ben Yohai, at the beginning of Mishpatim, as the projections of the skull. This is the place of testing for one who is fit for it to suit him, as is known. This is not the place to explain further. [TN240034]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“The nezer”: he further explains the name nezer incidentally.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Which is a testimony,” etc.: as stated in the third chapter of Avodah Zarah, folio 44: “‘He placed upon him the nezer and the testimony.’ Nezer is a crown. ‘Testimony’: Rav Judah said in Rav's name, ‘It is testimony for the house of David: it fits whoever is fit for kingship, and it does not fit whoever is unfit for kingship.’”

Yad Yehudah - ט

“For the beginning of knowledge”: opposite it in the brain is the place of intellect, according to what most natural philosophers and physicians wrote.

Yad Yehudah - י

“Above the place of tefillin”: as stated there of David, that he placed it in the place of tefillin and it fit him. They objected: did he not need to put on tefillin? Rabbi Samuel son of Rav Isaac said: there is room on the head suitable for placing two sets of tefillin.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Where it begins to separate”: and turn backward toward the nape. He explains nezer through nazir, set apart.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“This is the junction,” etc.: this is where an infant's brain is soft, and it is the place of tefillin.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“The place of testing”: for kingship, as mentioned.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Of the three,” etc.: the three mentioned in the preceding section—Sandalfon, Metatron, and Akatriel. Akatriel is more honored than the other two.

“After the descent into exile”: the Shekhinah who is with us in exile is so through clothing herself in Metatron; therefore she descends. It is explained in the Zohar, Va-yehi, page 471: “But tiq [?], son of Yered, from the side of what we learned: the Shekhinah descended ten descents to the earth; the companions have explained all.” Therefore he is called exilarch. [TN240035]

“That this was his principal intention,” etc.: Rabbi Hiyya the Great, who said, “Who enters before the king first, the alqafta or the exilarch?” sought to discern whether speech predominated in his prayer —corresponding to Sandalfon in the world of Asiyah—or thought, corresponding to Metatron in Yetsirah, or intention, corresponding to Akatriel in Beriah. [TN240036]

“Rabbi Bun counted courses of masonry”: the beams of the house during prayer. He also spoke proudly of this with a mystical intention, not in the plain sense.

“Another expressed gratitude,” etc.: another tanna spoke proudly that upon reaching Modim his head bent of itself, to draw down an influx of favor, etc.

There are three things: keter, nezer, atarah. Keter includes Hokhmah, Binah, Da'at. From the side of Hokhmah, which is the face, it is called keter; the analogy is that the part of an atarah toward the face is called keter. Atarah is Binah, on the side of the back: a term for surrounding, encompassing the entire head. Nezer designates the slope of the crown of his head. It is in the middle of the head, above the place where tefillin are laid. In that nezer there was one projecting prominence; for the kingship of the house of David, there was a place within the crown of the head, and the nezer entered it. This was a “Each,” etc.: we also find Princes of the Presence with other names, such as Suriel, Prince of the Presence, in the seventh chapter of Berakhot. This does not mean that there are more than the three mentioned; rather, their names change according to their mission.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“One holy name”: as stated in Daniel 8, “I heard one holy one speaking.” It encompasses all three. Upon it the liturgical poet founded, in the Qedushah of Musaf on the Day of Atonement, “A seraph gives the designation ‘one holy one,’” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“These, then,” etc.: the Sages' statement is known: whoever asks for his needs

Rema of Fano

We have thus learned that there are three Princes of the Presence, as we said. Each has changing names according to his mission and the character of his hour. One name encompasses all three when the Glory is crowned with them and says to Israel, “I am the LORD your God”; we explained it in its place.

These, then, are the ministering angels who attend to all prayers for the binding of crowns for their Master, and no others. They do not acknowledge the face of one who prays in Aramaic, even though Scripture has accorded it honor in Torah, Prophets, and Writings; all the more so other languages, which have not merited this. Do not object from the view of certain commentators who said that Tsafenat Pa'neah is an Egyptian word. It is Hebrew alone and compounded of two verbs: pa, signifying raising the voice, as in “Like a woman giving birth, I cry out”; and nah, in its plain meaning, rest. It means that when he raises his voice to disclose and make public what in Aramaic is not attended by the ministering angels, since the ministering angels do not acknowledge Aramaic. The master explains that this intends these three Princes of the Presence, who attend to prayers to bind crowns from them. They do not attend to one who prays in Aramaic and do not acknowledge his face.

“Do not acknowledge Aramaic” does not mean that they do not understand the language. That would be considered strange, Heaven forbid, concerning the separate intellects, as Tosafot in the first chapter of Shabbat and all the commentators wrote. Rather, Aramaic is so objectionable in their eyes that they take care neither of it nor of the person praying in it, to bind crowns from his prayer as they would if it were in the sacred tongue. The commentators wrote similarly; see the Aqedah, gate 28, which also explains acknowledge as attend to, like “Blessed be the one who took notice of you.” [TN240039]

The Gemara's objection there in the chapter “Ellu ne'emarin,” against the statement that the ministering angels do not acknowledge, comes from the teaching that Yohanan the high priest heard a voice in the Holy of Holies saying, “The youths who went to wage war in Antioch have been victorious.” It answers: if you wish, say that a heavenly voice is different, since it is made to be heard; or, if you wish, say it was Gabriel. This does not establish that the Gemara understands their not acknowledging is hidden, the hearer's mind is at ease with him. The sentence's connection is: he discloses hidden things with satisfaction, unlike Egypt's magicians, who interpreted, but not for Pharaoh, for their words were not pleasing. [TN240038]

We have learned that all languages except the sacred one alone, in which the world was created, are unworthy of being bound into the crown of the Life of the Worlds—unless the person praying is poor in knowledge and does not understand the sacred tongue. Let him pour out his complaint specifically before the LORD, who examines the inward parts and heart. Prayer in a foreign language with a broken and contrite heart gives Him greater satisfaction than prayer without intention, even in the sacred tongue. This is plain, since intention cannot be found without the heart's understanding of what a person utters.

Aramaic literally. Rather, its objection is: since the voice was in Aramaic, it follows that Aramaic is not repugnant in the ministering angels' eyes.

One may also say: granted that the questioner understood not acknowledging literally, as the ministering angels' not understanding Aramaic, nevertheless the Gemara gave these two answers only according to what had entered the questioner's mind. In truth, there is no difficulty at all: angels understand every language, but do not acknowledge, so as to attend to, a prayer not spoken in the sacred tongue.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Scripture has accorded it,” etc.: as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, Va-yetse.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“All the more”: one praying in other languages, inferior to Aramaic, of which nothing is found written in the Torah. This differs from the Rosh in the chapter “Hayah qore,” who holds that they attend to the other languages.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Do not object,” etc.: the master incidentally explains Tsafenat Pa'neah. Do not object against our general statement—“all the more other languages, which have not merited being written in the Torah”—that Tsafenat Pa'neah is Egyptian and is written in the Torah. In fact, it is a Hebrew word alone, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Pa, signifying,” etc.: as stated there in Bereshit Rabbah: “‘Tsafenat Pa'neah’: Rabbi Yohanan said, ‘He makes hidden things appear, and it is easy for him to say them.’ Rabbi Hezekiah said, ‘He makes hidden things appear with people's minds at ease concerning them.’”

Yad Yehudah - ט

“The hearer's mind is at ease with him”: as Rabbi Hezekiah explains. The intention is to exclude Egypt's magicians, who wished to disclose hidden things to Pharaoh but did not put his mind at ease, as the Sages said on “There was none who interpreted them for Pharaoh.”

Yad Yehudah - י

“Unless,” etc.: there, in the Mishnah of the chapter “Ve-ellu ne'emarin,” we say that prayer may be recited in any language. The Gemara objects from the statement that one should not ask for one's needs in Aramaic, and answers: one refers to an individual, the other to a congregation. An individual should not pray in Aramaic; a congregation may pray in any language. So the Rif ruled at the beginning of “Hayah qore.” The Rosh's view is that Aramaic alone is forbidden to an individual. See Tur and Shulhan Arukh, Orah Hayyim, section 101.

The master's view is that the rule that an individual should not pray in Aramaic applies when he knows and understands the sacred tongue. Someone lacking knowledge and understanding of the sacred tongue should pray in the language he understands, even though the ministering angels do not attend to him to bind crowns from his prayer. This is better for him than praying in the sacred tongue without knowledge and understanding.

Do not object: why, then, did the Gemara not answer that prayer in any language refers to someone who does not know the sacred tongue, whereas the rule against Aramaic refers to someone who does? One may answer that it gave a stronger answer: a congregation is permitted to pray in any language even if they understand the sacred tongue, since they do not need the ministering angels, as Rashi explained.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Poor in knowledge,” etc.: the master bases his view on “A prayer of the poor when he delays, and before the LORD he pours out his complaint.” One who is poor in knowledge of the sacred tongue should not worry whether ministering angels attend to his prayer in a foreign language. Instead, let him pour out his complaint before the LORD alone, without the ministering angels' assistance.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Even in the sacred tongue”: unlike the practice whereby women, children, and ordinary men among them pray in the sacred tongue, chirping without knowing what they chirp. They think that moving their lips in the sacred tongue is a good, desired, and accepted deed, while they do not know what deed they are doing. Of them it is said, “You are near in their mouths and far from their inward parts.” Moreover, they do not know how to read correctly and cannot attend to omissions, additions, and the other errors common in writing. How can reason require that they fulfill the obligation of prayer, and that such a prayer is pleasing in the eyes of God and His servants, who would attend to the one praying it solely for the language's excellence—

while he has corrupted the tongue to nothing, and it has fallen out of both sacred and profane speech[?]? [TN240040]

Do not object from Rabbi Aha's saying in the Midrash: even an ignorant person who reads love as enmity, such as ve-ahavta, “you shall love,” as ve-ayyavta, “you shall hate,” of whom the Holy One, blessed be He, says, “‘His banner over Me is love’—his skipping over Me is love.” This applies only after the fact. Even here Rabbi Aha did not say that they fulfill their obligation, only that their speech is nevertheless dear before Him, blessed be He, and He does not withhold the reward fitting for this—though not the reward for fulfilling a commandment. One may also say that Rabbi Aha speaks of the recitation of the Shema, as appears from the plain sense of his words, according to Rabbi, who holds that the Shema is to be recited as written; he does not speak of prayer, whose rule permits any language. [TN240041]

I concede that someone who understands his prayer, but is not fluent in it and inadvertently errs in reading, is also included in “his skipping over Me is love.” Such things sometimes happen not only to common people speaking together but also to great masters of expression. But of someone who cannot speak at all and is always compelled to skip, read incorrectly, and change the meaning, apply “Present it, then, to your governor,” etc. Likewise with liturgical poems difficult to understand: even the wise should apply their minds and understand them before praying them. The sage Ibn Ezra has already treated this at length in Ecclesiastes, on “For God is in heaven,” etc.; see there.

In any case, these words apply only to an individual praying for himself. As for a prayer leader who stands to pray for the whole congregation and to discharge the obligation of those who are not proficient: what simpleton would turn here to say that they discharge their obligation through him when he himself is not proficient? How can he dare approach God for his people and ask for their needs when he speaks empty words and does not know their nature? Nevertheless, I have seen a scandal in some congregations: when the leaders of the people assemble to appoint a prayer leader, they pay no attention to this at all, still less do they heed the other matters and conditions our Sages stated concerning him. They attend only to the roar of his voice—whether strong or weak—its trills, and other movements neither upright nor good. Enough of this now, for it is time to be brief even where one ought to write at great length.

Therefore, one who fears the word of the LORD should take to heart all that we have said truthfully, for the honor of the true God. If our predecessors, of blessed memory, established prayers in the sacred tongue so that it would not be forgotten by us, as the sage R.A. wrote in his Imrei Binah, chapter 26, part V, we should not observe the utterance of our lips alone; rather, let our mouth and heart agree. Whoever has his heart wholly with him should hire a teacher to teach him what he prays, so that his prayer may be pure before Him, blessed be He. Then he will call, and the LORD will answer him and redeem us from the exile of this host; then He will fill our mouth with laughter, and our tongue with joyful song[?], as above. [TN240042]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“One holy name,” etc.: explained in K.Y., part III, section 19: “The name T.Ph.T.Ph.Y.H. includes the letters of Beriah, Yetsirah, Asiyah, the three worlds: T.Ph., S.Ph., through the mystery of ‘May he bless the youths,’ as above in section 29—that is, in Yetsirah and Asiyah, Sandalfon and Metatron. Beriah is Y.H. of the Name, for the upper Mother dwells there.”

Thus the name T.Ph.T.Ph.Y.H. includes all three Princes of the Presence, in the manner that the companions above do not separate. Its numerical value is “I am the LORD your God,” which the author mentioned. “I” is Malkhut, Asiyah; the LORD is Yetsirah; “your God” is the upper Mother, Beriah. [TN240043]

“They do not acknowledge,” etc.: the mystery of binding crowns is that of combinations of names. From the letters of the sacred tongue in which we pray, they make holy names. This applies to no language but the sacred tongue.

“Even though Scripture has accorded it,” etc.: we find Aramaic in Torah, Prophets, and Writings: in the Torah, yegar sahaduta; in the Prophets, etc., as explained in the Gemara. Nevertheless, other languages did not merit having names made from them.

“An Egyptian word,” etc.: this would imply that even an Egyptian word is written in the Torah. In truth, this word is Hebrew alone, not Egyptian.

“Specifically before the LORD,” etc.: He understands Aramaic.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“All the other commandments”: for we hold that they do not require intention.

Yad Yehudah - ד

"Himself," etc.: the master thereby explains his view of the principle that commandments do not require intention. It comes from the Gemara at the beginning of "Ra'uhu bet din," folio 28, where we learn concerning Rava: one who blows for music has fulfilled the obligation; commandments do not require intention.

They raise a teaching: if the hearer intended but the one sounding did not, or the one sounding intended but the hearer did not, he has not fulfilled the obligation until both hearer and sounder intend. How can there be a hearer who intended and a sounder who did not? Is it not one who blows for music? Perhaps he is merely making barking sounds. Later there, Rabbi Zera said to his attendant, "Direct your intention and blow for me." It follows that he holds that the sounder requires intention. Come and hear: if the hearer intended but the one fulfilling it. If the latter does not intend to fulfill it, where is his share in that commandment? In this way, the Gemara's discussion proceeds properly, without any disagreement.

Although some decisors did not say this, either concerning prayers in foreign languages or concerning intention in commandments, our position is certainly preferable to theirs in a matter learned from its context. When this poor person directs all his strength toward intention in prayer, it is written, "He turned toward the prayer of the destitute": he is alone and has no helpers, as we said. His eyes hope only toward the Exalted and Holy One who looks upon the poor and contrite in spirit, when he prays from the depths of his heart. His voice is heard by no one else, only by the ears of the person praying and by the One to whom prayers are addressed, blessed be He, for His name alone is exalted.

King David, peace be upon him, said, "Be gracious to me, O LORD": I shall not cease praying to You, since You desire the prayers of the righteous; rather, "To You I call all the day."

the sounder did not, etc. It teaches the sounder as analogous to the hearer: just as the hearer hears for himself, so the sounder sounds for himself, yet it teaches that he has fulfilled the obligation. It is a dispute between tannaim. For it was taught: the hearer hears for himself and the sounder sounds in his usual manner. Rabbi Yose said: when does this apply? To a congregational agent. In an individual case, he has not fulfilled the obligation until hearer and sounder both intend. [TN240044]

Some decisors hold that Rabbi Zera disagrees with Rava and holds that commandments require intention, and likewise that Rabbi Yose in our discussion disagrees with Rava. Therefore some ruled that commandments require intention, as all this is explained in the works of the decisors, in Tur and Bet Yosef, Laws of Rosh Hashanah, section 589.

The master holds that there is no disagreement here: Rabbi Zera also agrees with Rava. Rava himself spoke only of someone wishing to fulfill the obligation for himself. To discharge others' obligations, the one discharging must in any event intend to discharge them, and they too must intend that he discharge their obligations. This is also implied by the anonymous Talmudic discussion, which objects to Rabbi Zera from the baraita, "If the hearer intended," etc., as Rashi explained: "It follows that the sounder requires intention to discharge the hearer's obligation." That is, the Talmud objects only concerning the requirement for the sounder's intention to discharge the hearer. For oneself, everyone agrees that commandments do not require intention, as the earlier answer said, "Perhaps he is merely making barking sounds."

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Neither concerning prayers in foreign languages": explained in the preceding section.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"A matter learned from its context": the matter itself teaches and indicates what we said.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"When the poor person," etc.: the master returns to the verse "A prayer of the poor" in the preceding section. When the poor person has proper intention in prayer in a foreign language, we aptly apply to him what is said there: "He turned toward the prayer of the destitute." He is destitute and alone, without ministering angels to help him.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"David," etc.: incidentally he explains "Be gracious to me, O LORD, for to You I call all the day" (Psalm 86), according to what was explained above in section 29 from the Zohar, Balaq: the Holy One, blessed be He, alone concerns Himself with the poor person's prayer. Our Sages further said that the blessed LORD desires the prayers of the righteous and therefore afflicts them with sufferings. David therefore said: "Be gracious to me, O LORD," and do not afflict me in order to hear my prayer, for even without this, "To You I call all the day."

Yoel Moshe - 1

"In this, prayer is stricter," etc.: even when performed by oneself, it requires intention. The other commandments are different: performed by oneself, they do not require intention.

"Neither concerning prayers in foreign languages," etc.: what we wrote in the preceding section, "that he should intend," for this gives Him, blessed be He, greater satisfaction than prayer in the sacred tongue without intention. "Nor concerning intention in commandments": we said there is a distinction between acting oneself and through another. Some decisors did not say this, but our position is nevertheless preferable.

"When this poor person," etc.: one poor in knowledge of how to pray in the sacred tongue, as above in the preceding section. He has no helpers in the three princes mentioned, who do not understand Aramaic; only the blessed LORD Himself.

"For I shall not cease," etc.: the blessed LORD afflicts the righteous because He desires their prayers. Therefore David said, "Be gracious to me, O LORD"—without sufferings, and nevertheless, "To You I call all the day." [TN240045]

Rema of Fano

From those verses about Hannah from which we learn weighty laws of prayer in tractate Berakhot, I may also learn a great law: one should be still during prayer, as it is written of her, "Only her lips moved." This excludes movement from the rest of the body. "All my bones shall say" was said only concerning songs and praises of the Omnipresent, as it is written, "O LORD, who is like You?" No movement was permitted during prayer apart from the practice of some ascetics, who fulfill in themselves "He was humbled before My name," only at songs and praises, not prayer, in which one must stand before the Omnipresent, blessed be He, without movement. As the Sages also said in the first chapter of Berakhot: one who prays must align his feet. This distinction is correct and necessary.

The Ari, of blessed righteous memory, used to instruct all who prayed evening, morning, and afternoon prayers to lower their arms upon their hearts, right over left, and fulfill in themselves “All their backs were inward,” so that the middle joint of both arms would be opposite the worshipper's face. The sage who authored Pardes Rimmonim, of blessed righteous memory, used to say to bend the thumb into the palm, for the same reason that we learned in tractate Yoma concerning the lots: one does not extend a thumb in the Temple. All this converges upon one place: to include judgment within mercy. One who fears Heaven should fulfill both.

Rema of Fano

Some prayers need no assistance because of the excellence of those who offer them, as with Phinehas at Shittim. In his prayer he ascended to hayyah and yehidah, whose faces were not entrusted to an agent, as we explained in Ma'amar ha-Nefesh. Therefore it is written, “He stood and va-yefallel,” not va-yitpallel. The whole verse has five words, each with five letters, because in his prayer

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Therefore it is written” of him va-yefallel, a transitive verb: he himself acted in prayer for his Maker and raised his prayer to Him. It is not va-yitpallel, which is an expression in the hitpa'el through others.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The five configurations of the soul”: nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah,

Yad Yehudah - ד - continued

yehidah. Each configuration includes five. To hint at their union, the verses and words come in fives. [TN240049]

Yad Yehudah - ה

"Do not wonder": that va-yitpallel, not va-yefallel, was said of Moses, for all the more should it have been said of him.

Yad Yehudah - ו

"His nefesh," etc.: for Moses it is a small matter that his prayer ascends of itself through hayyah and yehidah. His power is greater, since even his nefesh portion alone awakens a great and awesome awakening above. Of that awakening va-yitpallel is written, which does not apply to Phinehas.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Moreover": another reason va-yitpallel is written of Moses is to show that he continually went on cleaving to Him, blessed be He, with exceedingly wondrous cleaving. Therefore it says va-yitpallel, implying that he continually went on praying, according to the force of every hitpa'el expression, to increase cleaving. He, peace be upon him, was the choicest of humankind and did not become an angel like Phinehas. This was not to his detriment, Heaven forbid, but to his excellence: though he never put off the human form, he increased in great

the five configurations of the soul, each including the others, were united. [TN240047]

Do not wonder that va-yitpallel was said of Moses: Moses' nefesh alone, through its greatness and importance, awakens in the higher beings what Phinehas will not awaken through hayyah and yehidah—even with all this, perhaps. Moreover, Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, perfected the human form as far as possible according to the measure of his place and hour. He did not change the radiant glory of his countenance from human to angelic, for that would have been an immense diminution in his case.

This does not diminish the honor of the ministering angels, Heaven forbid. We have already explained figuratively in Heqor Din the Sages' saying, "The righteous are greater," so that it should not be understood without qualification, as the Gaon Rav Saadiah and many with him thought. Although there is no substance in the view of those who disagree with him and refute his words—which are better and more correct than theirs, without doubt—the point is to increase Moses' honor. Throughout his days he prayed and increased in wondrous cleaving, exceedingly higher than anyone else among those above and below. Phinehas, however, is "an angel of the LORD of Hosts," and concerning him va-yefallel is written: a transitive verb, for he binds crowns for his Master from the cleaving and prayers of the rest of the people. [TN240048]

cleaving more than anyone else. [TN240050]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"For that would have been a diminution": for Moses, had he been transformed into an angel. This is not because the ministering angels' rank is lower than that of a righteous person, Heaven forbid, as might appear from the plain sense of the Sages' saying, "The righteous are greater than the ministering angels." This is only a figure, in the manner explained in Heqor Din IV.8: the ministering angels have the aspect of servants and ministers of the Most High, and the righteous have the aspect of children; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"In an unrestricted sense": according to its plain meaning. [TN240051]

Yad Yehudah - י

"Although there is no substance," etc.: nevertheless, his words too are no worse. [TN240052]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Not to increase Moses' honor" [supplied lemma]: this refers back to "not to diminish the honor of the ministering angels," but the reverse. It would have been a diminution for Moses had he been transformed into an angel, since he continually increased in great cleaving while retaining his human stature. In this his excellence grew, for it is exceedingly wondrous, which would not be so wondrous had he become an angel. In this respect it would have been a diminution for him. [TN240053]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Need no assistance,” etc.: from the three princes mentioned, for “Pinqas” is Sandalfon, and your mnemonic is “gather his harvest”[?], etc.: Elijah, “Pinkas,” Sandalfon. [TN240054]

“Va-yefallel,” etc.: this implies that he himself made a keter and atarah for the head of the Holy One, blessed be He, not through an angel or agent; va-yitpallel implies through others.

“The whole verse,” etc.: that of “Phinehas stood.” There are five words, each word with five letters. In them the five configurations of the soul—nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayyah, yehidah—were united; each soul configuration includes all five, making twenty-five. This is the mystery of “Let there be light”: yehi. Light is written five times in the passage, indicating the five configurations of the soul, as above, each including five: the numerical value of yehi, twenty-five. This is the mystery of “May the LORD our God be with us as He was with our fathers,” for the patriarchs repaired these attributes: of Abraham, “Thus shall your seed be”; of Isaac, “I and the youth will go thus far”; of Jacob, “Thus shall you say to the house of Jacob.” Therefore additions were made: to Abraham, he; to

Isaac, yod; and to Jacob, vav[?]—the numerical value of Y.W.D., or Y.D.[?]. This is the mystery of “May you become thousands of myriads,” likewise the numerical value twenty-five.

“Moses' nefesh,” etc.: Moses had a greater excellence, for through his nefesh portion he awakened more than another awakens through hayyah and yehidah.

“The human form”: his form did not change to an angel like Phinehas, and that would have been a diminution in Moses' portion. Therefore, it was not to diminish an angel's honor that his form did not change to an angel's—Heaven forbid. The saying “The righteous are greater than the ministering angels” should not be understood literally, as Rav Saadiah and many others thought. Although the words of Rav Saadiah's opponents also have no substance, and Rav Saadiah's words are more correct than his opponents', nevertheless his words too are not true.

“But to increase,” etc.: this refers back to “not to diminish their honor,” that of the ministering angels, “but to increase Moses' honor.” Va-yitpallel concerning Moses increases his honor, since he attained more than Phinehas.

“The poor person,” etc.: above in section 29, the master undertook to say that the poor person first prays about this: he delays and has caused the binding to be delayed. Now he concludes that this is “Far from his salvation are the words of my roaring” (Psalm 22). The intention is: these are the words of my roaring, because I have delayed and am far from his salvation. [TN240057]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“The opposite”: opposite to the poor person apologizing for the delay of his prayer, for whom the Holy One, blessed be He, waits as stated above, are scrutiny of prayer and handing judgment against one's fellow over to Heaven. For these He does not wait, as the Sages said of them: they bring a person's sins to remembrance. This refers

When the Temple does not stand, acceptable prayer, joined to the ordinance of atonement, atones, and the One who atones says, “It is as though I have received it.” We have now escaped the perplexities that trouble those who examine superficially concerning the moon's accusation, by true paths pleasing to their hearers, with understanding, knowledge, and discernment, reconciling what is said in the Gemara, the Zohar, and Midrash Rabbah. All are the words of the living God, given by one Shepherd.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“The One who atones says, ‘It is as though I have received it’”: just as the LORD did good to the sinner, by establishing a guilt-offering and other sacrifices for his soul, so the LORD magnified His lovingkindness in the time of exile, accepting prayer in place of sacrifices until He builds the walls of Jerusalem. Then He will desire sacrifices of righteousness, and we shall render thank-offerings to Him, speedily in our days, amen. [TN240058]

“Which was recognized for it,” etc. [uncertain lemma]: for the utterance of our lips stands in place of our sacrifices.

“The One who atones says,” etc.: this refers back to the Name's saying, “Bring atonement on My account”: the Holy One, blessed be He, said, “Your prayers are pleasing before Me to become a crown, as though I had received an actual sacrifice.” [TN240059] [TN240060]

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Valor," etc.: this is Sarah. "Through having diminished herself," etc.: as we explained above in section 5 of Part I of this discourse. "The wife of a haver," etc.: although Hesed is associated with Abraham, the wife of a haver is nevertheless like the haver himself, so Hesed also belongs to Sarah.

"In the Temple songs," etc.: it is known that the sweetness of song is in Binah, where the severities are sweetened. The Levites' principal service therefore consisted of song, to raise the severities to Binah and sweeten them. Miriam too was from the side of Gevurah: "Miriam answered them" in song. "Nevertheless, she is female": the severities are from the female side, so she too uttered song. If you ask: Sarah too was female, so why did she not utter song? One may answer that Sarah was from "lovingkindness to Abraham," complete Hesed, where femaleness makes no difference. Tiferet, however, inclines toward Hesed on one side and toward Gevurah on the other. Therefore Deborah, who is in Tiferet, required song. It is stated in Gil. Roya [?] that

"The LORD attended to Sarah," etc. The blessed God intimated to this woman of valor the advantage that wisdom gives toward success: she would merit building the house of Israel through having willingly diminished herself, as we have explained. She was the first of seven prophetesses, all of whom correspond, in their chronological succession, to the seven attributes of supernal governance, one to another in order.

Sarah corresponds to Hesed, "lovingkindness to Abraham": the wife of a haver is like the haver himself.

Miriam corresponds to Gevurah, for the bitterness of the bondage began at her birth. Just as the Levites, who are from the side of Gevurah, must raise their voices in the Temple songs, so too "Miriam answered them: Sing to the LORD."

Deborah corresponds to Tiferet, for she said to Barak, "The glory shall not be yours." From the negative you hear the affirmative: thus it will be my glory. Nevertheless, she is ultimately female; therefore "Deborah sang," for she is from the side of judgment.

Hannah corresponds to Netsah, for Samuel her son attained it and was the first to prophesy from it. This is "My horn is raised," for the "depth of height" in Sefer Yetsirah is Netsah.

Abigail corresponds to Hod, the left thigh, as is plainly known concerning this stature to those familiar with the

Deborah is a reincarnation of Zipporah, Moses' wife. Moses is inwardly in Tiferet, as above, and Zipporah his wife—the wife of a haver being like the haver himself—is also in Tiferet. Since Zipporah did not merit uttering song at the sea, for Jethro brought her to Moses after the splitting of the Sea of Reeds, Deborah, her reincarnation, uttered song in her place. Consider this carefully.[TN210002]

"For Samuel attained," etc.: see Zohar, Bereshit, page 100, that Samuel's principal prophecy was from Netsah. "My horn is raised," etc.: it is known that the horns of Isaac's ram corresponded to Netsah and Hod. The ram itself was a firstborn, being Isaac's soul, which departed at the Binding. Before the Binding, Emanation was in the mystery of "I planted you a choice vine, wholly a seed of truth": Jacob is "truth," in the manner of "You shall give truth to Jacob"; Isaac is "seed"; Abraham is "wholly." Thus Isaac was in the mystery of "seed," Yesod D. [?], as explained in the Zohar in its place, "revealed to you" [?]. It is known that Netsah prevails over Hod. This is precisely "My horn is raised," which is Netsah. [TN210003]

"Three future events," etc.: three kinds of prophecy by which Abigail enlightened David, as he proceeds to explain. "David did not understand," etc.: he thought that she had informed him that her husband Nabal was already dead. His purpose in going to her was to confiscate all Nabal's property, according to the law of anyone who rebels against the monarchy. Because he mistakenly thought Nabal had died, he asked her for intercourse on the presumption that she was unmarried. "She defeated him," etc.: Nabal was not called a rebel against the monarchy, since David's coinage had not yet gained currency in the world.

"Necessarily they must become like stone," etc.: only a stone is slung in the hollow of a sling. Therefore, if the souls of David's enemies are slung in the hollow of the sling, they must necessarily first become like stone: their souls must first be reincarnated in an inanimate stone. It is written of Nabal, "He became like stone," for Nabal's soul belonged to LBN, the initials of Laban, Balaam, Nabal: it was reincarnated three times, and afterward was reincarnated in an inanimate stone. This is L'BN, the initials of Laban, sages' words and riddles. She therefore exposed her thigh: she made her prophecy manifest. David walked by its light for three parasangs. These are the three future events concerning which she enlightened him. First: "May your enemies be like Nabal." Here she informed him that Nabal would die. David did not understand and thought he had already died; he was seeking to confiscate all Nabal's property as that of a rebel against the monarchy, and therefore asked her for intercourse. She defeated him with her argument that his coinage had not yet gained currency in the world. She pronounced judgment upon David's enemies: their souls would be muzzled and travel within the hollow of the sling. Necessarily they must first become like stone, as is written of Nabal, "He became like stone." This is for the sin of evil speech, for which a muzzle in his mouth is fitting. According to the gravity of his sin, he is deprived even of the chirping of birds and the speech of palm trees. All the more so when it involves regret for some commandment, in the sense of "The holy stones are poured out."

David's enemies are among these, for all spiritual beings had already made Adam the first man king over them. He fulfilled among them "You shall surely set a king over yourself"—that his awe should be upon you. This means that you should fear the One whom he fears, for none is above him except the LORD his God. If the enemies of David whom we have mentioned are of Jewish descent, sin is added to their sin: they regret their former action, when the tribes made Judah king over them. Whoever has no

even, Balaam, Nabal. See Sefer ha-Kavvanot on this. This is the mystery of the heap of stones that Jacob set up and named Gal-ʿed, alluding to his reincarnation in an inanimate stone. Hence, concerning Balaam, it says, "A wall on this side." Rashi explains that an unspecified wall is of stones. One who sins through evil speech is reincarnated in an inanimate stone, measure for measure.[TN210004]

"In the sense of 'The holy stones are poured out,'" etc.: the expression "holy" is not applicable to stones except through this mystery: souls that performed commandments and regretted them are reincarnated within stones, as David's enemies did. They had already made Adam king; Adam is David and David is Adam, yet afterward they rebelled against David. "That his awe should be," etc.: the king's Awe, namely the Holy One—for the king fears Him alone—should also be upon you. "That they exalted Judah," etc.: "Judah is a lion's cub" applies. Whoever rebels against David, saying, "We have no portion in the son of Jesse," etc., acts like the generation of the Flood, who also denied the Primordial One of the world. "Therefore the brick served them as stone": specifically "them," for their souls are reincarnated within an inanimate stone. [TN210005]

"From human to animal," etc.: one is first reincarnated in an animal, then in a plant, and then in inanimate matter. Likewise, concerning the commandment of stoning with stones, we learned, "The judgment is completed," for this is the final judgment. "Through the loss of forms," etc.: see the introduction to Maʾamar ʿOlam Qatan that pertains to this. "As we explained in Part V": in Part V, chapter 7; see there. "Their wondrous descent was gradual," etc.: first to animal, then to plant, and so forth, as above. "She went still deeper," etc.: Abigail, mentioned above. "She said to him second," etc.: the second of the three future events mentioned above. "Let this not be a stumbling block for you": he should not stumble through Abigail, though he later stumbled through Bathsheba. This is what the restrictive "this" conveys.

"Huldah," etc.: she corresponds to Yesod, called the covenant of peace. "Whose identities escaped him," etc.: escaped Rashi. "The election of the patriarchs," etc.: through "He established the boundaries of peoples according to the number of the children of Israel," Israel was chosen from portion in David and no inheritance in the son of Jesse falls under "He who exacted payment from the generation of the Flood," of whom it is written, "The earth was filled with violence." There is no greater violence in the world than rebellion against the monarchy. He also falls under the payment exacted from the generation of the Dispersion, for regretting a commandment, in the sense of "When they journeyed from the east": they removed themselves from the Primordial One of the world. Therefore "The brick served them as stone." Likewise, we have heard concerning those among Pharaoh's servants who feared the LORD: at first they said, "Send the men away." Once they later said, "What have we done, sending Israel away from serving us?" they "went down into the depths like stone."

This is the meaning of descending lower and lower: from human to animal, from animal to plant, and from plant to inanimate matter. Likewise, concerning the commandment of stoning, we learned, "The judgment is completed": there is no further judgment after it. This is the meaning of "When the falling one falls"—one who was already fallen from the outset—whether through the mystery of imprisonment, in the sense of "muzzled and going," or through the loss of forms and their complete stripping away. The matter is clear. What is their remedy? "Those passing through the valley of weeping make it a spring." BKhA is an acronym for be-metsulot kemo even, "into the depths like stone." Those who descend to Gehinnom to rescue others, as we explained in Part V of Heqor Din, likewise pass through the seventy nations. "Perhaps one ought to remove," etc.: according to this reckoning there would be more than forty-eight prophets. "Eight priests who were prophets," etc.: this implies that there are more than forty-eight; he answers that it means those fit for prophecy. "The one who completes the count," etc.: when four prophets—Baruch, his father, Seraiah, and Mahseiah—are removed, and only three—Beeri, Hosea's father, Oded, and Hanani—are added in their place, one is still missing. Therefore he says that the one dwelling there, etc., completes it. "Shield of the fathers" [?], prophets, etc.[TN210006]

Yad Yehudah - א

"The advantage that wisdom gives toward success," etc.: the blessed Lord intimated to Sarah that her wisdom would gain an advantage through her having diminished herself, since through this she would merit children and the building of the house of Israel. The master explains this in the following section: the blessed Lord offered Sarah advice appropriate to her, to diminish herself, and she acknowledged the justice of the judgment upon her, etc. As its reward, He attended to Sarah; see there. This is the subject with which the master begins here, but he interrupts it with an explanation of the seven prophetesses and returns to explain it in section 2.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“As we have explained”: also Part I, section 5; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“She was the first,” etc.: the blessed Lord's intimation to Sarah was through prophecy, for our mother Sarah was a prophetess and the first of seven prophetesses who arose for Israel. As the sages said in the first chapter of Megillah: “Forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses prophesied to Israel,” etc. Who are the seven prophetesses? Sarah, Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, Abigail, Huldah, Esther. The master mentioned this incidentally in order to explain it.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“All of whom correspond,” etc.: these seven prophetesses correspond to the seven holy sefirot, which are the seven days of building. Each received her prophecy from the sefirah assigned to her, in their chronological sequence and order, according to the order of the sefirot. Sarah, the first prophetess, received her prophecy from Hesed, Abraham's attribute, which is the first of the seven sefirot mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“The bitterness of the bondage”: this is judgment from Gevurah.

valley of these weeping ones: specifically “pass,” through the mystery of soul impregnation, until these stones and their like are worn away by their tears, as explained there. Just as their wondrous descent was gradual, so in their ascent they go from strength to strength until they receive the presence of the Shekhinah, as it is written, “He shall appear before God in Zion,” in the sense of “Every male of yours shall appear.”[TN210001]

She went still deeper into the mystery of soul impregnation when she said, “A man has arisen to pursue you.” This is the man of worthlessness, the evil spirit that terrified Saul; we explained it in Maʾamar ha-Nefesh. Consult it. Second, when David solicited her, she said to him, “Let this not be a stumbling block for you.” She warned him about Bathsheba, for she said that this should not be a stumbling block, but the other would be, as the sages expounded. Third: “The LORD shall surely make my lord a faithful house”: “make” for David, “shall make” for the Messiah.

Of Huldah it is explicitly written, “The wife of Shallum.” She prophesied through the Righteous One of the world, who is the covenant of peace, as is known.

Of Esther it is written, “Esther clothed herself in kingship.” This suffices. The disciples of the Ari, of blessed memory, have another approach concerning these prophetesses and their names. If it is a received tradition, we accept it; it does not contradict the exposition.

Incidentally, let us say something about the forty-eight prophets whom Rashi enumerated in the first chapter of

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Just as the Levites,” etc.: as stated in Raʿaya Mehemna, Naso, page 234: “This commandment is that the Levites should sing in the Temple,” etc.; “‘At night His song is with me’—this is Gevurah,” etc. See there.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“From the negative” concerning Barak, you hear the affirmative concerning Deborah herself.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Ultimately she is female,” and from the side of judgment. Her place of prophecy, Tiferet, likewise inclines toward Hesed on one side, but on the other also contains the attribute of Gevurah. Therefore “Deborah sang,” like Miriam, as above.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“For Samuel attained,” etc.: as stated in Zohar, Bereshit, page 99: “The fourth grade, from which no human being prophesied until Samuel came. Concerning it is written, ‘The Endurance of Israel will not lie,’” etc. See there.

Yad Yehudah - י

“This is ‘My horn is raised,’” which Hannah said in her prayer.

Yad Yehudah - יא

The “depth of height” mentioned in Sefer Yetsirah, chapter 1, in the mishnah concerning the depths, is Netsah. The mishnah there says: “Ten sefirot of nothingness, whose measure has no end: a depth of beginning and a depth of end, a depth of good and a depth of evil, a depth of height and a depth of below," etc. On this, consult Sefer ha-Pardes, chapter 5 of the gate "Whether Ein Sof is Keter."

Yad Yehudah - יב

"The left thigh," etc.: it is known that the disposition and order of the sefirot is called a stature by the masters of Kabbalah. The sefirah Hod, whose place is low on the left side, is called the left thigh.

Yad Yehudah - יג

"She therefore exposed her thigh," etc.: in chapter 1 of Megillah, concerning Nabal, it is stated that David said to Abigail, "He is a rebel against the monarchy, and it is unnecessary to try him." She said to him, "Saul is still alive, and your coinage has not gained currency in the world." He said to her, "Blessed is your discernment, and blessed are you, who kept me from coming into bloods." "Bloods" implies two. Rather, this teaches that she exposed her thigh, and David walked by its light for three parasangs. He said to her, "Yield to me." She said, "Let this not be a stumbling block for you." "This" implies that there is another. What is it? The affair of Bathsheba. Ultimately, this is what

Megillah in the name of the author of Halakhot Gedolot, apart from two whose identities escaped him. They are Shem and Eber: Shem, who told Rebekah, "Two nations are in your womb," and Eber, who prophesied concerning the Dispersion. Both are called those who prophesied to Israel: the one concerning Jacob himself, and the other concerning the election of the patriarchs, as it is written, "When the Most High allotted the nations," and the whole verse. In the book of Isaiah there are two verses that are prophecies of Beeri, Hosea's father: "When they say to you," etc., as stated in the Gemara. Likewise Oded and Hanani, in Asa's time: the words of both contain prophecy for later generations, so they ought to be counted among the forty-eight prophets.

Perhaps Baruch ought to be removed from the count, for he testified of himself, "I have found no rest." Nor have we heard an explicit prophecy from his father. The same applies to Seraiah and Mahseiah. As for the master's statement that eight priests who were prophets arose from Rahab's daughters: he means people fit for prophecy. Alternatively, they were prophets whose words were not written down; such prophets numbered thousands upon ten thousands and are not taken into the count of forty-eight. Likewise, Eldad and Medad's prophecy was not written down. If you object that Eber's prophecy was not written down, it is indeed written, "For in his days the earth was divided." The one who completes the count is the old prophet dwelling in Bethel, who added to Iddo's prophecy the destruction of the high places in the happened. Tosafot wrote that it is difficult to understand how that righteous woman exposed her thigh before David; see there. Therefore the master expounded "she exposed her thigh" as her revealing to David her place of prophecy, the attribute of Hod, the left thigh. The three parasangs that David walked by its light are the three future events made known to him through her, by which she enlightened him.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"First": one of the three future events is expressed in her words to him, "Now may your enemies and those seeking your harm be like Nabal" (1 Samuel 25).

Yad Yehudah - טו

"He thought": that she said this because Nabal had already died. His statement to Abigail, "He is a rebel against the monarchy," was not intended to sentence him to death; rather, he was seeking his property.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"He therefore solicited her": because he thought her husband had died. Otherwise, how could he solicit her while she was prohibited as another man's wife?

Yad Yehudah - יז

"She defeated him": so that he would not confiscate Nabal's property, since Saul was still alive, etc.

enemies. Hence she said, “The soul of your enemies He shall sling in the hollow of the sling,” so that their

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Necessarily,” etc.: the hollow of the sling is an implement for slinging stones. If their souls are to be muzzled within it, they must necessarily be reincarnated in an inanimate stone.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“As is written of Nabal”: he too was reincarnated in a stone, which is why it is written of him, “He became like stone.” This was for the sin of evil speech, when he said, “Who is David, and who is the son of Jesse?”—meaning: Does he not descend from Ruth the Moabite? As Rashi wrote there.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“For a muzzle in his mouth is fitting”: therefore, measure for measure, his punishment is to be muzzled in an inanimate stone.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“He is deprived”: reincarnation in a stone is lower than the other forms of reincarnation. There are three forms—in animal, plant, and inanimate matter—as the master explains shortly. Those who speak evil are reincarnated in these three categories: in chirping birds, measure for measure, which is the animal category; in palm trees, the plant category, concerning which they said that Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai understood their speech; or in an inanimate stone, which is the lowest grade.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“According to the gravity of his sin”: the graver the sin of the speaker of evil, the harsher his reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“All the more”: when the evil speech he uttered also contains regret for some commandment he performed, his punishment will be reincarnation in a stone.

Yad Yehudah - כה

“Holy stones”: they are so called because holy souls are reincarnated within them.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“David's enemies are among these”: among those who perform a commandment and regret it. Abigail therefore rightly judged that they should be reincarnated in stone. The commandment regretted by David's enemies is “You shall surely set a king over yourself,” fulfilled in Adam the first man: all spiritual beings had already made him king, including all souls destined to come into the world. Now they rebelled against David, who is Adam the first man, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“He”: Adam the first man fulfilled among the spiritual beings “You shall surely set,” etc. “This means,” etc.: the master explains that the Holy One is the king's Awe, for the king fears Him, and He, blessed be He, is his Awe. Of Him it is said that this awe should be upon you, and you should not abandon it because of a decree of a king of flesh and blood. This interpretation is appropriate to Adam the first man, who feared none except the Holy One. Those subject to Adam's kingship were commanded that this same awe should be upon them. This differs from other kings, some of whom fear others: it would not be correct to say that people were commanded to feel their king's fear of another king of flesh and blood.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“If they are of Jewish descent,” etc.: our statement that David's enemies rebelled against the kingship of David's house, because they had already made Adam the first man king, can apply both to Israelites and to gentiles. However, a further sin attaches to David's Israelite enemies who rebelled against his kingship. By this they show that they regret their former action and retroactively regret Judah's kingship. David descends from Judah, and kingship belongs to him as an inheritance until the end of all generations, as explained by Maimonides in chapter 1 of the Laws of Kings.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“Whoever has no portion in David,” and wishes to withdraw from what his ancestors established and accepted, falls under “He who exacted payment from the generation of the Flood and the generation of the Dispersion will exact payment from one who does not stand by his word,” as the sages said concerning one who retracts a purchase. The generation of the Flood sinned through violence and robbery; the generation of the Dispersion regretted the commandment of accepting His divinity over them. It is therefore appropriate to say that He who exacted payment from them will also exact payment from David's enemies who rebel against the monarchy. This is certainly violence and wrongful gain above all, as well as regret for a commandment, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“They removed themselves,” etc.: as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, they removed themselves from the Primordial One of the world, saying, “We desire neither Him nor His divinity.”

Yad Yehudah - לא

Therefore it is written of them, “The brick served them as stone”: their rebellion through building with bricks caused them to be reincarnated in stone.

Yad Yehudah - לב

“What have we done?” They regretted the commandment of sending Israel away; therefore “they went down into the depths like stone.” The bet of be-metsulot, “into the depths,” also applies to “stone”: the meaning is “into the depths, as into stone.”

Yad Yehudah - לג

“This is the meaning of descending lower and lower,” mentioned in the Torah: “You shall descend lower.” This is from human to animal, etc. Hence the expression of descent here, “They went down into the depths,” refers to this reincarnation, which is the lowest grade.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“We learned”: in chapter 6 of Sanhedrin, “When the judgment is completed, they take him out to stone him.” The master says that this is why it uses “completed”: as he says, there is no further judgment afterward. He need not be reincarnated at all, having already received his punishment in this world through stones and thereby undergone the

Yad Yehudah - לה

“When the falling one falls”: this is written concerning a parapet. The sages said: “One who was already fallen from the outset.” The master explains: “When he falls” yet lower, to plant and inanimate matter—the one who was fallen from the outset through his reincarnation and is fit for this. He may fall in this way through the mystery of imprisonment: his soul, wherever it goes, is bound by attachment to plant or inanimate matter while preserving its form. Or it may lose and entirely strip away its form there. May the Merciful One save us.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“In the sense of ‘muzzled and going,’” in the chapter Sho’el cited above: they are confined within the hollow of the sling in their own forms. As Rashi explained, “muzzled,” like an iron muzzle: bound in prison.

Yad Yehudah - לז

“What is their remedy?” For those reincarnated in stones, this is the remedy: “Those passing through the valley of weeping,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - לח

“Those who descend to Gehinnom”: those righteous people who descend to Gehinnom to rescue Israel's souls and bring them out with them also pass through this valley of the afflicted ones who are reincarnated, to give them life.

Yad Yehudah - לט

“In Part V”: chapter 7.

Yad Yehudah - מ

“Through the mystery of soul impregnation”: not through reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - מא

“Are worn away by their tears”: the tears of the righteous, who weep and pray for those reincarnated souls, and the tears of the oppressed souls themselves. This is “They make it a spring”: the tears become an ever-increasing spring, rescuing the reincarnated souls gradually, higher and higher.

Yad Yehudah - מב

“As explained”: there, in the discourse mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - מג

“Just as their,” etc.: he explains the end of the verse, “The teacher also clothes himself in blessings. They go from strength to strength; he shall appear before God in Zion.” Just as their descent through reincarnation was gradual, so their ascent will be gradual, until they merit receiving the presence of the Shekhinah.

Yad Yehudah - מד

“In the sense of ‘He shall appear,’” written concerning appearing on pilgrimage: it is a passive form, yet its meaning is to receive the presence of the Shekhinah.

Yad Yehudah - מה

“She went still deeper”: Abigail, into the mystery of soul impregnation, in which one person's soul is sometimes impregnated within another person.

Yad Yehudah - מו

“When she said to David, ‘A man has arisen,’” etc.: she said this of Saul, yet said “a man has arisen,” not “a king has arisen.” She alluded to the evil spirit that terrified Saul, the man of worthlessness, who entered him through soul impregnation. There is no need for Radak's statement that she called him “a man” contemptuously.

Yad Yehudah - מז

“She said to him second”: the second of the three future events mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - מח

“But the other”: Bathsheba would be a stumbling block, as the sages expounded in the Gemara cited.

Yad Yehudah - מט

“Third”: this is her statement to him, “He shall surely make,” etc., a doubled expression, by which she alluded to the Messiah. The master has thus explained everything pertaining to Abigail's prophecy, which came from the sefirah Hod.

Yad Yehudah - נ

“Huldah”: her prophecy came from Yesod, for it is explicitly written, “Hilkiah went,” etc., “to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum” (2 Kings 22). This indicates the place of her prophecy: the covenant of peace, namely Yesod, which is so called in several places in the Zohar.

Yad Yehudah - נא

“Through the Righteous One of the world”: this means Yesod, as in “The righteous one is the foundation of the world.”

Yad Yehudah - נב

“Esther clothed herself in kingship”: the Gemara says, “It ought to have said royal garments.” Rabbi Eliezer said in Rabbi Hanina's name: “This teaches that the holy spirit clothed her,” etc. Scripture teaches us that she was a prophetess and also the place of her prophecy, which was from Malkhut. So it is stated in the Zohar.

Yad Yehudah - נג

“The exposition”: ours.

Yad Yehudah - נד

“Forty-eight prophets,” etc.: there in the Gemara, page 14, they object: “Were there no more? Is it not written, ‘There was a certain man from Ramathaim’—one of two hundred prophets who prophesied to Israel?” It answers: there were indeed many, as it was taught: “Many prophets arose for Israel, twice the number of those who left Egypt. However, prophecy needed for later generations was written down; prophecy not needed was not written down.” Rashi wrote: “So too Halakhot Gedolot teaches [?]. This is their enumeration from Seder ʿOlam: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses and Aaron, Joshua, Phinehas—‘An angel of the LORD went up from Gilgal to Bochim’: this is Phinehas. Elkanah—‘A man of God came to Eli’: this is Elkanah. Eli, Samuel, Gad, Nathan, David, Solomon, Iddo, who called against the altar at Bethel, Micaiah son of Imlah in Ahab's days, Obadiah, Ahijah the Shilonite, and Jehu son of Hanani. In Asa's days, Azariah son of Oded; Haziel of the descendants of Mattaniah; Eliezer son of Dodo of Mareshah, a priest in Jehoshaphat's days; Zechariah in Joash's days. In the days of Jeroboam son of Joash, Hosea and Amos; in Jotham's days, Micah the Morashtite; in Amaziah's days, Amoz, who said to Amaziah, ‘Why have you sought the gods of Edom?’ Elisha, Jonah son of Amittai, Isaiah. In Manasseh's days, Joel, Nahum, Habakkuk; in Josiah's days, Zephaniah, Uriah of Kiriath-jearim, Jeremiah. In exile, Ezekiel, Daniel. In Darius's second year, Baruch, Neriah, Seraiah, Mahseiah, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, and Mordecai Bilshan, as in Seder ʿOlam. Concerning Daniel, however, we said above that he was not a prophet. Remove Daniel and include Shemaiah, who told Rehoboam, ‘Do not go up and do not fight against your brothers, the children of Israel.’ Two I do not know.” End of his words. The master says that these two are Shem and Eber. We find that Shem was a prophet, for he told Rebekah, “Two nations are in your womb," as stated in Bereshit Rabbah: "'The LORD said to her'—through Shem."[TN210007]

Yad Yehudah - נה

We also find that Eber prophesied concerning the generation of the Dispersion, as stated in Seder ʿOlam on the verse, "To Eber two sons were born; the name of the one was Peleg, for in his days the earth was divided." Rabbi Yose said: Eber was a great prophet, for he named his son Peleg through the holy spirit, as it is said, "For in his days the earth was divided," etc. Rashi cites this in his commentary on the Torah.

Yad Yehudah - נו

"Both are called those who prophesied to Israel," like those [?] whom he removed as prophets [?]: the forty-eight prophets mentioned likewise prophesied to Israel. The one, meaning Shem, prophesied concerning Jacob himself, etc.; the other, Eber, prophesied concerning the election of the nations, who were selected in the days of the Dispersion, as it is written, "When He allotted," etc. Pirqei Rabbi Eliezer states that the Holy One called seventy [?] angels stationed at His glorious throne and said to them, "Come, let us confuse their language into seventy [?] nations and seventy [?] languages." They cast lots, as it is said, "When the Most High allotted the nations," etc. The Holy One's lot fell upon Abraham and his descendants, as it is said, "For the LORD's portion is His people," etc.; see there. This is "For in his days the earth was divided": by naming his son Peleg, Eber prophesied concerning the division of the earth and the election of Abraham and his descendants for the blessed Lord. It is therefore appropriate to say that he prophesied to Israel.[TN210008]

Yad Yehudah - נז

"In the book of Isaiah," etc.: besides the forty-eight prophets mentioned, there is also Beeri, Hosea's father, who was a prophet. As stated in Vayiqra Rabbah concerning "When they say to you: Seek the mediums," etc., "For instruction and testimony," etc. (Isaiah 8), which Rashi cites there: Rabbi Simon said that Beeri, Hosea's father, prophesied these two verses. They did not suffice for a book and were attached to Isaiah, etc.

Yad Yehudah - נח

Likewise, Oded and Hanani were also prophets, and their prophecy was written down for later generations. As it is written (2 Chronicles 15), "And the prophecy of Oded the prophet": "He took courage and removed the abominations from all the land of Judah and Benjamin," etc. Further there, in chapter 16: "At that time Hanani the seer came to Asa, king of Judah, and said to him: Because you relied upon the king of Aram," etc.

Yad Yehudah - נט

"Perhaps one ought to remove," etc.: if Beeri, Oded, and Hanani are counted among the forty-eight prophets, there will be three extra. Three corresponding names must therefore be removed from the enumeration of the author of Halakhot Gedolot. Hence the master says that perhaps Baruch ought to be removed, since he testified of himself that he was not a prophet. This is his statement, "I am weary with my groaning and have found no rest" (Jeremiah 45). The Targum renders it, "I have found no prophecy." The midrashim likewise explain it; see their account: Baruch said, "Why am I different from all the disciples of the prophets? Joshua served Moses," etc.; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ס

The father of Baruch son of Neriah [?] should also be removed from the count, since his prophecy was not specified. It has already been explained that we require this for the forty-eight: prophecy that was not written down is not counted.[TN210009]

Yad Yehudah - סא

Likewise, Seraiah and Mahseiah should not enter the count, for this same reason. Accordingly, four will be removed in place of the three added, leaving one missing from the count of forty-eight. Therefore the master concludes shortly, "The one who completes the count," etc.

Yad Yehudah - סב

"As for the master's statement," etc.: there in the Gemara, page 15, it speaks of prophets coming from four nations. These are Kh.R.Y. [?], Baruch, Seraiah, Mahseiah, Jeremiah, Hilkiah, Hanamel, and Shallum. They object: granted, where it is explicit; but how do we know concerning their fathers? It answers according to Ulla, who said: wherever someone's name and his father's name occur among the prophets, it is known that he is a prophet, the son of a prophet, etc. Rashi wrote as follows:

Yad Yehudah - סב - continued

“Granted, Jeremiah and Hanamel, for it is written, ‘Hanamel, my uncle's son, came to me according to the word of the LORD.’ Whence do we know concerning Baruch and Seraiah? They were Jeremiah's disciples: concerning Baruch it is written, ‘He would recite all these words to me from his mouth, and I write in the book concerning it [?].’ Concerning Seraiah, within the book of Jeremiah: ‘The word that Jeremiah commanded Seraiah son of Mahseiah,’ etc. We learn from the prophets' disciples that they were prophets, as with the spirit of God upon Elisha and Joshua, Moses' disciple [?],” etc.; see there. The master objects that perhaps these four were not prophets at all. When the master calls them prophets, he means people fit for prophecy, as Tosafot explained Baruch's statement, “I have found no rest,” mentioned above. Accordingly one may explain the Gemara's “Granted, where it is explicit” as referring to Adri. [?], Jeremiah and Hanamel, who were prophets. Concerning the others, it explains that they were at least fit for prophecy as disciples of prophets, as Rashi explained and as Baruch said, “I am weary with my groaning.”[TN210010]

Yad Yehudah - סג

Alternatively, they were prophets temporarily, but their words were nevertheless not written down, and it would be appropriate to count them among the forty-eight, as explained above.[TN210011]

Yad Yehudah - סד

Likewise, Eldad and Medad were not among the count of forty-eight, although Scripture says of them, “Two men prophesied in the camp.” This is because their prophecy was not [gap]—foreseeing what would happen [?].[TN210012]

Yad Yehudah - סה

“If you object”—H.Kh. [?]—why did we count Eber when his prophecy was not written down? Do not find this difficult: his prophecy was written down, as it is said, “For in his days the earth was divided.” By naming his son, he prophesied concerning the election of the nations, etc.[TN210013]

Yad Yehudah - סו

“The one who completes the count,” etc.: it has already been explained that the master removes Baruch, his father, Seraiah, and Mahseiah and inserts Beeri, Oded, and Hanani in their place. One is still missing from the count of forty-eight. He therefore says that the one who completes the count is the old prophet, etc. As it is written (1 Kings 13), “Behold, a man of God [?] came from Judah by the word of the LORD to Bethel.” According to Rashi, in the sages' name in the Gemara cited, this was Iddo the prophet. He prophesied concerning the destruction of the altar at Bethel. The old prophet who brought him back from the road added LḤShKh [?] to his prophecy the destruction of the high places in the cities of Samaria, as it is written there: “The word he proclaimed by the word of the LORD against the altar at Bethel and against all the high places in the cities of Samaria shall surely come to pass.” He was Jonathan son of Gershom, as the master wrote earlier in Heqor Din, Part I, chapter 23.[TN210014]

name equals ninety-five, corresponding to the two kinds of powers mentioned. This also applies to David, who was ruddy: lest you say that he derived from Mars, the ninety-five powers of impurity, it therefore says "with beautiful eyes." Yafeh, beautiful, equals ninety-five; the eyes are the Sanhedrin. Of them it says, "Let the mixture not be lacking," like the mixing of wine, one to three. Here too, the one is the Lesser Sanhedrin with the Shekhinah, twenty-four; the three, three times twenty-four, are seventy-two, namely the seventy-one of the Sanhedrin with the Shekhinah. Consider this carefully. The mystery of "Let the king and Haman come": ha-melekh, "the king," equals ninety-five, the holy powers, and Haman also equals ninety-five, the powers of impurity. Therefore Esther came, a daughter of the daughter of Sarah—who was called Iscah, as above, and possessed ninety-five powers in holiness—to subdue Haman's ninety-five powers of impurity. [TN210015]

"The illuminating and the non-illuminating," etc.: they are the vav and he of the Name: vav is the illuminating speculum; he, the non-illuminating speculum. "She willingly performed with her own hands," etc.: the corresponding pattern

came to her from the two specula from which every vision proceeds: the illuminating and the non-illuminating, which are He and His court. Together with this, He attended to Sarah by offering her advice appropriate to her, as He told the moon to diminish itself. She joyfully acknowledged the justice of the judgment upon her and willingly performed with her own hands the bridal service for Hagar her maidservant. She gave her to Abram her husband as a wife, after they had freed her, as explained in Heqor Din, Part II, chapter 23. This was despite her love for him being strong as death and a woman's jealousy concerning her fellow woman's thigh being harsh as Sheol.

There is an analogy to this in the sun's ray that sometimes strikes the globe of the earth. At opposition, the earth stands between the sun and the moon, and then the moon is said to be eclipsed. Here too Sarah suffered great distress and accepted it lovingly, because her wisdom made known to her that it is right for the shell to precede the fruit in its formation, and for the righteous to begin with suffering and end in tranquility. As its reward, He attended to Sarah, in the sense of oversight, as in "You shall know that your tent is at peace, and you shall attend to your habitation." It is written, "Your husband is your Maker"; here too He "attended" and "made." One who oversees another's benefit and the filling of that person's lack is called a husband or master. When the visitation was for harm, the prophet complained, "LORD our God, masters other than You have possessed us," in the sense of "My soul shall fill them," according to our above is this. Although we expound two channels in Yesod, right and left, and if, God forbid, judgment prevails, impurity then draws nourishment from its left side, this is not to be taken in its simple sense, for what has straw to do with grain? Rather, the world follows its usual order: the influx goes from Yesod to Malkhut. But when sin prevails, God forbid, it pours through Metatron into the shell of Nogah, in the mystery of "A maidservant who inherits her mistress's place." This is the analogy to Hagar, who is the shell of Nogah, to whom Sarah herself gave influx. This suffices.

"It stands between," etc.: the sun stands within the moon. The moon must make an opening and provide room for the sun to pass through it. This is called a lunar eclipse and causes it great distress. Likewise here, Sarah provided room for the influx to pass through her and go from her to Hagar. [TN210016]

"In the sense of oversight," etc.: see above, the beginning of section 2 in Part I of this discourse. "In the sense of 'My soul shall fill them,'" etc.: the difficulty is that it should have said, "I shall fill my soul." There is a further difficulty: how could he say, "I shall pursue, I shall overtake, I shall divide the spoil," and afterward, "I shall draw my sword"? The order is reversed. One cannot say that “I shall divide the spoil” refers to before the battle, to what

Pharaoh distributed per head in Egypt, as stated in the midrash. In that case he should have said “I shall divide the spoil” first, and afterward “I shall pursue, I shall overtake.” Rather, as explained in K.Y. [?], shalal, spoil, equals “the pillars of the shell” numerically. This is “I shall divide the spoil” among Israel: these are the pillars of the shell. Through this, “my soul shall fill them,” and they will have a hold upon my soul, which was in impurity. Then I shall be able to overcome them and draw forth: “I shall draw my sword,” etc., in the sense of “Masters other than You have possessed us.” When they have a hold in impurity, those powers are called their masters, as though they possess them. When they are worthy, by contrast, “Your husband is your Maker,” etc.[TN210017]

Yad Yehudah - א

“Let us return to Sarah,” etc.: after explaining the forty-eight prophets and seven prophetesses, the master returns to what he began in section 1: the Holy One intimated to Sarah the advantage of her wisdom, and this was through prophecy. He adds that she was aptly named Iscah, etc., in order to explain the verse “The LORD attended,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“For she gazes through the holy spirit”: as stated in the first chapter of Megillah, where this interpretation is expounded: Iscah is Sarah. Why was she named Iscah? Because she gazed through the holy spirit. This is what is written, “Whatever Sarah tells you, listen to her voice.” Rashi wrote in his Torah commentary on this verse: “‘Listen to her voice’: we learn that Abraham was subordinate to Sarah in prophecy.”

Yad Yehudah - ג

“From two specula”: as stated in the Tiqqunim: “Come and see: YHWH, Adonai, which are the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Shekhinah, like two thighs—YHWH on the right, Adonai on the left. They are the illuminating and non-illuminating specula”; see there. The intention is Tiferet and Malkhut. [TN210018]

Yad Yehudah - ד

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Which are He and His court”: Havayah and Malkhut. This is, etc.: He and His court attended to Sarah by offering her, through prophecy, advice appropriate to her, to diminish herself so that she might merit giving birth. This diminution consisted of Sarah giving Hagar her maidservant to Abraham, contrary to nature. Scripture teaches us here that the trial Sarah underwent herself, ten years [?] before the visitation, was at the command of Him, blessed be He, and His court. For the LORD knew the way of these merits [?]: she would lovingly accept this, and as its reward He attended to Sarah, as the master concludes shortly.[TN210020]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“As He said,” from long ago and of old, to the moon, to diminish itself; afterward its hosts[?] increased through this, as explained in Part I.[TN210021]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“She acknowledged the justice,” etc., and accepted the diminution.

Yad Yehudah - ח

“There is an analogy to this,” etc.: Sarah's giving Hagar to Abraham as a wife resembles the sun's circuit that sometimes strikes, etc. As explained in astronomy, the cause of a lunar eclipse is the earth's shadow. When the sun and moon oppose one another and lie in one line, the sun is above the earth and the other below it. The sun's ray strikes the earth and proceeds, reaching opposite the second, the globe of the moon; through this the moon darkens. This can occur only at the full moon and at opposition, when the two luminaries oppose one another along one line, called the line of eclipses, which is in the middle of the course of the zodiac [?].[TN210022]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“It stands between” at opposition, between the sun and moon, as everyone who studies this science

knows; its place is not here [?].[TN210023]

Yad Yehudah - י

One should not say that the moon is eclipsed in its substance. In truth [?], there is no defect in the moon; rather, it changes in this way to the appearance of our eyes.[TN210032]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Here too,” with Abraham and Sarah, whom he called the two luminaries above in Part I, section 20: that is, when the handmaid came between them, Sarah already suffered great distress, as though she had been eclipsed, Heaven forbid. Therefore Sarah accepted the distress, etc., lovingly, because she knew through her wisdom. [TN210024]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“For it is right that the birth of Ishmael, who is the shell, should precede the birth of Isaac, who is the fruit”; for this is so in the nature of plants. [TN210025]

Yad Yehudah - יג

“That they be like the righteous” [?], etc.: for this further reason she lovingly accepted that distress, knowing that the righteous's sufferings change [?] and their end is tranquility, as the sages said. It was therefore fitting for her to accept distress in hope of good. So it was: as the reward for her loving acceptance, He attended to Sarah.[TN210026]

Yad Yehudah - יד

“In the sense of oversight”: above in Part I, section 3, the master explains all the meanings of the expression paqad. Here he says that, according to what we have said, its meaning will be the plain one of oversight, as in “I have surely attended,” which the master wrote there. [TN210027]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“As in ‘You shall know,’” etc., “and you shall attend to your habitation” (Job 5): the expression means that you should oversee the members of your household.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“It is written, ‘Your husband is your Maker’” (Isaiah 54): “your husband” also has the sense of oversight, meaning that the One who oversees you is your Maker. Similarly here, the expressions “attended” and “made,” as it says, “The LORD attended” and “He made.”

Yad Yehudah - יז

“For the one who oversees,” etc.: that is, this is why we interpret “your husband” as an expression of oversight: “For the one who oversees,” etc. [TN210028]

Yad Yehudah - יח

“When the visitation was for harm,” etc.: that is, we likewise find the expression master applied to oversight for harm, as the prophet said, “Masters other than You have possessed us” (Isaiah 26). The master explains that the meaning is: masters other than You, from the Other Side, oversee us for harm, ruling over our bodies and our souls. There is no need for the forced interpretation written by the commentators here. [TN210029]

Yad Yehudah - יט

“In the sense of ‘My soul shall fill them’”: the commentators explained it as “My soul shall be filled with them,” but this is forced. However, according to the aforementioned interpretation, temalle’emo is understood in its plain sense: “My soul shall fill them.” The intention is to say: with vitality from the side of impurity, my soul shall fill Israel, to rule over them. [TN210030]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“According to our explanation in Maʾamar ha-Nefesh.”

“In the hidden Wisdom,” etc.: although prophecy comes from Netsah and Hod, the prophets of truth, everything nevertheless comes through the illumination of Binah. The companions above do not separate, so its foundation is in Hokhmah. He says hidden Wisdom because Hokhmah and Binah are the companions above, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - א

“According to our customary explanation,” etc.: having mentioned in the preceding section the verse “Masters other than You have possessed us,” the master also explains, in the manner of prophecies, the verse “My lord, may the dream be for your haters, and its interpretation for your enemies,” concerning the dream (1 Kings 22 [?]). This leads incidentally to other expositions in the following sections, until in section 10 he returns to where he left off, Sarah's visitation.[TN210034]

Rema of Fano

According to our customary explanation, prophecies in the knowledge of the Most High do not necessitate evil or good until the need of their hour gives them a representational act, in accordance with the deeds of those below, and brings their recompense to completion, as will be explained shortly. It is therefore manifestly clear that Micaiah son of Imlah's prophecy concerning Ahab's death—“These have no masters; let each return to his house in peace”—was delivered at Sinai as wondrous good tidings. It is destined to be fulfilled in any event: when masters other than the blessed One are abolished and no longer rule over Israel's souls, all the likenesses will return to their unity in peace.

All prophecies, however, had their prior existence at Sinai. For the sages said that prophecy rests only upon one who is wise, mighty, and wealthy; some add tall in stature. Everything depends upon what is prepared within him in the hidden Wisdom, which is the mother of prophecy, as intimated in “We shall bring a heart of wisdom.” Beyond all these qualifications, we also require that all of them be from Moses. Its meaning is: if its transmission from Sinai to Moses, and from him to the other prophets, came beforehand, yes; if not, no. For a prophet is not permitted to introduce something new.[TN210033]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“For the prophecies,” etc.: while they are in His simple potentiality, before the prophet's vision is revealed, they do not at all compel what is to come about through them in the future, whether for good or for evil. The matter may turn from evil to good or from good to evil. But afterward the prophecy is true concerning another matter [?].[TN210035]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Until the need of the hour” and time of those prophecies, in order to bring them from potentiality into actuality, produces a representational act for them through the interpretation of the prophetic matter revealed to the prophet in his time, concerning human affairs. Then the matter has, as it were, emerged somewhat from potentiality into actuality and will subsequently be fulfilled. See Heqor Din, Part IV, chapters 7 and 8, and what we wrote there.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“As will be explained shortly”: the end of section 5.

Yad Yehudah - ה

According to this, Micaiah's prophecy of Ahab's death is clear. He said, “I saw all Israel scattered upon the mountains like sheep without a shepherd. The LORD said: These have no masters; let each return to his house in peace.” The wording “These have no masters” certainly requires attention: why did the prophecy not state the matter plainly and in clearer language? See Ralbag's commentary for his discussion. His view is that Micaiah himself altered the wording, being unwilling to say plainly that Ahab would die in battle, out of respect for the monarchy. Yet it is strange to say that Micaiah altered the prophecy's wording: he had already sworn, “As the LORD lives, whatever the LORD tells me, that I shall speak.” Scripture explicitly says, “The LORD said: These have no masters,” etc. Following Ralbag's approach, we can only say that the prophecy initially came to the prophet in that wording, so that he would not have to speak boldly against royal dignity. When he later came, A.L. [?]—he altered the wording because of his oath [?]. Even this is forced in the master's eyes. There is a second difficulty in this prophecy: what need was there to announce the people's peace, with the king at peace, since no decree was issued against his people? Therefore, according to his introductory principle, the master understands this wording, “These have no masters; let each return to his house in peace,”[TN210036] as having been delivered at Sinai in Moses' prophecy concerning the holy souls that fall into the furnace of the shells: they will return in peace. This is awaited at the end of days.

Yad Yehudah - ו

Yad Yehudah - ז

“When these have no masters”: when the Other Side and the masters other than the blessed Lord are abolished.

Yad Yehudah - ח

They will no longer rule over Israel's souls as formerly, concerning which it says, “Masters other than You have possessed us,” etc., in the preceding section. Then—G.M.Y. [?]—all the likenesses of the souls returning to their sources [?] are also intimated here. According to this, the prophecy did not necessitate Ahab's death until Micaiah the prophet came, when this prophecy was applied as true to Ahab. He made a representational act through it, so that it would be fulfilled and Ahab would die.[TN210037]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“In the likenesses”: from the aspect of ruah, nefesh and neshamah, as the master explained the matter of the likenesses in many places; see there. [TN210038]

Yad Yehudah - י

“However”: we said that Micaiah's prophecy preceded him from Sinai because this is so for all prophecies.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“For the sages said”: in the chapter Ein bein ha-muddar, “The Holy One causes His Shekhinah to rest only upon one who is mighty, wealthy, wise, and humble; all of them are from Moses,” etc. Although its plain meaning is that we derive all these qualifications from Moses, the master explains that the intention is that every one must have received his prophecy from Moses at Sinai, as he concludes.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Some add tall in stature”: as stated in the chapter Ha-matsniʿa.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“In the supernal Wisdom”: the sefirah Hokhmah, which is the mother of prophecy. Although we said above, in section 2, that every vision comes through Tiferet and Malkhut, the source of prophecy is nevertheless Hokhmah, and from it prophecy comes to Tiferet and Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Its transmission”: that of the prophecy.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“For a prophet is not permitted to introduce something new”: as the sages said concerning “These are the commandments that the LORD spoke through Moses.” The master also applies this to prophecies: they are not newly introduced to all the prophets, but come in the manner of their prior transmission to Moses at Sinai.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“It excludes what is not specified,” etc.: what is not specified was not within it, whereas what is specified was within it, namely the broken tablets. The tablets are explicitly stated to have been within it, and tablets includes broken tablets. “Except” is also a restriction, that nothing unspecified was within it, serving to include the Torah scroll that was within it. It too is called specified, because the letters on the tablets and in the Torah scroll are equivalent. Thus there are two restrictions, each including one thing resembling what is specified within it; the Torah scroll too is called specified.

“Specifically in Moses' days”: he then possessed this elevation, that all prophets prophesied only through a channel from Moses. Before Moses attained that elevation, however, He spoke with Miriam and Aaron in Egypt. Although this is included through the word “solely,” it nevertheless explains again, according to H.L.L., also its intention, and Kh.P.B.B. [?], and then explains—like a matter derived through an

This was the point at which Miriam erred when she said, “Has the LORD spoken only, solely through Moses?” (Numbers 12:2). Here is one restriction after another, serving to include. Similarly, “‘Nothing’ was in the ark ‘except’ the two tablets” (1 Kings 8:9). In the first chapter of Bava Batra, page 14a, they expound these two restrictions as including the Torah scroll beside the ark or the fragments of the tablets. Either because it says: it is not the case that only the two tablets were there; something else was with them. Or alternatively: “Nothing was in the ark” excludes what is not specified; “except” restricts again, thereby including within the category of the specified object both whole and broken tablets, or tablets and a Torah scroll, since each contains enduring letters.

Here too there are two restrictions, for Miriam said, “Has the LORD spoken only, solely through Moses?” (Numbers 12:2): the divine word rests upon the other prophets only through the channel of prophecy rooted in Moses. “Solely through Moses has the LORD spoken” restricts this to Moses' own days, after he attained that wondrous elevation in our eyes. Together with this, Scripture includes what it then explicitly states again: before that, “Has He not also spoken through us?”—in Egypt, as in “The prophetess, Aaron's sister” (Exodus inference from the lesser to the greater for which Scripture nevertheless takes the trouble to write a verse.[TN210039]

“By My Name YHWH,” etc.: it was “I appeared to the patriarchs as El Shaddai,” etc. By contrast, “By My Name YHWH I was not known to them” at all, since Moses was not yet in the world and everything depends upon the channel of prophecy. This is what it says here: “If there is a prophet among you, I, the LORD, shall make Myself known to him through a vision”—through Moses' vision. Consider this carefully.

Yad Yehudah - א

What we said at the end of the preceding section—that prophecies must be from Moses—was the point at which Miriam erred, for she did not think so.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“One restriction after another”: “only” and “solely.”

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Similarly, nothing was in the ark”: the master interrupts the subject to explain incidentally the matter of these restrictions concerning the ark.

Yad Yehudah - ד

In the first chapter of Bava Batra, concerning the ark Moses made, etc.: “Two handbreadths remained there, in which the Torah scroll lay, as it is said, ‘Nothing was in the ark except the two stone tablets that Moses placed there at Horeb.’ What is ‘Nothing was in the ark except’? One restriction after another; and one restriction after another serves only to include,” etc. These are Rabbi Meir's words. Rabbi Judah says, etc.: “It lay upon its pillars [?], not inside it.” How, then, do I fulfill “Nothing was in the ark except”? To include the broken tablets lying within the ark. [TN210040]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Either because”: the meaning of these two

15:20), when Moses had not yet been born. We find a similar case in the Gemara: Scripture takes the trouble to supply a verse for something already derived through an inference from the lesser to the greater. The tanna of the Mishnah likewise both includes and immediately explains in many places.

Miriam relied on this in her argument, and Aaron did not object, until the Holy One revealed Himself to them and informed them that there had been no perfected prophecy in the world until Moses came. For it is written, “By My Name YHWH I was not known to them” (Exodus 6:3), even to the patriarchs of the world. After him it is written, “I shall raise up for them a prophet from among their brothers, like you” (Deuteronomy 18:18). He made Moses a model for all prophets in later generations: they would prophesy only from what was transmitted at Sinai.

restrictions serving to include is that Scripture teaches us not to say that only the two tablets were within the ark. Rather, a Torah scroll or the broken tablets were also there. Its statement is thus: it was not the case that only the two tablets were in the ark.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Or alternatively”: “Nothing was in the ark” excludes every object not specified here. Apart from the two tablets specified here, nothing was in the ark. Afterward it restricts again in the same way by saying “except.” When the restrictions apply in their proper place to unspecified things, the inclusion concerns the specified object, namely the tablets. This means that not only the whole tablets, but the broken ones too, lay there. According to Rabbi Meir, a Torah scroll is included, being of the same kind as the tablets, since they are equal in the excellence of their enduring letters.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Here too there are two restrictions,” which we mentioned concerning Miriam. Through the first restriction, the other prophets are excluded from receiving a divine word independently: prophecy and the divine word come to them only

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Through the channel of prophecy” of Moses. Through the second restriction, the prophets who preceded Moses are included as receiving a divine word independently. Their prophecy did not come through Moses' channel of prophecy, since Moses had not yet been born. Accordingly, Miriam's intention was that her and Aaron's prophecy was not inferior to Moses' prophecy, for they were prophets before his birth, and their prophecy did not depend upon his.

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Together with this” comes the inclusion through the second restriction, which Miriam explicitly states at the end: “Has the LORD not also spoken through us?” That is, through Miriam, evidence of the divine word to us alone before Moses was born [?].[TN210041]

Yad Yehudah - י

“As in ‘Miriam the prophetess, Aaron's sister, took.’” The sages said in the first chapter of Sotah: “Aaron's sister, and not Moses' sister?” Rav Amram said: “This teaches that she prophesied while she was Aaron's sister,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“We find,” etc.: do not be surprised that Sh.Kh.H.Kh. [?], “Through Moses the LORD spoke,” and then explains it again here. We find a similar case, etc. [TN210042]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“On this”—her prophecy preceding Moses' birth—Miriam relied in her argument that she was as great as Moses.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“He informed them” that Miriam's claim based on her prophecy before Moses' birth was no argument or answer in the matter, since that prophecy too was not perfected. Before Moses there had been no perfected prophecy, as it is said, “I appeared to Abraham,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“By My Name YHWH I was not known to them”: their prophecy did not come through the illuminating speculum, through the Name Havayah, the attribute of Tiferet, as Moses' prophecy did. See the following section concerning the advantages of

Moses' prophecy.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“After him it is written,” etc.: further evidence that Moses' prophecy was perfected and that the other prophets' prophecies branched from it comes from “I shall raise up for them a prophet,” etc., “like you.” The intention is that Moses would be a model for all prophets throughout the generations, whose prophecy comes only from him, according to what was transmitted to him at Sinai, as above at the end of the preceding section.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“From the time it came to be, there”: the initials are M.Sh.H., Moses, for all prophecy comes from Moses, as above. This is the mystery of “his knowledge of future events became” [?]. Just as the knowledge of the Most High neither determines nor compels evil and good [?], except through a representational act below, a good or evil deed performed of one's own accord, so Moses' prophecy was in simple potentiality, not actuality, and was not yet determining. Rather, it concerned what the human being would subsequently choose from

Rema of Fano

Isaiah proclaims: “From the time it came to be, I was there” (Isaiah 48:16). For the feet of his stature stood upon Mount Sinai from the time his prophecy was there in simple potentiality, determining nothing for good or for ill. This is a great perfection of Moses our teacher, peace be upon him: his knowledge of future events became non-determining, as we explained in its place concerning the knowledge of the Omnipresent. His apprehension of them consisted in foreseeing what would subsequently be chosen. No prophetic utterance or speech preceded it; rather, “He beholds the likeness of the LORD” (Numbers 12:8). This means the very likeness that the Holy One sees of all beings other one or the other. [TN210043]

“It is written, mouth to mouth,” etc.: the divine word did not go to Moses from the blessed Lord below, from Malkhut alone, the non-illuminating speculum. Rather, it went from above downward, from Tiferet and Malkhut. This is “mouth,” Tiferet, “to mouth,” Malkhut; from there the prophecy spread to Moses. Moses had no power to hear the voice from Tiferet addressed directly to him. Instead, the speech went from Tiferet to Malkhut, and the voice was heard below of itself. Of this it says

"speaking toward him," of the reflexive formation.

"The kisses of His mouth," etc.: "His mouth" signifies Tiferet and Malkhut. Why Moses' prophecy had to be clothed from the upper mouth, Tiferet, the Name YHWH, into Malkhut is explained by Recanati, Vaʾera: "It had to come also from the mouth of the Shekhinah, to soften the voice, for no one born of woman can endure the voice coming from the innermost place." This also makes Rashi's explanation in Vayiqra pleasing: it teaches that the Holy One spoke between Himself and Himself—specifically the expression ʿetsem me-ʿatsmai, "bone of my bones"—and afterward the voice reached Moses of itself. See Zohar, Qedoshim, page 156.

"You are lying": this implies that he had already lain down, although he died only afterward. While writing the eight verses, in that instant he was lying and dying, for the lower likeness and image had departed from him. See above in Maʾamar Q.H., Part II, chapter 13. [TN210044]

"There is no representational act in this": since he was somewhat dead, until the prophet comes who is truly alive, living bodily life. Then the prophecy actually emerges into actuality, for Moses'

than Himself, including future things before they exist. Moses merited apprehending it fully. It is known that beholding is only from above downward.

It is written, "Mouth to mouth I speak within him" (ibid.). We understand this from "The kisses of His mouth" in the Song of Songs (1:2). It is written, "He heard the voice speaking toward him" (Numbers 7:89), which is of the reflexive formation, as is known. "And showing"[1] is a transitive verb: that voice and speech showed Moses the likeness we have mentioned, clearly and not in riddles.

Do not object from the LORD's statement to Moses, "You are lying with your fathers, and the people will arise" (Deuteronomy 31:16). Scripture attributes the communication to a prophet already lying down. For Moses prophesied and wrote his death and burial with tears while stripped of the elemental bodily part, which had already actually died and been buried. It follows that the lower image and likeness had departed from him at that time, as we mentioned in Maʾamar ha-Nefesh and as is thoroughly explained in Heqor Din. There is no representational act in this until the prophet comes in the LORD's name to proclaim his prophecy at its proper time while still living bodily life in the ordinary manner of the world. Then, with righteousness, judgment, and equity, the interpretation of the prophecy is determined concerning human affairs. This is the sense of "And now the Lord GOD has sent me, and His spirit" (Isaiah 48:16): His will decrees the proclamation of that prophecy by the prophecy was not yet determining, as above. In the sense of "And now the Lord GOD has sent me": now the prophecy emerges from potentiality into actuality through the prophet's speech. This is the covenant made with the lips.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Isaiah proclaims," etc.: the master brings Isaiah's words in chapter 48: "From the beginning I did not speak in secret; from the time it came to be, I was there, and now the Lord GOD has sent me, and His spirit," etc., as proof of what he said above in section 3, R. [?]: all prophecies had their prior existence at Sinai. As Rashi explained there in the name of Midrash Tanhuma: "'From the beginning I did not speak in secret'—at Sinai. The prophet says, 'From the time it came to be,' that matter which he is saying, 'I was there.' From this we learn that all prophets stood at Sinai." See there. [TN210045]

"For the feet of his stature"—Isaiah's upper stature—stood upon Mount Sinai while his prophecy was there in simple potentiality. It did not yet necessitate what would come to pass, whether for good or evil, as mentioned in section 3. "For better" [?] means for evil.[TN210046]

"This is" Moses' perfection, concerning which we said in the preceding section that his prophecy was perfected. Moses' prophecy in actuality was like the prophet at its proper hour. This is the covenant made with the lips.

other prophets' prophecies in potentiality: it did not compel. It was unlike the other prophets' prophecies

in actuality, which compel. This is considered a perfection of Moses because in this respect he made his knowledge like his Maker's knowledge. So it is with the knowledge of the blessed All-encompassing One, as we explained in Heqor Din, Part IV, section 9 [?], and in Maʾamar ha-Middot, attribute 4. See there our explanation of what we learned: “Everything is foreseen”—knowledge watches the paths of choice and nothing else, etc. So too Moses' apprehension of future events consisted in foreseeing what the person performing it would later choose, while it was possible for that person to do the opposite. [TN210046]

“No utterance or prophetic speech” to Moses preceded this matter. Otherwise his prophecy would have compelled, because it had emerged somewhat from its simple potentiality, as explained above in section 3 and in Heqor Din, Part IV, chapter 8.

“This means,” etc.: “He beholds the likeness of the LORD” does not mean a likeness of the blessed Lord, Heaven forbid, for Scripture says, “You saw no likeness.” Rather, it means the likeness of existing things: Moses too saw them in the same likeness and manner in which the blessed Lord sees them.

“It is known that beholding,” etc.: evidence for this interpretation is the word “he beholds,” which applies specifically to seeing from above downward. The sages called attention to this concerning “Look, please, toward heaven.” As we have said, he beholds the likeness of other existing things. If its simple meaning were that he beholds the blessed Lord's likeness, as it were, the seeing would be upward toward the blessed Lord, and the expression “he beholds” would not apply.

“It is written, mouth to mouth”: in this manner the master explains everything that the blessed Lord answered Miriam: “If there is a prophet among you, I, the LORD, make Myself known to him through a vision. Not so My servant Moses,” etc.; “Mouth to mouth I speak within him, and showing, not in riddles, and he beholds the likeness of the LORD.” We understand the intention of “mouth to mouth” from “Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth” in the Song of Songs. The intention there is Tiferet and Malkhut, as stated there in the Zohar: “Why pihu, His mouth? It should have said pih. Rather, to include both together,” etc.; see there. “Mouth to mouth I speak within him” means: I speak from the mouth of Tiferet to the mouth of Malkhut. Moses hears Me speaking, and thereby the speech reaches within him as it is in its fullness; it is not that I speak with him.

“It is written,” etc.: likewise, “He heard the voice speaking toward him.” The mem of middabber is pointed with hiriq, not sheva, because it is of the hitpaʿel conjugation. Its meaning is that the voice speaks between itself and itself, and Moses hears it spontaneously. Rashi likewise explains it there. This is as we said: the speech went from Tiferet to Malkhut. There is no need for Rashi's statement there that this wording expresses respect for the One above.

“Showing”: the word marʾeh at the end of the verse, “and showing, not in riddles,” is not a noun but a verb, and a transitive one, like “According to all that I show you.” Its meaning is: “Mouth to mouth I speak”; the voice and speech proceeding from mouth to mouth reaches within him and also shows him the true likeness, not in riddles. Through this, “He beholds the likeness of the LORD,” etc.

“Do not object” to our statement that Moses' prophecy does not determine from what the LORD told him: “You are lying with your fathers, and this people will arise,” etc. Although he had not yet died, He called him “lying down.” This might imply that his prophecy too determined: as soon as the prophecy and the LORD's utterance came, it was as though he had lain down [?], as with all the other prophets' prophecies, according to what was explained above in section 3 and in Heqor Din, Part IV, chapter 8, that this contains something of a representational act. In fact, there is no difficulty here. Scripture does not mean that the LORD informed Moses that he would die; rather, it attributes this communication, “This people will arise,” etc., to a prophet already lying down. Moses had already actually died and been buried at that time, as will shortly be explained. Scripture intends to tell us that this prophecy came to Moses after his bodily part had died. The blessed Lord says to

Moses: You are lying down and dead, and this people will arise, etc.[TN210046]
“For Moses prophesied and wrote” the eight verses from “Moses died” onward with tears, as is known from the sages' statement.
“While stripped,” etc.: the matter was this: the bodily part had already actually died and been buried, and the lower image and likeness had already departed from him. In this respect he wrote the truth, “Moses died.” His power to write came from the upper image, which still sustained his life, as the master explains at length in Heqor Din, Part IV, chapter 12.
“There is no” representational act in these prophecies that had their prior existence at Sinai until the prophet prepared for that prophecy comes to proclaim it at the appropriate time, while still alive in body and flesh. Then that proclamation, through the prophet's interpretation, becomes a representational act for that prophecy, so that it will be fulfilled. This differs from the LORD's statement to Moses, “You are lying down.” One cannot say that this statement was a representational act, since Moses had already died with respect to his bodily part. Moses' prophecy therefore never determines, as we have said.

“Bodily life”: the master uses an expression from Proverbs, meaning in actual flesh, blood, and body, not merely the life of the upper image, as with Moses.
“In the sense of ‘And now,’” etc.: this is the end of the verse cited above, “From the time it came to be,” etc. From the prophecy's original existence at Sinai, “I was there”; but now is the time when “the Lord GOD has sent me, and His spirit.” His spirit means His blessed will: He sent me now, wishing now to be the appropriate time for that prophecy. So He decrees concerning all prophecies that they be proclaimed at their proper hour and time by His servants the prophets prepared for this. They will be fulfilled according to those prophets' interpretation, for a covenant is made with the lips, as is known.

“The stranger who is in your midst,” etc.: although according to its apparent meaning this implies a curse, the prophecy in truth has a good interpretation, as he proceeds to explain. Only in our eyes did it turn to evil, while the blessed Lord did not determine and necessitate one side, as stated above.
“A wondrous descent,” etc.: the reincarnations mentioned above, from

Rema of Fano

Similarly, you may interpret: “The stranger who is in your midst shall rise above you higher and higher, and you shall descend lower and lower” (Deuteronomy 28:43). This is indeed an alarming statement, threatening a wondrous descent, as we mentioned above. Lot's wife is a sign of it. Yet for us it is the ultimate good. For this stranger eats carcasses from our hand; his dwelling is at the gate, and he sanctifies himself to enter the midst of our camp and become a righteous convert. His

For David was an Ammonite convert and asked to become a righteous convert; for David was an Ammonite convert and asked to become a righteous convert. Hebrew [?]; and there, a High Priest and an ordinary priest.[TN210049]

"Furthermore, Jacob," etc.: the difficulty is why Jacob said "a beged to wear," whereas concerning the convert it says simlah, not beged. Jacob has the power to elevate and purify the shells, which are called "the garment of traitors," in the sense of mixed fabrics in ritual fringes: through the commandment of fringes there is a nullification of the shells of the mixed fabrics. Likewise, priestly garments contain mixed fabrics. A convert, by contrast, lacks this power; it is enough for him to change from left to right. Simlah is an expression of semol, left.

"For forty years," etc.: this is "And He shall give me"—N.T.N., M. [?].[TN210050]

"And simlah with reference to the multitude of Israel": as it says, "It did not come to an end," etc., while with Jacob it is "a beged to wear."[TN210051] daughter's son is fit to become a High Priest; he shall eat our bread and wear our garment. As it is written, "He loves the stranger, to give him bread and a garment" (Deuteronomy 10:18). This is the mystery of the priesthood: from within and from without they are given to him to feed and clothe his daughters' sons, as stated.

Together with the birthright, Jacob merited them, for eating and wearing. This is intimated in the Masorah: "to wear" occurs twice—"a garment to wear" (Genesis 28:20), and "to wear the garments" (Leviticus 21:10). This was Jacob's desire, and he obtained his heart's desire: the priesthood never ceases from his descendants. Furthermore, Jacob and his sons have the power to purify the garment of traitors so that it is fit to wear, in the sense of mixed fabrics in ritual fringes and likewise in priestly garments. This is deliberate sins becoming merits. However, a convert who marries a woman convert lacks the power to remove the stain. Therefore a simlah, garment, is mentioned concerning him: it is enough for him to change from left to right.[TN210047]

Alternatively, this is what Jacob said: "And He shall give me," meaning for my sake, "bread to eat" for whoever is hungry, and "a garment to wear" for whoever needs it. Perhaps he foresaw the manna given to his descendants for forty years all at once, as it is written, "Behold, I shall rain bread for you" (Exodus 16:4), for all their needs, except that it would be divided in its descent and gathering day by day. Likewise, "a garment to wear" was once in forty

"Similarly": as we said in section 3 and at the end of the preceding section, when prophecy is in the knowledge of the Most High, it does not necessitate the future events to occur through it, since its content may be interpreted in another way. So it is with what the Torah says, "The stranger who is in your midst," etc. According to its plain sense it is an alarming statement, etc.; nevertheless it can be interpreted for good, as will shortly be explained. Similarly, Midrash ha-Neʿelam says: "All those curses in Deuteronomy are promises," etc.

"And a wondrous descent": to descend lower and lower through all modes of reincarnation, from human to animal, from animal to plant, and from plant to inanimate matter.

"As we mentioned": above in section 1 of this part; see there.

"Lot's wife": she became a pillar of salt and descended from the human degree to the lowest degree, inanimate matter.

"Yet for us": he will interpret this verse, "The stranger who is in your midst," etc., in the opposite way, to intimate the ultimate good.

"For this stranger": the stranger mentioned here is a resident alien who has undertaken not to worship idols. Concerning him the

Torah says of a carcass, “You shall give it to the stranger within your gates, and he shall eat it.” On this account he is called a gate-convert. We are dealing with him here; therefore “the stranger” is written years, in accordance with “Your garment did not wear out upon you.” In this fashion too, beged, garment, is precise with reference to Jacob, whose merit is strong, and simlah with reference to the multitude of Israel, in the manner we have mentioned.

with the definite article. The verse means: the known stranger, lowly and despised, who was originally a gate-convert and ate carcasses, and who will afterward become a righteous convert, to be in your midst—he shall rise, etc., as will be explained in the next section. Accordingly, the verse is interpreted favorably. The word “in your midst” is precise: the cause of his ascent and importance is that he will be in your midst and a righteous convert.

“His daughter's son is fit to become a High Priest”: as will come in the next section. The master interrupted the subject here in order to expound what pertains to it.

“Our bread”: he shall first eat priestly portions and tithes, and wear his garments from the first fleece.

“This is the mystery of the priesthood”: He loves the convert in that his daughter's son is fit to become a High Priest. As stated in Midrash Rabbah, Vayetse, on the verse “And He shall give me bread to eat,” etc.: Aquilas the convert asked Rabbi Eliezer, “Is this all the praise of a convert—that He said, ‘He loves the stranger, to give him bread and a garment’?” He said to him, “Is a matter over which the elder struggled a small thing in your eyes? For it says, ‘And He shall give me bread to eat and a garment to wear.’” He put him off with a reed. He entered before Rabbi Joshua, who began to appease him with words: “Bread—this is Torah,” etc. “Moreover, they marry their daughters into the priesthood and offer burnt offerings upon the altar.” Another interpretation: “Bread”—this is the showbread; “garment”—these are priestly garments. This is in the Sanctuary. In the provinces, “bread” is the dough offering, and “garment” is the first fleece.

“From within and from without”: the bread and garment are given to him from the Sanctuary and from the provinces.

“And Jacob”: Jacob, who struggled over this matter when he said, “And He shall give me bread to eat,” etc., had the priesthood alone in view. With the birthright he bought from Esau, he acquired the priestly gifts and garments, since before the giving of the Torah the service belonged to the firstborn. In saying “And He shall give me bread,” etc., Jacob desired that the priesthood should never cease from his seed.

“To wear the garments”: this is written concerning the High Priest in Emor. The Masorah indicates that Jacob desired priestly garments.

“Furthermore”: another explanation of this matter is that Jacob desired to purify the garment of traitors, the garments of the shell woven from the stains of sins, as is known, so that it would be fit to wear after the affliction had been washed out through repentance, until deliberate sins became merits and the accuser itself became an advocate, as explained in Heqor Din, Part I, chapter 14. This is why ritual fringes and priestly garments do not incur the prohibition of mixed fabrics. The prohibition of shaʿatnez is against mixing the portion of the Other Side into the holy side, as explained in the Zohar: flax, Cain's offering, belongs to the side of sexual transgression and idolatry; wool, Abel's offering, belongs to the holy side. The Torah forbade mixing them together. Therefore, in ritual fringes and priestly garments, which are commandments and are entirely for Him, the Torah on the contrary permitted mixed fabrics, to make the accuser an advocate. The aforementioned Masorah contains an intimation of this: “a garment to wear”—Jacob desired to wear the garment of traitors, to make the accuser an advocate, like “to wear the garments,” the priestly garments which contained mixed fabrics for this reason. Jacob needed to pray for this when he went to marry Laban's daughter. He feared Laban's pollution adhering to her, and therefore asked to purify that portion of pollution remaining in her and bring it into holiness. He connected this with “And He shall give me bread,” which is a designation for a wife, as in “except the bread which he ate.” The meaning would be: “And He shall give me bread”—a wife from Laban's house, as Rabbenu Bahya also explained; “and a garment to wear”—to purify the pollution of traitors. For the expression beged, garment, also includes the expression begidah, betrayal. This indeed succeeded for him and his sons, whose power is sufficient for it.

“However, a convert”: concerning him “bread and a simlah” is written. Here too the intention is purification of pollution. The reason simlah rather than beged is written is that his power is not so great as to remove the stain from the garment and purify it completely—“The wicked prepares, and the righteous wears”—after making the accuser an advocate. It is enough for him to shift the stain of pollution remaining in him to the other side, that is, to make those deliberate sins like inadvertent ones and bring them from the place—the place of wickedness, the left side—to the right side, where they can easily be expiated. Therefore beged is not written, but simlah: its way is not to be put on, but to be changed from side to side.

“Alternatively”: Jacob's request was that everyone who needed bread and a garment should benefit from his merit.

“Perhaps”: perhaps in this request he intended the wilderness generation: that through his merit they should be given manna throughout all forty years they would be in the wilderness, and should not lack garments during that time.

“All at once”: accordingly, it is clear why he said “bread” and “garment” in the singular: to intimate the manna, which was one bread for all forty years, and the garment, which likewise was one garment for each person throughout that whole time, as he concludes. There is no need to say that it is usual for the language to speak in a collective expression.

“For all their needs”: “for you” means for all needs, all at once, for the whole time you will require it. Only the quantity given would be divided day by day in its descent and gathering, according to what was required.

“In accordance with ‘Your garment,’” etc.: our sages said in the Pesiqta that clouds of glory wrapped them, so that they did not wear out, and they grew with Israel. It was like this snail: as it grows, its casing grows with it.

“In this fashion too, it is precise”: the use of beged for Jacob, while “your simlah” is said concerning Israel, is likewise in the manner mentioned above concerning the convert. For Jacob, whose merit is strong, the expression beged is used to intimate also the purification of traitors. By contrast, for Israel, whose merit is not as abundant, simlah is used.

In this verse [“The stranger who is in your midst shall rise above you higher and higher” (Deuteronomy 28:43)], four elevations are explained for a “gate-convert”[1] who comes to become a “righteous convert.”[2] The first, “shall rise,” is in its plain sense: to be received with a good name in the congregation of Israel. “Above you, higher and higher”—here are three crowns. “Above you” is brought forth the precious from the vile, to raise up from her eight priests who were prophets, just as Zipporah was paired with Moses for this reason. [TN210053]

“More than sixty myriads”: as our sages said, “And does the Holy One ... His word ... up to more than sixty [myriads]” [?]. For the utterance, even though conditional, which He said to Moses—“I shall make you a great nation”—was fulfilled in his seed. [TN210054] “Shemaiah and Avtalion”: they were descendants of converts.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“And there are explained,” etc.: the master returns to the verse “The stranger who is in your midst,” etc. After explaining “in your midst” favorably in the preceding section, he now explains “shall rise above you higher and higher.” Here are four elevations, all of which he applies for good, as will follow.

“For a gate-convert,” etc.: as mentioned in the preceding section.

“The first” of the four elevations is “shall rise”: in its plain sense, to be received with a good name within Israel. The master explains these four elevations in accordance with the tanna's statement in Avot: “There are three crowns: the crown of the crown of kingship, concerning which it is written, “You shall surely appoint a king over you.” This does not mean that kingship will ever cease from David's house, Heaven forbid. Rather, all appointments you make, even a supervisor of wells, must be from among your brothers; and once his mother is an Israelite, we apply “from among your brothers” to him.

“Higher” is the crown of priesthood for his daughter's son, like his mother, who is fit to marry into the priesthood initially, according to Rabbi Elazar ben Jacob in the Mishnah, chapter “Ten Genealogical Classes”;[TN210055] or even according to Rabbi Yose, after the fact. Concerning this, the sons of Jonadab son of Rechab received good tidings from Jeremiah's mouth. He too was one of them, from the descendants of Rahab's daughters—Rahab, who married Joshua, as is known. “It broadened and wound upward” with him, as stated, as a sign and wonder forever.[TN210052] For she was given to him by the LORD, to raise up from her eight priests who were prophets. This resembles Moses' union with Zipporah, to raise up, from Rehabiah son of Eliezer alone, more than sixty myriads; for every utterance for good, even if conditional, is not retracted. It also resembles the unions of Ruth and Naamah for the kingdoms of Israel.

The second “higher” is the crown of Torah, greater than both of the others. Here before us in the study house are Shemaiah and Avtalion, faithful witnesses.

Torah, the crown of priesthood, and the crown of kingship; and the crown of a good name rises above them.” Its meaning is that the crown of Torah is the highest degree, as our sages said: a mamzer who is a Torah scholar takes precedence over an unlearned High Priest. The crown of priesthood, being divine and occupied with the service of the LORD, which is true and eternal felicity, takes precedence over and is more important than the crown of kingship, which revolves amid political contrivances and temporal vanities—these being imagined felicity. The crown of a good name is not a crown in itself. It is a crown which each of the three aforementioned crowns requires. Without it no person, whether sage, priest, or king, may raise his hand; for what is he worth if he is a man of ill repute and the people murmur against him? This is “rises above them”: together with each one. The master says that Scripture attributes these crowns to the convert in four expressions of ascent. For the general crown of a good name, which all the other crowns require, it says “shall rise”: his good name in good and honorable qualities and virtues shall rise and spread through the congregation of Israel. A man possessing these has certainly come for the sake of Heaven, to take shelter beneath the wings of the Shekhinah, without any other intention. The verse then enumerates the other three crowns from below upward, to emphasize the convert's importance by the progression “not only this, but even this.”

“Above you,” said in this verse, is the crown of kingship, concerning which “above you” is also written. It does not mean that a convert is fit and qualified for kingship: this is impossible, because kingship will never cease from David's seed, as Maimonides writes in chapter 1 of Laws of Kings: “The kings of the house of David endure forever, as it says, ‘Your throne shall be established forever.’” Rather, “above you” means other offices of authority resembling kingship. As stated in the chapter “Ten Genealogical Classes”: “Rav Joseph said: We learned, ‘You shall surely appoint a king over you from among your brothers’—all appointments you make must be from among your brothers. Rav Adda bar Ahavah said to him: Even if his mother is an Israelite, we apply ‘from among your brothers’ to him. In the West, we do not appoint even a supervisor of measures from among them; in the West, even a supervisor of wells,” etc. The verse here would mean: “The stranger who is in your midst”—he marries an Israelite woman, and the son he begets, whose mother is an Israelite, to whom we apply “in your midst,” “shall rise above you” to positions of authority and appointments, of which it says “You shall surely appoint ... over you.”

“Like his mother”: the son's mother, who is an Israelite.

“According to Rabbi Elazar ben Jacob”: there in the Mishnah, Rabbi Elazar ben Jacob says: “A convert who married an Israelite woman—his daughter is fit for the priesthood. But a convert who married a woman convert—his daughter is unfit. Whether converts or freed slaves, even to ten generations, until their mother is an Israelite.” Rabbi Yose says: “Even a convert who married a woman convert—his daughter is fit for the priesthood.” In the Gemara there, Rav Nahman said: “Huna told me: If he comes to consult, we instruct him according to Rabbi Elazar ben Jacob; if he has married, we do not take her away from him, according to Rabbi Yose.” Rashi explains: If a priest married the daughter of a convert who had married a woman convert, we do not take her away from him. The master says that the verse here concerns a convert who married an Israelite woman, who bore him a daughter; a priest married her initially, in accordance with Rabbi Elazar ben Jacob. Thus the son born from her rises to the priesthood. Or the verse concerns even a convert who married a woman convert, and a priest married his daughter: after the fact she is not taken away from him, in accordance with Rabbi Yose, and the son born to him from her rises to the priesthood.

“Concerning this the sons of Jonadab son of Rechab received good tidings”: they were converts descended from Jethro, as stated in the Sifre. They were given good tidings that their daughters would marry into the priesthood, as Scripture says: “Therefore thus says the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: Jonadab son of Rechab shall not lack a man standing before Me all the days” (Jeremiah 35). There in the Sifre, they expounded this of their daughters, who would marry into the priesthood, and their descendants would offer upon the altar.

“He too”: Jeremiah was like one of Jonadab's descendants, since he too was a priest and among the eight prophets who were priests descended from Rahab's daughters. Rahab married Joshua, as stated in the Gemara, the first chapter of Megillah.

“It broadened and wound” with him, Joshua, upward to the degree of the crown of priesthood.

“For she was given to him by the LORD”: to bring forth the precious from the vile, and raise up from her eight priests who were prophets. Likewise, Moses' union with Zipporah was from the LORD, to raise up more than sixty myriads from his descendants. As stated in the first chapter of Berakhot: “Rabbi Johanan said in the name of Rabbi Yose: Every utterance that issued from the Holy One's mouth for good, even conditionally, He did not retract. From where do we know this? From Moses our teacher, for it says, ‘Let Me alone and I shall destroy them, and I shall make you a great nation.’ Although Moses asked mercy concerning the matter and annulled it, He nevertheless fulfilled it in his seed. For it says, ‘The sons of Moses: Gershom and Eliezer’; ‘The sons of Eliezer were Rehabiah the chief,’ etc.; ‘The sons of Rehabiah multiplied exceedingly,’ etc. Rav Joseph taught: More than sixty myriads. It is derived through the correspondence ‘multiplication’–‘multiplication’: here it is written ‘multiplied exceedingly,’ and there it is written ‘They were fruitful and swarmed and multiplied.'"

"And like the unions of Ruth" with Boaz and Naamah with King Solomon, which were from the LORD to establish the kingdom of Israel through them.

"The second higher": mentioned in the verse, it alludes to the crown of Torah, which the convert in your midst will merit, to disseminate Torah in Israel, as is also said of Jonadab son of Rechab according to one opinion.

"Which is greater than both": than the crowns of priesthood and kingship. As stated, in this verse each later item is more prized.

"Here are Shemaiah and Avtalion": converts descended from Sennacherib, faithful witnesses to this, who merited being transmitters of the received teaching and sages of the tradition, as is known.

And you, holy one, shall descend to sanctify land and open places, in the sense of "The LORD descended upon Mount Sinai." For it and all synagogues and study houses outside the Land are destined to be planted in the Land of Israel. One who sets his eyes below and his heart above during prayer becomes a likeness of "The eyes of the LORD your God are always upon it," for those who know its mystery. The same rule and the same reason apply to the priests and the people during the raising of the hands. With this, Rabbi Johanan's astonishment at the old people in Babylonia, in

"And you," etc.: in the preceding sections the master explained the beginning of the verse, "The stranger who is in your midst," etc., favorably. Here he will likewise explain the end of the verse, "And you shall descend below, below," for good. He says that the meaning is: you shall descend to sanctify the synagogues and study houses outside the Land, intimated by the word "below," as will shortly follow.

tractate Berakhot (page 8a), was quieted and put to rest. Since they come early and stay late at the synagogue, this is what is said: "So that your days may be multiplied upon the land." Thus they explained it to us, and it is correct.

"Below, below": this is Gehinnom and its lowest level, as the sages expounded the verse "The wicked shall return to Sheol": a lamed at its beginning and a he at its end. It is known from Rabbi Hanina in the chapter "Gold" (Bava Metsia, page 58b) that everyone descends there, even the completely righteous, to purify and sanctify it, as we explained in Heqor Din; study it. We have further wondrous and profound interpretations of this verse in accordance with this intention, as we shall intimate shortly. This suffices for what is intended here.

"Holy": Israel, of whom it is said, "You shall be holy, for I am holy"—just as I am holy, so you are holy.

"In the sense of 'The LORD descended upon Mount Sinai'": this was to sanctify the mountain. It says "descended" of the LORD's holiness, which descended upon it. Here too it says "you shall descend" with your holiness. It intends the synagogues outside the Land, to sanctify them too, like Mount Sinai.

"For it": Mount Sinai, and all synagogues, etc. As stated in the Gemara, chapter "The People of the Town": "It was taught: Rabbi Elazar ha-Qappar says: The synagogues and study houses outside the Land are destined to be established in the Land of Israel, as it says, 'For as Tabor among the mountains and as Carmel by the sea, he shall come.' Is this not an inference from the lesser to the greater? Tabor and Carmel came only to study Torah for a time, yet they were established in the Land of Israel. How much more so the synagogues and study houses in which they read and disseminate the whole Torah!" See there. Mount Sinai itself is self-evidently inferred all the more from Tabor and Carmel.

"One who sets his eyes," etc.: in chapter 12 of Yevamot, Rabbi Hiyya and Rabbi Shimon son of Rabbi were sitting. One of them began and said: "One who prays must set his eyes below, as it says, 'My eyes and My heart shall be there all the days.'" The other said: "One who prays must direct his heart above, as it says, 'Let us lift our heart to our hands, to God in heaven.'" Meanwhile Rabbi Ishmael son of Rabbi Yose came to them. He said, "What are you discussing?" They said, "Prayer." He said to them: "Thus my father said: One who prays must set his eyes below and his heart above, so that these two scriptural passages may both be fulfilled." Rashi explains: "His eyes below"—toward the Land of Israel, because the Shekhinah is present there, as it is written, "My eyes and My heart shall be there all the days." Consult the legal decisors. We see that, although "his eyes below" can only be explained as Rashi does, toward the Land of Israel—as is proved by "My eyes and My heart shall be there," referring to the Land of Israel—it is nevertheless difficult to see how that interpretation fits the expression "his eyes below." The master's view is therefore based on what was mentioned: the synagogues outside the Land are destined to be planted in the Land of Israel. Consequently, one who sets his eyes below should regard himself as though he is now standing in the Land of Israel. He further explains "his heart above" of the upper land, which is Malkhut, toward which one must direct oneself during prayer, since all influxes and blessings come through her—as male [powers], as mentioned [?]—as explained in many places in the Zohar.[TN210059] Thus everyone who sets his eyes below and his heart above with these intentions becomes a likeness of what is said of the excellence of the Land of Israel: "The eyes of the LORD your God are always upon it." Its plain sense concerns the lower Land of Israel, while its esoteric meaning concerns the upper land, the attribute of Malkhut. As stated in the Zohar on the Song of Songs: “It is the male's way to place his female continually before him, to watch over her,” etc. This is what is written, “The eyes of the LORD your God are upon it,” “that she not depart from Binah for a single moment” [?], etc.; see there. [TN210060] On the basis of all this, the verse here says: And you shall descend with the holiness of your eyes looking below, to sanctify the synagogues and study houses outside the Land with the holiness of the Land of Israel.

“The same rule”: during the raising of the hands, the priests and the people must not look at one another, but must set their eyes below, as the legal decisors write. “And the same reason”: to direct themselves toward the lower Land of Israel and, above, toward the attribute of Malkhut. As Scripture says, “Thus shall you bless the children of Israel”: the allusion here is to the attribute of Malkhut, called koh, “thus,” as stated in the Zohar; consult Recanati there. This is what the master says: both the one blessing and the one being blessed must direct their heart.

“With this,” etc.: in the first chapter of Berakhot, they told Rabbi Johanan, “There are old people in Babylonia.” He was astonished and said: “‘So that your days and your children's days may be multiplied upon the land’ is written, but not outside the Land.” Once they told him, “They come early and stay late at the synagogue,” he said, “That is what has benefited them.” As Rabbi Joshua ben Levi said to his sons: “Come early and stay late and enter the synagogue, so that your lives may be prolonged.” Rabbi Aha son of Rabbi Hanina said: “What is the verse? ‘Happy is the person who listens to me, keeping watch at my doors day by day,’ etc.; and afterward it is written, ‘For whoever finds me has found life.’” At first sight it is difficult: why did Rabbi Johanan's astonishment subside? The difficulty remains, for “upon the land” is written. Indeed, why should this commandment help to prolong life more than other commandments? The master therefore says that, with the aforementioned excellence of synagogues—that they are destined to be planted in the Land of Israel—Rabbi Johanan's astonishment was rightly quieted and put to rest. For a person fulfilling this commandment, watching at the synagogue doors day by day and helping sanctify it with the holiness of the Land of Israel, is indeed “upon the land” and has found life.

Historical index: Em Kol Hai - II - Chapter 8

“And it is correct”: I have also seen that Rabbi Maharsha Edels explained it thus in his novellae on the aggadot; see there.

“Below, below—this is Gehinnom”: the master also explains the second “below” in the verse favorably. The intention is that you shall descend below to Gehinnom to purify and sanctify it.

“And its lowest level”: therefore it repeats “below, below.” Although the master already expounded the first “below” concerning synagogues outside the Land, he nevertheless also connects it with the latter clause.

“As the sages expounded”: in Midrash Rabbah, Rabbi Nehemiah said: “Every word which has not been given a lamed at its beginning is given a he at its end, such as qarnah, ‘toward a horn,’ hadomah, ‘toward the footstool,’ seʿirah, ‘toward Seir’ [?].” They object to him: “But is it not written, ‘The wicked shall return li-sheʾolah’?” Rabbi Abba said: “To the lowest level within Sheol.”[TN210061]

“To purify it”: the purpose of their descent is that the righteous descend to Gehinnom to purify and sanctify it, as stated in Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 2; see there, Part V, chapter 5.

“Shortly”: in the following section.

“For what is intended here”: what is required for our exposition in sections 3, 4, and 5: although prophecies as they exist potentially at Sinai would in their plain sense indicate evil, their interpretation is nevertheless for good.

Em Kol Hai - Part II (ב) - Chapter 9 (ט)

Yoel Moshe - 1

"From below upward": to understand this, it seems to me that a preliminary explanation from Pelah ha-Rimmon, at the beginning of Gate 26, is needed, explaining direct light and returning light. Direct light: Malkhut becomes Keter, Yesod becomes Hokhmah, Hod becomes Binah, Netsah becomes Gedullah, and Tiferet becomes Gevurah. Thus the last five become the first five, and the first five —Keter, Hokhmah, Binah, Gedullah, Gevurah— become Malkhut, Yesod, Hod, Netsah, Tiferet. [TN210062] This is the wording of P.R., Gate 8: "The first five of direct light correspond to the last five of returning light. The beginning of thought is the end of action." Its explanation is that direct light is thought, and returning light is action, namely the awakening from below. This is returning light from below upward: what is the beginning in this is the end there. This is "Open your doors, Lebanon," so that the first ones may include the last ones.

"In the sense of 'From the eater came forth food'": the branch will return to the root. Further in Maʾamar Q.H., Part II, chapter 17; likewise here

Rema of Fano

Zechariah too prophesied concerning the destruction of the Temple: "Open your doors, Lebanon, and let fire consume your cedars" (Zechariah 11:1). Originally, however, this was only an announcement of the rectification hoped for at the end of days, through an awakening that rises from below upward. It is the Shekhinah's utterance as she leans upon her beloved: her flames are flames of longing for true service, to cleave to him, as we intimated concerning the moon. The upper Lebanon is destined to open toward her; it is the beginning of thought. Her consuming the cedars of Lebanon is the mystery of action when beings return to their receptacle, in the sense of "From the eater came forth food" (Judges 14:14). For thought begins above and ends below, while action is the reverse.

From this we understand that the beginning of action is the end of thought. For neither may an end be predicated except in the sense of the final cause, for "Of the increase of rule and of peace there is no end" (Isaiah 9:6). At the end of Part II of the aforementioned discourse, we intimated a profound and exceedingly worthy exposition of the verse "I shall leave in Israel seven thousand" (1 Kings 19:18), which truly follows this intention. It is among the prophecies whose reason was not revealed, and whose interpretation was according to their setting. We have also, in Maʾamar Gur Aryeh, an exceedingly wondrous favorable interpretation of the last ones will be included in the first ones. [TN210063]

"It begins above," etc.: direct light, whose beginning, Keter, is above and whose end, namely Gevurah, is below. Action is returning light in the reverse direction: Malkhut, which becomes Keter, is below; Tiferet, which becomes Gevurah, is above. Thus the beginning of action is at the place where the last five begin, where the first five end. Nevertheless, neither action nor thought can be described by the expression "end," for His blessed greatness has no limit or end; the expression means purpose. This whole chapter is to show that Zechariah's prophecy contains no evil, but only good, like "You shall descend below" above.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Zechariah too," etc.: according to our exposition of the interpretation of prophecies while they were still potentially at Sinai, we can likewise explain Zechariah's prophecy in saying, "Open your doors, Lebanon," etc. (there, chapter 11). He prophesied through this concerning the destruction of the Temple. Yet

according to its prior potential existence at Sinai, it can be interpreted for good. “Originally” means before Zechariah the verse “Behold, I shall again deal wondrously with this people,” etc. (Isaiah 29:14). Henceforth let what is obscure be learned from what is explicit.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

came: from the time this prophecy of his was there at Sinai, it was only to announce the universal rectification that would occur in the future, at the end of days, through the awakening of the lower beings which rises upward. Through its power all beings will return to their receptacle and root, and the holy emanated sefirot too will return to the simple potentiality of their Emanator, blessed and exalted be He. Therefore the wording of this prophecy is “Open your doors, Lebanon.” It is the utterance of the Shekhinah, the attribute of Malkhut, who says to the upper Keter, called Lebanon, as is known: “Open your doors, and let fire consume your cedars.” These are the other blessed sefirot caused by it, called the cedars of Lebanon; consult Pardes, Gate of Appellations. The meaning is that you should open your doors to the other sefirot, and your great fire will consume them; do not withhold your hand from swallowing them, for they will return to you. Zechariah received this prophecy in actuality according to his time, to intimate the destruction of the Temple, as was also explained concerning the prophecy of Micaiah son of Imlah above in section 3, and Isaiah's prophecy in section 5.

“Leaning upon her beloved,” etc.: the reason for this utterance of the Shekhinah is that her entire aim and longing is truly to cleave to Tiferet, her beloved, as she was faithfully with him before the coverings [?], as we intimated concerning the moon above, Part I, section 20 [?].[TN210064] Although the Shekhinah seeks only union with Tiferet, this will happen only at the end of days, when all emanated beings return to their blessed Emanator. She therefore says to the first emanation, upper Keter, “Open, Lebanon,” etc.; for thus in the future it will open toward the Shekhinah in this matter.

“Which is the beginning of thought”: in emanation, since it is the first.

“And consuming the cedars of Lebanon”: when the sefirot return to their Emanator, this is the end of the action of the world of Asiyah, for the world and its fullness will be consumed, as explained in Midrash ha-Neʿelam on the Song of Songs, concerning the verse “The dust shall return upon the earth.”

“In the sense of ‘From the eater came forth food’”: it was explained in Heqor Din, Part II, chapter 16, that “from the eater” means the human being, and “came forth food” means the souls reincarnated in living creatures which are eaten. The eater's perfection consists in rectifying them through eating, so that the branch returns to the root; see there. So it is here: at the time of rectification, everything will return to its root.

“For thought”: in emanation it begins above in upper Keter and ends below in Malkhut, which is also called thought in relation to what is below her.

“While action is the reverse”: it begins below in the world of Asiyah and ends above in the world of Atsilut, with everything returning to its receptacle and its own root.

“From this we understand”: the beginning of action in the world of Asiyah is the end of thought, Malkhut, from which the world of Asiyah proceeds. This is our sages' expression, “The Shekhinah among the lower beings.”

“For neither may an end be predicated”: to use an expression of end and limit concerning them. For “of the increase of rule,” and of His blessed greatness, there is no end. Just as thought, the attribute of Malkhut, cannot be described with the expression “end,” neither is it fitting to say it concerning action, since the matter reaches upward to His blessed emanation, as mentioned.

“Except in the sense of the final cause”: the expression “end” in both means the final cause. Malkhut is the final cause of action, as is known; and the purpose of action is that every being and substance should return to its root at the end of days.

“Follows this intention”: to explain the prophecy's interpretation according to its potential existence at Sinai.

“We have also”: in this manner.

“Henceforth let what is obscure be learned from what is explicit”: every wisehearted person should apply his understanding to explaining in this manner [?] all the other prophecies that we have not explained.[TN210065]

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“To the act of visitation,” etc.: what he said above, “The LORD visited Sarah.”

“That he might visit them and oversee them,” etc.: the first explanation of paqad is oversight, as above, chapter 3 at the beginning of the discourse.

“‘This time,’” etc.: they expounded, “It teaches that Adam had intercourse with every beast and animal,” etc. The expression “had intercourse” is not to be understood literally. Rather, he visited them through his oversight in naming them, and thereby completed the form of them all. This is their visitation, as in “You shall visit your habitation.” He makes her an instrument, as they said: “A woman is an unformed vessel and acknowledges a benefit only to the one who makes her an instrument”; and the intended purpose is from and within itself.

“First, to the remote cause,” etc.: the blessed Lord is called a remote cause in relation to the child. This is “Your husband is your Maker”: the blessed Lord, as it were.

Rema of Fano

We come to the act of visitation which we are explaining. Just as, before any grass of the field sprouted in the work of creation, the human being had to be formed and placed in the Garden of Eden, and only afterward “He made sprout,” so, before the species of living creatures became fruitful and multiplied, they were brought to the human being, that he might visit them and oversee them by calling them names. This is their visitation which our teachers expounded concerning the verse “This time” (Genesis 2:23). For naming each created being completes its form and makes it an instrument capable of attaining the intended purpose from and within itself.

With this it is fitting that a woman's visitation should be attributed to three heads. We have heard it in the highest heavens and found it in the formation of the child. First, to the remote cause, which is intrinsically causative in giving forms, as in “Your husband is your Maker” (Isaiah 54:5). Second, to the proximate cause, which is the channel of will in visitation, as in “As a young man takes a virgin” (Isaiah 62:5). Third, to the act of visitation itself, as in “Your sons shall possess you” (there), which we have explained. By his Maker's will, the human being was a remote cause in

“The second cause,” etc., “the channel of will in visitation,” etc.: this is the actual husband's visitation, called the proximate cause. Third is the act of visitation itself: the seed itself visits her, and this is “Your sons shall possess you.”

What he says, “We have heard it in the highest heavens,” etc., means that it has a counterpart above in heaven, in the attributes. The remote cause is the light of Keter; the proximate cause is Hokhmah; and those in the mystery of “Your sons shall possess you” are the six extremities that were included in Binah. Likewise below them, in Tiferet and Malkhut, the remote cause of the soul is the influx from Binah; the proximate cause is Tiferet; and the souls themselves included within Malkhut are in the mystery of “Your sons shall possess you.” Here is its exact counterpart above.

“So that His name should no longer be called upon them at all,” etc.: He will not be called even a remote cause in relation to them; rather, the seventy princes will be called their remote cause. The Holy One is the cause of causes, Lord over the nations' lords. For the Holy One is not described as a remote cause even of the nations' forms, and all the more not of their bodies, as He is a remote cause for Israel even of their bodies, as above.

"And among them He is called," etc.: in relation to Israel He is called simply "the Lord," not "the Lord of lords," as above; as it is written in the commandment of appearing: "All your males shall appear before the Lord," etc.

"Which is like 'the Lord,'" etc.: like His being called in relation to the nations "the Lord of lords," to indicate that He is an intrinsic cause, overseeing the particulars of their governance, unlike "the Lord of lords," which concerns the whole giving forms to all living creatures, to complete the preservation of the species, and likewise to every shrub of the field.

When the power of speech in the holy tongue was taken from the generation of the Dispersion, "from there the LORD scattered them," so that His name should no longer be called upon them at all, as will follow. "The LORD scattered them" (Genesis 11:8) under the rule of seventy princes, whom the Master of all allotted to all peoples—"not to us, O LORD"—in the sense of "lords besides You" (Isaiah 26:13). They are indeed lords by His blessed will and impart forms according to their tongues and families. He is the Lord of lords, for among the families of the earth He is not described as a remote cause even of their forms, in the way that He is a remote cause of the pure bodies of the people of Torah. Among the latter He is called simply "the Lord," as written in the commandment of appearing before Him. This is like "the Lord of lords"[1] and surpasses it, with the superiority of the whole over the particulars of His governance.

collectively. Examine this closely; it is easy to understand.[TN210066]

Yad Yehudah - 1

"We come to the act of visitation," etc.: after completing his exposition of the interpretation of prophecies, the master returns to the place where he broke off, to what he said in section 2 in explaining paqad as an expression of oversight, like "Your husband is your Maker," etc.; see there. This is what he explains here.

"The human being had to be formed," etc.: as is explicit in Scripture: "Every shrub of the field had not yet come to be on the earth," etc.; "The LORD God formed the human being," etc.; "The LORD God planted a garden in Eden in the east and placed there the human being whom He had formed"; "The LORD God made sprout from the ground," etc. The reason

will be explained shortly.

"This is their visitation which our teachers expounded": in Yevamot, chapter 6, Rabbi Eliezer said: "What is the meaning of 'This time, bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh'? It teaches that Adam had intercourse with every beast and animal, and his mind was not at ease until he had intercourse with Eve." The master says that this is not literal. Rather, the intention is that he visited and oversaw every beast and animal, calling them the names appropriate to each for the purpose of a helper. Through the power of the name given, the species would become fruitful and multiply, each from its appropriate mate. Among them all he found no helper, until he found Eve and found good. Consult Nahmanides' commentary on the Pentateuch, who likewise explained the verses in this manner.

"For naming," etc.: the reason the living creatures did not become fruitful and multiply until Adam named them is that naming in the holy tongue completes the form of that living creature. It makes it an instrument with power over reproduction, which is the intended purpose in living creatures. See below, section 31.

"With this it is fitting": with our statement that naming each created being completes its form, it is fitting to attribute the woman's visitation to three heads: proximate, remote, and intermediate causes. For this very thing applies to naming, as we said, as will shortly be explained.

"We have heard it in the highest heavens": in respect of the inner forms, which will be explained in the following section. We have found it in the formation of the child in respect of the body and external form.

“To the remote cause,” etc.: it is explained in Aristotle's Metaphysics that each of the four known causes—matter, form, agent, and end—also has proximate and remote causes. This is known to beginners in natural philosophy and the mathematical sciences. For example, concerning the efficient cause, of any sown seed that sprouts from the field we say that its agent is the farmer who sowed it to cultivate and guard it. He is a proximate cause. But a cause more remote than he is the sun, which ripens the fruits and seeds of the earth, as it is written, “From the precious produce of the sun.” A still more remote cause is the exalted and blessed Name, who gives the sun and the farmer power to act effectively. So it is with the other aforementioned causes. Here, in the formation of the child, the remote cause is the blessed Lord, who gives forms and the power of generation to the seed, so that the child can be formed from it.

“Which is the channel of will in visitation”: this is the husband.

“Third”: a third, more proximate cause is the act of visitation itself.

“As in ‘Your sons shall possess you’”: the master explained above, Part I, section 10, that the drops of seed from which the sons are formed continually mount her throughout all the days of pregnancy, etc.

“The human being,” etc.: this concludes the matter. Just as the blessed Lord is the remote cause by giving forms, so Adam the first man was in naming every created being by the blessed Lord's will and commission, to complete their forms and give them power to be fruitful and multiply for their preservation. For this he was the remote cause by the blessed Lord's will.

“Likewise to every shrub of the field”: for this reason the grasses of the field did not sprout before Adam's formation: their forms were not yet completed, since they lacked their appropriate names.

“When,” etc.: from the day God created Adam, the blessed Lord was the remote cause of each and every member of the human species, until the generation of the Dispersion rebelled, the LORD confused their language, and the holy tongue was taken from them. Their form and preservation thereby ceased. Then the LORD saw and released the nations to the princes above; these would oversee them and be as a remote cause for them.

“In the sense of ‘lords besides You’”: explained above, section 2.

“He”: the blessed Lord is the Lord of lords, but He did not call His name upon the families of the earth themselves.

“Even of their forms”: their souls.

“Among the children of Israel, the blessed Lord is called” simply “the Lord,” not “the Lord of lords,” because He is our Lord without an intermediary. Furthermore, the lords besides Him, blessed be He, are not lords over Israel.

“As written in the commandment of appearing”: “Before the Lord, the LORD.”

“This is”: the name “Lord” alone, in relation to Israel, is like “Lord of lords” among the families of the earth, “and surpasses it,” etc. For the name “Lord” is the whole, while “lords” are only the particulars of His blessed governance.

Printed annotation - 1

Yad Yehudah's explanation: This means that the name “Lord” alone, in relation to Israel, is like “Lord of lords” among the families of the earth, etc.

Em Kol Hai - Part II (ב) - Chapter 11 (יא)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“For the inner forms, however,” etc.: until now, in the preceding chapter, he spoke of the body's external forms. He now explains the soul's inner forms. Here it is the reverse: the acting God is called a remote cause of the soul's form, while the Holy One is a proximate cause.[TN210068]

“For YHWH is Elohim,” etc.: YHWH is Tiferet, Elohim is Malkhut. It is written, “You are children of YHWH your God”: from the union of Tiferet and Malkhut come the births of souls. Above them, namely in upper Keter, which is in upper Keter, “exalted,” etc., He is their remote cause.

“For the honored bodies that mediate,” etc.: this is the soul's image and likeness, mediating between body and soul. He is called “God of gods”: Elohim is their proximate cause, and the distinctive name YHWH their remote cause. By contrast, for the souls themselves the distinctive Name is the proximate cause. What he says, “He is their,” etc., means the images'.

“God of Israel”: Israel too is called elohim, gods, on account of “I said: You are gods”; and the Holy One is called God of gods.

“And the name Elohim is their proximate cause,”

Rema of Fano

For the inner forms, however, comprised in the five names nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayah, and yehidah, He is undoubtedly a proximate cause, for “YHWH is Elohim,” and it is written, “You are children of YHWH your God.” In the concealment of the Most High, exalted above all blessing and praise, where His might is hidden, He is their remote cause. For the honored bodies that mediate between body and soul, which have been called images and garments of souls, He is “God of gods,” as He is described in relation to the princes of the Chariot, ministers of the Most High. He is their proximate cause through the name Elohim alone, and their remote cause through the name YHWH. He is also called “God of Israel,” on account of “I said: You are gods.” According to most of the interpretations given of this verse, all are true and together just in this approach which we are explaining.

We have thus learned that the distinctive Name is the proximate cause of souls and the remote cause of images. The name Elohim is the images' proximate cause and the remote cause of the bodies of the righteous, whose father and mother are their proximate cause. All the appellations appear in order in this verse: “For YHWH your God is God of gods and Lord of lords.” There is an indication of the human being's parts in the verse “Singers preceded, musicians followed, amid maidens beating drums.” For the praise arising from the soul is etc.: the images'. For bodies, even Elohim is a remote cause, while father and mother are the proximate cause. In this verse, “For YHWH your God”: He is the soul's proximate cause through the name YHWH. “He is God of gods”: the images' proximate cause. “Lord of lords” is said in relation to the nations of the world, as above in the preceding section.

“Singers preceded”: an allusion to the soul, song without an instrument. “Musicians followed”: an allusion to the body, music with an instrument. “Maidens beating drums”: an allusion to the images.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“However,” etc.: this connects with the preceding section: He, blessed be He, is the remote cause of the bodies of the people of the covenant; but in respect of their souls, He is their proximate cause, for they are the fruit of His works.

“For YHWH is Elohim”: the mystery of the union of Tiferet and Malkhut which produces those fruits. Of this it is said, “You are children,” etc., as stated in the Zohar, Lekh Lekha, page 92, and elsewhere.

“In the concealment of the Most High,” etc.: upper Keter, which imparts an influx of abundant favor to all the sefirot below it, is as a remote cause for the souls. See below, Part III, section 3.

“For the honored bodies,” etc.: we also find honored bodies which are like an intermediary between body and soul. They are the soul's garments, in which it clothes itself, and they are called images. For these, the name Elohim is a proximate cause. In relation to them, the blessed Lord is called God of gods, because these garments are called elohim, gods, and He, blessed be He, is their God, their proximate cause.

“As He is described”: the blessed Lord is likewise described in relation to the angels, who are called elohim. Therefore in relation to them all He is called God of gods.

“He is their”: the images'.

“The blessed Lord is also called God of Israel”: in relation to the images, for the name Israel stands in place of the name Elohim, concerning which it is said, “I said,” etc.

“The distinctive Name”: in the mystery of union.

“And the remote cause of images”: all the more so of bodies.

“In this verse”: “For YHWH your God”—the proximate cause of souls; “is God of gods”—the proximate cause of images; “and Lord of lords”—the remote cause of the forms of the families of the earth.

“The human being's parts”: the aforementioned three—body, soul, and images.

“Song without an instrument”: of this it is said, “Singers preceded”; these are the souls.

“Music with an instrument”: either an actual instrument for instrumental music, or the body's instruments, such as mouth, tongue, and throat, for vocal music. Of this it is said, “Musicians followed”; these are the bodies.

“The forms”: the images which mediate between body and soul are the maidens beating drums. He explains the verse to mean that all acknowledged the blessed Lord and made Him king over them.

song without an instrument; from the body, music with an instrument. The mediating forms are the maidens beating drums, for they are hidden bodies, as is known.[TN210067] In Maʾamar ha-Nefesh we shall add instruction, with Heaven's help.

“To the very will,” etc.: the very will has no other name apart from the four-letter Name, and it is called King. The principal intention of this explanation continues into section 14 below.

“We are to make Him king over us, as on this day”: on Rosh Hashanah. Corresponding to ten utterances, likewise ten commandments, and likewise ten praises. The ten utterances are called the boundary from which: they are the ten sefirot as they existed potentially in the first Emanator, K.H. [?]. [TN210070] The ten commandments, the boundary between, are the ten sefirot in their places

By way of an incidental matter, let us pursue knowledge here: the distinctive Name, which alludes to the very will in its simplicity, is called “King of Israel,” whom we are to make king over us, as on this day. This is as we learned: “One does not recite fewer than ten verses of kingship.” They asked in the Gemara, “Corresponding to what?” and answered: corresponding to ten in Tiferet. The ten praises, the boundary to which, are the ten sefirot of Malkhut which are imparted to it, and from there to the lower beings.

“For Torah has the numerical value,” etc.: Tiferet is called Torah.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“For the distinctive Name”: the blessed name YHWH alludes to His blessed very will, for His blessed essence has no other name apart from it. His blessed essence is His will, for He, utterances, commandments, and praises. For the utterances were the boundary from which, concerning which it is said, “I am first”—upward to infinity. The commandments are the boundary between, as is known, for Torah has the numerical value of emtsa‘it, “intermediate.”[TN210069] Many covenants were made concerning it between the LORD and Israel, and it is what proclaims, “Apart from Me there is no God”—in the middle. The ten praises are the boundary to which, concerning which it is said, “I am last”—without limit.

blessed be He, and His will are one, as Maimonides writes in chapter 2 of Laws of the Foundations of the Torah. It follows that the distinctive Name alludes to His blessed will. The master does not say “which alludes to His blessed essence,” in order also to include will and exclude the other attributes.

“In simplicity”: abstracted from attributes.

“Is called King of Israel”: when we say “King of Israel,” the intention is the blessed name YHWH, whom we are to make king over us “as on this day,” on Rosh Hashanah. The master called it “this day” because it is the day of visitation, with which he is occupied.

“As we learned”: in the last chapter of Rosh Hashanah: “One does not recite fewer than ten verses of kingship, ten of remembrance, and ten of the shofar.” In the Gemara: “These ten verses of kingship correspond to what? Rabbah said: To the ten praises which David uttered in the Book of Psalms,” etc. Rav Joseph said: “To the ten commandments spoken to Moses at Sinai.” Rabbi Johanan said: “To the ten utterances by which the world was created.”

“For the utterances were the boundary from which,” etc.: it is known from logic and the Metaphysics that there are three boundaries. The first is called the boundary from which; the second, the boundary to which; and the third, the boundary between. For example, Israel traveled from Egypt to the Land of Israel through the wilderness. Egypt is the boundary from which they traveled, the Land of Israel the boundary to which they traveled, and the wilderness the intermediate boundary between these two extremities, through which they traveled. Concerning the verse “I am first and I am last, and apart from Me there is no God,” the Tiqqunim say: “I am first—above; I am last—below; and apart from Me there is no God—in the middle.” The master likewise explains the matter in this way. Ein Sof, blessed be He, is the boundary without end or limit from which all three first sefirot, together with the remaining sefirot, were emanated. Malkhut is the boundary without limit to which all the sefirot impart their influx. Tiferet with the extremities is the boundary between, and through this the first three impart their influx. All are “I, I am He, and there is no god with Me.”

He further explains that it is concerning these that our sages said the ten verses of kingship correspond to ten utterances, ten commandments, and ten praises. From the aspect of Ein Sof, blessed be He, from whom all ten sefirot were emanated, they said that they correspond to the ten utterances by which the world was created, in accordance with the known principle that these correspond to the ten sefirot. From the aspect of Malkhut, toward which all emanated beings turn, they said that they correspond to ten praises, as it is known that David said them corresponding to Malkhut, which is his attribute. From the aspect of the intermediate sefirot, they said that they correspond to ten commandments, through which they impart their influx. Consult Pardes, Gate 2, chapter 5.

“And it is what proclaims”: as is known, Torah is in Tiferet.

"The tanna's wording," etc.: in the Mishnah. Everything the Gemara says and explains is included by the tanna in the Mishnah, even more than the Gemara's words. For what the tanna says, "If he concluded with the Torah, he has fulfilled his obligation," means: if he concluded with those Torah verses that contain no expression of kingship, such as "Hear, Israel," etc., and "Know this day and bring back," he says that he too has fulfilled his obligation. It follows that if—if he concluded with a prophet, with a verse in which kingship is explicitly mentioned, he too has fulfilled his obligation. This resolves the Gemara's difficulty with the statement "If he concluded with the Torah, he has fulfilled his obligation," in the Mishnah.

"And we resolved it as above": in the preceding section he explained this as corresponding to ten commandments, ten utterances, and ten praises, in relation to the verses of kingship. The same applies to the verses of remembrance and of the shofar: their reason likewise corresponds to

Concerning what we learned, "Rabbi Yose says: If he concluded with the Torah, he has fulfilled his obligation," we resolve it: This is what he says—one concludes with the Torah; and if he concluded with a prophet, he has fulfilled his obligation. Those understanding scholars accustomed to our academy know how forceful the upright sayings are: one must scrutinize the tanna's wording so that the Gemara's words, and more than they say, are included in his words—whatever requires him to express both senses in the language of wisdom. In our Mishnah here we learn them. For the rabbis taught: "'Hear, Israel' and 'Know this day' are a complete proclamation of the kingship of Heaven, according to Rabbi Yose."

Thus "if he concluded with the Torah"—in which there are only three verses of kingship, already said earlier, before the Prophets and Writings—and now concluded with one of these verses specified in the baraita, he has fulfilled his obligation even though the conclusion contains no expression of kingship. It follows that if he concluded with a prophet, with kingship itself, he has fulfilled his obligation. This is a true and straightforward explanation, teaching us the wonders of the Mishnah: despite its brevity, it has a double store of sound wisdom. There is nothing in the these.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Concerning what we learned," etc.: there, "One begins with the Torah and concludes with a prophet. Rabbi Yose says: If he concluded with the Torah, he has fulfilled his obligation." In the Gemara: "'If he concluded'—after the fact, yes, but initially, no? Yet it was taught: Rabbi Yose says: One who concludes with the Torah is praiseworthy. Say: 'One concludes.' But it teaches 'If he concluded'! This is what he says: One begins with the Torah and concludes with a prophet; Rabbi Yose says: One concludes with the Torah, and if he concluded with a prophet, he has fulfilled his obligation."

"Those understanding scholars know," etc.: wherever the Gemara says of the Mishnah, "This is what he says," or "Say," and it is impossible to fit that interpretation into the Mishnah's wording, he is accustomed to scrutinize and consider the Mishnah's wording, to explain it in such a way that the wording includes that interpretation—and still more than this:

whatever requires him to express the two senses in the language of wisdom, first saying one sense and then returning to say another. For everything is included, as explained in Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 8.

Rema of Fano - continued

schools of Rabbi Hiyya and Rabbi Oshaiah that Rabbi did not derive from the Mishnah, as Ilfa said.[TN210071] The question we asked, “Corresponding to what?” and resolved as above, applies with the same rule and reason to the verses of remembrance and of the shofar.

“In our Mishnah here”: Rabbi Yose said, “If he concluded with the Torah.” Certainly, in its plain sense this wording does not bear what the Gemara answers: “This is what he says: One concludes with the Torah, and if he concluded with a prophet.” Rather, Rabbi Yose's intention in the Mishnah is to say that if he concluded with one of the Torah verses that do not mention kingship, he has fulfilled his obligation. This accords with what the rabbis taught, “‘Hear, Israel,’” etc. For there the Gemara asks: “Granted, there are many verses of remembrance and of the shofar; but there are only three verses of kingship: ‘The LORD his God is with him, and the acclaim of a king is in him’; ‘There was a king in Jeshurun’; ‘The LORD shall reign forever and ever.’ We require ten, and there are not that many.” Rashi explains: “We require ten, four of them from the Torah, since Rabbi Yose says one concludes with the Torah.”

Rav Huna said: “Come and hear: ‘Hear, Israel, the LORD our God’ is kingship, according to Rabbi Yose; Rabbi Judah says it is not kingship. ‘Know this day and bring back to your heart that the LORD is God, there is no other’ is kingship, according to Rabbi Yose; Rabbi Judah says it is not kingship. ‘You were shown, to know that the LORD is God, there is none besides Him’ is kingship, according to Rabbi Yose; Rabbi Judah says it is not kingship.” Thus Rabbi Yose's statement in the Mishnah, “If he concluded with the Torah,” means that he concluded with one of these verses Rabbi Yose mentioned in the baraita —“Hear, Israel,” “Know this day,” “You were shown”—which do not explicitly mention kingship. One cannot say he concluded with other verses of explicit kingship, for there are only three in the entire Torah, and he already said them before the verses of kingship from the Prophets and Writings, from each of which one must say three verses of kingship. Presumably, he would not initially leave aside the verses of explicit kingship to say verses that do not mention kingship. Rabbi Yose teaches us that if he concluded with these, since their subject is kingship, he has fulfilled his obligation even though they contain no explicit expression of kingship.

Accordingly, one must say that, in the master's view, Rabbi Yose's saying “kingship” in the baraita applies only to the conclusion. This differs from Maimonides' version in chapter 3 of Laws of Shofar, where he wrote concerning the verses “Hear, Israel,” “You were shown,” etc.: “Each of these verses has kingship as its subject; although it contains no mention of kingship, it is like ‘The LORD shall reign,’” etc. The Tur, section 591, wrote without qualification that these verses are verses of kingship, as in the Gemara's baraita. Consult L.B.H. [TN210072]

“It follows”: although at the end of the verse he concluded with a prophet, since his discourse ends [?] and he concluded with a verse of explicit kingship, he has fulfilled his obligation.[TN210073] Accordingly, the Mishnah's wording rightly includes the Gemara's final answer. For the Mishnah's wording, “If he concluded with the Torah,” and the Gemara's wording, “If he concluded with a prophet,” are one matter: one who concludes with a Torah verse that is not explicit, and one who concludes with a prophet's verse of explicit kingship, are equal. Now the first answer, “Say: One concludes,” also fits properly: one initially concludes with the Torah, with a verse that is not a verse of kingship. The taught wording “If he concluded with the Torah” means with a prophet, with a verse containing kingship, which is similar to one from the Torah.

“The question we asked,” etc.: this is a separate matter. The question asked in the Gemara, “These ten verses of kingship correspond to what?” was resolved as corresponding to ten praises, ten commandments, and ten utterances, as above in section 12. The same rule and reason apply to remembrance and shofar: they too correspond to these.

“For it is not qualified,” etc., “through a construct relation,” etc.: to say “YHWH of Israel,” with the distinctive Name in a construct relation to a nonsacred word following it, is not possible; only to another name, such as “YHWH, God of Israel.” Although “YHWH Tsevaʾot” is said, Tsevaʾot itself is also among the appellations belonging to the Names. Therefore it is joined to the distinctive Name.

“For kingship belongs to YHWH,” etc.: the ruler over nations too is the name El Elohim, the possessor of comprehensive governance; of this too “to YHWH” is said, for everything belongs to YHWH. In the Zohar, Miqqets, page 434, the wording is: “‘A king sent’—the upper King, ‘and released him.’ Who is it whom He sent? The redeeming angel. This is the ruler of peoples, who rules over the lower beings, and the whole is by the Holy One's command.” “A ruler of peoples”: this is the name Elohim—wrath. [TN210075]

“It is said, YHWH is

Rema of Fano

Since YHWH is ha-Elohim, the essential Name we mentioned is also called “God of Israel,” for the distinctive Name is never qualified through a construct relation.[1] Therefore Tsevaʾot is itself one of the appellations that may not be erased,[2] according to the precise versions in tractate Shevuot (page 35b), and the great legal decisors agreed. The name Elohim, however, is an appellation of governance in general. Concerning comprehensive governance it is written, “Elohim reigns over nations” (Psalms 47:9), and, “For kingship belongs to YHWH, and the ruler over nations” (Psalms 22:29).[TN210074]

This means that kingship in its entirety truly belongs to the distinctive Name, for He is our God, and for our sake He is called King of the world and God of all the earth. Yet the ruler over nations, which is the name Elohim as stated, is also a possession of the distinctive Name, like the kingship already mentioned. Something similar is expounded in the Zohar, Miqqets (page 194b), on the verse “A king sent and released him; a ruler of peoples set him free” (Psalms 105:20). For although it is said, “YHWH is ha-Elohim,” it cannot be said with precision, “Elohim is YHWH.” The root is the very substance of the branch and includes it without Elohim”: this implies that everything is YHWH. And therefore we say that Elohim is called ruler over nations and YHWH is king over him. N.B. [?] He answers: certainly Elohim, which is a branch, is included in the root, the name YHWH. Therefore the reverse, “Elohim,” etc., is not said, for the root is not included in the branch. [TN210076]

“Furthermore, taste,” etc.: another answer. What is said, “ha-Elohim,” with the definite article he, refers to the blessed Lord's oversight of Israel. Concerning the nations, “Elohim reigns over nations” is said without he. Therefore Joseph said, “Apart from me, Elohim will answer,” without he. Over it is a zaqef gadol accent, indicating the Holy One, as stated above in Maʾamar H.H., Part I, section 6. Afterward he said, “What ha-Elohim is doing.” B.Kh.Y.: he saw the dream concerning the great King Himself. N.B.H. [?][TN210077]

Yad Yehudah - 1

“The essential Name”: the blessed name YHWH, called King of Israel, as we mentioned above in section 12, is also called God of Israel, for YHWH is ha-Elohim.

“Through a construct relation”: when the name must be attached and joined in a construct relation to another, nonsacred word, the name YHWH does not enter that construct relation—for remainder; the branch does not stand thus in relation to the root, as is known to beginners in wisdom.

Furthermore, taste and see: it does not say “YHWH is Elohim,” but “ha-Elohim,” with the definite article he. And it does not say “Ha-Elohim reigns over nations,” but simply “Elohim.” Consider the precision of the appellations and the great beauty of the expression.

example, saying “YHWH of Israel”—but rather “God of Israel.” This is because the distinctive Name is the essential name, and no proper name enters a construct relation. See what Ibn Ezra wrote about this in Shemot.

“Therefore,” etc.: although “YHWH Tseva’ot” is written, this is not a

construct relation, because Tseva’ot itself is a sacred name which may not be erased. It is thus like “YHWH Elohim.” There is no need for the interpretations Ibn Ezra mentioned, which multiply there [?].[TN210078]

“The name Elohim, however”: since it is a descriptive name for rule and power, like “God of the earth,” and an appellation of governance—for a ruler governs—it therefore enters a construct relation.

“Concerning comprehensive governance,” etc.: incidentally, the master explains the verses “Elohim reigns over nations” (Psalms 47) and “For kingship belongs to YHWH,” etc. (Psalms 22), concerning general governance. He says that the governance of the peoples is attributed to the name Elohim; this is “Elohim reigns over nations.” The intention is the name Elohim in the attribute of Malkhut, as explained in the Zohar on the Song of Songs. General kingship is attributed to the name YHWH alone, for the blessed distinctive Name is our God, called God of Israel, as mentioned; and the world and its fullness were created for our sake. Therefore general kingship befits Him alone, as He is truly called, for Israel's sake, King of the world and God of all the earth. This is “For kingship belongs to YHWH.”

“Yet the ruler over nations”: “and the ruler over nations” is connected with “kingship.” The meaning is that both general kingship and the ruler over nations, which is the name Elohim as mentioned, belong to YHWH and are His possession.

“In the Zohar, Miqqets,” page 434, the wording is: “Rabbi Shimon said: It is written, ‘YHWH releases prisoners,’ etc. Yet it is written, ‘A king sent and released him.’ Why ‘a ruler of peoples set him free’?

‘A king sent’—this is the Holy One; ‘a ruler of peoples’—this is the Holy One. Rather, ‘A king sent’: the upper King sent and released him. Who is it whom He sent? The redeeming angel. This is the ruler of peoples, who rules over the lower beings, and all is from the Holy One.” Thus far. He expounded “ruler of peoples” as Malkhut, which is the redeeming angel, as is known. “The upper King sent him” alludes to His aforementioned treasury [?].[TN210079]

“For although,” etc.: do not object—how can we say that Elohim, the ruler over nations, belongs to YHWH and is His possession, and likewise, according to the Zohar, that the upper King sent him? Does Scripture not say “YHWH is ha-Elohim,” and all is one? There is in fact no difficulty here, because it does not say “Elohim is YHWH.” Had it said that, there would be room for the objection. But in relation to what it says, “YHWH is ha-Elohim,” there is no difficulty. I can always tell you that YHWH is ha-Elohim inasmuch as Elohim belongs to Him and is His possession.

“With precision”: although when “YHWH is ha-Elohim” is said, it implies that Elohim is YHWH [?], nevertheless this cannot be said precisely.[TN210080] For the distinctive Name is the root, alluding to His blessed essence, as mentioned in section 12; and the name Elohim and the other names are branches alluding to attributes, as is known even to beginners in the wisdom of Kabbalah. The root is the very substance of the branch and includes it: this is “YHWH is ha-Elohim.” But the branch does not include the root; therefore “Elohim is YHWH” cannot be said.

“Furthermore”: for another reason no objection can be raised. When we said that Elohim is the ruler over nations, we meant the name Elohim without the definite article he. The definite he alludes to kingship in its entirety, like the distinctive Name; this is “YHWH is ha-Elohim.” Perhaps one may object to this from “Know that YHWH is Elohim; He made us,” where Elohim is written without the definite he. Indeed, one may answer according to the master's approach that this is why it concludes “He made us.” It refers to Israel and to the name Elohim, ruler over nations. In relation to both, let Israel say that the distinctive Name made us and we are His possession. With this, what it says afterward, “and not we”—read “and His,” but written with alef—is also clear. We, Israel, belong to Him, to the name YHWH, and not to the name Elohim, ruler of peoples. Nevertheless, the master ought to have raised this point.

“Consider the precision of the appellations”: there is a distinction between ha-Elohim with the definite he and Elohim alone; and the beauty of the expression in “For kingship belongs to YHWH, and the ruler over nations,” in accordance with what has been explained.

(Yad Yehudah's explanation): “Through a construct relation”: when the name must be attached and joined in a construct relation to another, nonsacred word, the name YHWH does not enter that construct relation—for example, saying “YHWH of Israel”—but rather “God of Israel.” This is because the distinctive Name is the essential name, and if any substantive enters a construct relation [?]. (Yad Yehudah's explanation): Although “YHWH Tseva’ot” is written, this is not a construct relation, because Tseva’ot itself is a sacred name which may not be erased. “Although this he too,” etc.: there is no need to reverse and rearrange [?] the verse. Although “King of the nations” is said and the Holy One is not called King of the nations, “the nations,” with the definite article he, does not refer to nations as such; rather, it is like “King of the world.” Nevertheless, we have heard Rabbi Yeiva in the Zohar, Mishpatim, who reverses the verse and expounds, “Which king of the nations,” etc. “Rabbi

Only once have we heard Jeremiah proclaim, “Who would not fear You, King of the nations?” (Jeremiah 10:7). Although this definite article too is inclusive, like David's unqualified “kingship,” and resembles our saying “King of the world,” nevertheless we have heard Rabbi Yeiva expound it (Zohar, Mishpatim, page 95b, beginning “That elder opened,” etc.: “Is the Holy One King of the nations? Is He not King of Israel?” etc., through “If you say that ‘King of the nations’ is said of the Holy One, it is not so; rather, who is a king of Shimon in the Zohar,” etc.: consult Zohar, Bereshit, page 34, the section “King of nations,” who does His will with them, so that they should not say that the Holy One has no rule over them, but that there is a last patron in heaven [?] over them.[TN210082]

“A spoonful of harvest,” etc. [?]: of the wording he brought from the Zohar, the author added some in his own language, which is called a “spoonful” [?], and reduced some of its wording, which is called a "harvest," because he shortened its wording. [TN210083]

"King of the kings of kings," etc.: "King" is the Holy One, who is king over their kings, the seventy princes who rule over the kings of the earth, the kings below on earth. He is not called king over them in the sense of kingship, but in the sense of consultation. Israel, by contrast, are actual children of kings, children of the holy King.

"King of kings, in His glory," etc.: the six extremities in their own place are called "kings"; Father and Mother are called "kings of"; and upper Keter is called "King." This is "King of the kings of kings." Before the King of the kings of kings is the blessed Emanator. Likewise, "Your wonders and Your thoughts" is also thus: the boundary from which is the ten sefirot as they were in the mystery of the first thought—"Your thoughts." The six extremities in their places are "Your wonders." All is "toward us," for the sake of the ten sefirot in His intellect. Thus, "King of the kings of kings": kings of the ten sefirot in the nonexistence preceding existence, and kings of ten sefirot in their places. [TN210084] the nations who does not fear You and tremble before You?"): Which king of the nations would not fear You?

Rabbi Shimon did not wish to remove it from its plain meaning. He explained it: the upper King, to rule them and do His will with them. "For it befits You"—to be feared above and below, so that they should not say He is King of Israel alone and there is another patron in heaven for the other peoples. This is what is written, "And in all their kingdom there is none like You." This is gleaning and harvesting from the Zohar's wording.

It is a manifest plain meaning of the title "King of the kings of kings": He is king over the host of heaven, their kings above, who rule over the kings of the earth. He is not called king over the latter individually, for the word belongs to the language of counsel and consultation, as in "Let my counsel be pleasing to you" (Daniel 4:24). All Israel, however, are children of kings, and it is written, "Your wonders and Your thoughts are toward us," a wondrous verse even in its plain meaning. In relation to us He is described as King of the kings of kings in its mystery. Each of these breaks through and ascends beyond investigation. But for all besides us, there are four kingdoms above which rule by His will over all the other peoples. He, blessed be His name, "does according to His will among all the hosts of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth." He takes counsel for their welfare only through comprehensive governance and intermediaries. This is sufficient indication.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Only once," etc.: this connects with what he said in the preceding section, that general kingship belongs to the distinctive Name, governance of the nations to the name Elohim, and the definite article he intimates the whole. The master says here that, although we find Jeremiah saying "King of the nations" with the definite article, including all nations of the earth—as though he had said "King of the world," like "kingship"—nevertheless we have heard Rabbi Yeiva expound it. "Who would not fear You, King of the nations?" alludes to the distinctive Name, for we have heard Rabbi Yeiva expound the title as nonsacred, not sacred. [TN210085] This is in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 471: "That elder opened," etc.; "Is the Holy One King of the nations? Is He not King of Israel?" etc., through "If you say that 'King of the nations' is said of the Holy One, it is not so; rather, who is a king of the nations who does not fear You and tremble before You?" Which king of the nations would not fear You?

"Rabbi Shimon": granted, in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 34, he explains "King of the nations" in its plain meaning, of the Holy One. Nevertheless, one cannot learn from it to attribute governance of the nations to the distinctive Name. For he does not explain “the nations” as the nations of the earth, but as their princes above. This is his wording there: “‘Who would not fear You, King of the nations?’ Is He King of the nations and not King of Israel? Rather, everywhere the Holy One desires to be praised through Israel, and He is called only in relation to Israel alone, as it is written, ‘God of Israel,’ ‘God of the Hebrews,’ and, ‘Thus says the LORD, King of Israel’—certainly. The nations of the world said: We have another patron in heaven, for your King rules only over you alone, and does not rule the world. Scripture came and said: ‘Who would not fear You, King of the nations?’ These are the great rulers appointed over them. ‘And in all their kingdom’—those kings above, for there are four ruling kingdoms above, which rule by His will over all the other peoples. Yet none of them can do even a small thing except as He commands them, as it is written, ‘He does according to His will among the hosts of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth.’ ‘The wise men of the nations’ are those great appointed ones above, whose wisdom was from His mouth,” etc.; see there.

“To rule them”: those great rulers that the peoples have above, who act only by the Holy One's will. Therefore He is called King of the nations.

“Gleaning and harvesting from the Zohar's wording”: what we said in Rabbi Shimon's name comes from the Zohar's wording, like gleaning and harvesting, for we shortened it and sometimes added in our own words.

“It is a plain meaning”: the Zohar's exposition of “King of the nations” and “in all their kingdom” concerning the princes above is also a manifest plain meaning of our describing the Holy One as King of the kings of kings. He, blessed be He, is King of the seventy princes above, who are kings of the kings below.

Historical index: Em Kol Hai - II - Chapter 15

“The Holy One is not called king over them individually”: He does not specifically attach the name of His kingship to the kings of the earth without the mediation of their seventy princes, to be called King of kings or King of the nations. The reason is that the name melekh, king, is an expression of counsel and consultation, as in “Let my counsel be pleasing to you” (Daniel 3). [TN210086] He, blessed be He, does not consult with the nations of the world, for He takes counsel for their welfare only through their seventy princes, as will shortly follow. Jeremiah's calling Him King of the nations likewise means King of their princes, as mentioned.

“In relation to Israel, however”: the Holy One is called king over them individually, without an intermediary, for they are children of kings and the people of His counsel. All His blessed counsel and thought are toward us without an intermediary, as Scripture says, “Your wonders and Your thoughts are toward us” (Psalms 40).

“He is described as King of the kings of kings”: what we explained in its manifest plain meaning in relation to the nations of the world also applies to us esoterically. It intends the Emanator, Ein Sof, blessed be He, who is King of the blessed emanated sefirot, which are kings of Israel, the kings.

“But for all besides us”: the nations of the world. “There are four kingdoms,” etc., as stated in the aforementioned Zohar. The master brings it to conclude and explain the reason for what he said above, “He is not called king over them,” etc.

“Through intermediaries”: the seventy princes.

Em Kol Hai - Part II (ב) - Chapter 16 (טז)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

"In the fast-day prayer," etc.: in the supplications recited in the selihot on the eve of Rosh Hashanah: "Moses said before Him, My King and my God, please forgive." In truth, only King David, peace be upon him, said this appellation: "My King and my God, for to You I pray." Consult the Gemara, Rosh Hashanah, page 17b, on the reckoning of the thirteen attributes and how they are counted. See the Tosafot there, which discuss their fasting at length.[TN210088]

"The first letters," etc.: those of malki, "my King," are mercy, and the last, ve-Elohai, "and my God," are judgment, for Elohim is judgment.

"For the purpose here," etc.: for the exposition of "The LORD visited Sarah": the blessed Lord alone visited and oversaw her and was her proximate cause.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"We have already called attention," etc.: after speaking in the preceding section of the appellation King of the kings of kings, the master brings here what the liturgical poet expressed through it in the selihot formulation of the Sephardim and Italians.

"We find this appellation": "My King and my God,"

Rema of Fano

We have already called attention to this and expounded it publicly, and those who saw it were astonished: in the fast-day prayer for the whole congregation of Israel, a formulation familiar on everyone's lips bears witness that Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, stood in prayer concerning our ancestors' sins and said in his prayer, "My King and my God, please forgive the iniquity of this people." We find this appellation only in the songs of David our king, not in the words of Moses our master. Far be it from us to utter falsehood, all the more while standing in prayer and supplication before the Omnipresent.

The essential matter is as follows. In the affair of the calf, the faithful shepherd mentioned thirteen attributes of mercy. The sign encompassing them is "King of the kings of kings," which has thirteen letters. But in the sin of the spies, he saw that the need of the hour was to mention only nine attributes. Not only that: some are mercy and some judgment. The sign encompassing them is "My King and my God," which has nine letters: the first are mercy, as we said, and the last judgment, for "The LORD is a God of judgment; happy are all who wait for Him."[TN210087]

For the purpose here, our straightforward proposition suffices: He alone is, in His own person and glory, the efficient cause of giving forms to the people near Him. This is intended in the verse "The LORD visited Sarah," the subject of the entire exposition, whose only in David's songs (Psalms 5 and 84).

"Thirteen attributes of mercy": as is known from the verse "YHWH, YHWH, God merciful and gracious," etc., as the commentators counted them; see there.

"He saw that the need of the hour": not to mention all thirteen attributes given to him from Sinai. As Rabbenu Bahya wrote in Shelah Lekha: "He did not mention 'YHWH, God, merciful,' for these are attributes for one whose merits predominate, whereas Israel now had predominantly iniquities. He did not mention 'and truth,' because under the attribute of truth they would be liable, since it is the attribute of judgment. As our sages expounded, truth does not act beyond the line of the law. They believed the words of the spies, whose faith had perished and was cut off from their mouths. He did not mention 'preserving lovingkindness for thousands,' because Moses was not now praying by the merit of the fathers, since they now despised the land the fathers had chosen," etc.; see there.

"Nine attributes": in saying "The LORD is slow to anger," etc. Rabbenu Bahya there wrote that they are seven attributes; see there. In the master's view they are counted thus: YHWH, one; slow to anger, two; abundant in lovingkindness, three; bearing iniquity, four; and transgression, five; and by no means clearing, six; meaning is oversight and remembrance for good. As our sages said, “Visitations are reckoned as remembrances.” “The LORD made for Sarah” a faithful house, “as He had spoken”: this is the house of Israel, all of whom were righteous and more beloved before the Holy One than the ordinances of heaven.

visiting the iniquity of fathers upon children, seven; upon the third generations, eight; and upon the fourth generations, nine.

“Some are mercy”: the first five; “and some,” the last four, “judgment.”

“The first”: the letters malki, “my King,” and the vav of ve-Elohai, “and my God,” are mercy; the last, the letters Elohai, “my God,” are judgment.[TN210089] For “a God of judgment,” etc., is written (Isaiah 30), and Elohai indicates judgment, as is known.

“For the purpose here”: concerning Sarah's visitation, the proposition we put forward above in section 11 suffices: the blessed Lord alone, without an intermediary, is the efficient cause who gives a soul to His people Israel.

“This is intended”: in Scripture's “The LORD visited.” He, blessed be He, Himself visited and gave the form, not through an agent.

“Whose meaning is oversight”: as above, Part I, section 3.

“‘The LORD made,’” etc.: the latter part of the verse

is not a repetition of the matter but an explanation of the first part. The reason the LORD Himself visited Sarah is that “the LORD made for Sarah” the house of Israel: the tribes of Israel which came from her through this visitation. They are more beloved before Him, blessed be He, than the ordinances of heaven, because the world and its fullness were created only for their sake. Therefore it is fitting that their visitation be through the Holy One Himself, like the creation of heaven and earth. This is also the reason the expression “made” is written, as with the ordinances of heaven, concerning which it is written, “By the word of the LORD the heavens were made.”

“This festival, this sacred convocation,” etc.: the festival of Rosh Hashanah.

What he says above, “like putting a finger in the eye”: her virginity returns, like the eye whose tears return, as explained in Ketubbot.

“Her opening remained open for twenty-eight days,” etc.: for twenty-eight days of Adar it is open, since perhaps they will not

Rema of Fano

This too is a sound reason why, on this festival, this sacred convocation, the new moon is concealed: for us the LORD's festival is primary, and the new moon subordinate to it. Furthermore, the court above does not set out thrones for judgment on this day designated for judgment until the court below agrees to sanctify it. The Torah's commandment to sound the shofar does not take effect for us until the court below decrees on which day it shall fall. A similar case is “I intercalate the year, and the three years will have been completed on the new moon of Adar, in which case her virginity does not return. Once they intercalate Adar and make a second Adar, the three years are completed on the new moon of the second Adar. It turns out that intercourse occurred within the three years, on the new moon of the first

Adar, and this is from the third year that had passed [?]. Nature then changes and her virginity returns. Thus nature is subject to the fixing of the months. [TN210091]

"No stumbling block would issue," etc.: they will not err in the calculation. Even if they err, it will be a transgression for its own sake, because their intention is for good.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"This too is a sound reason," etc.: what he said in the preceding section—that Israel's visitation is more beloved before the blessed Omnipresent than the ordinances of heaven—is also the reason for fixing the festival of Rosh Hashanah at the new moon. It shows that this festival, on which the matriarchs were visited to establish the tribes of the children of Israel, is primary and more important than the moon's renewal, which is one of the ordinances and arrangements of heaven.

"Furthermore": another reason for this. The court above does not enter into judgment unless the court below has sanctified the month, as stated in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah. For this reason His blessed wisdom decreed that the festival be fixed at the new moon, to indicate that the fixing of the new moon is causative.

"A similar case is 'I call to God,'" etc.: concerning this call to God Most High, to God who completes for me." For nature is subject to the fixing of months and intercalation of years. For example, with a girl younger than three years and one day, intercourse with her is like putting a finger in the eye. If, on the new moon of Adar in which she was born, she was later raped at the completion of three years and one day, and her opening remained open for twenty-eight days, and on the twenty-ninth day the court intercalated the year, her virginity returns.[TN210090] Likewise, there is no judgment above and no festival below until the Sanhedrin fixes it.

Concerning these two undoubtedly astonishing matters, which show our belovedness before the Omnipresent, it is said: "Sound the shofar at the new moon, at the concealment, for the day of our festival." It says that it is fitting and obligatory to fulfill the positive commandment to sound the shofar on it when we fix it as a festival of the LORD. When this statute falls to Israel below, then there will be judgment for the God of Jacob in the court above, as stated.

This accords with what we learned: "If the witnesses came from the time of the afternoon offering onward, that day is observed as holy, and the following day as holy," according to the enactment instituted while the Temple stood. The son of the deputy explained in the Tosefta: "That day is holy, and they sound the shofar; the following day is holy for the offering of additional sacrifices." For although their testimony is evidence for fixing Rosh Hashanah on that day, and the court, being zealous, took care to sound the alarm at the

they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter "One who vows"—"assembled" [?]—Rabbi Avin: "A girl three years and one day old: if the court decided to intercalate, her virginity returns; otherwise it does not."[TN210092] Thus the blessed Lord subjects even nature to fulfilling the court's will in fixing the months.

"Intercourse with her": it is reckoned only like putting a finger in the eye.

"If on the new moon," etc.: not only when this happens at the end of the month, when the wonder is not so great, but even when at the beginning of the month intercourse occurred with a virgin after she was three years and one day old, and she had the status of one who had experienced intercourse for every purpose throughout the month, her nature nevertheless remains subject to the intercalation of the year after thirty days, so that she returns to her former condition in her virginity. There is no greater wonder than this. [TN210093]

"Concerning these two matters": judgment above and the festival below.

"Which show our belovedness before the blessed Omnipresent": He completes for us and agrees to our fixing.

"When we fix it": this is "for the day of our festival."

"This accords": what we say concerning judgment above and shofar sounding below accords with what we learned in chapter 4 of Rosh Hashanah (page 30b): "Originally they accepted testimony about the new moon all day. Once the witnesses delayed coming, and the Levites erred in the song. They enacted that testimony should be accepted only until the afternoon offering. If the witnesses came from the time of the afternoon offering onward, that day is observed as holy and the following day as holy." Rashi explains: "'That day is observed as holy' refers to Rosh Hashanah. From nightfall on the night of the twenty-ninth [?], they observed holiness, lest witnesses come the next year's actual beginning, to confound Satan, they nevertheless enacted in the Chamber of Hewn Stone that, from the outset, the fixing of festivals should be removed from that day until the morrow. This follows the exposition, "'You'—even deliberately." They would undoubtedly sound the shofar again on it.

For the Righteous One of the world trusts His servants the prophets, to whom He said, "This month is yours," and every court that would arise after them, that no stumbling block would issue from their hand—only a transgression for its own sake, which too belongs to the ways of the Omnipresent, as with the creation of harmful beings. Mount Carmel proves it. Therefore it is greater and much more beloved before Him than a commandment performed not for its own sake, which has no counterpart at all in His ways.

day and they sanctify it, making this night the festival night; likewise throughout the following day until the afternoon offering.[TN210094] If witnesses came before the afternoon offering, the court sanctified the month, and it became known that they had rightly observed holiness. If they came from the afternoon offering onward, although the court does not accept them to sanctify that day, but will extend Elul and sanctify the morrow, they nevertheless complete that day in holiness. Otherwise they might come to treat it lightly the next year and do work all day, saying: Last year we observed holiness for nothing, and from the afternoon offering onward we resumed treating it as an ordinary day." Thus far.

"According to the enactment": their observance of two holy days was also included in that enactment.

"And they sound": after the afternoon offering, because of the holy observance they had adopted and to confound Satan, as will shortly follow, but not to fulfill the obligation. Although the whole day is valid for sounding the shofar, they have already deferred the fixing until the morrow. Nor would they sound before the witnesses arrived, so that if the witnesses came before the afternoon offering the sounding would be for that day's obligation. For sounding the shofar is a commandment only after the court sanctifies the month. If the witnesses had come before the afternoon offering, they would not have fulfilled the obligation through a sounding before the examination of the witnesses.

"For the offering of additional sacrifices": although the whole day is valid for the additional sacrifices, as we say there in Megillah, since they removed the fixing from that day, there is no reason to offer additional sacrifices. Consult Maimonides, chapter 3 of Laws of Sanctification of the New Moon.

"For although": in truth, according to the witnesses' testimony, that day was Rosh Hashanah. For this reason too they sounded after the afternoon offering, for the court took care to sound the alarm at the year's actual beginning to confound Satan. As we say in Rosh Hashanah (page 16): "Rabbi Isaac said: Any year in whose beginning they do not sound, they bring trouble upon it at its end. Why? Because Satan was not confounded." His intention must concern a time such as this case, when witnesses came from the afternoon offering onward. Otherwise, what confounding of Satan is there, and why is this reason needed? Moreover, why should it even arise that they would not sound at its beginning? It is an explicit commandment in the Torah! Nevertheless, they enacted in the Chamber of Hewn Stone that the fixing be removed from that day and Rosh Hashanah fixed for the morrow, to observe it as truly holy for sounding the shofar as that day's obligation and for the additional sacrifices. The court has power to do this, from the exposition of “These are the LORD's appointed times which you shall proclaim at their appointed time”: “‘You’—even inadvertently, even deliberately,” as stated in chapter 2 of Rosh Hashanah.

“For He trusts,” etc.: it is not astonishing that the LORD did this, placing the enactment of festivals in the court's hands, even to the extent of deliberate action. The blessed Lord trusts His servants Moses and Aaron, to whom He entrusted the sanctification of the month, saying, “This month is yours,” and likewise every subsequent court, that they will not act deliberately except for the sake of a commandment. In our case they removed the fixing from the first day when witnesses came from the afternoon offering onward, although that day was certainly Rosh Hashanah, because of the disruption of the song. This is a transgression for its own sake.

“Which too”: a transgression for its own sake also belongs to the ways of the blessed Lord, as we find in the creation of harmful beings, as explained in Maʾamar H.D., Part III, chapter 18 [?].[TN210095]

“Mount Carmel proves it”: Elijah sacrificed upon it during the prohibition of private altars, as a temporary ruling, and it was a transgression for its own sake.

“Which has no counterpart at all in the ways of the blessed Lord”: for we do not find in them a commandment performed not for its own sake.

“The calamity of the destruction supplied its remedy,” etc.: because the Temple was destroyed and the song ceased, they were not concerned about disruption of the song.

“Only in accepting testimony”: namely, accepting it even from the afternoon offering onward. Consult all this in the Gemara of tractate Betsah and in tractate Eruvin: “From the enactment of Rabban Johanan ben Zakkai onward,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Although,” etc.: as stated in the Mishnah there: “After the Temple was destroyed, Rabban Johanan ben Zakkai

Rema of Fano

Although after the destruction Rabban Johanan ben Zakkai enacted that testimony about the new moon be accepted all day, the first enactment did not move from its place: that day and the following day are observed as holy if the witnesses arrive late. The difference is that the festivals are reckoned from the first day, since there is no concern for disruption of the song: the calamity of the destruction supplied its remedy. The Ben Zakkai mentioned in the Mishnah at the beginning of the chapter “They Would Examine” (Sanhedrin 5, Mishnah 2) is he before his presidency. He was president at the time of the destruction, went into exile at Yavneh, and restored the former practice only in accepting testimony. The stringency of one extended sanctity still remained as it enacted that testimony about the new moon be accepted all day.”

“The first enactment did not move,” etc.: as we say in the first chapter of Yom Tov (page 5b), concerning an egg laid on the two festival days of Rosh Hashanah: “Rava said: Even from Rabbi Johanan ben Zakkai's enactment onward, the egg is forbidden. Does Rabban Johanan ben Zakkai not concede that, if witnesses came from the afternoon offering onward, that day and the following day are observed as holy?” Rashi explains: “‘Does he not concede,’ etc.: although he enacted that testimony about the new moon be accepted all day, so that festivals are reckoned from the first day even if witnesses came after the afternoon offering, nevertheless, concerning observing a second festival day, the first enactment was not uprooted from its place."

"The calamity of the destruction supplied its remedy": the song, which has ceased, cannot be disrupted.

"Only in accepting testimony": accepting it also after the afternoon offering.

"The stringency still remained": the sanctity of the following day remained as it was, and it is regarded as one extended day. Therefore what is forbidden on one is forbidden on the other. It is unlike the other two festival days of the Diaspora, when an egg laid had been.

Therefore the combination of these two enactments obligated us to celebrate this festival of the LORD for two days, both in the Land and outside it, reckoning from the first day as stated. From knowledge of these true foundations, the teaching becomes clear of itself for those accustomed to mention "besides the burnt offering of the new moon" in the additional-service prayer: it should be said only on the first day. This entails no disparagement of the second festival day, for everyone knows that it does not arise from uncertainty, like the other festival days in the Diaspora. Those are two sanctities, both when they were remembered and observed because of uncertainty and now, when it is only the custom of our ancestors in our hands. A custom never imposes greater stringency on the children than the ancestors imposed upon themselves. They said "two sanctities," and for us too they are two sanctities.

on the first is permitted on the second, since they exist only because of uncertainty, as all this is explained in the Gemara there and in chapter 3 of Eruvin.

"Therefore, from the combination of these two enactments": the first enactment was that, if witnesses came after the afternoon offering, that day and the following day should be observed as holy and the reckoning should begin from the second. The second was Rabban Johanan ben Zakkai's enactment after the destruction that testimony about the new moon be accepted all day. In our time, when sanctification of the month by sighting has ceased, we are therefore obligated—as though the witnesses had come from the afternoon offering onward—to observe two festival days and reckon from the first.

"Only on the first day": not on the second, from which the reckoning does not begin. As for disparagement of the festival day—if they say it on the first but not on the second, people might think that the second is not a festival and disparage it—there is no such disparagement here. Everyone certainly knows that it is one extended day and is not because of uncertainty, like the other festivals. Their two-day enactment was initially because of uncertainty: the people of the Diaspora did not know when the people of the Land of Israel had fixed the month. Those are two sanctities, not only in the period when sanctification was by sighting, but even now, when we are knowledgeable about the fixing of the month and observe two days only because of our ancestors' custom. They are nevertheless not like one extended day, as Rosh Hashanah is, because the custom coming from our ancestors contains no greater stringency than they imposed upon themselves.

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“The critics of that objection will not find,” etc.: those who criticize Ra’avad's objection, namely the Kesef Mishneh, have not found the means; rather, Ra’avad's objection to Maimonides is true.

“The Levites' song,” etc.: one must take care that the Levites' song, which is said every morning, be said in the evening too, as in Temple times, when they were concerned about disruption of the song at the afternoon continual offering. This implies that they said the Levites' song in the afternoon too.

“Either they said,” etc.: the disruption of the song took one of two forms. Either they said an ordinary-day song for the afternoon continual offering too, thinking that the witnesses would no longer come that day—although at the other festivals they said an ordinary-day song for the afternoon continual offering, on Rosh Hashanah and the new moon they said the festival song—or they erred and said no song at all. This was the disruption of the song. All this is explained in the Gemara; study it.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“From this,” etc.: Maimonides, in chapter 6 of Laws of Festivals, after explaining the laws of the

Rema of Fano

From this there is strong support for Ra’avad's objection in chapter 6 of Laws of Festivals. None of the valiant critics of that objection will find the means to refute it. Furthermore, our ancestors' custom would not itself obligate us in this matter, for they practiced it only because of uncertainty, and when the uncertainty disappeared the custom would disappear of itself. Rather, they sent word from there that we should heed their custom lest we come into uncertainty. Thus uncertainty is the cause for us just as for them, and they are always two sanctities.

But the two festival days of Rosh Hashanah are one extended day and one sanctity at all times. There is much reason for concern if we mention the new-moon burnt offering on the second day too, lest its remedy become a disruption of the festivals, by reckoning them from it, as one reckons from every ordinary new moon.

Henceforth, do not take lightly the Levites' song for the afternoon continual offering. While the Temple stood, the sages took care not to enter a situation of uncertainty in which the Levites might err in it when eyewitnesses came after the time of the afternoon offering had arrived, as they erred on only one occasion. Either they said an ordinary-day song for the afternoon continual offering as well—even though this is the rule at all festivals except Rosh Hashanah, and every new moon is like it, to publicize that the court has condition a person makes on the two festival days of the Diaspora concerning a cooked-food eruv and two baskets of untithed produce, wrote further as follows: “All these matters we have stated applied when the court in the Land of Israel sanctified the month by sighting and the people of the Diaspora observed two days to escape uncertainty, because they did not know the day on which the people of the Land of Israel had sanctified it. But today, when the people of the Land of Israel rely on calculation and sanctify on that basis, the second festival day is not to escape uncertainty, but is only a custom. Therefore I say that nowadays a person does not prepare an eruv and make a condition, neither a cooked-food eruv,” etc., “conditionally; rather, everything is done only on the eve of the festival.” Thus far. Ra’avad objected to him, holding that even nowadays a person may make a condition concerning a cooked-food eruv and untithed produce. This is his wording there: “Although his words have something resembling a reason, we have not seen that the Geonim distinguished in this matter; and it follows all the more.” Thus far. The master's view here is like Raʾavad's. He says that what he wrote in the sanctified the month—or they became alarmed and hurried, and said no song at all for it. The Gemara explains these two possibilities.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

preceding section—that the custom of our ancestors in our hands contains no greater stringency than they imposed upon themselves—supports Raʾavad's words. If it was permissible to make a condition in the fathers' days, how can the children be stricter?

“The critics of that objection will not find”: those authors accustomed to defend Maimonides' words against objections will not find the means, in our case, to annul Raʾavad's view.

“Furthermore”: another proof for Raʾavad's words, from the plain meaning of “the custom of our ancestors in our hands.” Its meaning is that our ancestors' custom obligates us because of uncertainty, lest the matter again come into uncertainty. Without this, their custom would not obligate us at all. Since this is so, concern about uncertainty is certainly no less than uncertainty itself.

“Rather, they sent word from there”: as stated in the first chapter of Yom Tov (page 4).

“But,” etc.: this refers back to what he said in the preceding section, that “besides the burnt offering of the new moon” should not be said on the second day, and that this entails no disparagement of the second festival day, etc., as with the other festival days of the Diaspora, because those are two sanctities. For this reason the master returns here and says, “But the two festival days of Rosh Hashanah,” etc.

“Henceforth, do not take lightly the song,” etc.: rather, even nowadays the day's song should be said in the evening as in the morning.

“For the sages took care”: in Temple times they removed the fixing of the festival from its proper day so that there would no longer be uncertainty lest the Levites err in the song, as explained in the Mishnah, chapter 4 of Rosh Hashanah, cited above in section 17.

“Either they said an ordinary-day song”: according to Rabbi Zeira in the Gemara there. “What disruption did the Levites cause in the song? Here they explained it as saying no song at all. Rabbi Zeira said: They said an ordinary-day song with the afternoon continual offering.” Rashi explains: “‘They said no song at all’ with the afternoon continual offering, because they did not know which song to say: perhaps the witnesses would still eventually come that day and a festival song should be said; or they would not come, and it would turn out to be an ordinary day,” etc.

“Even though”: the disruption was not so great, because the rule for the ordinary-day song is to say it with the afternoon continual offering at all festivals. They would say a festival song only with the additional sacrifices, as explained in the Gemara there and at the end of Sukkah, except on Rosh Hashanah, when at the afternoon offering they said, “The voice of the LORD makes the wilderness tremble,” as stated there; and on every new moon, when they said the new-moon song with the afternoon continual offering. The reason was to publicize that the court had sanctified the month, as we say there at the end of Sukkah concerning the new-moon song taking precedence over the Sabbath song.

“Or they became alarmed and hurried”: they did not delay the afternoon continual offering until the witnesses arrived, and said no song at all, according to the first tanna's opinion. Consult Maimonides, chapter 3 of Laws of Sanctification of the New Moon.

Em Kol Hai - Part II (ב) - Chapter 20 (כ)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“To indicate the object,” etc.: for example, “Reuben struck Simeon” is undecided. It can mean that Reuben, the agent, struck Simeon, who is the object; or conversely, “Reuben—Simeon struck him.” The word et resolves this: “Reuben struck et Simeon.” Et indicates that Simeon is the object and Reuben the agent. It is always thus.

“Beside a form whose passive sense is apparent of itself,” etc.: even if et were not said, it would be understood as passive, since no other matter is at issue. Et then comes to include something. For example, “Your name shall no longer be called Abram”: even without et, its meaning would be understood. Et comes with the meaning “with”: it shall not be that Abraham is the principal name and Abram subordinate with it, as with Jacob, concerning whom our sages expounded: “Not that Jacob is uprooted from its place, but Israel is principal and Jacob subordinate to it.” With Abraham it is otherwise: he shall be called only Abraham alone. This is “It shall not be called et your name,” meaning “with your name.” Likewise, “The LORD visited et “Et Sarah”: it is plain in our sages' words that et always comes to include something, and gam does likewise. But what is included by et is something especially important and excellent; furthermore, it includes everything that can possibly be included, as in “et the heavens”—and their offspring; “et the earth”—and its offspring. It always indicates the object of the action. Therefore, wherever et comes to include something beside a form whose passive sense is apparent of itself, where it does not belong, as in “Your name shall no longer be called et Abram,” it undoubtedly lends itself to exposition. Here its meaning is “with,” as the sages expounded: even as subordinate to the new name, it shall no longer be used.

Likewise, in “when et Isaac his son was born to him,” many barren women were visited with Sarah. Everyone in the world perceived that the righteous people's merit had benefited them, and it is fitting to say of them, “when he was born to him,” as Rabbi Nathan taught concerning those two infants whom they called Nathan the Babylonian after him. All the more so according to Jonathan's rendering of “Behold, Milcah has borne”: all those births were through Sarah's merit, to bring forth from them Rebekah and the mothers of the tribes. Likewise, “on the day et Isaac was weaned”: Rabbi Hillel expounded that on that very day all the children Sarah had nursed were weaned. The great men of the generation dined only with Abraham; therefore “a

Sarah”: even without et it would be understood that the LORD visited Sarah, not the reverse. Therefore et means “with Sarah,” because many barren women were visited with her. Hence it says, “Everyone who hears shall laugh for me”: for my sake many nations will rejoice.

“Only with Abraham,” etc.: Sarah did not dine, but nursed their children, as they expounded “Sarah has nursed children.”

“At the beginning of the discourse,” etc.: concerning “And the LORD”—He and His court—where even the attribute of judgment became mercy. Likewise here, an inclusion after an inclusion, namely “And gam et the dead one they shall divide,” comes to restrict the defining conditions of death: even if he killed it halfway, that is, damaged it. This is consequently an inclusion, since he is then liable to pay half the damage. It is easy to understand.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Et Sarah”: the master returns to the matter of visitation.

“And gam does likewise”: to include.

“But”: the difference between these two inclusions is that what is included, etc., as in “et the heavens," which our sages expounded as including their offspring.

"It always comes": et indicates the object, as in "Reuben sent et Simeon." Et indicates that Reuben is the sender, the agent, and Simeon the one sent, the object. Without it we would not know who is the sender and who the one sent. Gam is different, as will shortly follow. Therefore, wherever we find et beside a passive form, it certainly says, "Expound me and live," since it has no connection with the passive at all.

"As in 'It shall not be called,'" etc.: yiqqare is passive, and it should say "Your name shall no longer be called Abram." Et must therefore lend itself to exposition. Its meaning is "with": Abram shall no longer be used, even merely as a subordinate name with your name, which is henceforth Abraham.

"As they expounded": in the first chapter of Berakhot, concerning "Your name shall no longer be called Jacob," etc.: "Not that Jacob is uprooted from its place, but Israel is principal and Jacob subordinate." Bar Qappara taught—"Abraham," he says, "on account of the name" [?]—"Whoever calls Abraham Abram transgresses a prohibition great feast" is written, as the sages explained.

But the inclusion effected by gam sometimes concerns the object and sometimes the agent. In either case it is enough to include anything at all. Both appear together, as an inclusion after an inclusion, to restrict, as in "And gam et the dead one they shall divide." It has already said, "They shall sell et the living ox and divide et its price." The inclusion effected by the two occurrences of et is the increase in the living ox's value before appearing in court, and the value of the fetus, which they also divide if it was a cow that caused damage. Had it said only "And et the dead one they shall divide," I would understand that they divide the value of the dead animal, whether it increased or decreased before appearing in court. It added an inclusion to restrict: they divide only an increase in the carcass's value, whereas a decrease in its value falls entirely upon the injured party.

According to our customary explanation, an inclusion in the teaching after an inclusion in the teaching serves only to restrict the teaching's defining conditions, while always extending what the teaching covers, as we mentioned at the beginning of the discourse. This is a great principle, well explained in our studies of close analysis. Accordingly, it is very fitting to explain here that it comes to restrict the defining conditions of death: even any damage at all is included in the obligation to pay half the damage. This is straightforward.

and a positive commandment." Thus even as a subordinate name it is forbidden. [TN210096]

"Here": in "when et Isaac his son was born to him," et comes beside the passive "was born," and must be expounded in the sense of "with." This follows what they said in Bereshit Rabbah concerning "Everyone who hears shall laugh for me": "When our mother Sarah was visited, many barren women were visited with her, many sick people were healed with her, many deaf people had their faculties opened with her," etc.; see there. It is fitting to say of all who were visited and of the sick who were visited with her, "when he was born to him," because these righteous people's merit brought it about for them, as though she had borne them. This is like what we say in chapter 10 of Shabbat, concerning circumcision, about two infants brought before Rabbi Nathan the Babylonian whose brothers had died from circumcision. Concerning one who was red, he said, "Wait until his blood is absorbed"; concerning the second, who was green, he said to wait until his blood falls [?]. They did so, they lived, and they called them after his name.[TN210097]

“All the more so”: it is fitting here to expound et as “with” according to the rendering of Jonathan in Hayye Sarah: “Behold, Milcah has borne; she too was relieved through her sister's merit, to bear sons to Nahor your brother.” Accordingly, et fittingly alludes to the children born from Milcah, for these too came through Abraham and Sarah's merit, to bring forth from them Rebekah, etc.

“Likewise, on the day et Isaac was weaned”: et does not fit properly with “was weaned,” which is passive. A certain sage named Rabbi Hillel therefore explained it as “with”: the other children whom she nursed were weaned with him. As our sages said in the chapter “The Laborers”: on the day he was weaned, Abraham invited all the great men of the generation, and Sarah invited their wives and nursed their children before their eyes, to show that Isaac was born from her. Consult the Pesiqta on this, cited in the Yalqut there.

“But,” etc.: this refers back to what he said above about the inclusion effected by et. He now concludes that the inclusion effected by gam is not like that of et, for it comes with both agent and object. Furthermore, for gam, in either case—with agent or object—it suffices to include anything at all, even a small matter, not specifically something important and everything that can possibly be included, as with et.

“Both appear”: gam and et.

“As in”: what is written in Mishpatim: “If a man's ox gores his fellow's ox and it dies, they shall sell et the living ox and divide et its price, and gam et the dead one they shall divide.”

“The inclusion of the two occurrences of et”: in “they shall sell et” and “divide et.”

“The increase in value,” etc.: in the chapter “One Who Places” (page 33), we say: “The increase in the injuring animal's value, in relation to the injured party”—Rabbi Yose according to Rabbi Ishmael [?], who says he is a creditor and money is owed to him. But according to Rabbi Aqiva, who says they are partners, they divide it; and all the legal decisors ruled thus.[TN210098] Concerning a cow that caused damage, we say in the chapter “An Ox That Gored”—“were pressed” [?]—that he collects the damages also from the offspring.[TN210099] The master says that these two laws are derived for us from the inclusion effected by the aforementioned two occurrences of et.

“It added an inclusion”: gam.

“But a decrease in the carcass's value falls entirely upon the injured party”: the one who caused the damage pays for it only according to its value at the time of the damage, as we conclude there in the chapter “One Who Places.”

“To restrict the defining conditions”: of that teaching itself. “While always extending the teaching”: this restriction of the teaching's defining conditions is itself what includes something in the teaching.

“To explain here”: the two aforementioned inclusions.

“It comes to restrict the defining conditions of death”: to say that he is liable for the damage not only if an ox killed its fellow, but even if it damaged it without killing it. This is the inclusion produced through the restriction.

“But lover and friend,” etc.: the word raʿ is an expression of reʿa, friend, rather than evil, as in “And behold, very good,” which the midrashim expounded of the angel of death or death, for all is good in God's work.

“To show generosity of spirit,” etc.: not that he should actually take everything.

“There He was a God who hides Himself,” etc.: five things were lacking in the Second Temple which had been in the First, etc., as mentioned in Yoma; consult them.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Similarly”: Scripture's “On a good day be in goodness, and on an evil day consider: gam et this opposite that God has made” (Ecclesiastes 7). Through the two inclusions, gam and et, it restricts the evil mentioned, saying that there is no evil in God's work; rather, the raʿ it says is an expression of reʿa, friend.

“In the sense of ‘And behold, very good’”: said in the work of creation. Our sages expounded it of life and death, for all is good in God's work.

“Gam et the world He placed in their heart”

Rema of Fano

Similarly, “‘Gam et’ this opposite that God has made.”[1] It restricts: there is no evil in God's work, but “lover and friend” (Psalms 88:19).[2][TN210100] This is in the sense of “And behold, very good” (Genesis 1:31).[3] “Gam et the world He placed in their heart” (Ecclesiastes 3:11): it makes an exception for the decree that the dead be forgotten from the heart. “Gam et everything let him take” (2 Samuel 19:31): it restricts, for Mephibosheth said this only to show generosity of spirit toward the kingship of David's house, restored to its place.

Likewise, “I shall remember et My covenant with Jacob” includes remembrance of the Shekhinah, which is destined to be revealed in the Third Temple. “And af et My covenant with Isaac”: this is the Shekhinah which was in the Second Temple. Here there is an inclusion after an inclusion, to restrict, since there He was a God who hides Himself, as is known (Yoma 21b). “And af et My covenant with Abraham”: this is the dwelling of the Shekhinah in the First Temple. It restricts: this was not entirely according to His will, for it is written, “For this city has been to Me a cause of My anger and My wrath”[4] (Jeremiah 32:31). This is said of the morning continual offering which was offered at the fourth hour, when Pharaoh's daughter led Solomon astray.[5]

“And the land I shall remember”

(Ecclesiastes 3): through these two inclusions it excludes remembrance of the dead, which God did not place in human hearts; rather, He decreed that the dead be forgotten from the heart, as our sages said. Likewise, David said to Mephibosheth, “You and Ziba shall divide the field,” and it is written, “Mephibosheth said to the king: Gam et everything let him take, since my lord the king has come safely to his house” (2 Samuel 19). Here too the two inclusions restrict: he does not wish Ziba to take more than the half David said. He said “Let him take everything” only to show his generosity of spirit: even had David said that he should take everything, he would not mind. Not only would he not, out of revenge for this, look with displeasure upon the king's safe return; rather, this itself would be his consolation and make up his loss—“since he has come,” etc., and his kingship has returned to its place. This is better for him than thousands of gold and silver.

It further seems to me that, because David first said to Ziba, when he brought a slander against Mephibosheth, “Behold, all that belongs to good in your eyes," David regretted it and granted him a concession in his field, that he and Ziba should divide it—Mephibosheth therefore said, "Gam et everything let him take." That is, even if the king maintains his first words, that Ziba take everything, I do not mind, "since he has come," etc. For now that my lord the king has come safely, it is well with me, even if I am left without my property. Mephibosheth's intention was to make known that he had not defended himself for the sake of his property, but so that the king should know he was faithful to his covenant.

"Likewise, 'I shall remember et My covenant with Jacob, and af et My covenant with Isaac, and af et My covenant with Abraham I shall remember, and the land I shall remember'": it says the inclusion et with Jacob, and the two inclusions af et with Isaac and Abraham. With Jacob, the third of the patriarchs, it includes that through his merit He will remember the dwelling of the Shekhinah in the Third Temple—may it speedily be built. Here there is no restriction; for this reason too it begins with him and counts backward. With Isaac it includes the dwelling of the Shekhinah in the Second Temple, and through the two inclusions it excludes the things lacking in the Second Temple: the Ark, the jar of manna, etc., as stated in chapter 5 of Yoma. This is "a God who hides Himself" (Isaiah 45). With Abraham it includes the dwelling of the Shekhinah in the First Temple; the restriction through the two inclusions intimates that this was contrary to the blessed Omnipresent's will, as it is written, "For ... My anger," etc. (Jeremiah 32). They expounded this in chapter 4 of Niddah (page 70b) concerning the time after Solomon married Pharaoh's daughter. Likewise, Vayiqra Rabbah states that the Omnipresent considered destroying it on that night, for Solomon slept until the fourth hour of the day, with the Temple keys beneath his head, and the

"This is the land of life": the upper land, which is not dependent upon anything, unlike the Land of Israel, which was given conditionally, as is known.

"Gam et the lion," etc., 1 Samuel 17: it restricts the lion's death. Therefore gam et is said, an inclusion after an inclusion to restrict: he did not kill the lion, but struck it and it fled; the bear he actually killed. "Et the lion" means he struck and weakened the lion's strength, subordinate to it.

"Had the lion died," etc.: Nebuchadnezzar is called a lion, as it says, "A lion has come up from its thicket." Likewise among the four beasts seen in the dream, the lion's likeness refers to Nebuchadnezzar.

"Which alludes to their kingdom," etc.: Persia and Media's.

"It includes the bear's support," etc.: princes above came with it to help, and the Holy One brought it already overcome before David, in the sense of "He will visit the host of the heights in the heights," and afterward "upon the earth," etc. N.B. [?]. [TN210104]

"Taking hold of its beard is a designation of its mazzal," etc.: consult what is said in Ma'amar Q.A., chapter 8 [?], concerning the upper mazzal: it is ve-naqqeh, "and clearing," G.G. of the rectifications of

Rema of Fano

Likewise, we have heard David son of Jesse speak through this in the language of wisdom when he said to King Saul, "Gam et the lion, gam the bear, your servant struck." It restricts the lion's death: the lion did not die, but the bear died. It means: your servant struck the lion's strength, which is subordinate to it. He humbled the lion's pride but did not kill it. Had the lion died by his hand, Nebuchadnezzar would not have destroyed our holy Temple. For the kings of Media and Persia sought to abolish it but could not, since the bear, which alludes to their kingdom, died by David's hand. Therefore he said, "The Philistine shall be like one of them": the man shall die like the bear or be weakened like the lion.

With this, his earlier statement is precise: "The lion came, and et the bear." It includes the bear's support and vitality from above, which came to harm a scattered sheep. The lion was struck and fled; this lower bear, through its power and support from above, rose up and acted cruelly against David. What is written afterward? "I took hold of its beard," which is a designation of its mazzal, as is known to those familiar with the appellations of the stature. [TN210103] "I struck it"—above; "and killed it"—below. Since that upper support of its was destined to fall into David's hand, as stated, it was the beard [?]. Understand this mystery, and seek its fortune through me [?]. [TN210105]

"'I strengthened its beard'": I completed what was intended for the roots above, to nullify evil.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"He speaks through it": through the rule of an inclusion after an inclusion mentioned at the end of the preceding section. As it is written: "David said to Saul: Your servant was tending his father's sheep, and the lion came, and et the bear, and carried off a sheep from the flock. I went out after it, struck it, and rescued it from its mouth. It rose against me, and I took hold of its beard and struck it and killed it. Gam et the lion, gam the bear, your servant struck, and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be like one of them," etc. (Samuel 17). Through the two inclusions gam et mentioned of the lion, he restricts: he did not kill the lion, but only struck it and weakened its power and strength, subordinate to the lion's substance and essence. The bear alone he killed. Thus the first "I struck it" refers to the lion, while what is said afterward, “It rose against me,” etc., “I struck it and killed it,” refers to the bear. “Had it died,” etc.: this act contained an intimation and a representational act concerning Nebuchadnezzar, who is called a lion, as Scripture says of him, “A lion has come up from its thicket”; and concerning the kings of Media and Persia, their plan throughout the days of Cyrus king of Persia and until the reign of Darius king of Persia. In the reign of Ahasuerus, at the beginning of his reign, they wrote an accusation,” etc. (Ezra 4). It appears that concerning this Daniel writes, “The prince of the kingdom of Persia stood against me,” etc.

“But could not”: rather, they reversed course and commanded that it be built. This was because the bear died. Had the lion too died, Nebuchadnezzar likewise would not have been able to destroy it.

“Therefore he said, ‘like one of them’”: because the striking was not the same for both.

“And et the bear”: at first sight et makes no sense, since it should have said “The lion and the bear came.” For this reason Rabbi David Qimhi explained it as “with”: the lion came with the bear. This is strained, for then the vav of ve-et is superfluous. According to our approach, however, it means that the lion came, and the bear with its support and its mazzal above. This is what Scripture includes through “and et the bear.”

“‘I took hold of its beard’”: this refers not to the bear, but to the beard in the stature above, an appellation and designation of the upper mazzal, the attribute of Binah, called by the name Ehyeh. This will be explained shortly.

mentioned from the outset as the object of action, in “and et the bear”: it came before him already overcome from heaven. This is a sound and necessary precision.

It is known that nullifying evil below completes the strengthening intended for the roots above, in the sense of “You shall see the recompense of the wicked.” Thus, “I strengthened its beard.” The whole account is expressed with the utmost precision.

“‘I struck it’”: it would have been enough to say “I killed it”; rather, it indicates that he struck the prince above and killed the bear below.

“Since,” etc.: Scripture includes its prince above through et, although et always indicates the object of an action, as above, section 20, and has no relation or connection at all with the verb “came.” It does not include it through another word, such as gam, af, or the like. The reason is to indicate that, as soon as the prince above came to help the bear, it was already overcome before David, showing that it was prepared to fall before him. Therefore the inclusion is through et, indicating the object of action.

“And necessary”: for et cannot be joined with the verb “came.”

“It is known,” etc.: the master concludes his exposition of “I strengthened.” He says that this is not an expression of grasping but of strengthening. The intention is: I nullified evil below, and thereby completed the strengthening in the upper beard.

“In the sense of ‘You shall see the recompense of the wicked’”: through their nullification below, you shall see the completion of the strengthening above.

“On this account,” etc.: because he was Solomon's seed, he was called King of kings, like Solomon, who sat upon the LORD's throne.

“To be called a lion”: as it is said of him, “A lion has come up from its thicket” (Jeremiah 4). For this reason our sages also expounded “A lion has roared; who would not fear?” of him.

“Only”: because he came from David's house, which is called a lion, as it says, “What was your mother? A lioness.” He was called this after his ancestral house.

“From Solomon's seed,” etc.: this account—that Solomon had intercourse with the queen of Sheba after she converted, she bore a child, and from his

Rema of Fano

Nebuchadnezzar merited being called a lion only because he came from David's house, from Solomon's seed through the queen of Sheba after he converted her. But her heart was not steadfast within her; in the end her baseness was exposed and she returned to her former ways. Therefore her descendants were far from salvation. Thus Daniel did not seek without reason to offer him good counsel, saying, “Let my counsel be pleasing to you” (Daniel 4:24). He was punished for this, because ultimately her offspring is like her.

It was certainly on this account that he called him “King of kings” (Daniel 2:37). Although in tractate Shevuot (page 35b) they expounded it as referring to the One above, Scripture nevertheless does not depart from its plain meaning. For Solomon sat upon the LORD's throne, and a fallen portion of his greatness was given for a time to Nebuchadnezzar, as the reward for gracious speech and four steps when he was Merodach-baladan's scribe (Sanhedrin 96a). We have already mentioned that the Holy One is not described merely as King of kings, but as King of the kings of kings, and we explained it.

We have not found any other of the great kings called King of kings by the prophets. Hosea called Sennacherib “king of princes,” for the men of his army, one hundred and eighty-five thousand, were all commanders, according to the midrash (Sanhedrin 95b). There is no need to say that descendants Nebuchadnezzar was subsequently born in the course of time, while she returned to her former ways—is found written in the writings of the Ari, of blessed memory. The author of Keli Yaqar wrote concerning “King Solomon gave the queen of Sheba all her desire which she asked,” etc. (1 Kings 10), as follows, in the sages' name: “‘All her desire which she asked’—that he have intercourse with her.” Thus far. It further seems to me that what Scripture says afterward, “She turned and went to her land,” and especially the wording in Chronicles (chapter 9), “She turned about and went,” intimates that she returned to her people and her gods.

“Therefore her descendants were far”: although her conception was in holiness, her giving birth was nevertheless outside holiness, and her offspring was like her.

“Thus,” etc.: in the first chapter of Bava Batra, Rabbi Judah said in Rav's name: “Why was Daniel punished? Because he offered counsel to the wicked Nebuchadnezzar, as it says, ‘O king, let my counsel be pleasing to you.’” The master says that Daniel had compassion on him because he was Solomon's seed; nevertheless, he did not act well and was punished.

Rema of Fano - continued

“princes” lacks a conjunctive vav, like “Reuben, Simeon,” as the commentators hold.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

“On this account”: because Nebuchadnezzar was Solomon's seed, Daniel called him King of kings, saying, “You, O king, king of kings.” Although in tractate Shevuot, chapter 4 (page 35b), they said, “Every ‘king’ mentioned in Daniel is nonsacred except this one, which is sacred,” the verse's plain meaning too is true: he called Nebuchadnezzar this. The reason is that Solomon ruled over the whole world and sat upon the LORD's throne, ruling over upper and lower beings. Now a fallen portion of his greatness was given to Nebuchadnezzar, so that he too would be king over all kings, as will follow in the next section.

“As the reward for gracious speech,” etc.: as stated in the chapter “Heleq”: Merodach-baladan wrote to Hezekiah, “Peace to King Hezekiah, peace to the city of Jerusalem, peace to the great God.” Nebuchadnezzar was Baladan's scribe. At that time he was not there. When he came, etc., he said to them, “You call Him the great God and write Him last?” etc. He ran after him four parasangs [?]. [TN210106]

“We have already mentioned”: above, section 15, that the Holy One is not described, etc. Thus certainly, although they expounded King of kings as referring to the One above, this cannot be the verse's plain meaning.

“We have not found,” etc.: therefore it is implausible to say that he merely called him this to flatter him and multiply his praise. For Sennacherib, although a great king, was called only King of princes, as it is written, “They began to diminish from the burden of the king of princes” (Hosea 8). The master's view is that this was said concerning Sennacherib, and this also appears to be Abarbanel's view. The reason for this appellation is that he had, etc.

“According to the midrash”: in the aggadah of Heleq, concerning “The angel of the LORD went out and struck in the Assyrian camp one hundred and eighty-five thousand,” they said: “These were commanders of troops; forty-five thousand were sons of kings,” etc. And in the Mishnah, according to Seder Olam [?], which wrote, “All of them were kings, with crowns bound upon their heads”; see there.[TN210107] Nevertheless, he was not called King of kings.

“There is no need”: to explain “princes” as lacking the grammatical and conjunctive vav, as though it were written “king and princes,” as the commentators wished, among them Rabbi David Qimhi. For according to our interpretation, the words form a construct relation, and the meaning is king of princes.

"Artaxerxes, however": he likened himself to him, but it was not truly so; he was boasting. Cyrus likewise was boasting.

"His ancestress," etc.: Nebuchadnezzar's remote mother, the queen of Sheba. It was not entrusted to Solomon except into Nebuchadnezzar's hand, through another [?]. [TN210108]

"His mazzal perceived," etc.: Jeremiah too was a reincarnation of Solomon, in the sense of "Ekhah yashvah": the initials are "Jeremiah, son of King Solomon," as explained in the exposition of Megalleh ʿAmuqqot. Therefore he had compassion on him. [TN210109]

"To weaken his power," etc.: the lion's, namely Nebuchadnezzar's, but not to destroy and kill him, so that he would destroy the Temple and the LORD would exhaust His wrath upon Zion, not Israel, and through him the iniquity would be expiated.

"Like naʿar and naʿarah," etc.: see above, Part I of this discourse, section 13, on the mystery of naʿar and naʿarah; you will understand this.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Nebuchadnezzar, however": he is rightly called King of kings, for Jeremiah prophesied concerning him that his rule would extend over all nations, as Scripture explains there (chapters 25 and 27). This is the fallen serve him" (Jeremiah 27:6). The seven periods are excluded here through these two inclusions. They come to restrict the defining conditions of the giving: it was not for serving him throughout those years. Yet they extend the giving, for it was to guard him from harm and death: to every species he appeared to belong to that species, and thereby he was protected from their harming him, until he returned to the honor of his kingship, his majesty and splendor. No king among the nations resembled him in his greatness.

Artaxerxes in the Book of Ezra, however ["Artaxerxes, king of kings" (Ezra 7:12)], is merely praising himself; Cyrus likewise, according to our sages' words (Megillah, page 11b). Indeed, what was given to Nebuchadnezzar was his own: Jerusalem's gold, much of which his ancestress had given King Solomon. Solomon's building was delivered only into his hand. His mazzal perceived that he should show much compassion toward Jeremiah, as Scripture explicitly states that he commanded the chief executioner concerning him, "Take him and set your eyes upon him" (Jeremiah 39:12).

David sought to weaken his power, not to destroy him, for through him Jacob's iniquity would be expiated. It may be that ari and aryeh, lion, are like naʿar and naʿarah, youth and maiden, or leil and laylah, night, and the like: initially deficient and finally full. Here, with this external lion, his fall corresponds to his greatness: at first he was struck but did not die; at the end, "I shall cut off from Babylon name and remnant, offspring and descendant" (Isaiah 14:22).

portion of Solomon's greatness given to Nebuchadnezzar, as explained in the preceding section.

"As it is written, 'And gam,'" etc. (there, chapter 27): incidentally, the master explains that through these two inclusions, gam et, which serve to restrict, the seven periods are excluded, in which Nebuchadnezzar was driven from human beings and his dwelling was with the beasts of the field, as Scripture explains (Daniel 4).

"For they come," etc.: here too the master explains the rule that an inclusion after an inclusion serves only to restrict, in the manner he explained above, section 50.[TN210110] He says that the inclusions come to restrict the defining conditions of the giving of the beasts of the field, which were given to serve him: during those seven years they would not serve him. Nevertheless, they extend the giving in that, even during those years when they would not serve him, they would not harm him. This was because to every species of field beast Nebuchadnezzar appeared to belong to its own species. As stated in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 221: "When kingship was removed from that wicked man, and his dwelling was with the beasts of the field, the image of his face was removed from him. From that day his image was not seen in him as a human image. To every beast that came he appeared as an image of its own species and its female, and they all came to mate with him. Many times the beasts of the field would have eaten him, except that this punishment was decreed upon him because it is written, 'He mocks kings.' Therefore all mocked him throughout that time."

"However": do not object to what was said in the preceding section, that we have not found any of the great kings called King of kings: does not Artaxerxes say in the copy of the letter he gave Ezra, "Artaxerxes, king of kings, to Ezra the priest," etc., as Scripture states (Ezra 7)? In truth this appellation does not befit him. Artaxerxes merely praises himself thus, as our sages likewise said of Cyrus in the first chapter of Megillah. We say there (page 11b): "Three ruled over the whole world: Ahab, Ahasuerus, and Nebuchadnezzar." They object: "But there is Cyrus, for it is written, 'Thus says Cyrus king of Persia: All the kingdoms of the earth the LORD has given me.'" They answer there: "He is merely praising himself."

"Indeed": just as a fallen portion of Solomon's greatness was given to Nebuchadnezzar, to be called lion and King of kings, so it was with the LORD's giving into his hand all the vessels of the house of God, the treasures of the LORD's house, and the treasures of the king and his princes, as Scripture explains. For they gave him what was his own: his ancestress, the queen of Sheba, gave much of this gold to the king, as Scripture says, "She gave the king one hundred and twenty talents of gold."

"His mazzal perceived": since he was Solomon's descendant, he commanded them concerning Jeremiah, who was a reincarnation of Solomon. Although Nebuchadnezzar himself did not perceive it, his mazzal perceived it. The Ari's disciples likewise wrote this.

"David sought," etc.: the master returns to what he said above in section 22: David struck the lion but did not kill it; had he killed it, Nebuchadnezzar could not have destroyed our Temple. He now concludes that David sought this so that the LORD would pour out His wrath upon wood and stones, to expiate Jacob's iniquity, as our sages said concerning "The LORD exhausted His wrath and kindled a fire in Zion."

"It may be": David's saying "gam et the ari," not aryeh with he, follows what is stated in many places in the Zohar concerning naʿar/naʿarah and leil/laylah. Before the Shekhinah receives the male, she is called naʿar and leil, deficient of he; when she receives the male, she is called with he. Therefore here, concerning the external lion, Nebuchadnezzar, as long as he lacks he, he has vital power, for the absence of he indicates that union has not yet occurred on the holy side. After the union, however, the external lion's power on the impure side is entirely weakened. Thus his greatness in being called aryeh with he causes his fall, as Scripture says, "A lion has come up from its thicket," etc., and "I shall cut off from Babylon," etc. (Isaiah 14).

"And carry out His mission," etc.: in killing Babylon, Darius should intend to carry out the Omnipresent's mission.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“From its being struck,” etc.: this continues from the preceding section. The matter we described—that, because the lion was struck but did not die, Nebuchadnezzar retained the power and ability to destroy our Temple—is what Jeremiah said: “Even if you struck,” etc. (there, chapter 37). It is not intended as exaggeration and hyperbole, as its plain sense appears. Rather, it means: even if you struck them, they would nevertheless not die, but remain wounded, and this itself would cause them to burn the city with fire.

“Daniel”: he revealed this matter to Darius. He informed him that the Chaldeans' escape at the

they would rise and burn this city with fire” (Jeremiah 37:10). Daniel, the greatly beloved man, informed Darius that the Chaldeans escaped only so that they would fall into his hand, in accordance with Isaiah's statement: “Everyone found shall be pierced, and everyone swept up shall fall by the sword” (Isaiah 13).

Since he was an upright and pious king, Daniel revealed to him that the Chaldeans' pride caused their fate, like God's overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, so that Darius would humble himself before the blessed Omnipresent and carry out His mission in Babylon as one keeping a commandment, without pride and contempt, as Isaiah prophesied concerning them (Isaiah 13:19). For this caused the kings of Media and Persia to have a reign much shorter than all the other kingdoms, as it is written, “A person's pride shall bring him low” (Proverbs 29:23).

time of the destruction—afterward, when he and his father-in-law Cyrus fought Belshazzar, for the Chaldeans initially struck them—was so that they would later fall into his hand, to fulfill the LORD's word spoken concerning them through His servants the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah.[TN210112] Thus it happened: King Belshazzar at first returned to Babylon in great joy, after striking Darius. Then he made a great feast for his nobles, and that night Belshazzar was killed. On the morrow Darius and Cyrus advanced [?] to Babylon, captured and destroyed it, and struck the Chaldeans with the sword, killing and destruction, in accordance with Isaiah's statement concerning them: “Everyone found,” etc.

of Sodom and Gomorrah.” Believe that the splendor of their pride caused their fate.

“For this”: the kings of Media and Persia's conduct with pride and haughtiness caused their reign not to endure. Daniel therefore warned him against it.

“Cyrus, a young man,” etc.: he was king of Persia, and it was he who stirred up Darius.

“In the word farsin,” etc.: what was written was “Mene, mene, teqel, u-farsin,” an expression of Persia.

“It is insufficient,” etc.: the answer that Darius reigned, and therefore he says “I am stirring up against them Media,” is insufficient, for this was only because Cyrus honored him, etc.; in truth Cyrus was primary. “The one from whom he would inherit” means that Cyrus was the heir of Darius, his father-in-law.

“Furthermore, it will be shown,” etc.: it would be clear why it says “They will not esteem silver,” etc.: the treasures of wickedness in Babylon would not help, the ransom of their lives would be too costly, they would kill them nonetheless, and ransom would not help. Nevertheless, it is difficult: why did he specify both silver and gold and reverse the formulation, first saying “They will not esteem silver”? He should have said the reverse: “They will not esteem gold”—it will not be considered anything in their eyes—and “They will not desire silver at all,”

Rema of Fano

Concerning this Isaiah said: “Behold, I am stirring up against them Media, who will not esteem silver and will not desire gold” (Isaiah 13:17). It is difficult: why did he not mention Persia at all? Their chronicles tell us that Cyrus, a young man of valor, stirred up the aged, weak Darius against Belshazzar. From the hand that wrote opposite Belshazzar's lamp, the word “u-farsin” showed us that Persia was primary and Media subordinate to it. It is insufficient to say that Darius reigned first, for according to the account this arose from Cyrus's humility: he honored the elder, his father-in-law and the one from whom he would inherit, and according to some, his father's brother.

Furthermore, suppose the prophet foresaw that the ransom of the Babylonians' lives would be too costly and would cease forever, and that treasures of wickedness would not benefit them. Why did he specify both and reverse the formulation? He should say they will not esteem gold, although it is something esteemed, and will not desire silver at all. However, in light of what preceded in the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream—that gold belongs specifically to Babylon, and silver to Media and Persia—the prophet fittingly said that Babylon's enemies would reckon their own kingdom and ancestral inheritance as nothing. For the good among them, this arose from Daniel's counsel to submit to our God, as stated, and as he rebuked Belshazzar:

since it is inferior to gold.

“For Babylon's enemies”: Persia and Media. “They will not esteem silver”—these are Persia and Media themselves, whose kingdom would count for nothing in their eyes because of their humility.

“From Daniel's counsel”: as above, section 25. This concerns some good people in Media and Persia, not all of them. By contrast, the rest of the people did this out of proudheartedness and arrogance: they waged war, not as the blessed Omnipresent's mission, as above in section 25.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Concerning this,” etc.: it continues from the end of the preceding section. With what we said—that Daniel warned Darius against pride over his victory in Babylon—Isaiah's statement concerning Babylon, “Behold,” etc. (there, chapter 13), becomes intelligible.

“For Cyrus”: the son of the daughter of Ashtaragos, king of Persia, stirred up his father-in-law, Darius the Mede. Thus Cyrus was primary.[TN210114] Likewise, from the hand that wrote the word u-farsin, and Daniel's interpretation, “Your kingdom is divided and given to Media and Persia," it follows that Persia is primary.

"It is insufficient": to answer that the prophet mentioned Media alone because Darius reigned first in Babylon, for this too came to him from Persia: Cyrus his son-in-law showed him this honor and allowed him to spend the rest of his days in Babylon.

"Furthermore": it is difficult why the prophet mentioned both silver and gold.

"And reversed the formulation": this is certainly a difficulty—saying of silver "they will not esteem," and of gold "they will not desire." Since gold is more esteemed than silver, he should have said the reverse, to extend the statement: they will not esteem even gold, and will not desire silver at all, since it is not as esteemed.

"However": the prophet does not intend silver and gold according to the apparent plain sense. The silver he speaks of is a designation for the kingdom of Media and Persia, and gold for the kingdom of Media.[TN210115] For we likewise heard this from the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream: he saw in his dream an image whose head was of gold and whose chest and arms were of silver. Daniel said to him, "You are the head of gold, and after you another kingdom shall arise," etc. Thus the verse says: Behold, I am stirring up against them Media, who will not esteem even their own kingdom, and will not desire the kingdom of Babylon at all; their entire deliverance and desire is only to destroy it.

"This arose": their not esteeming their own kingdom. The good among them would not esteem it because of great humility, as Daniel counseled them, as stated in the preceding section. The rest of the people would not esteem it because of great pride: they would exalt themselves for having defeated the Babylonians and inherited their land.

"You did not humble your heart" (Daniel 5:22). For the rest of the people, it arose from proudheartedness, a grasping soul and a haughty spirit, to inherit dwellings not their own.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"They will not desire gold," etc.: Persia and Media will not desire Babylon's kingship, to rule over them, but will destroy Babylon. Although Babylon still stands today, and you say they destroyed it, it is a new city.

"This effacement," etc.: this answers the difficulty raised above in section 26—why did he not mention Persia, which was primary? For the principal effacement of the wicked Babylonians' name is attributed to the first king, Darius the Mede. He was pious and humble and carried out the Omnipresent's mission. Cyrus, by contrast, derived it from Darius's counsel. Therefore he mentioned only Media, not Persia.

Rema of Fano

"They will not desire gold" (Isaiah 13:17): to glorify themselves in Babylon's kingship and possess there a throne of honor and a royal diadem, although in their time it ruled over all nations and tongues. Rather, they will destroy it to its foundation, like the overthrow of Sodom. The Babylon standing today, which the Persians call Bagdat—and among whose sages one is mentioned among the amoraim, Rav Hana of Bagdat—is a new city far from the site of the overturned Babylon, as has also been

Yad Yehudah - 1

"They will not desire gold," etc.: this concludes the explanation in the

preceding section.

“The Babylon standing today”: it is not ancient Babylon but another, new city, far from the first. Abarbanel, in his commentary on Isaiah 13, wrote that the new Babylon is a short distance from the old one, and that Cambyses, Cyrus's son who reigned after him, built it and called it Babylon as before. Consult what is written on this in Tsemah David, Part II.

“This effacement”: the difficulty we raised in the preceding section—why he did not mention Persia—is now resolved. The prophet attributed the abolition of Babylon's kingship to Media because Darius was verified among them.

This effacement of the wicked's name is rightly attributed to the first king, whose soul rejected the glorious crown of Babylon's kingship, refusing to have his name called upon it. This example passed to Cyrus through the pious Darius's counsel; the matter is clear. Thus the scriptural passages are precise in the truth of the account: military prowess is attributed to Persia, while the disgrace befitting Babylon's kingdom, the destruction of its name, as stated, is ascribed to Media. Everything is well ordered and clear.

At the destruction of the first two kingdoms, Babylon and Persia, the governors of Judah still possessed a ruler's scepter over Israel, rather than kingship. Therefore the lion and bear the first to reject it, and Cyrus followed his counsel.

“To Persia”: as Isaiah says there, “I commanded My consecrated ones,” which our sages in the first chapter of Berakhot expounded as “these are the Persians.”

“Therefore they were delivered,” etc.: to indicate that David's rule would endure longer than the kingships of Babylon and Persia.

“He had not yet reached his appointed stage”: he had not yet attained kingship, to intimate the future rule that would endure longer.

dominion from the whole Name, whose value is sixty-five. The intimation is in six yods and five descriptions of greatness, for the first is needed for the thing itself.[TN210116]

The six yods also intimate how, through our sins, sixty mighty ones from the mighty ones of Israel above became too weak to protect us. He spared them only to finish transgression, bring sins to an end, and bring everlasting righteousness. Thus speedily in our days may the God of heaven establish a kingdom that will never be destroyed. “The yod appears in Scripture”: concerning the fourth beast, in six descriptions, as it says: “Behold, a fourth beast, fearsome and mighty and exceedingly strong, with teeth of iron,” etc., “and it had ten horns.” “Fearsome” is the first “For”: although there are six descriptions, only the five additional ones should be counted, for the first is needed for the thing itself.

“Sixty mighty ones”: these are the sixty guardians over Israel mentioned in Zohar Hadash, Lekh Lekha.

“He spared them only,” etc.: this refers back to “Had we merited,” etc. The reason the Holy One spared those two beasts and did not bring them before David too is that our iniquities multiplied, and to finish transgression, etc.

Let us return to our earlier discussion of et, which has the property of including something important, as we explained, and everything that can possibly be included through it. As we expound: “God remembered et His covenant, et Abraham, et Isaac, and et Jacob”: each one's merit is sufficient in itself. This is the reason for the et said concerning them. In “et His covenant,” the Shekhinah is included, dwelling upon Israel through the covenant's merit, as above. In her honor the commandment of periʿah, uncovering, was given to us. In the days of Jehoahaz son of Jehu, it is written, "For the sake of My covenant, et Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." In that generation ancestral merit was almost exhausted, and Abraham's lovingkindness exerted itself for them to provide a little deliverance. But he is accustomed to join his companions' merit with his own, so as not to take credit for himself, as we shall mention at the beginning of Part III. Although Jacob's merit is an inheritance without boundaries and its years will never end, it has already been said, "Israel does not acknowledge us" (Isaiah 63:16): he does not now exert himself with us for our deliverance, in order to honor his parents' blessing. This is like what we learned, "Honor me for my father's sake." We shall discuss these matters

Elkanah by Peninnah. Only the females, who belong to the side of judgment, were visited. With Rebekah it was different, for Isaac too was barren.

“He was entreated by him,” not by her: his great merit therefore brought about his visitation immediately at the time of his prayer. He did not need to wait until Rosh Hashanah, but was immediately answered. Another answer is that Rebekah's visitation was not mentioned because the wicked Esau came from her.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“It means”: et comes to include that together with her there was visited, etc.

offspring were visited with her. Therefore she said, “Everyone who hears shall laugh for me,” for the entire world rejoiced in her joy. Possibly it includes two righteous women like her, Rachel and Hannah, who were also visited on Rosh Hashanah.

The wonder is why Rebekah's visitation was not attributed to this day, for she was barren. One may say that, because Abraham and Jacob had children by another woman, and so did Elkanah, these righteous women's visitations resembled one another: a thing in its proper time, to bring forth an instrument for its work. But with Rebekah, Isaac too had particular need of that visitation, and exerted himself with her in prayer. “He was entreated by him” at the very hour when he sought mercy for her. The sages have already been precise about “He was entreated by him”: by a righteous person descended from a righteous person, rather than by her, a righteous person descended from a wicked person. How, then, could they say that she was visited? Furthermore, Sarah, Rachel, and Hannah's visitation preserved only a righteous soul, whereas Rebekah's visitation was not mentioned because of Esau, who came from her.

“At that hour”: he did not have to wait until Rosh Hashanah.

“But know,” etc.: this is a third answer to why Rebekah's visitation on Rosh Hashanah was not mentioned. Sarah bore Isaac, who belongs to the side of judgment; therefore her visitation was mentioned on Rosh Hashanah, which is the day of judgment. “He who shall come forth from your own inward parts,” etc.: for the exile began when Isaac was born. Likewise, through Rachel's children the course of events was brought about, and this is judgment; her remembrance was therefore mentioned on the day of judgment, as above. Likewise, Hannah bore Samuel, who belongs to the side of judgment, as he goes on to explain. “And Samuel was already,” etc.: David said of him, “Moses and Aaron among His priests, and Samuel among those who call upon His name.” “The standards of mercy and judgment”: Aaron is complete mercy; Moses is kindness, in the sense of “For I drew him out of the water,” as is known. These are the yod and vav of the Name. Samuel bore the standard of judgment in the two he's of the Name, “for from there judgments are aroused.”[TN210125] “His

But now know and see, among the wonders of Him whose knowledge is perfect, that the day of “Today the world is conceived,” on which He will bring all the creatures of the world to judgment, was set apart for Sarah's visitation. This was owing to the special quality of the child destined to come from her, who rules over the heavenly attribute of judgment through which the world was created. Together with the announcement, “He who shall come forth from your own inward parts shall inherit you,” exile was decreed upon us for the purpose of purification, as is known. Such, too, was Rachel's judgment: through her children the course of events was brought about, and our ancestors went down to Egypt. Through Samuel of Ramah the sons of Eli received their sentence, and by judgment he established the earth beyond all those before him. For Israel he was one who “removes kings and establishes kings”; he did much to vindicate Heaven's judgment upon Saul and his house, whose one [offense] proved his undoing.[TN210123] In David's eyes Samuel was already equal to Moses and Aaron. They bore the standards of mercy and kindness, the yod and vav of the Name, whereas Samuel bore the standard of judgment. [1] Moreover, he was his principal teacher, and their attributes resemble and correspond to one another in the principal teacher,” etc.: that is, Samuel was David's teacher. “Their attributes resemble,” etc.: David's attribute is Malkhut, the final he, and Samuel's attribute is Binah, the first he of the Name. “And he has no relation,” etc.: the attribute of the day is Rosh Hashanah, the day of judgment. Therefore her visitation on Rosh Hashanah was not mentioned as those of the others were. “The offspring of Jacob,” etc.: he is mercy, unlike Isaac's offspring, which is judgment. For it is stated in the Zohar that Rosh Hashanah corresponds to Isaac, the Day of Atonement to Jacob, and Hoshana Rabbah, which is the completion of the sealing, to Abraham. This follows the sense of “King, Helper, Savior, and Shield,” as written in the prayer book of R. Herts, of blessed memory: “King” on Rosh Hashanah; “Helper and Savior” on the Day of Atonement; “Shield” on Hoshana Rabbah. This is what is meant by “Might one conclude with them all?” etc., in the sense of “With you they conclude”: that is, with you, Abraham, comes the completion of the sealing on Hoshana Rabbah. This is the shield in our saying “Shield of Abraham." I heard this from my father-in-law, Maharal of Lvov[?]. [TN210126] "And the Shunammite," too, was visited on Rosh Hashanah, yet she was not mentioned in Rosh Hashanah, because she was not barren; only her husband was old, etc.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"But know," etc.: this continues the end of the preceding section. He means that there is yet a third answer to our question why Rebekah, too, was not visited on Rosh Hashanah like Sarah, Rachel, and Hannah. For this is indeed among the wonders of the blessed Name: on the day of two he's of the Name. But Rebekah's name is to be recalled for good alone, since she bore Jacob, who belongs to the attribute of mercy, as is known, and has no relation at all to the attribute of this day. Therefore we conclude the Remembrances with "Remember today the binding of Isaac for his offspring," and do not mention the offspring of Jacob. In the Zohar they said that the Shunammite, too, was visited on Rosh Hashanah, and her son was Habakkuk. Since, however, she was visited only through an act—she had shown Elisha exceptional honor—and she was not barren but great in her deeds and great in the first formation,[TN210124] as the sages relate, while her husband was now old, she was not mentioned in the Gemara together with these women.

judgment He visited those righteous women whose offspring have a relation to the day of judgment. This is not so with Jacob, Rebekah's son, who has no relation at all to the day of judgment, as he concludes. "Owing to the special quality of the child": Isaac, destined to come from her through this visitation, would rule, by his attribute, the Fear of Isaac, over the heavenly attribute of judgment through which the world was created. For this reason the name Elohim occurs in the account of Creation. "And together with," etc.: he means that Isaac has a further relation to judgment, because through the announcement made to Abraham, "He who shall come forth from your own inward parts," the exile was decreed upon us; it began when Isaac was born. "And such was Rachel's judgment"[?]: [TN210127] her offspring, too, have a relation to the attribute of judgment. "And through Samuel," etc.: he means that the same applies to Hannah. "And already": it is demonstrated that Samuel belonged to the side of judgment, since he was equal to Moses and Aaron, as it says, "Moses and Aaron among His priests, and Samuel among those who call upon His name." This is in respect of the letters of the Name, according to the known teaching that there are three lines: the line of mercy, the line of kindness, and the line of judgment. Their roots are the letters yod, he, vav: yod for mercy, he for judgment, and vav for kindness. Thus Moses, whose attribute is mercy, and Aaron, whose attribute is kindness, as explained in the Zohar on Genesis, correspond to the yod and vav of the Name. Samuel, whose attribute is judgment—the first he, Binah, "from which judgments are aroused"—and David, whose attribute is the final he, Malkhut, correspond to the two he's of the Name. Therefore in David's eyes

Samuel was equal to Moses and Aaron. "For he was": Samuel was David's teacher. "And we do not mention the offspring of Jacob": as R.Y.T. wrote in his responsa;[TN210128] it is cited in Shulhan Arukh, Orah Hayyim, the laws of Rosh Hashanah, section 591. "And in the Zohar": the portion Beshallah, page 76. "But great in her deeds": for this is what is said of her, "And there was a great woman there," etc.; see the Zohar there.

"Sarah," and not "Sarai": for the names of the righteous contain a great preparation for the divine abundance to rest upon them, as it is written of Bezalel, "See, I have called by name," and afterward, "And I have filled him with the spirit of God." The calling of this beloved name is itself the visitation of her, just as, when the first Adam called all the kinds of living creatures by name, "their visitation preserved his spirit."[TN210129] Marvel at his meriting to call a name for himself and for his Master: it is written, "And the man called names," etc., "and for Adam." His naming himself is thus expressed. Above it there is a zaqef gadol, whose numerical value is twenty-six, an allusion to the Unique One of the world; so I have heard. Thus, "a righteous man rules in the fear of God." The matter reaches to the name alef-dalet, the hall of souls. He related himself to likeness, for the image had ascended to the upper roots, and he called his likeness by a new name indicating the possibility of his choice between two ways, besides its straightforward composition from the two words ed, vapor, and dam, blood. For the vapor that rises from the blood strong," etc.: that is, although in truth his intended reason for the name Adam was the expression "I shall resemble the Most High," nevertheless, out of great humility, he uttered with his lips only that he had been created from the earth. "And through the cause, the power of possibility was afforded him": for this reason, too, is true.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Sarah," etc.: after the master explained all the words "And the Lord visited et," he also explains the name Sarah. "And not Sarai": while she was called thus[?], she was not fit for visitation, as will be stated in the following section.[TN210132] "In her name," etc.: as explained above, Part I, section 10. "For himself and for his Master": as stated in Bereshit Rabbah, the Holy One, blessed be He, said to him, "And you—what is your name?" He said to Him, "It is fitting for me to be called Adam, for I was created from the earth." "And I—what?" He said to Him, "It is fitting for You to be called the Lord, for You are Lord of all." The Holy One, blessed be He, said, "'I am the Lord'—that is My name, which the first Adam called Me." "And for Adam he found no helper": the word "and for Adam" is also expounded in relation to what precedes it and refers back to "and he called," for he called a name even for himself. This resolves what in the liver to the heart and brain is a pleasing fragrance to the source of understanding within him. If he is worthy, he will fulfill in himself "I shall resemble the Most High"; if not, "He is likened to beasts that perish."[TN210130] Although his understanding encompassed all these things with strength, he uttered with his lips only a reason fitting in wisdom and moral instruction: that he was created from the earth. Because of it and within it, the power of possibility was afforded him, as stated.

troubled the author of Yefeh Toar concerning the Midrash, who wrote, "One must ask: how do we know that Adam was asked about his name?" "Its numerical value is twenty-six": the shape of zaqef gadol is two yods and a vav, alluding to the blessed Name, since the numerical value of the name YHWH is twenty-six. "And the matter reaches," etc.: he means that, despite all this, we must not think that he called Him by the name

YHWH. Rather, it was the name of lordship by which he called Him, as stated in the Midrash, that he said to Him, "You are Lord of all." These are the words of Yefeh Toar there: "'For You are Lord': He is called by an appellation, namely the name alef-dalet, for this indicates lordship in the four-letter Name as written[?], for this does not [source gap] lordship, but it is the Name unique to Him, blessed be He," etc.[TN210133] "The reason that the first Adam did not call Him by this unique Name is that this Name indicates His very self and His necessary existence, blessed be He, whose meaning cannot be made accessible to man[?], for the apprehension of His existence is hidden," etc.[TN210134] He further wrote there concerning "'That is My name,' which the first Adam called Me," as follows: "Although this Name is not written as K.A.R., but rather K.H.[?], [TN210135] and the first Adam, since he named Him with reference to lordship, called Him by the appellation alef-dalet with his lips, nevertheless, since the name yod-he itself is read as alef-dalet, it is as though they were both one. As it says, 'This is My name forever': I am not read as I am written; I am written with yod-he and read with alef-dalet," etc. See Pardes, the gate of the Names, chapter 13, concerning the name of lordship, how it also includes the name YHWH. As for the master's saying "the hall of souls," it appears that he understands that, since the name of lordship belongs to Adam's soul, the first Adam therefore called Him by this Name. "The hall of souls": as explained in the Zohar, concerning this it is said, "And the Lord is in His holy hall; be silent before Him, all the earth." For heikhal, hall, has the numerical value sixty-five, like the name of lordship. "And he related himself," etc.: he means that there is a further reason for his calling himself Adam, from the expression demut, likeness. In his humility he did not call himself by the term tselem, image, which is higher than likeness. "A new name": he means that he did not call himself by the designation demut because the word Adam is an expression of resemblance, also indicating the choice given to him. That is, if he makes his ways good, "I shall resemble the Most High"; if not, "Like a beast they perish."[TN210137] "Besides" the straightforward reason that the name Adam is composed of the word ed and the word dam. The name indicates his lowliness, so that he should not become proud of his intellect, a portion of God above. For this vapor coming out of his blood finds favor[?] with the source of his understanding, and is its delight day by day.[TN210136] As the physicians have said, there are three spirits: natural, vital, and psychic. The natural is in the blood in the liver; the vital is in the heart and is the fine vapor that rises from the blood in the liver; and the psychic is in the brain and is the vapor made finer still in the heart, which rises to the head. There is the special place where the intellect dwells, to which the psychic spirit is a pleasing fragrance. "And if he is worthy," etc.: this refers back to his statement that the name Adam indicates the possibility of his choice between two ways. "Although his understanding was strong": the first

Adam's understanding encompassed all these things when he called his name Adam, and in this he also intended the choice given to him. Nevertheless, with his mouth before the Holy One, blessed be He, he gave no other reason than “I was created from the earth.” For this points most fully to his lowliness, and is humility and moral instruction for him.

Moreover, it also includes the second reason, concerning choice: for choice is given to him because he was created from the earth, and through choice, if he makes his ways good, he will merit to ascend from it to the heights of heaven.

“In the shape of he”: the he whose point, its leg, hangs within the enclosure of the he, resembling the very womb in a woman's inward parts. “And it itself,” etc.: that is, at first it was a yod, as in Sarai, and from the yod a he was made. The point spread out this way and that into the shape of a dalet, and from the vapor[?] of the point the leg of the he was also made.[TN210138] “This is the river that goes forth,” etc.: it is explained in the Zohar that “river” is Binah, for the abundance goes forth from the first three to water the garden —these are the days of building. “Not interrupted,” etc.: this is the leg of the he. It is not that the leg is interrupted in the middle into two parts, for that is invalid in a Torah scroll. Rather, it is a short yod, like an

In the shape of the he added to Sarah's name there is an allusion to the very womb newly created in her: it is the mother, as we have mentioned. The opposite is found in the shape of the yod, which is closed, like that male-like woman who does not bear. The yod itself, like a spring growing stronger, expanded its being and spread out this way and that in the shape of a dalet, like one who spreads a river to its sides. This is the river that goes forth from Eden, flowing without ceasing. The stream that waters the garden is the leg suspended within the he, whether it be a yod or a truncated vav. This means like a person with one leg cut short, not interrupted in its middle, which would destroy its shape and spoil its significance, invalidating it in a Torah scroll. Rather, it is a truncated vav like a yod. Both signify submission, and it is a vessel that holds blessing, like the vav in “Moses was very humble,” and the vav in “My covenant of peace.”

amputee whose leg has been cut off and shortened. “Both”: that is, each is a truncation, and it signifies submission.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“And behold,” etc.: this concludes his statement in the preceding section, “Sarah, and not Sarai.” “In the shape of the he”: which alludes to the female, as explained in Pardes, the gate of the Letters, under T.Y.T.[?].[TN210139] “As we mentioned”: above, Part I, section 4. “And it”: the very yod of Sarai was like a spring growing stronger, until the he was made from it. For it expanded its being into the shape of a dalet in Binah, which is called “the river's broad places,” after the river that goes forth from the upper Eden and waters the lower garden, Yesod and Malkhut. Thus there is a

he, for this garden alludes to the left leg within the he, whether the leg has the shape of a yod, alluding to Malkhut, or of a truncated vav, alluding to Yesod. “Like this person with one leg cut short”: it is shorter than the other. So the he's left leg is intrinsically shorter than the right, but not as though it were severed from it[?].[TN210140] “Both”: the yod and the small vav signify submission because of their smallness. So, too, the garden is subordinate to, and dependent upon, the river that waters it with abundant good and a fullness of joys. “And it is a vessel that holds blessing”: and peace, the foundation of the world, like the vav in “Moses,” etc. Their intended meaning, too, is this, as stated in the Zohar which we shall quote in the next section.

“In the discourse Heqor Din,” etc.: this is in Part III, chapter 3; see there. “Very well,” etc.: that is, the thing is good. “Except that it will be diminished,” etc.: therefore the vav of shalom is written truncated, like a small yod. “His spirit upon them”—precisely. “Its proper form is defective,” etc.: that is, it ought to be kallat, lacking [the vav]; see the passage in Part IV, section 30. It is written in full because from these two half-vavs one vav was made and added here.[TN210142] “Consummate in beauty”: therefore they are alluded to in the word kalot, from the expression kelilat yofi, consummate in beauty.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“And we have,” etc.: this continues the end of the preceding section. He means that, besides the small vav's alluding to Yesod, we have further

Rema of Fano

In the discourse Heqor Din we have reasoned explanations of “very humble,” anav meod, with a small vav, which we read as “very poor,” ani meod; let the reader seek them there. Here it will suffice to begin, concerning the words “My covenant of peace,” with what they explained in the Zohar: the Holy One, blessed be He, told Moses to give of his own to Pinhas. Thus He said to him, “You say, ‘Behold, I give,’” etc. Moses our master, peace be upon him, said, “Very well, except that the gift will be diminished by coming through me.” This is in the sense of what he said elsewhere, “Would that all the Lord's people were prophets, that the Lord would place His spirit upon them.” Since both these vavs that we have mentioned were small, like two halves, we are left with one vav whose paths have wandered. We heard in the name of the Ari, of righteous and blessed memory, that the Holy One, blessed be He, commanded, and it was added in the verse “And it was on the day when Moses finished,” kalot. For the reasoned explanations, etc. “In the Zohar”: Pinhas, page 600, Part III: “‘Pinhas son of Eleazar,’ etc., with a small yod, because two alphabets are inscribed: an alphabet of large letters and an alphabet of small letters. The large letters belong to the world to come, and the small letters to the lower world, the holy enduring covenant. Since Pinhas was zealous for this covenant, a small yod was added to him, the mystery of this covenant. At that hour the Holy One, blessed be He, said, ‘What shall I do with Moses? This covenant was from Moses, and it was all his. To give it to another without Moses' knowledge would not be fitting.’ The Holy One, blessed be He, began and said to Moses, ‘Pinhas son of Eleazar son of Aaron the priest.’ Moses said to Him, ‘Master of the world, what is it?’ He said to him, ‘You rabbis said, "It is written kallat."[TN210141] That is, its proper form is defective, but it appears in full to testify that this man Moses, who diminished himself in all his deeds, brought the Assembly of Israel to completion, consummate in beauty.

your voice, that you are handing it over to him willingly, with a whole heart.' This is what is written, 'Therefore say': you say willingly, 'Behold, I give him My covenant of peace.' Moses was saying, 'Behold, I give him,' etc. For if the Holy One, blessed be He, were speaking to Moses, the Holy One, blessed be He, should have said, 'Behold, I give him'; but that is not what is written. Rather: 'Therefore say'—indeed, say.[TN210144] Do not say that it passed away from Moses. No; rather, it is like this support[?]: this one gives, and this one is not diminished thereby."[TN210145] "Except that the gift will be diminished": the master further explains that the smallness of the vav indicates Moses' humility. Since the gift did not pass directly from the Holy One's hand to Pinhas' hand, but only through Moses, it was like a diminution of the gift in their eyes. Moses said, as it were[?], that the gift would be diminished.[TN210146] "That the Lord would place His spirit": His spirit precisely, without his mediation. "Two halves": as though both these were counted as one; from the standpoint of each vav, this is one of the original vavs that occur in the Torah.[TN210147] You must know where that vav's place of honor is, for its paths have wandered and we do not know. "And we heard in the name of the Ari, of righteous and blessed memory": in place of the missing vav, the vav appeared in the word kalot, which is written in full in all the books. What our sages said, "It is written kallat," means that it ought to be defective. "He brought the Assembly of Israel to completion, consummate in beauty": the word kallat has the sense of kelilat, consummate, and the vav of the full spelling alludes to her completeness.

"In the Aramaic rendering of the Sanctification," etc.: its explanation[?] is "And they receive from one another," etc.[TN210150] See what he wrote in the discourse Heqor Din, Part I, chapter 14. "In the aforementioned discourse": this is Heqor Din, which he mentioned in section 35. The alef has

Some say that Moses also made the alef in "And He called to Moses," vayiqra, small on his own initiative, to diminish his honor in being called to her, to the Shekhinah. The meaning of this calling is known from the Aramaic rendering of the Order of Sanctification. Accordingly, we have found strength for ourselves in the alef of "Happy are you, Israel; who is like you?" which appears large, for the the shape of two yods with a vav between them, equal in number to the name YHWH. The vav spelled out in full as vav–yod–vav has the numerical value thirteen, equal to ehad, one.[TN210153] Thus upon Moses' rays of splendor there was written "The Lord is one."

Yad Yehudah - 1

"And some say," etc.: while the master explains the small vav in the preceding sections, he also explains the matter of the small alef. "And the meaning of the calling": he means that his diminishing his honor in the matter of calling was because this calling has a meaning like "and he called"—vav[?]—whose Aramaic rendering is "And they receive from one another."[TN210151] The intention is the abundance which the effect receives from its cause, as he also wrote in the discourse Heqor Din, Part I, chapter 14. Here, too, the intention of the calling is that the blessed Name bestowed great abundance upon him. Moses therefore diminished the matter in his humility. "And accordingly": the opposite honor accrued to us through the large alef of "Happy are you, Israel": the blessed Name enlarged the happiness and the good abundance. "With the utmost increase": the Holy One, blessed be He, added to Moses' great spirit just before his death. "As they unite": the individuals and particular members of the reason given by the commentator on Sefer ha-Temunah in his introduction. So it is found in many esteemed scribal exemplars whose transmitters have a tradition of making an alphabet of large letters, simple and doubled, in the Torah scroll alone.[TN210148] The allusion in this alef is that the Holy One, blessed be He, enlarged the happiness prepared for us through the blessing of Moses our master, at the conclusion of his discourse before his death, with the utmost increase of his spirit of knowledge, as it is written, "You increase their spirit; they expire."[TN210149] That happiness will continue to grow as the individuals of the nation unite in bringing countenances and opinions into concord. We explained this in the aforementioned discourse, in the chapter on the image and likeness. This is truly a proximate cause of the great and abundant happiness reserved for one people, as stated. Others said, following Midrash Rabbah and Tanhuma, that the remainder of the alef and vav which Moses made small on his own initiative ascended and rested upon the rays of splendor: the alef on his right and the vav on his left. In the alef's configuration—yod, vav, yod—their numerical value is that of the unique Name; with the vav spelled out in full, its nation of Israel, to bring countenances into concord, etc. "Which we explained in the discourse Heqor Din": Part IV, chapter 4. "Following Midrash Rabbah and Tanhuma": for it is stated there, "R. Judah bar Nahman said: when Moses wrote the Torah, a little remained in the pen; he passed it over his head, and from it his rays of splendor were made." They explain that the intention is the remainder of the alef and vav. "Which have the numerical value 'The Lord is one'": that is, in the small alef which remained and rested on his right, configured from two yods and a vav, the number twenty-six is found, equal to the name YHWH. The vav on his left has the value thirteen when spelled out in full, equal to ehad, one. Thus there is written, as follows[?], on the two rays of splendor, "The Lord is one."[TN210152] May the name of the Lord be blessed forever. Amen.

“Ehyeh,” etc.: asher is also among the names, and these hint at the first three, Keter, Hokhmah, and Binah, which are the head: the letters of asher are rosh. See Ma'amar H.H., part I, chapter 24. [TN250003]

“As is known in the laws of judges”: “B.G.?”—in capital cases, they begin by arguing first for acquittal. [TN250004]

“Not upon merit,” etc.: the attribute of Hesed. Therefore he said “the great hand,” hinting at Hesed, the right arm, as is known. “But upon mazzal,” etc.: this mazzal is not the heavenly mazzal, for the heavenly mazzal and all its attendants only perform the work of the merit mentioned, Abraham's Hesed.

“Faithful witnesses,” etc.: the Holy One, blessed be

Rema of Fano

“The LORD attended to Sarah as He had said.” Scripture hints to us that the attending to this righteous woman came from a high place of which it is said, “Ehyeh asher Ehyeh”—“I shall be what I shall be.” Our Sages said: children, life, and sustenance do not depend on merit, but on mazzal. Although we explained this in its plain sense in Heqor Din—a true path, simple and deep, desirable for understanding, firm and correct—let it be sought in its place. It satisfies the soul longing to know how upright are the LORD's ways and how well ordered are the paths of providence, with nothing lacking. Here, to enlarge understanding, it is fitting to explain what the sages of the Torah's mysteries, masters of aggadah, said about it. [TN250001]

Merit is a designation for the attribute of Hesed given to Abraham. Even judgment, which is the Fear of Isaac, opens first with merit, as is known in the laws of judges. Therefore, “Abraham fathered Isaac”: his facial features resembled his father's. These three good gifts, which the Righteous One of the world graciously gives with knowledge, understanding, and discernment, encompass the kinds of happiness in both worlds, with none missing. They do not depend upon merit—the great hand we mentioned—but upon mazzal.

The intention is not the heavenly

“Scripture hints to us”: by saying “the LORD,” and also “as He had said,” “as He had spoken,” as will be explained at the end of section 2. [TN250006]

“From a high place”: from the Supreme Crown.

“Ehyeh asher Ehyeh”: a name hinting at Keter, as explained in the Zohar, Aharei, page 177; see there.

“Our Sages said”: in the chapter “Ellu megallehin”; it is Rava's statement.

“In Heqor Din”: II.28, 29, 30; see there.

“Here”: according to the matter before us, it is fitting to explain Rava's statement by what the sages of the Torah's mysteries said in Tiqqunim, “Ti. D. 21” [?]: “Upon Keter depend life and sustenance, for it is the mazzal of all, and it does not depend on mazzal. They have already established: children, life, and sustenance do not depend on merit but on mazzal, for Hesed is merit." This will be explained below. See section 3, where the master explains that all the sefirot impart and let influx flow to one another. Keter, above, is head and source of them all; therefore it is the mazzal of all, from the expression for flowing. [TN250007]

"For merit": is a designation and description of Hesed. This is "it does not depend on merit," etc.—"Hesed is mazzal, Heaven forbid. It, its host, and its officers, although their dominion on earth is manifest in their multitude and greatness to eyes of flesh, are only minor attendants carrying out the work of that merit and the other divine attributes "revealed to it" [?], assisted by those who stretch them out, their movers, ministers of the Most High who do His will. This is how they explained it in Bereshit Rabbah, at the end of section 12. From their side there is no mazzal for Israel at all, as it is written, "Do not be dismayed at the signs of heaven." Abraham and Sarah were faithful witnesses to this. [TN250002] merit," as stated in Tiqqunim.

"Even judgment," etc.: where we also find merit as a designation for Gevurah and the attribute of judgment, this is likewise because judgment opens with merit first. Thus the Zohar, Shemot, page 40: "All the judgments of this world, all decrees and petitions, stand in one palace, where seventy-two members of the Sanhedrin examine the world's judgments. That palace is called the Palace of Merit,

because when they judge a case they first argue in the person's favor. It is not so at the degree of the Other Side, where there is a place called Guilt," etc. [TN250008]

"In the laws of judges": the Mishnah, Sanhedrin chapter 4: in capital cases, they open for acquittal.

"Therefore": the Sages said in Tanhuma, on "Abraham fathered Isaac," that Isaac's facial features resembled Abraham's. On this approach, the intention is like his attribute, the Fear of Isaac: through the merit with which judgment first opens, it resembles the attribute of Hesed belonging to Abraham.

"These three gifts": children, life, and sustenance.

"With knowledge, understanding, and discernment": in the first three attributes, Keter, Binah, Hokhmah, as will be explained in the next section.

"Encompassing": all kinds of human happiness and success in both worlds. Through children, a person inherits both, as the Sages say. Life and sustenance are the needs of this world through which one can also reach life in the world to come.

"Not upon merit": not upon Hesed, called the great hand, as explained in the Zohar, Ki Tetse, page 548; rather, upon mazzal, the Supreme Crown.

"It": the heavenly mazzal and its host, with their multitude and greatness, are only minor attendants performing the work of that merit, Hesed, and of the other six sefirot joined to Hesed. These are the days of building that govern the world. What they decree concerning it is carried out through the spheres and constellations, assisted by the angels who stretch and move them. Since the gifts mentioned do not depend even on merit and the other sefirot, all the more do they not depend on the heavenly constellations.

"In Bereshit Rabbah": there, Rabbi Simeon ben Laqish said: "A king of flesh and blood makes a ship. First he brings beams," etc., "and afterward sets navigators over them. But the Holy One, blessed be He, created both them and their leaders. This is 'Thus says God the LORD, who creates the heavens and stretches them out': it is written as 'their navigators.'" [TN250009]

"There is no mazzal for Israel," etc.: this resolves what would apparently be difficult for Rava, who said that it depends on mazzal, from the Sages' saying in Shabbat that there is no mazzal for Israel.

Tosafot already raised this at the end of “Ha-holets” and said that sometimes great merit helps and cancels mazzal. But with the Torah's mystical sages' explanation of dependence on mazzal, there is no difficulty at all, for certainly Israel has no mazzal from the side of heavenly mazzal.

“Faithful witnesses to this”: on the side of heavenly mazzal they would not have had children, until the Holy One, blessed be He, said, “Leave your astrology,” as is known.

Therefore he says here: rather, this mazzal is the name Ehyeh asher Ehyeh mentioned above, namely the Supreme Crown, called Asher, whose letters are

Rema of Fano

Rather, this mazzal is the holy Name we mentioned, called Asher, for they pronounce it fortunate. Its letters are rosh, head, for it is the head and source of all the mazzalot and bestowers of influx; beside it, all are like clay in the potter's hand. From there our father Jacob merited a complete household, of which it is written, “Who redeemed Abraham,” for this is what stood by him in Ur of the Chaldeans. rosh, for it is the head and source of all the other sefirot, which let flow and impart influx, each to her sister caused by her. Beside the Supreme Crown, all are like clay in the potter's hand; He inclines them to whatever He desires. Therefore Rabbi Simeon ben Yohai said of it in Tiqqunim that it is the mazzal of all, and this too is what the Sages intended by saying, “The matter depends on mazzal.”

“From there”: from the Supreme Crown, Jacob too merited children and the establishment of the twelve tribes of Yah, as it is written, “Thus says the LORD to the house of Jacob, who redeemed Abraham.” In Midrash Rabbah, Toledot, they said concerning this: Abraham was saved from the fiery furnace only through Jacob's merit, because a complete household was destined to come forth from him, as also explained in Y.F.T.

“Wood for the burnt offering”: hints at the tribes. They are the acacia wood that built the house of Israel, in the manner of “King Solomon made himself a palanquin from the wood of Lebanon.” The intention is that the blessed LORD, the King to whom peace belongs, made himself a palanquin and the building of the house of Israel from the wood of Lebanon—from the twelve tribes.

“He testified concerning it,” etc.: “made” indicates the perfection of the ordering and the beauty of the arrangement. By saying “made for Himself,” Scripture testified that the LORD did all these things for His sake.

“The men of His counsel”: the twelve tribes. He explains atsei, wood, through etsah, counsel, and Lebanon through heart and strength, for nun expresses strength, as in “May His name flourish,” which the commentators explained as strength and dominion.

“Purified white”: he further explains Lebanon through whiteness.

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“This means that the causes,” etc.: the seven lower attributes, called the six days of building. They are in rank one above another. [TN250018]

“Permission from above it”: an expression of the Zohar. When it takes permission, it takes it from what is above it in rank; counsel, however, it takes from its fellow, the one below it.

“A proximate cause,” etc.: see above, part II, sections 10, 18, 45.

Rema of Fano

The truth is that the entire world depends upon mazzal for children, life, and sustenance, as stated. Its influx of these reaches the body of recipients through many intermediaries, according to the rank of the one receiving it. Thus Ecclesiastes said, “One high above another keeps watch, and higher ones are above them.” This means that the causes extending to act among those below are one above another and need one another. The word “keeps watch” does not determine the direction: each watches and waits for the other, in the sense of “permission from above it, and counsel from its fellow.” It does not say al gavoah, “above a high one,” but me-al,

“Until it reaches,” etc.: this explains the end of the verse, “And higher ones are above them,” hinting at the first three, Keter, Hokhmah, Binah. Their counterpart in nature is every corporeal thing: at first there is nothing of it, which is called privation, from the language of being absent. Afterward they make unformed matter, and then form. So too with these three: an aspect of actual privation, then some matter in the second, and in the third form as well, as it were, for “from my flesh I behold God.”

"Three properties; the first": the explanation of the third property[?]—that it has no rank or elevation above another. [TN250019]

"We said that they have no," etc.: having no principle does not mean, as the heretics understand, that they were created of themselves, Heaven forbid. Rather, they have no natural principle; but all concede what is written, "from one Shepherd," and "through His will." [TN250020]

"Three chiefs," etc.: in Keter there are three heads. [TN250023]

"Which Ecclesiastes said," etc.: what was quoted above, "One high above another," etc. Otherwise, according to how we explained the verse above, there is the difficulty "the native on the ground." If we reverse it, with "one high above another" hinting at the first three, how does it then say "and higher ones," meaning the later ones, "above them"? The stranger would be in the highest heavens and the native on the ground, when it is the reverse. It must be as we explained.

"Primordial" is Keter; "Clear," Hokhmah; "Clearest," Binah. See Pardes, Gate of the Luminosities.

"In reversed order," etc.: "from above," hinting at two kinds of height attributable to them in relation to another: what is called a proximate or remote cause, as explained in its place among our writings and mentioned earlier here. [TN250015]

This continues until it reaches three causes equally above the other causes, none of the three being exalted above another. Their counterparts below are the principles of nature: privation, matter, and form. They have three essential properties: first, none is the cause of another; second, they have no other principle; third, from them everything that comes into being is generated, as explained in natural philosophy. By saying that they have no other principle, we mean to exclude another natural principle grasped and known in its essence and definitions apart from them. All agree that they were given by one Shepherd, and through His will there is life for all. "Above them are three chiefs," those we mentioned, above whom is only the absolute Will. So it is with the matter we are explaining. A person of knowledge should strengthen his understanding of this verse of Ecclesiastes, for if you do not say so, how astonishing: the native is on the ground, and the stranger in the highest heavens! [TN250016]

Here Scripture testified that Sarah was attended to through the upper mazzal, which in its own self and glory encompasses these three principles in complete equality. Call them by their names in direct order: Primordial, Clear, and Clearest. Some teach them in beginning with Clearest, which is Binah, and afterward Clear, which is Hokhmah, like understanding and discernment, where Hokhmah comes last.

"In the word asher": alef—Keter; shin—Binah; resh—Hokhmah, in the manner of "the beginning of wisdom."

Yad Yehudah - 1

"The truth," etc.: the master explains Sarah's exceptional distinction, raised at the end of the preceding section. It is true that everyone merits children from the upper mazzal, but through intermediaries—the other sefirot to which the influx comes from above and from which it is drawn to the recipients below. Sarah had something more: she merited children from the Supreme Crown itself without an intermediary, as he concludes.

"According to the rank of the one receiving": as is the recipient of the influx below, so is the intermediary. Some merit receiving this mazzal's influx through one sefirah particular to their rank, while others merit a different sefirah.

"Thus Ecclesiastes said," chapter 5: "If you see oppression of the poor," etc., "for one high above another keeps watch, and higher ones are above them." "One high above another" means that the holy sefirot, the seven days of building, which are the causes extending to govern those below, are one above another by way of cause and effect. In this manner, governance comes below properly.

"They need one another": the effect needs the cause

reversed order: Primordial, Clearest, Clear, following the order knowledge, understanding, discernment. This is the order of the three letters in asher, for one accustomed to their allusions. These luminosities stand at the height of the world, far, far above nature, beyond searching out. He attended to Sarah as He had said, without any intermediary, for He spoke and it came to be. [TN250017] in order to receive from it, and the cause needs the effect in order to bring the action through it to the recipient.

"The word 'keeps watch'": means waits, like "his father kept the matter." It refers to the first mention of high: one high above his high fellow watches and waits for that fellow. It also connects with the second high: there is one high above his high fellow who watches for the one higher than himself. Thus the attachment of keeps watch is not decided, but both readings are true: each watches and waits for the other, and they need one another.

"In the sense": of what is said in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 103: "'See now that I, I am He, and there is no God with Me'—this is the Cause of causes," etc. "For 'not above' [?] does one of these causes perform any act until it takes permission from the one above it, as we explained concerning 'Let us make man.' 'Let us make' is said of two: one says it to the one above it, and the one above it does nothing until it takes counsel from its fellow. But the one called the Cause above all causes has none above it and none below equal to it," etc. [TN250021]

All the sefirot are causes, but each is above the second, so that the second is an effect in relation to the cause above it. Therefore, when it wishes to do something, it must take permission from the sefirah above it to bestow the influx needed for that action. When the higher sefirah wishes to do something, it must take counsel from its fellow—the sefirah below it, which will receive the influx. So it was with "Let us make man," a plural expression: the sefirah imparting and the one receiving the influx both said to one another, "Let us make man."

"But me-al": the reason is that me-al is higher than al, as explained in Heqor Din I.14 from the Zohar on "For Your lovingkindness is great above the heavens"; see there. Here he hints at two kinds of height: one is al, above a high one; the other me-al. For example, Yesod is above Malkhut, Hod above Yesod, and from above Malkhut.

"Attributable to them": to the causes mentioned in relation to another. When Hod is related to Yesod and Malkhut, Hod and Yesod are called the remote and proximate causes of Malkhut: Yesod the proximate cause, Hod the remote cause.

"Earlier": in part II, section 10.

"Until it reaches": this is the case throughout the seven days of building, from below upward, until reaching the first three sefirot, Keter, Hokhmah, Binah. These are equal in their excellence above the seven lower ones. Of them it says, "And higher ones are above them": the first three sefirot are higher than "one high above another," the seven sefirot governing those below. The whole verse means: "If you see oppression of the poor and the violent taking away of judgment and righteousness in a province, do not wonder at the matter," for everything is under complete providence and upright governance, as it comes from above through the holy sefirot, which are "one high above another," etc.

"Their counterparts below," etc.: Aristotle's book of natural philosophy explains that the natural principles are three: privation preceding coming-to-be, matter, and form. For example, a cucumber seed sown in the ground rots and becomes mere earth, then grows again from the ground like a plant, going on growing until the cucumber fruit comes from it. The fruit's matter is the seed's matter itself; the form is the cucumber form with which the seed clothes itself after putting off its form. Privation is when it rots and puts off its first form. This privation is required for the cucumber's generation and is its beginning, since it cannot sprout unless the seed first rots, as the Sages said concerning semen. See what the master wrote about this in Yonat Elem, chapter 3.

The book of natural philosophy also explains that these three principles have three intrinsic properties. First, none is the cause of another; they are equal in rank. Second, etc. By saying that they have no other principle, we do not mean, Heaven forbid, to assert their eternity, but that they have no principle known to us in its essence—that is, a natural principle. They certainly have a principle whose essence is not grasped by us: the blessed LORD, who brought them newly into being at the world's creation.

“All agree,” etc.: this refers back to the sefirot, all given and “rescued” [?] from the Emanator, Ein Sof, blessed be He. Above the sefirot are “three knees” [?], these Keter, Hokhmah, Binah, which are principles of the other sefirot. They themselves are equal, and above them is only the absolute Will, Ein Sof, blessed be He, who through the greatness of His concealment is in Himself beyond our grasp. See the beginning of Ma'amar ha-Middot. [TN250022]

“A person of knowledge should strengthen his understanding”: and confirm the interpretation we gave of this verse in Ecclesiastes—that “one high above another” refers to the seven sefirot, and “higher ones above them” to the first three. Otherwise, suppose you reverse it: “one high above another” refers to the first three, saying that they are not equal, and “higher ones above them” to the remaining sefirot, as though they were equal in rank. The verse would mean that the first three, one high above another, together with the other sefirot, which are higher ones, watch and oversee “them”—the oppression of the poor, etc. It would then be difficult: why did it first mention how the first three oversee the province and only afterward the other sefirot? It should have said the reverse, since the remaining sefirot are nearer to what is below than the first three. Is the native on the ground, etc.? The clear interpretation must be as we said.

“Here,” etc.: this concludes what was said at the beginning of the section, that the whole world depends on the upper mazzal through intermediaries. Sarah's case was different: the attending to her came through this upper mazzal itself, and the influx did not need to pass through the intermediate sefirot.

“These three principles”: the first three sefirot.

“Primordial, Clear, and Clearest”: as in Tiqqunim, Primordial designates Keter, Clear Hokhmah, and Clearest Binah.

“Some teach,” etc.: this is Rav Hai Gaon, who places Binah before Hokhmah, as stated in Pardes, Gate of the Luminosities.

“Following knowledge, understanding, discernment”: knowledge—Keter; afterward Binah; afterward discernment, meaning Hokhmah.

“In the word asher”: alef hints at Keter, shin at Binah, resh at Hokhmah, as stated there in the Gate of the Letters.

“Above nature”: the seven days of building are all causes, as a proximate cause to nature, whereas these luminosities are exceedingly high and a more remote cause, beyond searching out. Through them, without an intermediary, the LORD attended to Sarah. This is “the LORD attended”—in His own self and glory, without an intermediary, like what is expounded later concerning “the LORD struck every firstborn.”

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“For even,” etc.: if so, what was exceptional about Sarah? It was this renewal of creation, when a womb itself was given to Sarah.

“The great Fashioner,” etc.: as the Gemara says on “There is no Rock like our God”: there is no Fashioner like our God, who fashions a form within a form and places a spirit within it, etc.

“There is nothing new,” etc.: it is therefore difficult that a womb itself was newly made for Sarah. He answers, “As He had said at the beginning,” for He had already brought forth this matter anew in thought when saying, “Let us make man,” in the manner of “I said in my heart.” Here too, “as He had said” in thought: it was then decreed concerning her that she be created lacking the terpahat, which is the womb itself. At the end of ninety-nine, He would create it for her, bringing into actuality what until then had been in potentiality alone. Likewise, “as He had spoken,” said concerning Sarah, hints at explicit speech when it issued from His blessed mouth.

Rema of Fano

It was not only the power to have children that was given to her from the high place we mentioned, for even for someone not naturally barren, from there the LORD commands the blessing. Rather, even the renewal of creation in Sarah's body, to bring a womb itself into being for her, required this supremely blessed power, Asher Ehyeh, to fashion and renew it. For He is the great Fashioner of all the work of creation, who continually renews His goodness every day. [TN250024]

It has already been agreed by all that there is nothing new under the sun, nor anything added beyond what was first decreed. Thus the Sages said that the Holy One, blessed be He, stipulated with the sea that it should split for Moses and with the sun that it should stand still for Joshua, and similarly in other cases. Here too, “as He had said” means from the beginning of thought, when “Let us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness” issued from His blessed mouth. This was a hidden utterance of thought, according to all the interpretations given of it. From then it was decreed that Sarah's form would lack the terpahat, the womb, and that at the end of ninety years the LORD would create a creation for her—not by power or might, but by His spirit.

Likewise, “as He had spoken” means

[TN250026]

“Until the end of days”: a hint to their years, qof for Abraham, tsadi for Sarah; this is qets. [TN250027]

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Not only the power to have children,” etc.: this continues the preceding section. Sarah had a second distinction: she received from the Supreme Crown not only the power to have children, but also the newly made organ of the womb which she had previously lacked, as the Sages said, “There was a womb.” [TN250028]

“All the work of creation”: hinted at in bereshit, as stated in the Zohar in several places. There, page 1: “Bereshit—the first of all, Ehyeh,” etc.; “Asher—the head that issues from the beginning.”

“Here too”: the LORD attended to Sarah and created the womb organ itself for her, as He had said and stipulated from the beginning, at the creation of humankind; otherwise there is nothing new under the sun.

“From the beginning of thought”: the language of saying applies to thought, as it is written, “The LORD said in His heart.” The utterance “Let us make man” is thus like an utterance of thought. From then He, blessed be He, decreed in His thought that He would create Sarah's from the beginning, when the utterance “Be fruitful and multiply” issued from His blessed mouth: an explicit speech to the man and his wife. From then it was decreed that Abraham and Sarah's union would delay bearing fruit until the end of days: a hundred years for Abraham and ninety for Sarah. [TN250025] womb organ at the appropriate time. Therefore, the first clause does not say “as He had spoken,” as the final clause does.

“According to all the interpretations”: whether

according to the one who says He took counsel with the ministering angels, or the one who says with the works of heaven and earth, or with the souls of the righteous, the speech was not explicit to them; it was an utterance of thought, as though He spoke to them.

“Not by power”: newly introduced power, but by His spirit He had already completed and fashioned all the works of creation when the world was created.

“Likewise”: in the final clause, “as He had spoken” means as He had spoken from the beginning in “Be fruitful and multiply.” Therefore it says “as He had spoken,” for “Be fruitful and multiply” was explicit speech to humankind, not an utterance of thought.

“Until the end of days”: qof for Abraham and tsadi for Sarah, making qets, as stated in Tiqqunim concerning Isaac: qets, hay, worlds. [TN250029]

“To drive out a kid of the goats,” etc.: now he explains the verse in Va-yeshev, “I shall send a kid of the goats from the flock.” He means: I shall drive away the goat sent to Azazel from the flock—Israel, the flock of His pasture. [TN250033]

“Sheep and goats,” etc.: the number two remains, hinting at the two lambs, Perez and Zerah, who will remain in holiness, whereas the whole shell will pass away entirely.

Rema of Fano

Know and see: throughout those years when Abraham and Sarah joined together and had no children, their union was not an idle act, Heaven forbid. The union of the righteous certainly has a counterpart above. Therefore Scripture speaks at length of Judah and Tamar's union and makes known that her reward was to drive out a kid of the goats, through the mystery of the goat from the flock of the Omnipresent's pasture. The word flock includes sheep and goats. When we subtract the numerical value of gedi izzim, a kid of the goats, which is 144,

“Both for the Most High,” etc.: unlike the goat sent to Azazel.

“As explained in the Zohar,” etc.: see the Zohar, Aharei Mot.

“He did not specify,” etc.: he said simply, “I shall send”—Azazel, into the wilderness, etc. Though he goes to death, he is nevertheless fierce and unsubdued.

“For at first he was,” etc.:

Satan was first a holy angel and eventually a rebel. As in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer, Samael rode upon the serpent as a rider upon a horse, etc.; see Yalqut.

“In the sense of ‘very good’”: they expounded in the Midrash, “Good—the angel of death.”

“A sorcerer to stoning”: they are called keshafim because they contradict the retinue above. Likewise, “in the sense of the fallen ones”: Shamhazai and Uzziel, whom He cast from heaven, like stoning, because they contradicted the work of creation. The goat's being pushed is also like stoning: they pushed it from a height of four statures, as explained in the Gemara. [TN250034]

“The sender's friend”: Judah; “the mystery of the evil one”—Judah in holiness and Hirah in impurity, for “God made the one opposite the other,” etc.

“That he himself should take,” etc.: a hint to the Shekhinah and the counterpart above through awakening from below.

“Over there,” etc.: in the wilderness, the place of impurity. There was no appointment for the Shekhinah there, but at the opening of eyes, in a holy place.

from ha-tson, the flock, which is 146, two examined lambs remain: Perez and Zerah. Alternatively, two goats remain: the inner goat and the outer goat, both for the Most High, for they are most holy offerings. [TN250030]

The meaning of the pledge is explained in the Zohar. Scripture did not specify where it would be sent; its silence is as explicit as an explanation: to Azazel, into the wilderness. Its mystery is az azal: he is fierce and unsubdued even though he goes and perishes, in the sense of “going to die.” At first he was a medicine of life for the world, in the sense of “very good,” but rebelled against his Maker to contradict the work of creation and still persists in his rebellion. Therefore the Torah said to sentence every sorcerer to stoning, in the sense of the fallen ones. This is the meaning of pushing the goat from the cliff by an appointed man—Hirah, the sender's friend, the mystery of the evil one who is a lover and friend. [TN250031]

The purpose of this sending was that he himself should take the pledge from the woman's hand, in the manner of awakening from below. The appointed man did not find her over there, for the people of the wilderness place said there had been no appointment here, but at the opening toward which all eyes look, as is fitting.

Judah said: you take the kid for yourself, for her, for her sake. It is the bone that falls to his share from the King's house, and it is for her benefit, to lighten the sin of her children upon her, lest we become

“The bone that falls to his share”: a bone that fell to Azazel's share. Through this Israel's sins would be atoned for, in the manner of “The goat shall bear upon it all their sins,” as explained in the Midrash.

“Mother with children”: Father and Mother, Zeir Anpin and Nuqva. This is “we shall become a spoil—children [?].” [TN250035]

Yad Yehudah - 1

“A counterpart above,” etc.: as in the Zohar, Aharei, page 128: “There we learned: the holy Name is hidden and revealed, and the Torah, which is the upper holy Name, is hidden and revealed. Every verse of Torah and every passage of Torah is hidden and revealed. For it was taught that Rabbi Judah said: from that righteous woman's boldness, many good things came into the world. Who was she? Tamar, of whom it is written, ‘She sat at the opening of eyes.’ Rabbi Abba said: this passage proves that the Torah is hidden and revealed. We have examined the Torah and have not found a place called the opening of eyes; rather, all is hidden, a mystery of mysteries. It was taught: what did this righteous woman see that led her to this deed? She knew in her father-in-law's house the ways of the Holy One, blessed be He, and how He conducts this world with human beings. Because she knew, the Holy One, blessed be He, established the matter through her," etc.

"'She sat at the opening of eyes': what is the opening of eyes? As it says, 'He was sitting at the opening of the tent'; it is written, 'The LORD will pass over the opening,' and 'Open for me the gates of righteousness,' etc. 'Eyes': all the eyes of the worlds look toward this opening. 'Which is on a contemptible thing—mother with children, Heaven forbid. In all their distress He is distressed. She too shall take the pledge for herself as a gift, in the sense of "the reward of a commandment is a commandment." Here the intention is completed, as the verse concludes: "Here, I sent this kid"—to remove it beyond Israel's border, as stated—"but you," in the place where you were commanded to take it, "did not find her" there, for she had returned from the exiles. This is her redemption and the redemption of the holy flock. [TN250032]

the road to Timnah': what is Timnah? As we explained concerning 'He beholds the likeness of the LORD.' So we have established: Tamar set the matter in place below, and it blossomed with blossoms and sprouted branches in the mystery of faith. 'Judah still rules with God, and is faithful with the holy ones,'" etc.; see there, where it is treated at length. [TN250036]

"The mystery of the goat": as further stated there:

"'He said, I shall send a kid of the goats from the flock.' A king had a son by a maidservant who went about in his palace. The king wished to cleave to the upper Matron and enter his palace. She said, 'Who will give me the king in his palace?' He said, 'From now onward I shall cast out and expel the maidservant's son from My palace.' So here too: 'I shall send a kid of the goats from the flock.' We have explained this in 'You shall not cook a kid'; all these come from the side of the firstborn of cattle. Therefore it says 'I shall send,' not 'I shall give,' but 'I shall send': I shall expel and cast him out so that he will not be found in the world or in My palace," etc.

A kid of the goats designates the Other Side, as we say concerning "You shall not cook a kid," and as in the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 221. The master says this also hints at the goat sent away, which corresponds to the Other Side called goat, as in the Zohar, Aharei, page 114; see there.

"These are Perez and Zerah": born from her; the hint concerns them.

"Alternatively": these two correspond to the inner and outer goats in the service of the Day of Atonement. In contrast to them, "I shall send" refers to the goat sent away.

"As explained in the Zohar": there, "'She said, If you give a pledge': these are the Matron's signs, for being blessed by the King in her union," etc. "'She said, Your seal, your cord, and your staff': these are the upper bonds, the bride's adornments, for being blessed from those three; all is found in three, and all is blessed from here—Netsah, Hod, Yesod," etc.

"Its mystery": by notarikon, az azal: Satan is fierce, even though he goes.

"In the sense": of what is written concerning Esau, "Going to die." The whole character of his going is toward death.

"At first he was," etc.: as in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer, quoted in Yalqut, Bereshit, that Samael was a great prince in heaven with twelve wings, etc.

"A medicine of life": his name attests it, Samael; afterward he became a poison of death.

"In the sense": of "And behold, very good." Our Sages said this is death; its angel was initially good.

"To contradict the work of creation": and cause the first Adam to sin, as in Pirqei de-Rabbi Eliezer there.

"To stoning": its prescribed action is pushing and falling, to throw the condemned person to the ground. This is measure for measure for his having fallen from the side of holiness.

“In the sense of the fallen ones”: these were Azza and Azael, who fell from their holiness. [TN250037]

“By an appointed man”: one designated for this. In the Zohar, Aharei, page 150, they explained it as a man from the Other Side. Here too Hirah was from the Other Side; therefore Scripture called him Judah's friend, through the language of ra, evil, and rea, friend, like the dog so named, as explained above in part II, section 21.

“He himself”: and let him be subdued to holiness.

“Over there”: the side of impurity.

“There had been no”: qedeshah and appointment for the Shekhinah here, but at the opening of eyes, as explained in the Zohar quoted. [TN250038]

“Judah said, ‘Let her take it, lest we become a contemptible thing. Here, I sent this kid, but you did not find her.’” The master interprets tiqqah both in direct address to Hirah and in the third person concerning Tamar: you, Hirah, take the kid for yourself, for this is your portion. Take it for her, for her sake and benefit, because thereby Jacob's sin will be atoned for, and “the goat shall bear upon it,” etc. She, Tamar, shall take the pledge.

“Lest we become”: the plural includes mother and children, for the Shekhinah, as it were, suffers in Israel's sin.

“In the sense of ‘the reward of a commandment is a commandment’”: this is her reward.

“Here”: in saying to Hirah, you take the kid.

“But you did not find her”: the Shekhinah, for she had already returned to the holy ground, where her tent had been at first. So may it be, speedily in our days, amen.

“Here too,” etc.: just as the union of Judah and Tamar, etc., is a pattern above, so the union of Abraham and Sarah contains something resembling the pattern above.

“Was not fit,” etc.: for a union to take place there.

“In the sense of ‘She is my sister,’” etc.: in the mystery of the two faces, when she was a point between his breasts, and then there

Rema of Fano

Here too, the union of Abraham and Sarah contains something resembling the pattern above. The land of Egypt was not fit for this at that time, in the sense of “She is my sister,” which we mentioned in the first part. Since it was full of idols and sorcery, in their own place we must be concerned lest they prevail over their opposite, for we had not yet been purified of the pollution of Terah and his father Nahor. Therefore Abraham did not approach her while he was wandering from kingdom to was no union, as explained above in chapter 5 of the first part of this discourse.

“In their own place,” etc.: in a place of impurity, we must be concerned lest the shells, God forbid, prevail over their opposite, over holiness.

“For we had not been purified,” etc.: therefore Abraham did not approach Sarah, etc.

"In the sense of 'Drive out the maidservant'": she did not drive her out herself, because Abraham, who is the attribute of lovingkindness, has the power within himself to drive out the shells, more than the other attributes, as he proceeds to explain.

"The name Michael," etc.: this is mi ka-El, "Who is like El?" The attribute of lovingkindness is called El, in the sense of "the lovingkindness of God all day," because there is none like it, and the name El belongs particularly to this attribute.

"For the higher attributes," etc.: the three higher attributes, Keter, Hokhmah, and Binah, have no shell facing them at all. The lower ones beneath lovingkindness have a shell facing them, but they have no power or authority to annul them by themselves. Only Abraham's lovingkindness has the power to annul the shell.

"His learning accompanies him": in the manner of the Gemara, "One traveling on the road who has no escort should occupy himself with Torah," as it says, "For they are a graceful accompaniment," etc.

"Through the intention of their unifications," etc.: before they were fit to beget children, they did another people. For the union of Abraham and Sarah—and all the more when it bears fruit and multiplies the likeness—certainly involves the annulment and cessation of the shell, in the sense of "Drive out this maidservant."

This is the difference between the attribute of lovingkindness and the other attributes below it. Although it too has a shell facing it from outside, lovingkindness nevertheless prevails over it to a greater degree. This is the meaning of the name Michael: the angel of lovingkindness proclaims that there is none like it among all the attributes. It is known that the name El belongs particularly to it. For the higher attributes have no shell facing them, and the lower ones have no authority to annul them; only "lovingkindness to Abraham" does, through the merit of the acts of lovingkindness he performed for the whole world, since nourishment for all is within it. [TN230001]

"He planted an eshel": we read this as an acronym for eating, drinking, and learning, to teach all the guests to bless the God who nourishes all. For one traveling on the road, his learning accompanies him: this is escorting. He even taught and urged the ministering angels, saying, "Sustain your heart"—the side of good, one heart alone. But "afterward," which is their aspect of the rear, the side of evil, "you shall pass on" by leaping over it, so as not to sustain it, in the sense of "Do not say, 'I shall repay evil.'" They answered him, "So shall you do, as you have spoken." The final letters not go forth in vain; they were preparing souls for converts.

"From their rejection," etc.: through the sin of the first Adam, some sparks of holiness fell into impurity. These are the converts who later convert. Abraham repaired them and prepared souls for them through his union. Accordingly, this is the intention of the verse, "These are the generations of the heavens," etc., "when they were created," be-hibbare'am, which our Sages expounded as be-Avraham, "through Abraham," for Abraham repaired the sin, as mentioned. [TN230004]

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Here too," etc.: this continues what he began to say in the preceding section: the union of Abraham and Sarah before they had children was not in vain, God forbid. Rather, it contains something resembling the pattern above. Just as souls are born through the upper union, blessed be He, so Abraham and Sarah's union begot the souls of converts, as will be explained shortly.

"For this": for a union to take place there.

"In the sense": Abraham said of Sarah, "She is my sister," and not "my wife."

"In the first part": chapter

5; see there, for they are the luminaries above, in the mystery of the two faces.

“Since” the land of Egypt was full of idols and sorcery, in their own place there is cause for concern: if the holy union enters their territory, the shells might, God forbid, prevail over their opposite and adversary.

“All the more when it bears fruit” above and multiplies the likeness through holy souls: this involves annulling the shell. Therefore, in its place Abraham feared the opposite and separated from his wife.

“In the sense”: Sarah asked of these words form נהרת, related to “bright” and “clear”: that is, “You have taught us well.” [TN230002]

Through the intention of their unifications, Abraham and Sarah were drawing to themselves all the souls that would in the future be created for converts fit to attach themselves to Isaac's seed, in the sense of “the souls they made in Haran.” The Sages said: Abraham converted the men, and Sarah converted the women. This does not refer only to the converts of that time, who were converts at the gate and nothing more, but to all those coming into the world who would convert in the future and become righteous converts. Through this they would have redemption from their rejection on account of the primordial sin. [TN230003]

Abraham, “Drive out the maidservant,” for the annulment of the shells affected her. [TN230005]

“To a greater degree”: through the Torah of lovingkindness. [TN230006]

“This is the meaning”: the angel of lovingkindness is called Michael from the acronym mi ka-El, “Who is like El?” The name El is a designation of the attribute of lovingkindness; who among all the attributes is like it in annulling the shells?

“For the higher”: the three attributes Keter, Hokhmah, and Binah.

days of building. [TN230007]

“Only lovingkindness to Abraham”: this is his attribute, and thus his power is great to annul the shells, through the merit of acts of lovingkindness, etc.

“He planted an eshel,” etc.: incidentally, the master explains the Sages' acronym eshel, “eating, drinking, escorting.” Escorting also means learning Torah. Through this it is properly expounded as “eating, drinking, learning.” He not only fed his guests and gave them drink, but also taught them to give thanks and bless in the name of the LORD. He not only escorted them, but also taught them Torah in which to occupy themselves, as our Sages said: “One traveling on the road who has no escort should occupy himself with Torah,” as it says, “For they are a graceful accompaniment,” etc.

“Your heart,” libbekhem: he did not say levavkhem. [TN230008]

“But ‘afterward you shall pass on’”: this is the aspect of the rear.

“In the sense of ‘Do not say,’” etc. (Proverbs 20): the intention is not to do good to evil, as explained in the Zohar.

“They were indeed,” etc.: he returns to the beginning of the section. The union of Abraham and Sarah before they had children resembled the pattern above: they were drawing to themselves the souls of converts. As stated in the Zohar, Shelah Lekha, page 318: “The head of the academy said: It is written, ‘Sarai was barren; she had no child.’ Once it says, ‘Sarai was barren,’ do I not know that she had no child? What is ‘she had no child’? Rather, she did not bear a child, but she did bear souls. Through the attachment of the desire of those two righteous people, they were begetting souls for converts throughout the time they were in Haran, as the righteous do in the Garden of Eden. As it says,

‘The souls they made in Haran’: they certainly made souls.”

“They were converts at the gate only”: they accepted upon themselves not to worship idols, but were not righteous converts. For the passage concerns all the righteous converts who would exist in the future: Abraham and Sarah were drawing their souls to “Iron and bronze,” etc.: the connection of the successive parts of the verse is as follows. When your spring is locked as with iron against sexual misconduct and the enticement of the evil inclination, and shines like burnished bronze, you are assured that every day an influx will be drawn down and offspring begotten every day. This is “and as your days”: according to the number of your days shall your deva'ekha be, an expression of flowing, pouring forth an influx of contentment.

This is “For He has strengthened the bolts of your gates”: when you strengthen the bolts of your gates against the inclination's enticements, and your intention is only to benefit others by preparing souls, as Abraham did. Perhaps the word “your gates” hints at

Through this, the union of Abraham and Sarah completed the offspring of the first Adam, as it says, “For I have made you the father of a multitude of nations.” This resembles the act of levirate marriage.

Of this it says, “For He has strengthened the bolts of your gates; He has blessed your children within you,” in the sense of Moses' blessing, “Your locks are iron and bronze, and as your days, so shall your flow be.” He means that when a person's spring is locked and sealed, well guarded against an empty act and the enticements of the inclination, strong as iron and flashing sparks like the burnished bronze spoken of the ministering angels, he is assured that throughout his days he will draw down and pour forth an influx of contentment for himself and others. This resembles the Sages' statement that in the future a woman will give birth every day, with an addition of renewal to all the work of creation, wonder upon wonder, each day's matter on its day. [TN230010]

the converts at the gate. Then you will be answered first, and “He has blessed your children within you”: they will be blessed before birth, while still within you, in the sense of “Before I formed you,” etc.

For her intention was, “Before she travailed” for herself—as Sarah, before she was fit to give birth for herself at all, would travail for others through her union, preparing souls for them, as stated above in the preceding section. [TN230012]

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Through this”: Abraham and Sarah, through their union, repaired the souls of converts who had been rejected through the sin of the first Adam, as stated at the end of the preceding section.

From what we know—that one who asks mercy for his fellow while needing the same thing is answered first—“He has blessed your children within you” will mean not only the reward for strengthening oneself against the evil inclination, as stated. Rather, since “before she travailed” for herself, “she gave birth” for others, as explained here concerning Sarah our mother, her righteousness bore witness for her. Her reward was, “Before pain came upon her, she delivered a male”: in the upper roots, one fit for blessing in his mother's womb, in the sense of “Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you.” [TN230011] bronze, then “as your days, so shall your flow be”: throughout your days a good influx will stream and flow to you and to others. This is also “For He has strengthened the bolts of your gates”: it nullifies the evil inclination, and through this “He has blessed your children within you,” from the influx to you and to others every day.

“From what we know,” etc.: “within you” means while your children are in your womb, according to the statement, “Everyone who asks mercy for his

Scripture makes clear, concerning Abraham and Sarah, their firmness in modesty, so as not to breach the boundary of desire, in the statement, “Now, indeed, I know that you are a woman beautiful in appearance.” Had it not been necessary to secure deliverance, even then he would not have considered her beauty. nivrekhu, said to Jacob. Without the vav they are in the past; the vav alone converts them into the future, as he proceeds to explain.

“Because they had already been prepared,” etc.: therefore they are in the past, since they had already been prepared; in the future, from now onward, they will move from potentiality into actuality.

"All the layerings," etc.: in the sense of layering a tree.

"As long as one eats," etc.: as long as the branch draws nourishment from the tree and has not yet taken root in the ground, it turns its face away from it, just as a poor person turns his face away from the householder when receiving from him. Afterward, when it has nourishment of its own, it is not ashamed before him and looks at his face. This provides a sign in the branch of whether it has taken root or not.

"Is ashamed to look," etc.: it means ashamed.

"All converts were from us," etc.: as explained above in section 6, the sparks of holiness rejected through the first Adam's sin are the converts. It follows that they were Israel. Just as dust receives the layered branches, so we receive the converts.

"On her own," etc.: "was ransomed" pertains only to the captive woman, and "converted" pertains only to her gentile condition; the other cases are similar. "Who has been ransomed" is singular, and so are all the others. Rather, he is a

their children to receive a blessing before their formation, in what was said to Isaac: "All the nations of the earth shall bless themselves through your seed." This means that his blessing would spread to others, like a spring that grows stronger and flows into many pools of living water, and like a river that does not cease and is blessed from its own rocky source. [TN230013]

Because Esau came forth from him, he was not told, "They shall be blessed through you," as a completed action attached to himself, as was said to Jacob, for he and all his seed are holy, and the LORD is truly among them. Both these verbs appear in the past converted into the future: I mean ve-hitbarekhu, said to Isaac, and ve-nivrekhu, said to Jacob. For these layerings had already been prepared through Abraham and Sarah. He had already been told, "I shall make your seed like the dust of the earth," which receives all the layered branches. It is known that a layering is only a branch of a tree lowered to the ground and buried in the dust until its stem takes root in the earth. As long as one eats what is not one's own, one is ashamed to look at him. [TN230014]

Here too, all converts were from us and were rejected; now they are simply returning to us. This is what we learned: "The female convert, the captive woman, and the maidservant, who have been ransomed, who have converted, and who have been freed." Yet we ought to teach, "who has been ransomed, who has converted, and who has been freed," for each one requires her own particular precise tanna, exact in his wording. The impaired condition—maidservant, female convert, captive woman—he stated in the singular, attaching that condition to their bodies alone. But when she was remedied, that is, "who have been ransomed," etc., he used the plural, for body and soul were remedied.

"Although we hold," etc.: how can converts be fit, since they have already been rejected? One may answer that this applies to gentiles whose souls did not stand at Mount Sinai, unlike the souls of converts, which were there.

"For they drew near to me when I fled," etc.: that is, in my poverty; therefore show them lovingkindness. If they had come to me in prosperity, they would not have been fit to be brought near, for perhaps they had acted for the sake of the royal table.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Scripture makes clear," etc.: this continues the preceding section. Through Abraham and Sarah's firmness in modesty, the influx spread to others, to all the nations of the earth.

"In the statement, 'Now, indeed, I know,'" etc.: our Sages said that he recognized it in her only then.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

"A blessing before their formation": they were blessed before being formed.

"Into many pools": he expounded ve-hitbarekhu through berekhot mayim, pools of water.

"He was not told ve-nivrekhu": this is a completed verbal form, whereas ve-hitbarekhu is an uncompleted verbal form. Likewise, he was not told "through you," attached to himself, but only "through your seed." This indicates that the blessing in his seed would not be so complete, because Esau came forth from him. [TN230018]

"As was said to Jacob": "All the families of the earth shall be blessed through you and through your seed."

"Converted into the future": by conversive vav.

"For they had already been prepared" from of old, etc.: therefore the two verbs appear in the past.

"The layerings": he further expounded hitbarekhu through the layering of a

remedy, and they do not pertain to one another. Rather, this precise tanna attached their impaired condition to their bodies alone, but proclaimed their remedy for body and soul together, as it says, "Whom You redeemed from Egypt, a nation and its God." A freed slave is included among converts. [TN230015]

Although we hold that one who was acceptable and then rejected does not become acceptable again, this applies to someone who was a gentile at the giving of the Torah. But the converts' mazzal was at Sinai. The same applies to the sinners of Israel who merit acceptance in repentance through the power of refinement by sufferings, of whom it is written, "With wrath poured out, I shall reign over you." [TN230016]

Just as the Land of Israel was set apart for Isaac's birth, so the city of Haran, where the Omnipresent's burning anger is found, alone was fit to bring forth the souls of converts, to fulfill what is said: "Whoever sojourns with you"—in your poverty—"is the one who shall fall to you," as the Sages say in tractate Yevamot; I shall mention it again. So too in an earthly kingdom: "Show lovingkindness to the sons of Barzillai, for thus they drew near to me when I fled from Absalom," as David commanded Solomon. [TN230017] tree, as he concludes.

"As long as one eats," etc.: an expression of the Gemara. That is, as long as the branch still draws nourishment from the tree, it looks at it. [TN230019]

"Here too": concerning "I shall make your seed," etc.

"They were rejected": through the first Adam's sin, when the holy sparks fell into the shells, as above in section 6. Now they return to us, for they have not yet taken root within their impurity: their mazzal was at Sinai, as will be stated shortly.

"Yet"—there is a difficulty, for he should have said "who has been ransomed," etc., in the singular, as with "the female convert, the captive woman, and the maidservant," which he also stated in the singular. One cannot say that the plurals "who have been ransomed, who have converted," etc., refer to all three together—the female convert, the captive woman, and the maidservant—because each requires a remedy, and they do not pertain to one another. "Who has converted" does not apply to the captive woman and the maidservant, and similarly in the other cases.

"He attached their impaired condition": when speaking of them while they were impaired, he attached it to their bodies alone. Therefore he said "the female convert, the captive woman, and the maidservant" in the singular. Afterward, when speaking of their remedy—"who have been ransomed, who have converted," etc.—he speaks of their body and soul, using the plural.

“As it says, ‘Whom You redeemed,’” etc.: this refers to the soul of Israel, which was captive in Egypt's shell. Here too he uses the language of ransom for the captive woman's soul, which was taken captive above, as the body was below.

“A freed slave,” etc.: so that “who have been freed” in the plural, for body and soul, also applies to the maidservant. For emancipation is reckoned as conversion, since before emancipation the slave is not obligated in the commandments. [TN230020]

“Although,” etc.: this refers back to “converts were ‘makhon’ [?],” etc. [TN230021]

“Their mazzal was at Sinai,” as is known. They are therefore reckoned as though they had never been rejected, just as the rule is for Israel. Thus the sinners who rejected themselves from holiness become acceptable again because they stood at Mount Sinai.

“Just as,” etc.: he returns to what was said in section 6 concerning “the souls they made in Haran,” saying that the place's name caused it.

“In tractate Yevamot”: which expounds this of converts, who are not accepted in the days of the Messiah. The master also expounded it “on high” [?], in terms of their souls, which Abraham and Sarah drew to themselves in their poverty. [TN230022]

“He threw it into the sea”: Ashmedai threw it. “He concealed it from the world”: that is, he cast it into the sea.

“He became his steward,” etc.: an administrator within his household. Naamah, his daughter, desired him and took him. Her father became angry with her and drove them

Go and learn from Ruth the Moabite, who was accepted only at the time of Naomi's poverty and affliction. It was then that it is written, “Ruth clung to her”—precisely then, not in her prosperity, for Shaddai had dealt very bitterly with her. Likewise, of the thousand women whom Solomon converted, none was accepted to establish the kingdom of Israel except Naamah the Ammonite, whom he married when he was in utter poverty. He returned to his kingship only through her merit.

It is found written in an aggadah that the ring on which the Explicit Name was engraved—which Solomon, persuaded by Ashmedai, gave him, as related in the chapter “Mi she-ahazo”—was thrown by from his house into the wilderness. He came to the seashore, and the fish that had swallowed the ring came into their hands. When she cut up the fish, they found it, and his spirit revived within him.

“Solomon did not let it be delayed,” etc.: that is, living with a foreign woman; he certainly converted her immediately when his spirit returned to him.

“The king's mother,” etc.: Ruth, who is called the king's mother, the mother of kingship, on the verse, “He set a throne for the king's mother.” Naamah, by contrast, is called the mother of the Messiah.

“Go and learn,” etc.: this is connected with the preceding section.

“Not before then,” when she was in prosperity, but only after Shaddai had dealt very bitterly with her.

For three years Solomon was driven about in poverty because he had transgressed three prohibitions: he must not multiply wives, horses, or gold for himself. He stumbled in them all, and his mind became disordered at the loss of the ring, until the Holy One, blessed be He, had compassion on him. He came before the king of the Ammonites and became his steward. Naamah, the king's daughter, saw him and desired him. Her father banished them both to a desolate wilderness so that they might die of themselves and his hand would not be upon them. The Holy One, blessed be He, brought them to the seashore, and that fish fell to their lot. From Naamah's hand Solomon received consolation: she gave him the ring when she cut open the fish. His spirit revived, and his understanding returned to him.

There is no doubt that Solomon did not let the great commandment that came to hand be delayed: immediately upon recovering his senses, he converted her there, while both were still impoverished and afflicted. She merited more than Ruth, who is called simply “the king's mother,” as related in the chapter “Ha-sefinah”; Naamah is the mother of the Messiah in the Sages' view. Her name bears witness to “the pleasantness of the LORD our God,” just as Ruth was named for David's coming forth from her, who satisfied the Holy One, blessed be He, with songs and praises. Rema of Fano

Just as Naomi went into exile to gather Ruth, so Solomon went into exile to gather Naamah. Naomi, who brings near, is the Pleasantness of the yod in the Name; Naamah, who is brought near, is the Pleasantness of the he, where the Broad Places of the River are, as is known. Therefore her son was called Rehoboam: the Holy One, blessed be He, sought to make him Messiah, with Jeroboam as his deputy. Corresponding to them on high are the upper David and the Prince of the World. Only in the throne would he be greater than him, for the master said: there is no sitting in the Temple court except for the kings of the house of David. [TN230026]

The statement of Rabbi Ammi, who said that this was for high priests alone and derived it from Eli the priest, we establish as applying only to the Tabernacle at Shiloh. For it is written, "In those days there was no king in Israel," and Eli served as judge in the king's place. Once the permanent House had been built by the kings of the house of David, with the high priest standing and ministering before them—as we learned concerning the passage read at Haqhel—the law was renewed as we have said. This is our view, and all the Sages' words fit well.

Already then, the LORD should have made room for us, had we merited it. When David foresaw him through the holy spirit, he said concerning him and "He permitted their daughters": "an Ammonite man," not an Ammonite woman. By this David was qualified to enter the congregation.

"This cannot be so according to the aggadah," etc.: according to the aggadah mentioned in section 9, Solomon married Naomi only when he was driven from his kingship, and by Naamah he fathered his son Rehoboam. David had already died before Solomon's kingship. How, then, could David have seen Rehoboam lying in a cradle, when he was born only many years afterward? The author answers that the cradle mentioned refers to Naamah, who was like a cradle, a receptacle for the child. On the day when David uttered this verse, "Many are the things You have done," etc., Naamah, Rehoboam's mother, was born. [TN230031]

“Just as,” etc.: this continues the preceding section.

“Naomi, who brings near,” etc.: it is known that there is Pleasantness above in Keter and Pleasantness in Binah. Naomi, who brought Ruth near, bears a name attesting that she merited from a high place, namely the Supreme Crown. From it she received the influx to himself: “Many are the wonders You have done, O LORD my God, and Your thoughts toward us”—for He prohibited Ammon and Moab but permitted their daughters. They said that Rehoboam lay in a cradle in David's days. According to the aggadah we mentioned, this cannot be so. Rather, on that day his mother was born, and that cradle was revealed to David through the holy spirit, and he uttered song concerning it. [TN230027]

Although one does not raise objections against a homiletical exposition—for Rav Nahman was silent before Rabbi Isaac in the first chapter of Ta'anit, concerning “Our father Jacob did not die,” when he told him, “I am expounding a verse,” showing that the plain sense of Scripture is one thing and exposition another—nevertheless, we are obliged to take care in these words of ours, in view of the prophets' testimony.

gather Ruth, for the yod in the Name is specially related to Keter, as is known. Naamah, who was brought near through Solomon, is the attribute of Binah, the Pleasantness of the he in the Name; from there she merited being brought near.

In my view, its being done through Solomon is through the mystery of returning light.

“Where the Broad Places of the River are”: it is known that Binah is so called, and it is the river that goes forth from Eden. For this her son was called Rehoboam, a name compounded from broad place and pleasantness. He would have been as his name, had we merited it, for he would surely have made room in the land, as the LORD intended to make him Messiah.

“The upper David”: Malkhut. “The Prince of the World”: Metatron.

“Only in the throne”: the Holy One, blessed be He, sought to make Rehoboam's throne greater than Jeroboam's, who had no throne in the Temple court, as the master said, etc. This is what drove Jeroboam away, as the Sages said in the chapter “Heleq”: the arrogance Jeroboam had drove him from the world. He said, “We have learned that there is no sitting in the Temple court except for the kings of the house of David. When they see Jeroboam sitting and me standing, they will say, ‘This one is the servant, and this one the king,’” etc. [TN230032]

“The statement of Rabbi Ammi,” etc.: in the Jerusalem Talmud and Midrash Shoher Tov, quoted by Tosafot in the chapter “Ve-ellu ne'emarin,” folio

40: Rabbi Ammi said, “Even the kings of the house of David have no sitting in the Temple court.” What, then, is “He sat before the LORD”? He supported himself. For whom was there sitting in the Temple court and in the Sanctuary? Say: for the high priest, as it says, “Eli the priest sat on the throne,” etc. It is known that our Talmud, in accordance with which the law is decided, disagrees. The anonymous discussion in several places says that the kings of the house of David may sit in the Temple court; it is also explicit there in Sotah, in the second chapter of Yoma, and in the chapter “Ba lo,” that even the high priest has no sitting in the Temple court. Nevertheless, the verse “Eli the priest sat on the throne” is difficult. The master resolves it here incidentally: that case was different, for there was no king in Israel, and Eli the priest was also judge in the king's place. Therefore he was permitted to sit.

“As we learned”: there in Sotah, folio 41, concerning the passage read at Haqhel, when the king was seated; it implies that the attendant, the head of the congregation, the deputy, and the high priest were all standing.

“The law was renewed”: that there is no sitting in the Temple court except for the kings of the house of David.

“All the Sages' words fit well”: even Rabbi Ammi's statement was true for its time.

“Already then,” etc.: this returns to Rehoboam, whom the Holy One, blessed be He, sought to make Messiah, as above.

“He said concerning him,” etc.: in the chapter “He-arel,” folio 76, Rava expounded: what is meant by “Many are the things You have done,” etc.? It does not say “toward me” but “toward us.” This teaches that Rehoboam sat in David's lap, and he told him, “These two verses were said concerning me and you.”

“This cannot be so according to the aggadah we mentioned”: in the preceding section, that Solomon married Naamah, Rehoboam's mother, after he had been driven from his kingship; David was already dead when Solomon became king.

“Rather”: according to that aggadah, one must necessarily say that “lying in a cradle” is not to be understood literally. It is a figure for David's seeing through the holy spirit that Naomi was born in his days, and on that day he saw that kings would come forth from her. This is the cradle of Rehoboam that David saw. The Gemara's wording, that Rehoboam sat in David's lap, must likewise be called a figure, with “his lap” a designation for his foresight. [TN230033]

“Although”: there is no need to remove the wording from its plain sense because of the aggadah mentioned in the preceding section, since one could say that objections are not raised against homiletical exposition. We find this with Rabbi Isaac in the first chapter of Ta'anit, folio 5b, who said, “Our father Jacob did not die.” Rav Nahman objected, “Did the mourners mourn, the embalmers embalm, and the buriers bury for nothing?” Rabbi Isaac replied, “I am expounding a verse: ‘And you, fear not, My servant Jacob, says the LORD, and be not dismayed, Israel, for I shall save you from afar, and your seed from the land of their captivity.’” It compares him with his seed: just as his seed is alive, so he is alive. Although “Did they mourn for nothing,” etc., remains difficult in any case, Rav Nahman was silent because objections are not raised against exposition. If this applies even where it is contrary to what Scripture explicitly says, all the more could it be said here.

“Nevertheless”: it is incumbent upon us to interpret the wording beyond its plain sense, because the aggadah remains difficult against Scripture's plain sense. How can we say that Solomon married Naamah after already reigning for many years, when the verses testify that Solomon reigned forty years and Rehoboam was forty-one when he became king? It follows that Rehoboam was born one year before Solomon began to reign. For this reason, one might initially think that the wording “Rehoboam lay in a cradle” is also literal: it happened in David's last year, before Solomon became king, and disagrees with the aggadah of Naamah. We therefore said that this is no proof, for the exposition about Rehoboam can be established even in accordance with the aggadah of Naamah: “lying in a cradle” is only a figure. More will be explained at the beginning of the next section. [TN230034]

“In view of the prophets' testimony”: they gave their testimony in Scripture, 1 Kings 11 and 14, that Solomon reigned forty-one years and that Rehoboam was forty-one when he became king. [TN230035]

Em Kol Hai - Part III (ג) - Chapter 11 (יא)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Forty-one years old,” etc.: Rehoboam became king immediately after Solomon, and Rehoboam was born during Solomon's kingship, as explained above in section 9. Solomon reigned only forty years; how, then, could Rehoboam be forty-one?

“The early years”: when he ruled over the beings above, were not counted, since he was afterward driven out. Rehoboam was thus born before the forty years in which Solomon reigned in Jerusalem, during the expulsion, as above. The reckoning is therefore correct and true. [TN260009]

“There too he spoke well”: concerning Jacob. Although this is exposition, the objection is nevertheless answered: on the side of the soul he was alive, as he explains. Through the generation of souls we trace our descent from the patriarchs. With physical generation it is different: Terah would be our father, and Nahor.

“Disgrace on Passover nights,” etc.: we say “the father of Abraham and the father of Nahor,” and the whole account, as in the Gemara, Pesahim: one

Rema of Fano

Solomon reigned forty years, and Rehoboam was forty-one when he became king. It is possible that Solomon's early years were not counted, nor any of the time when he was driven from his kingship, but only the years after he returned to his station. Scripture is precise: “The days in which Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel” implies consecutive days. It also implies that he did not leave the city, for he was terrified; and he ruled over all Israel alone, not over the beings above as at first. Rehoboam too became king over Judah alone at the beginning of his forty-first year, after abandoning hope of kingship over Israel. All the Sages' words thus stand. [TN260001]

There too Rabbi Isaac spoke well: all the mourning and embalming pertain to the dead body. Jacob's portion is not like these on the side of the soul, through which alone we trace our descent from the patriarchs. If it were through physical generation, there would be Terah and Nahor, with whom Joshua reproached us, and with whom we begin the account of disgrace on Passover nights. Our father Jacob was the choicest of the patriarchs through the perfection of his soul, the likeness of the image above, the beauty of the first Adam after purification from the dross of silver and gold—Ishmael and Esau—and the idols pass away entirely. Therefore it is truly said of him, “Our father Jacob did not die.”

begins with disgrace, etc.

“The Rashba wrote,” etc.: see Ein Ya'akov, Ta'anit, in the commentary Ha-Kotev, which treats this at length.

“These were,” etc.: the ten companies that accused Adam: “What is man that You remember him,” etc. They were burned.

“Twice ten thousand”: a thousand for each generation; twenty generations make twice ten thousand.

“The square expansion of Elohim, with he spelled with he,” etc.: thus: alef; alef-lamed; alef-lamed-he; alef-lamed-he-yod; alef-lamed-he-yod-mem, each letter spelled out, with he spelled he-he, has numerical value 1,001. “Ten times ten”—H.N. [?]—according to the number of each; the inclusion of ten in ten means ten times ten, whose value is a hundred. Six wings to each thus make six hundred thousand for all: six wings make six hundred, a hundred in each wing, and for a thousand persons, a thousand times six hundred are six hundred thousand. [TN260010]

“Further included among the chariot,” etc.: twenty-

six generations remain to complete 974, but only twenty generations have been counted; where are the other six? He answers that they are included in the chariot: “thousands”—two, etc. From these six—who are they? Shemuael, Yehoel, and his chariot A.R.G.M.N., which is shemi (“My name”), the initials of Shemuael, Metatron, Yehoel. These are six, and are included in six because Uriel and Nuriel are one. These last, A.R.G.M.N., have Adonai among them, being a chariot for the Shekhinah. [TN260011]

“For good or otherwise,” etc.: for example, Moses had no affinity with this world, but with the world of Hesed: this is “for good.” “Otherwise” applies to the 974 generations cut short before their time, who were cut short because they were utterly wicked. [TN260012]

“Before your time [be-lo ittekha]”: [ittekha] has the numerical value 974. The great kaf is five hundred, and tav and ayin add 470, making 970; the three letters of ittekha and the word count as four, giving 974. [TN260013]

“Ittekha and da'tekha,” etc.: each has numerical value 974.

“‘Far from the wicked’ likewise gives this value,” etc.: 974.

The Rashba wrote in his explanation of this aggadah that our father Jacob, peace be upon him, was refined sevenfold. These are the seven refinements: Adam, Seth, Noah, Shem, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob. Following his approach, we too may say that Adam himself was in the unification of the 974 generations that were cut short before their time, from the thousand generations of the one desolate millennium that preceded the world, in the mystery of tohu. He may therefore be called the world's dough-offering. Twenty-six generations remained to complete the thousand. [TN260002]

It was said in the Ari's name, of blessed righteous memory, that twenty of these were ten companies of angels, each company two generations: dor dor, generation and generation, has the numerical value of kat, company. These were those inclining to the right and left who accused humankind's creation and were burned, but they are renewed every day in the mystery of “Great is Your faithfulness.” These are “God's chariot, twice ten thousand.” The square expansion of Elohim, with the he spelled with he, has the numerical value 1,001; one is for itself, leaving a thousand for each generation. This gives twice ten thousand for twenty generations. [TN260003]

There are six wings to each, and each wing includes ten—ten times ten—so that the thousand become six hundred thousand for each generation. Alternatively, from Elohim, those

“With four letters,” etc.: “Says the LORD, and I shall heal him” has numerical value 974 with the four letters of the Name and the numerical value of the Name.

“Yoshev ba-seter,” etc.: also has numerical value 974.

“The twelve permutations of the divine Name,” etc.: twelve times the divine Name, whose value is twenty-six, gives 312.

“One fortieth of a thousand generations”: twenty-five; with the word added, twenty-six.

“They count twenty-six generations and the seven who see the King's face”: a total of thirty-three. Thirty-three is thus one thirtieth of a thousand, less one third.

“The small numerical value of the Name”: seventeen, which is one sixtieth of a thousand with a remainder. His world contains good, tov, whose value is seventeen.

“Initials,” etc.: Y.H.H. stands for “the LORD, He is God.” Y.H.H. has numerical value twenty, one fiftieth of a thousand, for the moderate eye.

“Before the consultation”: before He consulted them about creating humankind.

“For weight and measure are exact”: unlike the numbers forty, thirty, and sixty, where the reckoning is not exact, sometimes with a third more or less; for forty one needed to add weight and measure. But the fraction twenty out of a thousand is correct in full, without deficiency or excess. [TN260014]

“There is good in them”: seventeen generations that utter song, with another three to complete twenty generations who did not accuse but remained silent.

“A grudging eye, one sixtieth”: seventeen, who cast a grudging eye upon the first Adam's creation, saying, “What is man,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“For behold,” etc.: connected with the end of the preceding section.

“Possibly”: these verses too do not contradict the aggadah of Naamah, since one may say that Solomon reigned more than forty years. Scripture counts only those years in which he reigned without interruption after returning to his kingship following his expulsion. [TN260015]

“Rehoboam too”: he was not born a year before Solomon returned to his kingship, since one cannot say that Rehoboam was born to his mother while created in judgment—the thousand generations, as we said—only twice ten thousand were fit to be counted as the chariot: twenty generations, each equivalent to a thousand, like the generation of the wilderness. See the end of Heqor Din, part II.

Further included among the handsome and praiseworthy chariot are the six remaining generations: alfey, thousands—two; shinan—four; thus six. Their wings include a hundred, making six hundred thousand for each of these six generations as well. These are Shemuael, Yehoel, and the chariot A.R.G.M.N., included in Metatron, whose place is among them; the initials of all three are Sh.M.Y., as is known. These are the seven who see the King's face, included in six, for Uriel and Nuriel are reckoned as one, as explained in Tiqqunim. These last have Adonai among them; through their merit Torah was given to Israel for the world's continued existence, as it is written, “Sinai in holiness.” [TN260004]

Anyone of whom it is said “was”—that he had already been—was only in the one desolate millennium, as we said, for good or otherwise. A sign for the generations cut short is “The lamp of the wicked is extinguished,” and “all hang loosely,” as the Midrash says; each has the numerical value 974. Likewise, “Why should you die before your time,” with three letters and the word. Similar is what Job said to Bildad: “By Your knowledge, that I shall not be wicked.” Ittekha, your time, and da'tekha, your knowledge, have the numerical value 974 by the A.Y.Q. alphabet. There are

she was a gentile. Rather, he too was born after his father returned to kingship, and Rehoboam was not yet forty-one when he became king. Scripture's saying that he was forty-one when he became king concerns the time when he abandoned hope of kingship over Israel. The result is that the aggadah of Solomon and Naamah, the exposition that Rehoboam lay in a cradle in David's days, and the verses all agree.

“There too,” etc.: now that we have reached this, Rabbi Isaac's saying there, “Our father Jacob did not die,” also does not intend the body, as Rav Nahman understood, but Jacob's soul, which received no designation of death from his seed. They were all blessed of the LORD, with none crooked or perverse among them. “Just as his seed is alive” is the cause that “he too is alive,” fitting the perfection of his soul. It was not so with Abraham and Isaac, from whom Ishmael and Esau came forth. Accordingly, Rav Nahman was silent not because objections are not raised against exposition, but because he then understood Rabbi Isaac's intention after he said, “I am expounding a verse,” etc.

“On Passover nights”: in the Haggadah, “At first our ancestors were idolaters,”

according to the Mishnah, “One begins with disgrace,” etc.

“The Rashba”: Rabbi Y. Habib cites him in Ein Ya'akov. He too holds that Rabbi Isaac did not intend bodily death. His words concern receiving Torah and cleaving to it, for this is called life, and one who departs from it is reckoned as dead. Since Torah is refined sevenfold, this praise is said specifically of Jacob alone: impurity had already been found in the seed of the forefathers who preceded him, in descendants who separated from Torah; Jacob, however, was refined sevenfold from the first Adam, for Adam's seed was refined only in Seth, Seth in Noah, Noah in Shem, Shem in Abraham, Abraham in Isaac, and Isaac in Jacob. Jacob was refined, and all his seed was entirely true seed. He is therefore fit to cleave to truth and life, namely Torah. With this intention Rabbi Isaac said, “Our father Jacob did not die.” This is the substance of his words. [TN260016]

“Following his approach”: the Rashba's view that even the first Adam required refinement on account of his seed, although he was the work of the Holy One's hands, blessed be He, might seem strange. We too may say that the reason is that the many such examples, but brevity is best. Job said: certainly I shall not be wicked to this measure, to be counted with them, Heaven forbid. [TN260005]

“Salvation is far from the wicked” likewise gives this value. It follows that salvation is theirs, though distant from them, and destined to draw near: “Peace, peace to the far and the near, says the LORD, and I shall heal him.” This too gives the same value with the four letters of the Name. So too, “He dwells in the shelter of the Most High”: yoshev is written defectively. When the twelve permutations of the divine Name are revealed—whose numerical value is yoshev—upon Akatriel, whose numerical value is ba-seter, this is sufficient for our purpose here. [TN260006]

What we have explained contains the mystery of the heave-offering, which must accord with the householder's intention. The twenty-six generations lifted from the world of tohu were a generous eye, one fortieth of the thousand generations, when measure and weight are added to the count; otherwise twenty-five would suffice for a thousand. Bet Shammai say a generous eye gives one thirtieth, counting the twenty-six generations separately and the seven who see the King's face separately, as it is written, “Your heads, your tribes.” Thus heads are counted on their own, although included among the tribes.

A grudging eye gives one sixtieth: this is the small numerical value of the Name, first Adam was the dough-offering of the preceding world of tohu, according to what the sages of truth explained concerning the days of the world: seven sabbatical cycles, each with six thousand years and one desolate millennium. The 974 generations, of whom the Sages expounded “who were cut short before their time,” belonged to the thousand generations of the desolate millennium in the preceding cycle. They passed away, and Adam was lifted and raised up for this cycle, so that he and the generations issuing from him until Moses would complete the thousand generations. Then Torah would come forth to the children of Israel, as it is written, “A word He commanded for a thousand generations.” Since he and his seed emerged from tohu for the sake of Torah, his seed required refinement.

“It was said,” etc.: the master incidentally explains the 974 generations and the thousand generations.

“Ten companies,” etc.: the Sages' saying on “Let us make man” is known: He consulted the ministering angels; some said, “Let him be created,” and some said, “Let him not be created.” It is also known that the angelic companies are ten: hayyot, ofannim, erellim,

hashmallim, seraphim, mal'akhim, elohim, bene elohim, keruvim, ishshim. Each company is reckoned as two generations, since each contained those inclining to the right and left, giving twenty generations. There are also six from those who see the King's face, as will be stated shortly, making twenty-six to complete 974 to a thousand. [TN260017]

“They were burned”: in the River of Fire, as stated in the Midrash, that those who accused were burned.

“They are renewed”: as the Sages said in “Ein doreshin”: every day ministering angels are created from the River of Fire, utter song, and cease, as it is said, “New every morning; great is Your faithfulness.”

“In the mystery of ‘Great is Your faithfulness’”: Malkhut of Beriah, called Great, where they are renewed, as explained in the Zohar, Bereshit, pages 23 and 24; see there.

“These are”: the twenty generations of which it says, “God's chariot, twice ten thousand,” etc. The name Elohim in the square reckoning is: alef; alef-lamed; alef-lamed-he; alef-lamed-he-yod; alef-lamed-he-yod-mem, each letter spelled out, with he spelled and it is Enoch's reckoning, whose world contains good and evil. He is a small youth, in the words of Rav Hamai in Berit Menuhah, concerning the explanation that his name is Y.H.H., initials of “the LORD, He is God.” Its numerical value is twenty: the moderate eye, one fiftieth of the thousand generations. This Name is in Beriah, for the upper Mother dwells in it. In it is the mystery of qodesh, holy—one—and qodashim, holies—two; this Name encompasses their joints in the measure of stature. This is not the place to elaborate. [TN260007]

Before the consultation about humankind's creation, all twenty-six generations were of a generous eye. Those who accused him before creation intended it for Heaven's sake, since he was destined to sin. They were twenty generations, the ten companies mentioned above, and are therefore called the moderate eye, neither less nor more, for weight and measure are exact in it. These are “new every morning”; there is good in them to sing song and rejoicing, and they return to guilt. The three heads of their upright governance did not accuse him, but were silent like Aaron beside Miriam. Therefore a grudging eye gives one sixtieth—that is, seventeen thousand. Adding those three who were silent to the seven who see the King's face gives ten great advocates. Of those who kept silent, it is said: “Do you indeed, silent ones, speak righteousness? Do you judge human beings uprightly?” [TN260008]

he-he. It totals 1,001. Each generation thus receives influx from the name Elohim whose number is a thousand, since one is needed for itself. This is “A word He commanded for a thousand generations.” Twenty generations give twenty thousand, the twice ten thousand in “God's chariot”: twenty generations receiving influx from Elohim according to their number.

“And behold,” etc.: from the thousand of each generation, six hundred thousand are further produced, for no generation is fewer than six hundred thousand, like the number of the children of Israel at the giving of Torah. The ten companies are included in one another, ten by ten making a hundred. The six wings of each make six hundred. Thus the thousand for each generation become six hundred thousand, sixty myriads.

“Alternatively”: the verse says “God's chariot”—of those thousand generations of tohu, created through the attribute Elohim, judgment, only twice ten thousand were fit for the chariot: the twenty generations.

“Like the generation of the wilderness”: of whom too

“A word He commanded for a thousand generations” was said, because each was equivalent to a thousand generations.

“Further,” etc.: he returns to the twenty-six generations. Twenty were the twenty generations in the ten angelic companies, leaving six. Of them Scripture concludes, “Thousands of shinan, the LORD among them, Sinai in holiness.”

“Shinan”: four, as the grammarians wrote that it derives from shanah, to repeat; that is, twice “thousands.” [TN260018]

“These are,” etc.: the six are Shemuael, Yehoel, and the four bearers of the Chariot—Uriel, Raphael, Gabriel, Michael—whose initials, with Nuriel, are A.R.G.M.N.; but Nuriel and Uriel are counted as one.

“The initials of all three”: Shemuael, Metatron, Yehoel: Sh.M.Y.

“These are”: Shemuael and Yehoel, with the five of A.R.G.M.N., are seven, etc.

“These last”: Scripture concludes concerning them, “The LORD among them,” because they bear the Chariot.

“As it is written”: therefore, at the verse's end, “Sinai in holiness.”

“Anyone,” etc.: he returns to the one desolate millennium preceding the world. Wherever Scripture says was, as “There was a man in the land of Uz,” and particularly “had already been,” in Ecclesiastes, it means that he existed before the world in the mystery of tohu.

“A sign,” etc.: incidentally the master gives some accompaniments to wisdom concerning the 974 generations: “The lamp of the wicked is extinguished” (Job 21) has numerical value 974. Likewise, the Midrash's saying of them, “All hang loosely,” has numerical value 974. [TN260019]

“Ittekha and da'tekha”: each, with three letters and the word, has numerical value 974, for final kaf in A.Y.Q. B.K.R. stands after tav and has value five hundred. [TN260020]

“‘Far from the wicked’ likewise gives this value”: 974, hinting that the LORD's salvation will nevertheless be theirs at the end of days.

“‘Says the LORD, and I shall heal him,’ with the Name's four letters”: likewise gives 974, hinting that they will be healed. So too yoshev ba-seter, hinting that the Name dwelling in concealment will be their shelter, a refuge and hiding place on the day of wrath. Yoshev is written defectively because its value is 312: the divine Name's permutations, twelve times twenty-six, giving 312. Ba-seter has the numerical value of Akatriel, hinting at the twelve permutations' revelation upon him. This is “He dwells in the shelter of the Most High.”

“What we have,” etc.: he returns to the earlier statement that the ten angelic companies are the twenty-six generations.

“The mystery of the heave-offering,” etc.: in Terumot chapter 4 we learned: the measure of the heave-offering is one fortieth for a generous eye; Bet Shammai say one thirtieth; the moderate give one fiftieth, and the grudging one sixtieth. See there: one who tells his agent, “Go and separate the heave-offering”—he separates according to the householder's intention. The master says that twenty-six generations were a heave-offering from a thousand according to the generous-eye measure, the intention of the Householder, the Holy One, blessed be He. One fortieth of a thousand is twenty-five, with one added corresponding to the heave-offering's increase by measure and weight, as we learned: one who counts is praiseworthy, one who measures more so, and one who weighs is the most praiseworthy of the three.

“According to Bet Shammai”: a generous eye gives one thirtieth, making thirty-three and one third from a thousand. We must count the seven who see the King's face with the twenty-six, giving thirty-three. Although the seven are already included in the twenty-six as explained above, they may nevertheless be counted again on their own, as it is written, etc.

“A grudging eye”: one sixtieth of a thousand amounts to seventeen and two thirds.

Corresponding to them is the divine Name in small numerical value, where yod is counted as one; its total is seventeen. [TN260021]

“This is Enoch's reckoning”: Metatron, as is known from Tiqqunim: “A small dwelling is Enoch.”

“He is a small youth,” etc.: Pardes, Gate of Permutation, chapter 8, says that his reckoning is called small because it makes the measures small: what shines above in a sefirah as a thousand shines below in Metatron as one; see there for the explanation. The master's view is that because he is called a small youth, his dwelling too is small. Perhaps it is the same explanation: he is called a small youth because of the smallness of the measures.

“It”: the name Y.H.H.

“Dwells in it”: in the Name; “in it,” in Beriah. As stated in Tiqqunim: the upper Mother dwells in the Throne in three upper sefirot. This is the mystery of qodesh, one—the Supreme Crown—and qodashim, two—Hokhmah and Binah—making three upper sefirot.

“And behold,” etc.: this concludes the matter. [TN310002] The three measures and three numbers are all one: before the consultation, when the Holy One, blessed be He, consulted them, they all had a generous eye and were counted as twenty-six. After the consultation and accusation, since the accusers nevertheless intended it for Heaven's sake, they were reckoned as moderate and numbered twenty. With three of them having remained silent, the remaining seventeen who accused were reckoned by the grudging-eye measure, one sixtieth, amounting to seventeen from a thousand.

“Neither less,” etc.: the generous eye has one extra because of measure and weight, as mentioned. For Bet Shammai, one third does not enter the count; likewise two thirds for the grudging measure. Here, however, in the moderate measure, the calculation is exact.

“There is good in them”: seventeen is the numerical value of tov, good.

“Three”: from these twenty.

“Like Aaron beside Miriam”: incidentally the master teaches us that Aaron did not speak against Moses; Miriam alone did. Therefore it does not say “Aaron and Miriam spoke,” in the plural, but “Miriam spoke,” in the feminine singular, indicating that she alone spoke. The subsequent “and Aaron” is because he remained silent and did not protest, so that he was reckoned as though he too had spoken.

Now we return to the act of levirate marriage and to Abraham and Sarah's union, which served to complete another. They are a model for the union of Torah scholars in every generation. When they join with their wives in tranquility, holiness, and purity, and no child is formed from that drop—for example, because the wives are old or young, barren or aylonit, or even both spouses are tumtum, as Abraham and Sarah were before the change of name—besides the pleasure in their commandment from the Holy One, blessed be He, to the mistress of the house, the joyful mother of children, they undoubtedly increase love, fellowship, peace, and friendship between Him and her. The Holy One, blessed be He, joins their good thought to a deed. [TN260022]

Their union becomes a symbolic act for a later time, for someone who has not merited and needs assistance, like those of whom it was said, “He needs it but has no remedy”: for example, one who dies without children and has no brother to enter levirate marriage with his wife, or she underwent halitsah and he was unwilling to enter levirate marriage. The LORD will appoint a redeemer for them, even old and aged, like Boaz, who was

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

"For 'knowing' is not said": in the sense of "And the man knew," etc., except when it bears fruit; then the expression "knowing" applies. Although of Rebecca it is written, "No man had known her," which implies that she had borne no knowing at all, even mere approach that did not bear fruit—one cannot say that only knowing that bore fruit had not occurred with her, while another knowing had occurred: if so, what would be exceptional about her? Likewise, "The king did not know her" implies none at all, even knowing that bears no fruit. How, then, do we say that knowing, in its proper sense, is said only of acts that bear fruit? [TN260029]

He answers according to what was explained above, at the beginning of this treatise: a restriction after a restriction serves only to include. The interpretation will be sound: although "knowing" implies that even an act which bears no fruit did not occur here, the inclusion indicates that knowing which bore no fruit did occur.

"An intensification of negation," etc.: "He did not add" is one restriction, and the word "again" another

Rema of Fano

And concerning Judah we read, "He did not add," for in Scripture "knowing," in its proper sense, is said only of an act that bears fruit, although in negative statements it is written, "No man had known her," which necessarily means that none had approached her; likewise, "The king did not know her." In accordance with what has been explained and repeated in this treatise, the verse receives a sound and clear interpretation. An intensification of negation after another intensification of negation restricts the negation's limits. Had it said, "He did not add to know her," I would have said that thereafter he had no further intercourse with her. Now that it says "again," we learn that he approached her but she did not conceive. [TN260026]

I would further expound the word yada, "he knew," as composed of two words: yad, which means "place," and yada is knowledge, however it is understood. We must similarly examine every word of the holy tongue: the nature of its letters, their order, division, and combinations, without end. For it is not an empty thing—except through us. [TN260027]

Now, when it says, "No man had known her," its meaning is clear: he had not prepared a place for knowledge to rest. But when we remove the yod from the negative expression, we rightly say that the place was prepared, but no spirit of restriction. Thus it includes that approach which did not bear fruit did not occur, but approach that bore fruit did occur. [TN260030]

"Except through us," etc.: as stated in the Gemara, "For it is not an empty thing"; if it is empty, it is from you, etc.

"He had not known her," etc.: with yod, it means that he had prepared no place at all; even approach which bore no fruit had not occurred. Without yod, however, as stated of Judah, "He did not add again to know her," it means that the place was prepared—that is, approach occurred, only it bore no fruit.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"And we read," etc.: this connects to the preceding section. The reason for the interpretation that "He did not add," said of Judah, means "He did not cease" is that the expression "knowing" used in Scripture as a designation for lying together applies specifically to intercourse that bears fruit—that is, conception—and not to intercourse without conception. Examine the verses closely and you will find this so.

Although, where Scripture speaks negatively, as in "No man had known her," its intention is certainly not that the intercourse produced no fruit but that he had not had intercourse with her at all, knowledge rested upon it. Likewise, the statement about the women of Midian, "Kill one who knows a man," means one fit for intercourse, as the Sages say, even though she is not fit to bear a child, but only for approach, to become a vessel through the first intercourse. [TN260028]

Rema of Fano - continued

nevertheless, where the expression is used in its proper, positive sense, as in "And the man knew," the plain meaning is that he lay with his wife in an intercourse that bore fruit, and she conceived by him.

Here, then, where it says negatively, "He did not add again to know her," the intention would certainly be that he had no further intercourse with her at all. Yet, according to what was explained in this treatise and repeated in Part II, section 50, an additional teaching after another teaching serves only to restrict the teaching's limits, while always adding to the teaching. Here too, the two expressions intensifying the negation also restrict the negation's limits. "He did not add" negates knowing for the future; the subsequent word "again" reinforces and increases this negation, like an inclusion, and therefore restricts the negation. Had it not said "again," we would have interpreted it as no intercourse at all, as with every negative use of "knowing" in Scripture. Now that it says "again," it restricts this negation: it is not to be interpreted as no intercourse at all, but as approach without conception. This is "He did not cease."

"Further," etc.: the master saw fit to give a reason why "knowing" designates intercourse, explaining why in its proper sense it alludes to intercourse that bears fruit, but not so when negated. He said that this derives from the root yada being composed of yad and daat. It therefore alludes to lying together: a yad, a place, for knowledge, because through lying together a person gives knowledge a place to rest. The intention is LNSh[?]: the soul, which is knowledge, will rest there. Thus the expression "knowing" necessarily applies only to intercourse that bears fruit. [TN260031]

"However it is prepared": whether the soul itself is knowledge, or knowledge is placed within it. [TN260032]

"For it is not an empty thing": why do we designate a given noun, verb, or word by particular letters? It is not by chance, as in other languages; every name and word in the holy tongue is founded on letters appropriate to that matter. If it is empty, that comes from us, from our lack of knowledge.

"Now": according to this, since "knowing" means giving knowledge a place to rest, when it is negated in "He had not known her," the intention is that he had not given or prepared a place for knowledge—that is, no intercourse had occurred at all, as we said.

"But when we remove," etc.: when an expression of knowing occurs without yod beside a negation, as in "He did not add again to know her," the intention must be to negate knowledge alone, and not the preparation of a place. That is, intercourse occurred and the place was prepared, but she did not conceive and no spirit of knowledge came. From this comes the interpretation "He did not add" as "He did not cease."

"Likewise, the statement," etc.: do not object from the expression "knows a man," said of the women of Midian, "Kill every woman who knows a man." Plainly, the intention includes both intercourse that bore fruit and intercourse that did not. On the contrary, however, this supports our interpretation, for there the intention includes even one fit for intercourse, excluding a minor, as the Sages say. Thus yad there means preparing a place, so that she is fit to become a vessel. It is known that a woman does not conceive from first intercourse; consequently, the intention must be that she is fit for intercourse even though it bears no fruit. [TN260033]

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“She is like a wild ass accustomed to the wilderness”: he is not admitted into the Holy One's precinct, because he died without sons, and his soul hovers in the wilderness. For the wording of the verse in Jeremiah, chapter 2, is: “A swift young she-camel straying in her ways; a wild ass accustomed to the wilderness, in the desire of her soul inhaling the wind —who can turn her back from her occasion?” See Rashi's explanation of the verse, which compares it[?]. [TN260036]

The soul that died without sons caused a weakening of supernal providence, and also caused it to stray in its ways, so that it must wander and roam in the wilderness.

“As though she were not”: this is how, in my view, one should emend. “Is the measure needed for him at this time”: a great repair for this soul. What stands before us, “that if she is not,” is difficult to fit. [TN260037]

“With her second mate”: the levir. “In the desire of her soul she inhaled” that dead man's spirit and

Rema of Fano

Happy is one who intends in all his deeds to act wisely and do good to whomever Heaven desires, for the merit of the many depends on him. To what may this be compared? To a Torah scholar who died without sons, whose wife entered levirate marriage to establish offspring for the dead. Before the One who knows hidden and revealed things, it is manifest and known whether this dead man needed offspring to be established, being deficient in descendants and having left no blessing after him. He is like a wild ass accustomed to the wilderness: he is not admitted to tranquil resting places in the Garden of Eden until he merits the redemption and exchange which we shall explain shortly.

In its context, the verse is connected to the prophet's complaint that this soul's deeds weakened providence and caused it to stray in its ways. Ask where is the measure needed for him at this time[?]: behold, the righteous levirate wife, with her second mate, “in the desire of her soul inhaled the spirit.” [TN260034] This is the meaning of levirate marriage, as the Sages said: “His brother is his father; his wife is his mother” (Zohar, Part II, Mishpatim, folio 100b).

The word yavam is thus composed as though you said av em, “father, mother”; alef is replaced by yod, as is customary repairs it, establishing his brother's name. Thus the child born and called by the dead man's name is the levir's brother, and the levir becomes his father. The levirate wife had been the dead man's wife, and now becomes his mother.

“Alef is replaced”: this alludes to the fact that it does not say avam, but yavam.

“Yod acts and alef is acted upon,” etc.: yod causes the reading of alef. The Name YHWH is read as Adonai, so that in place of the yod of the Name YHWH we read alef.

“According to the change in vowel points,” etc.: when the Name YHWH is pointed with sheva beneath yod, we read Adonai; when it is pointed with segol beneath yod, it is read Ehyeh. [TN260038]

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Happy is one who intends,” etc.: the master returns to complete and explain what he began above, in section 12: a fruitless union of Torah scholars benefits one who died without sons and has no levir. Here the master says that this resembles the levirate marriage of the wife of a Torah scholar who died but did not need offspring to be established: that levirate marriage benefits another man who needs it, as the master concludes at the end of the following section.

Rema of Fano - continued

in the language. This is not without reason, but for the reason known to those who expound the mysteries of letters: yod acts and alef is acted upon. Thus, in the four-letter Name, we see that yod causes the reading of alef in the two substitute names, according to the change in vowel points. [TN260035]

The basis of these matters is in Zohar, Vayeshev, where it says, on page 419: “One who died without sons—when he departs this world, that man does not enter within the screen, etc. Since it is thus, the Holy One, blessed be He, created for him a redeemer who would redeem him from the hand of the destroyers; this is his brother, who is close to him, as it says, ‘When brothers dwell together,’ etc., and it is written, ‘Go in to your brother's wife and perform levirate marriage with her.’ For the soul does not enter before the Holy One, blessed be He, but stands outside, because it did not merit to shine in this world in that body. Whoever did not merit in this place should go to another place and merit there,” etc. [TN260039]

On pages 420 and 421: “Rabbi Hiyya asked: One who is wholly righteous, studies Torah by day and night, and whose every deed is for the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, yet did not merit sons in this world—for example, he strove for them but did not merit them, or had them and they died—what is their state in the world to come? Rabbi Yose said to him: His deeds and that Torah protect him for that world, etc. Come and see: a wholly righteous man who possessed all these qualities, attained perfection as fitting, and died without sons—he inherits his place in that world. Does his wife require levirate marriage or not? If you say she requires levirate marriage, it is futile, since he inherits his place in that world. Yet she certainly requires levirate marriage, because we do not know whether he was complete in his deeds or not. If she underwent levirate marriage, it would not be futile, because the Holy One, blessed be He, has a place: there was a man in the world who died without sons and had no redeemer in the world. When this wholly righteous man dies and his wife undergoes levirate marriage, while he inherits his place, that other man comes and is completed here. Meanwhile, the Holy One, blessed be He, has a place prepared for him for an age, until this wholly righteous man dies and he is completed in the world.” Thus far. The master's words here and in the following section are now clear. [TN260040]

“Before the One who knows hidden things,” etc.: sometimes a good is done to a Torah scholar by his not establishing descendants, although he needs them because he is not so complete in his deeds. The reason is that it is manifest before Heaven that worthy sons would not issue from him. Nevertheless, he is like a wild ass accustomed to the wilderness, who does not enter within the screen until his wife undergoes levirate marriage and he merits redemption, etc.

“In its context, the verse,” etc.: incidentally, the master interprets the entire verse, “A wild-ass man accustomed to the wilderness, in the desire of his soul inhaling the wind—who can turn her back from her occasion? All who seek her will not tire; in her month they will find her” (Jeremiah 2), of the soul of one who departs without sons. He says that the verse is connected to the complaint which the prophet had mentioned just before: “Know what you have done, a swift young she-camel straying in her ways.” He complained of that soul's deeds, and concerning them said, “Know”: your deeds have driven you far away, so that your soul strays in its ways outside the screen. He placed beside this “A wild ass accustomed to the wilderness,” etc., to indicate the repair. [TN260041]

“Providence”: supernal providence, as though it were, so to speak, withdrawn from her, so that the soul strays in its ways, forbidden to appear before the King, blessed be He. Thus the deeds ask concerning the repair: Where is the measure needed at this time to repair this soul? To this he said, “A wild ass accustomed to the wilderness”: behold, the levirate wife, “in the desire of her soul inhaled" the dead man's spirit and repairs it.

"This is the meaning of levirate marriage": the levirate wife becomes his mother, and his brother, the levir, becomes his father, as the Sages said in Zohar, Mishpatim, page 140.

"Alef is replaced": it is called yavam, not avam, because in the language alef may interchange with yod.

For someone who needs levirate marriage and has no remedy—for example, he has no brother, or she underwent

Rema of Fano

In the commandment of levirate marriage, the brother and the woman must prepare themselves to be father and mother to the one whose redemption will come through them, even though he is not originally their son in the chain of descent, as it is written, "The offspring would not be his." Their good intention causes strength to be added to Gevurah above. She too is "in the desire of his soul"—"his soul" is the written form—of this wild ass accustomed to the wilderness; she longs to provide him a resting place that will be good for him. For it is "her soul": "the reading is authoritative." This follows Ezekiel's statement, "Like the soul of the father, and like the soul of the son, they are Mine." [TN260043]

"To the one whose redemption will come": the dead man's soul.

"As it is written," etc.: this is the reason for the verse, "Onan knew that the offspring would not be his." That is, he knew that, according to the original chain of descent, the child born would not be his.

"She": the woman, the levirate wife, also, “in the desire of his soul”—that of this wild ass—inhaled his spirit. It is therefore written “his soul” and read “her soul,” because his soul is bound to hers, as she becomes his mother. As Ezekiel said, “Like the soul of the father and like the soul of the son,” so here, behold, the soul of the mother and the soul of the son.

“Great is the power of levirate marriage”: it repairs the dead man's nefesh, ruah, and neshamah at once. Of this it is said, “If he directs his heart toward him,” etc., for ruah and neshamah follow nefesh.

“Outside levirate marriage, however”: three incarnations are required: one for nefesh, one for ruah, and one for neshamah. Corresponding to them it is written, “Concerning redemption and concerning exchange, and this is the attestation.”

himself.” It is known that “heart” designates nefesh. If the dead man's nefesh has been cut off, behold, the LORD's hand is not too short to save, for with the LORD is kindness, and with Him abundant redemption: from the nefesh of these levirate spouses, to make a branch and bear fruit. Outside levirate marriage, however, redemption is needed for neshamah, exchange for ruah, and attestation for nefesh. This suffices for the intention of this treatise. [TN260044]

If the dead man's spirit, toward which they direct their intention, does not need this—for example, Ben Azzai, who said, “My soul longs for Torah,” and did not marry, because through the mysteries of his soul he knew that it had already fulfilled its due in this matter on another occasion, and he had not been created for this, but to magnify Torah—of this it is said, “Who can turn her back from her occasion?” The word is derived from “God occasioned it into his hand.” It means that the preparation made by the righteous levirate wife, who is the principal agent of the repair, does not return empty. “All who seek her will not

“Had already fulfilled its due in this matter”: in the commandment to be fruitful and multiply, on another occasion, when it had already been in this world.

“As stated”: above, section 12.

“For here”: through this union the Holy One, blessed be He, brings a redeemer for another man who needs it and has no levir, as stated in the Zohar we quoted. Through this He renews the work of creation. This is “In her renewal they will find her.” [TN260047]

Rema of Fano

Let the wise hear and add to their learning. The act of ḥalişah, removing the shoe, indicates the levirate widow's abandonment of hope; the spitting is the abandonment of hope by the dead man's spirit absorbed into her, as we shall mention, concerning the redemption intended for him from the living brother. With the recitation, both together lodge their complaint against him before three who know how to prompt the recitation, corresponding to the three guardians that the soul has. R. Phinehas mentioned them in the commandments, in the general treatment stated in the Zohar at the beginning of Bereshit. Two are added to them to publicize the matter, so that many will seek mercy for them. They correspond to the two inclinations that witnessed the first acquisition, completed with the acquirer's articles, of which it is written, “A man drew off his shoe.” But the shoe that effects acquisition is a glove. Here, the owner of the shoe puts on his own and extends his foot to her; she removes it and unties the knot, because he does not count among those called a redeemer. She throws it to the ground in contempt, with all her strength, to indicate the dissolution of her bond and her confidence that relief and deliverance will arise for the dead man's spirit from another place. The meaning of “one whose shoe is removed” is like “the knot is untied,” three times: one for him, one for her, and one for the dead man's spirit. In the Tiqqunim they explained it concerning they guard him[?]—as it is written, ‘For He will command His angels concerning you’; if not, they accuse him. R. Phinehas said: Three stand as guardians over a person, as it is written, ‘If there is an angel over him, an intercessor, one out of a thousand.’ ‘If there is an angel over him’—one; ‘an intercessor’—two; ‘to declare to a person his uprightness’—three,” etc. [TN270002][TN270001]

“They add,” etc. That is, the two who are added to the three judges to publicize the matter, as explained in the laws of ḥalişah: the reason is that through publicity many will be found who will seek mercy for the levirate widow and the dead man.

“They correspond,” etc. That is, there is another reason: the two added persons correspond to the two inclinations, etc.

“With the acquirer's articles,” etc. As is at the beginning of Ha-Zahav: “With what does one acquire? Rav said: With the acquirer's articles. Levi said: With the transferor's articles.” It is like the dispute of the tannaim: “‘This was formerly in Israel,’ etc.; ‘a man drew off his shoe and gave it to his fellow’—Boaz gave it to the redeemer. R. Judah

Nefesh, Ruah, and Neshama—vital soul, spirit, and higher soul—and applied to them, “The snare is broken, and we have escaped.”

“For the acquirer's shoe”: it is not literally a shoe, but a glove, as Onkelos translates “A man drew off his shoe”: “the sheath of his right hand.”

“Here,” in the case of the ḥališah shoe, it is literally a shoe, and it is also the reverse of acquisition: there he draws off his shoe, whereas here he puts on his shoe and she removes it, indicating the cancellation of the acquisition.

“She unties the knot”: to indicate that he is no longer tied by her bond.

“He does not count”: language taken from what the sages, of blessed memory, said, “A conspiracy of the wicked does not count.”

“The meaning of ‘one whose shoe is removed’”: its explanation is like “the knot is untied”; the reason for three times is one for him, etc.

Rema of Fano

It is readily understood that the word almanah, “widow,” was established in our holy language as a name for a woman whose husband has died, because she is an armon, “palace,” for the dead man's spirit absorbed into her, as R. Yeiva the Elder explained in the Zohar, portion Mishpatim. He spoke of someone who has no children, and we speak even of someone who fulfilled the commandment to be fruitful and multiply and left in his wife a symbolic act for the completion of another. This is a play on the wording written in Isaiah, “Jackals shall answer in his almenot,” which is like armenot, “palaces.” But armon is said of an inhabited place, as it is written, “The palace shall stand in its proper place,” whereas almon is for an uninhabited place. This suffices for the intended matter.

The general principle is that the commandment of levirate marriage was fulfilled through Abraham and Sarah for the twenty generations that preceded him, and they prepared what he would bring beneath the wings of the Shekhinah until the days of our Messiah. Thereafter converts are no longer accepted, for the Merciful One left them for another day, since they damaged their essence: they hardened their spirit and made their heart obstinate during the years in which we saw misfortune. Thus it is fitting for them from now on that the Lord's servants will eat and they will hunger. Whoever among them vindicates Heaven's judgment upon himself at that hour will afterward be prepared for compassion first, for His mercies toward all creation have not come to an end. Know this.

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

"They will divide him among the Canaanites": they explained it in the sense of merchants, in the manner of "Canaan—a merchant—in his hand are dishonest scales." "The daughter of a Canaanite man" is translated "the daughter of a merchant."

"With service of this kind," etc. That is, they serve in order to receive a reward.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Of which we spoke": in the preceding section, that the Lord's servants will eat.

"In the chapter Ha-Sefinah," etc. There, Rabbah bar bar Ḥana said that R. Yoḥanan said: "The Holy One, blessed be He, will in the future make a banquet for the righteous from Leviathan's flesh, as it is said, 'Companions will make a feast over him.' Kirah means a banquet, as it is said, 'He prepared a great feast for them.' 'Companions' means Torah scholars, as it is said, 'You who dwell in gardens, companions listen to your voice.' The remainder they divide and trade in, as it is said, 'They will divide him among Canaanites.' 'Canaanites' means merchants, as it is said, 'Canaan—a merchant—in his hand are dishonest scales; he loves to oppress.' Alternatively, [derive it] from here: 'Whose merchants are princes, whose traders are the earth's honored ones.'"

The master mentioned this dictum in order to explain it. He said that the principal banquet that the Holy One, blessed be He, will in the future make for the righteous is for the completely righteous, who serve without the purpose of receiving a reward. What is said, "The remainder they divide,"

Rema of Fano

The eating of which we spoke is undoubtedly the banquet of Leviathan mentioned in the chapter Ha-Sefinah: the completely righteous, who serve from love, "will make a feast over him as companions," as you say, "He prepared a great feast for them." Those who serve in order to receive a reward, however, are actual merchants, and concerning it is said, "They will divide him among Canaanites," dividing what remains among themselves with a grudging eye and dishonest scales, for they deceive themselves with service of this kind. Likewise, from Leviathan's skin each of the former will merit a complete sukkah, a roof and walls. Among the latter, one will receive only a shade covering, which is roofing without walls; another, a necklace; and another, an amulet—all by righteous judgment. The remainder will illuminate the nations' path from above Jerusalem's walls, as we intimated nearby and as is there. They said that Leviathan was created male and female, means those who serve in order to receive a reward and perform commandments in order to profit through them, like merchants. This is what they said, “They trade in and if they mated with one another they would destroy the world. What did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He castrated the male, killed the female, and salted her for the righteous in the future to come.

it,” for this is their merchandise in exchange for their service.

“With a grudging eye”: measure for measure for their evil eye in withholding satisfaction

from God.

“And with dishonest scales”: that is, for this R. Yoḥanan brought proof from the verse “Canaan—in his hand are dishonest scales”: to say that these Canaanites, these merchants, also have dishonest scales in their hands and deceive themselves with service of this kind, having served in order to receive a reward. Along these lines it appears that the second proof, “whose traders are the earth's honored ones,” also indicates that we are not dealing with the wicked, but with the righteous—yet those who serve in order to receive a reward.

“Likewise, from Leviathan's skin,” etc. Also there: Rabbah said that R. Yoḥanan said: “The Holy One, blessed be He, will in the future make a sukkah for the righteous from Leviathan's skin, as it is said, ‘Can you fill his skin with sukkot?’ If one merits, they make him a sukkah; if he does not merit, they make him a shade covering, as it is said, ‘And with a shade covering of fish, his head.’ If he merits, they make him a shade covering; if he does not merit, they make him a necklace, as it is said, ‘And necklaces for your neck.’ If he merits, they make him a necklace; if he does not merit, they make him an amulet, as it is said, ‘Will you tie him for your maidens?’ The remainder the Holy One, blessed be He, spreads over Jerusalem's walls, and its radiance goes from one end of the world to the other, as it is said, ‘Nations shall walk by your light, and kings by the brightness of your shining.’”

The master mentioned this passage to say that, from Leviathan's skin also, they will merit according to their service, from love or from reward. What the master said in explaining sukkah and shade covering comes from Rashi's explanation.

“The remainder will illuminate a path”: the wording of the verse in Job 41 concerning Leviathan. It is expounded in the Gemara there as saying that he makes furrows in the sea. The master, to refine[?] his language, brought it for this exposition. [TN270003]

“They said,” etc. There in the Gemara, R. Judah said that Rav said: “Everything that the Holy One, blessed be He, created in His world, He created male and female. Leviathan also He created male and female. If they mated with one another they would destroy the entire world. What did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He castrated the male, killed the female, and salted her for the righteous in the future to come, as it is said, ‘He will kill the dragon that is in the sea.’ Behemoth on a thousand hills also He created male and female. If they mated with one another they would destroy the entire world. What did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He castrated the male, cooled the female, and preserved her for the righteous in the future to come, as it is said, ‘Behold now, his strength is in his loins, and his vigor in the muscles of his belly.’ ‘Behold now, his strength is in his loins’—this is the male; ‘his vigor in the muscles of his belly’—this is the female.

“There also, let Him castrate the male and cool the female! Fish are licentious. Let Him do the reverse! Alternatively, the female is better salted; alternatively, since it is written, ‘This Leviathan You formed to play with him,’ [to do so] with a female would not be proper conduct. Here also, let Him salt the female! Salted fish is good; salted meat is not good.” See Rashi's explanation. The master mentioned this matter in order to explain it in the following sections.

Em Kol Hai - Part III (ג) - Chapter 19 (יט)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

“There is no doubt that the plain meaning is true”: they will eat an actual banquet. Although the World to Come has neither eating nor drinking, but “the righteous sit,” etc., nevertheless they designated in houses[?] a great banquet, to go from strength to strength through the power of eating. For most of the community cannot pass from one opposite to the other: that is, at first eating applies, and afterward it will not apply. This is only through the intermediate banquet.[TN270005]

“For in Yah,” etc. It intimates the first two cups, two letters of the Name YHWH; numerically kos, “cup”—that is, kos has the numerical value of ha-kisse, “the throne”—that the throne will be complete, as is said, “For a hand upon the throne of Yah,” etc.: the Holy One, blessed be He, swore, etc.

“One does not conclude with anything,” etc. That is, one eats nothing after the last two cups, intimating that after the banquet, when the Name is complete, and as the throne[?],[TN270007] no eating or drinking will apply.

“For the female it is,” etc.:

Rema of Fano

There is no doubt that the plain meaning is true and that the banquet will take place: through the power of that eating and the drinking of the wine preserved in its grapes, we shall go from strength to strength. For it is not fitting for most of the community to pass from one opposite to the other without an intermediate. This banquet will suffice to bring us to the World to Come, in which there is neither eating nor drinking. The allusion comes in eating the Passover offering with unleavened bread and bitter herbs after the first two cups, for “in Yah, the Lord, is the Rock of worlds”; after it come the last two cups, in which the Name is peace[?], and the throne, numerically, “a cup of salvations.” Afterward one does not conclude with anything further, as is known.[TN270004]

It is written, “On that day the Lord will visit with His hard sword upon Leviathan the bar-serpent”—this is the male Leviathan—“and upon Leviathan the twisting serpent”—this is the female Leviathan. The visitation upon the male is the hunt that Gabriel begins, with the Holy One, blessed be He, helping him; for the female it is her rinsing, the completion of her preparation, for He has already killed her, as stated. Rashba, of blessed memory, elaborated the elucidation of all these things according to their actuality and their plain sense. There is nothing in the deeds of the

for He has already killed her. In the future there is no need for warfare or a hunt, only to rinse her for eating, which is completion of preparation —already salted, regarding the Sabbath[?].[TN270006]

“Of the mysteries of existence,” etc. That is, in every commandment we illuminate supernal lights, because all have a counterpart above. Thus the commandment of eating Leviathan contains mysteries of existence above.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“There is no doubt,” etc. Their saying, of blessed memory, is well known: “The World to Come has neither eating nor drinking, but the righteous sit with their crowns upon their heads and enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah.” Therefore Maimonides's opinion, in chapter 8 of the Laws of Repentance, is that this banquet of which the sages, of blessed memory, spoke is not an actual banquet. Rather, they called it this by way of parable and figure of speech for the good prepared for the righteous, which is the World to Come.

Rashba, however, in his

explanation of aggadot, cited by R. Jacob Ḥaviv in Ein Yaʿaqov, explains the words according to their plain meaning, as follows: “Do not consider it remote that for the righteous in the World to Come there righteous in which none of the mysteries of existence is intimated, whether little or much. Come and learn from the shofar, sukkah, and lulav, and from all the commandments of action, all of which have a counterpart above, as is well known.

should be the plain sense of the things that came to the sages, of blessed memory, in some of the aggadot in the Talmud and midrashim,” etc. Consult there, for he elaborated at great length. His opinion is that the purpose of the banquet is to stir bodily powers; when they are stirred, the soul's powers will likewise be stirred, and its intellectual power will strengthen, becoming better prepared to attain all intelligibles. He brought proof from events that already occurred: the delicacies that Isaac our father, peace be upon him, requested; likewise the banquet that they ate together, which Aaron and all the elders of Israel ate; likewise the banquet of Elijah the prophet and the company of prophets. In all of them the intended purpose was not the pleasure of food, but to direct the heart and draw thought toward knowledge of intelligibles, as the sages, of blessed memory, said: “The Shekhinah rests only out of joy.”

If this is so in those banquets, how much more in the banquets created for this purpose and with the utmost delight, which the world is not fit to attain until the World to Come, and [for] those who are appointed to them, who are the ultimate object sought in the human species. Today it is known that some drugs and supporting foods, by their nature, benefit the intellect. How much more the foods created for this intention from the six days of Creation, which are exceedingly pure in nature and increase understanding by their nature, in the sense of “the tree was desirable for gaining understanding.” These are the substance of his words, of blessed memory. He also brought proof from the manna; consult there.

He further wrote as follows: “As for our taking the words literally, do not object to us from what our rabbis, of blessed memory, said, ‘The World to Come has neither eating nor drinking.’ For we believe that the righteous will enter the World to Come in their bodies and will be there in the manner of Moses [gap]; or, if you prefer, in the manner of Elijah and Enoch, of whom our rabbis, of blessed memory, said that their flesh became like torches of fire. Bodily activities may change from one condition to another, to its opposite; in any event, a moment will separate the first activity from the second. If so, the first activity must have had a moment in which their conduct is completed, after which the second, new conduct begins. Perhaps that banquet appointed for the righteous will be the end of the period in which the condition of bodily activities, eating and drinking, operates; afterward that condition will cease from them, and they will sit with their crowns upon their heads, delighting in the radiance of the Shekhinah. That banquet will be for them like the concluding assembly, ʿAṣeret, except that this completes the sacred, and this is the completion of the ordinary.” See there.

This is also the master's opinion, except that, combining all the aforesaid matters together, he added that this banquet is like an intermediate thing between the bread that we eat in this world and the absence of eating in the World to Come. Because this banquet is exceedingly pure by its nature, it is fit to be an intermediate in this respect. The same is true of the wine preserved in its grapes, of which the sages, of blessed memory, spoke.

“After the first two cups”: for the four cups correspond to the four letters of the Name YHWH. The first two cups correspond to the Name of the first two letters, which operates in this world. After these two cups, the Passover offering is eaten with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, intimating the intermediate eating after this world. The last two cups correspond to the last two letters of the Name, which operate in the World to Come, when the Name and the throne are complete, as is known from the verse “For a hand upon the throne of Yah,” etc. Therefore one does not conclude with anything after them at all, for likewise the World to Come has neither eating nor drinking. Nevertheless, these two cups themselves intimate the preserved wine that will in the future be like an intermediate, as mentioned.

"And the throne": it too is complete; ha-kisse, "the throne," has the numerical value eighty-six, like kos, "cup."

"As it is written," etc. There in the Gemara: "'God created the great sea creatures.' R. Yoḥanan said: This is Leviathan the bar-serpent, and this is Leviathan the twisting serpent, as it is written, 'On that day the Lord will visit with His hard sword,'" etc. Rashi explained: "the bar-serpent"—the male Leviathan; "the twisting"—the female Leviathan.

"It is the hunt": as is there, "When Rav Dimi came, he said that R. Yoḥanan said: Gabriel will in the future conduct a hunt against Leviathan, as it is said, 'Will you draw out Leviathan with a hook, or sink his tongue with a rope?' If the Holy One, blessed be He, did not help him, he could not overcome him, as it is said, 'His Maker will bring near His sword.'"

"It is her rinsing," etc. At first sight there is a difficulty: if the Holy One, blessed be He, has already killed the female, what is meant by "The Lord will visit upon Leviathan the twisting serpent"? Rashi, of blessed memory, answered this with difficulty. On "He killed the female," he wrote as follows: "Thus the verse means to him: 'The Lord will visit upon Leviathan the bar-serpent' in the future, as He did to Leviathan the twisting serpent, for He killed the dragon that is in the sea from the six days of Creation." For the master, the meaning is that the visitation upon the female will be to prepare her for eating and rinse off her salt, which is the completion of her preparation, as we say in Shabbat concerning the kolias ha-ispanin fish.

"There is nothing in the deeds of the righteous": nothing that does not intimate above the holy sefirot and the other supernal mysteries. Likewise here, in the actual eating of Leviathan, mysteries of existence are certainly intimated, and it is no cause for wonder to say that the words bear their plain meaning.

"When it was withheld from him," etc. That is, he withheld from him the good by which we could easily understand each and every thing, because of our iniquities; this is the male's castration.

"Honor was taken away," etc.: from the service of the Garden, of which it is said, "to serve her and guard her," in feminine language; or it refers to the soul or to the Shekhinah. This intimates the practical intellect, corresponding to the female Leviathan.

"Had we merited": if this

Rema of Fano

It is good that we hold to this exposition, which is right in our eyes and whose allusion is close to the plain meaning. The male Leviathan is a counterpart of the contemplative intellect, and he was castrated when ease of contemplation was withheld from him because of sin. Honor was entirely taken away from the service of the Garden and its guarding, or from service of the Shekhinah or the soul and guarding her—confirming the feminine grammatical form as written. These, then, are the activities of the practical intellect, the female Leviathan. Had we merited to enjoy the joint operation of both, they would have male and female had mated, that is, the contemplative intellect and the practical intellect, we would have transformed the material world into spirit. But because of our iniquities we have not merited this now; yet a portion of this matter will be fulfilled in the future to come.

"As at the beginning of Heqor Din," etc. See there, in chapter 2, on the verse "Gladden us according to the days You afflicted us," etc., that the Holy One, blessed be He, accounts it to them as though they fulfilled it. This is the play of Leviathan; see the matter at length there.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“It is good,” etc. That is, the passage may also be explained by a way close to the plain meaning: the male Leviathan is an appellation of the contemplative intellect, and the female Leviathan an appellation of the practical intellect. If they mated with one another and we merited to enjoy the joint operation of both, they would destroy the material world. After the sin of Adam the first man, however, what did the destroyed the material world and transformed it entirely into spirit. That service and guarding were salted for the righteous in an everlasting covenant of salt for the future to come, as though they had fulfilled them, since they accepted them upon themselves and give their lives for them, as we explained at the beginning of the Treatise Heqor Din. Therefore it is fitting that they eat the fruit of their deeds. The righteousness of the contemplative intellect, the male Leviathan, will also prepare the bread of the mighty before them, as stated. We have already mentioned in the first part of this treatise that eating for the sake of a commandment, wherever it occurs, may fittingly be called enjoyment of the radiance of the Shekhinah.

Holy One, blessed be He, do? He castrated the male, the contemplative intellect, and withheld from him ease and clarity of contemplation. He killed the female, the practical intellect that Adam the first man was charged with exercising in the Garden of Eden, and entirely annulled the holy service from him. Nevertheless, the Holy One, blessed be He, salted those deeds for the righteous in the future to come.

“Because of sin”: that of Adam the first man.

“Honor was taken away,” etc. That is, their statement “He killed the female” intends what is said of Adam the first man: “He placed him in the Garden of Eden to serve her and guard her.” According to the plain meaning it means to work and guard the Garden; according to the exposition, “to serve her and guard her” refers to the Shekhinah or the soul. It is intimated through the he of le-ʿovdah u-le-shomrah, “to serve her and guard her,” which is a feminine grammatical form, as the master wrote in the Treatise Heqor Din, part I, chapter 25, and also part II, chapter 11. Either way, the Holy One, blessed be He, took from him, after the sin, the honor of these deeds.

“At the beginning of the Treatise Heqor Din”: chapters 1 and 3.

“For eating for the sake of a commandment,” etc. Likewise here, all the sages' words will be justified: the future eating is actual eating, but it is eating for a commandment. The sages, of blessed memory, said that the World to Come has no ordinary eating; rather, the righteous enjoy the radiance of the Shekhinah.

Em Kol Hai - Part III (ג) - Chapter 21 (כא)

Yoel Moshe: 1

Yad Yehudah: 1

Yoel Moshe - 1

"It intimates the bodily powers," etc. Just as in the preceding chapter he intimated the intellectual powers, so in Behemoth he intimated the bodily powers.

"For the rashness in their fulfillment," etc. That is, Adam had intercourse on the eve of the Sabbath, at the hour of judgment. From this another transgression followed: he came to eat from the tree, as above, for a commandment done for a purpose other than its own caused this for him, because he was rash as water. Thus the general conclusion from this is that castrating the male intimates the commandments of action that are slack in our hands, while the female that was cooled is assistance from Heaven.

"Whose eyes they painted over," etc. We can do nothing of ourselves, and this is a great defect for us, diminishing our worth. Therefore [there is] salting[?] for the future to come: to give them a taste of the fruit of their deeds as though they had acted of themselves, without the blessed Lord's assistance. This is "To You, Lord, belongs lovingkindness, for You repay a man according to his deed," as

Rema of Fano

"Behemoth on a thousand hills also He created male and female": this intimates the bodily powers of those who keep the commandments. The impelling faculty is the male that was castrated; therefore the commandments of action have become slack in our hands, measure for measure for the rashness in their fulfillment in which there is no delight, as explained by us on the verse "I said in my haste: Every human being is false." The desiring faculty is the female that was cooled, in the sense of the impulse toward transgression, whose eyes they painted over, in tractate Yoma. So it was with the making of garments of skin and clothing Adam and his wife: a barrier to their nakedness. The strengthening for keeping what has been enjoined has now become assistance from Heaven, and our worth has been diminished, because we did not strengthen ourselves in this of our own accord as was fitting for us. Yet it is prepared and preserved for the righteous in the future to come: for those of whom it is manifest and known before Him that they would have been capable of withstanding their trial even without this. For the Lord's hand is not too short to give each righteous person a taste corresponding to what he toiled for in this world: according to the suffering is the reward.

Their statement "Though the Jordan rushes into his mouth" intimates that all the miracles done for us at the first entry, after the exodus from Egypt, are only one swallow in comparison with

though he himself had acted without assistance and help from the blessed Lord, because it is manifest before the blessed Lord that they would have withstood their trial even if He had not helped them. [TN280001]

"The Jordan's waters do not," etc. This is the Gemara's wording; that is, it intimates that the exodus from Egypt will not be uprooted, etc.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Behemoth also," etc. That is, just as in the preceding section we explained the matter of male and female Leviathan as the two intellectual powers, so we say that Behemoth on a thousand hills intends the two bodily powers found among those who keep the commandments. These are the power of the good inclination among the righteous, impelling them to do good in action, which is compared to the acting male; and also the evil inclination, desiring transgression without action, which is like a female desiring to be acted upon by another. Had they mated with one another they would have destroyed the material world, for the male would have prevailed. But in the first sin, what did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He castrated the male, so that even the performance of commandments is something incomplete, as stated in the Treatise Heqor Din, part III, chapter 6. He cooled the female and caused the power that desires transgression to fail. Nevertheless, He salted her for the righteous the swallowing of the sea's waters of which the rabbis spoke concerning the final entry, as explained in the Zohar and intimated in the chapter Ha-Sefinah. The Jordan's waters do not mingle with the sea's waters, for the exodus from Egypt will not be uprooted from its place; rather, it will become secondary to the ingathering of the exiles, as is in tractate Berakhot.

in the future to come, as he concludes.

“Measure for measure”: for Adam the first man's rashness, for he was rash as water in fulfilling the commandments, in which there is no attainment of delight. He had intercourse in daylight, publicly, and at the hour when judgment grows strong, as stated in the Treatise Heqor Din, part III, chapter 9; see there.

“As explained by us,” etc.: also there.

“The desiring”: that is, the desiring power is the female that was cooled, in the manner of what the sages, of blessed memory, said concerning the impulse toward transgression. For this purpose the Holy One, blessed be He, made garments of skin for Adam and his wife, as a barrier and protection against the power of desire.

“The strengthening has now become”: the strengthening by which a person strengthens himself in his stronghold to keep TTh[?] has become assistance from Heaven to him, so that no matter of transgression comes into his hand, as it is said, “No iniquity shall befall the righteous”; or, when it does come into his hand, that he be saved from it. Nevertheless, this is reckoned a deficiency for us, since we did not strengthen ourselves in this of our own accord, but through the female's being cooled. [TN280002]

“Yet,” etc. He further explains what the verse says, “Though the Jordan rushes into his mouth” (Job 40). Our rabbis, of blessed memory, said in the chapter Ha-Sefinah: “The Jordan goes forth from the cave of Pamias, passes through the Sea of Sibkhi and the Sea of Tiberias, rolls down into the Great Sea, and rolls downward until it rushes into Leviathan's mouth, as it is said, ‘He trusts, though the Jordan rushes into his mouth.’” He said that the intention is that Leviathan will swallow, in one swallow, all the miracles that the Holy One, blessed be He, did for us when we entered the land; for the future miracles, in comparison with them, will be like swallowing all the sea's waters.

“And intimated in the chapter Ha-Sefinah”: there Rav Judah said that Rav said: “When the Holy One, blessed be He, wished to create the world, He said to the prince of the sea: Open your mouth and swallow all the waters in the world. He said before Him: Master of the world, it is enough that I stand within my own. He kicked him and killed him, as it is said, ‘By His power He stilled the sea, and by His understanding He crushed Rahab.’ R. Isaac said: From this we learn that the prince of the sea is named Rahab. If waters did not cover him, no creature could withstand his odor, as it is said, ‘They shall not harm or destroy in all My holy mountain, for the earth shall be full of knowledge of the Lord, as waters cover the sea.’” This intimates the aforesaid matter: in the future the earth will be filled with knowledge of the Lord from the miracles He will perform, and they will be like swallowing all the waters, as they were fit to be swallowed from the six days of Creation by the one whom the waters cover.

“The Jordan's waters do not mingle”: rather, the Jordan itself rolls into Leviathan's mouth, as Tosafot also wrote there in the name of Bereshit Rabbah. They intimated that the miracles of the first entry will also be recognizable[?] in the future.[TN280003]

"What is said, 'and ṭiron,'" etc. He expounds the word Metatron as though it were composed of two words: maṭ is an expression of poverty, and ṭiron an expression of lordship.

Rema of Fano

There is also the Ziz of the field, prepared for that banquet for the remnant whom the Lord calls. There is neither castration nor cooling in it; on the contrary, its ankles are in the water and its head in the firmament, while its body and wings fly in the air. This intimates the degree of Enoch and Elijah, corresponding to the two cherubim on high, Metatron and Sandalphon. Their heads are at the throne, and they are two seraphim; their bodies are in the palace, and there each has the likeness of four living creatures; their legs are a straight leg in the outer dwelling, in the sense of "one wheel upon the earth," for one is concealed within the other. The images of the vital soul, spirit, and higher soul of these righteous ones and those like them return there to go, as explained by us in the Treatise Ha-Nefesh.

Yet the one was commanded only in seven commandments and their associated provisions, explained in the Treatise Heqor Din. From the beginning he was among the pious of the nations of the world, but he set himself apart to follow Israel's ways, like one who is not commanded yet acts, or like the righteous converts in each and every generation. He was received into a supernal degree as a sign and a wonder to all the children of Seth of what is prepared for them if they improve their ways. Once he ascended he did not wishing to approach holiness. He sewed shoes, which separate the foot from the earth; likewise Metatron separates Formation from Making. Here he is found and here he was; he would bind, directing his intention to bind the worlds.

"Its initial letters," etc. That is, BShKMLW has the numerical value of Enoch Metatron.

"Who was initiated," etc. Therefore he is called Enoch, from the expression of initiation, and acquired his place on high, as aforesaid.

"There is also the Ziz of the field," prepared for the banquet of the righteous in the future to come, according to R. Meir's exposition in Vayiqra Rabbah, portion Aḥarei: "R. Meir said: 'But ask now the beasts, and they will teach you'—this is Behemoth; 'the bird of the heavens, and it will tell you'—this is the Ziz of the field; 'or speak to the earth, and it will teach you'—this is the Garden of Eden; 'the fish of the sea will recount to you'—this is Leviathan. 'Who does not know among all these that the Lord's hand has done this?'" They further said there: “Why is it named Ziz? Because it has many kinds of taste, from this and from that.”

“There is neither castration nor cooling in it,” as with Leviathan and Behemoth; rather, on the contrary, “its ankles,” etc. As is in the chapter Ha-Sefinah: Rabbah bar bar Ḥana said, “Once we were traveling in a ship. He saw that bird, standing with the water up to its ankles and its head in the firmament,” etc. Rav Ashi said: “That was the Ziz of the field, as it is written, ‘The Ziz of the field is with Me.’”

“The intimation,” etc. Although the things are as they actually are, nevertheless this Ziz intimates Enoch and Elijah, who ascended on high and whose bodies were transformed into the two supernal seraphim called the two supernal descend, for he is righteous, maṭ, “faltering,” and ṭiron, “lord,” in the sense of “I was young,” which the prince of the world said.[TN280004] Around his camp the wicked walk, seeking to separate, heaven forbid. He actually sewed shoes, for one who withholds them from his feet “was numbered with transgressors,” in tractate Pesaḥim, among those excommunicated by Heaven. In his faithfulness Enoch directed his intention through them to bind the lower worlds, so that they would be prepared for the Shekhinah's feet, of whom it is written, “How beautiful are your steps in shoes.” They separate her from the earth's dung, which the Lord cursed because of sin. With each and every stitch he would intend and say, “Blessed be the Name of the glory of His kingship forever and ever,” for in this verse there is a binding and unification of all the supernal palaces, as is known. Its initial letters have the numerical value of Enoch Metatron, who was initiated into his charge and acquired his place.

cherubim: Enoch is Metatron, and Elijah is Sandalphon. Of each of these it is said, “The Ziz of the field is with Me,” “its head in the firmament,” etc. For these are found in three worlds: the world of Creation, the world of Formation, and the world of Making. In the world of Creation, which is the world of the throne, they are the seraphim, as Isaiah said of it, “Seraphim stood above Him.” Since the throne is above the firmament that is over the heads of the four living creatures, as explained in Ezekiel's vision, the allusion in the Ziz of the field is therefore “its head in the firmament.” In the world of Formation, which is the world of the angels, there is the likeness of four living creatures that Ezekiel saw. This is the palace of which Isaiah said, “His skirts filled the palace.” Corresponding to these two cherubim, the allusion in the Ziz is that its body and wings are in the air. In the world of Making, which is like an outer dwelling in relation to the palace, it is said of it, “Behold, one wheel upon the earth” [gap] to subdue the shells. But sometimes she is clothed in Metatron and sometimes in Sandalphon; therefore it is written “one wheel,” for each is concealed within the other. Corresponding to this is the Ziz's allusion, “its ankles in the water.”

“Yet,” etc. The master explains in passing the matter of Enoch and Elijah.

“The one”: that is, Enoch, as in the Treatise Heqor Din, part II, chapter 21.

“In Israel's ways”: to fulfill the whole Torah.

“As a sign and a wonder”: as R. Ishmael said, “Metatron said to me: I am Enoch son of Jared.

When the generation of the Flood sinned, the Holy One, blessed be He, raised me up to be a witness against them, so that they should not say: The Merciful One is cruel, for the generation of the Flood was destroyed,” etc.

“Once he ascended”: on high, he did not descend again in the manner of Elijah. The reason is that he is “a righteous man faltering before the wicked” below and became ṭiron and lord above. Therefore he is called Metatron, a word composed of maṭ and ṭiron.

“In the sense of ‘I was young’”—“and I have also grown old,” said by Metatron, prince of the world. The intention is as aforesaid.

“Around his camp”: in the world of Making, the wicked—the shells—walk.

“He”: while still upon the earth, he actually sewed shoes. “He was a shoemaker, and whenever he put the needle into the sandal, he praised the Holy One, blessed be He. The mystery of the matter is that he is Metatron, the matron's shoe, and he joins her with the King through his deeds that ascend upward, and proclaims from above seven blessings to nourish the world. This is his lying down[?],” as is written in Maggid Mesharim.[TN280005] The matter is that a shoe is an appellation of union. Of this it was said to Moses, “Remove your shoes,” to separate from his wife, as is in the Zohar, portion Pequdei, page 396. It is known that the righteous one's deeds below also cause supernal union and unification, for by an awakening below an awakening above is aroused. With this intention Enoch sewed shoes, seeing the wicked in his generation [give] renewed power to the shells and prevent the holy union, blessed be He. In repairing the shoes he intended to repair the union above and bind the lower worlds: the world of Making and everything dependent upon it, from the shells and celestial spheres to the earth's navel, so that the worlds together would be prepared for the Shekhinah's feet, that she be aroused to the holy union, blessed be He. Our rabbis, of blessed memory, fittingly said in the chapter ʿArvei Pesaḥim that one who withholds shoes from his feet is like one excommunicated by Heaven; they intended this mystery also.

“As it is written of her”: of the Shekhinah, “How beautiful are your steps in shoes.” The intention is: when you put on shoes, which are the righteous one's good deeds, through which you are aroused to union and say, “See, with this son I have come before You,” then these shoes separate her from the shells, which are the earth's agitation.

“The initial letters” of BShKMLW have the numerical value 398, like Enoch Metatron, who was established in his charge, in accordance with his name Enoch, and acquired his place above, on high. Once he ascended he did not descend.

“Through the aforesaid craft,” etc. This is sewing shoes. It appears that these sewn shoes intimate the following: Joseph is Metatron, as is known and is also explained in Alshekh. It is written, “for shoes,” for his brothers sold him for shoes. Therefore he sewed shoes for the Shekhinah, as it were, to rectify this—so it appears to me.

“Therefore he was not perfected,” etc. Because he was one who is not commanded yet acts. Not so Elijah, who is Phinehas,

Rema of Fano

Because the Torah had not yet been given, he made for himself a symbolic act, like one who is not commanded yet acts, through the aforesaid craft, in place of the service of the commandments of action in the Torah that Moses commanded us. Therefore he was not perfected through his trials like Elijah, who is of Abraham's seed, from the root of Phinehas, who stood at Sinai and merited the covenant of peace, and is still alive. Therefore he climbs and ascends to plead merit, climbs and descends with the righteous, “a very present help in troubles.” They said of him that he offers the daily offerings in who was at Mount Sinai and was commanded and acted. Therefore Elijah has the power to descend at every time of trouble; not so Enoch, who, once he ascended, did not descend.

“That he offers,” etc. That is, Elijah offers the daily offerings in the place where the Temple was destroyed, beside the Western Wall. Even now, when it is destroyed, it remains in its sanctity, as is said, “I shall make your sanctuaries desolate”: even when it is desolate, it remains in its sanctity.

"His leather," etc. See the Treatise Heqor Din above, part IV, chapter 19.

"A symbolic act": to arouse above through his craft of sewing shoes.

"Therefore he was not perfected through his trials": in this world, for "God took him"—He gathered him before he would be cut off, as is in the Zohar, Bereshit, page 162. For this reason we say of him in the preceding section, "Once he ascended he did not descend." Not so Elijah, who was commanded and acted, and whose root, Phinehas, withstood trial in this world and was given the covenant of peace. Therefore permission is the Temple even though it is desolate, for it remains in its sanctity. This accords with what we learned at the end of Eduyot: "One offers sacrifices even though there is no Temple building." It is possible that baskets from the chamber contributions were stored away for him, so that they should come from the community's funds. It is not far-fetched to believe that the patriarchs of the world stand beside him for the attendance, and Heman, Asaph, and Jeduthun sing. From the skins of the sacred offerings, of which it is written, "It shall be his," they said that he makes scroll after scroll and writes the merits of each and every one of Israel. Some say that his leather girdle is from the ram of Abraham our father, for it befits him in his own person, and also to recall the ancestors' merit continually.

given him to descend to this world, and he is found with the righteous, particularly at a time of trouble, as is known.

"For it remains in its sanctity": as the sages, of blessed memory, said concerning "I shall make your sanctuaries desolate."

"From the skins of the sacred offerings": that he offers, and they are his, as it is written, "The skin of the burnt offering that he offered—it shall belong to the priest"; "they said," etc.

"For it befits him in his own person": as explained in the Treatise Heqor Din, part IV, chapter 19; see there.

"The supernal court," etc. As is said, "And the Lord attended to Sarah": He and His court agreed to the creation of the vessel, her very womb, as above.

"He did not create it for emptiness": rather, so that she would give birth. Therefore "the Lord did"—He Himself, without the court.

"This entire world," etc. That is, in the world of judgment in which we are,

Rema of Fano

"The Lord did for Sarah as He had spoken." Here He did not need His court, for the intention concerned the act of conception and birth. Once the court had agreed to the creation of the vessel that holds blessing, called in the midrash's words "the very womb," as stated, presumably "He did not create it for emptiness." With this, the intention of His thought, blessed be He, which preceded the world, was fulfilled: the world was created only for Israel. This is which is from Isaac's attribute, [it is] as nothing before them, before Abraham and Jacob. Therefore Isaac had to pray for us.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"'The Lord did,'" etc. The master returns to the verse "And the Lord attended," to explain the latter part of the verse.

"Here He did not need His court," so that it would say

"and the Lord," as in the beginning. For there the visitation concerned the very womb, as stated above in part I, section 4. Not so here, where the intention concerned the act of conception and birth, saying that Sarah conceived and bore Isaac. For this He did not need the court, since they had already agreed to the womb's creation, which "He did not create for emptiness."

"The intention was fulfilled," etc. That is, the language of saying and speaking mentioned in Scripture corresponds to the thought and action of the world's creation, which were fulfilled through this visitation. This follows the known principle that the thought of Israel preceded the world, and that the beginning of thought is the end of action, which is the purpose. This is "as He had

"as He had said," intimating thought, as it is written, "I said in my heart." The purpose of the entire work of Creation was also fulfilled, of which it is written, "By the Lord's word the heavens were made." This is "as He had spoken."

It is known that Isaac is a great advocate for his children, their strong redeemer, as the sages, of blessed memory, said concerning "For You are our father." Isaac alone strives before the Holy One, blessed be He, to save his children from judgment. "For Abraham did not know us" is a past-tense verb, and "Israel will not recognize us" is a future-tense verb. The meaning is that Isaac cannot rely on Abraham's lovingkindness, which preceded him, in the sense of the precedence and partnership given to the attribute of mercy with the attribute of judgment at the world's creation; nor on Jacob's merit, which is reserved for the World to Come, as it is written, "To the house of the God of Jacob." Thus this entire world is as nothing before these two elders.

said," in thought, and "as He had spoken," in action. For Isaac was the head and father of the entire house of Israel. He also is the possessor of this joy, for which reason he is [gap] of Israel, as is known.

"As the sages, of blessed memory, said": chapter 9 of Shabbat, folio 89b. R. Samuel bar Naḥmani said that R. Jonathan said: "What is meant by 'For You are our father; for Abraham did not know us, and Israel will not recognize us; You, Lord, are our father; our redeemer from eternity is Your Name'? In the future the Holy One, blessed be He, says to Abraham: Your children have sinned. He says before Him: Master of the world, let them be wiped out for the sanctity of Your Name. He says: I shall say it to Jacob, who had great sorrow over children; perhaps he will seek mercy for them. He says to him: Your children have sinned. He says before Him: Master of the world, let them be wiped out for the sanctity of Your Name. He says: Neither sense among the elders nor counsel among the young! He says to Isaac: Your children have sinned. He says before Him: Master of the world, my children and not Your children? Moreover, how much have they sinned? How many are a person's years? Seventy years, 'and if in strength,' etc. Subtract twenty for which You do not punish them: fifty remain. Subtract twenty-five for the nights: twenty-five remain for them. Subtract twelve and a half for praying, eating, and the privy: twelve and a half remain for them. If You bear all of them, well and good; if not, half upon me and half upon You. If You say, all upon me—behold, I offered myself before You. They began and said: For you are our father. Isaac said to them: Rather than praising me, praise the Holy One, blessed be He. Isaac shows them the Holy One, blessed be He, before their eyes. Immediately they lift their eyes on high and say: You, Lord, are our father," etc. This will be explained in the following sections.

"Which preceded him": at the world's creation. Of this the sages, of blessed memory, said: "The Holy One, blessed be He, saw that the world could not endure through the attribute of judgment; He gave the attribute of mercy precedence and joined it to it." This is "Abraham did not know us," in the past tense.

"For the World to Come": for the days of the Messiah, as it is written, "Many nations shall say: Come, let us go to the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob" (Isaiah 2). This is "Israel will not recognize us,” in the future tense.

“As nothing before them”: therefore Isaac, the owner of the beam, had to enter the beam's thick part.

“Not the children,” etc. That is, not that the children should come to an end, heaven forbid; rather, of the iniquities they said, “Let them be wiped out for the sanctity of Your Name”: through enduring sufferings and afflictions, the iniquities will be wiped out.
“For a terror to me”: that is, the verse's wording is in Job. Since his attribute is fear and judgment, therefore he did not mention it, all the more so: if he does not ask for their lovingkindness and mercies, how much less for judgment.
“Moreover, he himself,” etc. That is, another reason why David did not mention him: for in truth Isaac himself labors for our deliverance.
“In their agreement,” etc. That is, Abraham and Jacob did not press for their iniquities to be forgiven, because the time did not occasion it, for we are in Isaac's world, as above.
“And also My covenant with Abraham”: this is an

Rema of Fano

Know this, for when the Holy One, blessed be He, complained before them and said to each, “Your children have sinned,” they answered, “Let them be wiped out for the sanctity of Your Name.” Not the children, heaven forbid, but the iniquities and transgressions, according to the midrash's words. The intention is through exiles and sufferings, on condition that He exhaust His arrows upon them: the arrows come to an end, but they do not come to an end. Nevertheless, there is no satisfaction in this, for “with the thorn, the cabbage is struck.” This is what David our king cries out in prayer: “Remember Your mercies, Lord”—not Jacob's mercies—“and Your lovingkindnesses”—not lovingkindness for Abraham—for “there is neither sense among the elders nor counsel among the young.” He did not mention Isaac's attribute, for “calamity from God is a terror to me.” Moreover, Isaac himself strengthens himself in it, to take his reward by judgment for our deliverance, as will be explained. In their wisdom, they did not need to press for His mercies, blessed be He, on this occasion, for they knew of this time-dependent commandment: that Isaac should give inclusion after an inclusion, ʾaf and ʾet.

“Because it has almost come to an end,” etc. The first two Temples, which stood through Abraham's and Isaac's merit, were destroyed; they called it a mountain and a field. Not so the final Temple, which will be built speedily in our days through Jacob's merit, for he called it a house: it will not be destroyed. Therefore concerning Jacob ʾet alone is said, one inclusion, unlike Abraham and Isaac. “Happy are all who wait for Him”—for this Temple, that we may reach those days.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Know”: that this is so, as we said in the preceding section.
“According to the midrash's words”: the Zohar on Lamentations, cited in the Treatise Heqor Din, part IV, chapter 16. The intention here is that the iniquities will be wiped out through exile and sufferings, “on condition,” etc., as the sages, of blessed memory, said on the verse

“I shall exhaust My arrows upon them.” Nevertheless, since sufferings are required in any event, there was no satisfaction in this before Him, blessed be He. Therefore He said, “There is neither sense among the elders,” etc.

“For a terror,” etc. He did not wish to mention the attribute of judgment.

“Moreover”: Isaac strengthens himself in the attribute of judgment.

his life for us, for it rests upon him, as it is written, “You are our father,” as stated. Concerning the future prosperity, however, it is written, “I shall remember My covenant with Jacob,” as it is written, “To the house of the God of Jacob,” for he called the Sanctuary a house, indicating its permanence. “And also My covenant with Isaac, and also My covenant with Abraham”: it restricts in both, by the principle of an inclusion after an inclusion, for their merit has almost come to an end and has already afforded protection regarding the two Temples, from what their builders labored at in vain[?],[TN280006] as we mentioned in part II. With Jacob there is only one inclusion, so as to restrict nothing in

“We add,” etc. That is, all this is proof that the principal governance of this sabbatical cycle is through Isaac. Here is the proof: the four legs of the chariot are El, Elohim, YHWH, Adonai. El corresponds to Abraham; Hesed is called El. Elohim is judgment, corresponding to Isaac; YHWH, the Mighty One of Jacob; Adonai corresponds to David. These are the four legs of the chariot; all

We add to the sages' words, of blessed memory, carbuncle, sapphire, and diamond: for El, Elohim, YHWH, Adonai —the four heads of the living creatures in the supernal chariot—have the numerical value of Isaac, who includes them in this world, which arose in His thought to be created through judgment.[TN280007] Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, associated His Name with him during his lifetime. The rectification of the generations, so that he would receive the reward of them all, was not have the numerical value of Isaac, namely El, Elohim, YHWH, Adonai, numerically Isaac. See KY, KG[?].[TN280008]

“Gave birth to darkness,” etc. That is, within the lovingkindnesses Abba received a promise from above and afterward emanated them in the aspect of fear, Isaac. This is Dʾ Kh[?], in the union of the backs of Abba and Imma, YHWH and Ehyeh.[TN280009] For the squaring of the Names of mercy is judgment; they amount to "darkness." YHWH in its simple, doubled, tripled, and quadrupled form—Y, YH, YHW, YHWH—has the numerical value seventy-two. Likewise Ehyeh, which is in the mystery of the backs, in doubled enumeration, etc.—ʾ, ʾH, ʾHY, ʾHYH—has the numerical value forty-four. Seventy-two and forty-four amount to the number of afelah, "darkness," which is 116.

"His eyes grew dim," etc. Since his creation was from the attribute of darkness. See the Zohar, Beshalah, page 80, as follows: "R. Abba: It is written, 'When Isaac grew revealed to Abraham, as explained in the Treatise Heqor Din, until he received the tidings of an heir to dominion who would issue from his inward parts, from the interior of Hesed, according to the words of Sefer ha-Bahir, which said, "The waters conceived and gave birth to darkness." Therefore it is written, "His eyes grew dim from seeing." This is the reason for the doubling in the verse "These are the generations of Isaac son of Abraham; Abraham begot Isaac." The first is for Esau: "the first is not complete," and the etnaḥta accent is in the place of a separating pause. The second is for Jacob: "the second is complete," for Hesed begot Isaac and brought Jacob forth from him. Therefore, from Isaac's birth the four hundred years of the chosen seed's sojourning began.

old, his eyes grew dim,' etc. Why? Come and hear: In Isaac are included night, darkness, judgment." This is the mystery of what they said in the Mishnah: one can produce fire from water, in tractate Beitzah.

"The first," etc. That is, the first "These are the generations of Isaac" intimates Esau. Therefore toledot, "generations," lacks yod-shin[?], and the etnaḥta beneath the word Abraham is in place of a separating pause, to separate the wicked from the righteous.[TN280010]

"The second," etc. This is what is said, "Abraham begot Isaac": the word holid, "begot," is written fully—kaf, waw[?]—intimating Jacob.

Therefore he said that Abraham, who is Hesed, caused Isaac to beget Jacob.[TN280011]

"Holid ʾet" has the numerical value of Abraham Isaac. "Abraham begot Isaac"—Avraham holid ʾet Yiṣḥaq—has the numerical value of be-Tishri, "in Tishri," for Isaac was born in Tishri.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"We add": to bring proof for the sages' words, of blessed memory, which we mentioned in the preceding section: it befits Isaac to be an advocate of uprightness for Israel, because he is the master of this sabbatical cycle.

"For": indeed we have found and seen that the four Names El, Elohim, YHWH, Adonai are the four heads of the living creatures in the chariot. Corresponding to them are Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David, the four legs of the chariot: lovingkindness for Abraham is from the Name El; Isaac's fear from the Name Elohim; Jacob, Tiferet, from YHWH; and David's Malkhut from Adonai. These four Names have the numerical value of Isaac. The reason is that he includes them in this sabbatical cycle, whose governance is judgment.

"Therefore," also, the Holy One, blessed be He, associated His Name with him during his lifetime, saying to Jacob, "I am the Lord, the God of Abraham your father and the God of Isaac." We do not need what our rabbis, of blessed memory, said, that because his eyes had grown dim he was reckoned as dead. Rather, on the contrary, the reason is that he saw his world during his lifetime. For this reason also, the rectification of the generations was not revealed to Abraham at the covenant between the pieces until after he had received the tidings of Isaac's seed and it was said to him, "He who issues from your inward parts will inherit you." This is because this world is his, and Abraham needed to rectify it. In saying, "He who issues from your inward parts," the intention is from the interior of Hesed.

"The waters": the lovingkindnesses conceived and gave birth to the darkness of judgment.

"Therefore it is written, 'His eyes grew dim,'" etc. As is in the Zohar, Beshalah, page 80: "R. Abba said: It is written, 'When Isaac grew old, his eyes grew dim.' Why?" etc. "Come and see: In Isaac is included night,” etc.

“The first”: in saying, “These are the generations of Isaac,” it intimates Esau, who was the dross that first came forth, as is in the Zohar, portion Behar, “fire”[?]. On this account toledot is written defectively.[TN280012]
“The etnaḥta”: beneath the word Abraham, in place of a separating pause, to separate Esau's birth from Jacob's. For the second, in what is said afterward, “Abraham begot Isaac,” intimates Jacob, who issues forth complete. Therefore holid is written fully with yod. The intention is that Abraham's Hesed begot Isaac and Jacob.

“Numerically 385”: like the number of Shekhinah. Eretz Miṣrayim, “the land of Egypt,” has the numerical value 671, like Adonai spelled in full.
“In the attribute of the backs,” etc. See Recanati, portion Miqeṣ, and Sefer ha-Kavvanot, the mystery of the Qaddish. The known premise is that around Malkhut of Making the Nogah shell rules, and beyond it are the other three shells. If Israel are worthy, the balance inclines toward holiness, and all the souls descending at that time are holy; the other three shells are thrust into the opening of the great abyss. If, heaven forbid, the reverse is the case, the reverse occurs: the balance inclines toward impurity, and the holy souls are oppressed in the mystery of “the tears of the oppressed.” Concerning

Rema of Fano

“The dwelling of the children of Israel, who dwelt”—the sources of their souls—“in Egypt,” the Egypt above, bordering the Shekhinah in the attribute of the backs; for Miṣrayim, “Egypt,” together with its five letters, has the numerical value 385. “Thirty years and four hundred years” has the numerical value of nefesh, “soul,” for Jacob's house: from the time of the prophecy the refining began. This is the meaning, in truth and uprightness, of “You know the soul of the stranger.” It is the pearl that hung at Abraham's neck. Egypt is the neck of the great statue of the kings, and Pharaoh is the nape, the back of the neck, for “God made this opposite that also.”
Just as Israel were raised up when they left Egypt and ascended to the chosen land, which is “the head of the world's dust”—concerning which they said, “Let us give a head,” to abandon her, to separate from her, as in “My nard gave its fragrance”—so Nebuchadnezzar was raised up to be the statue's head, as it is written, “You are the head of gold.” The

this the Ari, of blessed memory, explained, “A time when man rules over man, to his hurt”: these are the three shells; “over man”—this is the Nogah shell; “to his hurt”—they tip [it] toward evil.
This is measure for measure: since there are souls in the Egypt above, which is the Nogah shell bordering holiness, to rectify these souls they had to be in the exile of Egypt below for 430 years, the number of nefesh. Although the enslavement was 210, three times seventy, for the rectification of Adam the first man's Nefesh, Ruah, and Neshama, this is only preparation for rectification. Only Nefesh was rectified now; afterward, at the giving of the Torah, Ruah and Neshama were rectified. Therefore the author specifies “the soul of the stranger”—Nefesh precisely.

“From the time of the prophecy,” etc. That is, at the covenant between the pieces.

“At Adam the first man's neck,” etc. That is, Abraham rectified Adam the first man's Nefesh, which had fallen into the shell. Egypt's shell is the neck of Nebuchadnezzar's statue, for there he enumerated the head, and afterward “his breast and his arms”; the neck is Egypt. As the Ari, of blessed memory, also said, the chief cupbearer, chief baker, and chief slaughterer are in the three veins of the throat. They have a hold in the Name Elohim; three times Elohim, together with the inclusive unit, has the numerical value of garon, “throat.” Pharaoh is at the nape in the statue, drawing nourishment from the brain, whereas the throat does not draw nourishment from the brain. With this will be understood the Zohar's passage in Vayeshev, page 498, concerning the heifer whose neck is broken: Egypt, under whose dominion Israel were; lamenter said, “Her adversaries have become”—the shells of Egypt, which are at the neck's constriction—“the head,” the shells of Babylon. This was the reward of transgression, for after Solomon married Pharaoh's daughter, he was enticed to the kingship of Sheba[?], [TN280021] and Nebuchadnezzar came forth from between them, as we mentioned above.

We have already explained in the Treatise Heqor Din that Adam the first man's Nefesh was rectified in Abraham our father; it is the root of all vital souls. It is called a pearl, margalit, descending in the measure of its stature so that glory may dwell in our land, at the foot of the stature of the Ruah above it, in the sense of “a woman lying at his feet,” according to those who expound it favorably. All is true, a word in its time. For the soul longing to carry out its mission and its Maker's will in this world, there is no greater or more evident sojourn than the restraining of Abraham's spring, from which the chosen seed [comes], from the vision between the pieces until he was one hundred years old. Even after his death the pearl was hung in the sun's sphere, for the one who trod the stars with his sandal had departed, and we were left under the governance of the astral order, which has brought all the exiles upon us, as on this day.

therefore the heifer had to have its neck broken at the neck's place. Likewise, on the preceding page, he wrote there that after Joseph wept, he wept over the tribes that would be exiled to Egypt, which was the neck. Therefore he wept on Benjamin's neck. Otherwise there is a difficulty: what has it to do with the verse “Upon our necks we were pursued”? According to this, however, it is explained: there they are absorbed and adhere.

Although the passage there concerns the other exiles, this is no difficulty. For it is a known premise that, had we not sinned with the calf, all four kingdoms would have been included in Egypt's exile, as the blessed Lord indeed showed Abraham between the pieces all four kingdoms. But when we sinned with the calf, it was decreed upon us to be in the exile of each of the four kingdoms separately. See and marvel: “These are the journeys of the children of Israel”—its initial letters [are] Edom, Media, Babylon, Greece—“who went forth from the land of Egypt.” They were fit to be exempted from all exiles by the exodus from Egypt. They were fit for Moses to write “their departures according to their journeys,” for four redemptions were written: “I shall bring out,” “I shall rescue,” “I shall redeem,” “I shall take.” Thus Moses wrote the departures from the four exiles corresponding to their journeys from Egypt, as is said: four expressions corresponding to four kingdoms. But “and these”—

what they said afterward, “These are your gods,” etc.—they were punished and had to journey into the exile of the other kingdoms also, as they intimated in the four expressions, their departures, that these would apply to the three exiles besides Egypt. Thus in Egypt's exile all four exiles were initially included. Abraham had Adam the first man's Nefesh at his neck, and rectification of the neck in impurity; this is the pearl hanging at his neck.[TN280013]

“At the foot of the stature of the Ruah,” etc. The known premise is that when a person merits Nefesh, the dwelling of its glory is in the brain. When he merits Ruah, Ruah dwells in the brain and Nefesh in the heart. When he merits Neshama, Neshama dwells in the brain, Ruah is a throne for Neshama and dwells in the wings of the lungs, and Nefesh is a throne for Ruah and dwells in the heart. Some expound favorably the verse “a woman lying at his feet”: from Nefesh downward a foot and throne are made for Ruah above it, and Ruah for Neshama, as was[?] with Abraham our father, when a pearl hung at his neck, for he rectified Adam the first man's Nefesh. It is called margalit, “pearl,” from the expression regel, “foot,” a base for the stature of Ruah above it. But it can also be expounded unfavorably: “the woman,” Neshama, lies at his feet when, heaven forbid, his iniquities outweigh [his merits]; then Neshama wallows in the dust of the shells' feet, as is in the Tiqqunim, “You shall bruise him at the heel.” By this you will understand the author's words; examine carefully. [TN280014]

“All is true in its time”: that is, this for the wicked, and this for the righteous.

“For the longing soul there is no greater sojourn,” etc. That is, even the approximately thirty years before Isaac's birth, from the covenant between the pieces onward, were also a sojourn for Neshama, on account of “that he pressed down”[?] the existence of Abraham our father.[TN280015]

“Trod the stars with a sandal,” etc. The midrash's wording is, “While the sandal is on the feet, they tread the stars.” According to the mystery, it is known that Sandalphon, from the aspect of the foot, is in Making, and is called a Canaanite servant: “Canaan—in his hand are dishonest scales.” That is, in his left hands he subdues the shells. Canaan is an acrostic for kinnor naʿim ʿim nevel, “a pleasant lyre with a harp.” He is the one who raises the sections of song and prayer, as above. The seven[?] wandering stars are ShṢM ḤNKL; they are in the mystery of the shells, leaven outside, and they have an interior of holiness. As is in the Zohar, Pinehas, page 466, as follows: “The seven wandering stars are ShṢM ḤNKL, and they are from the side of good and evil: light within, unleavened bread; a shell outside, leaven.” End of quotation. From this aspect

“‘The dwelling of the children of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, thirty years and four hundred years’”: the intention concerns Israel's souls that fell into the shells, of which Egypt is the head, and dwelt within it in captivity for this length of time.

“Bordering the Shekhinah”: therefore Egypt is called Miṣrayim, for Egypt's prince is the first of the seventy princes above, and the Shekhinah is over them. It follows that Egypt is second to the Shekhinah. The allusion comes in the verse “He made him ride in the second chariot,” as is in Ṣiyyoni; it has already been explained in the Treatise Heqor Din, part III, chapter 4.

“In the attribute of the backs”: in the aspect of her lower grades, for then she is reckoned with the seventy princes.

“For Miṣrayim”: together with five letters it has the numerical value 385, like Shekhinah, to intimate that it borders the Shekhinah.

“Numerically nefesh”: to intimate that it is said of the vital souls.

“From the time”: when the prophecy concerning Egypt's exile came at the covenant between the pieces, the refining of the souls began, that they should be refined in the iron furnace, as stated in the Treatise Heqor Din, part III, chapter 21; see there. From then until the exodus from Egypt there were 430 years.

“This is the meaning” of what the verse says, “You know the soul of the stranger, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt.” The intention is literally Nefesh, for their souls likewise were strangers in Egypt. Concerning this the sages, of blessed memory, also said: “Abraham our father had a pearl hanging at his neck, and every sick person who saw it would be healed. When Abraham died, the Holy One, blessed be He, hung it in the sun's sphere.” The pearl is an appellation of Adam the first man's Nefesh, rectified in Abraham our father, as he says nearby. Its place in the measure of their stature was at the neck, as stated in the Treatise Heqor Din, part III, section 6. In it was the rectification through the refining by which Abraham our father began to refine the adhering souls, and as within Egypt, which was also the neck of the statue that Nebuchadnezzar erected.

Therefore Egypt's kings were called Pharaoh, the letters of ha-ʿoref, “the nape,” of the neck.
“Concerning which they said”: “Let us give a head and return to Egypt.” The word nittenah means “let us abandon,” as in “My hail gave its fragrance”[?]. The intention is: let us abandon the Land of Israel, which is “the head of the world's dust.”[TN280017]
“To me it appears” that nittenah should be explained in its usual sense and connected with the word “to Egypt.” The intention is: let us give [it] to Egypt, and as a head; instead of its being second in the chariot, as mentioned above, from now on let us make it the head. In the manner of what our rabbis, of blessed memory, said: they intended idolatry.
“The lamenter said, ‘Her adversaries have become the head.’” The intention is that for the statue's head, Babylon's shell, the neck—Egypt's shell—buries[?]; “her adversaries have become” at the neck's constriction.[TN280018]
“As we said above”: part II, section 23.
“It is called a pearl”: from the expression regel, “foot,” like margelotav, “his feet,” because in its rectification it approached as a foot and base for the stature of the precision[?] above it.[TN280019]
“In the sense of” what the verse says, “Behold, a woman lies at his feet” (Ruth 3): some expound the word “his feet” favorably. The intention is that Boaz became a stand and foot for the Shekhinah, the woman of valor. What is intimated in this will prove true in its time, in Solomon's days, when the moon was full; likewise in the future the Lord's glory will fill the dwelling.

[gap] Therefore it is fitting to count 430 years from him, as below.
“Even after his death”: Abraham's, the refining of exile brought us consolation[?],[TN280022] for while he was alive he trod the order of the stars with his sandal and by his merit, in the manner of what our rabbis, of blessed memory, said: “Go out from your astrology.” Not so after he departed from this world, when we remained under the governance of the astral order of time, and time and chance befall us all, to go into exile here and there, in a land not ours. By this understand what the sages, of blessed memory, said: “When Abraham died, the Holy One, blessed be He, hung it in the sun's sphere.” That is, the sun and ḥazarim[?], namely the sphere of the constellations.[TN280020]

“Bi-Yiṣḥaq,” “in Isaac,” has the numerical value 210.
“In the sense of ‘for he turned aside,’” etc. It is known from the Ari's writings, of blessed memory, that the tribes damaged the Name YHWH ten times, numerically sar, 260. This is “He saw that he turned aside to see.” Therefore, when the blessed Lord sent Moses to redeem Israel, Moses said, “What is His Name?” It is

Further: “In Isaac shall seed be called for you.” “In Isaac” has the numerical value 210, the Egyptian enslavement. Its mnemonic is “Ehyeh sent me,” for ten times Ehyeh amounts to 210. Concerning Moses our master, peace be upon him, it is said, “Happy is the man who fears continually”; this was said regarding words of Torah. For, unlike complete and numerous people who counted and erred concerning the seventy years of Babylon's visitation, and the children of Ephraim who pressed forward and the Name YHWH, which surely amounts, ten times, to 260. “What shall I say to them?” The time to redeem has not yet arrived! He answered him: “Tell them, ‘Ehyeh sent me to you,’” for ten times Ehyeh has the numerical value 210. When will the remaining fifty be rectified? When you go forth from Egypt, taʿavdun, “you shall serve”—nun precisely. There they will be rectified in the gates of Binah. Join fifty to 210: thus 280[?]. [TN280024] This is “qod,” like the number of paqod, which is qeṣ, “end”: “He will visit” and subtract from four hundred years, leaving RD, 204[?] years, as explained in Baʿal ha-Turim.[TN280025]

“Subtract from them,” etc. From the number 210 subtract ninety-three years during which Levi lived; 117 will remain. “The Lord in the palace” has the numerical value ninety-three; “sole Lord” also has the numerical value ninety-three; melekh, “king,” also has the numerical value ninety-three.[TN280026]

“Master of my youth”: aluf, “master,” has the numerical value 117.

“Thirty-one of them the enslavement was,” etc.: from the attribute of Hesed, numerically El, “with a soft mouth.” Eighty years, like the number of Elohim, were the harsh enslavement, with crushing labor and bitterness.[TN280027] It is known that the shells' dominion is from twice Elohim, in the mystery of “You shall bruise him at the heel.” For twice Elohim is written P, N-H and Hod, which are included[?]: two legs, each composed of three joints.[TN280028] Their upper joints are clothed in Creation, the middle in Formation, and the lower in Making. There the shells have a hold. This stumbled concerning Egypt's visitation, he feared lest Egypt's redemption depend on ten Names YHWH, in the sense of “for he turned aside to see.” The Holy One, blessed be He, then entrusted to him a sign within a sign: paqod, namely qeṣ, “end,” 190; yifqod—God will remove and subtract [this] from the number four hundred. Thus 210 remain, as we said.

Subtract from them the first ninety-three years during which Levi was alive. Joseph was thirty-nine when our ancestors descended to Egypt, and Levi was five years older than he: thus forty-four. His years were 137; thus Levi lived in Egypt ninety-three years. He lived longer than all his brothers, and throughout his lifetime the enslavement did not begin. Ninety-three years has the numerical value YHWH be-heikhal, “the Lord in the palace”—“of His holiness.” He was the sole Lord, shielding them as long as one of the tribes was alive, and all the more Levi, who was a master of learning, as is known. There remain 117 years, whose mnemonic is “You are the master of my youth.” For thirty-one of them the enslavement was with a soft mouth, from the attribute of Hesed, numerically El. For eighty-six years, numerically Elohim, from Miriam's birth, it was with crushing labor and bitterness, from the severity of judgment, to bring forth the precious from the vile: the mystery of Nefesh for Jacob's house, from Egypt above and below, from the iron furnace, as stated.

Jonathan ben Uzziel, at the beginning of the portion Vayeshev, said that Joseph's sale was the beginning of Egypt's exile. Thus, when the twenty-two years during is intimated in “It happened in days of evil; the iniquity of my heels surrounds us”[?]. [TN280029] When they have a hold in the two heels, numerically twice Elohim, they decree forced apostasies upon Israel: twice ʿeqev, “heel,” has the numerical value shemad, “forced apostasy.” These are the twice Elohim and the lower joints; it is easy to understand. ʿKH[?]. [TN280030]

The blessed Lord intended to sweeten the twice Elohim, and the rectification corresponded exactly, one to one: in paqod, which He subtracts from 430 years, there are P-W, numerically Elohim, in the middle, and four times YHWH surround it. Four times YHWH, which is twenty-six, amounts to 104. Thus paqod: P-W, 86, with Q-D, 104, surrounding it to sweeten it.[TN280031] Likewise, concerning the remaining 210 years, in the middle are eighty-six years, the number of Elohim; in the middle is the harsh enslavement. Four times El encircle it, numerically 124; 86 and 124 have the numerical value 210. Twice El, which is sixty-two, the enslavement was only “with a soft mouth”; the fourth El was in arrangement[?], from the north side: “From the north evil shall open.”[TN280032] The mystery of the aforesaid

104, namely four Names YHWH, is the illumination of manna: “fine, flaky,” “fine like frost upon the earth.”

“Ha-Torah,” “the Torah,” has the numerical value 611, corresponding to the four full spellings of Ehyeh: twice 161. For it has only three full spellings: with yods, 161; with hes, 151; with alephs, 143. Therefore 161 must be reckoned twice. Not so the Name YHWH, which has four full spellings: with yods, with alephs, with hes, and with yods—that is, the he with yod and the waw with aleph. By contrast, Ehyeh has only three full spellings, for one cannot divide the he [spelled] with yod and the second with aleph. One corresponds to 72, the first full spelling of YHWH; one corresponds to 63, the second full spelling of YHWH; 143, the third full spelling of Ehyeh, corresponds to 45, the third full spelling of YHWH; 151, the fourth full spelling of Ehyeh, corresponds to 52, the fourth full spelling of YHWH.

All the full spellings of Ehyeh amount to the which Joseph was separated from his father are added to the 210 years, all amount to 232, indicating the agreement of the four known full spellings of the four-letter Name: 72, 63, 45, 52. Their combined number is 232, like the number of “Blessed is the glory of the Lord from His place,” mimqomo. All agreed to Egypt's exile, just as the four assembled with ha-Torah, “the Torah,” numerically the four corresponding full spellings of the Name Ehyeh: twice 161, and 151, 143, with four pairs, for the number of ve-noshantem, “and you grow old,” for Babylon's exile. [TN280023]

Isaac reckons the days of our years in which we are occupied: some in sleep, some in divine needs such as Torah and prayer, and some in maintaining human life. For the small amount of time in which deeds that ought not be done happened incidentally, he pleads for us that his merit should atone for half, and asks that the attribute of mercy bear and deliver the other half. There is no doubt that she is the one aroused among the patriarchs and says to each, “Your children have sinned,” so that they may seek mercy for them. To her Isaac said, “Take half, and I [take] half; if not, behold, I stretched my neck upon the altar,” as is in tractate Shabbat, the chapter Rabbi Akiva.

number of ha-Torah, 611. Joined to the full spelling of YHWH, which is 72, 63, 45, 52, the total amounts to 843. The four pairs of Ehyeh and YHWH, four pairs of full spellings as above, give 852, like the number of ve-noshantem; all agreed. The mnemonic of the aforesaid pairs is regel, derekh, piqeaḥ, bar: “foot, way, clear-sighted, pure.” That is, the full spelling 161 with 72 has the numerical value regel; 161 with 63, derekh; 151 with 52, bar; 143 with 45, piqeaḥ. See the mystery of the pearl.[TN280033]

“Bi-Yiṣḥaq yiqqare lekha,” “in Isaac shall be called for you,” has the numerical value 852.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“Further, bi-Yiṣḥaq”: numerically 210 years. For ten times twenty-one, the number of the Name Ehyeh, amounts to 210, corresponding to the ten tribes who sinned in Joseph's sale; each needed rectification through the Name Ehyeh.

“For Moses our master, peace be upon him, feared”: that this count would not suffice to rectify the tribes, unlike what the children of Ephraim calculated as the end, to go forth before the time, as is known and as our rabbis, of blessed memory, also said concerning Babylon's visitation. Moses feared lest the tribes need to be in Egypt 260 years to rectify ten Names YHWH, numerically 260. The allusion to this comes in the verse “The Lord saw that he turned aside to see.”

“A sign within a sign”: of paqod yifqod.

“All the more”: the enslavement was not during Levi's lifetime, for he was a master of learning, teaching judgment to Jacob and Torah to Israel, which he received from his father.

“With ha-Torah”: numerically 660[?], like four full spellings of the Name Ehyeh. The yod spelling is 161, and it is counted three times, corresponding to two yod spellings and a full one, aleph, three[?]; the he spelling is 151; the aleph spelling, 143; the total is 616. Joined to 232, thus 948. These are four occasions of full spellings for YHWH and Elohim, and they are four: thus 856, like the number of “and you grow old in the land,” for then Babylon's exile began.[TN280034]

They returned and said, “You, Lord, are our father,” for YHWH is the Elohim mentioned in the work of Creation, which is Isaac's fear, according to one of the explanations stated in truth. You are the one who goes round to the patriarchs, that they may seek mercy for us. Who gave Isaac a mouth apart from You? You first granted him merit equal in weight to all our debts, so that he could protect us and take the redemption of our soul by judgment.
This was in reward for the binding, which took place in Isaac's thirty-seventh year, as is known. Then his aged, merciful father, more a man of lovingkindness than any human being, bound him in order to slaughter him and perform upon him the flaying, cutting into pieces, and entire offering to the fires. “Isaac went forth,” etc. He now comes to explain the verse “Isaac went forth to meditate in the field toward evening,” etc.: he went forth from the Garden of Eden according to one interpretation, or from Shem's house of study according to another. The author makes a reconciliation: one master said one thing, and they do not disagree; another master said one thing, and they do not disagree. Shem's house of study drew nourishment from the Garden of Eden, so that all is one. This is what he says: perhaps Shem's house of study is the house of study of the Garden of Eden, because its nourishment comes from

“Isaac went forth” from the Garden of Eden, or from Shem's house of study, according to Jonathan ben Uzziel's words. Perhaps he means the house of study of the Garden of Eden, from which Shem drew nourishment: “to meditate in the field toward evening.” At that hour he took it upon himself to establish the afternoon prayer, to atone, through his departure from the Garden of Eden, for Adam the first man's expulsion from there on the first New Year, at the time of the afternoon prayer. He did not establish it until his mate was brought to him through the servant who merited to enter the Garden of Eden alive and enduring and did not taste death. He still continually merits to serve Abraham and Sarah in that world, as R. Benaʾah found him standing at the entrance of the Cave of Machpelah, in the chapter there.

“To meditate in the field”: our sages, of blessed memory, said that meditation means prayer, for he then established the afternoon prayer.

“Who merited to enter,” etc. That is, the servant Eleazar merited to enter the Garden of Eden, as explained in the Gemara. [TN280037]

“Intermediate,” etc. That is, Eleazar intimates Metatron, the middle of those who bind crowns from the prayers, mentioned above in part I, section 39[?] of this treatise.[TN280038] As is known, the principal rectification of thought is through Akatriel, prince of Creation; the rectification of speech through Metatron in Formation; and the rectification of action through Sandalphon in Making. The morning prayer corresponds to thought and is particular to Akatriel; the afternoon prayer corresponds to speech and is particular to Metatron. Eliezer also is in the mystery of Metatron. See the Zohar, Vayeshev, page 409, at its end, as follows: "'Abraham said to his servant'—this is the moon, which is a servant, made, ʿM[?].'"[TN280039]

Therefore Isaac established the afternoon prayer when he encountered him in the

Ḥezqat ha-Batim (Bava Batra 58a), for he has a passage there from the gates of the Garden of Eden.

It is explained in the Zohar that he is a figure and counterpart of the prince of the presence, the middle of the three who bind crowns from all prayers, as previously stated. For the afternoon prayer is intermediate in its degree and importance between the morning and evening prayers. We have already mentioned that the binding of crowns for each prayer has three grades. Corresponding to them, this exalted messenger, who draws and gives drink from his master's Torah, is called by three designations: "his servant"—one; "the elder of his house"—two; "the ruler over all that he has"—three.

field. The evening prayer corresponds to Making, to Sandalphon. Although Jacob includes judgment and mercy, unlike Isaac, who is judgment alone—if so, why does Jacob's prayer correspond to the world of Making, where there is judgment, and not Isaac's? It appears to me [to be] in the manner of "A person's pride shall bring him low," for the severity of Isaac's attribute could not have been sweetened through the evening prayer.

"For each prayer there are three grades," etc. That is, thought, speech, action. Corresponding to this, the servant also is called by three designations: "his servant"—Sandalphon; "the elder of his house"—Akatriel; "the ruler over all that he has"—the middle one, Metatron, who includes all three. ("Servant to Isaac" has the numerical value of Metatron.) He rectified speech, which includes a little thought and a little action, in the sense that moving his lips is an action. As the Ari, of blessed memory, further asked: Why do Jacob and David have the numerical value of Israel, and why specifically is he called Israel?[TN280040] He answered: because he includes two sides, corresponding to speech; there is no speech without thought, and moving his lips is also an action. So it is in the case before us. It is possible to intimate this in the word lasuaḥ, "to meditate": suaḥ has the numerical value of Shaddai, like Metatron, who is Eliezer, whom he encountered when he went forth to meet him.

Yad Yehudah - 1

"Isaac came to meditate in the field," etc. They said in the midrash: From where did he come? From the Garden of Eden. Jonathan translated "Isaac came from coming to Beʾer Laḥai Roʾi," etc.: "Isaac was coming from the house of study of Shem the Great."

"Perhaps": they do not disagree with one another.

Jonathan also does not mean literally Shem's house of study, but the house of study of the Garden of Eden. Because Shem drew his learning from the house of study of the Garden of Eden, he therefore said, "from Shem's house of study."

"To meditate in the field": our rabbis, of blessed memory, said that meditation means prayer, for he established the afternoon prayer. The reason he established it precisely at the time of his departure from the Garden of Eden was to atone for Adam the first man's sin, because of which he was driven out of the Garden of Eden at the afternoon-prayer hour. Since he also sinned with his mate, Isaac therefore did not establish the prayer until his mate was brought to him. The Lord brought it about that his mate also [came] through Eliezer, who was also destined to enter the Garden of Eden alive, as is known.

"It is explained in the Zohar" [gap] there that Eliezer is a figure of Metatron, as follows there: "Therefore Abraham's servant and Rebekah—it is stated that it has been taught concerning this: when the Holy One, blessed be He, sends Metatron, who is His servant, on account of the exile," etc.; see there.

"As previously stated": above, part I, section 20, that there are three princes of the presence binding crowns from prayers: Alkatriel in the world of Creation, who is called elder; and Metatron and Sandalphon, who are called youths—Metatron in Formation and Sandalphon in Making. Metatron also is the middle one; therefore he intended the servant as a figure, that Isaac should establish the afternoon prayer, which is intermediate between the morning and evening prayers, with respect to its degree and importance, not its time.[TN280041]

“We have already mentioned them”: three grades. The first is the grade of those who pray in the attribute of Neshama, with thought predominant in them [gap] to bind the crowns of their prayers for the Holy One, blessed be He. The second is those who pray in the attribute of Ruah, where speech predominates; Metatron binds crowns from those prayers. The third is those who pray in the attribute of Nefesh, where action predominates; the one who binds crowns from those prayers is Sandalphon.

“Corresponding to them,” etc. That is, since Metatron is the Holy One's messenger to receive the eighteen blessings of prayer each day, three times, as is in the Zohar there, page 556, on the verse “On his day you shall give his wages,” etc., he therefore also includes these three grades in his mission. For this reason he is called by three designations. “His servant” corresponds to Sandalphon's grade in the world of Making, in the aspect of action, for which it is fitting to designate him a servant. “Elder” corresponds to Alkatriel's grade. “The ruler over all that he has” corresponds to himself, for the Holy One, blessed be He, entrusted all His treasuries to him when He raised him on high, as is known.

“The first binding”: this is the attribute of Malkhut in the world of Making, near us, for the practical soul.

“It was repeated”: Eliezer's account was repeated a second time for the second binding, in the world of Formation, for Ruah, corresponding to speech. Therefore it is said, “I placed the ring upon her nose,” the place of breathing. This was not said in the first account; rather, they were in the servant's hand, in action.

“The third account, in general”: it is said, “The servant recounted,” in general, and the nature of the account is not specified in the Torah, to intimate the world of Creation,

Rema of Fano

It may be that for this reason his conversation is repeated in the Torah these three times, for it is more pleasing before the Omnipresent than the children's Torah, as the sages, of blessed memory, said. The first account was directed toward the first binding, which is near us. The allusion is “The girl ran,” an appellation of the practical soul, as it is written, “And two bracelets upon her hands.” It was repeated to intimate the second binding, through the perfection of speech, for in it is written, “I placed the ring upon her nose.” This was not mentioned at first, except that it was ready in the servant's hand. The third account was not specified, but only given in general, in the mystery of intention, as it is written, “The servant recounted to Isaac.” For his attribute weighs in the where thought corresponds to Neshama. There is Isaac's attribute, which weighs in the balance the sapphire clarity of the prayer's thought.

“Its purification”: that is, its brightness; he examines whether they are worthy or not.

“For his house”: the sages, of blessed memory, expounded this as his wife. Therefore it is impossible to pray the prayer that stands in place of an offering unless one is married to a woman; it is easy to understand.

Yad Yehudah - 1

“It may be,” etc. This is joined to the preceding section: the conversation of Eliezer, Abraham's servant.

“Directed toward”: the binding of crowns by Sandalphon in the world of Making, which is the first and is near us. Because it is in the grade of Nefesh and action, the allusion comes, “The girl ran,” etc.

“As it is written”: also in that account, “The man took a gold ring, a half-shekel its weight, and two bracelets upon her hands.” Although with the ring it says, “The man took a gold ring,” etc., which was ready in his hand.

“The third account”: it corresponds to the third binding, in the grade of thought. Therefore it was not specified; Scripture only says generally, “The servant recounted to Isaac all the things that he had done.” This befits Isaac, for his attribute, judgment, weighs the thoughts of prayers, whether they are fit for the binding of crowns.

“Just as,” etc. He returns to what was said above, section 30, that Isaac established the afternoon prayer at the time his mate was brought to him.

“Near Sarah's visitation”: as it is written concerning Sodom's overthrow, “Abraham rose early in the morning to the place where he had stood before the Lord.” Our rabbis, of blessed memory, learned from this that he established the morning prayer. This was immediately after Sarah received the tidings of the visitation.

“Until he had first gone to Haran”: as our rabbis, of blessed memory, said, “When he reached Haran, he reflected in his mind, saying: Is it possible that I passed the place where my fathers prayed and did not pray there? He resolved to return; the earth sprang for him. Immediately, ‘he encountered the place,’” etc. Our rabbis, of blessed memory, learned from this that he established the evening prayer.

“For prayer”: stands in place of the offerings, and there it is written, “He shall atone for himself and for his house.” Our rabbis, of blessed memory, said, “His house”—this is his wife. Therefore our holy fathers also established their prayers only at the fitting time, through their mates.

balance the sapphire clarity of thought and its purification in all prayers.

Just as Isaac timed the hour to establish the afternoon prayer upon receiving Rebekah, so Abraham established the morning prayer near Sarah's visitation. Jacob, in his exile, did not establish the evening prayer until he had first gone to Haran and glimpsed Rachel, and afterward “he encountered the place.” For prayer atones like the offerings, and it is written, “He shall atone for himself and for his house,” and afterward, “for the entire congregation of Israel.”

omitted saying “upon her nose,” with the bracelets it mentioned “upon her hands,” since they are the instruments of action.

“The account was repeated”: to intimate the second binding, in the grade of Ruah and speech. Therefore in it is written, “I placed the ring upon her nose,” which is the instrument of Ruah, unlike the first account, which does not mention that the servant placed the ring upon her nose, but merely

"Upon the inner altar," etc.: It is inner; it is Binah. "Accordingly Scripture put first": For there it says, "On the day the Lord God made," which we explained above: He made YHWH, which is Mercy, out of Elohim, which is Judgment. This is the binding of Judgment. Therefore earth is mentioned first, for Isaac's binding on earth preceded the binding of the princes above. "Thus Mars," etc.: Your mnemonic is "ShLM, GSh, HBL[?]": ox, Gabriel, Mars.[TN280042] They were bound upon the outer altar, which is Malkhut, in the palaces. There the souls of Israel are offered. "Upon the inner altar": Binah. "Since Isaac's binding preceded": It was performed to rectify and sweeten the attribute of Judgment first on earth, and afterward [gap] the rectifications were performed in heaven above. Therefore Scripture says, "On the day the Lord

Just as our father Isaac willingly accepted with a whole heart that Abraham should bind him on the Day of Atonement at the afternoon prayer, so, with great joy, the attribute of Judgment above was bound of its own will by Lovingkindness, and was offered acceptably before the Ancient of Days upon the known inner altar: "A throne of glory, exalted from the first, the place of our sanctuary." Since Isaac's binding on earth preceded all the other rectifications performed after their pattern in heaven, Scripture accordingly put earth before heaven when it first mentioned the complete Name, as we have explained. All creatures above and below occupied themselves together in binding all the masters of judgment at that hour, as the Sages expounded the verse "For while they are tangled thorns," at the beginning of Nahum's prophecy. Thus Mars was bound before Jupiter; Michael, the high priest above, bound Gabriel; and the lion in the Chariot bound the ox. They brought them up upon the outer altar in the palaces, for there the Lord commanded the blessing for "the fire-offerings of Israel"—their actual persons. At the hour when their prayer is in their mouths, "they shall find favor, selah," in the sense of "I poured out my soul before the Lord": that they and their prayers should be accepted favorably upon the two altars, wherever their counterparts exist.

God made earth and heaven," placing earth before heaven, "foreign/recognizable[?]" through the two holy Names in the sweetening of Judgment, for YHWH is Elohim.[TN280044] The rectifications performed in heaven are the occupation of all creatures above, in the world of angels, and below, in the world of the spheres, with the binding of the masters of judgment, as stated in Genesis Rabbah, the portion Vayera: Rabbi Hanina bar Isaac said, "All the time our father Abraham was binding his son Isaac below, the Holy One, blessed be He, was subduing the princes of the nations of the world above. And they did not do[?]; but when Israel separated themselves in Jeremiah's days, the Holy One, blessed be He, said to them, 'What do you suppose—that those bindings endure?' As it is said, 'For while they are tangled thorns,' etc."[TN280045] "Upon the outer altar": Malkhut. "For the fire-offerings of Israel": Actual people. That is, they offer the souls of Israel when they surrender their souls in their prayer, and then "in their mouths they shall find favor, selah." This is the fixed wording, “Had Korah consented”: And not mocked the waving, as explained in the Midrash. “The latter surrendered his soul”: This means Isaac; Korah did not need to surrender his soul in the waving, and nevertheless did not wish to accept Aaron's waving over him. “Elzaphan's chieftainship has no bearing,” etc.: The explanation is the difficulty: If Korah was so esteemed, like Gabriel, why was the chieftainship actually given to Elzaphan, over whom Korah grew envious, and why was it not given to Korah? He answers that, on the contrary, the chieftainship is servitude and service, and does not befit one of the princes of the Chariot, just as it does not befit Aaron—someone who draws near the Shekhinah. “But the master of the priests and the prince,” etc.: Why does he write “their master” here and “their prince” there? Because the Levites are from the side of Judgment:

Rema of Fano

From here we have learned the waving of the Levites by Aaron, which is like “Bring him up; bring him down,” said concerning Isaac. Had Korah consented to being waved as Isaac consented to being bound—and moreover, the latter surrendered his soul while the former had no need to do so—then without doubt Korah below would have been like Gabriel above, just as Aaron corresponds to Michael. Elzaphan's chieftainship has no bearing on this, for it was a great servitude, unsuitable for someone fit to be the counterpart of one of the princes of the Chariot, just as it would not befit Aaron to be chief of the chiefs of the Levites. That is a great labor, imposed upon Eleazar: oil for lighting in his right hand, anointing oil in his left, incense in his bosom, griddle-cakes on his shoulders, for there is no privileged rank in the King's palace. The Jerusalem Talmud has another account, with a small difference. But the master of the priests and the prince of the Levites must not distract their attention from the glory of the Shekhinah. Thus the Gemara, in the chapter Tevul Yom, says of Moses that he was occupied with the Shekhinah. This is what Jethro said to

“Levites,” Leviyyim, has the numerical value of Elohim, which is Judgment. Now Elohim spelled out with yods amounts to 300, and its square to 200: thus ShaR, “prince.” See the beginning of Tikkunei Shabbat on the word shofar, which is ShaR, 86, as it seems to me. Thus ShaR is the illumination of the Levites; therefore he said “the prince of the Levites.” It is different with the priest's Lovingkindness, called “abundant in lovingkindness,” rav ḥesed: the Name spelled out with yods, which is 72, and its backward form, 130, in the mystery of “Behold, He rides upon a light cloud”—ʿaV, 72, QaL, 130—as explained above in Maʾamar Heqor HaDin, amounts to RaV, 202. See the Zohar, the portion Vayetze, page 340b: “And 130 shines in number after the word rav, as the reckoning RaV, ʿaV[?].”[TN280046] He said “the master of the priests”—from our “Five letters build 120 houses”: These are permutations. “The middle letters,” etc.: Namely, those of ṣaddiq ka-tamar yifraḥ. “The letters MNTsPKh”: They indicate Judgment, with the numerical value 280. Therefore the Midrash in the portion Korah adjoins MNTsPKh to the verse “He brings down to Sheol and brings up,” expounded concerning Korah; they alluded to this, as it seems to me. Moses.

Rema of Fano

The Ari, of righteous and blessed memory, expounded concerning Korah the verse “The righteous shall flourish like the palm,” ṣaddiq ka-tamar yifraḥ, for his name is marked in these words' final letters, teaching that at the end of the world's rectification he too will be rectified. He spoke well: for he and his company, in their abode in Gehinnom, from the first hour they descended there began to acknowledge the justice of Heaven's judgment upon them. Thus they say: “Moses is true and his Torah is true, and we are liars.” There is no corruption in the world so great that this confession cannot suffice to rectify it. The sage said something greater than this in his explanation of the Tikkunim, through a matter learned from its context. Now the initial letters of these words, ṣaddiq ka-tamar yifraḥ, have the numerical value of the 120 permutations of the Name Elohim, as the Rabbis say: “Five letters build 120 houses.” This teaches that all the powers of Judgment will first collect their debt from him, and afterward he will flourish. So too the middle letters, DY, TM, PR, contain an explicit allusion: the 120 Elohim will eventually proclaim “Enough!”—day—to Korah's troubles, for the appeasement of the five Powers, the roots of the judgments, has been completed—tam—and finished. These are the letters MNTsPKh, whose numerical value is PR, 280, as the prophet said: “And the days of your mourning shall be completed.” This accords with what we explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, at the beginning of part 5, in explaining the word Gehinnom. There we recalled how precious is His lovingkindness, blessed be He, even toward rebels and transgressors, to bring forth the preciousness of His lovingkindness from the vile. Thus the wise king said: “The Lord has made everything for His own purpose”; and the Sages said: “For His praise.”

Yad Yehudah - 1

“To teach that at the end of the rectification”: He too will flourish like the palm. “The letters MNTsPKh”: Which indicate Judgment. “In explaining the word Gehinnom”: Concerning the souls purified within it, they say, “Here they are”—hinnam—“behold, they have become white.”

It was mentioned that David did not recall Isaac's merit in his prayer, because he is the intensity of Judgment; see further there in its place. “From eternity is Your Name,” etc.: The explanation is that from the world's creation it is Your Name, whereas before then he was called Yinnon: the final redeemer is called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He. When we exchange the two nuns in the name Yinnon for hes through AḤ, BṬ, “so that they should not envy him,” thus, etc., the he[?] is exchanged for nun. As for the plain sense of the verse with which we are concerned, Isaac, the master of Judgment, is not mentioned, because through it the world was created. If Abraham, whom we know to be the master of Lovingkindness, and Jacob, who bore the burden of the children and great distress, do not recognize us in their mercy, how much more so the Fear of Isaac! For the Holy One, blessed be He, does not waive what is due. Although it is just that Isaac should receive an immense, mighty and abundant reward for the binding, in addition to his other many merits, counted by the righteous Judge in the scales of the God of knowledge—who does not disdain human deeds, even a seemly conversation—nevertheless, that his merit should protect us is pure lovingkindness toward us and our children. final he, the mother of every living person”: It is the attribute of Malkhut. “Have a portion,” etc.: For there is a distinction between a portion in the World to Come, a son of the World to Come, meriting the World to Come, and being destined for the life of the World to Come. From the final he comes a portion in the World to Come. “Whoever cleaves,” etc.: To that in the Name which comprises the six extremities, Tiferet, which is Torah, as is known—he is a son of the World to Come. From the first he, Binah, he merits the World to Come; from the yod of the Name, supernal Wisdom, he is destined for the life of the World to Come. “Yinnin is written,” etc.: Yods. The straight nun, etc., has the numerical value 700; thus

Yinnin has the numerical value 770, like “the Lord's anointed, David son of Jesse.”[TN280051] “And in reduced reckoning,” etc.: That is, in reduced number, David son of Jesse, etc., equals the Name YHWH, which is also 26; and Shekhinah in reduced number is 16, like the Name YHWH in reduced number, likewise 16.[TN280052] Know further that David son of Jesse has the numerical value of Shekhinah plus one, while “the Lord's anointed” has the numerical value of Shekhinah minus one. Combine them: twice Shekhinah, for David is the middle Righteous One between twice Shekhinah. Our Sages of blessed memory said: “Son of David” is, in reduced number, Ehyeh; likewise Jesse is 12 in reduced number, the value of Ehyeh in reduced number. Examine carefully.[TN280053]

“And son of Jesse, and son of David son of Jesse”: The first yod is the attribute of Joseph, the Yesod within him, in the mystery of direct light, comprising ten. from eternity is Your Name.” For before the world's creation, the final redeemer was called by His Name, as it is written, “Before the sun, Yinnon.” When we exchange the two nuns for two hes in the great alphabet of AYQ BKR, it is the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He: the reading has authority. Its four letters have been for the children of Israel a balance and scales of justice for the reward of a commandment. For from the final he, the mother of every living person, all Israel have a portion in the World to Come. Whoever cleaves to the waw of the Name, occupying himself with Torah for its own sake, and studies halakhot every day, is assured that he is a son of the World to Come, and enters without a son. From the first he we shall merit the World to Come itself as a settled possession. Whoever ascends to the yod, the source of life, is destined for the life of the World to Come: the mystery of the inward Eden, in the light of the King's countenance. Furthermore, Yinnon is written: the transmitted spelling has authority.[TN280048] Its numerical value is “David son of Jesse, the Lord's anointed,” according to the large-letter values of this alphabet. Furthermore, David son of Jesse has the numerical value of Shekhinah with the word itself; in reduced reckoning it is 26, the value of the great Name. Shekhinah with the king has the value of the Name, both in reduced reckoning.[TN280049] The letters of David contain an allusion to the Righteous One between two letters, and the letters of Jesse to the Shekhinah between two righteous ones. ones.[TN280054] Through her the deeds of the righteous below pass to the roots above. This is the mystery of the full spelling of Benjamin “with yod”; see the Zohar, Genesis, page 156. So you will find in the book P.H.[?], the Gate of the Chariot. “And the two letters”: It is known that he is the upper and lower Mother. Although one of them[?] is from the aspect of Malkhut, the final he, the fourth leg, nevertheless it receives influence from the upper Mother, the first he, in the mystery of Tiferet, [which is] their nourishment[?].[TN280055]

“As for the plain sense of the verse”: “Our father did not know us,” etc., with which we were concerned in the preceding sections. “Called by His Name”: As is known from the words of our Sages of blessed memory; and according to grammarians, “Before the sun, Yinnon is his name.” “Of AYQ BKR”: For nun is exchanged with he. The reading also has authority: we read Yinnon fully, with waw, so that the Name YHWH is within it. This is “You, Lord, are our Father; our Redeemer from eternity”—before its creation—“is Your Name.” “For the reward of a commandment”: For sometimes our Sages of blessed memory said “there is no[?] portion in

"merits the World to Come" and "destined for the life of the World to Come." These four expressions of the soul's

redemption depend upon the four letters of the Name YHWH. For from the final he, Malkhut —"these are the Lord's people, and from His land" their souls "came forth," as is known—therefore all Israel have a portion in the World to Come, through their souls, a portion of God above. "Whoever cleaves to the waw of the Name": This is Tiferet, where Torah is, to occupy himself with it for its own sake. Of him they said, of blessed memory, "Everyone who studies halakhot every day is assured that he is a son of the World to Come," for Tiferet is called Son, as is known. "And enters without a son": In the Gemara, chapter 4 of Sukkah, folio 45b, and in the chapter Ḥeleq, folio 11, [TN280056] Hezekiah said that Rabbi Jeremiah said in the name of Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai: "I have seen the sons of ascent, and they are few. If they are a thousand, I and my son," etc. They objected: Are there so few? But Rava said, etc. There is no difficulty: these enter with bar, those enter without bar. Rashi explained: With bar means with permission; those who enter without bar, without permission, are few, and it is of them that he said, "I and my son are among them." In the Arukh, he explained "who enter with bar" as entering the Garden of Eden with their sons: that is, he is righteous and his son is like him, like Rabbi and his son; they are few. Our master explains it oppositely: Those who enter with a son—if they have righteous sons, many ascend through them to the Garden of Eden, for the merit of both assists them. Those who enter B'[?] without a son [gap][TN280061]—they are tested[?], and they are few: these are the righteous in the waw of the Name.[TN280057] They are sons of the World to Come in their own right, as though one were to say that they are called sons of the height. Of them Rabbi Shimon—Rabbi Shimon bar

Yohai—said, "Sons of ascent, and they are few": precisely "sons." "If they are a thousand, I and my son": Each, in his own right, belongs to the World to Come. "From the first he": Binah, designated by the name World to Come; this one merits the World to Come. "Whoever ascends to the yod": Wisdom, which is the source of life, as it is written, "And wisdom gives life," etc.; therefore he is destined for the life of the World to Come. "The mystery of the inward Eden": Which is Wisdom, to delight in the light of the countenance of the living King. There is a further exposition of the word Yinnon: the transmitted spelling has authority, for it is written Yinnin, with two yods; and the extended nun among the letters MNTsPKh is 7, as is known. Thus Yinnin has the numerical value 770, the value of "David son of Jesse, the Lord's anointed."[TN280058] "Furthermore, David son of Jesse": Its numerical value is like Shekhinah with the word itself. "And in reduced reckoning": These words amount to 26, like the Name YHWH. Shekhinah in reduced number, with the word itself, is 17, like the Name YHWH in reduced number, which is also 17. "The letters of David contain": A lower DW[?], which is the Righteous One, the foundation of the world, between two dalets that allude to Malkhut: the first to reflected light, the second to direct light. [TN280059] "And the letters of Jesse": Shin, which alludes to Malkhut, between two yods, which allude to the Righteous One: the first to direct light and the second to reflected light. They receive from one another, to bestow upon us the flow of the blessing of good life, giving and giving again without end. May the good Lord so desire; may He not withhold good forever and for all eternities. Amen.

(d) “Great is its honor”: That of the Supreme Crown, for its Maker, Ein Sof, blessed be He, was equated with it “in all expressions,” etc. For although Ein Sof, blessed be He, is the Cause and the Crown is what is caused, nevertheless our Sages of blessed memory sometimes used the same names for both by way of borrowing. They likewise ascribe similar things, said of both through shared language. The reason is that this is the nature of inference from lesser to greater: We say of it, “It suffices for what is derived by inference to be like the subject from which it is inferred.” Therefore permission is given to borrow for Ein Sof, blessed be He, also the expressions and statements mentioned concerning the Supreme Crown.

Rema of Fano

Rabbi Ishmael says: Through thirteen rules the Torah is expounded. Many have opened this gate, precept upon precept, line upon line, a little here, a little there. I have come after them to gather like sheaves to the threshing floor, and have completed their words, for there is no exposition without something new. “The Lord will complete it for me; Lord, Your lovingkindness endures forever.”

The first rule:

Inference from the lesser to the greater —qal va-ḥomer—contains an allusion to the Supreme Crown in its relation to the Cause of causes. For the Crown is light, and it is dark in comparison with its Cause. Nevertheless, contemplating it is forbidden; how much more so what is above it! Great is its honor, for its Maker has been equated with it in all expressions borrowed for them and all statements shared by them. But in His simplicity alone, exalted above every blessing and praise, He is not derived by inference, for He is necessarily existent, apart from any relationship to another whatsoever. Of Him it is said, “There is no Elohim with Me.” Yet indeed, insofar as He possesses all and attends to them in His providence, as you say, “His mercies are over all His works,” it suffices for what is derived by inference to be like the subject from which it is inferred, as we mentioned. Similarly you say: “If her father had indeed spat in her

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) “But in His simplicity,” etc.: For our God, blessed be He, in His simplicity alone has no name or designation whatsoever. He is exalted above every blessing and praise, and we have no permission to contemplate Him at all. In this aspect He, blessed be He, can be designated only “necessarily existent,” as the philosophers called Him, stripped of all the names and designations that we ascribe to the Emanator, blessed be He. He is designated Ein Sof to indicate that what is said of Him is solely from the aspect of His Name: From the aspect of the Name, He has no end, but He has a beginning. This is the simplicity of His essence, blessed be He, which owns the Name and precedes His Name, as all this is explained in Ma’amar Yonat Elem, chapter 2, and in its introduction; see there. Now in the aspect of His simplicity, blessed be

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

He, He is not derived by inference from the Supreme Crown, for He is necessarily existent. Even upon the annulment[?] of the Supreme Crown and all emanated beings, the name “Cause” would cease to apply to Him, blessed be He, just as the names father and master cease in the absence of the son or servant. Nevertheless He would remain necessarily existent, which does not relate to another as the name “Cause” does, for even in the absence of all caused beings He, blessed be He, exists and endures forever.[TN280063]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) “Of Him it is said,” etc.: As stated in the Zohar, Genesis, page 103.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “Yet indeed,” etc.: This means that here too it is correct to say “It suffices,” etc., concerning Ein Sof, blessed be He: Namely, in how He, blessed be He, conducts Himself with His creatures. Despite His simplicity, blessed be He, it suffices in this respect for Him to be like the Supreme Crown, for all emanated beings bestow upon those below only what they receive from Ein Sof, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - ח

face, would she not be humiliated for seven days?” You might suppose to say: By inference from the lesser to the greater, before the Shekhinah, fourteen days! Scripture teaches: “Let her be shut away for seven days.” The reason is that “her father” is said of supernal Wisdom, which is being from nothing; Binah too is being from being. The Torah said that both turned to pallor in relation to Miriam. Scripture speaks of them: “Would she not be humiliated for seven days?”—corresponding to the attributes beneath them, which are activated through them. Thus there is no inference from lesser to greater here except as it appears to the eyes, according to the perceptible plain sense. So that the reasons of the revealed and hidden Torah should be equal in their ruling, established together upon our lips, the received law came and fixed “It suffices”—dayyo. Fitting are all the Rabbis' words! See Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 4. There is also lesser and greater in Malkhut, which sometimes conducts itself through Lovingkindness —“light upon the face of the waters”— and sometimes through Judgment, to be stringent in making a fence for Torah. Some say the reverse: weight, “many waters,” in Lovingkindness; when Judgment prevails, she is light in his eyes. So too, women's judgment is light; when she is crowned with Lovingkindness and Mercy, “she is more precious than pearls.” The Rabbis said: “Punishment is not imposed through inference.” The reason, according to the first approach, is that above there is no Judgment at all; the roots of Judgment there serve to subdue all the masters of entering into the principal rule of dayyo, which our Sages of blessed memory learned from Miriam: “If her father had spat,” etc.—by inference from lesser to greater, before the Shekhinah, fourteen days! But “It suffices,” etc. The matter is that Scripture speaks of supernal mysteries, and of these we do not say dayyo, because there is no inference from lesser to greater here at all. Scripture recounts it straightforwardly, saying: Her supernal Father, Wisdom, spat indeed in her face in His rebuke of her—would she not be humiliated for seven days? That is, by the seven holy sefirot, which are the seven days of construction. Therefore she too shall be shut away below for seven days. Since according to the mystery it teaches you to say dayyo, because there is no inference from lesser to greater here, they therefore said “It suffices,” etc., also according to the perceptible plain sense.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) “Which is being from nothing”: As is known, the Crown is nothing because of its great concealment, and Wisdom is being; from Wisdom Binah was emanated, which too is being. Corresponding to them, the Torah said “spat indeed,” yaroq yaraq, twice, each having the numerical value of yesh, “being.” Both turned to pallor and rebukes in relation to Miriam.

Yad Yehudah - י

(j) “Corresponding to the attributes beneath them”: These are the seven lower ones, activated through Wisdom and Binah.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) “There is also lesser and greater in Malkhut”: He further explains that this rule alludes to Malkhut, which receives from my right and my left, from Lovingkindness and Power. If it receives from Lovingkindness, designated water, then it conducts itself lightly, upon the face of the waters; if it receives judgment. Likewise, a man of lovingkindness rescues the pursued even at the cost of the pursuer's life, all the more so through one of his limbs. Needless to say, if he can rescue him without any loss of a limb, but rather turn the pursuer back to goodness! This testimony is the proof for the matter under discussion. According to the second approach, punishment is not imposed through inference because we maintain the great rule: One opens with acquittal first. It is written, “For judgment belongs to Elohim,” not “comes from Elohim.” If they opened with condemnation of the lesser case, they no longer judge either the lesser or the graver.

Judgment, it conducts itself with severity. The stringencies are to make a fence for Torah. For Torah is Tiferet, as is known, and when it inclines to the left and to judgments, then Malkhut, its mate, likewise inclines to Judgment and stringencies, to make a fence for Torah.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(l) “Weight, many waters, in Lovingkindness”: According to what is known, Binah is called “many waters,” and Lovingkindness receives from it. Likewise, when Malkhut receives from Power and the judgments prevail in actuality, it conducts itself lightly, for then Malkhut is light in the male's eyes. Of this they said, of blessed memory, “Women's judgment is light.”

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) “When she is crowned,” etc.: That is, unlike this, when Malkhut inclines to the right to receive from Lovingkindness through Tiferet's arbitration, she is precious and conducts herself with weight.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(n) “According to the first approach”: We said that the rule of lesser and greater alludes to the Supreme Crown.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(o) “For above”: In the Crown there is no Judgment at all. The roots of judgments being there is for the purpose of subduing their masters, namely the shells and external powers. This is not Judgment; rather, judgments are subdued, and it is great lovingkindness. Just as below, a man of lovingkindness rescues the pursued even at the cost of the pursuer's life, so above, the external powers pursue the souls of holy Israel, and the blessed Name rescues them at the cost of the pursuers' bodies and thrusts them into the hollow of the great abyss, etc. Like him, He shows abundant lovingkindness to the pursued and to the pursuers.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(p) “This testimony”: The widely accepted law in Israel, that one rescues the pursued at the cost of the pursuer's life, is the proof for our subject: There is no Judgment above, but the lovingkindness of God subduing the masters of judgment. For this is the reason for the law permitting the rescue of the pursued at the cost of the pursuer's life: So it is above.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(q) “According to the second approach”: We said that lesser and greater is in Malkhut. The reason that punishment is not imposed through inference is the same in the hidden and revealed meanings. Namely, we maintain that capital cases begin with acquittal, not condemnation, as stated in the Mishnah, chapter 4 of Sanhedrin. Were we to punish through inference, we would need to begin with condemnation, saying, for example: If with torn animals[?], the lesser case, whose punishment is not excision, you are stringent in such-and-such a matter, how much more so with forbidden fat, the graver case, whose punishment is excision! [TN280064] Since one does not begin with condemnation, and if one did begin thus, one no longer judges at all, therefore punishment is not imposed through inference. So too in the hidden meaning, according to the above: Lesser and greater is in Malkhut, with Lovingkindness and Judgment within it. It is known that acquittal is a designation for Lovingkindness, and one begins with acquittal first, as stated in the Zohar, the portion Shemot, page 18, in these words: “All judgments of this world, all decrees and all petitions, all stand in one palace, where seventy-two Sanhedrin examine the world's judgments. That palace is called the Palace of Merit, because when they judge a case, they first seek a person's merit,” etc. See Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 5.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(r) “It is written”: That is, this is the reason it is written “For judgment belongs to Elohim,” and not “comes from Elohim.” For Elohim is the attribute of Judgment; had it said “from Elohim,” I would have said that judgment needs to begin from the side of Judgment. Therefore it said “to Elohim,” indicating that the opening must be from the side of merit: It begins there and afterward proceeds toward the side of Judgment.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“In relation to the Cause of causes,” etc.: This is Ein Sof, blessed be He. It is called lesser and greater: It is called lesser in relation to the Cause of causes. “And it is dark,” etc.: See Tikkunim, 52: “Although the supernal Crown is clear light, polished light, it is dark in relation to its Cause, the Emanator, blessed be He.”[TN280065] “Nevertheless it is forbidden,” etc.: Although it is lesser in relation to the Cause of causes, contemplating it is forbidden, and from this aspect it is called greater. “Great is its honor”: That of the Supreme Crown, whose Maker, Ein Sof, blessed be He, was equated with it in all expressions. “Borrowed,” etc.: For there is no name at all above the supernal Crown. Our calling Him Ein Sof and also the Cause of causes is by way of borrowing, and the Crown too is called so. Likewise Ein Sof, “without end,” which implies that there is a beginning: this is, in essence, a name for 620[?], the name Crown borrowed above, in the manner explained in Yonat Elem.[TN280066] This means that He removed Himself from His creatures: through His activities and His resemblance below, He has names. But as regards essence, “from the aspect of His simplicity” is a designation[?]. That is, with the Crown this is not so as regards being derived by inference to resemble Him in essence; it is said, “There is no Elohim with Me.”[TN280067] Only with respect to “His mercies are over all His works,” with this intention, it suffices for what is derived by inference to be like Him as the subject of inference: Crown resembles Ein Sof.[TN280068] “For her father is said of Wisdom,” etc.: This is also in Sefer HaPeliʾah. It is known that Miriam is the counterpart of the Shekhinah. “Her father spat,” for the Crown has 620 lights, twice 310, yesh. These divide: 310 to Wisdom and 310 to Binah, and those in Mother receive influence through Father. Therefore “spat indeed,” twice yesh, in her face: Through the evil speech Miriam uttered below, she caused above those twice 310 lights to turn to Judgment, to spitting; yaraq has the numerical value 310. This is “Her father spat”: They had the strict rule of Judgment. Although green is the color of Mercy, there are nevertheless two kinds of green. “Would she not be humiliated for seven days?”: These are the seven days of construction, nourished and influenced by Father and Mother. This is “The Rock who begot you, you weaken,” ṣur yeladekha teshi: the word teshi gives the initials of “be humiliated for seven days,” tikkalem shivʿat yamim.[TN280069] For through his sin, as it were, one weakens the power of those above. “Being from nothing,” etc.: The Crown is called nothing, Wisdom is being from nothing, and Binah is being from being, as above. “There is no inference from lesser to greater here,” etc.: In Miriam's case, to say “By inference from lesser to greater, before the Shekhinah, fourteen”; rather, the strict rule of Judgment gives it. It says “Her father spat,” referring to the upper attributes, as above: The strict rule of Judgment is that she be humiliated for seven, comprising the seven days of construction. The inference from lesser to greater is only according to appearances. In order that the reasons of Torah should be equal in the revealed and hidden meanings—for in the hidden there is no such inference, and in the revealed there is—it says, “It suffices for what is derived by inference to be like the subject from which it is inferred.” Thus the inference is annulled at its root. “There is also lesser and greater in Malkhut,” etc.: See this in the “new Tikkunim,” folio 9b, in these words: “Stringency from the left, for there is the side of Samael, who is appointed over negative commandments; apart[?]—leniency from the left.”[TN280070] Know that according to the first explanation, our Sages of blessed memory accordingly said: The leniency of the House of Hillel and the stringency of the House of Shammai, as above; for the House of Shammai is Judgment and the House of Hillel Lovingkindness. “Some say the reverse,” etc.: “Lesser and greater”: “waters, many, lovingkindness”—ḤMR, numerically 248, the value of Abraham, “Lovingkindness to Abraham”; also ḤMR, the initials of “weight, waters, many.”[TN280071] Therefore they sometimes enumerated, in tractate Eduyot, the leniencies of the House of Shammai and the stringencies of the House of Hillel, indicating the ultimate unity. “She is more precious,” etc.: Meaning weighty, not light. “Above,” etc.: In the Crown there is no Judgment at all. “This testimony,” etc.: Just as with the pursuer, if one turns him back to goodness without any loss, he will be called holy, so above there is no Judgment at all, but judgments are subdued, “as a man chastens his son,” as explained in the Zohar, Pequdei, page 252. The referent is that Israel themselves are the betrothed maiden, and the shells pursue us; supernal Lovingkindness rescues us from them by subduing the shells and thrusting them into the hollow of the great abyss. This proves that the roots of Judgment are pure lovingkindness. “Belongs to Elohim”: Judgment is adjudicated—He inclines it wherever He desires—but it does not come from Elohim, who performs no judgment. Even though at times He performs judgment, it is “as a man chastens his son.” “Man”: this is Gabriel—lovingkindness: where it strikes, there it heals. But the force of judgments is through messengers below, and [He] comforts[?] amid concealment of the face, as it were.[TN280072] Therefore they rightly said, “Punishment is not imposed through inference,” etc. “If they opened with condemnation,” etc.: See below under the second rule.

Yad Yehudah - א

(a) “Gezerah shavah,” etc.: It is known that Tiferet effects arbitration and equalization not only between Lovingkindness and Power, and between Neṣaḥ and Hod, the branches of Lovingkindness and Judgment, but also between Wisdom and Binah, their roots. Since the root of Lovingkindness is contained in Wisdom, and the root of Judgment is contained and aroused in Binah, that arousal requires arbitration to cut off and subdue the shells. For if you do not extinguish the fire at its source, extinguishing it

Rema of Fano

The second rule:

An analogy of equal expressions—gezerah shavah—is the activity of Tiferet, which cuts off and castrates the shells through a higher power. For it arbitrates above between Wisdom and Binah, equalizing their attributes, to place what is said of each within the other. This Man, who knows the knowledge of the Most High, does not derive a gezerah shavah “from himself”: that is, even when he has a help corresponding to him, from a woman who fears the Lord, bone of his bones—for the arbitration between Lovingkindness and Judgment, everywhere, is not completed without outside its source will not help, as all this is explained in Pardes, the Gate of the Arbiters, chapter 6. The rule gezerah shavah alludes to this: Gezerah means that it cuts off and severs the shells into pieces; this activity belongs to shavah, “equal”—Tiferet, which is equal and equalizes the higher roots, as mentioned. This is gezerah shavah.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(b) “This Man does not,” etc.: Our Sages of blessed memory also alluded to this mystery when they said, “A man does not derive a gezerah shavah from himself unless he received it from his master." The intention is Tiferet, called Man, as is known, and as Scripture says, "Like the beauty of a man," etc. It is known that Malkhut is his mate, and "this one shall be called woman, for from man she was taken"; she is bone of his bones, as explained in the Zohar, Genesis, page 138. The meaning is that Tiferet does not perform this activity, deriving a gezerah shavah to remove her, as explained in its place—unless he received it from his master, the Supreme Crown, and his master from his master, the Cause of causes. In this, "all His work is in faith"—his mate, whom we mentioned, a law given to Moses at Sinai. Through this power punishment is imposed through a gezerah shavah. It is not called beginning with condemnation, for the merit with which we opened in one place we open with again in equal cases. But with inference from lesser to greater it is otherwise, for what serves to acquit the lesser case will not rescue the graver.

Yad Yehudah - ב - continued

the shells under the name of his equalization and arbitration, even when Malkhut is with him in the mystery of coupling, unless he received it from above, from the Supreme Crown, for there is no Judgment there at all, as above. This is "A man"—Tiferet—"does not derive a gezerah shavah from himself"—even from Malkhut, which is bone of himself—"unless he received it from his master," the Supreme Crown. It too received it from its master, Ein Sof,

the Cause, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(c) In this rule of gezerah shavah, "all His work is in faith": Malkhut, his mate, called Faith, as explained in the Zohar, Pequdei, page [gap]. There is a law given to Moses at Sinai, as is known: Moses, Tiferet, and Malkhut are two nearly equal attributes.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(d) "Through this power": Gezerah shavah cuts the shells; punishment is imposed through it, for there is no concern about Judgment gaining strength.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) "It is not called beginning with condemnation": As above with inference from lesser to greater. Here one can properly begin with acquittal. For example, if we wish to learn the prohibition of a menstruating woman from the prohibition of forbidden fat, since their prohibitions are equal and carry excision, we can begin with acquittal and say: Just as with forbidden fat you were lenient in this respect, so you shall be lenient with a menstruating woman. Since there is no partial analogy, we automatically learn to be stringent with it according to the stringencies [gap]. Unlike inference from lesser to greater: One cannot begin with acquittal except to exempt by inference, saying: If you were lenient with the graver, how much more fitting to be lenient with the lesser! Afterward, too, you cannot say: If there is stringency with the graver, how much more so with the lesser! We cannot punish through inference unless we begin with judgment first and say: If there is stringency with the lesser, how much more should you be stringent with the graver! For one cannot begin with acquittal, saying: If you were lenient with the lesser, how much more so with the graver! Since one does not begin with condemnation, punishment is not imposed through inference, as above.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Gezerah shavah": This too is in the new Tikkunim, folio 9b; see there. "And castrates the shells": This is the meaning of gezerah; its arbitration is the meaning of shavah. "Who knows the knowledge of the Most High": For Tiferet is in the mystery of Daʿat when it arbitrates. "From himself," etc.: The help corresponding to him is Malkhut, "bone of my bones"; this is "from himself." "For the arbitration," etc.: In the known manner, water's nature is cold and moist: These are the roots of lovingkindnesses in Father. Fire's nature is hot and dry: These are the roots of powers in Mother—"hot and dry, fire[?]."[TN280073] In Tiferet, resembling air, which arbitrates, it is hot and moist, a blending of the two extremes: Moisture from Lovingkindness and "hot, hot[?]" from Power.[TN280074] But the other two extremes, cold and dry, have not yet been blended. Now earth, alluding to Malkhut, Tiferet's female, bone of himself, is in the mystery of cold and dry, blending the other two extremes. Thus through the two of them together the unity is completed; understand this. See the Zohar, page 42b: The arbiter, hot and moist, does not arbitrate until earth is with it—Malkhut, cold and dry. Thus it does not arbitrate between Lovingkindness and Power without Malkhut. Likewise, the root of lovingkindnesses in Wisdom and the root of powers in Binah are not without Malkhut, and through his receiving from his master, the Supreme Crown. This is "A man does not derive a gezerah shavah from himself unless he received it from his master." "His mate, a law given to Moses at Sinai": This is Malkhut, as explained in the Tikkunim, that Malkhut is called a law given to Moses at Sinai. See Pardes, the Gate of Essence and Conduct, chapter 11. "Through this power punishment is imposed," etc.: Granted, through her power above, from the aspect of lesser and greater, in which she receives influence from Lovingkindness and Power themselves, punishment is not imposed, lest the force of Judgment prevail. This differs from the aspect of gezerah shavah, by which Tiferet is called because it castrates the shells. Thus the Judgment now bestowed upon her is necessarily for subduing the shells. Therefore through this power of hers punishment is imposed by inference, for it does not serve condemnation. "We opened with it again in equal cases[?]," etc.: For in gezerah shavah we begin with acquittal, to equate the two, and automatically learn also condemnation, because there is no partial gezerah shavah: Both are learned together immediately. One cannot say that we begin with acquittal and not with condemnation. This differs from inference from lesser to greater, where one must derive the inference and begin with acquittal, for example: If the public domain, the graver[?], has a ground for acquittal, how much more so the private domain, the lesser! Thus one can learn leniency. But if afterward we come to derive an inference from lesser to greater for stringency—if the private domain, the lesser, has liability, how much more so the public domain, the graver!—this is a different inference. Thus they began with condemnation; one does not begin with condemnation, for one cannot say, as in gezerah shavah, that both come together. Therefore one cannot punish through inference. From this you will understand what the author wrote at the end of the first rule: "If they opened with condemnation of the lesser," etc., "they no longer judge," etc., for one does not begin with condemnation. Examine carefully.

(f) “Now the shortest years”: Lunar years are 353 days, as is known from the calendrical reckoning we possess. They are a deficient year, whose months are seven deficient and five full, and it has 353 days; a full year, whose months are seven full and five deficient, has 355 days; and a regular year, whose months are six full and six deficient, has 354 days.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) Thus 349 days of that year were chaos before the twenty-fifth of Elul. The twenty-fifth itself is counted with what precedes it, because its night is not with it, having belonged to chaos.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) “Forty-nine days,” etc.: In the Zohar, Genesis, page

Maʾamar Heqor Din, chapter 3. Day one of the work of creation was the twenty-fifth of Elul, as is known; its night belonged to the chaos, as explained in Scripture, and the sixth day was New Year's Day. Now the shortest year is 353 days; its mnemonic is “the mother of the children, joyful”—semeḥah. Thus 349 days passed in chaos, forty-nine days for each of the primordial kings who died, at the beginning of Sifra di-Ṣeniʿuta. These 349 days are the sabbatical period of chaos that preceded the world. Or say that the year is 354 days, for the first day of the work of creation is rejected on either side: Go here, and it is excluded, for there are 349 days apart from it; go there, and it is excluded, for its night does not accompany it in its work. This bears some resemblance to the fiftieth year of the Jubilee, which counts toward both sides. Thus there were four complete days with their nights, for the life of the eighth king, who left the category of chaos but did not enter the category of rectification; rather, in his days the earth was rendered void. He prolonged his reign throughout all these days and received his wages like an idle laborer, “before a king reigned over the children of Israel”—this is the first Adam, who is David and who is Messiah. The Holy One, blessed be He, saw that the world would not endure through the attribute of Judgment; He preceded it with and joined to it the attribute of Mercy, for “with the Lord is lovingkindness, and with Him abundant redemption.” Therefore the seasonal cycle is reckoned from Nisan preceding Tishri, just as the moon is reckoned from BHRD, the conjunction of chaos—day 72, in the name of Sifra di-Ṣeniʿuta, in these words: “Before the balance existed, they did not regard one another face to face; the primordial kings died, their adornment was not found, and the earth was rendered void,” etc. These matters refer to the eight kings mentioned at the end of Vayishlaḥ: “These are the kings who reigned in the land of Edom before a king reigned over the children of Israel.” Of them it says, “He died,” and “He reigned.” This alludes to the breaking of the vessels and the return of their light in the world of chaos, as explained in the Ari's received teaching, of blessed memory. Our master also explained them in Maʾamar Yonat Elem, chapters 19 and 20; see there. Here our master says that these 349 days of chaos correspond to those primordial kings: Namely, for seven of them, forty-nine days accrue to each; seven times forty-nine is 343. Six days of chaos remain for the eighth king, through the twenty-fifth of Elul inclusive, and another four complete days until New Year's Day, as mentioned shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) “These 349 days,” etc.: The expression “sabbatical period of chaos” found in the kabbalists' books refers to these 349 days: ShMṬ, 349, is the language of shemittah.

Yad Yehudah - י

(j) “Or say,” etc.: It is also possible to reckon a year of 354 days, a regular year. On this reckoning only 349 days are subtracted, because the first day of creation, the twenty-fifth of Elul, does not enter the count at all, either before or after. Go here, before it, and it is excluded because creation occurred on it; go there, after it, and it is excluded because its night did not accompany it, and it is not counted as a complete day. Since it is not counted before, 349 days remain without it. Our master did not need to say “Go after it, and it is excluded,” except that he wished to establish both these approaches in one manner: Not to count the twenty-fifth in the world of creation, since its night is not with it. One cannot establish this for a full year, for then there would in any case be 350 days before the twenty-fifth, whereas we require only 349 days.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) “Thus there were four complete days”: From the first day of creation until New Year's Day. The first day is not included, according to the two approaches mentioned. These four days correspond to the eighth king, the final Hadar, who left the category of chaos but did not enter that of rectification, for all the work of creation was not yet completed until man two, five hours, 204 parts. This is the meaning of “In Nisan the world was created”: Creation for ordering times. All the Sages' words endure, although some commentators did not say so. Understand: The conjunction of chaos is the privation preceding coming-to-be under that governance of Judgment; the seasonal cycle's precedence from Nisan is the privation preceding the governance of Lovingkindness. The proximity of privation completes coming-to-be, as is known in natural philosophy, and what is perceived supplies a demonstration as evidence for what is understood. Yet the permutation of bereshit as “the first of Tishri” accords with both masters, like what we learned: “Postdated debt documents are valid.” For the allusion concerns the creation of man, when the purpose of the making of heaven and earth was completed, and the time of obligation arrived for all creatures to keep their charge and not depart from it. Although the tannaim expound the verses literally in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah, from which it follows that Rabbi Joshua means “created” precisely, there are two answers. First, there are two tannaim presenting his view, as stated there. One teaches simply, “In Nisan the world was created”—as we have said; the other expounds the verses. Even if you say there is one tanna and Rabbi Joshua himself expounds the verses, we too shall say he did so to make his statement intelligible. For this reason one does not refute an exposition, as we mentioned in Maʾamar Em Kol Hai. Rav Yeiva the Elder explained something greater than this in the Zohar, Mishpatim: There is a verse in was created.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(l) “Rather, in his days the earth was rendered void”: As mentioned in Sifra di-Ṣeniʿuta. On this account he received his wages like an idle laborer. This is what is written, “These are the kings,” etc., “before a king reigned over the children of Israel”: The first Adam, when creation was completed and rectification began.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) “The Holy One, blessed be He, saw,” etc.: This completes the statement above: At first it arose in thought to create the world through the attribute of Judgment; the time of creation, Tishri, indicates this. When He saw that the world would not endure through it, He preceded it with and joined to it the attribute of Mercy, and they were created before Tishri.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(n) “Therefore the seasonal cycle is reckoned,” etc.: In the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah, folio 11, Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Joshua disagree: According to Rabbi Eliezer, the world was created in Tishri; according to Rabbi Joshua, it was created in Nisan. The Gemara further says, folio 12: “Our Rabbis taught: The Sages of Israel reckon the Flood according to Rabbi Eliezer and the seasonal cycle according to Rabbi Joshua,” etc. Rashi explained: The Sages of Israel reckon Noah's years, the world's creation and the years of the generations according to Rabbi Eliezer, counting from Tishri, the beginning of the years—not because they hold that the world was created in Tishri, but because Tishri is the New Year for years; the world was created in Nisan, as it teaches, “And the seasonal cycle according to Rabbi Joshua.” When they count the solar and lunar cycles, they count from Nisan, saying that from Nisan they were created, etc. Tosafot explained likewise. But our master explains according to the view that in truth the world was created in Tishri. Nevertheless, the seasonal cycle is reckoned from Nisan, over chaos, just as the moon is reckoned from the conjunction of chaos. This is also:

Yad Yehudah - טו

(o) “The meaning”: Of the one who says, “In Nisan the world was created.” He does not hold that creation actually occurred in Nisan, but means that from Nisan one begins counting the order of times as though creation had occurred then. The reason is that in it the Holy One, blessed be He, preceded Tishri by creating the world also through the attribute of Mercy, in the year of chaos and privation. Since that privation extended until Nisan preceding creation, the Torah that makes its statement intelligible in order to conceal its mystery, as it is written, “You know the soul of the stranger.” The word returns to its sheath when it says, “For you were strangers in the land of Egypt”; see there. In Chronicles too it is written of Amaziah that he did not put to death the children of those who struck Joash king of Judah, his father, as it is written, “Fathers shall not be put to death on account of children.” Although the Torah's verse is not interpreted this way, but comes to disqualify testimony, he thus adopted it and brought proof from it to make his statement intelligible. There is a fine subsidiary exposition of the word Tishri, whose numerical value is twice “Bestow”—tenah—“Your majesty upon the heavens.” Tenah itself is the value of three simple full spellings of the Name Ehyeh, and also of three composite ones; it repeats a third time in three combinations, with exact equality. Of the first it says, “Which Elohim created,” and of the last, “to make.” Now Nisan has the numerical value 820 according to the large values of the final letters MNTsPKh. This is the number of years the Shekhinah dwelt in the Tabernacle, Shiloh and the permanent House in the former days, when they counted from the exodus from Egypt. In the Second Temple, however, the glory of the Shekhinah was not there, and they counted by the kings of the lands. The days of Gilgal, Nob and Gibeon likewise are not included: At Gilgal the Ark was not always beside the altar; throughout the seven years of conquest it continually went forth and returned to fight the kings of Canaan. Once as will follow shortly, it accounts as though creation occurred in it “from Tishri[?]”; therefore one begins from Nisan. [TN280076]

Yad Yehudah - טז

(p) “All the Sages' words”: For there is no disagreement here; one master said one thing and the other another, and they do not disagree. Rabbi Eliezer concerns the world's creation in actuality, and Rabbi Joshua concerns its creation in thought.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(q) “Did not say so”: Except in explaining Rabbi Eliezer's view, and not in explaining “the Flood according to Rabbi Eliezer,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(r) “Understand,” etc.: Do not object to what we said —that Rabbi Eliezer holds that one begins from Nisan because the Holy One, blessed be He, preceded Tishri in creating the world—that creation preceded Tishri by only five days, so why begin from Nisan on this account? For you must understand that chaos has two aspects: One is privation preceding the governance of Judgment; the second is privation preceding the governance of Lovingkindness. The BHRD conjunction of chaos was the privation preceding coming-to-be under the governance of Judgment, and the Nisan seasonal cycle was within the privation preceding Lovingkindness. Therefore we rightly say: Since the Holy One, blessed be He, preceded it by creating the world also through Mercy, one begins the seasonal cycle from Nisan in the aspect of the privation of Lovingkindness and Mercy, just as one counts the moon from BHRD in the aspect of the privation of Judgment.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(s) “The proximity of privation completes coming-to-be”: Do not object that, according to this, since the Lord desired to create the world also through Lovingkindness and Mercy, He should have created it in Nisan. On the contrary, this is the very reason it was created in Tishri: What precedes Judgment, for example, means that privation in the aspect of Judgment is nearer to coming-to-be and completes coming-to-be. The closer privation draws to coming-to-be, the faster coming-to-be emerges into its light, as is known from natural philosophy: The first principles of natural things are three—matter, form and privation preceding coming-to-be. We visibly see that a grain of wheat sown in the ground will not sprout until it decays and its form is entirely destroyed. That decay and the annulment of the grain's form are

excluded, it remained excluded. After the Tabernacle at Shiloh was destroyed, the Ark stayed twenty years at Kiriath-jearim, three months in Obed-edom's house, and forty-three years in Zion. There David established “Give thanks to the Lord, call upon His Name,” in Chronicles, to be said before the Ark. Its first half, which occurs in Psalms, they would say in the morning; its latter half, mostly gathered from the eleven psalms attributed to Moses, they would say at the afternoon prayer. These are sixty-three years: For thirteen of them the Tent of Meeting and the altars were at Nob, at the high place, and for fifty at Gibeon. Therefore the high places were permitted until the Ark entered its rest in the permanent House, beside the Lord's altar, and the high places were forbidden forever. Now when we combine thirty-nine years for the Tabernacle in the wilderness, 369 for Shiloh and 410 for the House Solomon built, two years are lacking from the number we stated. These are the two years lacking from our count of “and you grow old in the land,” on account of “the Lord hastened”—all for our good, according to the Sages' words. Know that the fifty years the Tent of Meeting was at Gibeon include the seven years of building the House. For when you subtract the thirty-nine years of the wilderness from 818, 779 remain; add seventy-seven years for Gilgal, Nob and Gibeon, and these are 856. In the year 850 from entering the land the House was destroyed, and one day in a year counts as a year. Thus the seven years of building were counted both for Gibeon and for the permanent House. Service in privation and the beginning of the new coming-to-be. The more decay and annulment of the first form increase, the closer privation and the new coming-to-be draw. This is what we said: From perceived natural things we learn and take an analogy for intelligible things.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(t) “Yet”: Although it seems possible to object to both their views from the word bereshit, whose letters are “the first of Tishri,” alluding to the world's creation on the first of Tishri, as stated in the Tikkunim—whereas according to them it was created either in Nisan or on the twenty-fifth of Elul, and according to our explanation even Rabbi Joshua says it was created on the twenty-fifth of Elul—there is nevertheless no difficulty. For the allusion in bereshit does not concern the creation of the world, only the creation of man, the purpose of all creation, for whose sake all creatures were created. His creation was on the sixth day, the first of Tishri. Then the creatures' time of obligation arrived: To keep their charge according to the nature implanted in them from the beginning of creation. It is like postdated debt documents, which are valid; this is the allusion in bereshit.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(u) “Although the tannaim”: Namely Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Joshua, each bringing proof from a verse, as stated there: “It was taught: Rabbi Eliezer says, Whence that the world was created in Tishri? For it says, ‘Elohim said, Let the earth sprout vegetation, seed-bearing plants, fruit trees.’ In which month does the earth bring forth vegetation and the tree is full of fruit? Say: This is Tishri. Rabbi Joshua says, Whence that the world was created in Nisan? For it says, ‘The earth brought forth vegetation, seed-bearing plants and trees producing fruit.’ In which month is the earth full of vegetation and the tree brings forth fruit? Say: This is Nisan.” Thus Rabbi Joshua means actual creation, unlike what we said.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(v) “There are two tannaim presenting his view”: Rabbi Joshua's. That is, there are two baraitot there concerning the disagreement of Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Joshua. One teaches simply: “Rabbi Eliezer says, In Tishri the world was created; Rabbi Joshua says, In Nisan the world was created,” bringing no proof. The other teaches the proofs from verses. Our explanation of Rabbi Joshua's words follows the baraita that teaches simply, without proof.

the First Temple lasted only 403 years: This is what the prophet said, “The Lord trod the winepress”—gat, 403. When we combine thirty-nine years of the wilderness, fourteen of Gilgal, 369 at Shiloh, thirteen of Nob, 453 for Gibeon and the permanent House, and 420 for the Second Temple, there are 1,308 years for all Jacob's dwellings. They should already have been 1,310; the allusion is “Jacob was a man”—ish—“whole, dwelling in tents.” But two years were lacking, for our good, as above. Likewise, “the Tabernacle, the Tabernacle of the Testimony” has the numerical value 1,310. It says “These are the accountings”—pequdei—from the language of counting: The numbered years arrive, but years are lacking, two being the minimum plural, from the language of “David's place will be missed,” yippaqed. Therefore a waw is missing in the word “the Testimony,” and 1,308 are completed with the three words and the inclusive unit. Where is the resting place of “the Tabernacle, the Tabernacle of the Testimony”? In the wilderness, Gilgal, Shiloh, Nob, Gibeon, Zion, the City of David: These have the numerical value of the number of years we stated, provided that David is spelled fully, with yod. Throughout that time we merited a sanctuary only through accepting the yoke of the kingdom of heaven twice daily. For the verse “Hear, Israel” has the numerical value 1,118. Furthermore, the two verses together, “Hear” and “Blessed,” in Enoch's reduced reckoning—for “Blessed be the Name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever” is his praise, as we mentioned in Maʾamar Em Kol Hai, part 3, section

Yad Yehudah - כג

(w) “We too shall say”: Nevertheless, Rabbi Joshua teaches “created,” not “actually created”; his bringing a proof is merely to make his statement intelligible.

Yad Yehudah - כד

(x) In the Zohar, Mishpatim, page 176, in these words: “All the hidden matters that the Holy One, blessed be He, does, He places within the holy Torah, and everything is found there. Torah reveals that hidden matter, and immediately it is clothed in another garment, concealed there and not revealed. The wise, whose eyes are full[?], although that matter is concealed within a garment, see it there through its garment. [TN280077] When that matter is revealed, before it enters its garment, they see it with open eyes. Though it is immediately concealed, it does not vanish from their eyes. In many places the Holy One, blessed be He, warned concerning the convert, so that the holy seed should be careful concerning him. Afterward a hidden matter comes out of its sheath; once revealed, it immediately returns to its sheath and is clothed there. After warning concerning the convert in all those places, the matter came out of its sheath and was revealed: ‘You know the soul of the stranger.’ Immediately it entered its not truly give a reason for "You know the soul of the stranger," and has no connection to it at all. Rather, "You know the soul of the stranger" is not literal, but alludes to the mystery of souls. Afterward Scripture concealed the mystery and concluded "For you were strangers," to make the beginning of the verse intelligible as though the whole were literal.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(y) "To disqualify testimony": That they should not be put to death through the testimony of children.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(z) "There is also a fine subsidiary exposition," etc.: Our master returns to the time of the world's creation mentioned above.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(aa) "The numerical value of twice tenah": An allusion to the two times of creation. Tenah is the value of three full spellings. The spelling with alefs, Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Alef / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Alef, amounts to 143. The spelling with hes, Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–He / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–He, amounts to 151. The spelling with yods, Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Yod / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Yod, amounts to 161. The total is 455.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(ab) "And of three composite ones": There are three further composite full spellings: Composite alef-he, composite alef-yod, and composite he-yod. Composite alef-he is when, of the Name's two hes, the first is spelled with alef and the second with he, thus: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Alef / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–He, amounting to 147. Composite alef-yod is when the first he is spelled with alef and the second with yod, thus: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Alef / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Yod, amounting to 152. Composite he-yod is when the first is with he and the second with yod, thus: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–He / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Yod, amounting to 156. The total is 455.

Yad Yehudah - כט

(ac) "It repeats": Another 455 in three composites: A composite when the first he is with he and the second with alef; a yod-alef composite, the first with yod and the second with alef; and a yod-he composite, the first with yod and the second with he.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(ad) "Of the first": Of the three simple full spellings, the sign is "Which Elohim created," for the word asher, "which," alludes to the Name Ehyeh, as explained in Ma'amar Em Kol Hai, part 3, section 1, and under letter (a): The yod of the Name Elohim alludes to the three full spellings mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(ae) "And of the last": Of the composites it says "to make," because the composites are made from the simple ones.

Yad Yehudah - לב

(af) "Now," etc.: Since according to everyone the world was created in thought in that Nisan, the word Nisan also fittingly alludes to the Shekhinah's dwelling in Israel, which is the cause of the world's creation. This is known from the seven things that preceded the world, of which the Sages of blessed memory spoke; one is the Temple. For the word Nisan amounts to 820 according to the numerical values of the letters MNTsPKh, whose place is after taw. The extended nun, the third, amounts to 700; thus Nisan's value is 820. For this many years the Shekhinah dwelt in Israel: In the Tabernacle, thirty-nine years, and in Shiloh, 369 years, as stated at the end of Zevaḥim: "The days of the Tent of Meeting in the wilderness: Forty years less one. At Gilgal: Fourteen, seven of conquest and seven of division. At Gibeon: Fifty-seven. There remained 370 less one." Rashi explained: There remained for Shiloh, out of those years from the exodus from Egypt to the building of the House, 369 years, etc.; see there. The permanent House, in its first building, stood 410 years, as is known: Thus 818. Two years were lacking from the count of 820 because of [gap], as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - לג

(ag) “When they counted”: Therefore they fittingly counted in the First Temple from the exodus from Egypt, and from Nisan, since the name Nisan indicates this.

Yad Yehudah - לד

(ah) “In the Second Temple, however,” etc.: The reason we say that the Shekhinah dwelt for 820 years, taking no account here either of the Second Temple or the days of Gilgal, Nob and Gibeon, is that the glory of the Shekhinah was not in the Second Temple. The Ark had already been hidden in Josiah's days, and five things were lacking, as stated in the Gemara, the chapter Hoṣi’u Lo. Likewise, in the days of Nob and Gibeon the Ark was not in the Tent of Meeting; therefore:

Yad Yehudah - לה

(ai) They counted from Tishri, the New Year for kings, and no longer counted the years from Nisan, for the number of the word Nisan gives no indication at all concerning the Second Temple.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(aj) “After it was destroyed,” etc.: Know that in the days of Nob and Gibeon the Ark was not there, for during those days the Ark stayed at Kiriath-jearim. As also stated at the end of Zevaḥim: “At Nob and Gibeon, fifty-seven,” for it is written, “When he mentioned the Ark of Elohim,” etc. When Eli died, Shiloh was destroyed and they came to Nob; when Samuel died, Nob was destroyed and they came to Gibeon. It is written, “From the day the Ark stayed in Kiriath-jearim, the days increased and became twenty years.” These are the twenty years: Ten of Samuel alone, one of Samuel and Saul, two of Saul alone, and seven that David reigned in Hebron, as it is said: “The days that David reigned: In Hebron he reigned seven years, and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty-three years.” And four of Solomon, for it is written, “He began building in the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.” There remained for Shiloh 370 less one. Rashi explained: David reigned seven years in Hebron over Judah; when all Israel made him king over them, he brought the Ark from Kiriath-jearim to the City of David. Thus twenty, etc. The four years Solomon reigned until building the Temple: In that year 480 years from the exodus from Egypt were completed. There remained for

Yad Yehudah - לו - continued

Shiloh 369 years. Thus far. From this it is clear that the Tabernacle was at Nob thirteen years: Ten of Samuel, one of Saul and Samuel, and two of Saul alone; at Gibeon, forty-four years: David's seven in Hebron, thirty-three in Jerusalem, and Solomon's four. Until David reigned in Jerusalem, the Ark was at Kiriath-jearim. Our master explains incidentally that they said “At Nob and Gibeon, fifty-seven years” only to demonstrate that 369 years remained from the exodus from Egypt for the Tabernacle at Shiloh. They counted fifty-seven years for Nob and Gibeon up to and including the first year of the House's construction, when 480 years from the exodus from Egypt were completed. It was the fourth year of Solomon's reign, as explained in Scripture, 1 Kings 6. When you subtract the forty years in the wilderness, the fourteen years of conquest and division, and the fifty-seven years for Nob and Gibeon, 369 years remain for the Tabernacle at Shiloh. In truth, however, the Tent of Meeting at Nob and Gibeon lasted sixty-three years: Thirteen at Nob and fifty at Gibeon, until the completion of the seven years of building the House. Then Solomon brought up the Ark from the City of David, as explained in Scripture there. Before that the Ark had been twenty years at Kiriath-jearim, until David reigned in Jerusalem, and forty-three years in Zion, the City of David: The thirty-three years he reigned in Jerusalem, Solomon's four years, the fourth being the first year of building the House, and another six years to complete the building.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(ak) “There David established”: As explained in Scripture in Chronicles there.

Yad Yehudah - לח

(al) “Therefore,” etc.: At the end of Zevaḥim: “They came to Nob and Gibeon; the high places were permitted. They came to Jerusalem; the high places were forbidden.” This is derived from verses. Our master provides a good reason why the high places were permitted at Nob and Gibeon: Throughout that time the Ark was not beside the altar in the Tabernacle, so there was no distinction between the altar and an individual's high place.

Yad Yehudah - לט

(am) “Until the Ark entered”: After the completion of the House's construction.

Yad Yehudah - מ

(an) “Now when we combine,” etc.: This completes the statement concerning the 820 years in which the Shekhinah dwelt.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(ao) “According to the Sages' words”: At the end of Gittin.

Yad Yehudah - מב

(ap) “Know,” etc.: Our master now explains [gap] in his reckoning of fifty years for Gibeon.

Yad Yehudah - מג

(aq) “For,” etc.: Our master does not intend to prove that Gibeon's fifty years were completed only after the conclusion of the seven years of building the House. For there is no greater proof than what we counted in the Gemara: Years for Nob and Gibeon through the first year of building the House inclusive, namely thirteen for Nob and forty-four for Gibeon. It follows automatically that, if we say fifty for Gibeon, this means until the building's completion. Rather, our master's intention is that you should not think: Since the seven years of building are absorbed within Gibeon's fifty, then the 410 years we count for the Shekhinah's dwelling in the permanent House must exclude the seven years of building; otherwise, how could they be counted with Gibeon's days? To this our master says that it is not so. You must necessarily say that the construction years are also absorbed within the 410 years that are counted toward the fifty of Gibeon. For in year 850 from the beginning of Israel's entry into the land the House was destroyed, as our Sages of blessed memory said concerning “and you grow old,” whose numerical value is 852. Precisely, it says “He hastened the evil,” preceding it by two years. If you reckon the days of the Tabernacle at Shiloh, 369 years, and the House's days, 410 years, they are 779. With fourteen years of conquest and division, the days of Gilgal, thirteen years for Nob and fifty for Gibeon, they are 856. Rather, certainly the seven years of building are counted for Gibeon, for throughout those years the Tent of Meeting and altar were only at Gibeon, and they offered sacrifices in the permanent House only after the building was completed, as explained in Scripture. Nevertheless they are counted within the 410 years, and toward the dwelling of the Shekhinah, which dwelt in the work of their hands as soon as construction began. See Imrei Binah by the sage Rabbi Azariah, chapter 35.

Yad Yehudah - מד

(ar) “Seventy-seven years”: Fourteen for Gilgal, thirteen for Nob and fifty for Gibeon.

Yad Yehudah - מה

(as) “One day in a year,” etc.: Do not say: Does it work to count the seven construction years within Gibeon's fifty? For we have only six extra years absorbed; if we place seven construction years within Gibeon's fifty and subtract seven from 856, only 849 remain. We would thus have left out one year from the count of 850. There is no deficiency here, for one day in a year counts as a year; all the more so here, where they remained after year 850 for about three months, until the ninth of Av, when the House was destroyed.

Yad Yehudah - מו

(at) “Only 403 years”: When you subtract the seven years of building from 410, 403 remain.

Yad Yehudah - מז

(au) “When we combine,” etc.: Our master further explains incidentally what pertains to this exposition.

Yad Yehudah - מח

(av) “Jacob was a man,” ish: An allusion to 1,310. “Dwelling in tents”: The tent of the First Temple and the tent of the Second Temple.

Yad Yehudah - מט

(aw) “Likewise, the Tabernacle,” etc.: Its numerical value is 1,310 less two, including the three words and the inclusive unit. Corresponding to them, “the Testimony” lacks a waw; concerning the two that are lacking it says, “These are the accountings,” an expression of counting and also of absence. The allusion is: These are the number of years of Jacob's dwellings, for two years are lacking.

Yad Yehudah - נ

(ax) “Where is the place,” etc.: There is a further allusion in the names of the places in which the Shekhinah dwelt, whose numerical value is 1,308, and another allusion to this in the two verses of accepting the kingdom of heaven, through which we merited:

Yad Yehudah - נא

(ay) Throughout that time, a sanctuary of God. These are “Hear” and “Blessed,” whose numerical value is 1,308: The verse “Hear” in its ordinary reckoning is 1,118; in reduced number the two verses amount to a further 190, a total of 1,308.

Yad Yehudah - נב

(az) “They also have the numerical value of ‘For the Lord,’” etc.: Which amounts to 1,297; the word Jacob in reduced number amounts to another eleven, giving 1,308.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Establishing a general principle,” etc., “from one verse”: The first thought that arose, to create the world through Judgment alone. This is binyan av, the building of our Father in heaven. Afterward He saw that the world would not endure, preceded it with the attribute of Mercy and joined it to Judgment. This is establishing a general principle from two verses, from Judgment and Mercy. “In the sense of ‘In Tishri,’” etc.: In the manner explained in MḢ, part 1, chapter 1.[TN280078] The letters of Tishri testify that when letters are reversed they allude to Judgment; here TShR is reversed in the order TShRQ. “Belonged to chaos,” etc.: For it says, “The earth was chaos and void,” etc., “Elohim said, Let there be light.” Thus the night preceding the light of day belonged to chaos. “349 days passed in chaos,” etc.: In the year before New Year's Day, on which man was created, until the beginning of the world's creation, the twenty-fifth of Elul, there were also 349 days. Seven times forty-nine is 343: “Forty-nine days for each of the kings,” etc. It is known that the eight kings mentioned at the end of Vayishlaḥ, “These are the kings who reigned in the land of Edom,” etc.—how they all reigned and died—are a likeness of the breaking of the vessels before creation, as stated in the Ari's teachings, of righteous and blessed memory. It is stated in a manuscript: “These kings are the primordial kings who died,” etc. Although the days of construction, meaning the attributes, are six, and these kings are eight, this is no difficulty, for Yesod sometimes breaks into two, as is known there. Ginat Egoz raised the difficulty: Here in Vayishlaḥ it does not say “he died” concerning the eighth king, whereas in Chronicles you find death. The answer: From the aspect of the holy spirit, from which his kingship departed, death is written concerning him. But from the aspect of the Written Torah it is in the mystery of “the earth was rendered void,” and they did not die. Therefore death is not written concerning him in Vayishlaḥ, as is known in the Ari's writings, of blessed memory. Now the year has 353 days. Subtract 343, namely seven times forty-nine for seven kingdoms, for the intention of the breaking of the vessels was for the use of good and evil. This was through the power of the 349 days included in Binah, namely Malkhut of Binah. By ATBSh, Binah becomes shemittah, and this is Malkhut in Sefer HaPeliʾah; only the form of the he of Binah remains as it is written.[TN280079] Thus only forty-nine gates of Binah were revealed to each of the kings. Had the fiftieth gate been revealed, there would have been complete Mercy; it was not included in this, in the mystery of “A righteous man falters”—maṭ, 49—“before a wicked man.” This is the mystery of the sabbatical period of chaos. Ten days remain from 343 to 353. Count six days for the eighth king; in the remaining four days the earth was rendered void. They had not yet entered the category of rectification, but were not included in chaos. From all this you will understand the sabbatical period of chaos alluded to in the year before the world of creation. See this in the Ari's teachings on Emanation, of blessed memory; in a manuscript you will find these matters of the breaking of the vessels.[TN280080] This is creation for ordering times, for there was an order of times for Nisan, which is Mercy, called spring, aviv: alef-bet in their proper order, indicating Mercy, as mentioned in Maʾamar MḢ, part 1, chapter 3[?]. “For the first day of the work of creation,” etc.: This is the twenty-fifth of Elul. It is not counted among the 349 days, for they are apart from it; nor is it counted among the six days of creation, since its night does not accompany it, its night having belonged to chaos, as above. Thus even according to the reckoning of 354, the foregoing fits: Six days for the eighth king and four days when the earth was rendered void, etc., for the eighth king, which left chaos but did not reach rectification. “From Nisan preceding Tishri”: In which the first Adam was created, for in it the order of times was created, as above. “All the Sages' words,” of blessed memory: Those who disagree concerning the world's creation, one saying Nisan and one Tishri—both are DḢ, “living words”[?]: This is for the order of times, and that for the rest of creation.[TN280081] “The conjunction of chaos,” etc.: BHRD of Tishri in the year of chaos. “Postdated debt documents,” etc.: He explained that man's creation was in Tishri after Nisan; this is postdated. “Although the tannaim expounded,” etc.: It refers to man's actual creation; it implies that Rabbi Joshua, who said “In Nisan,” means actual creation: The world was created, not the aforementioned order of times. “Two tannaim,” etc. “To make his statement intelligible”: That is, he conceals the matter. “You know the soul of the stranger”: He endeavored to allude to the souls and a counterpart above; afterward he concealed his mystery and concluded, “For you were strangers,” etc.[TN280082] Here too you will find something similar, etc. “To disqualify testimony,” etc.: They expounded “shall not be put to death through the testimony of children,” not literally, but to make it intelligible, etc. “Three simple full spellings”: The first, Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Yod / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Yod, has numerical value 161. With hes, Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–He / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–He, has numerical value 151. With alefs, Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Alef / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Alef, has numerical value 143. 161, 151 and 143 amount to 455. “Three composite ones,” etc.: Composite of yod and he, thus: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Yod / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–He, numerical value 156. Likewise yod and alef: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Alef / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Yod, numerical value 152. Likewise he and alef, thus: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–He / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Alef, numerical value 147. Thus 156, 152 and 147 also amount to 455. “Three combinations,” etc.: Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Yod / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–He, numerical value 156; Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–Yod / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Alef, numerical value 152; Alef–Lamed–Pe / He–He / Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Alef, numerical value 147: They amount to 455. “Of MNTsPKh,” etc.: The extended nun amounts to 700, its place being after taw in MNTsPKh; thus Nisan amounts to 820. “In the Tabernacle”: Thirty-nine years in the wilderness; in Shiloh, 369 years; and in the permanent House, 410 years. These amount to 818, two years fewer than 820, an allusion to the two years of “and you grow old,” as he proceeds to explain. “In the Second Temple, however,” etc.: The author asks himself why the Second Temple's years are not counted, and answers that the glory of the Shekhinah was not there. They counted by Jubilees, in the manner of the New Year for kingdoms.[TN280083] “The days of Gilgul,” etc.: The days of Gilgal, Nob and Gibeon are not counted because the Ark was not there, etc. [TN280084] “These are sixty-three,” etc.: Twenty years in Kiriath-jearim and forty-three in Zion; for thirteen of them the Tent of Meeting was at Nob, and for fifty at Gibeon. “The seven years are included,” etc.: Within Gibeon's fifty are seven years counted toward the permanent House's 410 years. The 410 include the seven absorbed within Gibeon's fifty; thus only forty-three remain for Gibeon. Know this: When you count the years from Israel's arrival in the land of Israel, subtracting the thirty-nine in the wilderness, until they were exiled from the land of Israel, you find only 779—410 for the building of the permanent House, 369 for Shiloh. When you add seventy-seven, namely thirteen for Nob, fifty for Gibeon and fourteen years of Gilgul, namely seven of conquest and seven of division, they were in the land of Israel 856 years, and afterward should have been exiled. In truth they were exiled seven years earlier, namely in year 850—one day of year 850, which counts as a year. Six years less one day remain. Certainly, then, it is as we said: The seven years within Gibeon's fifty are counted twice, counting toward both sides: They count for Gibeon and for the permanent House's 410 years. When we count fifty for Gibeon, 403 remain for the permanent House. This is “The Lord trod the winepress”—gat—etc.[TN280085] “453 for Gibeon and the permanent House”: Gibeon's fifty and the permanent House's 403. “Jacob was a man, whole”: The initials are “one thousand, yesh”—310. “But years are lacking”: He expounded pequdei as counting and as absence. Four are lacking when “testimony” is written without waw, from the count of 1,308: For “the Tabernacle, the Tabernacle of the Testimony” has numerical value 1,304. The number is completed with the three words and the inclusive unit, counted as one: Thus 1,308.[TN280086] “In reduced reckoning,” etc.: Reduced number. The verse “Hear, Israel: The Lord our God, the Lord is one” has reduced numerical value 92; the verse “Blessed be the Name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever” has reduced numerical value 98. The total is 190; with 117, thus 308 with the word Jacob, which is eleven in reduced number. [TN280087]

(a) “The Crown is general”: As is known, it includes all the sefirot.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(b) “Except what has emerged into light in Tiferet”: For it reveals everything that was hidden in the Supreme Crown.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(c) “It is known,” etc.: Inquirers have already found difficulty in the matter of man's choice in his deeds and the Creator's prior knowledge of them, concerning everything hidden, whether good or evil. Seemingly these contradict one another: If the Holy One, blessed be He, knew that this man would be righteous, it is impossible that he should not be righteous. If you say He knew he would be righteous but it is possible for him to be wicked, then He did not know the matter thoroughly—Heaven forbid—as Maimonides mentioned in chapter 5 of the Laws of Repentance. Our master's view here is as the Rivash wrote in responsum 118: The blessed Name's knowledge is that He knows what man will do through his choice. Thus choice is among the conditions of Knowledge, and Knowledge does not compel; see there. We have already copied his words in Ma’amar Em Kol Hai, part 2, section 5. Here our master says that this is alluded to in the rule of general and particular, namely Crown and Tiferet: The Crown is Will and Tiferet Knowledge. The supernal Will, blessed be He, desires human choice; thus Will contains only what is in Knowledge. Knowledge includes choice, which is among its conditions and defining limits.

Rema of Fano

The fourth rule:

A general statement followed by a particular: The Crown is general and Tiferet particular. The general contains only what is in the particular, for we do not conceive anything in the Crown's concealment except what has emerged into light in Tiferet. It is known in the language of truth that the Crown is Will and Tiferet Knowledge; thus Will contains only what is in Knowledge. From our knowing that the supernal Will desires human choice concerning every deed, it is manifestly clear that human choice is among the conditions of supernal Knowledge: It is impossible, by the nature of Knowledge, to contradict Will. We have learned that there is no way to grasp the truth of Torah except through attending upon sages, knowing that its paths are peace, from what is prior to what is subsequent. One who learns backward hardens his heart in the blindness of doubts and locks the door of answers before himself. For those who boast of inquiry upon a shaky foundation raise this difficulty for themselves: Every would-be sage should consider that if there is knowledge, there is no choice, and if there is choice, there is no knowledge. One cannot doubt His knowledge, blessed be He, of future things; where, then, is human choice concerning the Torah's commandments and prohibitions, and the recompense destined for them, to exact payment and give reward? Our eyes see that their

(d) “We have learned,” etc.: Aristotle wrote in the book of the Physics that there are two ways in matters of learning and inference. The first is from the prior to the subsequent: When we know something prior, we can grasp from it another thing subsequent to it and proceeding from it. The second is from the subsequent to the prior: To grasp, from a thing known to us, a thing prior to it, from which the subsequent necessarily follows. There it is evident that our apprehension is of the second kind. But our master here says that from this rule of general and particular we learn that in studying our Torah there is no way except from the prior to the subsequent. So it is with Knowledge and choice, of which we spoke: Knowledge is prior, like the general, and from it we know the nature and manner of choice, which is particular, as will follow. This differs from one who learns backward, to know from choice the manner of Knowledge: He will not find his hands or feet in the study hall. For when told that choice and Knowledge are two mutually opposing things, he will have to acknowledge Knowledge and argue through various ways of resolving the difficulty of choice. There is no path for turning from the subsequent to the prior.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) “And the recompense”: Reward and punishment—where, then, are they? For if man is compelled in his deeds, good or evil, why should the Lord recompense him for his actions?

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) “In the Book of Knowledge”: In chapter 5 of the Laws of Repentance, he wrote concerning the difficulty mentioned, in these words: “Know that the answer to this question is longer in measure than the earth and broader than the sea,” etc. “But you must know and understand this thing I say: We have already explained in chapter 2 of the Laws of the Foundations of the illness has no remedy, and they labored vainly at their answers, except Maimonides in the Book of Knowledge. He resolved it well for himself: God's knowledge, blessed be He, is not like ours. This is the best answer for one who enters this inquiry by way of doubt. There is no objection to him from the Raavad's criticism that he should not have aroused the doubt. For, because of the corruption of opinions among many of our people in his time, as is evident from his Epistle to Yemen and his other works in various places, he was compelled to set down in a book many matters accessible to reason, sufficient at the level of those perplexed people to turn them from the snares of death. Not many grow wise in the order of study appropriate to those who sit before sages. The Raavad too sweetened his expression for us in clarifying that doubt, and admitted that all this is of no avail in the way of inquiry. More than these, my son, beware: Do not consent to Ben Gershon, nor listen to Ben Elijah the physician, nor to the others who boast of a false gift. It takes many paths: “You shall scatter them, the wind shall carry them, and the tempest shall disperse them.” But truth stands forever: “She is the only one of her mother, pure to her who bore her.” If man has no choice, it is “Cut off its head, and will it not die?” Thus there is no praise to God, blessed be He, in knowing his deeds. Even a poor and lowly man knows what his fellow will do when he is subject and submissive to his will and bound to his command. This is what we said: Human choice is among the conditions of supernal Knowledge and completes its

Torah that the Holy One, blessed be He, does not know through a knowledge outside Himself, like human beings, who and whose knowledge are two. Rather, He, exalted be His Name, and His Knowledge are one. Human knowledge cannot apprehend this matter thoroughly. Just as man has no power to apprehend and discover the truth of the Creator, as it is said, ‘Man shall not see Me and live,’ so man has no power to apprehend and discover the Creator's Knowledge. This is what the prophet says: ‘My thoughts are not your thoughts, and your ways are not My ways,’” etc. The Raavad wrote concerning this, in these words: “Abraham says: This author did not conduct himself in the manner of the sages, for a person does not begin a matter without knowing how to complete it. He began with questions and difficulties, left the matter in difficulty, and returned it to faith. It would have been better to leave the matter in the innocence of the innocent, not arouse their hearts and leave their understanding in doubt. Perhaps at some moment a questioning thought concerning it will enter their hearts.” He, of blessed memory, wrote part of another answer and concluded by disparaging it, saying, “All this is of no avail”; see there. Our master's view is that Maimonides' resolution, although not in accord with what he mentioned according to the sages of Kabbalah, is nevertheless the best of the answers for those engaged in inquiry. He also did well to arouse the doubt, because his answer suffices for the illness of the mass of the people arising from the corruption of opinions among many in his days. Something similar is written in Kesef Mishneh there; see there.

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “But truth,” etc.: This refers back: In learning the subsequent from the prior, everything is satisfactory. There is no difficulty saying, “If there is Knowledge, there is no choice.” Rather, the reverse is reasonable: If there is Knowledge, there is choice. If there is no choice, what praise is there to God, blessed be He, in Knowledge? What, then, must we say? Choice is among Knowledge's conditions, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) “This is what we learned”: In tractate Avot, “Everything is foreseen, freedom is granted, through goodness the world is judged, and everything is according to the abundance of action.” The meaning: Everything man chooses is foreseen by Knowledge. In this, defining limits, as we shall explain under the fifth and sixth rules. The kingdom of heaven is the house of choice, to act according to each and every person's will, in the two paths beneath it. This is what we learned: “Everything is foreseen.” Knowledge watches the courses of choice, nothing else. Therefore it does not teach “Everything is known” or “revealed,” but “foreseen,” as we said. Thus freedom is granted, and from above they watch and wait for it. “Through goodness the world is judged”: The righteous are nourished by it and transgressors stumble over it, like a blind man, weary and hungry, stumbling over a loaf of bread rolling at his feet; he does not know and incurs guilt, nor will he even bring it back to his mouth. “Everything is according to the abundance of action,” which acquires a disposition in the soul for good or otherwise. It is written, “You shall choose life”: A past form converted to the future. For the Holy One, blessed be He, consulted the souls of the righteous and created the world; all the works of creation were created with their consent, as they expounded from “The heavens and the earth and all their host were completed.” “The judgments of the Lord are true, righteous altogether.” Thus we have learned that Knowledge depends upon choice, which was the beginning of thought and the end of action. Otherwise there would be only compulsion, the opposite of Will. What, then, must we say? The supernal Will satisfies every living being according to what is depicted in His Knowledge, blessed be He. That depiction, in its foresight, looks toward human choice, to freedom is granted to man to choose what he wishes, and Knowledge is not compelled.[TN280088]

(j) “They watch it”: From above, what he will choose below; and they wait for him to choose good and reject evil.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) “Through goodness,” etc.: The final clause, “Through goodness the world is judged,” means that although freedom is given to everyone to choose what he wishes, good or evil, nevertheless the world is judged through goodness alone. The righteous receive their reward through the good they chose, and the wicked receive their punishment for abandoning the good and stumbling over it. This is a favorable measure for the wicked: If the world were judged through evil—the righteous for refraining from evil, and the wicked for choosing evil—the punishment of the wicked for actively committing wrongdoing would be exceedingly great. It is otherwise now, when the world is judged through goodness: It is a great merit for the wicked that their punishment be reckoned in terms of action”: Its meaning is: Know that abundant action causes the choice you make between good and evil. Repetition acquires a disposition in the human soul so that one continually follows that path, for habit becomes one's nature, as our Sages of blessed memory said: “Anyone who commits a transgression and repeats it—it becomes to him as though permitted.” Therefore beware of this greatly. See further concerning all this in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 4, section 10.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) “It is written, ‘You shall choose life’”: Incidentally our master explains this wording, u-vaḥarta: It is past, and the reversing waw makes it future. Both may fittingly be expounded. We already chose life at the time of creation, when the Holy One, blessed be He, consulted the souls of the righteous. Therefore He created man with upright nature, like the other works of creation, which were created with their consent. This is u-vaḥarta: You have already chosen life, and so you shall do in the future. Our master also wrote thus there in Maʾamar Heqor Din.

“Except what has emerged into light in Tiferet,” etc.: Tiferet's branches reveal what was hidden in the root of the Crown, which is Arikh. “From the prior to the subsequent”: Unlike philosophers, who draw analogies from the subsequent to the prior, which is the intellect toward the prior, and wish to grasp everything through inquiry, comparing it to the intellect. In truth one must learn in reverse, from the prior to the subsequent. For one who learns oppositely, from the subsequent to the prior, “hardens his heart,” etc.: Many difficulties and doubts arise for him, and he locks the door against answers, because they question Knowledge on account of choice. If there is Knowledge before Him, blessed be He, that man will do thus, there is no choice, for he must necessarily do it; there is no doubt that the Holy One, blessed be He, knows future things, so where is man's choice? “God's knowledge is not”: Through our knowledge we cannot know this matter. “He should not have aroused the doubt”: If he does not know the answer to the difficulty, he should not have raised any objection. Because of the lack of understanding in his time, he was compelled to write this, so that they should not err, Heaven forbid; not everyone understands the matter according to the hidden mystery reserved for those who sit before sages. “Do not consent to Ben Gershon,” etc.: Who composed a book of philosophers; Elijah likewise. “Cut off its head,” etc.: Man is compelled to act thus if he has no choice. What greatness, then, is there in the blessed Name's knowing what man will do, if he is compelled to do it? Even the lowliest of men knows that someone subject to him will do thus. Rather, Knowledge does not decide man's action, as explained above in Maʾamar Em Kol Hai, part 2, section 2. “In the two paths beneath it,” etc.: These are Making and Formation. Although we expound that “one wheel on earth” clothes itself in Creation, Formation and Making, its principal place is nevertheless Creation, with two paths beneath it. It is explained in Raʿaya Mehemna that good and evil begin in Formation. “We learned, ‘Everything is foreseen,’” etc.: It looks toward choice, as he proceeds to explain, and Knowledge does not compel. The righteous choose the path of life, and transgressors stumble on it and go and choose the evil path. “You shall choose,” etc.: It is past, and the waw reverses it to the future, for their souls already chose in Tiferet, in life. “It is the opposite of Will”: For Knowledge is called Will.[TN280090] “The officer is compelled[?],” etc.: This is the accuser formed from the sin itself; evil does not descend from above. “Taking its opposite,” etc.: He believes[?] the opposite of our explanation concerning Knowledge and choice.

(a) "A general statement, a particular, and a general statement," etc.: The intention is that the Supreme Crown is general, and Tiferet particular, as above. Malkhut is general, comprising ten sefirot, as is known. "You infer only what resembles the particular": What Tiferet particularizes, for the beginning of thought in the Supreme Crown is the end of action in Malkhut, and this is completed through Tiferet, since it particularizes, etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(b) "According to the supernal Will," etc.: As explained above under rule 4. According to this will be explained:

Rema of Fano

The sixth rule:

A general statement, a particular, and a general statement: You infer only what resembles the particular. For the beginning of thought is the end of action, completed through Tiferet, which particularizes the general principles of the higher roots and bestows them upon Malkhut. She judges the world with true judgment, founded upon Knowledge, which judges righteously according to the supernal Will: Upright nature should chastise and recompense man in the path he chooses. This is the meaning of what we learned: "Through ten utterances the world was created." The tanna asks himself, "What does this teach?" He did not ask why there were ten. For multiplicity characterized by

Yad Yehudah - ג

(c) "What we learned": In chapter 5 of Avot: "Through ten utterances the world was created. What does this teach? Could it not have been created through one utterance? Rather, to exact payment from the wicked who destroy the world created through ten utterances, and to give a good reward to the righteous who sustain the world created through ten utterances." The tanna's answer, "Rather, to exact payment," etc., follows the manner we stated concerning choice. Here he explains the whole Mishnah.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(d) “The tanna”: After declaring that the world was created through ten utterances, asks himself, “What does this teach?” Nevertheless, it is impossible to say that the question's intention is:

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) Why the utterances had the number ten and not another number. For it is plain and clear that this is no question at all, since everyone knows that ten is the choicest number, because there is no other number:

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) Whose multiplicity also preserves equally the way of unity as does ten. For the numbers from one to ten are particulars as units, and taken together are one number as tens; from ten to a hundred they are particulars as tens, and taken together one as hundreds; from a hundred to a thousand they are particular numbers as hundreds, and collectively one number as thousands. Likewise, from a thousand to ten thousand they are particular numbers as thousands, and taken together one number as ten-thousands, and so onward. This does not occur except with ten, as the sage Ibn Ezra wrote concerning all this in Shemot, on the verse “Ehyeh has sent me to you.”

equality, preserving the way of unity from which everything proceeds and toward which they return to go, will neither multiply, persist nor become complete except through the number ten, as is known. Moreover, the question “What does this teach?” applies only to a simple, well-known thing that need not be made known. Rather, the question's intention was: What benefit did Scripture confer by specifying a distinct utterance for each distinct being? The tanna, as is his manner, refers to Scripture. He strengthened the difficulty as we explained it by saying, “Could it not have been created through one utterance?” For true unity includes multiplicity within itself and causes the parts always to cleave to and yearn for the root. This is the true intention of all the work of creation. He answered that the verses came to teach us a wondrous lesson: The utterances were imprinted one by one with equal power for a thing and its opposite, namely destruction and perpetuity for the beings created through it, which is given entirely to human choice. Had all the utterances, generally or individually, been ascribed in themselves to all beings, the wicked could not have risen again. For one sinning in one being would destroy much good, damaging all the utterances —and who would raise him up? Now one sin damages only one utterance. Although he destroys the world and remains as he is, that utterance is ashamed before its companions, and something is diminished from this sinner's standing for the time being. [TN280093] Nevertheless it is easier to remove the hindrance to the Shekhinah's

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “Moreover”: The expression “What does this teach?”, customary among the Sages, applies only to something simple and well known: What need have we to be informed of it?

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) “Rather, the question's intention”: Here it is as the Sages use it everywhere: What need have we to be informed of it? Even if it is not well known, what benefit is there in informing us that there is a distinct utterance for each being?

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) “The tanna”: Does not question his own words, but refers to Scripture, which counts ten utterances. What he says afterward, “Could it not have been through one utterance,” etc., is:

Yad Yehudah - י

(j) To strengthen the difficulty: It would have been better for all creation to be through one utterance, which is true unity, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) “He answered: Rather, to exact payment,” etc.: We know that all created beings have one nature “for the Lord[?]” concerning a thing and its opposite, and likewise destruction and perpetuity. [TN280094] Both are placed under human choice: If people choose good, the Lord too will give good and perpetuity to beings; conversely, by choosing evil they bring evil and destruction to beings. Therefore the Lord desired, for His righteousness' sake, to increase the number of utterances, a distinct utterance for each being, so that if man sins in one being, the damage will reach only the utterance particular to it. This differs from all beings being included in one utterance, or even from there being many utterances but no distinct utterance for each being: In both cases the damage would proceed and increase throughout all the utterances. This is "to exact payment from the wicked," etc., an expression of uncovering and revelation: Revealing the screen separating Israel from their Father in heaven, caused by the wicked through their sins, as Scripture says, "Your sins separate," etc., and as also explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 2, chapter 6. For through the multiplication of the utterances they merited "to exact payment from the wicked," etc., an revelation among those below, for his wickedness chastises him and his backslidings rebuke him. This is the true explanation of the word lehipparaʿ, "to exact payment," which signifies being revealed from the iron partition that sin causes to intervene between Israel and their Father in heaven. How so? It is written, "Let there be light." If they do their deeds in darkness and say, "Who sees us?" then "their light is withheld from the wicked." It is written, "Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide waters from waters." When they desired confusion, "the windows of heaven were opened." Likewise concerning good: If "with lights we honor the Lord," He will be for us an everlasting light. When "we lift our heart to our palms, to God in heaven," it is written, "You shall hear in heaven." This also doubles the reward of the righteous. This is his saying, "To give a good reward": A commandment fulfilled in one being appeases one utterance, which completes all the utterances. He multiplied Torah and commandments for them to give them merit, for the good measure is greater. From this we learn that nature, action and recompense are made equal in one subject. This is what is intended in His Knowledge, blessed be He, of our choice.

Yad Yehudah - יא - continued

expression of uncovering and revelation: Revealing the screen separating Israel from their Father in heaven, caused by the wicked through their sins, as Scripture says, "Your sins separate," etc., and as also explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 2, chapter 6. For through the multiplication of utterances for beings, revelation is easier. Secondly, He multiplied utterances to give a good reward to the righteous twice over.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(l) For the commandment touching one being propitiates not only the utterance belonging to that being, but also all the utterances together, since that utterance completes the other utterances with it.[TN280095]

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) "For the good measure is greater": Than the measure of punishment. If the pillar is cut off through sin in that utterance alone which he damaged, let him know well the power of the commandments, for [gap] they add the power of might above in all the utterances.

"She judges," etc.: Malkhut. "Through ten utterances," etc.: See in chapter 5 what he also wrote on this explanation of the ten utterances in this manner. "According to the supernal Will": As above; it is called general. "For multiplicity characterized," etc.: By the number ten. See Bahya, Shemot and Beshallaḥ, and similarly Maʿarekhet Elohut, folio 40, and Ibn Ezra on "Ehyeh asher Ehyeh." See the new Tikkunim, which closely interprets "one" in "It could have been created through one utterance," etc.: "They are thirteen measures of mercy." Thus the difficulty is not why ten, for every holy and true number is no less than ten. Moreover, "What does this teach?" implies that there is no need to inform us of it, not "Why was it created through ten utterances?" Rather: What benefit did Scripture confer by specifying an utterance for each being, saying each time, "Elohim said"? The tanna, who asked "What does this teach?", refers to Scripture; he did not ask "What does this teach?" of himself. Although he concluded, "Could it not have been through one utterance," etc., implying that his difficulty concerns creation itself —why through ten utterances?—one may say that he means: Could it not have been through one utterance, the Crown, which includes all ten? For in the first verse are the ten utterances of the Crown, and one utterance would have sufficed, indicating the true unity that includes multiplicity. Everything proceeds from it, as stated in Zohar Ḥadash, at the end of folio 29b[?]: "Like this king who rules over all, for all are included in him." As they expounded in the Tikkunim: "In the beginning"—through Wisdom; the point of the bet above indicates the Crown; "created Elohim"—Binah; "the heavens"—Tiferet; et includes GG[?]; "and the earth"—Malkhut; ve-et includes Neṣaḥ, Hod and Yesod.[TN280096] Thus He could have created the world through the utterance Bereshit alone, in which all ten sefirot are included. He answers: To exact payment from the wicked who destroy, etc. "For a thing and its opposite," etc.: A thing and its contrary, namely to exact payment from the wicked and give reward to the righteous. Had everything been through one utterance including them all, he would immediately have damaged all ten sefirot, and they could not have risen from their fall. Therefore He divided them, and one damage damages one utterance. The word lehipparaʿ is an expression of revelation: That partition separating Israel from their Father in heaven is revealed through repentance.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) “It is known,” etc.: The ten utterances through which the world was created are the ten sefirot, and the Ten Commandments that are decreed[?] are influences bestowed from the ten sefirot. [TN280098] Malkhut includes them all, for two aspects are contained in her: One, her own essence, as a sefirah in her own right; the second, her receiving, for she receives from all the sefirot. Through these two aspects she includes all the sefirot and all influences, for she comprises ten, as is known. Although every sefirah comprises ten, a greater softness[?] is nevertheless found in her than in all the other sefirot.[TN280099]

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) “Hidden in their own place”: Although every sefirah has a particular attribute—Lovingkindness, Judgment or Mercy—they nevertheless do not display their activity in their own place, only in Malkhut, and there they are:

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) “Revealed”: Their activities are revealed as they pour their influences, good or evil, into her, [gap]

Rema of Fano

Anything that was included in a general category and departed from it to teach did not depart to teach about itself, but to teach about the entire general category. It is known that Malkhut is a speech containing all the speeches and an utterance containing all the utterances, which are hidden in their own place and revealed and bestowed from her and in her. It is included among the ten plantings that extend through Mercy, and departed from the general category to teach Judgment, like this goad that teaches the cow its furrows. It did not depart to teach only about itself —for that would be severing the plantings, Heaven forbid—but about the entire general category, which agreed to the activity of Judgment. Nor did it depart to teach Judgment upon itself, as though it were affected by it, Heaven forbid, for it is written, “I, the Lord, have not changed.” One who damages or denies her denies the root. What, then, must we say? Just as the general category does not descend from its degree thereby, and heaven's glory stands in its place, one ruling applies to her also. Rather, it departed to teach Judgment upon those below on behalf of the entire general category, in the mystery of the moon's diminution: The supernal Glory removes only its tunic, in the sense of “He tore His garment,” and itself lacks nothing. Furthermore, Moses within her. They too receive influence from her according to the deeds of those below, in the mystery of reflected light, and afterward again bestow influence into her.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “It was included among the ten sefirot extending through Mercy”: Although the attributes and activities of the ten sefirot are not equal, nevertheless the extension of all of them at first was through complete Mercy. Malkhut too was one of them, as is known from the Sages' saying, of blessed memory, “Ten, not nine.”

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “It departed from the general category to teach”: Judgment to those below, whether through the activity of her essence, which inclines toward Judgment, or through receiving Judgment from a sefirah above her.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Like this goad that teaches the cow”: In the manner of what they said, of blessed memory, in the Pesiqta, brought in Yalkut, Emor, folio 186, on the verse “I am the Lord, who teaches you to benefit”: “I uproot for you, like this

manshapi[?] that uproots for this cow." Three names are given it: melammed, mardeaʿ and dorban, etc. [TN280100]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) "It did not depart to teach": About Malkhut herself, as though she alone were the cause of this separation, whether through her essence or through her receiving. For it is not so, because:

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) "That would be severing the plantings, Heaven forbid": No sefirah performs an activity independently, but through the agreement and participation of all as one. As stated in the Tikkunim: "When this moon" — Malkhut —"wishes[?] to execute Judgment," etc., "she takes from Power, and all the sefirot are included in her and are called Power in her. When she desires water and lovingkindness, she takes from Lovingkindness, and all the sefirot are included in her and are called five lovingkindnesses," etc. "When she wishes to have mercy on the world, she takes from the middle pillar, and all the sefirot are included in her and are called Mercy." As all this is explained in Pardes, gate 8, chapter 5. They intended another interpretation as well, as he says:

our master, peace be upon him, was included in "You shall surely eat." They said in the Jerusalem Talmud: If one swears, "I shall not eat for seven days," they flog him and he eats immediately. Moses departed from this category, spending 120 days on the mountain. Unlike Elijah, who walked forty days through the strength of food, Moses was first purged of the food and drink within his bowels. This was not to teach about himself alone, but to atone for the entire general category. In this manner the Ari, of righteous and blessed memory, used to say: Just as the first day's abstinence for anyone in Israel is counted as one, the second day as twenty-six, and the third—when nature has become accustomed to not eating—as only thirteen, totaling forty, so we count the first three days as one fast for the great periods of abstinence. The fourth day is twenty-six times it; the fifth, when nature has become accustomed to the great periods of abstinence, is counted as thirteen times it. All five days total 1,600. The sixth day, the utmost limit, is counted forty times all of them. Thus the sixth day alone amounts to 64,000, corresponding to the faces of the living creatures, for his body becomes like one of them. With the first 1,600, these are 65,600: Adonai, the face of the Shekhinah, and six steps to the throne of her glory. Everything is according to the abundance of action, provided one is able to afflict oneself and directs one's heart toward heaven. After every six days we have a Sabbath, on which Moses our master, peace be upon him, was actually nourished by the radiance of the Shekhinah: "For the sake of"—baʿavur

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) "It did not depart to teach about itself": To say that Malkhut does not teach through the Judgment it performs among those below. [TN280101]

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) As though the matter touched her own self and she were affected by the damage of those below, Heaven forbid. For the sin of those below does not damage Emanation at all, as Scripture says, "I, the Lord, have not changed," and as explained in the Zohar, Ki Teṣe, page 526, and in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 7, chapter 6. [TN280102] There is no difference here between the other sefirot and Malkhut: One ruling applies to all. Rather, it departed to teach Judgment upon those below on behalf of all the sefirot, as mentioned, for sin damages them in the other worlds.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) "In the mystery of the moon's diminution": In the manner stated in the Zohar, Vayeshev, page 62: "When the Holy One, blessed be He, created the world, He made the moon and crowned it with its light, for it has nothing of its own. Because of its sin He diminished for it the light from the sun, [gap] upper ones. When the Temple stood, Israel occupied themselves with sacrifices and burnt offerings," etc., "to draw down blessings and kindle lights. After the Temple was destroyed, the light grew dark and the moon was not illuminated by the sun," etc. In the Zohar, Noah, page 162: "From the day the Temple was built, the Holy One, blessed be He, would look upon it, and 'loved[?]' it greatly; He feared for Israel, lest they sin and destroy the Temple. [TN280103] Whenever He came to it, He wore that purple robe. After sins caused anger before the King, the Temple was destroyed and He tore that purple robe. This is what is written, 'He tore His garment,'" etc. The intention concerns the world of Creation.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) Furthermore, this rule —"Anything that was included in a general category," etc.—alludes to Moses our master, peace be upon him, who was included in "You shall surely eat," said to Adam. Our Sages of blessed memory said this is a positive commandment, and the Sages measured it as at least once in seven days. Thus they said in the Jerusalem Talmud: If one swears, "I shall not eat for seven days," they flog him for a vain oath, for he swore to annul the commandment, and he eats immediately so that he should not also violate the commandment. See Shulḥan Arukh, Yoreh

—"His great Name," as you say, "They ate of the produce"—meʿavur—"of the land." It must not enter the count of fasts. Remove seventeen Sabbaths from the total of 119 days, the numerical value of "a little"—meʿaṭ—"less than Elohim"; seventeen times 65,600 remain, yielding 1,115,200. The myriads are "vanity of vanities"—hevel havalim—meaning three times Hevel: Hevel, Seth, Moses, fulfilling "and he shall atone for himself." A further 5,200 were needed to fulfill "and for his house": "A flame of fire"—labbat esh—three times, for Moses, Seth and Hevel. For the letters of labbat esh complete the letters of Moses, the remainder of the three names, except that alef enters in place of the he at the end of his actual name, pertaining to himself, to fulfill in him "his soul as a guilt-offering." See Maʾamar Heqor Din, the end of chapter 10 in part 5. For the ordinary letters of Moses, Mosheh, are an acronym for Moses, Seth, Hevel. Shin and alef in place of he give esh; bet-lamed of Hevel and taw of Seth give labbat. The alef of labbat esh is counted as one thousand by its special property, namely the large reckoning. Three times 1,732 are 5,200 after we add the four surplus units in the he that we exchanged for alef. Or say: Add five surplus units, corresponding to the whole he, so it should not complain as Sarai's yod complained. For the final day of the 120 days is not part of the first count and is counted as only one, after a Sabbath has passed over him, as we explained. Furthermore, Moses, Seth and Hevel in fully spelled letters have the numerical value of labbat esh, meaning 1,733. It is also the numerical value of Deʿah, Laws of Vows, section 239, paragraph 16. Now Moses departed from this category, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) "Unlike Elijah," etc.: As explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 9; see there.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) "In this manner," etc.: Our master explains incidentally the matter of the forty-day fast Moses fasted.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) "The second day is counted as twenty-six": Days, corresponding to the day's twenty-four hours and another two added hours at its beginning and end.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) "The third day": Half is counted, namely thirteen days. It follows that a fast of three consecutive days amounts to forty days.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) "For great periods of abstinence": Each is counted as forty days. Thus the first three days amount to forty days; the fourth day is counted as twenty-six periods, namely twenty-six times forty, amounting to 1,040; the fifth is counted as thirteen periods, amounting to 520. The total is 1,600.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) "Forty times": 1,600 amounts to 64,000, corresponding to the faces of the living creatures, which are sixty-four. For, as is known, each of the four living creatures has four faces; each has the faces of man, lion, eagle and ox, namely sixteen faces together, and for four creatures sixty-four faces.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “For his body”: Moses'.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “Namely Adonai”: Its numerical value is sixty-five; and six steps to the throne, as stated in the Zohar, Genesis, page 170, correspond to the remaining 600.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Was actually nourished”: During all six working days Moses enjoyed the radiance of the Shekhinah, but on the Sabbath he was actually nourished by his revealing radiance and purity of thought, from which the Shekhinah enjoys benefit. These are the excellences among those below that are the delight of the Sabbath, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 1, chapter 28, and part 2, at the end of chapter 14. Concerning this it is said, “The Lord will not forsake His people”:

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) “For the sake of His great Name.” Likewise:

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) “They ate of the produce of the land”: The word ʿavur means produce. The expression means that the Lord will not forsake His people, but

Tiferet with the inclusive unit, namely Israel twice, and 650, namely hekhal, “palace,” comprised tenfold.[TN280097] Furthermore, the thousand years of Adam and David are 365,000 days. Add the two thousand years of our Messiah, for Moses our master, peace be upon him, fasted on behalf of all three: These are 1,095,000. Another 20,200 remain: Forty days, the equivalent of one great period of abstinence, for each of five hundred, corresponding to those of the exodus from Egypt who died in the days of darkness and were not redeemed. These are ten periods of abstinence for each of fifty; either way, 20,000. A further one period for each of five gives 200. This agrees with all the Rabbis of the aggadah on the verse “The children of Israel went up armed”—ḥamushim—“from the land of Egypt.” Furthermore, each of Moses' fasts, peace be upon him, was equivalent to two of any other person's, because of the purging of food and drink, as above. These are 2,230,400. Subtract 2,190,000 for the world's six thousand years and 40,000 for the one desolate period—forty days for each of a thousand generations. Ten times forty days remain for Moses himself, of whom it is written, “Moses ascended to Elohim”; Moses did not ascend above ten. Within these six thousand years, the two thousand of chaos are precisely distinguished: At the end of the first forty days the tablets were broken. Two thousand of Torah: At the end of the middle forty days it was said, “Hew for yourself.” Two thousand of the days of Messiah, namely redemption: At the end of the last forty days it was the Day of Atonement.

Yad Yehudah - כד - continued

gives them life through the fruit of His Name, the radiance of the Shekhinah. Because of the power of this illumination by which Moses was nourished on Sabbaths, they are not included among the days of fasting.

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) “Subtract seventeen Sabbaths,” etc.: Moses was on the mountain the first forty days, the middle forty, and the last forty: A total of 120 days. The last day is not included in the count, as will follow shortly. 119 days remain, alluded to in the verse “You made him a little less than Elohim,” for meʿaṭ, “a little,” has numerical value 119. The meaning: You diminished him by a few days, when he neither ate nor drank but enjoyed radiance from Elohim. These 119 days are seventeen weeks, for seven times seventeen is 119. Subtracting the Sabbaths leaves six fast-days in each week. It has already been explained that six fast-days count as 65,600. Thus seventeen times 65,600 amount to 1,115,200.

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “The myriads”: Correspond to three times Hevel, amounting to 111, for it is written, “Vanity of vanities”: Hevel, one; havalim, two; thus three. The reason for three times is the three incarnations of Hevel, who was reincarnated in Seth and Moses. The allusion is in the word Mosheh, the initials of Moses, Seth, Hevel. Thus Moses fasted these myriads to fulfill “and he shall atone for himself,” for the letters of Hevel three times.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “A further 5,200 were needed”: The remaining ones correspond to the letters of labbat esh, as he concludes shortly: Shin and alef in place of the he of Moses give labbat.[TN280104] The allusion is also in “The Lord appeared to him in a flame of fire,” etc. Three times labbat esh correspond to three incarnations, each including its fellow, amounting to 5,200, as will follow shortly.

Yad Yehudah - כח

(28) “The remainder of the three names”: Moses, Seth, Hevel. If you remove their initials, which are the letters of Mosheh, the letters of labbat esh remain, for the he of Moses is exchanged for alef, an abbreviation for “guilt-offering, crushing[?],” to fulfill in him what is said, “If you make his soul a guilt-offering,” and to atone for all the incarnations. [TN280105]

Yad Yehudah - כט

(29) “After we add,” etc.: Three times 1,732 amount only to 5,196. A further four are needed, corresponding to the four surplus units in the he we exchanged for alef.

Yad Yehudah - ל

(30) “Or say: Add the whole he”: Do not object that there would then be one more than 5,200. Indeed, this is how it needs to be, for the number we reckoned corresponds to 119 days, seventeen Sabbaths, as mentioned; we must still reckon one corresponding to the final day of the 120 days.

Yad Yehudah - לא

(31) We find the value of labbat esh, namely 5,200, in the words Moses, Seth, Hevel in another way: With the letters fully spelled thus—Mem–Mem / Shin–Yod–Nun / He–Yod; Shin–Yod–Nun / Taw–Yod–Waw; He–Yod / Bet–Yod–Taw / Lamed–Mem–Dalet—they amount to 1,733.[TN280119] Three times the aforementioned 1,733 are 5,199; with the inclusive unit, thus 200. This value of 1,733:

Yad Yehudah - לב

(32) Also alludes to Tiferet and Malkhut: Tiferet with the inclusive unit has numerical value 1,082, like twice Israel. Furthermore, hekhal, “palace,” has numerical value sixty-five, like the Name Adonai, namely Malkhut; it is known that all ten sefirot are included in her. Ten times sixty-five amount to 650. The total of these two numbers, 1,082 and 650, amounts to 733.[TN280106]

Yad Yehudah - לג

(33) Another reason for the 1,115,200 that Moses fasted: They correspond to Adam's incarnations, namely Adam, David and Messiah. For the thousand years for Adam and David amount, in days, to 365,000, because each year is 365,000 days, namely thirty-six and a half myriads.[TN280107] The two thousand years of Messiah's days are 730,000: A total of 1,095,000. 20,200 remain to complete “111 and five myriads and 200.”[TN280108] These 20,200 are five hundred great periods of abstinence, each counted as forty days, as above; forty times five hundred is 20,000. The reason for five hundred:

Yad Yehudah - לד

(34) Corresponding to 160[?] who died during the three days of darkness, according to the one who says that “the children of Israel went up ḥamushim” means one in five hundred. According to the one who says:[TN280109]

Yad Yehudah - לה

(35) “One in fifty”: We say that the 20,000 correspond to ten periods of abstinence for each of fifty, namely four hundred times fifty, amounting to 20,000.

Yad Yehudah - לו

(36) The remaining 200 correspond to each of five who died during the three days of darkness, according to the one who says that one in five went up. This is one period of abstinence, forty days, for each: Five times forty is 200.

Yad Yehudah - לז

(37) Furthermore, in another manner we say that the aforementioned fasts, “111 myriads and five and 200,” correspond to “the world is six thousand years,” etc.[TN280110] Each of his fasts was equivalent to two fasts of other people, because Moses' food was first purged from his bowels before the fast. It is not so with any other person, even Elijah of blessed memory, as explained above. Therefore those 1,115,200 fasts should be counted twice: 2,230,400. These correspond to:

Yad Yehudah - לח

(38) The world's six thousand years and one desolate period. For each year amounts to 365,000, as mentioned; thus six thousand years reach 2,190,000, which are:[TN280111]

Yad Yehudah - לט

(39) Forty thousand for the one desolate period, in which are a thousand generations, each allotted forty days.

Yad Yehudah - מ

(40) Another four hundred remain for Moses himself: He did not ascend above ten, but he did ascend ten. Corresponding to this, ten times forty days are reckoned for him: Four hundred.

Yad Yehudah - מא

(41) “Within these,” etc.: Just as the fasts as a whole correspond to the world's six thousand years, their particulars, three times forty days, correspond to the three periods of two thousand years of which our Sages of blessed memory spoke: The first, chaos; the middle, Torah; and the last, the days of Messiah. May he come speedily. Amen.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Anything that was included in a general category,” etc.: You will also find this matter in Sefer HaPeliʾah. Malkhut was included among the HWP[?] above, which extend through Mercy, and departed from them to teach Judgment.[TN280112] “It did not depart to teach about itself”: As though she acted alone, without the agreement of all, but “to teach about the entire general category”: All agree. His further statement, “Nor to teach Judgment,” etc., is like “Furthermore,” a different explanation: Malkhut did not depart to teach Judgment upon herself, as though Malkhut were affected by Judgment, Heaven forbid. On the contrary, it is written, “I, the Lord, have not changed,” etc. Just as the general category—the upper sefirot—is not damaged by man's sin, and their glory remains in its place, so the divine ruling applies to Malkhut, which performs Judgment: She is not damaged by Judgment, but departed to teach Judgment upon those below. “In the mystery of the moon's diminution,” etc.: His intention is not the moon's diminution at the division of the luminaries, but what is stated in the Zohar, Vayeshev, in these words: “After the Temple was destroyed, the light grew dark and the moon was not illuminated,” etc. This diminution is in the tunic alone, not in the self,

Heaven forbid. See Sefer HaKavvanot, folio 62. This garment is Malkhut of Creation, from the aspect of souls. “Corresponding to the faces of the living creatures, for his body becomes like one of them”: Moses departed from this category, not eating for the 120 days he was on the mountain, three times forty days. Unlike Elijah, who walked through the strength of food, the food in his bowels was purged, and nevertheless he did not eat for 120 days. “Not to teach,” etc.: One who fasts two consecutive days and three nights: The first day of the fast is counted as one day, the second as twenty-six—twenty-four corresponding to the day's twenty-four hours, and two hours of abstinence at its beginning and end, thus twenty-six. With that first day, twenty-seven. The third day is counted as thirteen days; thus it is as though he fasted forty consecutive days. So with Moses: The first three days he fasted were forty consecutive days, namely days one, two and three. The fourth day Moses remained fasting was twenty-six times forty days; the fifth day Moses remained fasting was thirteen times forty days. Thus in five days he fasted forty times forty days, amounting to 1,600. The sixth day Moses remained fasting was reckoned as forty times all of them, namely forty times 1,600, amounting to 64,000. With the 1,600 of the first five days, they amount to “sixty-five, 65,600[?]”: Adonai has numerical value sixty-five thousand, corresponding to the Name, and six steps to the throne correspond to the remaining 600, in the mystery of ten comprising ten.[TN280113] The mystery of sixty-five and 600 is to rectify “I shall surely hide”—haster—“My face,” etc. On the seventh day he was nourished by the radiance of the Shekhinah. See Midrash HaNeʿelam, Vayera, for the distinction between being nourished and enjoying benefit. “Of the produce of the land”: See above, Maʾamar ḤH[?], part 2, chapter 2.[TN280114] “It must not enter the count of fasts”: The Sabbath, which is not counted among the weekday fasts. “Remove seventeen Sabbaths from the total of 119”: Moses fasted 120 days. Seventeen weeks, namely seventeen times seven, amount to 119, the value of “a little less than Elohim.” Each week he fasted six days, 65,600, as above. Seventeen times “sixty-five and 600” amount to 1,115,200. “Three times Hevel,” etc.: As they expounded the verse “Vanity of vanities”: Hevel, one; havalim, two; thus three. Three times Hevel amounts to 111, corresponding to 111 myriads. The 5,200 corresponded to Moses, Seth and Hevel, for what is hidden in Mosheh is labbat esh: Bet-lamed from Hevel, taw from Seth, and mem-he from Moses[?]. The he is exchanged for alef, becoming esh.[TN280115] See Maʾamar ḤH[?], part 5, at the end of a chapter: “Which is a wonder in TR[?].”[TN280116] Therefore with Rabbi Akiva, Akivah, alef was exchanged for he. The letters of labbat esh are 1,732. Three times 1,732 amount to 5,200, namely with the four surplus units of the he we exchanged for alef in the word Moses. For three times 1,732 amount only to 5,196, and with those four, 200. Or one adds the whole he of Moses, so that it should not complain, etc. That one day remaining beyond 5,200 was the 120th day Moses fasted, after the final Sabbath of the seventeen Sabbaths mentioned. “In fully spelled letters”: Mem–Mem / Shin–Yod–Nun / He–Yod; Shin–Yod–Nun / Taw–Yod–Waw; He–Yod / Bet–Yod–Taw / Lamed–Mem–Dalet, amounting to 732 and one thousand. “Tiferet with the inclusive unit”: Counted as one, has numerical value 1,082, like Israel, which is 541; twice 541 amounts to 1,082. Combine this with 650, the numerical value of hekhal: Hekhal amounts to sixty-five, the value of Adonai, and in the inclusion of ten within ten, hekhal amounts to 650—ten times sixty-five is 650. The total is 1,732. “These are,” etc.:

Within these two thousand—namely David's thousand years and Messiah's two thousand—are 1,095,000 days.[TN280117] “Another twenty thousand remain,” etc., to complete the aforementioned 1,115,200: One great period of abstinence, forty days, corresponding to five hundred who died in the darkness; forty times five hundred is twenty thousand. A further one period, forty days, corresponds to five, for each of the five who went out: Five times forty is 200. Thus 1,115,200. This agrees with all the tannaim who disagree on the verse “The children of Israel went up ḥamushim”: One says one in fifty, one says one in five hundred, and one says one in five. “These are 223, four hundred”: Twice 1,115,200 amount to 2,230,400. “Subtract 219,” etc.: For each thousand years, 365,000; for six thousand, 2,190,000. Four myriads remain to complete 223, namely forty thousand “for a thousand, David, near[?]”—for each year of the thousand years, forty days.[TN280118] Another ten times forty days remain, amounting to four hundred, for Moses, who did not ascend above ten.

(a) “When it departed to take up,” etc.: It is known that Neṣaḥ and Hod are called “willows of the brook,” and sometimes judgments are bestowed and descend below through them. The difference is that through Neṣaḥ come afflictions of love, and through Hod come afflictions that are not of love. This rule and its companion allude to

When it departed to take up one matter of the same kind, in the mystery of afflictions of love, it departed to be lenient, not stringent, in the sense of “The Eternity of Israel will not lie.” For the righteous whom this attribute encounters rejoice in afflictions. Of them it is said, “Those who depart from Me shall be written in the earth”; it is written “My afflictions,” yissurai. For the nursing mother is chastised with them, to protect the world. Therefore they both. Concerning afflictions of love it says: When Judgment departed to take up a matter of its own kind and its supervision is from love, it departed to be lenient toward the world, not stringent toward those receiving afflictions, as will be explained shortly.

Yad Yehudah - ב

(b) “In the sense”: Of what Scripture says, “The shall be written in the upper earth, in the sense of "My head is heavy." The verse is the Shekhinah's statement. These righteous ones, who came into the world during the moon's blemish and are stricken with her, dwell in the pattern of what is above: The body is impaired, in the sense of "He tore His garment," and the soul is within, in the sense of "I have not changed," which we mentioned. They are companions with her. In this they lighten the punishment due to come upon the world, for they are seized for the generation's sin. The supernal intention is not to make Judgment stringent upon them for their own sake. Although the Lord's judgments are true concerning these righteous ones—for the one who "bore our illnesses and carried our pains" is Adam himself, who caused death to come upon the world, and what is unstated is learned from what is explicit—nevertheless their portion toward Heaven has already been rectified through complete repentance with all its conditions. Our share from them is required through the mystery of mutual surety. All the Lord's paths are upright judgments and true teachings.

heavy,'" as explained in Ma'amar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 8.

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) "These righteous ones," etc.: In the Zohar, Vayeshev, page 69, in these words: "When the moon is impaired on that side of evil eclipses, all those souls that emerge, though all are pure and holy, nevertheless emerge in a blemish. In all the places those souls reach, all are broken and impaired by many distresses and many pains. These are the broken souls in whom the Holy One, blessed be He, delights after they have been broken. Although they are found in sadness and not joy, the mystery of the matter is that they dwell in the pattern of what is above: The body is impaired and the soul within, as above—certainly in this pattern. Therefore these are the ones who are to be renewed with the moon's renewal. Of them it is written, 'From new moon

to new moon,' etc., 'all flesh shall come,' etc. Precisely all flesh, for these will be renewed entirely and are to be renewed with the moon's renewal. These share one partnership with the moon, impaired by virtue of her blemish. Therefore His heart dwells continually within them, for He attends to them, as you say, 'And with the crushed and lowly of spirit,' and it is written, 'The Lord is near to the brokenhearted,' etc. Those who suffer that blemish with the moon are continually near Him. Therefore, 'to revive the heart of the crushed': They will have their portion in those lives that come to her for renewal. Those who suffer with her will be renewed with her. These are called afflictions of love. They are not because of that person; they are of love: When the moon's light is impaired, she merits attachment from Great Love. Therefore these are companions and partners with her. Happy is their portion in this world and in the World to Come! They have merited to be companions with her. Of them it is written, 'For the sake of my brothers and companions,'" etc. Thus far. The explanation is that when the wicked are numerous in the world, "The Rock who begot you, you weaken"; the Shekhinah, as it were, "also the power of this[?]," says "My head is heavy," because: [TN280120]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) "The body is impaired": In the mystery of the garment upon it, namely "He tore His garment"; but:

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) "The soul is within": In herself she is not affected by this at all, Heaven forbid, as Scripture says, "I, the Lord, have not changed," as we mentioned above under rule 8. These righteous ones who came into the world at that time dwell in this pattern: The body is impaired, and they suffer many illnesses and pains, while the soul is within. These are afflictions "of our teaching[?]": When the wicked are numerous, the body is impaired, as mentioned, and she is "expounded/sought[?]" from Tiferet, called Great Love.[TN280121] The righteous who come into the world at an evil time share with the moon and suffer afflictions with her: This is "of love."

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) "They lighten," etc.: This is "it departed to be lenient."

Yad Yehudah - י

(j) "The supernal intention is not to make Judgment stringent upon them": This is "not stringent."

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) "For their own sake": As stated in the Zohar, "Not because of that person," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(l) Although the judgment is a true judgment, requiring their purification for the sins they or their incarnations committed—as we also find with King Messiah, of whom it is written, "He bore our illnesses and carried our pains"—this alone is not the reason for afflictions. Rather, he needs afflictions to atone for the first Adam, who brought death upon the world, since he is his incarnation. So may one say concerning other righteous ones: What is unstated is learned from what is explicit.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) Nevertheless, the righteous do not need afflictions for their own sake, for their portion toward Heaven, concerning what they themselves or their incarnations sinned, has already been forgiven through complete repentance. Only atoning for the portion of others and bearing their sins remains to them, since they are sureties. Thus the Lord's judgments are true, righteous altogether.

Yoel Moshe - 1

"In the mystery of afflictions of love," etc.: When judgments are bestowed through Neṣaḥ, they are afflictions of love and for good. This is "it departed to be lenient, not stringent." "For the nursing mother," etc.: An allusion to the Shekhinah, who is with us in distress, in the manner of "I am with him in distress." "It is written 'My afflictions'": It is the Shekhinah's statement, saying, as it were, "My afflictions shall be written in the upper earth," in the sense of "My head is heavy." Our Sages of blessed memory said: When Israel is in distress, what expression does the Shekhinah utter? "My head is heavy," etc. "He tore His garment," etc.: Namely above, rule 6; see there.[TN280122] "For their own sake," etc.: For the righteous themselves, because of sin. Although by right Judgment should be stringent upon them, for even our Messiah, who bears our illnesses, does so because he is Adam himself, through the incarnation Adam, David, Messiah. Therefore he bears afflictions to atone for the sin of the first Adam, who brought death upon the world. Thus the unstated is learned from the explicit: Other righteous ones likewise bear afflictions because of their soul's incarnation from some sinner, or for the first Adam's rectification. Nevertheless, their portion toward Heaven in their own sin has already been forgiven through repentance. Yet our portion in our sins is required through the mystery of surety, for they are sureties on our behalf.

(a) “When it departed to take up a matter unlike its own kind”: When judgments descend through Hod without an admixture of Mercy, they cause afflictions as an altar of atonement, not of love, as they said, of blessed memory, in the first chapter of Berakhot. This is “unlike its own kind,” and like what they expounded on this in the Tikkunim concerning:

Yad Yehudah - ב

(b) “My splendor was turned against me into a destroyer”: For Hod, with its letters reversed, is davah, “ailing.” Therefore

Rema of Fano

The tenth rule:

When it departed to take up a matter unlike its own kind, as an altar of atonement, in the sense of “My splendor was turned against me into a destroyer,” it departed to be lenient and stringent. “Behold, very good”—this is death, for it always precedes the blow with healing, and lightens the weight of sins tipping the balance against the whole world by being stringent with the individual who is atoned for and willingly makes his soul a guilt-offering, in the sense of “I shall love them freely, for My anger has turned from him,” according to what our Rabbis explained in tractate Yoma. “The Lord's desire shall prosper in his hand.”

it departed to be lenient toward the world and stringent toward the righteous person, who is gathered away from evil, as an altar of atonement for the whole world. Concerning this death, our Sages of blessed memory certainly fittingly expounded:

illnesses or blows in order to atone for the world, then all the generation's sins are atoned for. From there, from all the body's limbs: When all the limbs are in distress and great illness rests upon them, one limb must be struck so that all may be healed. Which is it? They strike the arm and bring blood out of it; then this is healing for all the body's limbs. So too, all the world's inhabitants are limbs one with another. When the Holy One, blessed be He, wishes to give healing to the world, He strikes one righteous person among them and through him gives healing to all. Whence? For it is written, ‘He was wounded for our transgressions,’ etc., ‘and through his wound we were healed.’ ‘Through his wound’: The bloodletting of the arm, like one who lets blood from his arm. Through that wound we were healed: This is healing for us, for all the body's limbs. He never strikes a righteous person except to give healing to the generation and atone for them.”

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) “And lightens the weight of sins tipping the balance”: This is “it departed to be lenient.” What our master explained above, that he lightens the punishment due to come upon the world, is because there it comes upon the righteous by the law of surety, to collect from them for the whole world after its sins have already tipped the balance. It is different here: The world's arm is struck, in the righteous person[?], to heal the generation before the sins have tipped the balance.[TN280124]

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) “Inasmuch as it is stringent,” etc.: This is “and stringent.”

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “And willingly makes his soul a guilt-offering”: As they said, of blessed memory, in the first chapter of Berakhot: “Everyone whom the Holy One, blessed be He, desires, He crushes through afflictions, as it is said, ‘The Lord desired to crush him, making him ill.’ Could this apply even if he did not accept them with love? Scripture teaches: ‘If you make his soul a guilt-offering.' Just as a guilt-offering is with his consent, so afflictions are with his consent."

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) "In the sense": Of what Scripture says, "I shall love them freely, for My anger has turned from him" (Hosea 14). They expounded, of blessed memory, in the last chapter of Yoma: It does not say "from them," but "from him," for even when one individual repents, he and the whole world are forgiven. See Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 5, chapter 14.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) "The Lord's desire shall prosper in his hand": As it concludes there in the first chapter of Berakhot: "If he accepted them upon himself, what is his reward? 'He shall see offspring, prolong days.' Moreover, his learning endures in his hand, as it is said, 'The Lord's desire shall prosper in his hand.'"

Yoel Moshe - 1

"Unlike its own kind, as an altar of atonement": Through afflictions that are not of love, as our Sages of blessed memory said in tractate Berakhot: "It is an altar of atonement; it is not afflictions of love," etc., concerning the death of children. They come "when HʿY[?]," meaning Hod.[TN280125] This is "My splendor was turned against me into a destroyer": It departed to be lenient and stringent, "in its reason[?]," and lenient, for even this stringency serves leniency by atoning for sin.[TN280126] This accords with "Behold, very good," which our Sages of blessed memory expounded as "good—death." It is lenient toward the whole through the stringency imposed upon the individual, in the sense of "I shall love them freely": Plural, concerning the whole, on account of "My anger," which turns "from him," from the individual, as above in Maʾamar Heqor HaDin, part 1, chapter 14.[TN280127]

(a) "When it departed to take up a new matter, you cannot return it to its general category until Scripture returns it to its general category explicitly": It is known that the attribute of Tiferet is Mercy, arbitrating between Lovingkindness and powers, the Fear of Isaac. Its principal aspect is Lovingkindness, inclining toward Lovingkindness, as stated in the Tikkunim: "The middle pillar takes from the right." It resembles Yesod, another attribute, which arbitrates between Neṣaḥ and Hod, but whose principal

When it departed to be judged in a new matter: Tiferet assists her in performing Judgment. This is new for it, when the attribute of Mercy itself turns into the attribute of Judgment, through Yesod, the end of the Life of the Worlds, taking from the left. Since Joseph was brought down to Egypt, Jacob descended after him, with human cords, with bonds of love. For Adam is the image, and Jacob the likeness of the image, as stated in the chapter Ḥezqat HaBattim. Then Tiferet, imprisoned with her and called "You," as explained in the language of truth, does not release "itself"—the bone that fell to inclination is toward Judgment, as also stated in the Tikkunim: "The Righteous One takes from the left, which is Isaac; the end of the Life of the Worlds is bound to the left." This rule alludes to all this: Sometimes Tiferet goes out to Judgment and assists Malkhut in performing Judgment, though this is new for it, since its attribute is Mercy. This happens whenever the Righteous One, the foundation of the world, takes from the left according to its attribute. Then Jacob, Tiferet, is drawn after Joseph, Yesod, as alluded to in Scripture:

(b) “With human cords I shall draw, with bonds of love” (Hosea 11). This is in the manner of what they said, of blessed memory:

Yad Yehudah - ג

(c) In the chapter Ḥezqat HaBattim: “Jacob's beauty resembled the first Adam's beauty.” They also said there concerning Rabbi Benaiah: When he reached the first Adam's cave, a heavenly voice came forth and said, “You looked upon the likeness of My image; do not look upon My image itself.” This is “with human cords,” corresponding to Tiferet, the waw of the Name, called a cord, as is known: “Jacob is the portion”—ḥevel—“of His inheritance,” for he is the likeness of the first Adam's image. “I shall draw, with bonds of love”: Which is from Malkhut, as is known.

its lot, bone of its bones—to turn Judgment into Mercy, until the particular “Scripture,” the mystery of Lovingkindness, the Written Torah, returns it to its general category: To draw down Mercy in the revelation of the Shekhinah “explicitly,” be-ferush, whose numerical value is “in Jerusalem,” bi-Yerushalem. From there a settled ruling from the Oral Torah goes forth to all Israel. This is in the sense of “A woman who emits seed first bears a male,” provided that the husband's attendants first come to escort her. The allusion is “A mist shall ascend from the earth.” Ed, “mist,” has numerical value five, the final he of the Name, the beginning of the Name Adonai. The waw includes the souls of the righteous who arouse from below.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(d) “Then, you cannot return it to its general category”: Tiferet, called “You,” does not return to its general category, the attribute of Mercy. Concerning this too it is said, “A prisoner does not release himself”: Tiferet is imprisoned with Malkhut, called bone of its bones, as above under rule 7.

Yad Yehudah - ה

(e) It does not release this “self” from Judgment to Mercy until Scripture returns it to its general category explicitly: Through the union in which the Written Torah is a Torah of Lovingkindness and the Oral Torah is in Malkhut, together with the fact that arousal below causes arousal above. This is:

Yad Yehudah - ו

(f) “Until the Scripture returns it”: With the definite he, namely the particular one among the scriptures, the Torah of Lovingkindness. It will return Tiferet to its general category, the attribute of Mercy, after all the influence's arrival from below upward in the exile of the Shekhinah, to arouse the coupling. This is:[TN280128]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “Explicitly”: And openly. Then Lovingkindness will return and give its influence and draw Mercy toward Tiferet. There is also an allusion in be-ferush, which is:

Yad Yehudah - ח

(h) Numerically “in Jerusalem”: The attribute of Malkhut, from which the Oral Torah causes the arousal above.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(i) “In the sense of ‘A woman,’” etc.: As has been explained, when Malkhut arouses herself for coupling, mercies increase. So that this should not fall into the mystery of reflected light, which indicates Judgment, it is necessary:

Yad Yehudah - י

(j) That the husband's attendants—sixty-five[?] souls of the righteous—first come to escort her, as stated in the Zohar, Vayḥi, page 516:[TN280129] “He looked in the book of Rav Hamnuna the Elder: Every male pursues the female and arouses love toward her. Here he looks, and she arouses love and pursues him,” etc. “Come and see: The arousal of the love of the Congregation of Israel toward the Holy One, blessed be He, is aroused toward Him through the souls of the righteous below. For these He sends to the Queen from the male side, and the arousal below is toward the female,” etc. “Therefore the male arouses affection,” etc.; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) Ed has numerical value five, an allusion to the final he, Malkhut. These are the two letters of the Name Adonai, particular to her. Furthermore, the waw of ve-eḥad, “and one,” includes the souls of the righteous, all of which arouse and ascend from the earth through arousal below.[TN280130]

Yoel Moshe - 1

“Tiferet assists her”: Malkhut, in bringing forth Judgment. This is new for Tiferet, which is Mercy turning into Judgment. For it is known that the ten lower crowns in Malkhut are the causes of all the sefirot. When she is for Mercy, all are Mercy; when she is for Judgment, all are called Judgment. But turning Tiferet in its own place into Judgment is the great intensity of Judgment. “In the mystery of a servant, where[?]” Judgment is bestowed through Yesod, called “the end of sixty worlds[?]”; QeṢ ḤaY are the letters of Isaac in a permutation[?]. [TN280131] This is “takes from the left,” which is Judgment, as in the introduction known to us concerning the mystery of “I planted you a choice vine.” Therefore Joseph gave some of his years to David in Isaac's place, as explained above in Maʾamar Heqor Din, QD[?], chapter 2[?]; see there. [TN280132] “For Adam is the image,” etc.: This matter has no connection here; he explains incidentally the plain sense of the Gemara, which expounded “with human cords,” etc., concerning Jacob. The allusion is that since Joseph, Yesod, was brought down to Egypt—that is, to Judgment—Jacob too, Tiferet, as is known, descended after him, turns into Judgment, and is subdued with him. “You cannot return it”: Tiferet, called “You,” cannot release itself—that is, “bone of my bones,” the bone that fell to its lot—for a prisoner cannot release himself from prison. He cannot return it to its general category, “above, mountain[?],” until Scripture returns it: The attribute of Lovingkindness, the Written Torah, to draw Mercies in the revelation of the Shekhinah.[TN280133] “Explicitly”: Numerically “in Jerusalem,” which is this attribute. “A woman emits seed first”: They alluded to Malkhut, which says, “See with what son I have come before you,” through the deeds of the righteous and arousal below. This is “provided that the husband's attendants first come”: See the Zohar, Vayḥi, page 516, which asked whether it is fitting for the female to pursue the male, and answered likewise in this manner: The arousal is because of the righteous below, who are the husband's attendants. “The waw includes,” etc.: The waw of ve-El, “and God,” includes.[TN280134]

Yad Yehudah - ז

(g) “Her air,” etc.: Although our ancestors offered sacrifices in other places outside Jerusalem, such as the wilderness, Shiloh and Gibeon, Jerusalem's air was nevertheless present there. All this was so that the deeds of those below should ascend through there above, for it is the gate of heaven and truly the house of God, corresponding to Jerusalem above. Therefore the prayers ascending there, Beth-el, are accepted, and they answer concerning her, etc.

preparations aroused from below. Here is the mystery of the sacrifices for which Jerusalem was set apart: The first altar of Adam and Hevel, to whom Shem son of Noah joined himself. Upon it Isaac was bound, and upon it our father Abraham's ram was offered. Her air was present in every place where our ancestors offered sacrifices for a temporary need, for she is the gate of heaven, truly the house of God. They answer concerning her from above, like a city joined together. See Maʾamar Em Kol Hai, part 3, section 32. Everything accords with the preparation of those offering below. Those who interpret signs said concerning the verse “Today the Lord appears to you”: Its letters are Aaron, Michael; the one was made priest below and the other above. The number of the communal sacrifices each year has the mnemonic EReṢ, “land”; the number of tenth-measures of meal-offerings has the mnemonic “which”—ASheR—“the Lord your God seeks.” This excludes the goat sent away to a cut-off land. ASheR is melekh shalem, “whole king,” which we explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 2, chapter 31. Adjacent to it is YHWH, namely his place, as explained there. It is written, “When a soul offers a meal-offering,” and the Sages said that Scripture accounts it to him as though he had offered his soul. For the mystery of sacrifices and the departure of souls is one, in the equality of the pattern, as explained in its place; see Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 3. We have already explained in Maʾamar HaNefesh what the first icon is, bearing five names—Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah—and what

(j) “The number,” etc.: Incidentally our master expounded sacrifices by way of subsidiary expositions of wisdom, saying that the annual communal sacrifices number 1,290. How so? Two lambs for the daily offering each day, 365 days in the year: 730. For the fifty-two Sabbaths among them, two lambs every Sabbath as an additional offering: 104, thus 834. For the twelve new moons among them, eleven sacrifices each new moon as an additional offering—two bulls, one ram, seven lambs and one male goat as a sin-offering—132 sacrifices for twelve new moons: Thus 966. On Passover, each day they offer as on the new moon: Seventy-seven sacrifices, thus 1,043. On the sixteenth of Nisan, the day of waving the omer, they offer a lamb as a burnt offering: Thus 1,044. On the Feast of Weeks they offer eleven sacrifices in Passover's order. Furthermore, on that day, with the bread, they offer seven lambs, one bull, two rams, a male goat and two lambs as a peace-offering sacrifice: Together twenty-four sacrifices, thus 1,068. On the first of Tishri they offer a bull, a ram, seven lambs and a sin-offering goat: Ten sacrifices, thus 1,078. On the Day of Atonement they likewise offer as the New Year's additional offering; also the burned goat, the companion of the goat sent away, and the high priest's bull and ram: Together thirteen sacrifices, thus 1,091. During the festival's seven days they offer two rams daily, fourteen for seven days; also fourteen lambs daily, ninety-eight; and every day a goat for a sin-offering. With the festival's seventy bulls, these amount together to 189 sacrifices: Thus 1,280. On the eighth day, the assembly, a bull, a ram, seven lambs and a goat: Ten sacrifices, thus 1,290 sacrifices. Of these there are 1,103 lambs, 114 bulls, all burnt offerings; the high priest's bull as a sin-offering on the Day of Atonement; forty rams including the high priest's ram; and thirty-three goats. The tenth-measures number 1,526: For the 1,103 lambs there were 1,104 tenth-measures, because the lamb for waving the omer required two tenth-measures. For the 114 bulls, three tenth-measures per bull gave 342 tenth-measures: Thus 1,446. For the forty rams, two tenth-measures per ram, eighty tenth-measures: Thus 1,526. The sin-offering goats and the high priest's bull have no the second icon is, included under the name deyoqan, “image”; what the third icon is, included under the name ṣelem, “form”; and what the fourth icon is, a power in the body, namely the vital soul. According to our approach it is fitting to call it “the man within man,” ha-adam ba-adam, for without it this one cannot subsist. These are the truly necessary divisions of the human soul. Go and calculate: The first icon's five names have numerical value 1,099. Add deyoqan, ṣelem, ha-adam ba-adam, and these are precisely 1,526, corresponding to the number of tenth-measures we mentioned. The sacrifices themselves are 1,101 lambs for burnt offerings. Assign 1,099 of them to the first icon, which is man's essence and principal being. Two remain: One for deyoqan and one for ṣelem. Another two lambs are for communal peace-offering sacrifices, to appease “the man within man.” Therefore they are eaten, to delight the vital soul; see Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 1, chapter 21. The bulls number 114. Subtract the festival's seventy bulls, for appeasing the seventy nations, and forty-four remain, corresponding to the square of Ehyeh, for from there are the five Powers, the letters MNTsPKh, whose numerical value is par, “bull.” The rams are forty, after the pattern of the ram of our father Abraham, the man of Lovingkindness, where the Name of seventy-two is, namely YHWH fully spelled with four yods. The communal sin-offerings number thirty-two, to purify the heart, lev. There remains the high priest's bull on the Day of Atonement, also offered as a sin-offering, like the inner goat; both are burned. So libations with them, for there are no libations with a sin-offering. Both numbers, the sacrifices and the tenth-measures, are alluded to in the verse “A land which the Lord your God seeks.”

Yad Yehudah - יא

(k) EReṢ is an acronym for one thousand, 290. Likewise:

Yad Yehudah - יב

(l) ASheR alludes to 1,500; with YHWH, numerical value twenty-six, thus 1,526. “This land the Lord your God seeks” excludes the goat sent away to a cut-off land, which is not included in the count. There is another point in this number 1,500 alluded to by ASheR: It equals melekh shalem in the large reckoning of the letters MNTsPKh. The extended kaf is 500, and mem is 600. Melekh shalem is Malkhut.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(m) “Adjacent to it is YHWH”: Tiferet, the place of melekh shalem. It too amounts to 1,500, as explained there: Ten times five is fifty; six times that amounts to three hundred; five times that amounts to 1,500.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(n) “It is written, ‘When a soul,’” etc.: Our master further expounded incidentally the numbers of sacrifices and tenth-measures.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(o) “We have already explained in Maʾamar HaNefesh”: This is also in Maʾamar Olam Qatan. According to our approach there, the number of sacrifices and tenth-measures will be shown as alluded to in the soul's icons. This proves that the mystery of sacrifices and souls is one.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(p) “According to our approach it is fitting to call it ‘the man within man’”:

Rema of Fano - continued

as not to delve further into this subsidiary exposition, that it may be pleasant to the listening ear, what we learned at the end of the first chapter of Shevuʿot suffices: Rabbi Shimon says, “Just as the blood of the goat offered within atones for Israel”—meaning concerning the impurity of the sanctuary and its sacred things—“so the bull's blood atones for the priests. Just as the confession over the goat sent away atones for Israel”—meaning all their sins—“so the confession over the bull atones for the priests.”

Yad Yehudah - טז - continued

Although according to what we explained there it is the inanimate aspect within man, and of the first icon one says, “For this is the whole man within man,” since it corresponds to the speaking portion, Tiferet, for the needs of our subject here it is fitting to call the fourth icon “the man within man.” For it is a power in the body, as we explained there, and there is no man without it.

Yad Yehudah - יז

(q) “Go and calculate”: The five names—Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah—of the first icon have numerical value 1,099. Add the value of deyoqan, the second icon, the value of ṣelem, the third icon, and the value of ha-adam ba-adam: A total of 1,526, corresponding to the number of tenth-measures.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(r) “The sacrifices themselves”: These too correspond to those icons. The number of lambs, including the two communal peace-offerings, is 1,103, as mentioned. Of these, 1,099 equal NR NḤ[?] of the first icon, to which it is fitting to assign them in all its particulars, since it is man's essence and principal being, etc.[TN280136] Two, generally, correspond to the second and third icons, and two communal peace-offerings to the fourth icon, which is “within man, general,” namely three times adam, “man.”[TN280137]

Yad Yehudah - יט

(s) “Corresponding to the square of Ehyeh”: Thus: Alef; Alef–He; Alef–He–Yod; Alef–He–Yod–He. The total is forty-four. It is known that the Name Ehyeh also alludes to Binah, from which judgments arise: The five Powers corresponding to the five letters MNTsPKh. These have the numerical value par, “bull.” Therefore the forty-four bulls allude to all these.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(t) “A mystery from[?] there”: The Name of seventy-two, numerically ḥesed El, “the lovingkindness of God,” namely the Name YHWH fully spelled with four yods: Yod–Waw–Dalet / He–Yod / Waw–Yod–Waw / He–Yod, amounting to seventy-two. Here forty is after this pattern, for four yods amount to forty.[TN280138]

Yad Yehudah - כא

(u) It suffices to state the reason for the high priest's bull according to the plain sense, as we learned, etc.

Yoel Moshe - 1

“This Jerusalem”: The attribute of Malkhut. “They answer many words concerning her,” etc.: Meʿinyano means answering words. It also means “from its context,” for she too is in Emanation; but the Shekhinah was driven out, etc., through our sins. Therefore she needs a matter learned from its conclusion, namely the arousal of those below. See Maʾamar Em Kol Hai above, where he wrote that just as Isaac was bound below, the Holy One, blessed be He, bound the attribute of Judgment above. You will find the principal account in the Zohar; see there. ASheR is an acronym: Alef, one thousand; shin-resh, which is five hundred, totaling 1,500, like melekh shalem, etc. The large mem is six hundred, yielding 1,500 with the other letters. “The first icon's five names”: Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah, numerically 1,099. “1,526,” etc.: ASheR and the Name YHWH, numerical value twenty-six, added to ASheR, 1,500. “The square of Ehyeh”: Thus Alef; Alef–He; Alef–He–Yod; Alef–He–

Two scriptures that contradict one another. Since the matter depends upon the deeds of those below, there are always among those above ones who take the right side for acquittal and ones who take the left for condemnation. They are among the scriptures, where the priestly watches and captains of the forces are, according to the way we regularly explain the Mishnah, “Rabbi Shimon says: There are three crowns.” Many have already benefited from this in our glosses on the sage's short introductions, of righteous and blessed memory. Until the Great Court comes, with a congregation that judges and a congregation that rescues, and a master of peace with them, the distinguished one among the judges, slow to anger and abundant in lovingkindness, and arbitrates between them. The Ari's students, of righteous and blessed memory, also have profound and wondrous expositions on the explanation of these rules, concerning the Measure of the Stature. “The Lord desired, for His righteousness' sake, to magnify Torah and make it glorious.”

in saying, ‘Many things You have done, Lord—Your wonders and Your thoughts toward us.’ We learned there: ‘There are three crowns.’ It is known that the crowns belong respectively to the prince, the high priest and the king. Because of their exalted rank, in governing the nation they required a deputy, a second-in-command and a court, reckoned as three flocks of sheep for Israel's hosts. Likewise the priestly watches, the captains of the forces who rule the people, and the Sanhedrin. All direct their eyes and hearts toward the crown of a good name, the Congregation of Jacob, which ascends above with their assistance, to glorify their Maker for all that He created, for this is the whole man.” Thus far his words. This means that the three crowns—Torah, priesthood and kingship—are in the three first ones, as is known. Each has two degrees beneath it. Thus the crown of Torah comprises the Supreme Crown, Tiferet and Yesod, like the prince, the head of the court and the Sanhedrin. For priesthood they are Wisdom, Lovingkindness and Neṣaḥ, like the high priest, his deputy and the priestly watches. Yad Yehudah

“Let the whole soul praise Yah”: According to ordinary language it should have said, “All the souls,” meaning all the individual souls of each and every person born with them. Since it says “the whole soul,” it follows that it concerns the soul's entirety. Since they have four divisions, it said correspondingly, “Let the whole soul,” in its entirety, “praise Yah.”

“Concerning the four quarters of the number of souls approaching the Lord”: Because they correspond to the Name YHWH, as will follow.

Rema of Fano

“Let the whole soul praise Yah”: Concerning the four quarters of the number of souls approaching the Lord. These are their particulars: Great, prior, praiseworthy and superior to them all is the first icon, the man within man, the supernal form, the King's son. “This came from the Lord”; it is wondrous in the eyes of every winged being, wheel, living creature and seraph. It contains within itself five configurations: Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah, whose numerical value is “Bless the Lord, my soul.” All are from the world of Unity, for the entire congregation of righteous Israel in every generation. “She is one” to the upper Mother, “she is pure” to the

“These are their particulars: Great”: It is known that there are four degrees in the lower world, one above another: Inanimate, growing, living and speaking. Each has a particular soul: The inanimate has the vital soul, the growing the vegetative soul, the living the sensitive soul, and the speaking the intellectual soul. Everything greater and higher than another preserves and includes within itself the soul and power of the degrees beneath it, but not conversely, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 6. We have investigated this in the human soul alone and found our Sages of blessed memory saying in many places that it possesses five forms: Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah, corresponding to the four letters of the great Name, blessed be He, "if[?] the point of yod."[TN280142] Yehidah corresponds to yod's point, the Supreme Crown; Hayyah to yod itself, Wisdom; Neshama to the first he, Binah; Ruah to waw, Tiferet with the extremities; Nefesh to he, Malkhut. If we align these divisions of souls with the divisions of the degrees mentioned, we find Nefesh corresponding to the inanimate, Ruah to the growing, Neshama to the living, and Hayyah and Yehidah to the speaking. The intention is not that these souls themselves are merely the four powers of inanimate, growing, living and speaking, and NR NḤ are names borrowed for these powers, as the comprehensive sage, our master Rabbi Manasseh, may his light shine, thought in his book Nishmat Hayyim, part 2, chapter 15.[TN280143] For, after seeking the pardon lower Mother, for she is neither separate nor reincarnated. She neither sins nor is punished, because she departs cleanly from the sinner before it grows dark. She does not enter Gehinnom, neither the upper one, the River of Fire, nor the lower one, the valley of death's shadow, except to rescue another. For through her merit the righteous will eventually be called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He. It is written, "For through fire the Lord is judged." This is the completion of that fire's mission, namely its annulment, for the Torah said, "Its owner was warned": Let the ox's owner come and stand over his ox. When it goes forth to be stoned, its owner is judged, for it is his possession. We learned, "Israel is one possession." It is written, "For judgment shall return to righteousness, and after it all the upright of heart." See part 1, chapter 37, of Maʾamar Yonat Elem. Then the earth will split at their voice, as in Solomon's reign; we explained it well in its place according to the truth of its existence. How much more so for the King to whom peace belongs, of whom it is written, "Glorify the Lord in the lights." "Who has a light in Zion": These are gates distinguished by halakhah, for the dance of the righteous. Many meanings of light-openings are in or, "light," for "In the light of the King's countenance is life"; "The crooked shall become level, and the rugged places a plain." With this, the senses of the word urim have been explained according to their shared usages in Scripture.

Yad Yehudah - 1 - continued

due to his great wisdom and exalted honor, he erred in his perception. If so, all four, including NR NḤ together, would necessarily be in every human being; all would be equal, with no person's superiority over another from their particulars. This is not what we received from Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai's teaching, peace be upon him; the sage had already undertaken in his book not to depart from his words right or left. Are not his words like fire in many places of the Zohar and Tikkunim? Each of Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah and Yehidah is an essence in its own right, that is, from all those four powers. In the Zohar, Leviticus, page 45, he said explicitly: "There is one who merits Neshama; one who merits the arousal of Ruah; and one who merits only Nefesh." What, then, must we say? They differ according to their source in the four worlds, Emanation, Creation, Formation and Making. Of human forms, one is emanated from Emanation, one created from Creation, one formed from Formation, and one made from Making. Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai, peace be upon him, revealed this in many places, as will follow. The soul a person has from Making is called

Nefesh, the lowest degree, like the inanimate among the powers; that coming from Formation is called Ruah, the degree of the growing; from Creation, Neshama, the degree of the living; and from Emanation, Hayyah and Yehidah, the degree of the speaking. Just as each is named after its quarry and place, it is said to be at the degree of the power corresponding to it there, though it includes all four powers, as all the other forms also include them. There is no difference among them except in the aspect of encompassing and encompassed: Which encompasses and includes the others, and which are included. The totality of each is reckoned as an icon, named after the encompassing one. Thus souls have four icons. The first is the greatest of all, because it includes all five configurations, Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah and Yehidah. The others are not so: Their inclusion of these configurations progressively diminishes.

“Prior, praiseworthy and superior to them all is the first icon, the man within man, the supernal form”: To the others, since they are from Emanation; therefore it is praiseworthy and superior to “what[?].” This is what is called:[TN280144]

“The man within man”: The degree of the speaking power, which gives the essence of man to man. It is also called:

“Supernal form”: Of it is written “in Our image,” as stated in the Tikkunim, tikkun 69, in these words: “Those of Creation are garments for those of Emanation. This is light, a supernal garment. Ten clothe themselves in ten. Those of Emanation said to those of Creation, in whom they clothe themselves, ‘Let us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness,’” etc. The intention is: “In Our image,” in Emanation; “according to Our likeness,” in explanation[?].[TN280145] It is also called:

“The King's son”: As stated in the Tikkunim: From the side of created glory, Israel say to the Master of the World, “If as servants”; from the side of emanated glory, it is said of them, “If as sons.”

“This came from the Lord”: For it is from the world of Emanation and also contains all five configurations, Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah and Yehidah, corresponding to the Name's letters.

“It is wondrous in the eyes of every winged being, wheel, living creature and seraph, and contains within itself five configurations: Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah”: In the Tikkunim, “Let us make man”: Wheel, angel and throne joined together and said, “Let us make man, for in our partnership, Neshama is from the throne, Ruah from the angel and Nefesh from the wheel, to be in our image,” etc. The intention is Creation, Formation and Making. This one from the world of Emanation is wondrous in the eyes of those in Making, the living creature in Formation and the seraphim in Creation, for the icons of souls coming from these lack Hayyah and Yehidah.

“Whose numerical value is ‘Bless the Lord, my soul’”: Is 1,099, the value of “Bless the Lord, my soul,” for thus they are rooted in the Lord's Name.

“All are from the world of Unity”: Emanation.

“For the entire congregation of righteous Israel in every generation, she is one to the upper Mother”: To Binah, for the soul emanated from her is not separate from Yehidah and Hayyah, unlike the other icons, in which the degrees are separate, as will follow.

“She is pure to the lower Mother”: To Malkhut, for even from her side she neither sins nor is punished.

“For she is neither separate nor reincarnated”: As implied in Tikkunim 87: “‘Even the bird has found a house’—this is the first incarnation, Nefesh. ‘And the swallow a nest for herself’—this is the second incarnation, of Ruah. ‘Where she has placed her young’—this is the third incarnation, of Neshama, whose incarnation is ‘Your altars, Lord of Hosts.’” Thus Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama are those described as reincarnating, not what is above MQ[?].[TN280146]

“She neither sins nor is punished, because she departs cleanly from the sinner before it grows dark”: as stated in Tikkunim 70: “If a person's soul is in the manner of Emanation, if the father[?],” etc. [TN280147] R. ʾA said: “Father, does sin attach to a person whose soul is from that place? Does he have sins? It is written, ‘No wrongdoing shall befall the righteous.’”[TN280148] He said to him, “Yes. This is what is written: ‘Your sins have separated between you and your God.’ What is ‘separated’? “I who remove[?]” this soul of Emanation from him. [TN280149] The mystery of the matter is ‘Elohim said, Let the waters beneath the heavens be gathered,’ etc. His soul departs from him, and his body remains dry land, because his soul in the manner of Emanation departs from him,” etc. The intention is not that the soul of Emanation departs after the sin, for then the difficulty returns: There it is written, “No wrongdoing shall befall the righteous.” Rather, it departs before the sin. So too is implied by the Zohar, Teṣavveh, which we shall copy below in section 2: Neshama, and all the more Ruah and Nefesh, is defiled through another worship, but far above it Yehidah and Hayyah are not defiled. The reason is that, just as no damage enters Emanation, as explained in the Zohar, Ki Teṣe, page 536, so there is no damage in the soul of Emanation. Therefore it does not enter Gehinnom, etc.

“She does not enter Gehinnom, neither the upper one, the River of Fire, nor the lower one, the valley of death’s shadow, except to rescue another, for through her merit”: To rescue others and bring them up from Gehinnom, as stated in the Zohar, Pinḥas, page 405, in these words: “Even the completely righteous descend there. Why do they descend there? They take many guilty ones and bring them up above,” etc., as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapters 2 and 16. Do not wonder that she descends to Gehinnom for this, although she is from the world of Emanation and the Lord's Name is called upon her. On the contrary, from this one can learn precisely so, for they said, of blessed memory:

“The righteous will eventually be called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He”: This is from the aspect of their soul of Emanation, corresponding to the entire Name, as mentioned.

“It is written, ‘For through fire the Lord is judged’”: Concerning this our Sages of blessed memory said in Midrash Shoḥer Tov, cited in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 1, chapter 13, that in the future every nation will descend to Gehinnom with its god; Israel likewise with Him, blessed be He, as it were. Thus it is a merit for the soul of Emanation that its power through the Name's four letters should suffice to rescue the wicked from the Sheol below it.

“This is the completion of that fire’s mission, namely its annulment”: Of Gehinnom's fire. After the wicked of Israel ascend through this from the pit of destruction, Gehinnom ends: Its fire ceases and is annulled, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 5, chapter 7. The completion of its mission is its annulment, as explained there, part 1, chapter 7. Scripture's use of the language of judgment should not be thought strange.

“For the Torah said, ‘Its owner was warned’: Let the ox’s owner come and stand over his ox, for when it goes forth to be stoned, its owner is judged, for it is his possession; we learned, ‘Israel is one possession’”: They said, of blessed memory, “Let the ox's owner come,” etc. Israel is the Holy One's possession, blessed be He, as we learned in chapter 6 of Avot. Therefore He, blessed be He, stands over them at their judgment like the ox's owner, and thereby is, as it were, judged. It seems that for this the prophet said, “The ox knows its owner,” etc., “Israel does not know; My people do not understand.” Seemingly it is difficult: What connection is there between an ox and Israel, and what understanding is needed for this, that he said, “My people do not understand”? But according to our master's approach, the prophet says: Israel does not know the Lord, who is its owner, and they are “our second/our teaching[?],” blessed be He. [TN280150] If they knew this, they should refrain from sin out of regard for their Owner's glory, and understand that He, blessed be He, would, as it were, need to descend to Gehinnom for them, like the ox's owner over his ox. But Israel did not know, and therefore did not understand.

“It is written, ‘For judgment shall return to righteousness, and after it all the upright of heart’”: The intention is likewise that judgment in Gehinnom returns and reaches Ṣedeq, a designation of the Shekhinah, because He, blessed be He, is the ox's owner. After Him all the upright of heart come into judgment: The righteous who will be called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He, to rescue another from Gehinnom's judgment.

“See part 1, chapter 37, of Maʾamar Yonat Elem;

then the earth will split at their voice, as in Solomon's reign": After its light is exhausted and annulled, Gehinnom will be greatly demolished from within itself and sanctified with the holiness of the Garden of Eden, until it becomes a great, spacious place for the dance of the righteous, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 5, chapter 6, and Maʾamar Em Kol Hai, part 1, section 20; see there. This demolition is like cleaving and splitting the earth, until Gehinnom's hollow is filled with fissure upon fissure, and through this the site of its tent is demolished. So it was in Solomon's reign, when he was anointed: It is written, "The earth split at their voice" (Kings 8:1).[TN280151]

"We explained it well in its place according to the truth of its existence": We also explained it in this manner in its place, namely responsum 23, concerning what the Rabbis said, "The prophets spoke in the language of exaggeration," in these words: "We too shall say, 'The earth split at their voice.' For TY[?], it[TN280152] sometimes folds up, in the sense of 'The land upon which you lie,' and sometimes is demolished[?],[TN280153] in the sense of 'It widened and wound upward.' Therefore it is called 'the land of the gazelle.' Then, in Solomon's reign, it split and expanded to the full extent possible within its nature at that time, since he was destined to sit upon the Lord's throne."

"How much more so for the King to whom peace belongs": All the more so will Gehinnom expand for the King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is written, "It too is prepared for the king; He made it deep and broad" (Isaiah 30), for the dance He will make for the righteous. For:

It is written concerning it, "Glorify the Lord in the urim". Rashi explained in Menahem's name that this means fissures and branches, like "the viper's den," meʾurat. According to our approach, the intention is: In the urim, the fissures the Lord will make in Gehinnom's hollow—and in His palace, there glorify the Lord.[TN280154] It is also written concerning it:

"Who has a light in Zion": These are gates distinguished by halakhah, for the dance of the righteous. "And a furnace in Jerusalem" (there, 38).[TN280155] Our Sages of blessed memory

expounded in chapter 2 of Eruvin: "Who has a fire in Zion and a furnace in Jerusalem"—this is its entrance. This holds only while the fire is within it. When the fire is annulled, however, "Who has an opening in Zion" can refer to the many entrances and gates it will have when it expands. The word or here means a fissure.

"Many meanings of light-openings are in or": There are many usages of meʾorot in the root or. First, its plain sense: The intention is, "In the lights" with which the Lord will illuminate His face toward you, glorify Him, for it is written, "In the light of the King's countenance is life" (Proverbs 15)[TN280156]. Second, the sense of a cleft, as it is written, "The crooked shall become," etc. (Isaiah 16).[TN280157]

"For in the light of the King's countenance is life; the crooked shall become level, and the rugged places a plain. With this, the senses of the word urim have been explained according to their shared usages in Scripture": With this, the two interpretations of the word urim are justified.

Yad Yehudah - א

(1) "Let the whole soul," etc.: According to ordinary language it should have said, "All the souls," meaning all the individual souls of each and every person born with them. Since it says "the whole soul," it follows that it concerns the soul's entirety. Since they have four divisions, it said correspondingly, "Let the whole soul," in its entirety, "praise Yah."

Yad Yehudah - ב

(2) "Approaching the Lord": Because they correspond to the Name YHWH, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - ג

(3) "Great," etc.: It is known that there are four degrees in the lower world, one above another: Inanimate, growing, living and speaking. Each has a particular soul: The inanimate has the vital soul, the growing the vegetative soul, the living the sensitive soul, and the speaking the intellectual soul. Everything greater and higher than another preserves and includes within itself the soul and power of the degrees beneath it, but not conversely, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 6. We have investigated this in the human soul alone and found our Sages of blessed memory saying in many places that it possesses five forms:

Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah, Yehidah, corresponding to the four letters of the great Name, blessed be He, with the point of yod. Yehidah corresponds to yod's point, the Supreme Crown; Hayyah to yod itself, Wisdom; Neshama to the first he, Binah; Ruah to waw, Tiferet with the extremities; Nefesh to he, Malkhut. If we align these divisions of souls with the divisions of the degrees mentioned, we find Nefesh corresponding to the inanimate, Ruah to the growing, Neshama to the living, and Hayyah and Yehidah to the speaking. The intention is not that these souls themselves are merely the four powers of inanimate, growing, living and speaking, and NR NḤ are names borrowed for these powers, as the comprehensive sage, our master Rabbi Manasseh, may his light shine, thought in his book Nishmat Hayyim, part 2, chapter 15.[TN280158] For, after seeking the pardon due to his great wisdom and exalted honor, he erred in his perception. If so, all four, including NR NḤ together, would necessarily be in every human being; all would be equal, with no person's superiority over another from their particulars. This is not what we received from Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai's teaching, peace be upon him; the sage had already undertaken in his book not to depart from his words right or left. Are not his words like fire in many places of the Zohar and Tikkunim? Each of Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah and Yehidah is an essence in its own right, comprising all those four powers. In the Zohar, Leviticus, page 45, he said explicitly: “There is one who merits Neshama; one who merits the arousal of Ruah; and one who merits only Nefesh.” What, then, must we say? They differ according to their source in the four worlds, Emanation, Creation, Formation and Making. Of human forms, one is emanated from Emanation, one created from Creation, one formed from Formation, and one made from Making. Rabbi Shimon bar Yohai, peace be upon him, revealed this in many places, as will follow. The soul a person has from Making is called Nefesh, the lowest degree, like the inanimate among the powers; that coming from Formation is called Ruah, the degree of the growing; from Creation, Neshama, the degree of the living; and from Emanation, Hayyah and Yehidah, the degree of the speaking. Just as each is named after its quarry and place, it is said to be at the degree of the power corresponding to it there, though it includes all four powers, as all the other forms also include them. There is no difference among them except in the aspect of encompassing and encompassed: Which encompasses and includes the others, and which are included. The totality of each is reckoned as an icon, named after the encompassing one. Thus souls have four icons. The first is the greatest of all, because it includes all five configurations, Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah and Yehidah. The others are not so: Their inclusion of these configurations progressively diminishes.

Yad Yehudah - ד

(4) “Prior”: To the others, since they are from Emanation; therefore it is praiseworthy and superior to “what[?].” This is what is called: [TN280159]

Yad Yehudah - ה

(5) “The man within man”: The degree of the speaking power, which gives the essence of man to man. It is also called:

Yad Yehudah - ו

(6) “Supernal form”: Of it is written “in Our image,” as stated in the Tikkunim, tikkun 69, in these words: “Those of Creation are garments for those of Emanation. This is light, a supernal garment. Ten clothe themselves in ten. Those of Emanation said to those of Creation, in whom they clothe themselves, ‘Let us make man in Our image, according to Our likeness,’” etc. The intention is: “In Our image,” in Emanation; “according to Our likeness,” in Creation. It is also called:

Yad Yehudah - ז

(7) “The King's son”: As stated in the Tikkunim: From the side of created glory, Israel say to the Master of the World, “If as servants”; from the side of emanated glory, it is said of them, “If as sons.”

Yad Yehudah - ח

(8) “This came from the Lord”: For it is from the world of Emanation and also contains all five configurations, Nefesh, Ruah, Neshama, Hayyah and Yehidah, corresponding to the Name's letters.

Yad Yehudah - ט

(9) “It is wondrous,” etc.: In the Tikkunim, “Let us make man”: Wheel, angel and throne joined together and said, “Let us make man, for in our partnership, Neshama is from the throne, Ruah from the angel and Nefesh from the wheel, to be in our image,” etc. The intention is Creation, Formation and Making. This one from the world of Emanation is wondrous in the eyes of those in Making, the living creature in Formation and the seraphim in Creation, for the icons of souls coming from these lack Hayyah and Yehidah.

Yad Yehudah - י

(10) “Whose numerical value”: Is 1,099, the value of “Bless the Lord, my soul,” for thus they are rooted in the Lord's Name.

Yad Yehudah - יא

(11) “All”: Pertain to Emanation.

Yad Yehudah - יב

(12) “She is one”: To Binah, for the soul emanated from her is not separate from Yehidah and Hayyah, unlike the other icons, in which the degrees are separate, as will follow.

Yad Yehudah - יג

(13) “She is pure”: To Malkhut, for even from her side she neither sins nor is punished.

Yad Yehudah - יד

(14) “Nor reincarnated”: As implied in Tikkunim 87: “‘Even the bird has found a house’—this is the first incarnation, Nefesh. ‘And the swallow a nest for herself’—this is the second incarnation, of Ruah. ‘Where she has placed her young’—this is the third incarnation, of Neshama, whose incarnation is ‘Your altars, Lord of Hosts.’” Thus Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama are those described as reincarnating, not what is above them.

Yad Yehudah - טו

(15) “Because she departs”: From the person before he sins, as stated in Tikkunim 70: “If a person's soul is in the manner of Emanation, if he sins,” etc. R. ʾA said: “Father, does sin attach to a person whose soul is from that place? Does he have sins? It is written, ‘No wrongdoing shall befall the righteous.’”[TN280160] He said to him, “Yes. This is what is written: ‘Your sins have separated between you and your God.’ What is ‘separated’? Rather, that this soul of Emanation is removed from him. The mystery of the matter is ‘Elohim said, Let the waters beneath the heavens be gathered,’ etc. His soul departs from him, and his body remains dry land, because his soul in the manner of Emanation departs from him,” etc. “It wished to return to him until that fortune passed from him[?]; the mystery of the matter is ‘The Rock who begot you, you weaken, and you forsake God,’” etc.[TN280161] The intention is not that the soul of Emanation departs after the sin, for then the difficulty returns: There it is written, “No wrongdoing shall befall the righteous.” Rather, it departs before the sin. So too is implied by the Zohar, Teṣavveh, which we shall copy below in section 2: Neshama, and all the more Ruah and Nefesh, is defiled through another worship, but far above it Yehidah and Hayyah are not defiled. The reason is that, just as no damage enters Emanation, as explained in the Zohar, Ki Teṣe, page 536, so there is no damage in the soul of Emanation. Therefore it does not enter Gehinnom, etc.

Yad Yehudah - טז

(16) “Except”: To rescue others and bring them up from Gehinnom, as stated in the Zohar, Pinḥas, page 405, in these words: “Even the completely righteous descend there. Why do they descend there? They take many guilty ones and bring them up above,” etc., as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapters 2 and 16. Do not wonder that she descends to Gehinnom for this, although she is from the world of Emanation and the Lord's Name is called upon her. On the contrary, from this one can learn precisely so, for they said, of blessed memory:

Yad Yehudah - יז

(17) “The righteous will eventually be called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He”: This is from the aspect of their soul of Emanation, corresponding to the entire Name, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - יח

(18) “It is written, ‘For through fire the Lord is judged’”: Concerning this our Sages of blessed memory said in Midrash Shoḥer Tov, cited in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 1, chapter 13, that in the future every nation will descend to Gehinnom with its god; Israel likewise with Him, blessed be He, as it were. Thus it is a merit for the soul of Emanation that its power through the Name's four letters should suffice to rescue the wicked from the Sheol below it.

Yad Yehudah - יט

(19) “This is the completion of the mission”: Of Gehinnom's fire. After the wicked of Israel ascend through this from the pit of destruction, Gehinnom ends: Its fire ceases and is annulled, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 5, chapter 7. The completion of its mission is its annulment, as explained there, part 1, chapter 7. Scripture's use of the language of judgment should not be thought strange.

Yad Yehudah - כ

(20) “For the Torah said, ‘Its owner was warned’”: They said, of blessed memory, “Let the ox's owner come,” etc. Israel is the Holy One's possession, blessed be He, as we learned in chapter 6 of Avot. Therefore He, blessed be He, stands over them at their judgment like the ox's owner, and thereby is, as it were, judged. It seems that for this the prophet said, “The ox knows its owner,” etc., “Israel does not know; My people do not understand.” Seemingly it is difficult: What connection is there between an ox and Israel, and what understanding is needed for this, that he said, “My people do not understand”? But according to our master's approach, the prophet says: Israel does not know the Lord, who is its owner, and they are His possession, blessed be He. If they knew this, they should refrain from sin out of regard for their Owner's glory, and understand that He, blessed be He, would, as it were, need to descend to Gehinnom for them, like the ox's owner over his ox. But Israel did not know, and therefore did not understand.

Yad Yehudah - כא

(21) “It is written, ‘For judgment shall return to righteousness,’” etc. (Psalms 94): The intention is likewise that judgment in Gehinnom returns and reaches Ṣedeq, a designation of the Shekhinah, because He, blessed be He, is the ox's owner. After Him all the upright of heart come into judgment: The righteous who will be called by the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He, to rescue another from Gehinnom's judgment.

Yad Yehudah - כב

(22) “Then the earth will split at their voice”: After its light is exhausted and annulled, Gehinnom will be greatly demolished from within itself and sanctified with the holiness of the Garden of Eden, until it becomes a great, spacious place for the dance of the righteous, as explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 5, chapter 6, and Maʾamar ḤKḤ[?], part 1, section 20; see there.[TN280162] This demolition is like cleaving and splitting the earth, until Gehinnom's hollow is filled with fissure upon fissure, and through this the site of its tent is demolished. So it was in Solomon's reign, when he was anointed: It is written, “The earth split at their voice” (1 Kings 1).

Yad Yehudah - כג

(23) We also explained it in this manner in its place, namely responsum 23, concerning what the Rabbis said, “The prophets spoke in the language of exaggeration,” in these words: “We too shall say, ‘The earth split at their voice.’ For we see that it sometimes folds up, in the sense of ‘The land upon which you lie,’ and sometimes expands, in the sense of ‘It widened and wound upward.’ Therefore it is called ‘the land of the gazelle.’ Then, in Solomon's reign, it split and expanded to the full extent possible within its nature at that time, since he was destined to sit upon the Lord's throne.”

Yad Yehudah - כד

(24) All the more so will Gehinnom expand for the King of kings, the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is written, “It too is prepared for the king; He made it deep and broad” (Isaiah 30), for the dance He will make for the righteous. For:

Yad Yehudah - כה

(25) It is written concerning it, “Glorify the Lord in the urim” (there, 24). Rashi explained in Menahem's name that this means fissures and branches, like “the viper's den,” meʾurat. According to our approach, the intention is: In the urim, the fissures the Lord will make in Gehinnom's hollow—even there glorify the Lord. It is also written concerning it:

Yad Yehudah - כו

(26) “Who has a fire in Zion and a furnace in Jerusalem” (there, 31). Our Sages of blessed memory expounded in chapter 2 of Eruvin: “‘Who has a fire in Zion’—this is Gehinnom; ‘and a furnace in Jerusalem’—this is its entrance.” This holds only while the fire is within it. When the fire is annulled, however, “Who has an opening in Zion” can refer to the many entrances and gates it will have when it expands. The word or here means a fissure.

Yad Yehudah - כז

(27) “Many meanings of light-openings are in or”: There are many usages of meʾorot in the root or. First, its plain sense: The intention is, “In the lights” with which the Lord will illuminate His face toward you, glorify Him, for it is written, “In the light of the King's countenance is life” (Proverbs 16). Second, the sense of a cleft, as it is written, “The crooked shall become,” etc. (Isaiah 16).[TN280163]

“Second”: Refers back to the word “icon,” as mentioned above. That is, the second icon is Neshama of Creation, and a degree according to the person[?], as he will call it below.[TN280164]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Supernal likeness”: As explained in the preceding section. It is also called:

Yad Yehudah - ג

“A minister before the King”: Although it is in the aspect of a servant, being from the side of created glory, as explained above, the status of servants is not equal, for “all are Your servants.” A king has many ministers, more honored than his other servants. Neshama of Creation, which is very important compared with Ruah and Nefesh, is at the degree of a minister before the King.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Three separate images”: Neshama from the throne, Ruah from the angel and Nefesh from the wheel, as we mentioned above. These are the degrees of the first icon clothed in these three images:

Rema of Fano

The second is the living being within man, the supernal likeness, a minister before the King. It is indeed a second icon, containing three separate images, called by their names after the degrees clothed in them from the great order we mentioned: Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama alone. See Maʾamar HaNefesh, chapter 17. For Hayyah and Yehidah are in the mystery of the head and do not need a garment, since it has no relation to them at all. These images extend from Creation, Formation and Making to every native Israelite and to the righteous convert dwelling among them, who has come to shelter specifically beneath the wings of the Shekhinah. He has no portion in the first order until those dwelling in his shade return to be borne from the womb, through the merit of the righteous who attend to them, as Moses did to Jethro and Naomi to Ruth. This is the meaning of their statement: If a bird entered beneath his wings on the Sabbath, he sits and guards it until nightfall. For the righteous are everywhere the mystery of the Sabbath, and the pure bird is the convert's soul—certainly Ṣipporah—which separates from the 974 generations that did not please the Maker of Creation, and comes to shelter “beneath his wings,” of equal

Neshama of Emanation is clothed in Neshama of Creation; Ruah from Tiferet of Emanation in Ruah of Formation; and Nefesh from Malkhut of Emanation in Nefesh of Making. Neshama of Creation contains all three.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“For Hayyah and Yehidah”: From Wisdom and Crown of Emanation, are in the mystery of the head and need not clothe themselves in the other worlds. This is what they say: “Three worlds it acquires through its throne, in three sefirot[?].”[TN280165]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Beneath the wings of the Shekhinah”: Specifically Malkhut, and not above her, as stated in the Zohar, Genesis, page 8: “The place upon which the Shekhinah rests has beneath her wings those who separate from the other side and from impurity and draw near to her, as it is written, ‘Let the earth bring forth a living soul according to its kind.’ If you say that the living soul included in Israel is appointed for inclusion, it repeats and says ‘according to its kind.’ How many porticoes and rooms, one within another, this Land of Life has! Beneath the wing they enter,” etc. “There are many sealed rooms and other ones, and other palaces in each and every wing. From them issue spirits to fly to include those converts who convert; they are called ‘a living soul.’ All enter beneath the Shekhinah's wings, and no further. But the souls of Israel issue from within the body of that tree; from there souls fly into this land, within her entrails, further and further within. The mystery is ‘For you shall be a desirable land.’ Therefore Israel is a precious son for whom her entrails yearn, and is called ‘borne from the womb,’ not from the wings. Converts have no portion in the upper tree, much less in its body; their portion is in the wings, and no further.” The intention is clear: Israel have Neshama of Emanation and of Creation, the body of the union of Tiferet and Malkhut, portions in relation to the upper tree, Binah, called “mother of children.” Of her it is written, “From whose womb did the ice emerge?” From there they fly to the children of Creation. Not so the converts' souls, which come into being only in Malkhut, not above her. Yet this does not mean numerical value. The righteous themselves are the Shekhinah's wings, literally the dove's wings, for through them she flies with joy and gladness of heart in the heights above. This righteous person who has acquired her, the convert's soul, sits and guards her until her sun darkens in this world, to shine in the World to Come; all his days he never takes his mind off her repair. Meanwhile she becomes his robe, an addition for the one who acquires her, besides that rabbinic robe belonging to every person, until both together merit the mystery of “I put on righteousness, and it clothed me,” to resemble the Most High, of whom it is written, “The Lord reigns; He has clothed Himself in majesty,” and then, “The Lord has clothed Himself.” This suffices.

But of Abraham, the pious elder, first among converts, one cannot say this: Rather, it was in his own hand, essentially and primarily, and did not depend upon the merit of others. This was for these reasons: First, he was before the giving of the Torah. Second, they said of him that throughout his time in the world, supernal Lovingkindness did not need to perform its work. Third, election was stated of him. Fourth, his heart was found faithful, even the evil within him. Fifth, the greatness and number of his trials. All are intimated in the additional he of Abraham. Of it is written, “I planted you a soreq vine”: Its explanation is specifically the shureq vowel without waw, namely qibbuṣ sefatayim, three points one above another. Abraham is in Malkhut, certainly a righteous convert; specifically Malkhut of Making, as though they had no three degrees in the soul; rather, also in Malkhut of Creation and Formation, and their degrees are Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama: Neshama from the side of Binah in Malkhut of Creation; Ruah from Tiferet in Malkhut of Formation—these are the rooms and palaces in Malkhut mentioned—and Nefesh from upper Malkhut of Making. In any event they have no portion in the first order, that of Emanation, until they change to become also “borne from the womb.” This is:

Yad Yehudah - ח

“The merit of the righteous who attend to them”: In the manner stated in the Zohar, Mishpaṭim, page 186, in these words: “Whoever enters and takes possession of converts' property first acquires it. So too all those holy upper souls whom the Holy One, blessed be He, appoints in the lower Garden of Eden, as we said: All go out at known times and ascend to delight in the upper Garden of Eden. They encounter those converts' souls. Whichever of these ascending souls takes hold of them holds them, acquires them, clothes itself in them and ascends,” etc.; see there.

memory”: In the Gemara, chapter 13 of Shabbat, page 107, “It entered for him, wings,” etc. [TN280166] See Rashi's explanation.

Yad Yehudah - י

“For the righteous are everywhere the mystery of the Sabbath”: As stated in Raʿaya Meheimna, Lekh Lekha, page 42: “Torah scholars, children of the King and Matron, are called Sabbaths and festivals.”

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Separating from the 974 generations”: Of whom they said, of blessed memory, in Bereshit Rabbah, that the Holy One, blessed be He, would create worlds and destroy them, saying, “These do not please Me.”

Yad Yehudah - יב

“Beneath his wings”: Has the numerical value 974.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“The dove's wings”: A designation of the Shekhinah. The righteous are literally her wings, for through their good deeds the Shekhinah flies upward by them: The mystery of “the circle and the shining one; see in this holy spirit[?],” as is known. [TN280167]

Yad Yehudah - יד

“And she”: This convert's soul becomes a robe for the righteous person attending to it, besides the garment made from his other commandments,

Isaac in Yesod, the end of the Life of the Worlds; Jacob in Tiferet. They are “entirely true seed”: In each, the son's strength exceeds the father's. The Holy Spirit asks, “How have you changed for Me,” so that Abraham is above them all in Lovingkindness, Isaac beneath him in Power, and Jacob after him in Tiferet, his original place? It answers itself: “The degenerate shoots of a foreign vine.” Since a righteous shoot was born from Abraham, and from him the choicest of the patriarchs, whose bed was whole, Abraham and Isaac ceased to be traced after Terah and Nahor so as to begin with disgrace; rather, everything follows the conclusion.

A Noahide, however, can merit counterparts of these images, accompanying him from three similar degrees in the spirituality of Making alone; but he cannot reach the portions of Emanation within it. Both these and those are described as revolving, each sharpening his fellow's countenance, two or three times for a complete ephah, the human heart; for the limbs there is no number. Needless to say, the mystery of impregnation occurs among them. At the resurrection, the most complete of the revolutions will merit them, and from them multiplying branches will shine upon the flocks of its fellows as needed, like lighting one lamp from another. Any revolution described as a change of species has no relation whatsoever to this order, except in the manner explained in the Tikkunim: A person may labor with different qualities, such as being light as an eagle or mighty as a lion, like the changing called the rabbinic robe, as is known.

“To the mystery”: Of what Scripture says, “I put on righteousness, and it clothed me” (Job 29), expounded beautifully concerning the Shekhinah: He becomes a garment for her, and for this she clothes him. So too here.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“For it is written, ‘The Lord reigns; He has clothed Himself in majesty’”: See the book Yonat Elem, chapter 1.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“But of Abraham our father”: One cannot say that his soul was not from a high place above the high, for it is from the Lord, blessed be He, by His own hand, in His own essence and in the first instance, without the merit of others.[TN280168]

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Second”: He, peace be upon him, was from there, from supernal Lovingkindness, as it is said of him in Sefer HaBahir, “Throughout his time in the world,” etc. We alluded to this in Maʾamar Heqor Din, chapter 19.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Third”: That election was chosen in him, as it is written, “Who chose Abram” (Nehemiah 9).

Yad Yehudah - כ

“Fourth”: It is written of him there, “You found his heart faithful before You.”

Yad Yehudah - כ - continued

Since it says levavo and not libbo, it follows that his whole heart, with both inclinations, the good and the evil, was faithful.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“And all”: These five virtues.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“Of it”: As it is written, “I planted you a soreq vine, entirely true seed; how have you changed for Me into the degenerate shoots of a foreign vine?” (Jeremiah 2). The hint in soreq to the shureq vowel points to three qualities: Malkhut, Yesod and Tif’eret. This is without waw, for the name Waw alludes to the upper union, KH[?], as stated in the Tikkunim: “Shureq of three points: when the letter waw departs from her, she brings forth knowledge from that which she took from above,” etc. Scripture says, “I planted you a soreq vine”: Abraham in Malkhut, etc.[TN280169]

Yad Yehudah - כג

“They are ‘entirely true seed’”: These three words designate those three qualities. Furthermore, “true seed”—certainly a son: The son's degree is above his father's.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“It answers itself”: The reason is this: “the degenerate shoots of a foreign vine”—the lineage of Terah and his ancestors has already ceased and faces of the Chariot, which never ceased to have all their faces in the likeness of a human face. Yet at the time of judgment we found among them that the ox's face changed to a cherub's face. From this we learned the possibility of their revolving into little children, of whom it is written, “Whom shall he teach knowledge, and whom shall he make understand a report? Those weaned from milk, removed from the breasts.” On this basis, Rav Saadiah Gaon's statement is justified concerning the many evils and troubles that our eyes see entwined and rising upon the necks of some infants: It is to benefit them. For the conclusion of this matter is better than its beginning, through lack of the tradition alone, as we explained in Maʾamar HaNefesh. We have further matters concerning these three images; you will hear them among what follows shortly concerning the third order.

These too depart when deep sleep falls upon people, to have paths among the higher beings, each according to his merit, in the sense of “I sleep, but my heart is awake.” Then imagination gains strength in the two lower orders that we shall explain, and a dream comes with much business. Yet there is no guarantee for these three images, whether far or near, because they possess free choice, and the River of Fire is their cleansing. They are no better than Metatron in the chapter Ein Doreshin, Gabriel in the chapter Yom HaKippurim, and Elijah in the chapter HaPoʿalim, where, through an action, what happened happened. The two lower ones, Ruah and Nefesh, may descend to the lower Gehinnom, not come to an end, and the greatness of the children bestows greatness upon their fathers, so that they are traced as holy seed from Abraham and no higher than him. Thus his power[?] is no longer to be traced from Malkhut, as with an ordinary person, but from his own particular quality. [TN280170]

Yad Yehudah - כה

“But a Noahide,” etc.: This returns to what was said above, that these three images extend to every person in Israel and to the convert, as just mentioned. A Noahide, however, also has a different measure. They said in the Zohar, page 125: “The souls of the idolatrous nations—from what place do they come? Rabbi Eleazar said: from those crowns of the left,” etc. In Pequdei, page 485, it extols the rank of the righteous among the nations, of whom they said, of blessed memory, that they have a portion in the World to Come. Its words concerning the seventh palace are: “At this entrance stand four entrances,” etc., “for a shining light is seen in those entrances, and it is a place prepared for those righteous ones among the other nations,” etc.; see there.[TN280171] Just as their reward is a place of light, so, without doubt, their souls too are originally from a place that shines more brightly.[TN280172] This follows what we know: Emanation is clothed in Creation, Creation in Formation, and Formation in Making. Emanation too, after clothing itself in Creation, clothes itself in Formation, and after Formation, in Making, until the garments of Emanation, Creation, Formation and Making are found within the spirituality of Making. From there one can raise to the righteous among the nations three degrees—Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama—found in Making by way of clothing, but not from the side of Emanation clothed within it.[TN280173]

Yad Yehudah - כו

"Both these and those": The three images of the second icon for Israel and their counterparts in Making for a Noahide are described as reincarnating, unlike the first icon, which we said above does not reincarnate.

Yad Yehudah - כז

"Two or three times": The reincarnations are three, as stated in many places in the Zohar and the Tikkunim, from what is written, "Indeed, God does all these things two or three times with a man." It is also written, "For three transgressions of Israel, and for four I will not bring him back." The Zohar, Genesis, page 150, for themselves, except when they happen to have filthy garments through their evil choice. For they very much need to consume their impurity, like fire burning the rust attached to refined silver: The silver loses nothing, yet it is not prevented from burning in fire without being consumed, in the sense of "Gehinnom's fire does not rule over Israel's transgressors." This means complete domination, to destroy them—Heaven forbid—for although he sinned, he is Israel.

The image of Neshama, however, neither needs nor becomes involved with the lower Gehinnom unless it descends there to bring another up. This too is no small cleansing for it on account of some inferior thought. It is one chastisement in a person's heart: Certainly good, with no evil at all, causing him honorable repair far beyond a hundred lashes. Then, like a beast in its innocence that descends into a valley, the Lord's spirit guides it, for to Him alone actions are measured; this is reckoned a great merit for that image. But the severe thoughts of transgression arising from a previous transgression, which are truly harder than it because it is in the material and they in the spiritual, cannot touch the image of Neshama at all, for on its side the shells are few and far from holiness. In the image of Ruah they are half and half, in the mystery of the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil. Although they are close, approaching one another, they are not mixed by nature: This is by itself, and that by itself. Here a person must take very, very great care not to mix sacred with profane; this is the says, "I will not bring him back in further reincarnation." This concerns the soul's source, which has ascended and reached a whole measure; see there. For it is written, "Where were you when I founded the earth?" Our Sages, of blessed memory, expounded this in Shemot Rabbah concerning the drops of souls. It is like the heart in a person; the entirety of what branches from it, however, is like limbs. Their reincarnations have no number.[TN280174] This is what is said in Sefer HaBahir: "Why is there a righteous person for whom things are bad? Because the righteous person already existed formerly and is now punished," etc. "For how long?" He said to him, "For a thousand generations," etc.; see there. Thus they reincarnate even for a thousand generations. So it is in the Zohar, Genesis, and in the Tikkunim.

Yad Yehudah - כח

"Needless to say": The secular ones[?] of Israel and the righteous among the nations—the mystery of impregnation, when a dead person's soul is sometimes impregnated in a living person's soul.[TN280175]

Yad Yehudah - כט

"At the resurrection," etc.: It is known from the words of "one complaining[?]," who wrote in a discourse to the Rashba—that is, in his responsum, section 418—what he argued against belief in reincarnation.[TN280176] As later writers objected: It is divided between two or three bodies, yet there is only one soul; how can all three exist together, since each living being has one soul? In truth this difficulty is needless. The Zohar, Ḥayyei Sarah, page 98, already disclosed it; it raises the objection and resolves it: "Rabbi Hezekiah said: If you say that all the world's bodies will rise and awaken from mystery of separation.

But in the image of Nefesh there are two disadvantages, for all is dross, even the small amount of good amidst the abundance of evil. Your sign is the contribution to the Tabernacle from Egypt's spoil, except that it was purified in Israel. Our lord David's contribution to the Tabernacle likewise gathered them from lands—from Aram, Moab and the Ammonites—and Solomon likewise. We must separate them with all our strength. Each of the images comprises all three; thus defective thoughts exist also in these two, although they serve essentially and primarily, one for speech and the other for action.

their dust, what will become of those bodies planted with one soul? Rabbi Yose said: Those bodies that did not merit and did not succeed are as though they had not existed. As they were dry wood in this world, so too at that time. The last body, which was planted and succeeded and took root properly, will rise," etc.; see there. Yet we need to know: If the soul merited performing commandments in all the bodies, what will become of them at the resurrection? In truth all will rise from dust, for the soul divides into skulls and many branches, like a lamp from which many lamps are kindled. This will be according to the need of the bodies belonging to that soul. The sage, our master Rabbi Manasseh, may his light shine, likewise explains this in his book Nishmat Hayyim, discourse 4, chapter 15.

Yad Yehudah - ל

"Any revolution": And incarnation which sometimes occurs when a human soul reincarnates in another species, such as a domestic or wild animal, according to the kabbalists' books, has no relation to this icon of Neshama of Creation, for it does not reincarnate in another species.

Yad Yehudah - לא

"Except in the manner explained": In Tikkunim 70, page 132, in these words: "There are souls from windows, fine[?], which come in incarnations like those called the constellation Lion, constellation Ox, constellation Eagle, constellation Maiden, constellation Scorpion, constellation Lamb. As you consider the twelve tribes, likened to animals: This one to a lion, 'a lion's cub,' etc.; Joseph, 'his firstborn ox,'" etc.; see there.[TN280177] The intention is that they reincarnate in a person who has some animal's trait, whether barking or crouching, according to

Yad Yehudah - לב

"Yet": According to what they said, of blessed memory, in chapter 2 of Ḥagigah: One verse says, "The likeness of their faces was a human face," etc., "and an ox's face on the left," etc.; and it is written, "Each had four faces: The first face was a cherub's face," etc. But it does not count an ox! Resh Lakish said: Ezekiel sought mercy for it and turned it into a cherub. He said before Him: "Master of the World, an accuser cannot become a defender." What is a cherub? Rabbi Abbahu said: "Like a child," for in Babylonia they call a child ravya. Consequently the influx descending from it likewise enables a person to reincarnate in little children. Do not object: How will the reincarnating young person purify his way, when the child still has neither Torah nor good deeds? For it is said in Scripture, "Whom shall he teach knowledge," etc., and our Sages, of blessed memory, said in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah that the Holy One, blessed be He, studies Torah with them. This is the prevention[?] and elevation for those reincarnating in them.[TN280178]

Yad Yehudah - לג

"On the basis of these matters," etc.: For Rav Saadiah Gaon's view is that the Holy One, blessed be

Yad Yehudah - לג - continued

He, afflicts little children in order to benefit them in their end. Yet this is no favorable rationale; it is, rather, a defective rationale.[TN280179]

Yad Yehudah - לד

“The conclusion of this matter”: Is good and upright compared with the beginning and the beginning of clarification[?] among those who did not know the belief in reincarnation.[TN280180]

Yad Yehudah - לה

“Through lack of tradition”: And of the received teaching, it would have been reasonable to say that the sufferings of little children are what benefit them afterward, all their days. Not so now: we can justify Rav Saadiah’s words only according to our approach.[TN280181]

Yad Yehudah - לו

“And in no other way”: Apart from it. Namely, the Holy One, blessed be He, afflicts little children to benefit them on account of their incarnations, apart from their sins in this one.

Yad Yehudah - לז

“These too”: The three images in this icon depart during sleep, as stated in the Zohar, Lekh Lekha, page 283: “‘My soul yearns for You at night; with my spirit within me I seek You early,’ etc. Come and see: When a person goes up to his bed, his soul leaves him and ascends above,” etc. “With the body there remains only one trace of a measure of the heart's vitality,” etc. “That soul which merits receiving it, to appear before one who already sees days[?],” etc.[TN280182] All the more so for Nefesh and Ruah; this has already been heard concerning them.

Yad Yehudah - לח

“Then”: The power of imagination increases in icons 3 and 4.

Yad Yehudah - לט

“Yet there is no guarantee”: For the three images included in this icon, as there is for the icon from Emanation, which we said above does not sin. For of the second icon they said in the Zohar, Teṣavveh, page 98: “‘Cease from man, whose soul is in his nostrils.’ When the Holy One, blessed be He, created man, He made him in the supernal image and breathed into him a holy spirit comprising three, as we have established: He has Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama. Above them all is Neshama, the upper power to know and observe the Holy One's commandments, blessed be He. If he introduces that holy Neshama into another worship, he defiles it and leaves his Master's worship, for these three powers are one in him: Nefesh, Ruah and his Neshama join as one and become one,” etc. Thus Neshama is defiled and made impure. Although evil is not in its essence, for from Creation's side all is good, they nevertheless possess free choice and require cleansing in the upper Gehinnom, the River of Fire, as stated in the Zohar, Pequdei, page 423: “When Neshama ascends, that appointed one takes its garment and enters with it as far as the River of Fire, for Neshama needs to bathe and be whitened there.”

Yad Yehudah - מ

“For they are no better than Metatron”: Of whom they said in chapter 2 of Ḥagigah that they brought him out and struck him with sixty lashes of fire because of Elisha Aḥer. They likewise said of Gabriel in the section Yom HaKippurim, concerning the fiery coals the cherub gave him, that he was told, “You should have done as you were commanded.” In the chapter HaPoʿalim, concerning Rabbi Ḥiyya: When he reached “Who revives the dead,” the world shook. They said in heaven, “Who revealed secrets in the world?” “Elijah.” They brought Elijah and struck him, etc.

Yad Yehudah - מא

“Which are Ruah and Nefesh”: In this icon.

Yad Yehudah - מב

“Not for themselves”: For they are included in the icon of Neshama, and fire does not rule over them, as mentioned, except if it happens that their evil garments[?] cling to them.[TN280183]

Yad Yehudah - מג

“This means complete domination”: As explained in Maʾamar Heqor Din, part 3, chapter 26.

Yad Yehudah - מד

“But the image of Neshama”: It alone does not need the lower Gehinnom, for even the evil garments cannot approach it, because of its different character[?].[TN280184]

Yad Yehudah - מה

“To bring others up”: From Gehinnom, as mentioned above. This will also be reckoned a cleansing for Neshama itself, on account of some evil thoughts, as explained in MʾH[?] there, chapter 16.[TN280185] Of it they said, of blessed memory, in the first chapter of Berakhot: Better is:

Yad Yehudah - מו

“One chastisement in a person's heart”: Than a hundred lashes. For this Neshama is certainly good, since it is from Creation, where there is no evil at all. The shells are few and need to be cleansed with very little cleansing, and through some single chastisement toward Him it will be clarified in a person's heart.

Yad Yehudah - מז

“But”: Those that are hard come from transgression; this is not attributed to them in themselves, contrary to what those who raise doubts may ask: Did not our Sages, of blessed memory, say, “Thoughts of transgression are harder than transgression”? For in saying this they intend thoughts coming from a prior transgression: he dwells in thought upon a transgression that he has already committed and tasted. These are thoughts of transgression that are hard when they come from an earlier transgression. These truly cannot touch the image of Neshama—not so other thoughts. [TN280186]

Yad Yehudah - מח

“In the image of Ruah”: In Formation, rivers and streams are needed for cleansing, because good and evil dwell there in the mystery of the Tree of Knowledge, mixed, as is known.

“But the image of Nefesh”: They are clothed in filthy shells there, and good too is mixed with evil.

Yad Yehudah - נא

“And your sign”: It may be that most of it was from evil, from the spoil of Egypt, had the Shekhinah not purified it in Israel. So too concerning David. [TN280187]

“All of it is found”: As mentioned above.

Yad Yehudah - נד

“Thus,” etc.: That is, it is no difficulty how evil thoughts can appear in the image of Ruah and Nefesh, when it is known that action is in Nefesh, speech in Ruah and thought in Neshama. This applies only from the aspect of their particular concerns; but from the aspect of the living one[?], all is found, and thought likewise pertains. [TN280189]

“The third”: Among the icons, is the degree of man's powers[?]: Namely Ruah from Tiferet in the world of Formation, which will be called the lower form, as will be explained, and a servant before the King, as mentioned above. They said in the Zohar concerning “Elohim created man in His image”:

Rema of Fano

The third is the growing being within man, the lower form, a servant before the King. It is the extension into the sensed world of the two lower ones among the three images we mentioned, for their highest is also reckoned a head. This third icon exists separately for Adam and separately for David, and likewise for our righteous Messiah and all who resemble them. Even loving

Yad Yehudah - ד

“It exists,” etc.: This icon exists in them in three incarnations under the name Adam[?], David, Messiah, which are three incarnations. They do not share it, for this icon exists for each separately.

If the eye were companions do not share it, except by way of impregnation. It has two degrees: One great, truly called ṣelem, “form,” of which it is written, “Only in a form does a man walk”; and one small, called ṣel, “shadow,” of which it is written, “For our days upon earth are a shadow.” The higher one's entire purpose is to be a complete counterpart for Neshama from the second icon. The lower one likewise divides in two, the garments of Ruah and Nefesh, in the mystery of the rabbinic robe prepared for the three images in simple potential from the six days of Creation; it only lacks the performance of commandments, their blessings and their intentions for its completion. All depart from those sealed for death on the night of the seal and return until thirty days before the dying. Then the higher one alone goes and does not return, with Neshama of Creation itself, which ascends of itself to choose its portion. It is not taken by a messenger; rather, it comes and goes according to the person's merit, but does not settle permanently within him. It also returns with the appearance of the likeness of the Lord's glory at the final departure, of which it is written, “You add their spirit; they die.” It is written, “You return man to crushing (DKA)”: An acronym for this, and also for another mystery, “a likeness like the appearance of the first man.”

The complete and great among the children of Israel perceived this departure thirty days in advance, for this alone applies to Moses our master, not the departure on the night of the seal, which has no connection whatsoever with one whose days and given permission to see, a person would see above his head a form marked with the person’s configuration. In that form the person is created. Until the form that his Master sends above his head stands and is found there, the person is not created. This is what is written, ‘Elohim created man in His image.’ That form is prepared opposite him until he goes out into the world. When he goes out, he grows in that form and goes in that form. This is what is written, ‘Only in a form does a man walk.’ This form comes from above when those spirits issue from their place,” etc. “Come and see: this holy form—as the person goes and grows, another form is made from the configuration of his image. They are joined together, and this bears that. When they are present, the person is protected, his body remains in existence, and his spirit dwells within them. When his days draw near, they pass away from him: this ascends to that, and the person remains without protection. Then what is written? ‘Until the day breathes and the shadows flee’: two shadows.”[TN280192]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Like the higher one[?],” etc.: Since this icon has no Neshama of Creation as the second icon does, this form is needed as a counterpart for Neshama.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"The lower one": This is because of the garment this icon has in Ruah and Nefesh. The matter concerns the mystery of the rabbinic robes: a person's good deeds and the Torah's commandments make precious garments above, as is known from the Zohar, VaYehi and VaYaqhel. These garments are prepared in potential for every person from the three images, Nefesh, Ruah and Neshama: the performance of the commandments is for Nefesh; speech, namely the blessings, is for Ruah; thought and their intention are for Neshama. Afterward they come into actuality. Thus the garments are prepared in potential even for transgressors.[TN280193]

Yad Yehudah - י

"All depart": From those sealed for death[?] on the night of Hoshana Rabbah, as stated in the Zohar, Emor, page 200: "From that festival night, at the beginning they proclaim the appointed ones, and slips go out. After they take them, the forms pass away and are not found[?]," etc.; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יא

"They return": Into the person until thirty days before his death. Then the higher one, etc., as stated in the Zohar, VaYehi, page 503: "Rabbi Yose said: when a person's days draw years have been fulfilled. During his life they wept secretly for all those thirty days, for Scripture publicized and openly proclaimed their merit and righteousness, which they had performed in secret. Others wept for another thirty days, of which it is written, "The days of weeping in mourning for Moses ended." This implies that the first days involved weeping without mourning. The latter were for all Israel, since all were his relatives. Truth shows its way, for this is a clear plain meaning.

Throughout these thirty days before the dying, the illumination of this Neshama, which is merely a trace, remains weak from then onward, because it is wrapped only within the image of Ruah. Each night, when it ascends to see and be seen with Neshama itself, it is shown its place of honor in that world. Of it is said, "No man has power over the spirit to confine the spirit." This means that the principal Ruah does not fully clothe or compress within itself that remaining trace of Neshama. This trace is now called Ruah after its redeemer who is close to it. The lower garment, in its two parts, does not move from there until the day of death, of which it is written, "Until the day breathes and the shadows flee." The reason is that these essentially rule and act within the two parts of the vital soul which we shall mention below. Not so the form, which has no essential proximity to bodily powers, but only spreads over them a shelter of wholeness. Even when it departs, nothing whatsoever is diminished from a person's chosen or natural actions, or near, for thirty days they proclaim concerning him in the world; even the birds of heaven proclaim concerning him. If he merits, they proclaim concerning him for thirty days in the lower Garden of Eden. Throughout all those thirty days, his soul leaves him each night, ascends and sees its place in that world. That person does not know or perceive, and does not rule over his soul during all those thirty days as formerly, for it is written, 'There is no ruler over the spirit to confine the spirit,' etc. Rabbi Yehudah said: from when those thirty days begin, the person's form grows dark and the image seen upon the ground is withheld." Further there, page 427[?]: "'Before the sun grows dark,' etc.—this is the holy Neshama, withheld from the person thirty days before he leaves the world. On that day it is withheld from him and is not seen. Why is it withheld from him? Because the holy Neshama ascends and passes from him and is not seen. Do not say that it is when a person dies and weakens that this Neshama passes from him. Rather, while he is alive in his strength it passes from him, and this Neshama grows dark and does not illuminate Ruah, and Ruah does not illuminate Nefesh. Then the form passes from him and does not shine for him," etc.[TN280194] It is consequently clear that these words concern Neshama of Creation and the form.

Yad Yehudah - יב

“And returns,” etc.: For, if this were not the illumination of Neshama, how could it leave that person every night, when she has already ascended and passed away? See shortly below.[TN280202]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“It returns,” etc.: In the Zohar there, page 425: “When a person lies dying and judgment rests upon him to depart this world, a spirit is added to him which he did not have during his days. Once it rests upon him and cleaves to him, he sees what he did not merit during his days, because that spirit has been added to him. When it is added to him and he sees, he departs this world. This is what is written, ‘You add their spirit; they die,’ etc. It is written, ‘No man shall see Me and live’: In their lives, no, but in their deaths they merit it.” All the more so will Neshama of Creation return with that spirit.

from all human thoughts and stratagems, their punishment and reward, during these thirty days. From the shadows we mentioned he has a first and a second reflection throughout his life. Not so the demons, whose only garment is from Making within Making.

The active intellect is the angel appointed over pregnancy, a supernal messenger to clothe the entirety of this third image in the human body. Here God, exalted be He, makes known to it the nature of the form that will rest upon the drop presented to it at that hour: Whether it will be wise or foolish. It is judged, together with all beneath it, by the Torah's thirty-six excisions, corresponding to thirty-six portions of a myriad of myriads, which are six hundred thousand populations, as we shall explain in Maʾamar Ṣevaʾot HaShem, with Heaven's help. The sinning soul is cut off from them, and the mystery is “From the breath of God they perish.” Needless to say, it is judged in its own essence in the lower Gehinnom according to the cleansing required. It alone is the intellectual soul for the investigators, who have no portion above it, because they hated knowledge and rejected the Noahides' Torah. It was even permitted to them from the time “the Lord came from Sinai,” for He shone and appeared, but they did not listen and did not choose the fear of the Lord. Therefore they shall eat the fruit of their way; apart from Me they behold, and no one teaches them any divine law. Therefore in their life they are called dead: Dreamers lying down, loving to slumber, who have no

“Not the departure on the night of the seal”: It takes place after the judgment is completed and does not apply to Moses, for of this man Moses it is written, “I am one hundred and twenty years old today”—today my days and years have been fulfilled. His death is not dependent on the judgment of Rosh HaShanah and what accompanies it.[TN280196]

Yad Yehudah - יט

“They wept”: In ShZ[?] it is said, “The children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab for thirty days; the days of weeping in mourning for Moses ended.”[TN280197] Since it says “days of weeping in mourning,” it follows that there are also days of weeping without mourning: Namely, before his death, when mourning does not apply. The righteous and pious who perceived Neshama's departure wept during all those thirty days. Scripture informs us and publicizes the righteousness they performed before his death. After the death, however, all Israel wept for another thirty days in mourning[?].

soul except from the shadow. In it are all the reflections and thoughts of worldly vanities. This does not depart during sleep, as we explained.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“Throughout”: The thirty days before death, when Neshama of Creation ascends, a trace of Neshama nevertheless remains weak within the person. This trace is her illumination, and its place is in the image of Ruah, namely in the part of the whole[?] which does not depart. It is wrapped with it and clothed in it, the reverse of how Ruah was initially wrapped with Neshama.[TN280198]

Yad Yehudah - כא

“Each night,” etc.: What is stated in the Zohar, VaYeḥi—“Throughout those thirty days his soul leaves him each night, ascends and sees its place in that world,” etc.—does not mean Neshama itself, since she has already departed. Does she return every day so that she should ascend, so that she should ascend above every night? Rather, the words certainly concern Neshama's illumination remaining below. In any event it ascends each night with Neshama, whether she is already above or has returned. Thus it is fitting that the Zohar brings proof from “No man has power over the spirit.” If it concerned the upper Neshama, it would be difficult: What proof is there from Miriam[?] for Neshama? [TN280199] Therefore it certainly speaks of Neshama's illumination, which is the aspect of the life-powers of the verse.

Yad Yehudah - כב

“That is”: The image of Ruah in its essence—so it truly is, and it is the principal one—cannot confine and hold the remaining trace and illumination of Neshama. This is the “confining the spirit” of which it speaks: Neshama's illumination is likewise called Ruah because it is clothed within it, as mentioned.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“The lower garment”: Of the shadow, in its two parts belonging to Ruah and Nefesh.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“For these two garments”: Rule in their essence over the two parts of the vital soul: Namely in the form of the bones and in the bones themselves, because we shall mention it below in the next section. For this reason they cannot separate from them.

Yad Yehudah - כה

“Not so the form”: The higher one, which has no proximity to the body from its own essence, for its proximity is incidental, namely from its clothing itself and spreading over them a shelter of peace; concerning this—and therefore even when it departs, etc.

Yad Yehudah - כו

“From the shadows we mentioned”: A person has a reflection and a reflection of a reflection, as they said, of blessed memory, in the last chapter of Yevamot: A reflection from the side of the shadow, and a reflection of a reflection from the side of the form.

Yad Yehudah - כז

“Not so the demons”: Who have only a reflection, as stated there. The reason is that they have only one garment, and only the lower part in Making.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“The active intellect”: Which the philosophical sages mention everywhere, is the angel appointed over pregnancy. By the decree of the watchers and the word of the holy ones, it brings down from the highest heavens the image of Ruah in its world into the pregnant womb at formation. Forty days before it, it presents the drop before the Holy One, blessed be He, saying: “What will become of this drop? Wise or foolish, rich or poor?” As they said, of blessed memory, in chapter 2 of Niddah. For thus from the image of Ruah is “the coming part[?],” appointed over matters of foolishness and generality[?]. [TN280200]

Yad Yehudah - כט

“It is judged”: And everything included beneath it: The two shadows and garments mentioned, and likewise Nefesh with its powers.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“The mystery”: Is intimated in what is written, “From the breath of God” (Job 4), for the souls of the six hundred thousand populations are called “the breath of God.” See there in Maʾamar Ṣevaʾot HaShem.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Needless to say, it is judged in its own essence”: Unlike Ruah and Nefesh of the second icon, which are judged in Gehinnom only from the side of the filthy garments mentioned above.

Yad Yehudah - לב

“According to the cleansing required”: For all its transgressions and sins.

Yad Yehudah - לג

“It alone is the intellectual soul”: Known to the investigative sages. They too heard and concluded that the human soul stands and exists in its own right, outside and above him, and disagreed with Aristotle, who thought it was a natural form of the body. Both describe man, yet they know and understand only this image of Ruah and Nefesh. The Nefesh of which they spoke comprises three powers: Inanimate, growing and speaking, like an animal's soul; they added to man something like Ruah from the intellectual soul's side.[TN280201] But above this, they and their groups have neither portion nor inheritance. So it is fitting for them, because they hated knowledge, etc.

Yad Yehudah - לד

“Except from the shadow”: That is, the second part within Ruah, not from the form.

Yad Yehudah - לה

“This does not depart during sleep”: Like the form and powers[?], as is implied by the words of the living God above.

Yad Yehudah - לו

“As we explained”: Above, that the shadow does not leave a person throughout his life.

The fourth icon is the vital soul, the degree of the inanimate in man. It is also called the lower likeness because it belongs to the world of Making, which is a likeness of Formation, called the lower image, as mentioned above in section 3. This soul is also called a maidservant, as stated in the Zohar and in Tikkunim, T-H. [TN280203]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“For it is written, ‘Only,’” etc. (Psalms 62): An allusion, etc., to the soul as inanimate.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“As stated there”: And as mentioned above in the Sages' statement: “A maidservant at the sea saw what Ezekiel did not see,”

Rema of Fano

The fourth is the inanimate within man, the lower likeness, a maidservant before the King, of whom it is written, “Only to God is my soul silent.” This is the vital soul which saw through sense and was sanctified to her Master when she said at the sea, “This is my God, and I will make Him a dwelling”: I shall be a dwelling for Him. For the throne is closer than she, even if we liken it within ourselves to the third order; and the garment is closer than both, which may be expounded concerning the second. Both are by way of a close metaphor. But the first icon has no relation to a palace, a throne or a garment: Only, “The Lord's portion is His people.” It is written, “Their children too shall sit forever for your throne.” It does not say “on your throne,” but “for the throne,” for the etc. Even she, the lowest of the icons, merited in her vision to see the Lord's face, for in lowliness and materiality this depends upon consecrating oneself to Him and upon purifying his mouth[?].[TN280204]

Yad Yehudah - ד

“I shall be a dwelling for Him”: As explained in the treatise Heqor Din, part 5, chapter 26; see there. [TN280205]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“For the throne is closer than it”: For, accordingly—[TN280206]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“We may liken it within ourselves”: we would be a throne for Him from the aspect of the third icon.

Yad Yehudah - ו - continued

The garment is closer, of which it may be said: “This is the one who possesses the second icon.” [TN280207]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Both, by a close metaphor”: in truth it is known that the world of Creation is the throne. Yet because the worlds of Creation, Formation, and Making are all garments for one another, and through them are also garments for Emanation, it is fitting, on account of their degrees one above another, to apply metaphorically to them the names garment, throne, and palace, and likewise to their offspring, the icons of souls. Accordingly, it is written… [TN280208]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“There is no relation”: For the first icon, to compare it even with its garment, as it is written, “The Lord's portion is His people,” and also, “The Lord is my portion, says my soul.”

Yad Yehudah - ט

“It is written, ‘Also their children,’” etc. (Psalms 132): the intention is also that they should be the throne of His glory. The expression “for the throne” hints that the throne was created principally for them. To indicate this, He, blessed be He, placed Jacob’s form engraved upon the throne. [TN280209] throne was created from the beginning only for their sake. Therefore Jacob's face is engraved upon it.

Know that when the elements are compounded through the motions of the heavenly bodies, so that a human form visible to the eyes may rest upon them, this vital soul comes into being. Its creation at that time is only in the respect in which it is a power in a body. It goes forth to its activity and labor through the angel we mentioned, which brings it into being and forms it in its two powers. The first is the vapor of the bones, the natural heat, a basis for the vegetative soul concerning which rich or poor is decreed. This is the animal soul, whose occupations are evil in idle matters for one dragged after them. Wisdom strengthens the wise person to rule over it until it descends to serve as some vitality for the righteous persons' bodies in the grave. Through their perfection, having no jealousy in their hearts, they sanctify and purify themselves, and their bones do not rot. The second is the distress of the flesh, a basis for the sensitive soul concerning which strong or weak is said. This is the spirit speaking worldly vanities, and a worm in the grave is as painful to it as a needle in living flesh, until the flesh is consumed. But the righteous give thanks to His Name, blessed be He, for of them it is written, “Even my flesh shall dwell securely.” They are sleepers in the dusty earth; their sleep is pleasant without hindrance, for the worm has no portion or inheritance in their flesh at all. The righteous Judge delivers their bones from the dissolution of their compound

Yad Yehudah - י

“Know,” etc.: The natural investigators’ view is not extraordinary when they say that the embryo’s formation is established through the balanced compounding of the elements upon the seed, assisted by the motion of the spheres and constellations. Then the vital soul’s power, hidden within it, emerges into actuality as the external human form comes to rest upon it.[TN280210] This vital soul includes the vegetative, sensitive and speaking souls. The vegetative power requires natural warmth; this likewise serves it, and it perishes without it. As long as it is present, the human being goes on growing. The sensitive power requires skin, flesh, sinews and membranes, all included under “flesh”; this too is a vehicle for Nefesh, and likewise for sensation, as physicians know. We already mentioned above Aristotle’s view that the human soul, including the speaking and intellectual part, is included in his seed and is born with the body. All the philosophers disagreed with him: the fate of man and the fate of an animal are not one fate, since the intellectual soul is a spiritual, not bodily, power. Yet since all agree that man’s vital soul includes the intellectual one, we can only accept as right that the vital soul too, although it is a power in the body, nevertheless does not emerge into actuality of itself like other living beings. Its source too is in the heavens above. How is this? It is brought into being below in potential, while from above they decree concerning it, through the angel appointed over pregnancy, that it should emerge into actuality. With this decree he imparts intellectual power to it until it becomes an intellectual soul. [TN280211]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Nefesh”: Likewise for the vegetative soul that will rest in it. It depends upon the King: “What will become of this drop—rich or poor?” Although these are accidental matters, they are nevertheless essential to the definition of the vegetative soul, from which the development of life in this world proceeds. [TN280212]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“For there is no jealousy in their heart,” etc.: As they said, of blessed memory, in chapter 23 of Shabbat, concerning “Jealousy is rottenness of bones.”[TN280213]

Yad Yehudah - יג

“The anguish of the flesh,” etc.: And as to constitution, “strong or weak” is decreed; these are things perceived by the senses. [TN280214]

until one hour before the resurrection, to fulfill in them, “To dust you shall return,” for everything was from dust and everything returns to dust, even the sun's orb. The righteous will in the future have faces resembling the sun.

This vital form likewise exists for each individual of the species, with no other sharing it except by way of impregnation, as we mentioned concerning the preceding one. Every death without excision, whether under human or heavenly law, has as its sentence only the loss of the vital soul. Under human law there are thirty-six principal transgressions for which one incurs judicial death: Eighteen among those stoned, ten among those burned, two among those slain and six among those strangled. These too have that relation to the thirty-six portions of a myriad of myriads we mentioned, this in its manner and that in its manner. The court's power is strong: All liable to excision who have been flogged—and all the more those put to death by it—are freed from their excision, for their form is not rejected. The vital soul also descends to the pit to complete its cleansing. It alone rises through a necromantic medium: For the wicked always, and for the righteous only during twelve months. Even this we heard only of Samuel of Ramah, for honor was accorded to kingship from above; they did not inform him until he recognized the matter and said to Saul, “Why have you disturbed me?” But over those who die by a kiss, by the Lord's mouth, the medium has no power at all.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“To fulfill, ‘To dust you shall return’”: As stated by them, of blessed memory, there.[TN280215]

Yad Yehudah - טו

“Everything returns to dust”: Our Sages, of blessed memory, said, “Even the sphere of the sun.” Accordingly he draws attention to the continuation of his words: that the righteous are destined, etc.[TN280216]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“For every one of its individuals”: Every living human being, until the end of all generations, has a particular vital soul of his own.[TN280217]

Yad Yehudah - יז

“As in the preceding one”: In the third icon. [TN280218]

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Eighteen subject to stoning”: As explained in Maimonides, chapter 3[?] of the Laws of Sanhedrin; this is the Mishnah in Sanhedrin.[TN280219]

Yad Yehudah - כב

“At all”: For once their souls ascend, they never descend again.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“Know that the revolution”: And incarnation, “like secular ones[?],” whereby another reincarnates from the human species into the inanimate, into the growing; examine carefully.[TN280223]

Yad Yehudah - כו

“If in the mystery of imprisonment”: When it reincarnates in the inanimate, the pain is from its being dust; or when it reincarnates in a plant, in such a way that it is joined to its form.[TN280226]

Yad Yehudah - כז

“This too”: What we said above about the two lower orders—that they are particular to each person—is a great consolation to a person regarding these forms’ undergoing reincarnation through a change of species. Since they are particular, many

Know that the revolution truly said to involve a change of species, in its plain and literal meaning, cannot possibly be described of anything except these two lower orders together, or of the last alone, according to the severity of the sin, great or small, whether in the mystery of imprisonment or by the loss of the original form. This too is great consolation: Since these forms are individual, and each and every person is born with one, from now on only one sinner will be caught in it. The mystery is “Lord, in the city You despise their form,” excluding the upper form and likeness attributed to Elohim, whether the transformation of their lower form is into an actual beast, or into something growing whose eater despises it, or what feet trample like dust to be threshed, for that is the ultimate contempt. This suffices, for we have already explained a sufficient measure of repair for all at the end of Maʾamar Heqor Din.

This is the matter hidden from the elders of the school of Athens in the first chapter of Bekhorot, who said to Rabbi Joshua ben Ḥananiah, “We have a broken millstone; stitch it.” They had received from Pythagoras their master a tradition of this wondrous descent, but neither he nor they knew any repair for it. Therefore they said it was a broken stone and asked him, “What is its repair?” He took a fragment of it, cast it to them and said, “Twist me threads from it.” He hinted to them the mystery of “Those passing through the valley of weeping make it a spring,” to fulfill “You shall tread down the wicked,” as we mentioned. They fell silent, for they did sinners will not be caught in one reincarnation.[TN280227]

Yad Yehudah - כח

“And this mystery”: This is what Scripture says: “O Lord, in the city You will despise their image” (Psalms 73). Its saying “in the city” alludes to an animal, as it is written, “and he lets his beast loose”; the bet is a root letter. Its saying “You will despise” alludes to the growing, despised by its eater, and to the inanimate, which is greatly despised, like the dust of the earth. These reincarnations thus apply to their image—that is, to the third icon, and all the more so to the fourth icon. This is “their image,” excluding those included in the first and second orders, which are the upper image and likeness and are not included in reincarnation involving a change of species.[TN280228]

Yad Yehudah - כט

“For the repairs were already explained”: In [unresolved title], H’D[?], chapter 7, for they will weep bitterly, “passing through the valley of weeping,” and the gates of tears are not locked.[TN280229]

Yad Yehudah - ל

“In the hands of the philosopher Pythagoras”: It hints that he believed and taught the wisdom of reincarnation.

Yad Yehudah - לא

“Wondrous descent”: Reincarnation into an inanimate stone. [TN280230] not understand, and marveled at his thoughts. How would they merit this, even in teaching, all the more in practice? He fulfilled in them, “They have not known the judgments.”

broken stone for which there is no repair. [TN280231]

Yad Yehudah - לד

“He hinted to them through this”: through the repair of “striking[?] and weeping.” This is the mystery of “those passing through the valley of weeping,” for then the waters of their tears wear away stones.[TN280232]

Yad Yehudah - לד

“To fulfill what is written”: “You shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes,” etc. The word ve-‘assotem, “you shall tread,” means their juice and water, as we mentioned there.[TN280233]

“On one of the sides of metaphor”: for in truth all the letters of the Name are said of the images alone—Nefesh, Ruaḥ, Neshamah, Ḥayah and Yeḥidah in the configurations of repentance, as mentioned above in section 1. Therefore it is said metaphorically of Israel, who correspond to the four images: each is named after its seal, the concealed letter[?] in the combination, as mentioned in section 1.[TN280234]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Those who merit”: In each of the four orders.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“They are those reaping in the field”: Called in the Zohar “workers of the holy

These, then, are the four orders encompassing all the soul's parts, their generalities and particulars precisely. One of the ways of metaphor already applies to them: The lowest is called Nefesh, in the mystery of the Name's last he; the next, Ruah, which is itself the Name's waw; and Neshama above them, the first he. But the great order we first mentioned is Neshama of Neshama, the Name's yod. Those who merit these four orders according to the intent of the Maker of Creation—the Unique One of the world, alluded to in yod's point—are those reaping in the field which the Lord has blessed, meḥaṣdei ḥaqla qaddisha, “reapers of the holy field.” This honored word is an acronym for the whole exposition: Medabber, speaking; ḥai, living; ṣomeaḥ, growing; domem, inanimate. field.”

Yad Yehudah - ד

“And its inclusive unit[?]”: Maḥaṣdei has the numerical value of Tzevaot—an allusion to the souls, which are hosts, etc. [TN280235]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“It was said” of these reapers, “YHWH be with you,” which Boaz said to them. This corresponds to the four letters of the Name. Boaz is aroused also to become, himself and his descendants, a chariot for these four letters: Boaz for Ḥokhmah, Obed for Binah, Jesse for Tiferet, David for Malkhut. See the Zohar, Mishpaṭim, there. [TN280236]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Therefore”: The first letters of Boaz, Obed, Jesse and David have the numerical value 86, like the Name Elohim. These are alluded to in the verse “But You, YHWH, are a shield about me”—BʿDY. David joined himself with them in this, and their merit endures for His faithful ones. The middle letters, which are ayin, vav–bet, shin and vav, have the numerical value 384[?]; with the inclusive unit, the numerical value of Shekhinah. The final letters are zayin, dalet, yod and dalet.[TN280237] unit they have the numerical value Ṣevaʾot, “Hosts.” Of them is said, “The Lord be with you,” through His four letters, to which Boaz, Obed, Jesse and David were a chariot. It is written, “YHWH is Elohim.” Therefore their four first letters, of which is said, “You, Lord, are a shield for me,” BʿDY, have the numerical value Elohim. The middle letters, with the inclusive unit,[1] have the numerical value Shekhinah. The final letters[2] have the numerical value 25, Koh, a designation of her: The mystery of the Torah's twenty-two letters and the three patriarchs. These and those, together with the words, have the numerical value Ṣevaʾot. This suffices. Through this, the full Name is called upon a full world. For this reason the complete person is truly and rightly called a small world. This is what we learned: “For one who occupies himself with Torah for its own sake, the entire world is worthwhile for him.” Happy the people for whom it is so, etc.

This is why man is called a small world on the lips of all the sages, the sages of truth and the investigative sages: “The entire world is worthwhile for him,” as we learned in chapter 6 of Avot, for all the degrees of the lower world, and of the upper one too, are included and set in order in him. The Name YHWH is called upon him; and if he merits through his deeds, even among the lower ones he will ascend

“In the book of Ecclesiastes” (3), as Scripture says: “For everything there is a season, and a time for every purpose under heaven: a time to give birth and a time to die; a time to plant and a time to uproot what is planted; a time to kill and a time to heal; a time to breach and a time to build; a time to weep and a time to laugh; a time of lamenting and a time of dancing; a time to cast away stones and a time of gathering stones; a time to embrace and a time to refrain from embracing; a time to seek and a time to lose; a time to keep and a time to cast away; a time to tear and a time to sew; a time to be silent and a time to speak; a time to love and a time to hate; a time of war and a time of peace.”

Yad Yehudah - ב

“The king, wiser than every person”: Had another person said them, they would have needed explanation; all the more so Solomon the wise, of whom it is written, “He became wiser than every person,” and all his words are with understanding. [TN290002]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“In order to know”: and to understand correctly how many words of Ḥ. [wisdom?] he included by

Rema of Fano

The times specified in the book of Ecclesiastes by the king wiser than every person require a clear, firm, and sound explanation, to understand and comprehend the substance of the matters, their foundation and depth, according to their manifest, straightforward, and faithful plain meaning. We must know their overall order and the connection and arrangement of their parts, pair by pair, in righteousness, judgment, and equity: why, in most of them, the evils precede the good according to the common understanding, while sometimes the reverse occurs, for in some he mentions the good first. Nor may we neglect to give a sound explanation and reason for the pairs following one another, with their general and particular aspects considered together, and for their relation to one another—for example, where he begins with something resembling that with which he just concluded, whether good or evil.

Why did he vary some of them by attaching the times to a noun rather than a verb, as in “a time of war and a time of peace,” rather than “a time to wage war and a time to make peace”? These nouns have no lamed at all. All the others differ in two respects. First, they are all attached to verbs: to give birth, to die, to plant. As for lamed, he varied their phrasing greatly: some pairs have lamed in both members; sometimes neither member has lamed; in others one half differs from the other, the arranging them opposite [one another], as he arranged them.[TN290003]

Yad Yehudah - ד

He summarized[?] the divisions, which are the pairs, together in order, in section 3. [TN290004]

Yad Yehudah - ה

Why did he mention the matters of the pairs with the evils first, such as “a time to kill,” “a time to breach,” and conversely, which are the good before the evil? Sometimes he mentions the first ones first, such as “a time to give birth,” “a time to plant.” It will be explained here, 4[?]. [TN290005]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“We cannot avoid” [text supplied from the print witness][TN290006] giving a favorable reason for the succession of the pairs, not only from the general aspect of each pair, about which we have already raised a question, but also from their particulars—that is, each of the pair’s two parts. Why did he put one first and delay the second? It is only so that the pairs follow one another, so that in the way the first ends, the second begins. In a case such as this we must know in what manner.

Yad Yehudah - ז

For why did he change two features, in “a time of war

Yad Yehudah - ז - continued

and a time of peace," from the other times? He mentioned the nouns war and peace, not the verb: he did not say "a time to wage war" and "a time to make peace." Nor does lamed appear in these two nouns. Did he instead say "a time for war," "a time for peace"? No.[TN290007]

Yad Yehudah - ח

It is said of the times that he mentioned only a verb, not a noun: he did not say "a time of birth," "a time of death," "a time of planting," and "a time of uprooting what is planted." Rather, he said "a time to give birth, to die, to plant," in the verbal infinitive form. In my humble opinion, here too there are principles of life; our words will not be lacking[?]. [TN290008]

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Great variation" in the use of lamed: for usually it occurs with lamed in both parts of the pair. In some, lamed is omitted from both, such as "a time of lamenting and a time of dancing," and likewise "a time of war and a time of peace." In some, lamed occurs in one of the pair's two parts, such as "a time to cast away stones and a time of gathering stones."[TN290009]

Yad Yehudah - י

Had he said the reverse, "a time of casting away stones and a time to gather stones," I would have remained silent, for the beginning having lamed and the end lacking it. Had it been the reverse, I would have kept silent, for lamed looks toward the course leading to the end attained last. All the more so in that pair in which this reversal occurs, as we shall explain truly and straightforwardly: it apparently causes great perplexity, and no other pair follows this order. This is "a time to cast away stones and a time of gathering stones," for gathering is much closer to the desired benefit than casting away. Examine the strong objection closely: it blossoms doubly out of the explanation itself. Attend to it and you will find the true resolution beside it. [TN290001]

Nevertheless, among these necessary observations another difficulty remains: why should lamed be absent from even one of them? Even the evils, which certainly all come through providence, are only a great preparation for the good end. They are far better than the good things would be if those were imagined to occur by chance. Yet what the multitude thinks comes about accidentally is also, without doubt, among providence's emissaries. This is all very clear, as in what we learned: one blesses over evil of the character of good, and over good of the character of evil. This is what Ecclesiastes said: "Anger is better than laughter." This suffices for now.

We must also know why these events, rather than any others, were singled out for the present inquiry: what gives these their particular force? Why did he specify the object of the action in only a difficulty would not have been so severe. For if Ecclesiastes saw fit to mention lamed only once in this pair, it would have been more fitting to mention it in the latter member than in the first. Such is the proper way in the use of lamed to indicate the end: its meaning belongs last, as the completion of the deed. [TN290010]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"All the more satisfactory in that pair," etc.: that is, had he used lamed in the part about gathering stones, which is the end, as we shall explain below in section 4 and as he concludes shortly, I would therefore have remained silent. It is not so now, when lamed occurs in the first part—and this—[TN290011] few—for example, “to uproot what is planted,” “to cast away stones”—and not in all? What is the reason for repeating “a time to cast away,” which alone is mentioned twice? He did not follow a uniform practice: he specifies what is cast away in the first instance but not in the second. Moreover, one of them is opposed to “a time of gathering,” with casting away placed first; in the other, “a time to keep” comes first, followed by an unspecified “a time to cast away.” Certainly it is the difference in the object that causes this, and we must know how and what, along with the many variations in most of the pairs, some of which we mentioned above. This doubles the stimulus to reflection for every upright investigator. There is also “a time to refrain from embracing,” which does not resemble the others at all; we shall discuss it below.

A person may think that [the benefits] came by chance; nevertheless, [the evils] are better and more beneficial. Rema of Fano

I looked and set my heart upon this: these appointed times testify and declare, with wisdom, understanding, and knowledge, the events that befall a person in this world from the beginning of generation, in a wonderful order and a strong connection, like the rind preceding the fruit. Thus it is fitting for the righteous to begin with sufferings and end in tranquility, for the man of peace has an aftertime.

For this reason the opening of his words gives light and understanding to the simple: the final act in creating the human being, present from the beginning of thought, was made and created only to increase the likeness. One who walks upright paths resembles the Most High through the excellence of his deeds. This was the first commandment for Adam and Eve, with which they were blessed on the day of their creation. Therefore he said, “A time to give birth”: a matter incumbent upon both parents, although she is not commanded. This verb in the qal stem is found of each of them: “Arpachshad begot,” “Sarah gave birth,” and the like.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Although she is not commanded”: as stated in the mishnah, chapter 6 of Yevamot.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“This verb is found,” etc.: do not be surprised that we interpret “to give birth” as being fruitful and multiplying, whereas in its plain meaning it is everywhere interpreted of birth. We do find this verb in the qal stem applied to the parents who beget, whether a man or a woman.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“The hearer supposes”: its interpretation is not the plain one, that of the one being born, of whom he said “a time to give birth,” he also said “a time to die.” Rather, it concerns the woman giving birth: after saying of her “a time to give birth” and to engage in procreation, he further said “a time to die,” to deliver her fetus.

“Dwelling in two worlds”: this world and the world to come.

Yad Yehudah - י

“He began with the discredit of miscarried children”: of them he said, “A time to plant and a time to uproot what is planted.” “A time to plant” concerns their first coming into being. This is why he did not say linṭoa‘: to indicate also that planting miscarried children is like an error. This is la-ta‘at, an expression resembling ta‘ut, error.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“For a human being is a tree”: similarly, the language of planting is used concerning this in several places in the Zohar and Tiqqunim. See Zohar, Vayeshev, page 420.

“He specified the object of the action”: by saying “what is planted,” rather than merely “a time to uproot,” as in the others. Had he said that, I would have thought it referred only to a hidden miscarried child that did not see the world's light upon coming from its

“And a time to die”: the hearer supposes that this concerns the death of a son, but it does not. It concerns the woman giving birth, whose thighs grow cold as stones, as though she were dead from the waist down, as is known. Thus she is dead at that moment and afterward lives. Along with this, it is not far-fetched to interpret “a time to give birth” of the father, and “a time to die” of the mother, as we said, since the woman brought death into the world.

Because he wished, at the end of the times, to conclude by praising the children born to endure and their attainment of their end—they were not created for emptiness, but formed for habitation, dwelling in two worlds—he began with the discredit of miscarried children. Their first coming into being is “a time to plant,” la-ta‘at. He did not say linṭoa‘: it is almost a planting in error, be-ta‘ut, in a hidden miscarried child that will not see light. The language of planting applies to it, for a human being is a tree of the field. “And a time to uproot what is planted” concerns their end. He specified the object of the action to include every human child who did not survive thirty days, although it emerged into the world's air and its hair and nails were complete. [TN290026]

Moreover, Scripture calls it “planted” at the very time it is uprooted. That is, the uprooting does not leave it without hope: it has been planted since the six days of creation, and will yield its fruit at its time, known to the One who delights in kindness. For it, the way of life is the reproof of discipline.

mother's womb. He therefore said “what is planted” to indicate that the words also concern a miscarried child that had an existence in the world: one that did not survive thirty days, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“Moreover, for another reason”: he said “what is planted” to indicate that even when uprooted it is called planted, for from long before it had arisen in His thought, blessed be He, that it should be planted in this manner. The ninth difficulty is thereby resolved.

This is said not only of the lame, the blind, those lacking a limb, and the like, and all other hidden and manifest defects. Among them is also a fixed defect, manifest and known, requiring great healing: He stripped them of garments of light and clothed them instead in garments of skin, so that their pollution would be consumed in the dust. Nevertheless, our dead shall live. He places skin upon them; they return and seek God before the sun of righteousness, and He answers their plea and heals them. [TN290027]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“And in its place”: four things—ḥalitzah, etc. [TN290032]

Rema of Fano

Yet in all these times mentioned first, and concerning those who undergo these events, nothing has been told of their deeds that would declare a person's uprightness. Since the last statement would imply, without further specification, that he was speaking here of one who died without children, he therefore said, “A time to breach”: bereavement and widowhood; “and a time to build”: the mystery of levirate marriage. Precisely this language is used of it in the Torah in condemnation of one who does not perform levirate marriage.

Concerning the levirate wife, of whom, as times change, we may rightly speak of weeping and songs, he said, “A time to weep and a time to laugh.” Each of these is a commandment in its own right and must be fulfilled for its own sake. Concerning the neighboring women, whose mystery you know from the union of Boaz and Ruth—these are the tranquil women who always perform kindnesses appropriate to the occasion, in the house of mourning and in the house of feasting—he said, “A time of lamenting,” as at Mahlon's death, “and a time of dancing,” at Boaz's wedding and Obed's birth. The same reasoning applies to similar cases. Since these neighboring women and their deeds are needed not for their own sake but merely for companionship, these two verbs lack lamed. This indicates that nothing here accrues to them for whose sake one would seek to turn toward an end, to the right or to the left; it is simply the performance of kindness. Shortly we shall add a more fitting and sound explanation.

“By striking the shoe” [gap] to the ground, to indicate the severing of the bond, as stated there [gap]. This is the correct reason even according to the plain meaning, although it escaped the Tur, who wrote in Shulhan Arukh, section 169, on Maimonides' words: “I do not know why” [gap] to the ground. Also [gap] there, who wrote that one may say Maimonides mentioned the usual manner of doing it, not because casting it to the ground is required. [TN290034]

He said, “A time to cast away stones,” concerning the mystery of halitsah. Here there is no levirate marriage, called building with stones. In its place come removal of the shoe, spitting, striking the shoe against the ground, reading the verse after these actions, and proclaiming three times, “The one whose shoe was removed.” With the large tsadi of AIQ, this has the numerical value of nefesh, ruah, neshamah, hayah, and yehidah. It teaches that the bond among the three lower ones is released: neshamah through removing the shoe, ruah through spitting, and nefesh through striking the shoe; and the bond of these three to the upper ones, which withdraw from the one who will not build his brother's house. The allusion is in the reading. [TN290030]

Here Scripture specified the object of the casting away because of its importance, and likewise in its counterpart. The stones allude to the light of souls, in the sense of “the shepherd, the stone of Israel.” The temporary casting away which Scripture mentions concerning specified that the stones are the object of the action. This alludes to the souls called stones, for above it is written, “From there, the shepherd, the stone of Israel.” Here he said, “A time to cast away” the soul's personae and release them outside the place [gap].

Yad Yehudah - טז

[gap] in the absence of purposive lamed [gap], it is not known through whom this loan[?] is afterward completed in transmigration. [TN290036]

Yad Yehudah - יז

As lamed occurs in “a time to build” [gap]. The reason concerning the end is as specified in the verse, “If he directs his heart toward him,” etc. (Job 34). The Zohar and Tiqqunim there interpret it concerning [gap]; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יח

Thus far he speaks in a kabbalistic manner of unions that do not succeed in their offspring, and they are deep [gap]. Henceforth his words will concern upright unions, as stated in the following section.

them loosens their union, as we said, and releases the bond which until now made them dependent on the levir's decision. Concerning the hoped-for repair of the dead brother's soul-parts after halitsah, as explained in the Zohar, he said, “And a time of gathering stones,” without lamed. This doubles the difficulty we raised above and gives it great force: since gathering them brings about the repair, why should it lack the use of lamed, which indicates seeking an end and looking toward it?

Yet the king orders his words with judgment, and Solomon's wisdom abounds, warning us that we do not know through whom Heaven will bring this commandment to completion after the living brother has exempted himself from it. Had a tradition concerning this been entrusted to us, prefixed lamed would be appropriate, as it is in “a time to build,” for the reason given by Scripture: “If he directs his heart toward him, he will gather his spirit and his breath to himself.” But near is the One who justifies His creatures, blessed be He: the beginning of His preparations for His work is righteousness looking down from heaven. When He does wondrous things, we hope for no end other than Him.

At first consideration it follows that the absence of lamed in these times is sometimes attributed to the weakness of the cause producing that action, as we explained in “a time of lamenting and a time of dancing”; sometimes it praises the action, which is itself the end, as in our explanation here of “a time of gathering stones.” This is the principal point. Even with “a time of lamenting and a time of dancing,” it is very likely that precisely their being acts of kindness, with no ulterior purpose, constitutes their importance and the completion of their work. The absence of lamed is always to be expounded favorably; do not depart from this.

Thus far, the companies of times concern unions which appear crooked to the eye. Blessed is the holy King, whose like there is none: He alone knows, wills, and can accomplish, always occupied with the repair of all His creatures. Reproofs of discipline for soul and flesh and all their desires, from our Father in heaven, have been the way of life for us and our children forever.

Concerning upright marriages and unions, he said, “A time to embrace,” following the Targum's view: “A fitting time to take a wife.”

Rema of Fano

Concerning upright marriages, fine and praiseworthy, which succeed in populating the world from beginning to end, he said, “A time to embrace”: on the night of immersion, with modesty and appeasement, calmly and gently, as the mating. It says, “I shall buy you a garment reaching your feet.” Rashi explains [gap].

Yad Yehudah - ג

“As the qal stem indicates”: he did not say le-habbeq in the intensive stem [gap], but la-havoq in the qal stem, indicating gentleness of action.

Yad Yehudah - ד

The word me-habbeq is not an adjective applying to a man embracing his wife. Rather, the intention is to draw away from an embracer[?]. [TN290041]

Yad Yehudah - ה

For me-habbeq does not designate the action or the person described [gap]. I would have thought to say that me-habbeq is a verb [gap] concerning the person. Rather, me-habbeq is the infinitive of the intensive stem, and mem is a prefixed particle.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“The tsere beneath mem is evidence”: and proof that this is so. Were it an adjective or participle, it would have to be pointed [gap] with patah [gap], that it is an infinitive and mem is a prefixed particle [gap]. Its meaning is “from being an embracer.” [TN290042] qal stem indicates, so that one is not a sinner hastening with his feet. Delay and deliberation cause the woman to emit seed first; then the reward of the womb's fruit is the LORD's inheritance—sons.

“And a time to refrain from embracing”: during her menstrual impurity. This is not a description of some man who had been embracing or clasping his righteous abode, whose time to draw away came when she told him, “I saw something red as a rose.” For the word me-habbeq here does not designate the person described, nor is it a participle, but an infinitive. The tsere beneath mem is evidence: its grammatical force is to draw away from being an embracer. The intention is to prohibit every kind of intimacy. The verse's first clause certainly concerns embracing as intercourse, using a refined expression. Since this is so, do not say that “a time to refrain” likewise concerns intercourse alone: it teaches us that other forms of intimacy are forbidden too. It appropriately says li-rhoq with lamed, indicating the intended end, for every woman whose blood is abundant has abundant sons. Just as the first clause has la-havoq in the qal stem, the latter likewise has li-rhoq in the qal stem: nevertheless, one may be secluded with one's wife in menstrual impurity, for his impulse does not overpower him. The latter expression of embracing is in the intensive stem, teaching that separation at its appointed time strengthens embracing in its season, once the impediment is removed, because of the abundant benefit following from it, since her sons are numerous, as we said.

“The latter is also in the qal stem”: to indicate this lenient permission—that one may be secluded, etc., as he says afterward.

Yad Yehudah - ט

Me-habbeq is in the intensive stem to indicate a certain strengthening: the separation, when it ends at the time of her period[?], afterward, when the blood stops, causes strength [gap] for the action, because [gap], for through her period her sons are numerous. The thirteenth perplexity is thereby weakened. [TN290044]

Yad Yehudah - י

“And a time to lose”: to conceal oneself and refrain from union until one is like a lost object, etc. This is on weekdays, etc.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“And a time to cast away”: the waste, which is the blood flowing from the woman at the time of birth. Therefore he says “to cast away” without specifying what is discarded, because of its inferiority and lowliness. The eighteenth difficulty is resolved.

Yad Yehudah - יב

This action is unlike “to keep,” its counterpart: there the object is the seed

Yad Yehudah - יב - continued

[gap] from the mother's blood, for these are the child's essential substance. Not so here, where the object is the waste. This is the end of the twelfth perplexity.

Yad Yehudah - יג

Another reason he did not specify the object is that it has no use.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“As we learned”: chapter 7 of Shabbat, folio 75b. Rashi explains: because it weakens and exchanges blood [gap].

Yad Yehudah - טו

Here, among the waste, is the flowing blood, etc. Therefore “a time to cast away,” adjacent to the time of birth, is expressed with lamed indicating the end, for so the direction of the blood[?] [gap] also toward the child's birth [gap] into the air in the world. [TN290045]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“Through the serpent's bite”: in the mystery of the doe mentioned in the Zohar at the beginning of Pinhas, page 702, and as stated in the treatise Em Kol Hai, Part I, chapter 3.

Yad Yehudah - יז

“And a time to speak”: the intention is intercourse; Scripture uses a refined expression. As we learned in the first chapter of Ketubbot, “They saw her speaking,” and the Gemara explains: What is “speaking”? Ze‘iri said she was secluded; Rav Assi

“A time to seek”: with supplications to Heaven that she be granted worthy sons. Their time should be Sabbath nights, festival nights, and the like. “And a time to lose”: that is, to withdraw oneself from union like a lost object sought at its proper time, the season appointed for Torah scholars. This withdrawal is fitting and obligatory on weekdays, unless there is an occasion of holiness, such as the night of immersion or the like.

“A time to keep”: once the seed has been taken in, so as not to produce a sandal. “And a time to cast away”: he left this unspecified because of the object's inferiority—it is the waste, as will be explained. It is unlike its counterpart, which is the essential fruit. Moreover, the discarded matter has no use, as in what we learned: “Anything unfit to be stored, and whose like is not stored,” including menstrual blood, which is unfit even for a cat, because it weakens it. Here it is the flowing blood that begins before birth, cleansing the mother of waste and also helping to remove an obstacle from the stream along the newborn child's way, lest it drink those bitter, curse-bearing waters. Therefore there is no opening of the womb without blood. [TN290038]

“A time to tear”: the womb, through the serpent's bite, as it is written, “Sin crouches at the opening,” in the mystery of the Name Qera Satan which you know. “And a time to sew”: the repair and reversal of the tearing, when the womb's mouth closes after birth.

said she had intercourse [gap] Rav Assi; nevertheless, the expression has not been lost. [TN290046]

Yad Yehudah - יח

Moreover, he must appease her, speaking with her in words of willing affection at the time of intercourse.

Yad Yehudah - יט

“Declares to them,” etc.: as is known from the Sages' statement about this.

Yad Yehudah - כ

“And a time to hate”: concerning his children, not in truth, for “One who withholds his rod hates his son,” but in outward appearance—to discipline them so as to educate them in the commandments.

Yad Yehudah - כא

“Whether from the aspect” that we are obliged to hold fast to this end: to stir up the good inclination against the evil inclination. This is the first aspect. [TN290047]

Yad Yehudah - כב

Or from the side of [gap], which is the second side. He therefore mentioned in both ways [gap], namely war and peace, rather than the action, saying “to wage war” and “to make peace.” Nor did he express purposive lamed in them: “for war, peace,” for it is unnecessary, since these themselves are the end.

Yad Yehudah - כג

“All is well” [gap], also the whole fifth difficulty.

Yad Yehudah - כד

“Know that ‘et shalom”: in reduced numerical value it is twenty-seven, corresponding to the Torah's twenty-seven letters, including mem-nun-tsadi-pe-kaf. With its letters spelled out thus—ayin, tav, shin, lamed, vav, mem—they total sixty-five in reduced numerical value, the value of Heikhal. This is Malkhut, which is the LORD's palace, as is known. [TN290048]

Rema of Fano - continued

“A time to be silent”: not to speak excessively with the woman. They said this concerning one's wife during her menstrual days, for it is written, “I became mute in silence; I held my peace”—the initials spell niddah.

Likewise during the days of childbirth, for of her it is written, “She shall be impure seven days.” “And a time to speak”: on the eighth night, through immersion at its proper time, as in what we learned, “They saw her speaking.” Moreover, he must first appease her with words of willing affection for the commandment, in great modesty, since in the end the righteous Judge, blessed be He, declares to a person what he spoke between himself and her; he will stand in judgment over this detail too. [TN290039]

“A time to love”: children born to endure, feeding them when they are small. “And a time to hate”: in appearance, those of them who have reached the age of education, as it is written, “Discipline your son and he will give you rest.” When he grows up, this is “a time of war” within himself, to stir the good impulse against the evil impulse. When our side wins, the true goal has certainly been attained; therefore he said, “And a time of peace.”

These last two times are the completion of the end: whether from the side of our obligation to rouse ourselves with all our strength to hold to it—for this holding fast is itself part of the desired good—or from our attainment of the goal. He therefore mentioned in both the desired thing attained, not the action leading to it. This also explains why he did not need to write lamed in them. All is well.

Know that ‘et shalom, “a time of peace,” in reduced numerical value is twenty-seven, the letters of the Torah. With its letters spelled out, its reduced value is Heikhal, “palace.” Behold, its owner's eye and heart are there all the days. [TN290040]

Ha-Ittim - Section 5 (ה)

Yad Yehudah: א · ב · ג · ד · ה · ו · ז · ח · ט · י · יא · יב · יג · יד · טו · טז

Printed annotation: 1

Yad Yehudah - א

“In the first chapter of Berakhot”: concerning “God is indignant every day.” How long is His indignation? A moment. How long is a moment? One of fifty thousand, etc. How do we know He becomes angry? For it is written, “For a moment is in His anger,” etc.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“And a sign”: that ‘et is the half. Scripture says, “A time for every desire.” In the word hefets there is an allusion to ḤTs (“arrow,” or “half”[?]), the value of pe, and likewise for the others. [TN290052]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Pronunciation”: the speech of the lips.

Yad Yehudah - ד

“And according to their abominations,” etc. (there, 15 / 16): this measure qaṭ, whose numerical value equals hadeq, written concerning incense, hints that every fine particle of it atones for kime‘at qaṭ, a designation for the destroyers that arise from sins, as will be explained shortly. Incense nullifies them. Therefore, while grinding, he says, “Fine, fine; well, well”: that this fine substance should bring good and atone for the evil of kime‘at qaṭ. [TN290053]

Rema of Fano

Know that the ‘et which falls within time is only half of one of the small moments measured by our Sages in the first chapter of Berakhot. They said that one hour contains fifty-eight thousand eight hundred eighty-eight of them, and the mnemonic is ‘et hefets, “a time of desire.” For the moment is the “now,” ha-‘attah, and the ‘et is half of the “now.” Pronunciation testifies to this, for a moment lasts as long as saying it. Say ‘et and let your ears hear: perceptibly, it is only half the utterance of rega‘, “moment.” Of this tiny measure, whose existence and cessation come together, Ezekiel said, “And according to their abominations I did, almost a little,” kime‘at qaṭ. Qaṭ has the numerical value of hadeq, “fine,” as written concerning incense: “Grind some of it fine.” The Sages taught: while grinding, he says, “Fine, fine; well, well.” A delightful exposition closely related to this passage may be found in our treatise Ha-Milluim. Moment by moment is tested time, the most precious of existing things, for it swiftly passes and we fly away. [TN290049]

The precise meaning of qaṭ indicates this ‘et, whose smallness is close to one one-hundred-ninth of the larger periods, of which an hour contains 1,080. Here the written form is “I did,” but the reading is “you did,” in the sense of “For a moment is in His anger”: they trouble Him to fashion forms that do not please Him. Kime‘at qaṭ has the numerical value 248,

Yad Yehudah - ה

“This ‘et of half a moment”: according to what was stated, it is one part in 117,776. This is close to one of 109 parts of the larger periods, of which there are 1,080 per hour, for 109 times 1,080 equals 117,720.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Here it is written, ‘And according to their abominations I did’”: unlike the reading. It concerns the destroyers arising from their abominations: according to their abominations I made and created from them a destroyer to destroy.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“In the sense of what Scripture says, ‘For a moment is in His anger’”: the LORD's anger smokes against those who trouble Him, blessed be He, through their sins, to fashion from them the forms of the external powers, whose existence is like a moment.

Yad Yehudah - ח

What the verse's conclusion says, “Almost a little,” also alludes to her / to this: these two words have the numerical value 248, alluding to the 248 impure limbs, which are the measure of those forms' stature. [TN290054]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Because of a difference”: a very small one between ‘et and qaṭ, for ‘et is smaller than qaṭ. He therefore said kime‘at with the comparative kaf, not qaṭ precisely.

Yad Yehudah - י

“This is the mystery,” etc.: his saying kime‘at qaṭ, which is half a moment, whereas there it says, “For a moment is in His anger,” is the mystery of the final hammer-blow, which takes half a moment. This becomes, as it were, a permission for Him, blessed be He, for the existence of the destroyers.

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Mentioned in the Sages' words”: in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah. The mishnah says, “Once he reaches the vault in which they place an idol, it is forbidden.” In the Gemara, folio 19b, R. Alef[?] said in Rabbi Yohanan's name: “If he built in it, his wage is permitted.” Is this not obvious? They are accessories of idolatry, and accessories of idolatry, whether according to R. Y.[?] or according to R. M.[?] / R. Ayin[?], are forbidden until they are worshipped. The statement was needed only for the final hammer-blow. The final hammer-blow is not worth a prutah. Rashi explains: the last hammer-blow—the final blow of the hammer—is not worth a prutah; therefore it is permitted. The hire for the other

the measure of the stature of those forms which burdened Him. Kime‘at has the comparative kaf because of the minute difference between ‘et and qaṭ. This is the mystery of the final hammer-blow, which is not worth a prutah, mentioned by the Sages concerning those who work on things from which benefit is forbidden: his wage is permitted after the fact, although he acted improperly and it is forbidden to do so in the first place. [TN290050]

From this we learn concerning the creation of harmful beings at twilight on Sabbath eve, as we explained in its place in connection with the mystery of a transgression for its own sake. For shaveh peruṭah, “worth a prutah,” has the numerical value of Torah; she is emtsa‘it, “intermediary,” of the same value, between the One exalted above every blessing and praise and all created beings, except the harmful beings. Thus they should have no enduring existence from creation itself, unless sin brings it about. Specifically, the Hidden Treasure is Sabbath itself, which did not complete their creation. But without the Treasured Instrument, which is in the addition to Sabbath, no created being can exist. See the treatise on the Sabbaths.

What is the Treasured Instrument? The script, the writing, and the tablets, which are the whole[?] of the ten things created at twilight. [TN290059] All these, however, were within Rabbi Yehudah's larger measure; the Hidden Treasure completed its work with them. The harmful beings alone were without it,

blows does not become forbidden, for that is not a wage for idolatry, she / it. [TN290055]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“From this we learn”: because of the final hammer-blow, creation of the harmful beings, in which there is not a prutah's worth of benefit, was permitted at twilight on Sabbath eve. We thus ground the permission for their creation in the law, as explained in the treatise Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 11; see there.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“For,” etc.: there is a further accompaniment to wisdom here. Shaveh peruṭah has the numerical value 611, like Torah and like emtsa‘it. This hints that Torah was intermediary between the Creator, blessed be He, and all created beings in which there is a prutah's worth, for she was the Holy One's instrument of craftsmanship in creating the world, as is known.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“Except the creation of harmful beings”: in which there is not a prutah's worth. Torah was not His intermediary and instrument of craftsmanship, blessed be He.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“Specifically,” etc.: despite the stated permission, harmful beings were not created on Sabbath itself, treasured instruments, were created in it.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“All these, however,” etc.: one cannot ask what difference there is between the ten things and the creation of harmful beings, for the difference lies between the larger and smaller measures. As stated in the chapter BM[?]: What is twilight? From sunset, and as long as the eastern face is red, etc.—Rabbi Yehudah's words. Rabbi Yose says twilight is like the blink of an eye. All these ten things were created potentially within Rabbi Yehudah's larger measure, after the sun set / from the sun's setting. The harmful beings alone were created without the Treasure, for Sabbath did not complete its work with them; they came only through the addition to Sabbath, on the grounds of the stated permission, so that they should not treat the smaller measure lightly. See the treatise Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 13. [TN290056]

Rema of Fano

At the beginning of Berakhot, the Tosefta gives another division of the measure of these times. We, however, rely on our Gemara, and Scripture supports it. Since God, blessed be He, knows how to calculate His times and moments, King David said, “My times are in Your hand.” He determines them to a hair's breadth from the measured motion of the celestial sphere. precise, for the moment is very close to one of fifty-five parts of the larger periods mentioned above. Of the harmful beings created in that moment, not one actually harms. Scripture therefore said, “Behold, I created the smith”: held ready by the supernal governance according to the need of the hour. For now, at any rate, there is no evil. This is the verse's conclusion, “And I created the destroyer to destroy”: he does not destroy unless we have prepared him through our sins. [TN290060]

Yet a word to the sages of truth concerning the rind's precedence over the fruit, as mentioned above: in the intelligible world this is expounded as precedence by a single conceptual ‘et, not a temporal one. This is the mystery of the kings: “Which men of iniquity trod, who were cut short without time.” This is what Eliphaz taught Job in his third reply, a matter learned from its context, applying to both alike according to their families and ancestral houses:

“‘Et,” etc.: he returns to the word ‘et to interpret it mystically. ‘Et consists of the final two letters of da‘at, alluding to ten Names YHWH, whose value is 260, and ten Names Ehyeh, whose value is 210: altogether ‘et, 470.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Dalet”: in da‘at, alludes to the four YHWH Names[?] of the Name YHWH, which are the source of these two Names. His hint concerns gathering the kindnesses and powers of judgment first within Da‘at, as stated in the treatise Yonat Elem, section 42. [TN290071]

Rema of Fano

‘Et is the end of da‘at, “knowledge,” comprising the numerical value of ten Names YHWH and ten Names Ehyeh. Dalet is their source: the four letters of the great Name, blessed be He. I reflected on the word ‘ittim, “times”: in the large numerical reckoning of AIQ, its value is 1,080. From them the sages are called “knowers of the times,” because with fewer than these they have no complete knowledge of human action in the twenty-eight changes of times mentioned by Ecclesiastes. Such knowledge requires looking to what precedes and follows, and estimating its place and time in thought, speech, and deed; even after all this, it is still only

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Because knowledge” [gap] obliges one to anticipate and cover[?] what preceded, which has already been done, and what follows it. Likewise it obliges one to estimate a place [gap], etc. For all this is the matter of 1,080 [gap]; the sages cannot attain complete knowledge. Yet even with all this it is still only a number. [TN290073]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“It has already been explained,” etc.: it is known that the letters of our sacred tongue require vowel points. These are qamats, ḥolam, tsere, shuruq with vav—which is melappum—and ḥiriq with yod; these are called long vowels, and they are the vowel points of pittuḥei ḥotam. To them are added pataḥ, segol, shuruq without vav, which is qibuts sefatayim, ḥiriq without yod, and sheva. These are the simple short vowels, apart from the compounds of vowel and sheva: ḥataf-qamats, ḥataf-pataḥ and ḥataf-segol. The long ones are like kings, and all the others are servants; sheva is like them, for it is even a servant to servants, all the more so to kings. This applies specifically with regard to its written form[?], when sheva is placed[?] with another of the vowels, whether before it—namely mobile sheva, as will be explained shortly—or after it, which is also silent sheva. possible. [TN290066]

It has already been explained in its place that each letter of YHWH is pointed with six principal vowel points: the five long vowels qamats, holam, tsere, hiriq, and shuruq, whose mnemonic is pittuhei hotam, “engravings of a seal,” together with sheva as one of them. The sages say that although it serves them, in its own independent existence it is a king. The reason is that there are short vowels derived from the long ones, as is known, whereas sheva is not such a derivative: it is a vowel point in its own right, with no derivation from the others. Its service to the long vowels is explained in the Zohar: it runs on an errand and follows at their tail. “Runs” means that it too is mobile beside them; there is no quiescent sheva there. “Follows at their tail” means that it moves the letter adjacent to them, so that the letter does not stand before them and impede their expansion; sheva moves it instead.

This is what the grammarians said of the guttural letters: they do not take a “bribe,” SHḤD—that is, no sheva beneath them, no hiriq before them, and no dagesh within them. These three are signs of judgment, corresponding to three Names Elohim, whose numerical value together with the inclusive unit is garon, “throat.” They are in the constriction of the throat, where the power of the effect's understanding and the might of the proximate cause gather together—and it is the remote cause, as is known to those who sit before sages. We must sweeten them with patah, segol, and rafe, all properties of

Just as they do not receive hiriq and dagesh [gap], they are signs of judgment, as is known [gap], 248; with the inclusive unit, 249, the numerical value of garon. For these three judgments [gap], which is a place in the throat, as is known, namely— [TN290075]

Each letter of the Name YHWH [gap] with the six vowels mentioned: when you combine it with alef, likewise pointed with these six vowels [gap], six times six, which is thirty-six [gap], yod-alef [gap], thirty-six [gap], to combine the Name's vav with alef [gap], which are 1,080. See Pardes, the gate “Details of the Names,” chapter 2.

“The four letters”: of the Name. We thus find again that they are the number 1,080, namely ALM[?] [gap]; the letters YHWH are thus, etc. [TN290076]

Yad Yehudah - יד

Likewise we find the number 1,080 [gap], and their letters amount to this.

Yad Yehudah - טו

“This is,” etc.: the number 1,080 alludes to Tiferet and Yesod, in accordance with the known principle that Tiferet has six extremities: Hesed, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netsah, Hod, Yesod. Each contains ten, making sixty. In each, Yesod is with it, in the occurrence of hai[?], making sixty times eighteen, the value 1,080. [TN290077]

Yad Yehudah - טז

“This is the meaning”: Jeremiah said, “You make us offscouring and rejection” (Lamentations 3), causing contempt. The word sehi alludes to twice hai. [TN290078] kindness. [TN290067]

Each letter of YHWH combines with another letter which is likewise pointed with these six vowels, one by one, multiplying their combinations to thirty-six forms. For all six pointings of yod combine with alef-qamats, all with alef-tsere, and likewise with the other vowels mentioned: thirty-six. Count, by ordinary numerical value, thirty-six times eleven —the two letters just said to combine— and do likewise for the four letters of the great Name, each with alef. The total for all four is thirty times thirty-six, precisely 1,080.

The four letters transformed by ATBaSh are MTsPTs, an acronym for Melekh Tsedeq Po‘el Tsedaqot, “a King of righteousness who performs righteous acts.” These four words have the numerical value 1,080. So do Adam and Eve, their letters spelled out: alef, dalet, mem; het, vav, he. This is sixty times eighteen, the combination of the entirety of Tiferet with its six extremities, each comprising ten, and Yesod, which is itself hai, eighteen. This is the favorable meaning of “offscouring and rejection,” sehi u-ma’os, in accordance with our customary way of interpreting prophecies and all Holy Scripture, for all were spoken at Sinai conditionally. [TN290068]

Observe that it does not say “and to be rejected,” but “and to reject.” For the complete person, in the mystery of the living as we explained it, is fittingly one who rejects evil, in the sense of “My head shall rise above my enemies

Yad Yehudah - יז

“In the way they were accustomed” [gap] to despise the prophecies, etc., and as stated [gap]. [TN290079]

Yad Yehudah - יח

“Examine closely”: this is how “offscouring and rejection” is to be expounded as praise. Even so, he did not say “be rejected,” but “reject,” in the position of a transitive verb: its meaning is termed “rejecting.” This is for praise and blessing. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290080]

Yad Yehudah - יט

“To reject” [gap], “Now my head shall rise above my enemies” (Psalm 27). The matter is according to Kabbalah [gap], in Pardes, the gate “Channels,” chapter 4 [gap], “the righteous, foundation of the world” [gap], to a holy place [gap], all the holy angels [gap], and from there [gap], “You make us offscouring and rejection.”

“Both this and this”: Saḥis and shaḥis[?], whose interpretation is “an offshoot of every living thing.” Their numerical value is Ḥashmal, and he hints at it, since it is an offshoot, etc. This is what Scripture hints at: “And in the second year, aftergrowth”—saḥis or shaḥis[?]—in praise[?]. The order of combination mentioned above—alef with the Name's four letters, in a greater dwelling[?], amounting to 1,080—is what is expounded, etc. [TN290083]

“Twelve times 1,080”: corresponding to twelve times 1,080, corresponding to the day's twelve hours [gap], the Name's letters before alef, for thus [gap], “the great luminary to rule the day.” Nothing precedes it except the bearer of the Name, blessed and exalted around me,” driving them beyond holiness' boundary. Here too is the value of three Names YHWH, numerically sehi. Likewise Tiferet, Yesod, and Malkhut are in the mystery of sahish or sahis, said concerning Hezekiah: samekh is Tiferet; hai is Yesod. Shin at the end is Malkhut; shin at the beginning is Binah. Both have the value hashmal, for it is an offshoot of the light of Peni’el. This suffices. [TN290069]

The arrangement joining alef to the letters of the great Name in their straight order is also expounded for each of YHWH's twelve permutations: twelve times 1,080, representing the day's hours when the Name's letters precede alef. For it is the great luminary, whose thought preceded everything. When alef precedes the Name's letters, these very numbers recur in the same way for the night's twelve hours.

Or say that both arrangements allude to the day's hours. Their different orders distinguish the actions' greater or lesser strength in kindness, judgment, and mercy: when the upper he precedes the lower he, they indicate the day's hours, and in the reverse order the night's hours. Apply the same reasoning to everything similar.

Or say that both allude to the day's hours, with no need to expound precedence, succession, or reversal. The night's hours are indicated by these same letters with their vowels changed. In their place we take patah, segol, qubbuts, short hiriq, and shortened qamats without sheva: five actual short be He, alone. They therefore put His letters first [gap] for the twelve hours.

Yad Yehudah - כה

But with alef preceding the Name's letters, these numbers in twelve YHWH permutations allude to the night's twelve hours: “There was evening and there was morning, one day.”

Yad Yehudah - כו

Or say that there is no distinction of precedence and succession [gap], whether alef is placed first, always [gap] for the day's twelve hours [gap], in the letters' arrangements [gap], whether for kindness, judgment, or mercy [gap]. In the mystery of straight light, kindness prevails [gap] over the night; likewise with the other letters.

Yad Yehudah - כז

Or say [gap] that the Name's joining with alef, however it is arranged [gap], is always in the day. There is no need here to expound precedence, succession, or reversal [gap], the night's hours [gap], namely through the short vowels, which are likewise six together with sheva, as above. They point each letter of the Name and alef with the six short vowel points in place of the long ones; the stated total will again extend to twelve hours, corresponding to the night's twelve hours.

Yad Yehudah - כח

“Short hiriq”: without yod.

Yad Yehudah - כט

“Shortened qamats without sheva”: shortened qamats has two forms: one contains sheva [gap], and in another the sheva is not visible, for it opens of itself, being shortened [gap], before a quiescent sheva and also before two shevas, as mentioned in the science of grammar.

Yad Yehudah - ל

“Of which it is said, ‘Small living creatures,’” etc. (Psalm 104): for all the vowel points are living creatures, from their root above.

Yad Yehudah - לא

Sheva completes the number of six short vowels, for it too is a short vowel [gap].

Yad Yehudah - לב

“Nevertheless”: Only sheva alone and qamats-hataf without sheva enter the count, not the composite hataf vowels.[TN290084]

Yad Yehudah - לג

“Including the doubled forms”: mem-nun-tsadi-pe-kaf.

vowels corresponding to the former ones, of which it is said, “Small living creatures with great.” Sheva completes the number six with them as well, for it joins to form hataf-patah and hataf-segol just as it joins to form hataf-qamats. These explicit composite hataf vowels, with sheva before them, have no role in these combinations at all: the combinations are expounded with simple points, not composite ones.

Thus far we have spoken only of alef with each letter of the great Name. Do likewise for the alphabet's twenty-seven letters, including the doubled forms. In this numerical procedure we count each as only one, since they are merely attached to the Name, which is primary. These are the twenty-seven days in which the moon completes its circuit of the entire firmament, the course the sun takes in a full year. The moon must still run after it across the entire distance between the place of the previous conjunction before this circuit and the sun's glorious abode now, to cleave to it. This is the “time of peace” with which Ecclesiastes concluded, preceded by twenty-seven times, corresponding to twenty-seven days and the Torah's twenty-seven letters. All this is familiar to beginners in wisdom; this is not the place to elaborate. [TN290070]

Yad Yehudah - לד

“All of them” [gap], according to their value [gap], is counted as two, and gimel [gap], toward the number 1,080 [gap], like alef, which is counted as one [gap], each letter as one [gap], according to the count, for the Name is primary and these are subordinate.

Yad Yehudah - לה

These twenty-seven letters, combined with the letters of the Name, make twenty-seven days, corresponding to the days of the moon’s circuit. Although we know that the moon is renewed every twenty-nine days, twelve hours and 793 parts, this does not contradict our account. For during this time the sun too has gone on through a twelfth part of its sphere. Consequently, the period of twenty-nine days, twelve hours and 793 parts also includes the duration of the moon’s course through a twelfth part of its sphere, approximately two and a quarter days. The moon therefore needs this time, after circling its entire sphere, to reach the sun’s position; for in approximately twenty-seven and a quarter days the moon circles its sphere. Understand this. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290085]

Yad Yehudah - א

“Better is the sight of the eyes”: to see and understand the sunbeam's dust. Our Sages said in the first chapter of Yoma, in Rabbi Levi's name, folio 20b: Why is a person's voice not heard by day as it is by night? Because the sun's sphere saws through the firmament like a carpenter sawing cedars. This sunbeam dust is called la. This is what he says: the terrestrial globe, “All the earth's inhabitants are accounted as kalah.” Rashi explains: “This dust is called la,” and this [gap]. Thus far. Since the dust's particles, although very fine, are nevertheless something substantial, they can be seen.

Yad Yehudah - ב

“Kalah”: in the wording written by KhN[?], it derives from vattela, meaning “it grew weary.” Likewise kalah is an expression of weariness, for those particles of sawdust are exhausted and weary, arising from the force of sawing. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290089]

Yad Yehudah - ג

The verse means: “All the inhabitants of the earth are counted”—their number is like the number of the dust in the sunbeam, of which they spoke,

Rema of Fano

Yet better is the sight of the eyes in that dust in the sunbeam, hirga de-yoma, which the Sages said is called la, as it is written, “All the inhabitants of the earth are accounted as kalah,” as stated in the Gemara of Yoma. The word is derived from “The land of Egypt languished,” and kaf marks comparison, as is known. Our intention in this verse is to expound and receive reward: the number of those absolutely fine and feeble particles, which the sun saws off each day in the mystery of the firmament's windows, equals the number of all the earth's inhabitants. This includes Og king of Bashan while alive, and giants like him in every generation; every human being, small and great, good and sinful; beasts, creeping things, and wild animals of the earth, down to the smallest mosquito; every aquatic creature in seas and rivers, trenches and cuttings, pits, shafts, and caves; all creatures in the air; and also corporeal beings that see but are not seen. Since these too were created beneath the celestial spheres, compounded of the substance of the elements, and were dissolved in the Flood, it stands to reason that all are counted equally in this reckoning. [TN290086]

If one of them died yesterday, the sunbeam's dust will lack one particle; if one or more was born, the particles increase correspondingly. Perhaps the natural philosophers will ask and

“The mystery of the firmament's windows”: to be explained below, section 18.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Including”: Even Og, king of Bashan, who is exceedingly great in size, nevertheless counts only as one.[TN290091]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“Also those who see and are not seen”: These are the demons, corporeal beings compounded from the elements fire and air, as Ramban explains in the portion Aḥarei Mot. Concerning them the Sages, of blessed memory, said in chapter 2 of Ḥagigah: they eat and drink, reproduce, and die like human beings. [TN290092]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“They too have already been dissolved in the Flood”: As stated in Bereshit Rabbah on the verse “Of every living thing, of all flesh”: it was taught, “These are the demons”; even spirits enter the ark with Noah. [TN290093]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Its meaning is that they are counted as nothing and naught.” And although it is written kolah—so it should read—nevertheless it is as though kela were written with alef, and the meaning is “all are nothing,” as Rashi explains.[TN290094]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“Just as the sun saws in the morning”: It goes on sawing each day the spheres of the firmament above our half of the terrestrial globe; likewise it saws all its spheres in its course over the hemisphere beneath us. For heaven and earth are spherical, as stated; see shortly below. By day the sawdust falls downward, opposite the sun’s face. At night, when it saws and travels outside the vault, the sawdust falls in the concavity of the lower hemisphere behind the sun, as will be explained shortly. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290095]

Yad Yehudah - י

“The horizon”: the straight line over the earth's surface is so called in Arabic; in Greek, horizon. Astronomers in our time and those possessing kingdoms[?] use this name. It is known that the horizon changes for each person according to his

likewise wonder: the living creature is born, and the sun is the living one[?]; therefore it shines only for those numbered to it. Let an ear hear life's reproof, not to be proud at all, since all are equal in this count. You see that what we said of the verse “They are accounted as nothing” may also bear its commonly understood meaning: considered nothing, as though written with alef, “They were as though they had not been.” Its exposition nevertheless remains in place, as an expression of counting. [TN290087]

Just as in the morning the sun saws through the firmament, shedding particles before its face on our horizon, whose midpoint is the Tower of Lebanon, as we have explained in many places, so in the evening it saws and that dust falls behind it on the opposite horizon, below toward the earth. It thus completes its circuit from evening to evening through the entire vault of the firmament. By day, however, the sun's body hangs below, in the concavity of its sphere; at night it rises onto the sphere's convexity. It is like a person walking around a city fortified with a wall, gates, and a bar: half the circuit outside the city's wall[?], after leaving the western gate, and half within, after entering the eastern gate. He never stops his continuous circular walk until its completion, for his entry and exit too are made as a complete circuit, as the gates' width adequately permits. So it is here. [TN290088]

We have a great parallel to this in the Torah's mysteries, in “The LORD God cast

dwelling place. When we speak of our horizon, the intention is the horizon whose place of our course is the Temple[?]. [TN290096]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“Only by day,” etc.: For the Sages’ view is that by day the sun travels within the firmament’s vault, and at night outside the vault, as stated at the end of Eruvin (folio 56): “It goes to the south” by day, “and circles to the north” by night. This is also stated in SP B[?] of Ḥagigah[?].[TN290097]

Yad Yehudah - יב

“In the sphere's concavity”: toward the circle's inner, hollow side.

Yad Yehudah - יג

“On the convexity”: toward the circle's exterior and back.

Yad Yehudah - יד

“The heights of the gates”: entry and exit in the firmament do not always occur at one place in the two gates. Rather, each day the point of entry is farther across the gate's width, and likewise the point of exit across that gate's width. See further in Be-mehat[?], and as stated below, section 18. Rema of Fano - continued a deep sleep upon the man." It will be explained in its place. The phenomenon itself shows that the window and sawing occur only in the substance of the fourth sphere, which the sun's body opens and closes. When a ray of light from the sun's body mixes with those fine particles, they acquire strength to penetrate the lower firmaments, all of which consist of a clear, airy substance. The dust falls into this world's air and becomes visible. The sun's heat draws these rays from the dust after it throughout that day, although it continually moves farther away from the window, until it dissolves them and returns them to the elements of fire and air. The works of creation borrow from one another, as Maimonides explained concerning the elements at the beginning of the Book of Knowledge. This is the upright way of the Creator of the beginning, by which He mixed fire and water and made heaven from them.

There is a great difference in the dust between the horizon's two sides. Above it, the uppermost descends first, with the rest next to it; below it, the lowest descends first, with the rest next to it. Undoubtedly this too somewhat darkens daylight for the inhabitants of the globe's lower half: who will remove the dust from their eyes? In addition, the sun rises and withdraws, its face upward and its back toward them. Not so when it descends toward us: then it rejoices like a mighty man with a radiant face. Further instruction appears in the treatise on the Firmaments.

changes, melts[?], and becomes air," etc. [TN290101]

Yad Yehudah - יט

"Between the two sides of the horizon": That is, between the dust over our hemisphere and that below in the lower hemisphere. From our horizon upward, the dust that the sun saws at the beginning of its ascent is uppermost and descends first; afterward, as the sun approaches along its course[?], each nearest portion descends in order. It is otherwise in the lower hemisphere, where the sun rises outside, below, and the dust has no place to descend to earth except through the opening in which the sun ascends. The dust it saws there is the lowest and descends first; after it are those portions above it, which descend to earth last. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290102]

Yad Yehudah - כ

"Who will remove dust from their eyes?" For in our hemisphere the sawdust is always opposite the sun, and the sun shines upon it. Through the sun's sparks it draws that sawdust toward itself, dissolves it and returns it to the light of fire[?]. It is not so there, where the sun is outside the vault and the sawdust is always behind it, so that it does not shine upon the sawdust. Moreover, the particles are behind, below, and are fused[?] into the element of air and earth; this darkens things for the inhabitants of that land. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290103]

Yad Yehudah - כא

“Additionally”: Besides the sun’s light not shining as brightly there as among us because it rises outside the sphere. For although the sun shines on the earth and its inhabitants in the other hemisphere at its setting among us—which is the time of its sunrise there—and its course there outside the vault does not diminish its light for them, since the entire

substance of the firmament’s sphere is clear, airy and transparent, and the sun shines from its glory and its radiance also through the sphere’s entire thickness while it is outside it; nevertheless, since the sun turns its face upward in its ascent outside the sphere, it does not shine as much as when its face is turned downward toward the earth. Know that all these things too are a great analogy concerning the creation of new vessels, as explained in Yonat Elem, chapter 15; see there.[TN290104]

“This is what escaped notice here”: presumably our teacher Rabbi Shemuel Yafeh, in his book Yefeh Mar’eh. He wrote—see its beginning—“I did not direct my attention [?] [text supplied from the print witness][TN290109] to explaining there what has become generally known from astronomy concerning these matters.” Thus far. For, indeed, the intention here concerns only our hemisphere, which is the Land of Israel; this settles everything correctly, as he explains shortly below.

Yad Yehudah - ג

“Except in what he denied,” etc.: this is an old disagreement among

Rema of Fano

In the Jerusalem Talmud, in the chapter “If They Do Not Recognize,” our Sages said: “The Holy One, blessed be He, created 365 windows for the world's use: 182 in the east, 182 in the west, and one in the middle of the firmament, from which it emerged at the beginning of creation.” Thus far. The words show that they spoke only of what is above the horizon, in that part of the world with the Land of Israel fixed at its center. The Sages habitually speak this way in these inquiries. This is what escaped the commentator on the Jerusalem Talmud's aggadot here and in many other places in his explanations, especially Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 2, section 6. He brought heaps of sayings that cannot be understood by his method at all, except by imputing to those who said them a denial of what is perceptible: the earth's sphericity and the spheres around it.

It is not pleasing to their Master that we should regard petty people of the earth,

astronomers about the configuration of heaven and earth—whether it is spherical or flat. Some hold that heaven and earth are round like a ball, with the heavens surrounding [text supplied from the print witness][TN290110] the earth on every side, and that it hangs at their center within the sphere. Others disagreed and held that the earth is flat. This controversy is not only among the sages of the nations, as the sage Rabbi Azariah mentioned in his Me’or Einayim, the section Imrei Binah, chapter 1 [?]. Apparently it is found also among our Sages, according to their words in the Gemara and midrashim: we find several sayings that cannot readily be reconciled, in their plain sense, with anything but the view that the earth is flat, against the spherical conception, as Rabbi Azariah recorded there, and as Maharash Yafeh recorded in Yefeh To'ar on Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 3, section 6; see there.

However, the astronomers have already agreed and proved by demonstrative arguments that heaven and earth are round and the earth at the center. Moreover, in our time, apart from knowledge and reasoning, experience itself bears witness to this, leaving no further doubt. In this last generation, since the inhabited world became known to seafarers through their voyages, as they passed day after day as far as America—for a second inhabited world is known and famous to all—there is none of them who does not go each day ever farther, following his compass by the stars' courses; all attest that the earth's circumference is like the sole beneath our feet. Especially, they see the south pole, opposite which our north pole disappears from their sight, as the Sages said of these two poles: "A wagon in the south and the Scorpion in the north."

Even one who has not traveled there can verify this on a terrestrial globe, made by the skilled work of astronomy, depicting all countries and places, seas, dividers of the heavens and stargazers, who neither know nor possess sound understanding, as sages of consummate wisdom, while hanging empty absurdities upon the counselors of the Creator of the beginning. In understanding they were swifter than an eagle, and stronger than the lions of the Chariot.

Here I open a gate as wide as the Sanctuary hall's entrance for every upright investigator, through the premise we stated, which is true in itself: in these inquiries the Sages' words, like goads, often have their foundation in holy mountains. I mean that part of the world above the horizon, in honor of its central point, exalted above the whole earth, for whose sake alone the entire world was created and for the observance of the commandments dependent on it—that is, the Land of Israel. Some of their statements refer only to the beginning of creation, before the saying "Let the waters be gathered," such as Ben Zoma's statement there. Apply this reasoning to every similar case.

There are many other distinctions, the understanding of some of which is too wondrous for us. If, through our limited knowledge, it is too lofty for us and we cannot grasp how forceful upright sayings are, how shall we seek honor at the expense of our masters, who rest in peace, attributing deficiency to them and wisdom to ourselves, as an inheritance from foreigners' children? Woe for such shame! This is among the things reason cannot bear.

rivers, and deserts. Everything inscribed on it the astronomers have determined by true measure and calculation. Their maps, upon which the globe is drawn in its two parts, are found in all the houses of the great and those possessing knowledge; by inspecting them from every angle, one can remove all doubt and hesitation.

This is already explicit in Zohar, Vayiqra, page 14, on the verse "You formed me behind and before." Its words: "In Rav Hamnuna's book it is explained further: the whole inhabited world turns in a circle like a ball, some below and some above. All these inhabitants differ in appearance according to differences of air in each place, and maintain their existence like other human beings. Therefore there is a place in the inhabited world where, when daylight shines for these, it is dark for those; for these it is day and for those night. There is a place where it is entirely day, and night is not found there except for a brief period." See the whole preceding passage. All its words accord with the astronomers' view in our time, and today this is so clear and firmly established that the flat-earth view has been nullified and become the view of the ignorant and wholly foolish. Heaven forbid that we should attribute such a view in any way to our holy Sages: they have always been wise and all their words are like embers. Rather, the reverse is appropriate: we should say that they affirmed and accepted what those people now deny. But the commentator wrote there in Yefeh To'ar that our masters, the authors of the sayings, were not familiar with the spherical form, against what was mentioned. It is possible to interpret their sayings in a manner that accords with the truth, as is fitting. There is also no way to turn to the right or to the left: it is better to attribute the deficiency to the one apprehending, and to say that our understanding falls short of grasping and comprehending their words properly, than to cast a defect upon what is apprehended and understand that they, of blessed memory, did not properly grasp what was written[?].

One who sees with his own eyes the Land of Israel, which ought to be four hundred parasangs square—ten parasangs in area[?]—since its boundaries are specified in the Torah, and whose heart understands how much sin causes, should not wonder if reality compels us to interpret "The earth stands forever," said of the world as a whole, as meaning that it changes but does not pass away. I mean that it is not abolished; yet it is very possible that great changes befall it on account of human beings. The continual expansion of the lower Gehinnom, which is certainly part of the world, as Isaiah testified—is this a small matter? [TN290105]

The discerning person will understand from what the Sages said: the heavens kept stretching until the Holy One, blessed be He, rebuked them. Who gave them the power to stretch, if not He Himself? Yet not all times are alike. Therefore it is written, "And the LORD made the heavens": He and His court. These three words have the numerical value five hundred, the filling of the Name Shaddai, who said to the world, "Enough." How is this? He, who does good without restriction, gave them power, as we said; His court, blessed be He, rebuked them and said, "Enough." Know that "He" is the attribute of kindness, and judgment is His court in its plain sense. The connecting vav adds to kindness the attribute of mercy, for they belong together. This suffices for now. words, for they spoke only of the hemisphere of the horizon of the Land of Israel. This is the issue of the windows in the Jerusalem Talmud, as he explains shortly below; several similar sayings depend on windows positioned according to a spherical form. [TN290112]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Such as Ben Zoma's statement": there in Bereshit Rabbah, where he said, "I was contemplating the work of creation, and between the upper waters and the lower waters there were only two or three fingers." Although these words in their plain sense indicate the flat-earth view, as Yefeh To'ar wrote, nevertheless that is not so, Heaven forbid. Ben Zoma was contemplating that day when the upper and lower heavens were as at the beginning of creation. This is indicated by his proof there from "And the spirit of God hovered": it does not say "blew" here, but "hovered," like this bird, etc. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290113] This was before the utterance "Let the waters be gathered." I too will not restrain my mouth from saying that the Sages' account of the sun's course at night outside the vault and the spherical account do not contradict one another at all. This accords with what the astronomers of our time commonly explain in this science, for which this is not the place. Certainly the sage who comments in Yefeh To'ar and the sage Rabbi Azariah, who thought to judge that the Sages' words here necessarily follow the flat-earth view, had not encountered the account of the later astronomers. If those wise in their own eyes cannot estimate these immeasurable things, which are true in themselves, would that they kept utterly silent—it would be great wisdom for them. If they will not believe what is undoubtedly part of the Oral Torah, they will have to give account. May an innocent student put no faith in them or their arguments. May the Merciful One save us from the pit of their net.

The general rule is this: one who believes that the world was brought into being by the will of its Creator, blessed be He, and in His constant, just providence over all His creatures, must resolve not to defile himself with the false beliefs invented by those who assert the world's eternity. It is not enough that we are not seduced by that evil root, which even schoolchildren know, since the Torah refutes it in its opening words. We must be very wary of what bears poison and wormwood here and there, concealed. They deceive the eyes and mislead creatures by the many consequences arising from the world's eternity. One falsehood at the beginning causes great harm throughout the realm of intelligible things.

How unafraid and unfeeling is one who learns from a magus, even what the senses judge them to be speaking truly! The proof is Rav Qatina, who said, "The necromancer lies, and his words are lies," so that everyone should not become attached to following him. Yet in that statement about a quake and the son of a quake, no falsehood was found on his lips. Rav Qatina said "His words

"The discerning person": so it is also with the change in the form of the heavens, of which the Sages said that they kept stretching. Who gave them that power, if not He, blessed be He? Yet He did not originally decree their measure [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290118] in such a way that it was greater than it should be and He subsequently retracted it, Heaven forbid. Rather, this arose from His attribute of goodness, blessed be He, which bestows without boundaries or limits. There is no change of will here in essence. He, blessed be He, rebuked them, for they are His court.

Yad Yehudah - יב

Know that what they expound everywhere, "He and His court," means that the word "He" indicates Ḥesed, and "His court" judgment. The vav of the word, however, indicates the attribute of mercy, for vav likewise belongs to Tiferet. These are three lines. See the beginning of the treatise Heleq. [TN290119]

Yad Yehudah - יג

That is, from the magus, as he explains shortly below. [TN290120]

Yad Yehudah - יד

This statement, DLYTH[?], which HY[?], Berakhot, folio 59: What are tremors? Rav Qatina said, “A quake”—that is, an earthquake. Rav Qatina was walking on the road. When he reached the entrance to a necromancer's house, a quake rumbled. He said, “Does this necromancer know what this quake is?” The man called out to him: “Qatina, Qatina, why do you not know? When the Holy One, blessed be He, remembers His children dwelling in distress among the people[?], He lets two tears fall into the great sea. Their sound is heard from one end of the world to the other, and this is the quake.” Rav Qatina said, “The necromancer lies, and his words are lies. If so, it should be a quake and a quake!” Indeed, it does produce a quake and a quake. He did not acknowledge it to him so that everyone should not be led astray after him. [TN290121]

Yad Yehudah - טו

Nevertheless, Rav Qatina did not lie when he said, “His words are false.” Rather, he spoke in the language of wisdom and intended that his sorceries were false, in the manner of what occurs in the chapter Ein Ma‘amidin: “R. Ḥanina said to me: Words,” and some say, “By words.”[TN290122]

are lies” in the language of wisdom, while in his heart truly reckoning that these were not that man's words, but the words of our honored masters. Nevertheless, he would not receive them from his mouth. [TN290107]

When the Torah said, “You shall not learn to do”—but you may learn to understand and instruct—it did not permit learning from them at all, but from the Torah's writings, from which no mystery is concealed. Even things which are themselves holy, such as the Torah's commandments and prohibitions, we were permitted to learn only from a complete person, like an angel of the LORD of Hosts; all the more so things in which danger is possible.

Even Rabbi Aqiva learned external wisdom only from Rabbi Eliezer the Great, who never told his disciples anything unless he had heard it from his own masters—specifically, righteous men like himself. Before his master, however, he would expound matters of the Chariot that no ear had heard, for his master's awe was upon him and he was assured of saying only things clear, sound to the discerning, and upright to those who find knowledge. Moreover, he was expounding—that is, interpreting Scripture, which confirmed his words. We have no greater principal teacher than this. Happy is the person who finds wisdom and relies upon the Sages' trustworthiness.

Yad Yehudah - טז

“He did not permit learning from them at all”: in the chapter Kelal Gadol, folio 75, concerning a magus: Rav and Shemuel—one said a sorcerer, the other a blasphemer. It can be established that Rav said a blasphemer, for Rav Zutra bar Tuviah said in Rav’s name: “One who learns one thing from a magus incurs death.” If you supposed it meant a sorcerer: “You shall not learn to do,” but you may learn to understand and instruct. This establishes it. Rashi explains: a sorcerer is one who practices sorcery; a blasphemer is a sectarian devoted to idolatry, who reviles the Name and continually incites people to idolatry. From this it follows [text supplied from the print witness][TN290123] that learning from a sorcerer to understand and instruct is permitted.

This is a difficulty for Rabbenu Yeruham, who ruled that learning from both a blasphemer and a sorcerer is forbidden, as stated in Beit Yosef on Tur, Yoreh De‘ah, section 179. Beit Yosef wrote there that Rabbenu Yeruham was uncertain whether the law follows Rav or Shemuel, and therefore prohibited both. With all respect, these words cannot be reconciled in any way. For the Talmudic discussion implies that even Rav permits learning from a sorcerer for instruction, all the more Shemuel, who did not prohibit it at all. Rav and Shemuel never disagreed except about the usage of the word in ordinary speech, as Rashi explained [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290123]; see there. Nevertheless, this is the rabbi's view here, in accordance with Rabbenu Yeruham. Moreover, their words are true.

It seems to me that their view is that Rav received the unqualified prohibition against learning from magi from his teachers; it is a general rule. Since common usage calls sorcerers magi, as Rashi explained in chapter 3 of Yoma concerning the Parvah chamber—What is Parvah? A magus—and the Arukh agrees, saying that in Greek a sorcerer is called magus, it follows that learning from sorcerers too is forbidden. The statement "If you supposed it meant a sorcerer, 'You shall not learn to do,'" etc., must be explained as meaning that in any event a blasphemer is worse than a sorcerer. Of a sorcerer one could say that it is permitted to learn from him to understand and instruct. Rav, who forbids even in the case of a blasphemer, in fact forbids it also in the case of a sorcerer, everything depending on the learner [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290123], as implied by that deed involving Rav Qatina.

Even Rabbi Aqiva learned the wisdom of sorcery only from Rabbi Eliezer the Great, as stated in the chapter "Four Death Penalties": Rabbi Eliezer and Rabbi Aqiva were walking on the road, and Rabbi Aqiva said to him, "Master, teach me about planting cucumbers," etc.

Yad Yehudah - יט

"To his disciples": as stated at the end of chapter 2 of Sukkah, Rabbi Eliezer never said anything he had not heard from his master. This applies specifically to his disciples. Before his master, however, he expounded concerning valuations[?], etc., as stated in chapter 2 of Hagigah about Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai riding a donkey and leaving Jerusalem, etc.: Rabbi Elazar ben Arakh began and expounded the work of the Chariot, etc. [TN290124]

Rema of Fano

Let us return to the firmament's windows, whose real existence the Men of the Great Assembly transmitted to us in praise of God: no falsehood at all can be imagined in those holy men's words. Each window has its own name, as stated in the baraita of Pirqei Rabbi Eliezer, and some of them are scriptural.

Know that as the sphere revolves day by

Yad Yehudah - ג

"Know," etc.: the matter accords with what was said in chapter 5 of Eruvin, folio 56: "The sun rises on the long day and sets on the long day: this is the north face. The sun rises on the short day and sets on the short day: this is the south face," etc., as it is said, "It goes to the south," etc. The senses testify that the sun does not rise today from where it rose yesterday, nor will it rise tomorrow from where it rose today. The same applies to sunset; otherwise day and night would be of equal measure at all seasons.

At the Tammuz turning it rises in the northeastern corner, travels along the entire east, south, and west, and sets at the end of the northwestern corner. On the following day, the sunrise point begins a little farther from the corner across the east, and the sunset point a little farther from the western corner. Each day the sunrise point comes gradually farther into the east and sunset into the west, until at the Tevet turning sunrise begins in the southeastern corner and sunset in the southwestern corner. From there it turns back northward, so that each day's sunrise and sunset are farther north until the Tammuz turning. Rashi explains this there.

day, the windows opened for us in morning and evening rise and descend from the horizon daily, by number and count, with none missing. There are therefore always windows above it, fit to open, as many as “Jacob, Jacob,” of whom it is written, “The sun rose for him,” apart from the one opened each morning in the mystery of renewing the work of creation. For this morning opening they ordained in the Sabbath Yotser prayer, “And He cleaves the firmament's windows.” All are closed and open only each on its own day. Opposite it, one opens in the evening below toward the earth, in the firmament above the heads of people whose soles are turned beneath our feet. [TN290126]

With what we shall explain below, the Tannaim's words are upheld exactly as written and spoken for everyone who understands their foundation, for this is the whole of humanity. They accord with the celestial spheres' existence and revolutions, familiar in that science to its many practitioners. We have omitted nothing.

Since the solar year is 365 and a quarter days, half of them is 182, for the fraction does not divide into a whole day. It follows that on the eastern side there are 182 windows, through each of which the sun emerges in its time from the Tammuz turning until the Tevet turning, and returns afterward through them until the Tammuz turning. Likewise in the west concerning sunset. Of all the windows, only one in the east opens each day at sunrise, and one in the west when “the day has declined.” This is the Jerusalem Talmud's “its course diminished from here.” You must know that the Jerusalem Talmud certainly agrees with the statement that at night the sun travels outside the firmament's vault. In this account it needs windows through which it enters in the evening and returns in the morning; this also accords with the one who says that the star revolves.

Now the master's intention here is to establish the Jerusalem Talmud in both matters according to the nations' sages mentioned in chapter 9 of Pesahim, with whom the sages of Israel agreed. They hold that even at night the sun is beneath the firmament and the sphere revolves. According to them, one must explain the Jerusalem Talmud as follows: the places in the sphere assigned to the sun's ascent and descent are called windows. The place where the sun rises on its day is an open window; the others are shut and rise with it.

Accordingly, from the Tammuz turning until Tevet, the windows to the right of the open one precede it in rising, shut, and those to its left follow it, shut; the reverse applies from Tevet until Tammuz. Likewise they all descend in this manner below the horizon at night, and only one of them opens. [Text supplied and readings corrected from the print witnesses] [TN290127]

Yad Yehudah - ד

“As many as Jacob, Jacob”: these are twice 182, one for the sun's setting and one for its coming forth. For on both occasions the sun went and ministered before him: it came forth to its work in the morning before its time, when he wrestled with the angel, in return for its service in the evening before its appointed time, when Jacob left Beer-sheba. As the Sages said on “The sun rose for him”: did it rise for him alone? etc. [Text supplied and readings corrected from the print witness] [TN290128]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“Apart from the one opened each morning”: this is the one of which the Jerusalem Talmud says, “And one for warming the world.”

Yad Yehudah - ו

“In the mystery of renewing the work of creation”: instituted by the Men of the Great Assembly, in accordance with what is stated in Pirqei Rabbi Eliezer: “All the streams of heaven pass and are renewed each day in strength and spirit. When the sun inclines westward, it bathes in the ocean's waters. There they extinguish the sun's flames, and it has no radiance until it comes eastward and bathes in a river of fire, like a person kindling his lamps. It clothes itself in flames and rises to shine.” Thus far [gap], among the sayings, they uphold[?] [gap]; rather, all their words are truth and righteousness. [TN290129]

“From the 365 solar days”: each day according to its blessings and its kingdoms. As stated in Zohar, Emor, page 158[?]: “There is no day over which an upper day is not spread,” etc. “A person performs kindness in the world; kindness is aroused above and rests upon that day, and it is crowned with it on his account,” etc. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290134] See there. This is like what is said in Zohar, Vayehi, page 172: “A person’s days are garments of glory in which his soul clothes itself. Those days were days in which he was worthy and was not worthy,” etc. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290134] See there.

Rema of Fano

Now know that the fine times we spoke of, which are the hairlike threads of the celestial sphere's motion, are truly suited to weaving that robe of the sages, of which the Sages speak in their riddles, saying that it is made from the solar year's 365 days. It is written, “God called the light day”: thus day is the very substance of light. Darkness is likewise so—I mean that it is a created thing separated from light. Corresponding to these are the 365 negative commandments, feminine degrees whose suspension and annulment constitute their perfection, in the sense of “the earth was annulled,” as we learned in Sifra di-Tseni‘uta. Of her it is written, “All the glory of the king's daughter is within”; she did not go forth outside. This causes “her clothing to be of gold settings,” whose initials spell mazal, which is subordinate to merit. See Heqor Din, Part II, near its end.

Yad Yehudah - ג - continued

It is known that the 365 negative commandments correspond to the 365 solar days. Each commandment decrees concerning its day: “Beware of committing a transgression in me.” One must not think that fulfilling negative commandments serves only to remove an impediment to perfection. Indeed, they themselves, when a person duly refrains from them, add perfection to him. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290134] For so we find concerning the

[TN290131]

The 248 positive commandments, with the commandment of the Torah scroll above them all, are masculine degrees, for women are exempt from most of them. Yet we rule that women may lay hands voluntarily, and they appropriately bless, “And commanded us,” since they too are included in the holy people. They are therefore subject to “You shall not make a bald patch,” although not to the prohibition against rounding the hair's corners. Whoever is included in “Who sanctified us” is also included in “And commanded us,” to receive reward as one commanded who performs it. For men, however, it is certainly an obligation: if he did not lay hands, he has atoned, yet it is reckoned to him as though he had not atoned. For women it is a commandment. It is an established Talmudic principle that, relative to an obligation, we call a commandment voluntary. This is rightly so, for without it their atonement was already complete. [TN290132]

It was not for nothing that Michal daughter of Saul put on tefillin, since she had no child until the day of her death. Jonah's wife went up on pilgrimage like the men, to assist in repairing the one who had annulled pilgrimage for men, making them like women, although it was incumbent upon him, as explained in its place.

and no gratuitous gift has passed outside into the hands of the external powers. This causes clothing in settings of gold in the world to come, which are accompanied by the mazal added to merit, as stated in Maʾamar Heqor Din, there, section 29.[TN290137]

Yad Yehudah - ח

“Yet … we rule,” etc.: in the final chapter of Rosh Hashanah, concerning blowing the shofar, it is said that according to Rabbi Yose and Rabbi Shimon, who say women may lay hands voluntarily, women are not prevented from blowing. The legal authorities wrote that although the anonymous mishnah there says they are prevented, in accordance with Rabbi Yehudah's view that women do not lay hands, nevertheless the law follows Rabbi Yose, whose reasoning accompanies him. Likewise concerning every time-dependent positive commandment, they have permission.

As for the blessing, the legal authorities disagree. Some hold that, since they are not commanded, they cannot say, “And commanded us”; but most authorities hold that they bless. Their reason derives from Rabbi Yose bar Hanina's statement that one commanded who performs is greater than one not commanded who performs. It follows that one not commanded who performs also has reward. Since the men were commanded and the women are included in the commandment's yoke, they can appropriately say, “And commanded us.” Thus wrote the authorities.

Yad Yehudah - ח - continued

The master's view is that they too have reward even as one commanded who performs. His reason for their blessing is that they belong to the holy people. For so we say in the Jerusalem Talmud, and the authorities established it as law: women are warned against “You shall not make a bald patch,” for it is written, “For you are a holy people to the Lord,” etc. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290138] Accordingly, they can say “Who sanctified us,” and “And commanded us” applies to the voluntary act, which is a commandment for women, so that they receive their reward for it. [TN290138]

Yad Yehudah - ט

“He has atoned, yet it is reckoned,” etc.: as stated in Menahot, at the end of the chapter “Two Measures.” Rashi explains [gap], for it is written, “He shall lay hands, and it shall be accepted.”

Yad Yehudah - י

“Michal daughter of Saul put on tefillin, and Jonah's wife went up on pilgrimage”: as stated in chapter 10 of Eruvin, folio 96. Michal's allusion was that, since she had no child, she thought to merit one through the commandment of tefillin, which belongs to the mystery of union above, as stated in the Zohar and explained in Ma'amar Heqor Din, Part IV, chapter 14. Indeed, this stood her in good stead: on the day of her death she had a child, as the Sages said.

Jonah's wife intended through her pilgrimage to atone for Jeroboam son of Nebat, for the woman's son, Jonah the prophet, would be reincarnated as Messiah son of Joseph, who would be killed to atone for Jeroboam's sin. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290139] This is mentioned in Zohar, Ki Tetse, and explained in Ma'amar Heqor Din, Part IV, chapter 16. Be accustomed, woman of valor, to assist his repair, to assuage[?] her husband's anger, and redeem him from death. [TN290139]

From this you learn the literal meaning of “days were formed,” what the soul's garment is in its plain sense, how the Lord of all placed all creatures beneath a person's feet, and how one person can tip the entire world toward merit or guilt. For by his mighty and powerful deed he weaves within that sunbeam dust which comprises all the earth's inhabitants. In Zohar, Vayehi, they said that a person's days are allotted according to the number of the soul's sparks, to cultivate and preserve it through worthy deeds.

“Rather, he caused garments to rest upon him”: that is, garments made from transgressions, as stated in Zohar, Pinhas and Shelah Lekha. So too, our mishnah says, “One who commits a single transgression acquires one accuser.” [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290145] Each and every accuser has a complete stature of 248 limbs, clothed. [TN290145]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“He strips the garments of the naked”: as stated in Job 22. The expression seems improperly formed, for garments can be stripped only from those clothed in them, not from the naked. Rather, the intention is to refer to harmful beings [text supplied from the print witness][TN290146], who are naked without clothing. They are also cunning in trickery and deception, and wage war on a person with stratagems, to make him stumble and prepare filthy and treacherous garments for him. But the penitent strips off those garments. See Ma’amar Heqor Din, Part IV, section 23. [TN290146] commandments. Such is holiness' nature: all its particulars have like parts, join together, and do not separate. Therefore one who corrects a single letter in a Torah scroll is as though he wrote it all. Each day, according to its blessings, is thus a garment in its own right, considered a complete likeness. This is the advocate acquired by performing commandments, of which we learned in Avot. It is called a peraqlit, whose value with the inclusive unit equals nefesh, completing its repair in image and likeness. We learned: “If you have become idle from Torah, many idle things stand against you.” Those sparks remain unclothed; the days are idle, not lost. They await him, for he can still repair them. [TN290140]

Thus: one who transgressed a positive commandment and repented does not leave that place before being forgiven. Now, at least, he is no worse than one who intended to perform a commandment at its proper time but was prevented by compulsion. For this person too now thinks in complete repentance that the commandment should have been performed through him then, and grieves over it now, when he is constrained and unable to act because its day has passed. It is true that he is not like one who intended and acted.

Transgressing a negative commandment is more severe. Not only does he withhold from his soul the garments of light continually prepared for it, had he desired blessing; he also clothes it in filthy garments, in the mystery of the

“The repetition”: the repetition of the matter in different words, when it says, “For the shame,” etc., is to be explained in this way. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290148] Shame is an expression of delay and deliberation, as in “Moses delayed.” It applies to a maiden and a young girl who has not learned to do anything because of pleasure and softness. This is an analogy for neglecting positive commandments.

Reproach is an expression of sharpness and quickness, and in ways that are not straight; thus it is reproach in its plain sense. It applies to women whose minds are light and who desire to be seduced, especially widows. This is an analogy for transgressions of negative commandments. The prophet promised that all these would not be

“This is the meaning”: the Holy One, blessed be He, replied to the Shekhinah, “Let the righteous be called by your name” [gap]. Their accuser acquired through a transgression. If he resolves to return and repair truly, with a whole heart, the complete penitent is assured of merit immediately, although still clothed in garments of skin. In them he willingly judges himself through mortifications according to his strength, and “strips the garments of the naked.” Harmful beings were created unclothed and are literally naked; they are also cunning, scheming to make a person sin so that his iniquity becomes their garment of treachery. The penitent strips these garments from those beings naked and cunning in leading him to sin, in both senses just stated. [TN290141]

Faithful testimony to the principal argument comes from Adam the first man, who sinned in thought and deed, although constrained in his deed and misled in his thought, as we explained in Tzevaot. Though he greatly increased his profound and continual repentance from the day of his birth, when he sinned and repented, without ceasing until his death, the supernal radiance nevertheless departed from him. Enoch son of Jared merited it and became its deposit-holder. Adam greatly repaired his deeds through repentance; at the resurrection they will shine. Who could precede him? In the mystery of a penitent he will certainly merit a place where Enoch son of Jared, a completely righteous man, cannot stand.

The prophet's statement, “You shall forget the shame of your youth, and remember no more the reproach of your widowhood,” assures penitents that at the end of days all their mature states[?] will be myrrh, aloes, and cassia, with none to put them to shame. The repetition and variation are explained thus: shame concerns neglecting positive commandments, caused by slackness. This is characteristic of a tender, delicate girl: with her it increases, away from doing with willing hands[?]. Shame is for her a heap[?] of delay, from “Moses delayed.” Reproach, however, applies to sharpness and haste in transgressing negative commandments. This is characteristic of a widow who has tasted intercourse. [TN290142]

Thus the final perfection of penitents is certainly an ascent: they are destined to be reckoned with the merit of the completely righteous. Repentance causes iniquity to be forgotten and tips them toward good, until deliberate sins become merits. This is the meaning of “Let the righteous be called by your name,” said to appease the moon, which is destined to be renewed and remain in its first perfection; its diminution will no longer be remembered. Let the humble hear and rejoice, together with what we have explained concerning this in its place.

Yad Yehudah - א

“At the beginning”: we learned at the beginning of chapter 13 of Shabbat: Rabbi Eliezer says, etc.; the Sages say that whether at the beginning or the end, the measure is two threads.

Yad Yehudah - ב

For an ‘et is half a moment, as discussed above, section 2. [TN290154]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“The formation of the word weaving”: it is compounded from the actions weaving and touching, for the times and moments are the threads of time's fabric; they touch one another and join together. [TN290155]

Yad Yehudah - ד

“Unlike the conception,” etc.: in the art of logic it is explained that ten kinds of things in existence are called the ten categories. One is quantity, of which one asks how much it is—large, small, and the like. It has two forms. One is continuous quantity, like an extended line with its points joined together, and time, whose hours and moments are joined. The second is discontinuous, such as the number one and the like, each standing by itself. The philosophers thought that time is

Rema of Fano

Thus we learned: Rabbi Eliezer says that one who weaves three threads at the beginning, or one upon an existing weave, is liable. We have already said that an ‘et is one thread and a rega‘ consists of two ‘ittim, which are two threads. The word's formation is “weaving and touching”: the combination of these two actions is called rega‘, for this fabric's threads adhere and touch one another. This is unlike the conception of the investigators who define time as a discrete quantity: in truth it is continuous. They also imagined that an unmeasured duration had always existed. This is false, for what has no measure has no duration either; time exists only in the duration of the celestial sphere's motion. Know that throughout the twelve months of the Flood generation's judgment, the constellations did not function, and that year was not included in the count of the world's days. Noah and those with him in the ark then floated upon the waters, as the righteous are destined to float upon the waters in the one desolate period. [TN290151]

This touching and adhesion of the fabric's threads requires us to count moments; counting the half-moments alone is insufficient. For no vacuum exists: the latter half of one moment always adheres to the first half of the continuous in itself but is divided into moments and half-moments [gap], that from the beginning it existed and was created only from half-moments and moments, as will be explained. [TN290156]

Yad Yehudah - ה

They further thought that even before creation, when time was not measured by the sphere, there was nevertheless an unmeasured duration. This is false, etc. [TN290157]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“And this,” etc. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290158]: the reason the Sages counted moments, each of which is two ‘etim, rather than counting the ‘etim themselves, is that we hold that a single ‘et never goes by on its own and that there is no vacuum between them. Rather, the two ‘etim adhere together: one present ‘et and one future ‘et; together they make one moment. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290158] When this second ‘et afterward becomes present, it adheres to another future ‘et and they make the next moment. So it continues until the whole robe is woven from threads, which are adjoining ‘etim, and so on. [TN290158]

Yad Yehudah - ז

“At the beginning of the fabric”: at creation, the first ‘et was very fine, appropriately called for this reason “graspable air and ungraspable air,” as the Sages said. It was the light of which it is written, “He called [gap] the light day.” The first weave therefore required three threads, so that the moment would be formed from the second and third threads. Because of its fineness, the first cannot make a moment even if the second joins it: when the second arrives, the first has already passed away owing to its fineness [gap]. The moment must be today, not past. [TN290159]

Yad Yehudah - ח

From the third onward, adding one ‘et suffices. When the fourth comes, a moment arises from the third and fourth: the third has become present and the fourth is future. So it is always.

Yad Yehudah - ט

But the Sages hold that the two ‘etim making a moment need not be formed from three in order to make a fabric. Rather, by themselves, without combining anything with them, they make the fabric. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290160] This includes the ‘etim which were a pair at the next. Together the two halves are a moment composed of half of this one and half of that one.

The beginning of that honored fabric, rightly called “graspable air” upon the warp of “ungraspable air,” which is the substance of light we mentioned, measures three threads at first. The first ‘et cannot be apprehended because of the fineness of its origin. It adheres to the following moment, but that first ‘et has already passed, while the moment is half present and half future. Thus time's beginning is a present between past and future, which can be fully measured only in this way. Thereafter, however, each ‘et by itself continually adds. One who performs work on Sabbath corresponding to either of these cases—three initial threads or one upon an existing weave—is therefore liable for a sin-offering according to Rabbi Eliezer. [TN290152]

The Sages, however, equated beginning and end: for them the moment comprising two half-moments is a complete weave. They hold that the first present, extending itself with another, is, in its earliest ‘et preceding all, separated from the third ‘et and has no need of it, since the second lies between them.

The sages' robe is still incomplete until each day we draw practical commandments upon it, the work of a craftsman, designer, and embroiderer, each from the work they perform. Everyone needs two threads, which are two half-moments, to begin “Holy” and “Blessed,” or to answer “Amen”; less beginning of creation: the first pair did not need a third. Therefore its counterpart on Sabbath entails liability for two threads, whether at the beginning or at the end. [TN290160]

Yad Yehudah - י

“Still,” etc.: this refers back [text supplied from the print witness][TN290161] to what was said in the preceding section concerning the robe of the Sages [text supplied from the print witness][TN290161]. That is, the robe of the Sages is not completed through observing Torah commandments alone; its completion also requires the aforementioned work of the designer and embroiderer [text supplied from the print witness][TN290161], produced through rabbinic commandments. Therefore each day requires, at any rate, two threads, which together make a moment, as long as its utterance, so that one can open one’s mouth in holiness, according to the explanation of the expression.[TN290161]

Yad Yehudah - יא

“The Sages agree with Rabbi Eliezer,” etc.: as stated at the end of the chapter Ha-Boneh, folio 106b: “One who wove a single thread and completed the garment is liable.” “Whom does this follow?” [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290162] Rabbah bar Rav Huna said: this is Rabbi Eliezer, who says that one thread upon an existing fabric entails liability. Rav Ashi said: even say it is the Sages, for completing is different. This is the stringent case. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290162] But the case before us is lenient: if he began Amen and did not complete it because of compulsion, so that he said only half an utterance—which is only one ‘et—it is considered as though he completed it. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290162] does not suffice, whether for the prayer leader or the individual answering him. The Sages agree, both leniently and stringently, concerning the final ‘et, which is the hammer's completing stroke for the weave of this beloved robe: its counterpart on Sabbath entails liability. Likewise, if one began “Amen” but was constrained and did not finish, this is not a truncated Amen; it is reckoned as though he finished, and the sages' robe is completed through it.

The creation of harmful beings in that final ‘et of twilight, however, was their first stroke and was not completed. The One who knows how to calculate His times and moments therefore assigned them precisely that ‘et, because it contains no “prutah's worth,” whose numerical value is Torah, “she is more

For Moses and David, the two great ones of the world, who also knew how to calculate these times, as explained at the beginning of Berakhot—they are two of the three, with the Messiah, for whose sake alone the world was created, according to Rav, Shemuel, and Rabbi Yohanan in the chapter Heleq—even that final ‘et fell under the positive commandment to add to Sabbath, since for them there was no uncertainty concerning the day.

“The halakhah follows the House of Hillel,” etc. In the first chapter of Shabbat, folio 18, we say that according to the House of Shammai, the resting of tools is a Torah requirement, whereas according to the House of Hillel it is not a Torah requirement. Further there, folio 19: a person must not hire out his tools to a gentile on the eve of the Sabbath; on the fourth and fifth days it is permitted. The opinion of the Rif and Rambam is that this baraita follows the House of Shammai, and the halakhah does not follow it. The Tosafot, the Rosh, and those who follow the Rif hold that this baraita is the halakhah and accords even with the House of Hillel. The reason for the prohibition is Sabbath wages. On the fourth and fifth days it is permitted by absorption into a combined payment; on the eve of the Sabbath it is forbidden even by absorption, since, being close to the Sabbath, it appears as though one takes Sabbath wages. R. Yosef distinguishes between tools with which labor is done and tools with which labor is not done: without absorption, both kinds are forbidden even on the fourth and

Do not be astonished that the sun works on the Sabbath as on a weekday and does not desist, for it is His instrument of craftsmanship, for signs, appointed seasons, days, and years, at the command of the Holy One, blessed be He. The halakhah follows the House of Hillel: there is no commandment requiring tools to rest, and the day's hire is permitted for them even when it is not absorbed into a combined payment, since it is not Sabbath wages but hire for tools whose depreciation is known; the account is made after the Sabbath. They prohibited only a person's wages. This is the clarification of the matter. Here too, the sun has Sabbath wages stored up for the future, as it is written: “The light of the sun shall be sevenfold, like the light of the seven days.” Its reward with it, day by day, without being absorbed into a combined payment, is thus explicit. And it is written: “For you who fear My name, a sun of righteousness shall rise, with healing in its wings.” According to the House of Shammai, who hold that there is a commandment requiring tools to rest—and there is no doubt that, according to them too, it is only rabbinic—the sun's mighty work is the commandment of the day, for which a time has been fixed. It is written, “For everything there is a season”: the mystery of the supernal governance of human action, for the good person as for the sinner. On the eve of the Sabbath, tools with which labor is not done are permitted by absorption, while those with which labor is done are forbidden even by absorption, since the idolater, etc., is like the Israelite's agent. The master's opinion is that in every case tools involve no issue of Sabbath wages; even an idolater[?] is not permitted to stipulate the wages on the Sabbath, and therefore the account is made after the Sabbath, as appears in the Mishnah, chapter Ha-Sho’el. “The three fundamental grave transgressions”—idolatry, forbidden sexual relations, and bloodshed: these are matters that are not clear, for it is difficult to bring the possibility of doing them within the intellect’s grasp, such that it would be necessary to warn against them. Therefore we shall investigate the desired end of their performance from many places, and establish this principle laid down by the Sages of the people of the West. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290169] “Indeed” [gap] eating fitting for any living human being; nevertheless, it suffices for us that it was fitting for one of the creatures still among the living, whoever it may be, since it is embedded, like the speck in a sunbeam[?], as stated above, section 9.

Rema of Fano

In the Jerusalem Talmud they said: “Every matter that is not clear is supported from many places.” That is, for anything that is not clear and to which the intellect is unaccustomed, one must provide supports and demonstrative indications, to understand words of understanding. We too shall search our ways and investigate the three fundamental grave transgressions in the Torah, to establish this great principle and the analogy from them to all prohibitions. Know that there is no action in the world that is not fitting for some created being. This premise has a great and awesome root in the Zohar, on which we need not elaborate. Indeed, it suffices for us that this principle should hold for any of the creatures, even if it is not a human being but is embedded among living things, like that speck in a sunbeam. Otherwise, it would not have been fitting for the possibility of performing that action to exist in nature in any way. The example is: “You shall not eat any carcass; to the resident alien within your gates you

“He was included”—among the nations that did not wish to accept the Torah, to whom the Holy One, blessed be He, permitted even the seven commandments; this requires examination. He left that category by becoming a proselyte of the gate, so that they did not serve[?] idolatry; nevertheless, he did not desire, in the requirements[?], to become a righteous proselyte. [gap][TN290171]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“This is the reason”—for the sages’ statement that giving to the resident alien takes precedence, as is also explicit in Scripture. This is because his soul likewise takes precedence, and the carcass is fitting for him.

Yad Yehudah - ו

“The Jewish princes who bowed down to Joash”—as is explicit in Scripture (II Chronicles 24); our rabbis said that they made him a god.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Indeed”—he teaches us this also concerning the forms of material things, such as the inanimate, the growing, the living, and the speaking, which need one another. For every greater and more important thing includes within itself the lower levels, and those of lower levels are fit to rise to levels higher than themselves; and they are already needed for the rectification of the days of the world. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290172] As stated in Ma’amar Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 17, whoever knows and endeavors to rectify them serves the Lord, provided only that his intention is for the sake of Heaven. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290172] shall give it, and he may eat it.” It is fitting for him even after the giving of our Torah. He was included in “He saw and released the nations,” but is not content with abandonment to license; rather, he desires some commandments, although he has not entered the category of a righteous proselyte. It stands to reason that he has a share only in the carcasses of good souls and keeps seven commandments. Therefore the carcass is fitting as his food. This is the reason for the law explicit in the verse, that giving to the resident alien takes precedence over selling to a gentile.

Even the very substance of another worship may, in some of its ways, be permitted to some created being, on account of that service itself, if the one serving were to intend rightly in his act and service. It is, however, forbidden and adverse to him on account of the corruption of thought that renders his deed unacceptable and invalid: for it is

For outsiders there is in this a kind of idolatry: they think that the service of rectification is directed to the prince, since there is not a single blade of grass that has no constellation and prince above. Moreover, since rebellion occurs among the supernal princes—as with Samael, rider of the serpent, who rebelled against his Creator—they easily come thereby, Heaven forbid, to denial of the true God. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290172]

the way of a woman to serve her husband, and the way of children to serve their father. Suppose a woman were to say to her husband, “You are a god.” Then the service in which she had been commanded and for which she was rewarded has become forbidden to her, and she is punished for it because of an unacceptable intention. Otherwise it is reckoned to her as a great commandment. So too you find with the princes of Judah who bowed down to Joash: that act, when directed to kingship, is praiseworthy, but when directed to divinity, it is a disgraceful and grave transgression. All the more is it a grave iniquity when some created being serves one whom it is wholly unfitting for it to serve. Indeed, all material forms need one another, and endeavoring to put them in order is truly and rightly service of Heaven, provided that the one serving directs his heart to the Omnipresent. Creatures that have no understanding are all drawn in their actions after the understanding of the prince appointed over them; there is rebellion among the princes, as the rider of the serpent attests. Yet there is not a single member of humankind who is permitted to serve any created being in the world, small or great, neither angel nor seraph, in any manner of intention, Heaven forbid, except the Lord alone. This is the severity of the prohibition. Therefore the Torah said, “You shall not learn to do”—but you may learn to understand and to instruct.

This accords with what our rabbis said of it: “Alas for a great servant that was lost from the world!” [gap] They were [gap] fine pearls [gap]. Even now it is prepared to carry dung [gap], as appears in the Zohar, Pinhas; their place is in the female of the great abyss. The worship of Peor came: its service is to carry dung to the rubbish heap, provided that it intends only His service, blessed be He, acknowledging the judgment upon it, etc.

Rema of Fano

I am therefore learning, understanding, and instructing concerning the worship of Peor, despised, rejected, abominable, and foul, exceedingly contemptible among all foreign gods. The name of its particular place is Edrei: divide it into two words, and let your ears hear. It is fitting for the primordial serpent to serve it and keep it, for him alone, as befits him after his corruption—provided that his rider, the serpent who is his prince, does not intend to serve anyone other than Him, blessed be He, and acknowledges this heavenly judgment upon him as punishment for his first offence, and does not again rebel by causing a human being to sin in the matter. This mystery is hinted in the verse, “And dust, ve-‘afar, you shall eat all the days of your life”: merely look with your eyes, for these are the letters of Peor. For the purification of excrement, so that “your camp” may be called “holy,” occurs when it is dry, crumbles, and becomes dust. In the reverse direction, the serpent, cursed above all, transforms dust into dung; for no creature takes in without putting out except a small creature named the mosquito, as appears in chapter Ha-Nizzaqin. This too is set against that: at the utmost holiness, where there is no shell at all, we find it among those who ate manna and drank water from

Yad Yehudah - ו

Yad Yehudah - יג

“For among the shells there are seven measures”—seven corresponding to the seven names of the evil inclination [gap]; therefore there are seven palaces, as written in the Zohar[?], Peqqudei. Miriam's well, mighty in strength, who perform His word, blessed be He, listening to the voice of His word.

The mosquito pecked at the enemy's brain for seven years and became like a year-old fledgling, weighing two litras; they found its mouth to be of copper and its claws of iron. We must expound each and every word and its reason, for there is nothing idle in the conversation of Torah scholars, all the more in the foundation of the event, among the true judgments of the Lord. This small creature is called yattush, a mosquito, because “it has an entrance but no exit,” as appears there: this indicates the utmost limit of its weakness. Its name has the numerical value of ve-nefesh re‘evah, “and a hungry soul,” with the words and the inclusive unit. Therefore the wise king said of it, “Every bitter thing is sweet,” since it puts out nothing but gathers all the filth to sustain itself from it. No filth among living creatures exceeds that of the one who stretches out its hooves, for it has a cloven hoof but does not chew the cud; it is exceedingly contemptible, and its mouth is like passing excrement even when it comes up out of the river. Here too, this one was coming up out of the sea when he began to revile and blaspheme, “at the swelling of its waves,” and said: “His power is only in water.” Earlier too, his forehead was brazen, and he said: “Where is our God?” Therefore the mosquito's mouth was copper. His great might, blessed be He, was also made known on dry land through a small creature whose life is short. This one survived in a profane, wicked man for

This is the mystery of what the Sages said: “At Modim he bowed like a rod and straightened like a serpent.” These matters reach to the sweetening of the external forces: even with the pig and the serpent, the bitterness of impurity and the potency of their venom are destined to be sweetened. Here, then, is straightening

“All are included”—in “whoever straightens up,” even the serpent that goes upon its belly.

In seven years it became like a year-old fledgling, for among the shells there are seven measures comprised as one, like an ape before a human being. Its weight was two litras; each litra weighs nine sela‘im less a quarter, so two litras amount to seventy denars—a number learned from its context. It pecked at his brain, and its claws became iron, after “its legs of iron” in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, which concerns this. This is the mystery of the extensive dominion and long duration of the statue's legs, for the shinbones constitute most of the structure, according to the law of corpse impurity. Moreover, it is written: “Behold, a woman was lying at his feet.” Everything possessing the power of two faces, for good or for its opposite, endures a long time; Jeroboam's calves prove it. Moreover, it is written: “She uncovered his feet and lay down”; every revealed light is twice the concealed one. Moreover, the last made it heavier, to complete the cleansing in a full exile, fulfilling what is said: “She shall not exile you again[?].[TN290186]”

Through his sin, the serpent makes a privy for the female of the great abyss. This was “his strange deed, his foreign service”: to carry dung to the rubbish heap, as they, of blessed memory, said. All creation is capable of repair within seven complete Sabbaths, one by one, to find the reckoning, however they are to be understood—see the treatise Tzevaot—except the serpent, which has no repair until the great Jubilee. Then that great abyss will be abolished entirely, and afterward even the lowest storey of Sheol will be purified and reckoned among the borders of the Garden of Eden. He bends like a reed and straightens like a serpent, in the mystery of Aaron's staff, which stood alive in the form of a serpent to swallow the sorcerers’ serpents. This is the serpent's purification: that it should not go upon its belly. Whoever straightens up straightens up at the Name, for “the Lord straightens the bent,” and all are included; none is excluded. Yet there is “a time for every purpose,” a matter in its time, and for every creature its place and hour. This suffices for the intended purpose; let the wise hear and become wiser still.

Yad Yehudah - א

“As for the second”: this is forbidden sexual relations. That is,[?] one should not wonder that such a repulsive and corrupt act, of very great gravity, should come into the world. For indeed it was fitting that this should be provided for some soul oppressed by the external powers to come into the world by way of substitutions; and its cause is known to YHWH alone, blessed be He. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290188]

Yad Yehudah - ב

“The first”: where he said, “And they have no comforter,” literally, etc. The precision is that “from the hand of their oppressors” they have none: from their oppressors there is no comforter for them. But they do have a comforter from the supernal Crown, which is called Ayin, and from it their help will come. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290189]

Yad Yehudah - ג

Being called also the supernal mazal, concerning which they said: “Children, life, and sustenance do not depend on merit; rather, the matter depends on mazal,” as stated [gap].

Rema of Fano

As for the second of the grave prohibitions we mentioned, it was fitting that a soul oppressed by an alien blemish should be found, for a reason known to the One who knows the secrets of the heart, like fools who wrought corruption: they themselves are His agents, they themselves His witnesses. Concerning it is written: “Behold, the tears of the oppressed, and they have no comforter; power is in the hand of their oppressors, and they have no comforter.” The first occurrence is certainly literal: they have no permission to enter the congregation. The latter is for exposition, for “from Nothing shall their help come”—the supernal Wonder called mazal, whose power suffices to bring restoration and healing to all His creatures.[TN290187] This is what the rabbis say concerning children: “The matter depends on mazal,” whether children of valid or invalid status. Therefore they said “depends,” not “comes into being,” for no invalid coming into being is attributed to it at all.

There is purification in this world for purifying the soul of a mamzer at the full price, as in what we learned in Qiddushin: he is permitted to take his own slave woman, acquired by purchase, through her being reserved exclusively for him and no other; for betrothal does not take effect for him with her. This is intended so that, along

“Therefore he said, ‘Depends on mazal’”—and they did not say [gap], “did not come into being” [gap], children of invalid status.

Yad Yehudah - ה

“There is an opinion,” etc. —that is [gap], from the aspect by which it can be purified above[?] [gap]. At the end of the third chapter of Qiddushin, R. Tarfon says: “Mamzerim can be purified. How? If a mamzer took a slave woman, the offspring is a slave. If he freed him, the son is found to be a free man.” Rashi explains: “Mamzerim can be purified”—from the disqualification of their offspring, so that their children will not be mamzerim. “The offspring is a slave”—and not a mamzer, for her offspring has her status. “A free man”—and permitted to an Israelite woman. In the Gemara they raised the question: does R. Tarfon speak of doing this from the outset, or after the fact? Rashi explains: “He speaks of doing this from the outset”—a mamzer may take a slave woman, for he holds that when it is written, “There shall be no qadesh,” it applies to an Israelite, but not to a mamzer. Or does he speak after the fact, of a mamzer who took a slave woman, whereas from the outset he must not take her, since he is an Israelite and "There shall be no qadesh" applies to him? [gap] Like him.[TN290190]

Yad Yehudah - י

"And the town became absorbed"[?] [gap], as we expound [gap] there (folio 72b). Our rabbis taught: "Mamzerim and netinim will be pure in the future"—the words of R. Yose; R. Aqiva disagrees with him. We rule in the Gemara that the halakhah follows R. Yose.[TN290191]

Yad Yehudah - יא

"Therefore" [gap], etc.

with this, his remedy should be in his hands: to free his children and qualify them to enter the congregation. Only in this manner was this prohibition permitted to him from the outset. After the fact, however, the remedy is possible in any case, even with another person's slave woman: if his children are freed by money or a document, with the consent of that woman's master, who owns both her and her children, they become qualified to enter the congregation. For our compassionate God devises means to bring back all the outcast; let what is unstated be learned from what is explicit. It is written: "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver," from which we learn there: "A family that has become absorbed has become absorbed." Rabbi Yose holds an even stronger view: mamzerim will be pure in the future. He did not explain how their purification will occur, for the Omnipresent has many ways. Therefore this prohibition must not be treated lightly, even after many years. Whatever is publicly known and recognizable, although most unlearned people pay it no heed, is not called "absorbed"; such a person is prohibited to the congregation as though born just now from those liable to excision.

There is a mamzer who is a Torah scholar whose remedy is in his own hands, through abundant occupation with Torah, for "her commerce is better than commerce in silver." "Her commerce," saḥrah, precisely: an expression of going around, for the matter is not entrusted to our hands, but to the Lord alone. This is the measure for

I have already written [gap] [gap] that they disagree only over the meaning expounded, and both statements are true: one who withdraws from

Remember: behold, they counted three[?], BG[?]: camel, rock hyrax, and hare, which chew the cud. He attached it to the last two; in the shell, Ammon and Moab draw nourishment, and Ishmael from the camel.[TN290193]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“As his name”—Lot translates as “cursed.”

Yad Yehudah - ד

The sense here comes from “He shall swallow up on this mountain the face of the covering that covers” (Isaiah 25), an expression of covering and concealment. The designation “Lot” for the evil inclination follows their usage in Midrash ha-Ne‘elam. Of the evil inclination it is said, “The left hand repels”; therefore it was given this designation, to indicate repulsion and concealment. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290194]

Rema of Fano

The soul of a mamzer does indeed have a relationship with those who begot it, like Ammon and Moab with Lot and his daughters, in the mystery of “two from among three” of those that only chew the cud; for the camel, which is the son of the slave woman, preceded them in generation. Lot's daughters prepared themselves for this. He himself was from the root of the primordial serpent, cursed, as his name signifies; it is also from the expression, “He shall swallow up on this mountain the face of the covering that covers,” namely the evil inclination, as hinted in the Midrash ha-Ne‘elam. They have already said concerning it: “The left hand repels and the right hand draws near,” for he grew up in the commandments with Abraham. His daughters devised a plan, in a place where, as they supposed, there were no men, to preserve seed from their father. Our sages explained that the seed mentioned here is none other than our righteous Messiah. This does not mean that they had particular knowledge of it; rather, since they fixed their thought on preserving seed that fills the world, which in their opinion was entirely desolate, they intended a seed that itself fills the whole earth. This is what is said at the end of Ruth Rabbati and in Bereshit Rabbah: when Seth was born in image and likeness, Eve looked upon the seed that comes from another place. This suffices.

Yad Yehudah - יד

"Lot acted inadvertently or under compulsion"—although in the Gemara there we say that he

The elder strove first to gain mastery over her father and over herself. Therefore her repair is difficult, for she has no assurance. Examine closely and you will find it in a matter learned from its context. See the treatise Ha-Millu'im concerning the four kinds of living creatures that each have only one sign of purity among those that go on four legs. The younger too followed her counsel and learned from her deeds. A woman who emits seed first bears a male, and they acted deliberately in this, although they were mistaken and intended a commandment. Nevertheless, since this was an exceedingly disgraceful act and so grave a transgression, doing it for its own sake does not suffice to permit it. Therefore their males were kept at a distance. Lot, however, acted inadvertently or under compulsion through his drunkenness. Therefore the females, who come from the man's emitting seed first, are permitted at once to enter the congregation. Along with this, the prior decree did its work, bringing the precious out of the vile, in the sense of "I have found David My servant." Our sages said: "Where did I find him? In Sodom," for it is written, "Your two daughters who are found."

The Messiah who comes from them is a finding and a scorpion, when attention is diverted, without the complete preparation appropriate to a generation in which the son of David comes and which is entirely worthy. It will then be

Yad Yehudah - טו

"By the prior decree"—concerning David and the Messiah, "David My servant," as they, of blessed memory, said in chapter He-'Arel, on "Then I said, 'Behold, I have come,'" etc. David said: "I said, 'Now I have come,' but did not know that it was written of me in the scroll of the book." There it is written, "who are found," etc.

Yad Yehudah - טז

"And the Messiah," etc.—that is, as they, of blessed memory, said in chapter Heleq: three come when attention is diverted—the Messiah, a finding, and a scorpion. They spoke of the Messiah alone, for all of them are present in him: he himself is a finding from Lot's disgrace, as it is written of them, "the ones found"; and a scorpion, insofar as the external forces are present. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290200] Therefore, even if he comes with rejoicing in an entirely worthy generation, his coming will nevertheless occur when attention is diverted, without complete preparation. This is good for him, so that the external forces will not accuse him, and it is also a

Yad Yehudah - א

“Therefore”—for the repair of Moab, David had to expose himself to danger concerning Ahimelech at Nob, as below[?]. [TN290204]

Yad Yehudah - 2

“And it is different”[?]—in the reason stated in his bread[?]: “Because he hired Balaam against you,” etc., pertains to the exclusion of Moab alone, for Balak king of Moab hired him, not Ammon. [TN290205]

Yad Yehudah - ג

“To Ammon alone”—and not to Moab, which met Israel with bread, for it is written: “The Moabites dwelling in Ar.”

Rema of Fano

Scripture made the reason for the exclusion of Ammon and Moab depend on two things. The first is common to both: “Because they did not meet you with bread.” Therefore David had to undergo danger when he departed from Jonathan without bread. The second concerns Moab alone: “Because he hired against you one to curse you.” Therefore King David, peace be upon him, accepted Shimei's curse with love. I saw someone write concerning this that, just as “because he hired” is a reason applying only to Moab, so “because they did not meet you with bread” is a reason applying only to Ammon; for concerning Sihon it is written, “You shall sell me food for money,” “as the children of Esau and the Moabites dwelling in Ar did for

Yad Yehudah - ד

“The plain sense says,” etc. —that is, as appears in the Gemara, chapter He-‘Arel (folio 76b). Doeg said to Saul: “Before you ask about David whether or not he is fit for kingship, ask whether or not he is fit to enter the congregation, since he comes from Ruth the Moabite.” Abner said to him: “We learned: an Ammonite man, but not an Ammonite woman; a Moabite man, but not a Moabite woman.” “If so, a male mamzer, but not a female mamzer; an Egyptian man, but not an Egyptian woman!” “Here it is different, since Scripture explains the reason: ‘Because they did not meet you with bread and water.' It is a man's way to come out to meet, but not a woman's way." "The men ought to have met the men, and the women the women," etc. Now, if we say that the Moabites did meet them, it is difficult: why did they not answer on Ruth's behalf that the Moabites themselves had met them? [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290206] Nevertheless, they did not answer this way because the plain sense of the verses implies that "they did not meet" refers also to the Moabites. "Furthermore, the elder," etc.—as appears in chapter Shor she-Nagaḥ (folio 38): "She called his name Moab." R. Hiyya bar Abba said: "The Holy One, blessed be He, does not withhold the reward for proper speech." For concerning the elder, "Moab"—from a father—the Holy One, blessed be He, says to Moses: "Do not provoke them to war." War is forbidden, but you may impose forced service on them. Concerning the me." One may say: in the Gemara, chapter He-'Arel, they did not give this answer to Doeg's objection, when he asked: "The men ought to have met the men, and the women the women." What we have said answers this, since the Moabite women did meet them with bread. Why was this not said in the Gemara? Because the plain sense of "they did not meet you" implies that both were alike in the matter, unlike "because he hired." Some explain that only the Moabites who dwelt in Ar sold to Israel what they had available, and they were a tiny minority of the entire nation of Moab, for Moab was judged in this matter according to its majority. In any event, according to everyone, it was fitting for David to undergo danger through lack of bread, to atone for the sin of the first eating from the Tree of Knowledge.

When we attend to the equation here between those dwelling in Seir and those dwelling in Ar, it is clear that those dwelling in Ar did not come out to meet them. Individuals slipped away from Israel's camp to buy food and water from them; this benefited the sellers. Moses said to Sihon: "You too should do this for your own benefit; I ask only one thing beyond what I enjoyed from them: 'Only let me pass through on foot.'" It is clear that, since the children of Ammon certainly had no hand in that breach of faith concerning Balaam, there was no dissenter or objector regarding the younger, who said "son of my people," the Holy One, blessed be He, says: "Do not besiege them or provoke them," meaning that you must not even impose forced service on them. Hence the reason that David needed to exert his strength to repair her through the words of his songs and melodies against his enemies[?]. Not so the kings who descended from Naamah the Ammonite, Rehoboam's mother: rather, Asa pursued, etc., as is known from their saying, of blessed memory. "All the more Hezekiah"—who said, "I shall sleep on my bed, and the Holy One, blessed be He, acts for him." He did not intend to rely on idle folly [or: prayers], but made himself an example of what is said in Sifra de-Tzeniuta, "The earth was nullified." This is said of Malkhut on account of the light descending to her from Yesod, hovering and covering over her, as explained there. For this reason, too, a Name of Malkhut is here, alluding[?] to Malkhut in "his trust." [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290209] alone might endure that distress. Naomi[?] did not draw near until the ruling had spread throughout Israel.[TN290203]

Furthermore, the elder spoke at length in shame, and provocation was decreed against her children. Likewise David, who came from him, had to abound in songs and praises and greatly provoke his enemies, as it is written: “I shall not return until I have consumed them.” The younger was silent, and provocation against her children was forbidden to us. Likewise the kings who came from him did not need David's toil: Asa pursued, Jehoshaphat sought mercy, and Hezekiah's rest was glorious. We have already explained in the treatise Yonat Elem, chapter 21, that they did not change their modes without cause; certainly Hezekiah was not sitting idle through “sloth casts into deep sleep.” Rather, they all served a great pattern. Of Hezekiah it is written: “The Lord shall be his trust,” etc.—the name Adonai, of which it is said: “The earth ceased from activity.” Consult there.

From the middle prohibition to the third: Abel, the son of the first Adam, deserved to die for his sin of gazing upon the supernal Glory. Cain became his executioner, but not for the sake of Heaven; therefore he too was punished for it. Moreover, Abel deserved to die only at Cain's hands, “when a wicked man swallows one more righteous than himself.” Had Abel been wholly righteous—Cain had already fallen before him, as our sages said, and his blood had been permitted to him. [TN290219] Because he showed kindness to him, Aaron's death at Moses’ hands subsequently followed by the law of kindness, for “the reward of a commandment is a commandment,” to turn the curse into a blessing. Because the fruits of my deeds were better than yours and preceded yours, my offering was accepted with favor.’ Cain answered and said to Abel: ‘There is no judgment, there is no Judge, there is no other world, there is no giving a good reward to the righteous, and there is no exacting payment from the wicked.’ Abel answered and said to Cain: ‘There is judgment, there is a Judge, there is another world, there is giving a good reward to the righteous, and there is exacting payment from the wicked.’ Over these matters they were disputing[?],” etc. [TN290215] the two were alone in the field, it is possible that Cain was permitted to act toward him as an agent of the court, had he made his own soul righteous and put him to death by a true judgment, on the mission of the righteous Judge, saying: “Give honor and confess.” Cain did not do so; instead, he made himself wicked.

Therefore Solomon said: “He made everything for His purpose.” They, of blessed memory, said: “For His praise,” for Abel died only while praising the Omnipresent, his lips murmuring: “There is judgment”—that is, to punish the righteous in this world for the minor transgressions they have committed —“and there is a Judge,” from world to world, to give them a good reward in the future, which is the final world. The wicked person too was created for the Omnipresent's praise, so that the performance of an evil deed might be justified in the ruling, in its day, place, and hour, in the mystery of a transgression for its own sake, which we have thoroughly explained in its place. But Cain and his companions—and who is their father? The rider of the serpent, who tends and guards it; one who guards his soul will keep far from his enticement, for it is evil and bitter and has reached the true heart, and He, being compassionate, will atone for iniquity—they assisted evil. They say concerning themselves: “There is no judgment” in this world, that is, to punish the judgment[?]; on the contrary, they consume the reward of minor commandments, and that reward too is destroyed while still between their teeth. [TN290210] “There is no Judge” to exact and “there is giving a good reward,” etc., is not a repetition of the same matter in different words. Rather, the intention of “there is no judgment” in this world concerns the righteous, for their minor transgressions.[TN290216]

Yad Yehudah - י

“The wicked person too”—one must say of him, “The Lord made everything for His purpose,” so that it might be justified, etc. As our sages said, when the Holy One, blessed be He, executes judgment upon the wicked, He is praised. Rema of Fano

Moreover, it was fitting that at least one other created being should be found that undergoes death by nature and inherent property, not by way of punishment; for nothing was created in vain. Death itself, being among the acts of providence, “He did not create it for emptiness.” If a person does not sin, why should he be put to death? What has he done? And it is possible that he should not sin. The Torah did not say, two thousand years before the world, “When a person dies in a tent,” to impose penal death on the first Adam before he sinned, Heaven forbid. Rather, the intention concerned a lofty and praiseworthy death, in accordance with the greatness of its worth, mystery, and importance, attained by Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, alone: “His eye had not grown dim, nor had his freshness fled.” He was commanded concerning it as concerning any positive commandment in the Torah, for it is written, “Die on the mountain,” as one who is commanded and acts, like the time for the commandments of fringes and tefillin and their removal on the eve of the Sabbath toward nightfall, and the like. His fulfillment of this commandment

“They learned this”—the translators, from its not saying here “for Aaron expired and was gathered,” as is written of other righteous people. One cannot say that his death was inferior to theirs, since in the command, when Moses was commanded concerning Aaron's death, the language of gathering is written; so too it is written of Moses himself, and it also concludes: “As Aaron died and was gathered.” Necessarily, then, saying only “he expired” at the actual event indicates that his death was greater than that of the other righteous. “For he expired” was not said as the actual truth, but only as it appeared to Israel's eyes, as he concludes shortly below.

was at a time of favor, as explained in its place, when his days and years were completed. Thus there was a decree before Him, blessed be He, that he should die at that time, without any sin as its cause, Heaven forbid. Remove expiring and gathering from here: rather, "Moses, the servant of the Lord, died there," fulfilling this commandment willingly and joyfully.

Onkelos' translation is precise concerning Aaron in the verse, "The whole congregation saw that Aaron had expired." He did not translate "ve-itneged," as he usually does for the expiring mentioned of the perfected, but "for Aaron died"; so too the other translators. They learned this from gathering not being mentioned concerning him at the actual event, as it is of the other righteous, of whom it is written, "He expired and was gathered to his people." Although at the time of the command Moses was told, "Aaron shall be gathered to his people," and of Moses himself it is written, "Die and be and count, and you will find eight journeys from Moserot to Mount Hor. Rather, this too is among the rebukes: "You did this as well. When Aaron died on Mount Hor at the end of forty years and the clouds of glory departed, you feared the war of the king of Arad and appointed a head to return to Egypt. You retraced eight journeys as far as Bene Ya'aqan and from there to Moserah. There the sons of Levi fought you and killed some of you, and you some of them, until they turned you back along the path of your return. From there you returned at Gudgodah," etc. "In Moserah you made heavy mourning for Aaron's death, which had caused you this, and it seemed to you as though he had died there," etc.

gathered, as Aaron died and was gathered," we too may distinguish precisely and say: dying and gathering mean being gathered with particular righteous people in their deaths, whose bodies endure even after death. For them death is only a disjoining of the union, their soul being in one compartment and their body in another. Expiring and gathering are otherwise: only the four elements of the body, even after death, are joined and do not separate. Expiring, however, is the weakening of their composition and loosening of their union, in the mystery of those who sleep in the dust—even for one of whom "to dust you shall return" was not said—until one hour before the resurrection of the dead. Those who sleep in the dust have known hours when they rise to pray for the living. The composition of their elements is temporarily strengthened, with the distinction that applies to the inhabitants of this world; thus He awakens them for a time.

We have a pleasing mystery in the verse, "Afterward you shall be gathered to your people," spoken to Moses concerning the war with Midian: only by virtue of the rear of his body was there in Moses a gathering to his people. This was not so for Moses' face, the face of the sun, for the skin of his face shone. Moreover, "you shall be gathered to your people" has the numerical value of Shabbat; we explained it elsewhere. The intention concerning Aaron is that at the time of the command it was said, "Aaron shall be gathered and shall die there"; yet it is written, "The whole congregation saw that Aaron had expired." Thus he expired only to the appearance of their eyes. Burial is mentioned concerning him only in the portion 'Eqev. The reason is: since it was in Moserah[?], Scripture is speaking and says "there" as a rebuke, as Rashi explained there, adjoining "he was buried there" to say that he did not die in Moserah; rather, he died in the place where he was buried, etc. [TN290220]

"To occur in the tent"—in the Garden of Eden. Concerning this it is said, "When a person dies in a tent" [gap], and there [gap]; this is holiness with powers for the body.

Yad Yehudah - ב

"Requires separation"—seven days. Likewise one requires separation for the tent of the Garden of Eden, like the priest. This is "everyone who enters the tent," etc., "shall be impure seven days," as will be explained shortly below.

Yad Yehudah - ג

"From the service of the Day of Atonement"—for we learned at the beginning of Yoma: "Seven days before the Day of Atonement, they separate the high priest from his home to the Chamber of Parhedrin." In the third chapter of Parah we learned: "Seven days before burning the heifer,

Rema of Fano

Who will uncover the dust from your eyes, our first father, who brought himself near to death before its time? This the Lord did not choose. Death is intended by Him, blessed be He, to occur in the tent: it is being stored away in holiness, death and life together. Of it was said, "Behold, it was very good": its plain meaning is "this is death"—"how good is a word in its time!" It is known that everyone who enters from a lesser holiness into a greater holiness requires separation. Faithful testimony to this comes from the service of the Day of Atonement and the rite of the heifer, and likewise "He called to Moses on the seventh day." The place of separation is purification for the impure, but not for those who are completely pure. The example is the chamber facing the Temple building in relation to the Sanctuary and the holy place. It is on the level of the garments of those who eat terumah being deemed midras-impure for sacred food. The days of separation required sprinkling on the third and they would separate the priest who burns the heifer from his home to the chamber facing the Temple building." There in Yoma we say in the Gemara that R. Yohanan derives these from the inauguration rites, whereas R. Shimon ben Laqish derives them from Sinai, for it is written: "The glory of the Lord rested on Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days."

Yad Yehudah - ד

"The place of separation is" [gap], table, altar, lampstand; likewise they enter there [gap]. This Sanctuary is a clear sign of their complete purity, for already [gap] they will be permitted to enter a holier place. So too with the tent of the lower Garden of Eden, which is the place of separation.

Yad Yehudah - ח

"The comparison is this": the chamber facing the Temple building, and all the more the Chamber of Parhedrin, in which they would separate the high priest. These chambers were in the Court of Israel; the Sanctuary and the Holy of Holies are more sanctified, as we learned in chapter 8 of Kelim. So too concerning the garments of those who eat terumah: we learned in chapter Ḥomer of Hagigah that they are deemed midras-impure for sacred food. [TN290224]

Yad Yehudah - ו

"Required sprinkling on the third and seventh days"—as appears in the Mishnah, the third chapter of Parah: R. Hanina, the deputy of the priests, says: "They sprinkle upon the priest who burns the heifer throughout all seven days, but upon the one for the Day of Atonement they would sprinkle only on the third and seventh days." In the Gemara, the first chapter of Yoma, we say that requiring sprinkling on all seven days for the heifer is merely an additional stringency.

Yad Yehudah - ז

"Corresponding to the days of construction": Yesod, Hod and Netsaḥ are hinted by the three days. One who comes to be purified through Yesod, where there are three powers of severity—as stated above in the explanation of "Who seventh days, corresponding to the days of construction, with Malkhut within. One ascending through Yesod, Hod, and Netsaḥ is sprinkled from the right, as it is written: "The pure one shall sprinkle upon the impure." Likewise Malkhut, Tif'eret, Gevurah, and Hesed: this is the gate, also from the right.

The rite of the heifer is "the statute of the Torah" for Moses in the perfection of contemplation, "an everlasting statute" for the children of Israel in the fitness of practice, and for the stranger dwelling among them. Here too, one who separates from uncircumcision is like one who separates from a grave. Yet "this is the Torah" itself: "When a person dies in a tent"—every person, every death, and every tent are included. Therefore "I said, 'I shall become wise'": where I was permitted, I shall contemplate; yet "it is far from me." "Every open vessel" in the place of separation faces downward, and has no tightly bound cover to unite it with its root: "it is impure," not merely for seven days, but absolutely, and requires a return to the kilns. The sequence of times above causes "everyone who enters the tent" from below—among those attached to him in his life and received there through his merit, among the angels accompanying him and the like—and "everything that is in the tent," those summoned there from above in his honor, to be sealed and ascend, and the Lord will be with him for a limited time. This is what it says: "It shall be impure seven days." The word "impure" is expounded here favorably, as an expression of sealing and closing, and of gathered," seven sections[?]—these are three days: they sprinkle upon him the waters of mercy, by way of its powers of severity on the right[?]. Likewise, one who comes through the gate of Malkhut, which is below, beneath the sefirot: the light ascends from it in a straight line as far as Tif'eret, and from there to Hesed on the right and Gevurah on the left. These are four days: they sprinkle upon him from the right as well. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290225]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"The rite of the heifer"—examine it closely there: at the beginning, "This is the statute of the Torah"; at its end it is written, "It shall be an everlasting statute for the children of Israel and for the stranger dwelling among them." Afterward it says again, "This is the Torah: when a person dies in a tent." The reason for all this is that at first it said only [gap] [gap], and from every tent of the Garden of Eden below and above.

Yad Yehudah - ט

"Therefore"—Solomon aptly said, "I said, 'I shall become wise,' but it is far from me," which our rabbis expounded concerning the rite of the heifer. A priest too can say, "I shall become wise where I have been permitted," namely in the place of separation, yet it is far from him, for it is written shortly afterward —

Yad Yehudah - י

“Every open vessel upon which there is no tightly bound cover is impure,” etc. His intention concerns what is said in the Zohar, Va-Yaqhel, page 312: [gap; tentatively identified words: “which dwells in the Garden of Eden below,” “all,” “before yet,” “when they ascend,” “from all,” “River of Fire,” “entirely,” “since,” “and then they stand”]. Scripture says that every open vessel in the lower Garden of Eden [gap], “upon which there is no tightly bound cover” to bind it above, requires sprinkling corresponding that which ascends in the mystery of the light's return from below upward; for death is nothing but removal, elevation, and storage away.

Alternatively, “everything that is in the tent” means what was there beforehand, among the existences hidden there as he passed through, waiting for the time of his perfection: specifically existences rooted above and those attached to him that also face there. But every vessel of copper and wrought iron, among the lower garments, requires stripping off and storage in its place until its replacement comes. This is the rule of dying. Expiring in its ordinary sense is otherwise: it means the cessation of natural powers and their elevation, and the disjoining of their elements, as we said.

The sequence of time—the seven days above—causes all who come from below into the lower Garden of Eden, among the souls attached to a person during his life, including the souls of his acquaintances and relatives who come to him at the time of his death, as appears in the Zohar, Va-Yehi; and all who come to meet him, angels and souls of the righteous, into the tent, as appears in the

“The very”—what was said in the preceding section need not astonish: the word “ascent”[?] is explained as an expression of blocking and concealment. So too with the fifty gates of Binah: forty-nine of them correspond to the seven days of construction, each comprising seven, corresponding to the forty-nine aspects of purity. The fifth[?] gate is shut and hidden, of which it is said, “You made him a little less than God” [gap]. “Tent,” ohel, has the numerical value of PNY ṬH[?]. [TN290229]

“After the giving of the Torah”—as appears in the first chapter of Yoma (folio 4b): “‘The glory of the Lord rested on Mount Sinai’: this event was after the Ten Commandments, which preceded the six days”—the words of R. Yose the Galilean. In the Gemara we say that he holds like the first tanna, who says that the Torah was given on the sixth [gap]. “To Moses He said, ‘Come up to the Lord’”: this is what happened to him[?] on the seventh day. Scripture came only to purge the food and drink in his intestines, to make him like the ministering

The very letters of tame, “impure,” hint at the mystery of the forty-nine supernal gates on their own: the seven days of the circuit, each comprising seven. The hidden fiftieth gate on its own is hinted by the letter alef, toward which all turn to ascend and be united there. First, a cessation in purity from the lower objects of sensation must precede it, just as Moses was covered by the cloud for six days when he ascended the mountain after the giving of the Torah, and “Come up to Me” was called to him on the seventh, to purge eating and drinking from him. This is not mentioned concerning his other ascents; therefore I say that he did not eat in the intervals. Between the first descent and the second ascent he was occupied with eliminating the calf and its worshippers, and “You shall not eat over the blood” applied to them. Our rabbis said that this warns a Sanhedrin that has put someone to death not to taste anything that entire day. On the following night he was undoubtedly arranging the prayer that he would pray the next day to atone for them. Between the second and third he was occupied with the commandment, “Hew for yourself two tablets,” to repair the inanimate, through which they sinned in the calf's gold. Likewise, “Make for yourself a wooden ark,” to repair the forms, of which it is written: “They exchanged their glory for the likeness of an ox that eats grass.” When he brought down the second tablets, he repaired the kinds of living creatures through the section of the offerings, and the human angels, in accordance with R. Natan's statement there. [TN290230]

Yad Yehudah - ד

“To repair the forms”—the growing, the living, and the speaking, which were also corrupted through the deed of the calf. The corruption of the growing is hinted in the saying, “eats grass”; it was repaired again through the wooden ark. See Ma’amar Heqor Din, Part III, chapter 20. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290231]

Yad Yehudah - ה

“‘Ani is written”—an acronym of standing, falling, and sitting, as he concludes shortly below. The meaning is that these natural activities ceased: Moses was poor, having no need of them, and this was his wealth and his happiness. He will not grow faint or weary. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290232]

Yad Yehudah - ו

“With a shortened vav”—which is reduced to a yod.

Yad Yehudah - ז

“Behold,” etc.—the value of shalom[?]; there is a hint to the Righteous One, the foundation of the world. Therefore it is written with a shortened vav, so that a yod is hinted at Yesod, “a covenant of peace.”[TN290233]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"Of whom it is written," etc.—as appears in Ra'aya Meheimna: Moses is the pillar of Tif'eret; "and the poor"—that is the righteous one—"shall not diminish" below ten. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290234]

Yad Yehudah - ט

All the more fitting is this, according to what they expounded in the Zohar, Pinhas, page 214[?]: the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, "Say it yourself with your mouth, for you are handing it over to him by the will of your heart," etc. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290235] This is what is written, "Therefore say," etc. Since this is so, the hint in the shortened vav is apt, indicating that they intend one and the same idea.

Yad Yehudah - י

"His death was doubled"—to indicate to him, "Dying, face through the rays of splendor he attained. Thus no leisure remained for him to eat between descent and ascent.

The Torah testified concerning the third descent, "I stood"; concerning the second, "I fell prostrate"; and concerning the first, "I sat on the mountain." The sign for all three together, in precisely this order, is "The man Moses was exceedingly humble," 'anav: 'ani is written, with a shortened vav resembling the vav in "My covenant of peace." This is the Righteous One of the world, of whom it is written: "The poor shall not give less"; for the smallness of the vav makes it a yod, half the measure of a vav. This is all the more fitting according to what they expounded in the Zohar: Moses was commanded to be the one speaking on His behalf and saying, "Behold, I, Moses, give him, Phinehas, My covenant of peace." The conclusion arising from these words is that Moses needed none of the natural objects of sensation of this world. The word 'ani is

"Behold, it was very good"—all is true, for through this a person prolongs his days in the world that is wholly long. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290237] Therefore, if this repair is not yet complete, wait for it. On this basis the Sages, of blessed memory, said that the righteous do not return to their dust. [TN290237] an acronym of 'amidah, nefilah, yeshivah—standing, falling, sitting. Consult the Zohar, Bereshit, folio 31: Moses was attached to the white light, which eats and drinks nothing. This suffices.

Our first father sinned, and his death was doubled, for he was clothed in the external death; he fed unripe fruit to all creation and weakened them away from life. Here "behold, it was very good," me'od, is expounded as the initials of maskil el dal, "one who attends to the poor." This is Adam, whose letters are those of me'od, who became poor after the sin; his remedy is death in its ordinary meaning. Moreover, in the end, "the counsel of the Lord shall stand forever." Therefore punitive death is called mot, "dying," while the death intended for honor and splendor is expressed by the doubling, tamut, "you shall die." "Behold, it was very good." "Though he delay, wait for him": the righteous whom the Holy One, blessed be He, will bring to life will not return to their dust again. Thus only this death, through the nullification of the composition, is denied of them.

As stated in the Zohar, Terumah, folio 238b, at the blessing of food—“His goodness,” and not “from His goodness”—as follows: [text supplied from the print witness][TN290239] “‘His goodness’: this is the supernal right. ‘And from His goodness’: this is a level below, which is from the side of the right. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290239] It is a level below because goodness goes forth to the lower inhabitants of the world and sends nourishment below. It is called good and is called Hesed. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290239] Good is when it comprises everything within itself and does not spread below. Hesed is when it descends below and does good at every level, to the righteous and to the wicked, without holding back[?]. Although it is one level, how do we know? It is written, ‘Only goodness and kindness shall pursue me.’ If goodness, why kindness? If kindness, why goodness? Rather, goodness comprises everything within itself and does not spread below. Kindness descends, spreads below and feeds all, righteous and wicked alike.” See the explanation of this in Pardes Rimmonim, Gate of the Mediators. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290239]

Rema of Fano

We hold that evils and good are all given by one Shepherd. The reason the shell precedes the fruit is to subdue it between goodness and kindness. As explained in the Zohar, Terumah (Zohar II, 168b): “Goodness comprises everything within itself and does not spread downward.” The hint is in the four-letter Name, which, when elevated in reduced numerical value, amounts to tov, “good.” Kindness, however, descends, spreads downward, and feeds all. The hint is in the four-letter Name when elevated in its letters, whose numerical value is hesed, “kindness,” “to satisfy every living being with favor.” The shell can precede only the spreading, never the hidden root. This is what we said: evil has no precedence in the perceptible realm as an absolutely separate portion, but is bound by cords of love between goodness and kindness. Concerning the perceptible precedence of the inferior portion first, it is written: “I shall give grass in your field for your cattle,” and afterward, “You shall eat and be satisfied”—from every pure living creature. “Be satisfied” is said of bread alone. Likewise in human nourishment, the more honorable and excellent portions are the last to be nourished, until the person is refined and clarified, twice, three times, at their head. [TN290238]

It is known of created beings in general that this is a shell for that, and this a kernel for that. This fruit, later in formation—even the external garment—will in the future be included in the good. Here we have a favorable reason concerning the loaves that the Land of Israel will in the future bring forth, when the sun's light returns to three hundred and forty-three times as much. Concerning the removal of these it was said: “I shall clothe the heavens in blackness.” Albish, “I shall clothe,” has precisely that numerical value. Yet the portion of this light that remains in the world is the inferior one, like the oil very close to the wick. The three hundred and forty-two portions of it that ascended in the name of the Lord, were stored away, and were removed from the world through the first sin—each portion is superior to everything beneath it, until one reaches the highest portion, hidden from the eye, within which the power of Ein Sof is stored, as explained in its place. You have thus learned that there is no measure to the damage to the luminaries diminished through the first sin, and no limit to the future repair. The three hundred and forty-three portions are not equal, so that we could estimate in our intellect what the Lord will do to save us, for His mercies are numerous without end. Nevertheless, we learned in the Book of the Zohar that it gives a great measure to the sun's light in the sevenfold. We explained it well in the book ‘Asis Rimmonim, Gate 8; consult there.

Why is it called goodness, and why kindness? It is goodness when it comprises everything within itself and does not spread to descend below. It is kindness when it descends below and does good to all creatures, righteous and wicked, without concern. Although it is one level, from where do we know? It is written: ‘Only goodness and kindness shall pursue me.’ If goodness, why kindness? If kindness, why goodness? Rather, goodness comprises everything within itself and does not spread below. Then the refined blood spreads to all the body's limbs, to each as appropriate for it; in them it cooks a third time and turns into the flesh, sinews, and bones of every limb, after expelling the superfluities found in it outward, such as the waste of the ear and nose, sweat, and the like. This is through the sun's light in the future equaling its original strength at the time of creation, three hundred and forty-three times greater, as stated there from the words of Jonathan ben Uzziel.

“Concerning their removal”—and the diminution of the great light, it is said: Albish, “I shall clothe,” has the numerical value three hundred and forty-three.

The diminution that occurred in them is a sign concerning the parts of the soul that were diminished, for the supernal radiance was taken from them, as stated above, chapter 13. [text supplied from the print witness][TN290247] This is hinted in the number of nefesh, ruaḥ, neshamah, ḥayah and yeḥidah, which is 1,099, corresponding to shamayim qadrut, “heavens, blackness,” whose numerical value is 1,100. [text supplied from the print witness] [TN290247] The additional one corresponds to the blackness itself. [TN290247]

Yad Yehudah - ב

The five parts of the soul, with the vessel that holds them and their inclusive whole, have the numerical value 1,100, the value of Talmud Torah together with its nine letters. This hints that the Torah and its letters are the great repair of the soul’s parts, in every place and at every time. [TN290248]

Rema of Fano

From the luminaries we may learn concerning everything, for what happened to them is a sign for the parts of the soul. The combined numerical value of all five—nefesh, ruaḥ, neshamah, ḥayah, yeḥidah—is that of shamayim qadrut, “heavens, blackness,” with the addition of the blackness itself, which is a sackcloth garment upon them until our Maker has mercy upon us. They, together with their inclusive whole, the complete human being, have the numerical value of Talmud Torah, “study of Torah,” with the letters. [TN290246] For the human soul has no greater repair apart from Torah and its letters, all of which correspond: at every place and every time, whoever desires may consecrate himself. From this you may judge concerning the other levels, hidden and revealed, all of which have an ascent in holiness with the comprehensive repair hoped for speedily in our days. Who can stand in the Lord's counsel to estimate things that have no measure?

“This is the bread of affliction” that we eat: it must be cleaned of the bran continually thrown away by the sweat of our faces and unfit for food, which is the outer shell. On the contrary, it is a portion that will then be praiseworthy and superior in cooking, and over it it is fitting to recite “Who brings forth.” But evil in itself requires much cleansing before it is sweetened. white fire, without the corruption of change, for all its letters are names of the Holy One, blessed be He. The letters divide into many names in many forms—happy is one who knows them! In this matter lies the mystery of what our sages said in the second chapter of Hagigah: the House of Shammai says the heavens were created first; the House of Hillel says the earth was created first; the sages say both were created as one. In truth there is no disagreement here. These matters reach to Tif'eret and Malkhut, the principal construction, which were two faces. From the aspect of manifestation [gap], Malkhut precedes Tif'eret: this is "the earth was created first," for after the separation Tif'eret descended [gap]. AB[?], they said "two were created first"[?]. Neither this nor that concerns precedence in time, Heaven forbid; rather, both were created as one, in the mystery of two faces. mystery of "the earth was created first." At the beginning of its existence, the beneficial righteous ones, the Bound Ones among those tied to Jacob, who are from the world of unity, emerged in order from absolute nonbeing into the beginning of existence, from below upward. When the supernal spark shone in them in the order from above downward, then "the heavens were created first." The repair of their equalization in light and vessels together is preserved, in the sense that their bond was released and they were called the Dotted Ones. And if both were created as one, through this "the snare was broken and we escaped," in the mystery of the Dappled Ones, beruddim, meaning barim and davim, "healthy and sick," in the sifting of souls and their extension into their garments, as explained in its place. This suffices for a listening ear. The divine mysteries have an inner face within a face and a mystery within a mystery. "Wisdom rests in an understanding heart"; "walk humbly with your God." Blessed be the Lord forever. Amen and amen.

The treatise Ha-Ittim is concluded.

beginning of Tif'eret's ascent likewise all occur in one instant. There is only precedence of rank and concealment [gap]. So too with the souls created from the six days of creation [gap], which are in these three aspects, in the mystery of Bound, Dotted, and Dappled [gap], for the souls, as is known [gap]. They are called Bound, an expression of being tied, in the aspect of Tif'eret and Malkhut being joined as one. Likewise Malkhut is first in manifestation, and then the souls too emerged to her.[TN290252]

Yad Yehudah - ח

"In the Bound Ones": bound together in Tif'eret, Jacob's measure, as explained in the Zohar, Vayeḥi: the souls of the righteous are from the world of Tif'eret's light. Menahem Azariah said: If truth springs from the earth, and I am lower than the earth, it will certainly spring from me. And if[?] righteousness looks down from heaven, and we pursue righteousness, righteousness, then the gaze for good from His holy dwelling, blessed be He, from the heaven of heavens, has not grown short, so that we may live true life in this world and inherit the good land in the world to come. Happy are all who wait for Him.[TN290256] With this I had a complete intention in the treatise Ha-Nefesh, praise to our God; its companion, the treatise ʻOlam Qatan, bears witness concerning it. That precious vessel is called the treatise Ha-ʻEtsem, in which we merited to understand and comprehend the truth of Torah concerning the nature of the soul, to serve it and preserve it in purity, for it is our life and the length of our days. To know the Lord's righteousness, the righteousness of His open places, the first of His strength, for the native among the children of Israel and the stranger dwelling among them, let us understand their latter end in the treatise Ha-Eikh veha-Kammah, of which we shall say: this is it. I expound Scripture: “Look now toward heaven and count the stars,” etc.; “so shall your seed be” (Genesis 15:5).

In the Jerusalem Talmud, Nazir (Jerusalem Talmud, Nazir 7:2, folio 35), they said: “Are the expositions something I would assert[?]? Expound and receive reward.”[TN290257]

Know that the soul that is the root of all souls is that very honored form created by the utterance, “Let the earth bring forth a living soul” (Genesis 1:24). If we interpret “the earth” as the root and beginning of all the lands of life, then the soul mentioned in this matter will also comprise the soul of every living being, wherever it is fitting to describe one or more of the five names particular to the five configurations that comprise them. These are:

Nefesh,
Ruaḥ, Neshamah, Yeḥidah, Ḥayah.

Corresponding to them are:

Of them it is written: “They bow down, they bring forth their young, they cast out their birth pangs” (Job 39:3). For when she leaves the King, the Lord of Hosts, she bows before Him in awe and fear. Likewise the woman bows to give birth, and then “they bring forth their young,” for at that hour he is granted permission to emerge into the world. This too is set against that: a serpent comes after shedding its skin; garments of skin are made for them, and it bites the placenta, after the pattern above.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 3 (ג)

Rema of Fano

Indeed, the all-comprising Bride, the mother of every living thing, is desired by the King and is called “a locked garden” (Song of Songs 4:12): her husband guards her in her measure of Malkhut. She is “a locked spring” at the point of Zion, her Yesod, and “a sealed fountain” in her Binah, from which judgments are aroused everywhere. Here lies the mystery of the backs of the names 72, 63, 45, and 52, whose numerical value is maʿyan ḥatum, “a sealed fountain.” It comprises all twenty-four permutations of the Name YHWH, distinguishing the great he on its own from the small he on its own; for the master said: “Four stones build twenty-four houses.” When there is no merit in the world, it is written: “As a pregnant woman draws near to giving birth, she writhes and cries out in her pangs” (Isaiah 26:17). This is not so with the supernal Mother, Reḥovot ha-Nahar, of whom it is said in the Zohar, Bereshit, folio 16b: “Now that palace gives birth from what it conceived of the holy seed, and it gives birth in silence,” etc.

The lower Mother, however, is likened to the kindly doe, which shows kindness to every beast of the forest by distributing her food to them, for she pants for streams of water. At the time of her birth, kindness is done to her from above, for her womb is narrow and she cannot give birth until “the voice of the Lord makes the does give birth”: at the fitting moment a serpent is sent to bite the mouth of the womb, and afterward she gives birth. At the birth of the rock ibex, however, there is a different trait: they ascend to the mountain peaks and hang their eyes on high; from heaven they have mercy on the young, so that it will not die as it bursts forth from the womb. “Though it fall, it will not be cast down”: rather, at its proper time they send it the compassionate eagle, which “spreads its wings and takes it,” and does not allow it to descend to the pit. Consult the Zohar, Pinhas, folio 249, and Raʿaya Mehemna there, and Aḥarei Mot, on the mystery of the doe with which we began.

The bitten place in the object of the analogy is only the last garment, the end of holiness in Asiyah, the mystery of the chambers half in sacred space and half in ordinary space. Therefore the opening of the womb is not without blood. This garment is certainly a stone/bundle of a zuz[?] that constricts the womb, of which it is written: “His soul was shortened by Israel's toil” (Judges 10:16). It is “the way of a serpent upon a rock” (Proverbs 30:19). [TN290258]

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 4 (ד)

Rema of Fano

This beloved doe greatly needs the mercy of Arikh, who brings her restoration and healing by sweetening the tremendous harshness of the serpent's shell. Naḥash, “serpent,” with the inclusive unit, is the number of Satan. This sweetening reaches us through the power of the three hundred and seventy lights of Arikh, the numerical value of qera‘, “tear.” The two are needed[?]—the second of the seven names comprising forty-two letters, as is known—and this greatly helps her not to miscarry.[TN290259] This is after the pattern of the generations of David son of Jesse, who is called Naḥash because he died through the serpent's counsel. It is written: “The man in Saul's days was old, coming among men” (I Samuel 17:12), which they expounded: he entered amid a multitude and went out amid a multitude. A multitude on which to pronounce the blessing is no fewer than six hundred thousand. By one of the wonders of numerical interpretation, ha-naḥash, “the serpent,” amounts to six hundred thousand, as we shall explain later in this treatise. Naḥash without the he amounts to the “one hundred and twenty thousand persons who do not know their right from their left” mentioned of Nineveh. Thus David's father completed, with all the might of the repair in the Holy Land, what Nahshon had begun in the wilderness, shielding Israel from “serpent, fiery serpent, and scorpion.” Moreover, it was decreed of the son dear to him and to his Father in heaven that he should be born through a serpent's bite. The known reapers, reapers of the holy field, are those who merit to reap from it the five kinds of grain, over which no appointed prince is set, but only the Holy One, blessed be He. The four species of the lulav are likewise so, in the mystery of “four kings against the five” (Genesis 14:9).

Return to chapter in contents

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 5 (ה)

Rema of Fano

In the kinds of grain is the mystery of the five parts of the soul we mentioned. The letters of shifon, “rye,” are the letters of nefesh, with the addition of diminutive markers, as in “Has Aminon your brother” (II Samuel 13:20). This is in the mystery of diminution. Shibbolet shuʻal, “oats,” is ruaḥ, in the mystery of the vav in the Name, which is like an ear of grain in the height of its stature: its head is filled with every good thing, it has a point above, and the length of the vav is rooted in the earth. This form is equivalent in the mystery of the measuring line that measures the extent of stature for all creation. Seʻorah, “barley,” is neshamah; ḥittah, “wheat,” is ḥayah: this is explained at length elsewhere. Kussemet, “spelt,” a kind of both, is yeḥidah. Its name attests to it, for its share in the perceptible realm is small owing to its concealment and the loftiness of its level in subtlety and spirituality. It is in the mystery of Daʻat, filling the place of Keter, which is not given concrete form like the other sefirot. For kaf is one-third of samekh, and mem is two-thirds. The hint is that spelt yields little flour, precisely one-third of what wheat yields, and two-thirds in barley. This is a Mishnah at the end of Pe’ah: a qav and a half of spelt equals half a qav of wheat and one qav of barley. Thus sixty se’ahs of spelt are worth, in the perceptible realm, only twenty of wheat and forty of barley. Therefore, in the root of the word, samekh comes in the middle, kaf on its right and mem on its left.

Concerning it is written: “They shall trim their heads closely” (Ezekiel 44:20). For there, in the upper and hidden roots, the head of one is beside the root of the other—not at the end of the other's root, but beside it, since there must be enough to be taken in the mouth of the scissors. This is the mystery of “two and one,” which R. Aha favored in the myrtle of the commandment. Meremar held that myrtle is different, for all the excellence required in it is a threefold holiness corresponding to the fathers of the world. It does not reach the three upper origins, for they are certainly a kingdom of priests[?]. This is the mystery of the high priest's haircut; the discerning will understand.[TN290260]

Through the merit and righteousness of these reapers, the garden expands and becomes a field blessed by the Lord, so that they can reach what is prepared for them. They open the womb, which opens wide at a time of joy, in the sense of “Israel is My son, My firstborn.” Likewise of David it is written: “The Lord said to me: ‘You are My son; today I have begotten you,’” after the first Adam and the fathers of the world prayed for him, as explained in its place. It is written: “Her children rise and call her happy; her husband praises her” (Proverbs 31:28), in the sense of “The Lord be with you” (Ruth 2:4), which Boaz said to these holy reapers. They certainly acted with permission in greeting them by the Name, and from his own knowledge, as stated in chapter Ha-Ro’eh (Berakhot 54a). This was so: that is, from the supernal Daʻat that spread within his soul.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 6 (ו)

Rema of Fano

It is written: “They cast out their birth pangs” (Job 39:3), for with this the pangs of childbirth quickly depart. The midrashim differ concerning them. Some say they are seventy cries, whose sign is the seventy words in the psalm “May the Lord answer you on the day of distress” (Psalm 20). Others expound “Behold, you are from nothing,” me-ayin (Isaiah 41:24), whose numerical value is one hundred cries with the inclusive unit, and “your work is me-afa‘,” an acronym of me’ah pe‘iyyot, “one hundred bleatings.” It seems to us that both obtain. The seventy strong cries come from the seven measures that prevail in judgment. The first three, which are themselves Ayin, “Nothing,” as is known, always agree with them to complete one hundred bleatings. These thirty cries, however, are gentle, through the merit of the thirty shofar sounds on the day of the world's conception. This number of them, which is not specified in the Torah, is mi-derabbanan, “rabbinic,” whose numerical value is mi-pi Gevurah, “from the mouth of Might.” Moses, with the word counted, is the same: for it was stated to Moses at Sinai and does not arise from uncertainty. This is the Zohar's conclusion. The enlightening discussions of the Gemara also accord well with this approach: R. Abbahu fixed it firmly by publicly expounding the reason for the matter. Rav Avira and Ravina further explained why Tashrat alone does not suffice. R. Abbahu himself would always go on to perform Tashat and Tarat. Their saying “R. Abbahu instituted” presents no difficulty, for we find an even stronger case concerning R. Yohanan ben Zakkai, who expounded and instituted, in a Torah commandment, that the whole day of the waving should be forbidden.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 7 (ז)

Rema of Fano

Our predecessors, of blessed memory, spoke well in saying that the nefesh dwells in the liver. If only those who transmit the words of the early sages had this heart, to penetrate their intention and understand the matter in its mystery! For if you suppose it to be literal, these are empty words to one who has not grasped their mystery in the treatise Ha-Nefesh. There is no way to give this a favorable explanation except through one of the modes of metaphor we explained there, and no other. The truth is that the ten sefirot of the stature of nefesh reach below the diaphragm of the heart in the stature of ruaḥ. The interpretation of the word is natar nafsha, “guard of the soul,” which separates the organs of breathing from the organs of digestion and generation and the like. Out of this nefesh's desire to be received by ruaḥ, inward from the liver's enclosure, facing upward, she said: “Set me as a seal upon your heart” (Song of Songs 8:6). This is the mystery of the hand-tefillin.

Since foreign worship essentially damages nefesh, we say in chapter Arba‘ Mitot

(Sanhedrin 63b), concerning the mockery of it that is permitted: what is meant by “its priests rejoice over it, over its glory, for it has departed from it” (Hosea 10:5)? Read not kevodo, “its glory,” but kevedo, “its liver.” In our approach we learn that this was not included without purpose, nor was literal mockery uttered with precision[?]; rather, it is great wisdom, so that even their conversation needs much study, like Rav Hamnuna Sava's discourse of Satan / foolishness[?].[TN290261] Likewise it is explicitly stated through Solomon: “Until an arrow pierces his liver,” etc., “and he does not know that it is at the cost of his nefesh” (Proverbs 7:23).

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 8 (ח)

Rema of Fano

Ruaḥ dwells in the heart: its ten sefirot reach above the diaphragm in the stature of neshamah, directly opposite the heart, in the sense of “breasts in the place of understanding” (Berakhot 10a). Neshamah dwells in the brain: its ten sefirot reach opposite the brain of ḥayah. Ruaḥ's eyes are suspended in the wish to cleave there, itself together with nefesh, in the mystery of the frontlets, which are a pattern of what will be in the future, in the mystery of “I shall magnify Myself and sanctify Myself and make Myself known before the eyes of many nations” (Ezekiel 38:23). There is nothing in the Prophets that is not hinted in the Torah, for it is written: “All the peoples of the earth shall see,” etc. (Deuteronomy 28:10). The companions above, neshamah and ḥayah, never separate. The ten sefirot of ḥayah are precisely the excellence reaching the shoulders of yeḥidah, and no higher. For the supernal, awesome excellence—to which she is a composition/vehicle[?], and peace is His, the actual radiance of the Shekhinah, from which she derives enjoyment and light—likewise reaches these shoulders from above downward.[TN290262] Of them it is said: “The thousand is yours, Solomon” (Song of Songs 8:12), for katef, “shoulder,” twice has the numerical value of one thousand. It is written: “Between His shoulders He dwelt” (Deuteronomy 33:12).

These are the parts of the soul, with the radiance of the Shekhinah above them, a great pattern of the five configurations in Atsilut, and above them the supernal, holy Concealed One who is unknown. The excellence of yeḥidah, the supernal crown upon her head, at the very place of tefillin, reaches His shoulders, in the mystery of “the greatness and the might” (I Chronicles 29:11), which we expound everywhere as the tops of shoulders, merely as a pattern. Thus in the Tiqqunim: “A head that is not a head; it does not know, nor is it made known, what is in this head.” They are in the mystery of the offering of spices, the configuration of the face with the nose between them: thus GGT / HGT[?].[TN290263] Above them is the forehead, which comprises the skull and the eyes, in the mystery of Keter, Ḥokhmah, Binah. The lips together with the tongue are Netsaḥ, Hod, Yesod; the mouth is Malkhut. This suffices.

From now on, let what is concealed be learned from what is explicit in the sages' words, "like goads" for reasoning and "like planted nails" for received learning, to uphold the wondrous utterance: "Let us make a human in our image, according to our likeness" (Genesis 1:26). In the Tiqqunim (Tiqqunei Zohar 53a) there is: nefesh in the heart, ruaḥ in the lung, neshamah in the brain; elsewhere, there, all three in the three brains. Both statements and everything like them can be justified by way of exposition and according to changes in governance. What we explained, however, is the enduring reality in the nature of the levels, their root and essence, without doubt.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 9 (ט)

Rema of Fano

It is also possible to interpret "Let the earth bring forth" (Genesis 1:24) of each of the lands of life, wherever they are. "A living soul" is a description especially fitting to that form which is brought forth from it, flock by flock separately, each one a particular aspect of Adam, fashioned by the hands of the Holy One, blessed be He, comprising at that level all his descendants. Therefore the sages expounded: "This is the spirit of the first Adam." This sharing of names—the level called nefesh in Scripture being called ruaḥ in their words—is essentially justified by what the Ari, of blessed memory, explained: the Malkhut that nests in the world of Asiyah, according to the Zohar, is the Malkhut of Yetsirah; the Tif'eret of Beriah, which is itself the Throne of Glory, is what broods over eggs. The Binah of Atsilut nests in the throne, from the Ḥokhmah of Adam Qadmon, whose might, Ein Sof, nests in Atsilut. Scripture calls it "a living soul" to comprise its essence and the vessel holding its blessing, which is also a royal garment in the mystery of Asiyah, for they are equivalent. This is nefesh; its root, Yetsirah, is hinted in the word ḥayah, "living," for "the spirit of the living creature is in the wheels" (Ezekiel 1:20). To exclude actual nefesh of Asiyah from its own Malkhut, which is clothed in shells, the sages explained that it is ruaḥ: that is, nefesh from ruaḥ. For each world has five configurations, which are the five names belonging to the soul, as we said.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 10 (י)

Rema of Fano

The translators agree concerning the verse "The human became a living soul" (Genesis 2:7), interpreting it as "a speaking spirit." It is one. Therefore I said: this is none other than the pearl that hung at the neck of Abraham our father. Great is its honor, for it is specifically a margalit, "pearl," from the expression "she uncovered his feet," margelotav (Ruth 3:7). Abraham our father's neck was chosen, in the height of his stature, to be a vehicle for her: an explanation of "one, and one; one and two," etc.[TN290264] This accords with one of the true interpretations stated concerning that Mishnah. Therefore it is written of him when he ascended from Egypt: “He went on his journeys,” etc., “to the place where his tent had been at first” (Genesis 13:3). The sages said that he repaid his outstanding accounts. They did not suspect him of failing to pay his lodging immediately. Rather, these are commandments dependent on the land, from which this camp of God, those who accompany the righteous person, derives benefit; these were what he borrowed and repaid, since the land of Egypt was not fit for their fulfillment, for it is the neck of the statue of the kingdoms.

It is written: “He went on his journeys from the south and as far as Bethel, to”—va-yelekh le-massa‘av mi-negev ve-‘ad Bet El ‘ad (ibid.). These seven words have the numerical value of the nine hundred and seventy-four generations that were cut short. They did not merit even a brief temporal life in this world, in which to weave a single thread in that speck of a sunbeam we mentioned in the treatise Ha-Nefesh. This is the sense of Scripture's saying, “Who were cut short, and not an instant” (Job 22:16): it would scarcely have sufficed, within an exceedingly narrow limit, to think “holy” or “blessed” once in their hearts, but in no way to say it aloud, after what we explained there, for an ‘et lasts only as long as its utterance, no longer; a rega‘ is like it in two ‘et-times. They were not left alive even for that tiny measure. Say, then, that His judgments, blessed be He, are righteous, and that He afflicted them faithfully, for no good thing was found in them even for a minimal duration whose existence and annulment come as one. Scripture cries out, “Who were cut short, and not an instant,” precisely. Lest you say they have no remedy, Heaven forbid: rather, “a river shall be poured as their foundation” (ibid.).

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 11 (יא)

Rema of Fano

The number of those generations has the numerical value of tov me-reshito, “good from its beginning”: this is ‘erev Shabbat, the Sabbath eve, the birth of the first Adam. Yet he did not remain in his tranquility and sinned in his eating, for six and seven were interchanged for him: that is, the governance of kindnesses with the governance of severities, in the sense of “Moses delayed,” boshesh (Exodus 32:1). Thus the sun of both groups set, for at six the sun is in the east and at seven in the west, indicating what is to come. The reverse occurred with Abraham, for Jupiter, Tsedeq, stood for him in the west, and heaven had mercy upon him to set it in the east. Had the first Adam merited as he did, all these would have been sanctified and purified through him, in the mystery of the conjugal time of Torah scholars, from Sabbath eve to Sabbath eve, Rav Yehudah's statement in chapter Af ‘Al Pi. Certainly this means Sabbath night; it is a Mishnah there, whether according to the one who says “eats” literally or the one who says intercourse, since the other likewise means “also eats.” From this comes the arranging of the table on Sabbath eve in chapter Kol Kitvei: the expression is not exact, but means as we have said.

The rabbis were very precise in saying Sabbath eve in both cases, hinting at this great mystery. Since Sabbath eve does not mean specifically the meal, but Sabbath nights, someone may come to think that arranging the table at the departure of the Sabbath is likewise not exact, but means the third meal on Sabbath afternoon. That is, in both cases a person should arrange his table with settled dignity and splendor, without making them casual, although the morning meal is primary everywhere, for satisfaction is written concerning it in the manna passage. Nevertheless, we have already explained elsewhere that the meal at the departure of the Sabbath is also a commandment. We need not elaborate here.

Let us return to our first father: through his sin he caused the corruption of those generations whom it was in his power to repair. On the contrary, he prepared for them an "evil way," derekh ra', counting the large final letters of MNTSPK; all was "because of an inciter," be-sibbat messit, with the same numerical value. So too "the counsel of a jealous serpent," 'etyo shel naḥash meqanne, as the midrash says; and "one who speaks like sword thrusts" (Proverbs 12:18), with "like sword thrusts" written without a vav. This happened through the woman's counsel, of whom it is written: "Whom You gave to be with me" (Genesis 3:12). The extra he written in natatta is not drawn upon for the present interpretation, but for another exposition: natat alone, completed with he, has the numerical value of le-'oneg Shabbat, "for the delight of the Sabbath."[TN290265] This is the opening of the supernal Eden to the river and the garden, in the mystery of the conjugal time of Torah scholars, which was the true purpose of the woman given to Adam. The analogy extends from him to all creation.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 12 (יב)

Rema of Fano

Accordingly, the conjugal duty was not permitted every day—provided it is at night, or in the mystery of a Torah scholar making darkness with his cloak, as explained in its place—except for men of leisure. That crystal dew of the supernal brain shines in them, in the mystery that in the future a woman will give birth every day (Shabbat 30b). Rav explained in the Gemara: who is a man of leisure? One who eats from his own and drinks from his own. Some have this granted them from heaven by their own merit, in the mystery of "Eat, friends; drink and become drunk, beloved ones" (Song of Songs 5:1), removing from him the yoke of government, as appears there: "The king's messenger does not pass his doorway"; and the yoke of worldly occupation: "He sleeps in the shade of his palace." His rest is glorious, and such a person eats all his days in honor of the Sabbath. This is also precise in their calling him Shemuel bar Shilat, an acronym of "I have set the Lord before me always" (Psalm 16:8), like Jacob, whom "the God of Israel" called "El." If you do not say so, did Rav come to teach us about an idler?[TN290266] Moreover, because Rav Shemuel bar Shilat has the benefit of two tables and heaven had mercy upon him, is he not a Torah scholar? Rather, it is as we said.

Know that he was a teacher of children. Even once in twelve years, when he entered his orchard to draw thirteen rivers of supernal balsam toward the supernal orchard, he testified of himself that his attention was upon them. This too is from the knowledge of his Maker, as it is written of him: “Whom shall he teach knowledge?”—the whole verse. Those “weaned from milk, withdrawn from breasts” greatly need to draw[?] that supernal dew to complete their brains, as explained in its place. It is known that, had our first father made darkness for others (variant: the serpent and its rider) with his cloak, the mystery of the scholars’ robe, which he had not yet attained at that hour, what happened would not have happened.[TN290267]

The worker, for whom the Mishnah permitted twice a week, is specifically called a po‘el, “worker,” whose numerical value is “the place” of His glory.[TN290268] Twice a week specifically, in the mystery of holy intercourse: one who wishes his children to be male should have intercourse and repeat it. The rabbis were precise in saying: “Did the tanna trouble himself over the man of leisure and the worker?” etc. The sages’ words, even their conversation, are “a loving doe and a graceful ibex.” Thus when our first father said, “The woman whom You gave with me,” with the added he, he was making a full confession of having changed the intention; he was not denying a kindness, Heaven forbid. Yet there is room for the plain sense of the matter so that he might have atonement, like what we have explained concerning many others besides him, for this is the measure of compassion of our merciful God.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 13 (יג)

Rema of Fano

Adam became liable through his eating only with respect to the esophagus and the swallowing passage in the bodily, perceptible realm, for they alone derive pleasure from it, although they were originally created only to fulfill a positive and a negative commandment: “From every tree of the garden you may surely eat” (Genesis 2:16), and “From the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil you shall not eat” (Genesis 2:17). Through the sin, a shell gained dominion over them. The windpipe in the perceptible realm was also damaged by his denying a kindness, according to the common account, since the hearer supposed he had blamed his wrongdoing on Eve. Wicked Balaam drew nourishment from both: from the swallowing passage, as his name indicates, and from the external windpipe, for his power is only in his mouth. Therefore he was weighed against Moses, who drew nourishment from the slope of the cap inward, in the holy windpipe, in the mystery of Hevel, Abel, which is one of three names for which the letters of Moshe form an acronym, as is known.[TN290269] Of him it is written: “God answered him (with a voice)” (Exodus 19:19), with Moses’ voice. Of him it is said: “He is faithful in all My house”

(Numbers 12:7), for he did not enjoy stolen property in that eating. This is the mystery: lest the windpipe precede the esophagus. He guarded against this perfectly, but did not protest sufficiently; therefore he was handed over to the executioner. His neck became like a pillar of marble, through the merit of willingly making himself like an actual stone, without sensation, so as not to enjoy the prohibition. It is known that Pharaoh was from the back of the neck of the statue we mentioned, and the flesh in the holy neck is invalid like the nape everywhere, as appears in chapter Ha-Kol Shoḥatin.[TN290270]

Through this power Moses brought down manna for Israel, in the mystery of “bread of the mighty,” which has neither shell nor excess. When he ascended on high it is written of him: “I ate no bread” (Deuteronomy 9:9), not even that bread from which the ministering angels are nourished; rather, he enjoyed the radiance of the Shekhinah in the manner we mentioned. He separated from the woman—Eve—without being caught by her counsel, and was permitted to separate from his wife. Therefore she was Jethro's daughter, so that Israel's daughters would not be left bound without a husband. This is the repetition in Scripture's complaint against Miriam: why should she speak concerning her, “for he had taken a Cushite woman” (Numbers 12:1), not a daughter of Israel.[TN290270] It is possible that Zipporah's mother was from the land of Cush. Alternatively, Miriam's statement concerned the Cushite woman known to Moses’ praise, between whom and himself he planted a sword. She said, “For he had taken a Cushite woman”: taking alone, and no more. Yet the wonder was that Zipporah was a worthy convert—what has straw to do with grain? The correct explanation is that Zipporah herself was black, as written, and beautiful, as translated, in its mystery and meaning beside the sun's radiance.

Know that ishah kushit, “a Cushite woman,” has the numerical value of ishah yefat mar’eh, “a woman beautiful in appearance.” This is the number of the names of the Margela, the pearl, known for Sabbath nights, with the addition of “I am the Lord your God,” of nefesh, ruaḥ, neshamah, of which it is said (Genesis 1:17): “God set them in the firmament of heaven”—this is Yesod—“to shine upon the earth,” Malkhut. Of Joseph, who is Yesod, it is said: “Beautiful in form and beautiful in appearance” (Genesis 39:6), for of him too it is said: “For You, Lord, I have waited; You will answer, Lord my God” (Psalm 38:16). Both have the same number, apart from the inclusive unit in one of them.[TN290271]

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 14 (יד)

Rema of Fano

Of Balaam it is said: “Bela son of Beor reigned in Edom” (Genesis 36:32), from the expression “nursing camels and their young” (Genesis 32:16), which they expound as “and their builders.” He too was a companion to his she-ass and a builder for his beast. “The name of his city,” ‘iro, is from “binding his foal,” ‘iro, “to the vine” (Genesis 49:11): “Dinhabah,” for his judgment on this is always prepared, in the mystery of the serpents that the Queen of Sheba asked to have caught. The esophagus and swallowing passage we mentioned are the mystery of “the instruments of the throat,” kelei ha-garon; the numerical value is the very same, with the large nun of AYQ BKR.[TN290272] From them spread into the world the shroud of the burial ground. “Behold, it was very good”: to return a basket of creeping things, together with the four letters of quppah, “basket,” to dust—the disjoining of the combination of the four simple elements, fire, wind, water, and dust, together with the composite that comprises them. Then the earth ceases from activity.

Thus we learned concerning the punishment of the deliberate offender: one who turns his heart to idleness becomes liable for his soul. For the inadvertent offender the obligation of exile is explicit in the verse, “Who asked this of your hand, to trample My courts?” (Isaiah 1:12). This resembles the first punishment that persists to our souls’ grief, for it is written: “He drove out the human” (Genesis 3:24), with the same number, counting the words and the inclusive unit. It is repeated in another verse written afterward: “He shall send you from here; (when he sends you), he shall utterly drive out” (Exodus 11:1). What is written after it? “He shall drive you out.” The first was an analogy and came with the comparative kaf, teaching: just as the true enemy, the rider of the serpent, was the one who incited Pharaoh—“when he sends, he shall utterly drive you out”—the good promise, the appointed time of our departure from Egypt, came with trembling in place of joy. This event for our first father was the judgment of Tishri, for it is written: “From the beginning of the year until the end of the year” (Deuteronomy 11:12), in which are comprised the heads of understanding, the mystery of the Chariot, as in what we learned: “At four periods the world is judged.” For the human being, Rosh Hashanah comprises all four, as explained by us in its place.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 15 (טו)

Rema of Fano

One must know that the three fathers of the world, together with all creation, righteous and wicked, were suspended within the measure of the first Adam. Moreover, the fathers are principal in Binah and its chief organs, and they were not in that counsel. Abraham and Isaac are the arms of the world, and no taking is written of Adam, but only “he ate” (Genesis 3:6), and nothing more: the arms did not wish to extend, nor the hands to open, nor the fingers to touch that fruit. This is the reason for what they said concerning kinds of eating in tractate Hullin (Hullin 6a): “The Holy One, blessed be He, does not bring a stumbling block through the animals of the righteous; how much more so through the righteous themselves.” “Through their hands,” precisely, as here. Likewise, no stumbling block will come to their animals through their hands, as in that event: but for the merit of R. Pinhas ben Yair, his donkey would not have guarded against eating untithed produce. It is known from several accounts that the braying of the pious elder's donkey saved the righteous of Israel from bandits and robbers in the wilderness. Who knows whether that donkey's soul desired to seize prey at the hour when Adam ate? These matters are ancient.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 16 (טז)

Rema of Fano

The fathers of the world had still not discharged their duty, for they ought to have repelled the woman with a mighty arm, kept her far from their boundary, and knocked the fruit from her hand with something that would make it repulsive, breaking its fence so that it would be trampled and every soul would abhor eating it. Who restrained their hands? First, the right-hand shell: Nimrod, who served a foreign fire outside the camp of the Shekhinah, like an ape before Binah, the white fire. He inherited Adam's garments of skin. We read in him nam rud, “the ruler slumbered,” for the holy right arm grew drowsy, although it had the power to rule and protest. Alternatively, Nimrod is written without a vav, the letters of nirdam, “asleep”; the matter is one. Thus he was called Nimrod, after “Let us go and serve,” for he incited Adam and led astray all the likenesses suspended in his encompassing measure. With a strong hand he wished to save his arm for her service[?].[TN290273] With great difficulty Abraham overcame him by remaining passive, in the matter of taking alone. Through Nimrod, Abraham was refined at Ur of the Chaldeans, with the pearl beside him. Therefore he said: “I am dust and ashes” (Genesis 18:27): dust from the ground, in the mystery of the pearl, and afterward he became ashes in the fiery furnace.

Moreover, “dust and ashes,” with the inclusive unit, has the numerical value of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob; so too “for the first Adam,” with the inclusive unit, has the same number. He associated their merit with his when seeking mercy for Sodom. Dust includes Adam, who is dust from the ground; with it are the ashes of Jacob and the ashes of Abraham and Isaac, this one at Ur of the Chaldeans and that one at the Binding. Joseph the righteous made a memorial for both in the name Ephraim. It also has the numerical value of kaf, samekh, alef, written out, for the merit of the fathers of the world, who themselves are the Chariot and the Throne, helps protect the viceroy in his time of distress, certainly in the land of his affliction.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 17 (יז)

Rema of Fano

Since Adam embraced his hands and ate, and presumably the right embraced the left, Abraham had to bind Isaac, with Adam's spirit beside him, because he had not prevailed against the woman with a repelling left hand. Nimrod fell slain at Esau's hands on the day of mourning for Abraham, and Esau took his precious garments, because Esau had not agreed to that eating in order to provoke, as he had. Rather, on its face it appears to have been for appetite, as it is written: “Let me gulp, please” (Genesis 25:30). He seized his trait and returned to his vomit. This is the repetition “this red, red,” doubling the gluttony: he does not chew the cud, although he has a cloven hoof, for in him purity of the foot is not completed together with purity of the Name, which go as one. Consult the treatise Ha-Millu’im; more of this will come before us. A commandment is named only after the one who completes it. Therefore Isaac sought him out to repair what they had perverted, through savory foods “as he loved” (Genesis 27:4), excluding “as he hated,” as expounded in the Zohar.

It appears that he also greatly increased his guilt beyond this measure, and his deeds were those of a wicked fool, not for appetite, for he had passed beyond the category of a deliberate offender and was counted among those who transgress with their bodies. Yet he was not like Nimrod, wholly intent on provocation. This is the reason for “Esau despised the birthright” (Genesis 25:34). We have not heard that he repented, as the sages testified of Ishmael, since expiring is mentioned of him.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 18 (יח)

Rema of Fano

When Hushim son of Dan arose and cut off Esau's head at Jacob's grave, his head was received into the cave, but the swallowing passage remained outside to cleanse the impurity of the esophagus. The stumbling block of eating is exceedingly grievous, as they, of blessed memory, said (Hullin 6a) concerning the animals of the righteous, since it recalls the first iniquity. This is the reason for “You are greatly despised” (Obadiah 1:2). The ‘ayin in resha‘im, “wicked ones,” in the verse “To grasp the corners of the earth, and the wicked be shaken out of it” (Job 38:13), is an initial of his name. This is his repair: remove ‘ayin from the number of resha‘im, for what remains has the numerical value of taqqen, “repair.” It is known that the whole body apart from the head is comprised in seven measures, the mystery of seventy. What remains also has the numerical value of nesher, “eagle.” The ‘ayin is suspended and has the numerical value of bazui me’od, “greatly despised,” hinting at the prophet's statement, “Though you soar like the eagle” (Obadiah 1:4). He hopes now to bring the body to equality beside the head, which is among the fathers in the Cave of Machpelah, in the sense of “Though you set your nest among the stars, from there I shall bring you down, says the Lord."

This continues until his root on high is repaired. It must be repaired with an examined knife, the slaughtering knife of Mount Moriah, to purify and sanctify him more than any of the other impure living creatures. From this slaughter will extend to him the bringing up of the cud, according to our reckoning, for it is written of him, "It does not chew the cud" (Leviticus 11:7), as an expression of the past, like "My father chastised you" (I Kings 12:11). Thus in the future he will be repaired, to return him to his father by the body's return to the head.

throat of Arikh, where Moses is within and Jacob without. Similarly, in the shell, Balaam is within and Balak without. Therefore Balak said to him, "Come, curse Jacob for me" (Numbers 23:7), for he belongs to his measure; "and come, denounce Israel"—he did not say "for me." For Israel indeed arose in thought, and Moses is equal in weight to all Israel, whose collective merit depends on him. Thus Moses and Israel are alike within, while Jacob is without.

The word gargeret, "throat," has the numerical value of tag, tag: the mystery of the windpipe and the gullet, which are two crowns for לאוא"י [TN290274]. They become a crown for Ze'ir when he merits nearness to God, namely Arikh. Here is the mystery of one king with two crowns mentioned by the Zohar on the Song of Songs: passing from one subject to another within the same subject spoken of in the Gemara and Midrash Rabbah, of two kings with one crown. Then it is written, "The voice is Jacob's voice" (Genesis 27:22), and "May God give you of the dew of heaven" (Genesis 27:28).

He, however, did not make his voice heard in that act, and did not wish to recite over it the blessing for enjoyment, since he considered the eating a deadly poison: "The one who takes gain has blessed; he has spurned the LORD" (Psalms 10:3). Because he did not rebuke her, the woman, with a voice—a strong voice—as was fitting for him, he incurred the obligation of exile, with Adam's soul accompanying him. Your mnemonic is: "Yose, who remained silent, shall be exiled to Sepphoris" (Shabbat 33b). Likewise Moses was exiled to Cush and fled to Midian. Because he is within, his punishment is greater: he too was handed over to the executioner.

Do not say that the patriarchs alone, through their righteousness, saved their souls, while the matriarchs assisted in evil—heaven forbid!—under Eve's writ, of whom it is written, "She took," and "she gave" (Genesis 3:6). It is not so (Exodus Rabbah 1:20).[1] For all who are born, males and females alike, are included in what the sages said (Niddah 31a): the whiteness in the man provides the bones and sinews, and so forth. This statement, true in itself, will rescue all the matriarchs and invigorate their bones, distancing them from the transgression. This is straightforward.

Tzevaot - Part I (א) - Chapter 20 (כ)

Rema of Fano

Therefore, concerning Adam's sin, the Torah mentions only "he ate" (Genesis 3:6), precisely. It is reasonable that even in this he did not rebel against and grieve His holy spirit except as one merely acting without intention. For he was wholly righteous in all his deeds, and since there was no evil inclination in him at that hour, he did not intend any sin at all. Nevertheless, the rule of justice operates thus: one who acts without intention in eating forbidden fats or in forbidden sexual unions is liable, since he has derived enjoyment. The eating itself subsequently caused him, against his will, to wander in thought, speech, and action into what was unnecessary, because his inclination overpowered him through the act.

This is what Scripture said: "There shall be no strange god within you" (Psalms 81:10)—meaning, arising of itself. Do not occupy yourself with anything, even a commandment, without complete intention, for it is always lying in wait. Then you are assured that "you shall not bow down to a foreign god." Likewise, what he thought to do as a commandment was reckoned to him as a forbidden sexual act: he came to his wife while she was menstruant, for the serpent's filth was wagging about (it seems to me: rattling about) in her entrails. "But He, being merciful, will atone."

We consider that Scripture testified to this rectification in Bathsheba: "She was purifying herself from her impurity" (II Samuel 11:4), for David attended to this even in his haste. This is contrary to whoever reads it the other way round, for that is a corrupt text. To rectify the sin of eating, the beginning of the stumbling, our first father sat fasting throughout all his years, whose number was that of ta'anit, "fast." David said, "Evening and morning and noon" (Psalms 55:18), which, with the inclusive unit, have this number [TN290275]: "I shall speak and moan," to atone for the first sin. His separation from Eve for 130 years to rectify his haste with her is well known and widely reported.

The sages said (Berakhot 6b), "The reward of a fast is charity." For the mouth that sinned
